It is a well settled principle that the only ground on which under the rules the Court would stay execution of a judgment is where special circumstances are shown.

Having heard and considered the affidavit filed in support of the application by C.F. Edwards Esq., we have asked ourselves whether any of very special circumstances have been shown. In that line we have observed that the [p.24] judgment which the Appellant/Applicant relied upon is that of Hon. Justice L.B.O. Nylander dated the 24th day of January 2002. (Exhibits ABH4B) which is not appealed. It is alleged in paragraph 7 of the affidavit that the Appellant/Applicant has a conveyance in respect of the whole portion of land being claimed by the Plaintiff/Respondent in his Writ of Summons dated 8th February 2005 that the Applicant/Respondent is operating a mattress factory in the portion of the land in dispute, which is being occupied by most of the workers in the factory as their residence for over 12 (twelve) years. The workers will be rendered homeless. We think it is important to note that by paragraph 5 of the judgment of Justice L.B.O. Nylander the title of deed (Conveyance) which formed the basis of the Judgment of Justice A.N.B. Stronge is deem in law to have been expunged from the record book of Conveyances in the Office of the Registrar-General until that Judgment is set aside.

More importantly, it is averred in paragraph 13 and which is not denied that the Deponent have been informed by the Appellant/Applicant and verily believe that the Plaintiff/Respondent intends to part with the said portion of land before the determination of the appeal. The said Averments have not been denied there being no affidavit in opposition filed to the application.

Without further ado, we consider the facts to be weighty and substantial enough to warrant our interference at this stage. Consequently, a stay of execution of the Judgment of Justice A.N.B. Stronge dated 26th day of November, 2005 and all subsequent proceedings pending the hearing and [p.25] determination of the Appeal to the Court of Appeal of Sierra Leone is hereby granted. Costs in the cause.

HEARING:

JUDGMENT: Advocates:

Appellant: S. Macaulay; Esq.;

Respondent: A.J.B. Gooding; Esq.;

RULING:

TEJAN-JALLOH JA:

This is an application by way of Notice of Motion brought on behalf of the first Defendant/Applicant for the following orders:—

1. For leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal of Sierra Leone against the Order of the Hon. Justice Sir John Muria J.A. dated 22nd March 2005 on grounds set out in the notice of appeal.

2. The second Order is already spent.

3. For a Stay of Execution of the Judgment in Default dated 4th November 2004; Judgment dated 19th January 2005 and Order of Hon. Sir John Muria J.A. dated 22nd March 2005 be granted pending the hearing and determination of the appeal, if leave be granted.

4. Any other order as may be deemed fit and just.

5. That the cost of this application be cost in the cause.

This application is supported by a twenty-five (25) paragraph affidavit of TEREK YOUNESS the Managing Director of the applicant sworn to on the 24th day of May, 2005. It is relevant to observe that most of the Averment relate to the history of the matter.

The paragraphs which I consider germane to the application are paragraphs 21, 22 and 23 which are as follows:—

21. That I verily believe that the applicant has very good grounds of Appeal which might be to naught if a stay is not granted and execution is levied against the applicant. A copy of the proposed notice to appeal is now shown to me exhibited and marked TJ21.

22. That I verily believe that unless a stay of execution of the Default Judgment dated 4th November 2004, Judgment dated 19th January 2005 and Order of Hon. Justice Sir John Muria J.A. dated 22nd March 2005 is granted, the appeal if successful would be rendered nugatory.

23. That the interest of justice will best be served if the orders prayed for in the Notice of Motion are granted.

In considering the application, it must be borne in mind that the Court does not make a practice of depriving a successful litigant of the fruits of his litigation and locking up funds to which he is prima facie entitled pending appeal. The Annot Lyle (1886) 11 P.O. 114 at page 116. See also Monk v Bartram (1891)1 AB 346 where Lord Esther M.R. said inter alia at Page 346:

"It is impossible to enumerate all the matters that might be considered to constitute special circumstances, but it may certainly be said that the allegation that they had been a misdirection or that the verdict was against the weight of the evidence or that there was no evidence to support it are not special circumstances on which the Court will grant a stay of execution."

In T.C. Trustees Limited vs. J.S. Darwen (Successors) Limited (1969) 2 QB 295; the Court of Appeal laid down that special circumstances in which execution may be stayed on grounds other than inability to pay must be circumstances relevant to a stay, and not to matters of defense in law or relief in equity, which must be raised in the action, they must be relevant to the enforcement of the judgment and not to the judgment itself.

The most important factor that must weigh with any Court dealing with motion for stay of execution is the question whether the Judgment Creditors will be able to refund the Judgment debt if the appeal succeeds. See Baker v Lovery (1885) 14 QB D 769., Brandford v Young Re: Falconer and Trusts (1884) 28 CH.D. 18 and; Wilson v Church (No.21) (1870) 12Ch. D.454.

A defendant cannot obtain a Stay of Execution by arguing that he would be ruined and that he has an appeal which has some prospect of success — Lino Type Hell Finance Limited v Baker (1992) 4 All ER 887 CA.

[p.4]

The only question before this Court is whether a case has been made out for depriving the plaintiff of the benefit of the Judgment which has already been obtained.

This is a Judgment for payment of money. The applicant has not proffered any reason how the appeal if successful can be nugatory. He has not said that if paid the Judgment award it would be impossible for him to recover it from the plaintiff. How grounds of appeal can be brought to naught is not explained. It is not every ground of law that qualifies as special circumstances for a Stay of Execution. For a ground of appeal to be so qualified it ought to be shown that a decision on it will one way or the other affect the substratum of the whole case substantially.

The sum total of the material before us is that the applicant has failed to establish special circumstances. We are of the opinion that the justice of the case is on the side of the Respondent that he be left free to his legal remedies to recover his money.

In the circumstances, the application for stay of execution is refused with costs against the applicant such costs to be taxed if not agreed upon. However, as the applicant is exercising his constitutional right of Appeal, leave to appeal is granted.

JUDGMENT

MURIA JA:

"Where a Commission of Inquiry makes an adverse finding against any person, which may result in a penalty, forfeiture or loss of status, the report of the Commission of Inquiry shall, for the purposes of this Constitution, be deemed to be a judgment of the High Court of Justice and accordingly an appeal shall be as of right from the Commission to the Court of Appeal." (Section 149(4), Constitution).

It is the interpretation of this provision of the Constitution that is central to the determination of this appeal.

Background

To appreciate the nature of the appeal, let me set out the brief background to this case. Following complaints of irregularities over the allocation and disposition, and encroachment of both private and

State lands, the Government set up a Commission of Inquiry (COI), with the following terms of reference—

(i) To enquire and make appropriate recommendations on the present laws relating to the allocation and use of state lands.

(ii) To examine the extent of state land granted or leased with a view to finding out lapses in the procedure relating to the appropriation of state land.

(iii) To ascertain whether there are any persons or organizations in possession of any state lands without proper grant or authorization.

(iv) To determine the extent of compliance by the grantee of state lands with the conditions of his or her grant.

(v) To examine the extent of environmental degradation that has occurred as a result of the granting and leasing of state lands.

(vi) To ensure that in carrying out this exercise consideration will be given to the recent report of the National Commission for Unity and Reconciliation (NCUR) in so far as it relates to the granting and leasing of state lands.

(vii) To investigate the possibility of transferring the administration of state lands to local authorities.

(viii) To make appropriate recommendation to arrest the lapses brought about in line with the findings.

[p.7]

The Commissioner, Hon. Justice Marcus-Jones, was appointed by His Excellency the President on 27th October 1998 and soon thereafter conducted the Commission of Inquiry. Despite the setback in its work due to the rebel invasion of Freetown in January 1999, the Commission concluded its work and published its findings and recommendations in its "Report on the Mrs. Justice Laura Marcus-Jones Commission of Inquiry on the Leasing and Sale of State Lands in the Western Area, 1999". A Government White Paper (GWP) was subsequently prepared as a result of the Report of the COI. The Government White Paper was published in October 2000, more than six months after the Commission of Inquiry Report was presented to His Excellency, The President.

High Court

Following the publication of the Commission of Inquiry Report, and more particularly, the Government White Paper, the respondent instituted proceedings by way of an Originating Notice of Motion in the High Court to set aside the sale and purchase of the land at 28 Wallace Johnson Street, Freetown and to cancel the Deed of Conveyance over the said property made between the Government of Sierra Leone and the appellant on 16th September 1993 and take possession of the said property. The High Court heard the application and granted the order setting aside the transaction leading to the sale and purchase of the Government property at 28 Wallace Johnson Street and canceling the grant/Deed of Conveyance made between the parties over the said property.

Court of Appeal

The appellant, being aggrieved by the High Court's decision appealed to Court of Appeal on four grounds, namely:

1. The whole proceedings were null and void and in that the Respondent herein proceeded by originating process which was ab initio void.

[p.8]

2. The learned trial Judge misdirected himself when he held that he could not interfere with the process by which the decision was arrived at since it is deemed to be a judgment.

3. The learned trial Judge erred in law in that having found that there was no express forfeiture, granted the orders prayed for in the motion.

4. The decision is against the weight of the evidence.

As it will become apparent, the grounds of appeal raise both procedural as well as substantive issues of law. For the purpose of dealing with the issues raised, it will be convenient to deal with ground two of the appeal first.

The contention by Mr. Serry-Kamal of Counsel for the appellant is that the Commission of Inquiry Report made no "adverse finding" against the appellant. Consequently the appellant saw no need to exercise his right of appeal; and did not do so, against the Commission's findings. The adverse comments were raised in the Government White Paper and Mr. Serry-Kamal conceded that. Counsel, however, argued that the Government White Paper was not a Report of the Commission of Inquiry under Section 149 of the Constitution and could not be deemed to be a High Court judgment under subsection (4) of Section 149 of the Constitution. Mr. Roberts of Counsel for the respondent was adamant that the Commission of Inquiry Report made an adverse finding against the appellant, referring to page 116 of the Record of Appeal where it is stated:

"The internal working of the Ministry is not healthy either. Allocation of State Land to Applicants is not always equitable. Procedures used could vary with applicants. The Commission looked at the File of Continental Commodities and Services Limited, File No. SLD10/64 Vol.6T [p.9] on a Commercial Lease for 21 years; lease effective from 15th October, 1986.

The only File available was a Temporary File but the Commission was told vital files got missing now and again. In 1993, this property was sold. The Report made before sale says Commercial lease have been sold before.

Specifically however the valuation, Recommendation and Approval on this Application for freehold title, were all done so quickly, 13th-14th September 1993. On 14th September, 1993 the Director was instructed by the Permanent Secretary to.... Communicate this Approval to the Applicant with Dispatch'. I would call this applicant a very special Applicant.'"

That is the 'adverse finding' referred to by Counsel for the respondent. Having read the conclusion and the summary of suggestions and Recommendations in the Commission of Inquiry Report, it is hardly surprising to see the basis of Mr. Serry-Kamal's vehement contention that there was no adverse finding against the appellant in the Commission of Inquiry Report. The passage referred to was part of the comments by the learned Commissioner on the manner in which State Land had been administered. It was not an 'adverse finding' by the Commission against the appellant. An 'adverse finding' entails a decision or a determination or a pronouncement which is unfavourable to a person by a tribunal or a body charged with the task of making a decision on a matter. In the present case, we agree with Counsel for the appellant that there has been no adverse finding against the appellant in the Commission of Inquiry Report.

The Government White Paper

The Commission of Inquiry Report was published in December 1999 but was actually submitted to His Excellency the President in January 2000. The Government White Paper was prepared and issued by the Government in [p.10] October 2000, more than six months after the Report of the Commission of Inquiry was furnished to the President. The Government White Paper contained detailed adverse comments regarding the appellant and manner in which it came to acquire the property at 28 Wallace Johnson Street, Freetown. The status of a Government White Paper had already been decided by this Court in Matilda Victoria Sesay v Attorney-General and Minister of Justice (4th June 2004) C.A. Misc.App.7/2004,where it was held that a Government White Paper does not form part of the Report of the Commission of Inquiry and that the right of appeal under section 149(4) is against an adverse finding in the Report of the Commission of Inquiry and not against adverse statements contained in the Government White Paper.

It would not be correct to regard the Government White Paper as forming part of the Report of the Commission of Inquiry for the purpose of section 149(4) of the Constitution.

Section 149(4) of the Constitution

The wording of Section 149(4) of the Constitution is set out at the beginning of this judgment. It will be observed that Section 149(4) of the Constitution expressly provides that the report of the Commission of Inquiry shall for the purposes of this Constitution be deemed to be a judgment of the High Court and an appeal lies as of right from the Commissioner to the Court of Appeal.

The words "for the purpose of this Constitution" used in the subsection are deliberately chosen by the draftsman of the Constitution. They denote the purpose of and limitation of that provision. It must be understood that the Report of Commission of Inquiry shall be deemed to be a judgment of the High Court for the purpose of the Constitution and not for all purposes. Had the intention of the provision been to deem the Report a judgment of the High Court for all purposes, the draftsman would have plainly said so. The purpose of the subsection is to deem the Report which contains an adverse finding against a person, to be a [p.11] judgment of the High Court and to accord the aggrieved person the automatic right of appeal to the Court of Appeal. The Constitution recognizes that, as a result of an adverse finding in the Report against a person, certain legal consequences may well flow from the Report, such as penalty, forfeiture or loss of status.

It will also be observed that the Constitution does not provide for the manner in which such legal consequences may be pursued. Thus the procedure for enforcing the adverse finding of the Commission lies, not under the Constitution, but elsewhere. Section 149(4) simply provides that for the purpose of the Constitution, where an adverse finding against any person is made by the Commission in its Report, that Report is deemed to be a judgment of the High Court, and that the aggrieved person has a right of appeal against it. That is all that section 149(4) permits.

How is the Report to be enforced?

In the present case, the respondent sought to enforce the Report of the Commission of Inquiry by issuing an undated Originating Notice of Motion against the appellant claiming, inter alia:

1. An order setting aside the transaction leading to the sale and purchase of Government property situate lying and being at 28 Wallace Johnson Street, Freetown and or canceling the grant/Deed of Conveyance made between the Government of Sierra Leone and the Defendant/Respondent herein dated 16th day of September 1993 and registered as No.855/93 in volume 472 at page 30 in the Book of Conveyances kept in the office of the Registrar-General in Freetown pursuant to the Findings, Report and Government White Paper of the Mrs. Laura Marcus-Jones Commission of Inquiry of 1999 on the Leasing and Sale of State lands in the Western Area.

2. An order for immediate possession to the Plaintiff/Applicant and/or an order to immediate re-enter the said Government property situate lying and being at 28 Wallace Johnson Street, Freetown.

The contention by Counsel for the respondent is that the orders sought were to give effect to the adverse findings of the Commission of Inquiry relating to the property situate, lying and being at 28 Wallace Johnson Street, Freetown. The Report of the Commission, argued Counsel, is a judgment of the High Court and thus the application to the High Court was merely to realise or give effect to the Report/Judgment.

With regard to the argument advanced by the respondent, we are in agreement with Mr. Serry-Kamal that section 149(4) of the Constitution does not give the respondent the right to bring an action such as that taken in this case to enforce the Report of the Commission nor the manner by which the respondent instituted the proceedings. We further agree, as contended for by Counsel for the appellant, that the appropriate procedures are to be found elsewhere, namely, under the Commission of Inquiry Act (Cap.54) as amended. It is quite clear that Section 7(2), (3) and (4) of the Act set out the machinery whereby the Report, whether it is deemed to be a judgment of the High Court under Section 149(4) or not, of the Commission of Inquiry may be enforced. Section 7(2), (3) and (4) of the Act are as follows:

7. (2) Upon the receipt of such report, if it appears to the President that any person has acquired assets for himself or in the name of any other person in an unlawful manner or is responsible for any irregularity or malpractice resulting in any financial loss to the Government of Sierra Leone or to any local authority or corporation, or any other body whatsoever, the President may, on the advice of the Cabinet, make an Order—

[p.13]

(a) Requiring such person to make good the financial loss to the Government of Sierra Leone, or any local authority or corporation or any other body as the case may be;

(b) forfeiting to the Government of Sierra Leone or any local authority or corporation or any other body as the case may be, all or any part thereof of the assets of such person, whether or not such assets are in his name.

(3) Any Judge if the High Court shall, upon application by the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice, make such Order or Orders as may be necessary for the purpose of giving full effect to the Order for forfeiture of assets made by the President under sub-section (2) hereof, and shall in particular but without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing where necessary, order any person to execute such instrument as may be necessary for enabling any assets situated outside Sierra Leone to be vested in the Government of Sierra Leone, or any local authority or corporation, or any other as the case may be.

(4) Any Order made under sub-section (2) may include provision for vesting the assets or any part thereof or the property in such assets or part thereof in a department of Government, a local authority or corporation or any other body as the case may be and, in particular, the Order may direct—

(a) In the case of assets lodged in a bank, the Manager or a person in charge of the bank in which the assets are lodged shall pay the assets into the Consolidated Fund, or any bank account as the case may require;

[p.14]

(b) In the case of assets in the form of stocks, shares, debentures, bonds or choses-in-action, the responsible officer concerned shall register them as required or necessary, in the name of the Government of Sierra Leone or any local authority or corporation, or any other body as the case may require.

(c) in the case of assets in the nature if immovable property the Administrator and Registrar-General shall remove the name of the person or that of any person in whose name the property is registered, from the Register and register forthwith such property in the name of the Government of Sierra Leone or any local authority or corporation, or other body as the case may be, and the property shall vest forthwith in the Government of Sierra Leone or local authority or corporation, or other body (as the case may be) as from the date of such Order.

By those provisions, it is obvious that the power to enforce the findings and recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry as contained in the Report is vested in the President. An order of forfeiture in this regard may be made by the President and the High Court is obliged to enforce such order of forfeiture. Despite the obvious procedure laid down under the Commission of Inquiry Act, the respondent chose to enforce the findings and recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry by coming to Court by way of Originating Notice of Motion purporting to have the right to do so under Section 149(4) of the Constitution. Such a procedure is wrong. There is no known authority for the manner in which the respondent sought to repossess the appellant's property in this case. Beside the procedure set out in section 7(2), (3) and (4) of the Commission of Inquiry Act, there are also rules governing the procedure for seeking the order of [p.15] forfeiture of land. Proper procedures must be followed, especially where a person's right to his property is sought to be taken away from him.

We are of the opinion that the learned trial judge erred in law in his apparent acceptance that the appellant was entitled to enforce the Commission's finding by way of an originating notice of motion under section 149 (4) of the Constitution. We further feel that His Lordship erred in law in not addressing his mind to the proper procedure that ought to be followed where the respondent seeks to take enforcement actions in respect of the findings and recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry.

Other matters were also urged upon us by Counsel for the appellant. These include the irregularity of the originating notice of motion. We do not need to deal with those matters since in our judgment the proceedings ought not to have been instituted in the manner it was brought, and consequently, the order granted by the High Court to set aside the Conveyance of the property concern between the Government and the appellant ought not to have been made. There is no basis both in law and in practice for granting that order in this case. That order must be set aside.

For the above reasons, the appeal is allowed and the Order of the High Court dated 27 February 2004 is set aside.

JUDGMENT

TEJAN-JALLOH JA:

This is an appeal against the Judgment of Hon. Justice

Sir John Muria JA. Dated the 26th day of August 2004 in which he made the following orders.

[p.54]

1. That Judgment to be entered against the Defendants/Respondents.

2. That the Plaintiff do recover immediate possession of the premises situate at 17 King William Street, Freetown.

3. That cost should be to the Plaintiff/Applicant.

The Appellant being dissatisfied with the said Order of Honorable Justice Sir John Muria JA, appealed to the Court of Appeal on two grounds. Both grounds were argued together by Counsel.

GROUNDS OF APPEAL:—

1. The Learned Trial Judge erred in law in granting leave for the Respondents to enter final Judgment for recovery of possession in respect of 17 King William Street, Freetown.

2. The Learned Trial Judge erred in law in granting the Order Sought upon an Ex parte Application pursuant to Order X1 Of the High Court Rules 1960 as amended.

BACKGROUND OF CASE

1. The Writ of Summons was issued by the Plaintiffs on the 21st of June 2004.

2. An Appearance was entered by the Defendants on the 28th of June 2004.

3. An affidavit of Search filed by the Plaintiffs on the 14th of July 2004.

4. Judgment in Default of Defense entered on the 4th day of August 2004.

5. Judge's Summons (Order 11) filed on the 12th of August 2004.

6. Leave to enter final judgment granted to the Plaintiff on the 26th day of August 2004.

[p.55]

7. Motion to set aside judgment in default of Defence 14th of October 2004.

8. Interim Stay of execution of Judgment in Default of Defence granted 19th October 2004.

9. Order refusing to set aside Judgment in default of Defence 28th of May 2005.

The two grounds of appeal can be considered together. Ground one which is that the learned Trial Judge erred in law in granting leave to the Respondent to enter final judgment for recovery of possession in respect of 17, King Williams Street, Freetown:—

The application for final judgment was made during the long vacation: Ord. 64 r, 5 of the Annual Practice 1960 explicitly states that the time of long vacation should not be reckoned in the computation of time appointed or allowed for filing any pleading unless otherwise directed by the Court or a Judge. It is clear therefore that Judgment in default of Defence cannot be obtained during the long vacation. See Macfoy vs. United Africa Co. Ltd. (1960) A.C. House of Lords Page 157) where Lord Denning dealt with the effect of delivering a Statement of Claim in the long vacation The Judge's summons for final judgment is dated 12th August, 2004. There can be no doubt that that time does not run during the vacation. The final Judgment purportedly obtained is therefore irregular.

The Respondent contends that the Judge's summons pursuant to Order X1 was not made ex parte but the Appellants denied being served and they were entitled to be served; appearance having been entered in their behalf. There is no evidence of service of the Judges summons in the record.

In the circumstances we hold that the Judge's summons for final Judgment was made ex parte which renders the proceedings not only irregular but renders it a nullity: See Craig v Kanssen (1942) All E.R. 108.

We are aware of the case of Hemp Adams v Hall (1911) 2 KB 942 at Page 94 4 945, where Buckley L.J. said at page 945:

[p.56]

"Where a Plaintiff precedes by default every step in the proceedings must strictly comply with the rules; that is a matter strictism juris."

Vaughan —Williams LJ also said at Page 944:

"where proceedings are taken by a plaintiff in the absence of the Defendant, it is most important that there should be at every stage a strict compliance with the rule, and therefore it is a reasonable and proper thing in the case of proceedings by default to treat non-compliance with such a rule not as mere irregularity which can be waived, but a matter which prevents any further proceedings from being taken on the writ."

As there was no strict compliance with the rules, we are bound to hold that the appellants were justified in asking the Court to set aside the Judgment ex-debito —justia.

As for the proposed defence filed, the defence on the merit, which the defendant is required to show need only disclose an arguable or triable issue and not that it has the merit to succeed.: Drayton Giftware Ltd v Varyland Limited (1982) 132, Mew L.J. 558. See also Swain vs. Hillman and other 1 All E.R. P.91 at Page 95 Para. 1. In an action for possession, it is enough if it is shown that there is no relationship of Landlord and tenant. In the instant case the Appellant claimed to have purchased the property. We are of the view that triable issues meriting their determination have been shown. In the premises, the appeal is allowed. Judgment dated 26th August 2004 is hereby set aside with costs to be taxed.

DIVISION: COURT OF APPEAL, SIERRA LEONE

DATE: 4 MAY 2006

CORAM: JUSTICE J. KAMANDA, J.A.

MRS JUSTICE S. BASH-TAQI, J.A.

MR JUSTICE G. GELAGA KING, J.A.

BETWEEN:

HENNEH WAFTA — APPELLANT/APPLICANT

AND

ALHAJI SANU BARRIE — RESPONDENT

Berthan Macaulay (Jnr) Esq., for the Applicant

Abdul Serry-Kamal, Esq., for the Respondent

MR JUSTICE G. GELAGA KING, J.A.

A Notice of Motion dated 9th November, 2005 was filed by the Applicant as a preliminary matter, prior to the hearing of the Grounds of Appeal herein. I opine that, more appropriately, it should have, in that circumstance, been entered as a Miscellaneous Application to distinguish it from the substantive appeal hearing itself. Be that as it may, the motion seeks two main orders:

1. That this Hon. Court do grant an injunction restraining the respondent by himself, his servants, agents or howsoever otherwise from conveying, selling, mortgaging, or in any way disposing of the property delineated in survey plan L.S. 2922/95 dated 21st December, 1995 and the building thereon and forming part of the conveyance marked exhibit "BMJ 6E2" to the affidavit of Mr. Berthan Macaulay (Jnr) sworn to on the 9th day of November, 2005 in support of the application herein, pending the hearing and determination of this application.

2. That an identical injunction as in 1. above be granted, pending the hearing and determination of the appeal herein.

The Notice of Motion is supported by the affidavit of Mr. Berthan Macaulay (Jnr) sworn to on the 9th day of November, 2005 and filed herein and counsel for the Applicant said he was making the application under rule 31 of this Court's Rules, Public Notice No.29 of1985. He based his submissions on the affidavit and exhibits in support. Ex. "BMJ1" is a copy of the writ of summons issued by the respondent against the applicant in which he claimed:

"(1) Recovery of possession of the premises known as 18 Sani Abacha Street Freetown, the property of the plaintiff

(2) Mesne profits at the rate of $200,000 US per annum from the 1st day of January, 2002 until possession is delivered up.

(3) Interest thereon at such rate as the court shall allow."

To that writ the Applicant filed a Defence and Counterclaim, ex. "BMJ2", and pleaded rather incomprehensibly in paragraph 6:

"Save as herein expressly admitted the Defendant admits each and every allegation of fact contained as if the same were set out and traversed seriatim." He then went on to plead in similar incomprehensible vein in paragraph 8: ". . . The Defendant did not execute the said conveyance but wrote back to the Defendant requesting that the purchase price be increased to United States Dollars One Hundred and Twenty Thousand which said sum the Defendant eventually agreed to pay." Emphasis mine

Judgment was eventually entered for the plaintiff, the Respondent herein and the Applicant's Counterclaim was dismissed, as exhibited in "BMJ4".

Mr. Macaulay went on to submit that he was asking for an injunction to be granted in order to preserve the status quo Vis a Vis the property in dispute and cited the following cases:

American Cyanamid Co. v. Ethicon 19751 All E. R. 504

Haja Adama Mansaray v. Alhaji Ibrahim Mansaray Civ. App. 37/81 (unreported)

NB Landmark Ltd. v. Lakiani [2001-2002] SGLR

Mr. Serry-Kamal, in reply, referred to his affidavit in opposition sworn to on 24th January, 2006 and filed herein and submitted that there was no legal basis for the application as there was no provision in the Rules of this Court which allows the application for an injunction to be made after judgment has been delivered by the trial court and which empowers this Court to grant it. He referred to O. 37 r. 10 of the High Court Rules which makes provision for a plaintiff before or after judgment to apply for an injunction to restrain a defendant from the repetition or continuance of the wrongful act or breach of contract complained of and submitted that that there was no similar provision in this Court's Rules. He argued that in the instant application it is the unsuccessful defendant who is applying for an injunction against the successful plaintiff. Mr. Serry-Kamal submitted further that the proper course was for the Applicant to apply for a stay of execution of the judgment. Referring to paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 of his affidavit, he stressed that Respondent has no intention of selling the said property and there is no evidence that the respondent is in the process of trying to sell the property. He contended that rule 31 deals specifically with the substantive appeal when it comes to be considered.

Mr. Berthan Macaulay, responding, contended that the Respondent's argument ran counter to the express wording of r. 31, which expressly states that this Court may grant any injunction which the court below is authorized to grant and that generally this Court has as full jurisdiction over the whole proceedings as if they were instituted in this Court as a court of first instance. He posited that this all-embracing generality relating to jurisdiction is buttressed in s. 129 (3) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, Act No. 6 of 1991. He maintained that the application is not for a stay of execution. He finally referred to r. 22 of our Rules which states that after an appeal has been entered and until it has finally been disposed of this Court is seised of the proceedings as between the [p.19] parties.

It seems to me that the principal questions which arise for determination in this application are twofold, namely:

(I) whether this Court has the power, under rule 31, at this stage of the proceedings to grant the application for an injunction, and

(II) If it does have the power, whether we ought to grant it.

There is, also, an incidental question: whether the proper course is to apply for a stay of execution as contended by the Respondent, rather than an injunction as prayed for by the Applicant who contends that after his counterclaim for specific performance and damages had been dismissed by Ademosu, J., in the High Court, there was nothing to stay, citing Eboe v. Eboe and; NB Landmark Ltd. V. Lakiani, supra. He has, therefore, not applied for a stay, but instead has opted for an injunction. This incidental question can be disposed of in a short shrift and in terms of a local adage: 'Don't take off your jacket when you have not been invited to a fight'. In other words, it is the unfettered and undoubted right of the Applicant to decide, for better or worse, on what course he will take. And he has exercised that right by seeking an injunction and not a stay of execution, so that is the end of that contention.

I shall now go on to principal question (I) which must necessarily hinge on the construction of rule 31. The relevant portions of which read:

"The Court . . . may make any interim order or grant any injunction which the court below is authorized to make or grant . . . and generally shall have as full jurisdiction over the whole proceedings as if the proceedings had been instituted and prosecuted in the Court as a Court of first instance..."

In construing that section, regard must also be had to r.22 which states:

"After an appeal has been entered and until it is finally disposed of, the Court shall be seised of the whole of the proceedings as between the parties thereto."

The appeal in this matter has been filed and this Court is, therefore, seised of the whole proceedings, including the instant application between the Applicant and the Respondent. That being the case and applying rule 22, this Court certainly has the power under r.3, at this stage of the proceedings, to grant any injunction which the High Court has the authority to grant, even though the Appellant has not even begun to argue his grounds of appeal. Has the High Court the authority to grant the injunction sought? If it has, then so also has this Court of Appeal, because of r.31 as well as s.129 (3) of the Constitution which states, inter alia, that "the Court of Appeal shall have all the powers, authority and jurisdiction vested in the Court from which the appeal is brought".

Both parties agree that the High Court by O. 37 r.10 is empowered, with or without terms, "to restrain ...the respondent from the repetition or continuance of the wrongful act or breach of contract complained of, or from the commission of any injury or breach of contract of a like land relating to the same property or right, or arising out of the same contract." I am not persuaded that this is the appropriate authority in the instant case. I would myself call in aid the provisions of s. 25 (8) of the Judicature Act 1873 which state [p.20] that "the High Court may grant... an injunction...in all cases in which it appears to the Court to be just or convenient so to do. . ." And so may the Court of Appeal. For these reasons, principal question (I) must be answered in the affirmative.

Now that we have held that this Court has the power to grant the injunction sought, I shall now adumbrate on principal question (II): Ought we then to grant the injunction sought? In answering this question it is instructive to refer to the guidelines in deciding whether or not to grant an interlocutory injunction which are to be found principally in the case of American Cyanamid v. Ethicon, supra. But before I dwell on those guidelines*, let me state that the fundamental question that has to be answered when the court is hearing an application for an interlocutory injunction is what weight should it give to the relative strengths of the parties' case*?

It may be recalled that in the American Cyanamid application for an interlocutory injunction both Graham J. at first instance and the Court of Appeal based their approaches on a perceived rule of law that the court should not grant the interim injunction unless the applicant had shown that on the whole of the affidavit evidence, a prima facie case had been made out. As this was a primary issue, no injunction could issue unless the applicant had first made out his case on the affidavit evidence then before the court. As Russell L.J. put it and the other members of the court agreed [1974] F.S.R. 312,333:

". . .if there be no prima facie case on the point essential to entitle the plaintiffs to complain of the defendants' proposed activities, that is the end to interlocutory — relief."

However, in the House of Lords, Lord Diplock, who gave the only speech said that this sine qua non was a "technical rule" of "comparatively recent origin" which would stultify the court's discretion to grant interlocutory relief by reference to the balance of probabilities. He had this to say at page 408:

"Your Lordships should in my view take this opportunity of declaring that there is no such rule. The use of such expressions as 'a probability,' 'a prima facie case,' in the context of the exercise of a discretionary power to grant an interlocutory injunction leads to confusion as to the object sought to be achieved by this form of temporary relief. The court no doubt must be satisfied that the claim is not frivolous or vexatious. In other words, that there is a serious issue to be tried." (Emphasis mine)

He then went on to say that the court should go on to consider whether the balance of convenience lay in granting or refusing the interlocutory relief that is sought. In this regard, the overriding principle is that the court should first consider whether, if the plaintiff were to succeed at the trial in establishing his right to permanent injunction, he would be adequately compensated by an award of damages for the loss he would have sustained. He opined that "if damages in the measure recoverable at common law would be adequate remedy and the defendant would be in a financial position to pay them, no interlocutory injunction should normally be granted, however strong the plaintiff's case appeared to be at that stage." In the case before us where the injunction is applied for under a counterclaim, the defendant is to be regarded as a 'plaintiff and the plaintiff as a 'defendant.'

Lord Diplock's guidelines which I accept and adopt maybe summarized as follows:

(1) Has the applicant shown that there is a serious question to be tried?

[p.21]

(2) Is there doubt as to whether the remedies respectively available to the parties in damages would be adequate?

(3) Where does the balance of convenience lie?

It was only as a component of (3) that the strengths of the parties' case ought to be considered by the court, and even then only when it was plain whose case was the stronger. It may then be in place to take into account in tipping the balance the relative strength of each party's case as revealed by the affidavit evidence adduced on the hearing of the application.

I now turn to consider the present application and principal question (II) in the light of those guidelines and the applicable legal principles. My first observation is that the writ herein was issued on the 9th day of August, 2002, claiming recovery of possession of the said property and mesne profits. The defence and counterclaim was delivered and filed on 18th day of September, 2002, counterclaiming specific performance and damages for breach of contract. Significantly, there was no claim for an injunction of any sort then, nor during the trial, nor up to the time when judgment was delivered on the 21st day of October, 2005, nor up to the time when notice of appeal was filed on the 1st day of November 2005.

Rather unusually and strangely, it is only after the Applicant's counterclaim had been dismissed in the court below, the trial having ended, and when his appeal arising therefrom is about to be heard in this Court that the Applicant has applied for an injunction, for the first time, on the 9th day of November, 2005. It is important and helpful to reflect on the fact that even though more than three years have elapsed between the filing of what I might call the injunction less counterclaim and the hearing of this application, the status quo has been preserved, there being no evidence before us that the Respondent wishes, or threatens to sell mortgage, lease or otherwise dispose of the said property. Indeed, if the contrary were the case, then the Applicant should have led affidavit evidence that the Respondent is threatening or intending to do that which he is not entitled to do. And the Applicant has not so alleged. See on this point Draper v. British Optical Association [1938] 1 All E.R. 115.

On the contrary, the Respondent's counsel in paragraph 2 of his affidavit in opposition swore as follows:

"I am informed by our client and I verily believe that he has no intention of selling, mortgaging or otherwise disposing of any part of his property known as 18, Sani Abacha Street, Freetown."

The Applicant in his submissions highlighted his reason for the application as the need to preserve the status quo. Quite apart from what I have just said, supra, in relation to status quo, as I have already premised, we are obliged to look at the whole case, and have regard to the strength of the claim as well as the defence. It may not be enough for the Applicant to show that he has an arguable case that the Respondent may infringe his right. See Hubbard v. Vosper [1972] 2 QB 84. In any event, the trial stage has passed and this is an application for an injunction pending the appeal herein. And when one looks at the case as a whole and paragraphs 6 and 8 of the Applicant's defence, above, which I was impelled to term incomprehensible, the question whether there is a serious issue to be ruled upon in the application before us seems, to put it euphemistically, to hang in the balance.

In all the circumstances of the case and taking cognizance of the relative strengths of the parties' case as revealed by the affidavit evidence before us, I have come to the conclusion that damages recoverable at common law, if the Applicant were to be successful in the appeal, would be adequate remedy and the Respondent would be in a financial position to pay them. (See paragraph 3 of the affidavit in opposition.) I opine that the balance of convenience lies in not granting the injunction that is sought. To my mind the Applicant has failed to establish to the required degree, in relation to an application of this sort and in relation to all the other factors that have to be taken into account, that he ought to be granted an interlocutory injunction restraining the Respondent by himself, his servants, agents or howsoever otherwise from conveying, selling, mortgaging, or in any way disposing of the said property.

I, therefore, refuse to grant the injunction and will dismiss the application.

S. A. BAH Esq, for the State/Respondent

HON MRS JUSTICE S. BASH-TAQI, J.A:

This is an appeal from the Judgment of Hamilton, J. (as he, then was) sitting at the High Court in Kenema against sentence

The Appellants, on the 23rd day of October 2003, were convicted of conspiring together and with others unknown, to break into a shop belonging to a Mr. Ibrahim Khalil Basma, a businessman in Kenema, and of stealing there from, goods to the total value of Le18,000,000.00, the property of the said Ibrahim Khalil Basma,

The Appellants had been charged, on indictment, with the following offences, namely

Count One: Conspiracy contrary to Law;

Count Two: Larceny contrary to section 21 (1) of the Larceny Act of 1916.

All the Appellants pleaded not guilty. At the conclusion of the trial, the Jury unanimously found all the Appellants, save the 2nd, guilty of conspiracy and all 7 Appellants guilty of Shop Breaking and Larceny. The 2nd Appellant was acquitted and discharge 1 on the Conspiracy count. The Learned Trial Judge sentenced the Appellants to 12 years imprisonment in respect of the Conspiracy offence, and 14 years in respect of the Shop

Breaking and Larceny charge. He further ordered that the sentences were to run consecutively, that is say, that the Appellants, with the exception of the 2nd Appellant, are each to serve a period of 26 years imprisonment.

All the Appellants have now appealed to this Honourable Court against the sentences. At the commencement of his argument, Counsel for the Appellants, Mr. I. F. Mansaray, sought leave of the Court to abandon Ground 2 of the Grounds of Appeal, which was granted and Counsel proceeded to argue Ground 1, which reads:

“1. That the sentence was manifestly excessive."

Counsel for the Appellants submitted that the Learned Trial Judge did not consider mitigating factors which would have led to a considerable reduction of the sentences passed on the Appellants. He could not, however, refer the Court to any part of the Records of the proceedings where such mitigating circumstances were recorded.

Counsel submitted further that 5 of the Appellants, namely, the 1st , 2nd, 3rd, 5th and 6th Appellants were first offenders, and that the Learned Trial Judge ought to have considered this as a mitigating factor which should have led to a reduction of the sentences with respect to these 5 Appellants.

He further submitted that, all the Appellants, except for the 1st Appellant, begged for mercy, a factor which the Trial Judge should have taken into consideration when passing the sentences. Counsel submitted that in the circumstances, he was now appealing to this Honorable Court to temper justice with mercy and reduce the sentences so that they run concurrently rather than consecutively.

With respect to the 4th and 7th Appellants who have previous convictions, Counsel relied on the discretion of the Court to do what seemed best in the circumstances.

Counsel for the State, Mr. S, A Bah in his reply, submitted that he was relying on the Court's discretion in the matter.

The Court has taken into account the submissions made by Counsel for the Appellant and for the State and having perused the records of the proceedings in the High Court, this Court is satisfied that the Learned Trial Judge applied the correct sentences allowed by law. However, since Counsel for the Appellants raised the point that some of the Appellants were first offenders, this is a factor which the Learned Trial Judge ought to have considered in passing sentence. We must point out however, that it is within the Judge's discretion to order that the sentences run concurrently or consecutively. However, in all the Circumstances of the case, we have come to the conclusion that the appeals of the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 5th, and 6th Appellants should be allowed, and that the sentences of 12 years and 14 years imprisonment should run concurrently instead of consecutively.

With respect to the 4th Appellant, the record states that he had three previous convictions, one for which he was sentenced to 14 years. This Court holds that his sentences of 12 years and 14 years should run consecutively.

[p.60]

The appeals of the 4th Appellant, Amara Kamara and the 7th Appellant, Patrick Tucker, are accordingly dismissed.

We order that the sentences for the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 5th and 6th Appellants be set aside and the sentences of 12 years and 14 years run concurrently instead of consecutively.

Appellant in person.

JUSTICE JON KAMANDA, J.A.

The Appellant was charged with the offence of unlawful carnal knowledge contrary to Section 6 of Cap. 31 of the Prevention of cruelty to children Act. The particulars of offence allege that the appellant on Tuesday 9th May, 2000 at Malama Lumley, Freetown in the Western Area of Sierra Leone had unlawful carnal knowledge with Mariama Sesay a child under the age of 14years, to wit 9 years. The Appellant was tried by Judge alone in the High Court in Freetown and on 18th May, 2000 was found guilty of the offence charged and sentenced to the maximum imprisonment term of 15 years.

The Appellant comes to this Court on an appeal against sentence. He is asking this court to reduce the sentence and make him serve only 4 years instead of the remaining 8. Let it be said at this point that the sentence is within the bounds allowed by the law. The Appellant was a friend of the victim's father. The victim, a 9 year old pupil of the CCSL Primary School was on her way selling coal when appellant invited her to his house saying that he had a message for her father. When she entered the house appellant grabbed her, stuffed clothes into her mouth and forcibly had sexual intercourse with her. She bled and made a report to her mother when she got home. She was examined in hospital and it was confirmed by the Doctor that her hymen had just recently been ruptured. These details are gory and diabolical. The judge was right to impose the maximum sentence on the appellant, a man with children of his own, one of them only as old as the victim.

[p.63]

The court finds no justifiable reason to alter this sentence, and is in total agreement with Mr. Bah's response to appellant case before this court.

The appeal is dismissed and the sentence of 15 years is confirmed.

[CR. APP. 11/92] [p.41-49]

DIVISION: COURT OF APPEAL, SIERRA LEONE

Hearing: 31st May 2006

Judgment: 24th October 2006

E.E.C Shears-Moses for Respondent

JUDGMENT

TEJAN-JALLOH JA:

This is an appeal against the Judgment of Hon. Justice F.C. Gbow delivered on the 13th March 1992 in which the learned Judge made the following Orders against the Appellant:

(i) delivery up of possession of the premises;

(ii) mesne profit;

(iii) be restrained from parting with possession of the premises other [p.42] than to the Respondent,

(iv) pay damages for breach of contract and

(v) pay cost of the action.

The appellant being dissatisfied with part of the Judgment appealed to the Court regarding the delivery up of possession, injunction and mense profit.

The grounds of Appeal are:

1. The learned Trial Judge having found that:

"(a) This 1990 was the same year in which the Plaintiff's own lease, the Head lease with Government in respect of the land on which these buildings are located was to expire …….The plaintiff himself had been a sub Lessee to one Dr. Sitta, who was the original Lessee to Government the lessor of the land. Dr. Sitta's unexpired term had been assigned to the Plaintiff."

"(b) Since according to the evidence the Plaintiff's term of years come to an end in 1990"

"(c) There is no evidence that the Plaintiff has exercised his right of option"

Erred in law in ordering, on the 13th March 1992, that the 2nd Defendant

[p.43]

"……. do delivery up of possession of both houses situate at No. 28 & 28A Horse Shoe Road, Kissy Dockyard."

"…….that the 2nd Defendant by himself his servants or agents or otherwise howsoever be restrained from parting with possession of the said premises save to the Plaintiff" in that the Plaintiff no longer had any legal interest and or rights in respect of the said premises after the expiration of same as found by the learned trial Judge himself.

2. The learned trial Judge having reviewed the evidence of the Plaintiff with regard to the latter's instructions to the 1st Defendant that he wanted the revised rent to be in the sum of £5,000.00 (Five Thousand Pounds Sterling) misdirected himself in assessing mense profit when he said

"For any assessment of the mense profits I am going to adopt the amount of £2,500.00 (Two Thousand Five Hundred Pounds) as a fair rent for the dwelling house per annum for the period 1986—1990" in the absence of any evidence whatsoever that such a figure represented the fair value of the said premises for the period in question.

3. The learned trial Judge in assessing mense profit with particular regards to the exchange rate prevailing over a period of time misdirected himself when he stated as follows:—

"With the aid of information obtained from Commercial Bank as well as the Bank of Sierra Leone I am in a position to consider this issue"

[p.44]

(a) no such information has been given in evidence during the course of the trial and

(b) The learned trial Judge was acting on information received by him personally which was not "evidence" for the purpose of adjudication on the issue of mense profit.

It is clear from the grounds of appeal that at the heart of this case is the legal status of the respondent's lease over the property in question. It is therefore necessary that the status of the respondent's right to the property concerned must first be ascertained. This is crucial to any claim that he may have against the appellant over the latter's reliance on his subsequent leasehold right in the property.

Status of the Plaintiff's Lease

According to the evidence before the court, the plaintiff was granted a sublease over the property in 1967 for a term of 22 years by one Dr. Sitta who held the head lease from the Government. The sublease was to expire in 1990 which was the same year in which Dr. Sitta's head lease was to expire. However, in or about 1985, Dr. Sitta's unexpired term was assigned to the respondent, thus making the respondent's sublease as well as the head lease expiring at the same time, that is, at the end of 1990. The evidence on this can be found at pages 54 and 55, as well as in "Exh. K and L" at pages 298 and 299 of the Record)

Further it is pertinent to note a very important finding of fact made by the learned trial judge relating to the status of the respondent's lease. His Lordship had this to say, before deciding on the question of mense profit (at page 272 of the Record):

"Before however coming to the issue itself I should state that whatever amount that I would arrive at, would be in respect of the period, 1986-1990, since according to the evidence the plaintiff's Term of Years came to an end in 1990. Although in his evidence the plaintiff told the Court that Dr. Sitter assigned his lease to him and that the Government gave its approval of the assignment and also an option to renew as stated in Exhs. 'K' & 'A' was given to him, there is no evidence that the plaintiff has exercised his right of option"

As the learned trial judge found, there was no evidence that the plaintiff (now respondent) ever exercised his right of option, although Exhibit "K" showed that he was allowed to do so. The only conclusion is that having not exercised his right of option to renew the lease at the end of 1990, his legal right to continue as a lessee of the property concerned (Nos. 28 and 28A Horse Shoe Road, Kissy Dock Yard) ceased at the expiration of the lease at the end of 1990.

The appellant's Lease

Learned Counsel for the Appellant sought and obtained leave to adduce fresh evidence and such evidence to be by way of affidavit. Such fresh evidence has revealed that on 19th March 1991 a lease of the property, the subject matter of this action was granted to the Appellant and that subsequent to that, by Deed of Conveyance dated 17th day of May 1994, conveyance of the said property was made to the Appellant and it is registered as No.404/94 in Volume 477 at Page 71 of the Book of Conveyances kept in the Office of the Registrar-General. The contention of learned Counsel for the Respondent is that there had been cancellations of the lease granted to the appellant vide Irrevocable Deed dated 9th May, 2001. This now raises the issue of the legality or validity of [p.46] the Irrevocable Deed of Cancellation. Learned Counsel for the Appellant submitted that the purported cancellation is invalid, null and void and of no effect. For this proposition, he referred us to Halsbury's Laws of England 3rd edition Vol. II page 365 at Para.593 under rubric "Cancellation Discharge" where the learned author states inter alia:

"A deed may lawfully be cancelled either by the person who has it in his possession as being solely entitled thereunder or by anyone (including the party bound by the deed) to whom the person has delivered it up to be cancelled.

The deed may be cancelled by mutual consent, or under the terms of an agreement between the parties or by order of the Court."

It is plain from the evidence, and it is not disputed by the Respondent, that the purported cancellation was not by the Order of the Court. We note the appellant strongly denied being a party or privy to the purported cancellation. We are, of the view that the Appellant's case is strengthened by the fact that his Lease Agreement was still with him and so is his Conveyance in respect of the property. Counsel also placed great reliance on Registration of Instruments (Amendment Act 1964) which made registration of Instrument compulsory. Section 4 as far as relevant reads:—

4(i) every deed, Contract or Conveyance executed after eighteen hundred and fifty seven, so far as regards any land hereby affected shall take effect as against other deeds affecting the same land from the date of its registration."

In Dr. C.J. Seymour-Wilson v Musa Abbess (17th June 1981) S.C. Civ. App. 5/1979 (Unreported) the principle was restated that registration of an [p.47] instrument under the law confer priority over other instruments attaching the same land which was registered later. In the case in hand, the Conveyance of the subject matter to the Appellant was prior to the Irrevocable Deed of Cancellation. In the light of the fresh evidence, we have received there can be no doubt that the "Irrevocable Deed" came into existence after the Lessor had already divested himself of title to the property (nemo dat quod non riabet). We hold that the freehold already granted to the Appellant remains effective and we see no justification to hold otherwise. We further hold that the Appellant is the one entitled to the possession of the premises subject-matter of this action situate lying and being at No.28 and 28A, Horse Shoe Road, Kissy Dockyard, Freetown. For the foregoing reasons, the order of the learned trial judge as regards delivery up of possession and injunction are hereby set aside.

As regards grounds 2 and 3 of the appeal, the complaints are that the mense profit awarded was without evidence that it was a fair value of the property and that there was no evidence before the Court as to the prevailing rate of exchange at the material time. We find it convenient to deal with these two grounds together.

Mense Profits and Rate of Exchange

The law is settled that mense profits are assessed at the amount of the rent, but if the real value is higher than the rent, then the mense profits must be assessed at the higher value. See Clifton Securities Limited v Huntley and ors. (1948) 2 All E.R. 283. At what rate the mense profit are to be assessed would depend on the evidence in respect of it; and the evidence required is one that will tell the Court the market value of the property. It would therefore be wrong for us to subscribe to the learned Trial Judge's view that he could, without evidence, assess the mense [p.48] profit based on information personally known to him. Such a practice amounts to only a conjecture.

We have considered the argument canvassed by both sides. The principal basis for the learned trial judge's assessment of the mense profit in this case was from information obtained and/or available to him from the Commercial Banks as well as the Bank of Sierra Leone. Learned Counsel for the Appellant argued that the exchange rate is not of the matter the Court can take judicial notice of. In support of the proposition he relied on Phipson on Evidence 11th Edition page 23 paragraph 48 under the rubric "judge or jury as witnesses" where the law is stated thus:—

"Although, however, Judges or Juries may, in arriving at decisions, use their general information and that knowledge of the common affairs of life, which men of ordinary intelligence possess they may not, as might, juries formerly act in their own private knowledge or belief (emphasise mine) regarding the facts of the particular case".

It can be seen here that the learned Trial Judge acted wrongly by basing his assessment on his private knowledge. The case of John & Lamin v John 1957-60) A.L.R. S.L., 77 at page 81 also cited by the learned Counsel for the appellant is authority for the proposition that cases before the Court should be decided upon legal evidence. Suffice it to say there was no legal evidence adduced before the Court to support the learned trial Judge's decision on the rate of exchange. The conclusion we have reached is that the decision is bad in law and should be set aside. We therefore set aside the order for mense profit. Grounds 2 and 3 of the appeal also succeed.

[p.49]

This appeal is allowed. The judgment of the learned Trial Judge dated the 13th of March 1992 and the orders made against the Appellant are hereby set aside.

PAUL KAMARA v. THE STATE

[CR. APP. 32/2004] [p.26-40]

DIVISION: COURT OF APPEAL, SIERRA LEONE

DATE: 14 JUNE 2006

CORAM: JUSTICE SIR JOHN MURIA, J.A. (PRESIDING)

JUSTICE A.N.B. STRONGE, J.A.

JUSTICE J. KAMANDA, J.A.

BETWEEN:

PAUL KAMARA — APPELLANT

AND

THE STATE — RESPONDENT

HEARING: 23rd and 29th November 2005

JUDGMENT: 29th November 2005 (Reasons Reserved)

Advocates:

J.B. Jenkins-Johnston Esq. for Appellant

O.V. Robbin-Mason Esq. and A.S. Sesay Esq. for Respondent

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

MURIA JA (NOW JSC):

On 29th November, 2005 this Court allowed the appellant's appeal and quashed his sentence. We said that we would give our reasons for our decision. This we now do so. This case extends beyond the interest of the appellant and the respondent. It concerns the principle of freedom of the press which is one of the freedoms enshrined under the [p.27] Constitution of Sierra Leone. This appeal, however, is determined on the facts of the present case and law applicable to those facts.

Brief Background

The brief background to this case is that appellant, Paul Kamara, is the Editor of the newspaper FOR DI PEOPLE. On 3rd October 2003, respectively, the newspaper published the following statements about His Excellency the President of Sierra Leone.

"KABBA IS A TRUE CONVICT

…… Therefore, President Kabba is a convict who has refused with impunity to appeal his conviction……."

"BETWEEN CONSTITUTIONALITY AND A CONVICT PRESIDENT KABBA

As far as FDP is concerned Kabbah should not be a President. In the first place, the man never appealed the Beoku-Betts Commission of Inquiry and the simple definition of the term 'CONVICT' is an individual that has been found guilty of a crime or an offence……."

Following the publication of those statements in the FOR Dl PEOPLE Newspaper, the appellant was charged with Seditious Libel for which he was tried, convicted and sentenced to two years imprisonment by the High Court of Sierra Leone.

The High Court decision

I set out the two counts of Seditious Libel, contrary to Section 33(1) (c) of the Public Order Act No.46 of 1965 as amended in order to appreciate the nature of the offences with which the appellant was charged.

[p.28]

"COUNT 1

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE: SEDITIOUS LIBEL CONTRARY TO SECTION 33(1) (c) of the Public Order Act No.46 of 1965 as amended.

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE: PAUL KAMARA on the 3rd day of October 2003 at Freetown in the Western Area of Sierra Leone seditiously published a certain seditious libel concerning His Excellency the President of Sierra Leone Alhaji Dr. Ahmad Tejan Kabba containing inter alia the following seditious matters in the 3rd of October 2003 Edition of "FOR Dl PEOPLE" Newspaper in an article captioned:— KABBA IS A TRUE CONVICT!" to wit"……Therefore, President Kabbah is a convict who has refused with impunity, to appeal his conviction……."

"COUNT II

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE: SEDITIOUS LIBEL CONTRARY TO SECTION 33(1) (c) of the Public Order Act No.46 of 1965 as amended

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE: PAUL KAMARA on the 7th day of October 2003 at Freetown in the Western Area of the Republic of Sierra Leone seditiously published a certain seditious libel concerning His Excellency the President of the Republic of Sierra Leone Alhaji Dr. Ahmad Tejan Kabba containing inter alia the following seditious matters in the 7th of October 2003 Edition of "FOR Dl PEOPLE" [p.29] Newspaper in an article captioned BETWEEN CONSTITUTIONALITY AND A CONVICT PRESIDENT" KABBA " to wit:—

"As far as FDP is concerned Kabbah should not be should not be a president in the first place. The man never appealed the Beoku-Betts Commission of Inquiry and the simple definition of the term "CONVICT", is an individual that has been found guilty of a crime or an offence……"

As I have said earlier, following a trial the appellant was convicted and sentenced to two (2) years imprisonment.

It will be observed that before finding the appellant guilty and sentencing him, the learned trial Judge, in his Judgment, set out what Counsel for appellant called the "lofty goals" to be taken into consideration. His Lordship set these out at pages 139 to 140 as follows:—

"Having carefully considered the submissions made by Defence Counsel and Prosecuting Counsel in their final address except Counsel for the 2nd accused who is absent from the jurisdiction and I should now consider whether Prosecution have proven (sic) their case against each accused person beyond reasonable doubt — to my satisfaction in my capacity as Judge and Jury. Like in all criminal proceedings the prosecution in the present proceedings has the burden to prove the charges as laid in the indictment. The accused persons are under no obligation to put a defence.

There are four counts in this indictment. Counts 1 & 2 charge the 1st accused with publishing a seditious libel concerning His Excellency the [p.30] President. Counts 3 and 4 charge the 2nd, 3rd and 4th accused with the offence of printing a Seditious Libel concerning His Excellency the President.

My duty now is to see whether the evidence laid by the prosecution has established the ingredients and to see whether each accused has committed the Offence as alleged in each count."

The complaints by the appellant is that having set out the criteria to be taken into consideration before determining the guilt or the innocence of the Appellant, the learned trial Judge failed to do what he reminded himself necessary to be done.

Grounds of Appeal

There were 12 grounds of appeal originally filed on behalf of the appellant. However, having been granted leave to file amended grounds of appeal, Mr. Jenkins-Johnston (who did not file the original Notice of Appeal) filed only two grounds of appeal. The Court is now concerned with only those two grounds of appeal. I set them out here:

Ground 1.

The learned trial judge erred in law, and was totally wrong to have pronounced the Appellant as being guilty of the offences of Seditious Libel as charged, the prosecution having failed to establish by evidence or otherwise that the publications complained of were; (a) Seditious Publications and (b) were published by the appellant with a seditious intention.

Ground 2.

That the Judgment was against the weight of the evidence.

[p.31]

This appeal is being determined on those two grounds of appeal.

The issues and arguments

In the light of the now limited grounds of appeal, the issues are equally narrowed. Hence the central issue to be determined is in essence as follows: — have the elements of the offence of seditious libel been established? Essentially two questions are raised and must be answered. Firstly, whether the two articles complained of constituted seditious publications and secondly, if they were, whether they were so published with a seditious intention. These two requirements must be established if the offence of seditious libel is to be made out. Without having to look elsewhere for authorities on the point, the case of Regina v Lamin and Taqi [1964-66] ALR S.L. 346; is the authority in point, a case decided by the then Supreme Court of Sierra Leone. The other cases referred to by Counsel for the appellant are Wallace-Johnson -v- The King [1940] 1 W.W.R 365 (P.C.) (Gold Coast); [1940] AC 231; R v Bums (1886) 16 Cox CC 355; R v Sullivan; R v Piggot (1868) 11 Cox CC 44 (IR). Each of these cases was decided according to its own circumstances. However, the two requirements or elements of the offence of seditious libel were central to the decisions in all of those cases referred to.

It is important to note that, although Wallace Johnson -v- The King was referred to in Regina v Lamin and Taqi, the Supreme Court in R v Lamin and Taqi, did not express any view as to whether Wallace-Johnson -v- The King should apply or not in that case. In contrast, when one reads the decision In R v Lamin and Taqi with those of R v Burns; R v. Sullivan and R v Piggot, it is obvious that the reasoning of the Court in R v Lamin and Taqi followed closely those of R v Burns; R v Sullivan and R v. Piggot. We can only presume that the Court in R v Lamin and Taqi viewed the decision in Wallace-Johnson -v- The King turned on a very [p.32] narrow point, namely whether it was necessary for the prosecution to bring evidence to show incitement to violence before seditious intention could be proved, and thus it was not an issue for consideration in the R v Lamin and Taqi case. We, however, expressed the view that, like the then Gold Coast Colony (now Ghana), Sierra Leone incorporates the law of seditious libel in a statute. In the then Gold Coast, it was in the Criminal Code, and in Sierra Leone, it was in the Sedition Act (Cap.29) and now in the Public Order Act, 1965. The Courts, in dealing with such an offence, must first turn to the statute which sets out the law of seditious libel. Only where the language used in the statute is unclear and ambiguous should the Court seek assistance from any expositions, however authoritative, of the common law. The Privy Council in Wallace Johnson -v- The King succinctly pointed this out in response to the submission by Counsel for the appellant relying on a number of English and Scottish Courts including R v Bums (above), at pp.239 -240:

"Their Lordships throw no doubt upon the authority of these decisions, and if this was a case arising in this country, they would feel it their duty to examine the decisions in order to test the submissions on behalf of the appellant. The present case, however, arose in the Gold Coast Colony, and the law applicable is contained in the Criminal Code of the Colony. It was contended that the intention of the Code was to reproduce the law of sedition as expounded in the cases to which their Lordships' attention was called. Undoubtedly the language of the section under which the appellant was charged lends some color to this suggestion. There is a close correspondence at some points between the terms of the section in the Code and the statement of the English law on sedition by Stephen J. in the Digest of Criminal Law, 7th ed., arts. 123-126, quoted with approval by Cave J. in his summing up on Reg. v Bums and others. The fact remains, however, that it is in the Criminal Code of the Gold Coast Colony, and not in English or Scottish cases, that the law of sedition for the Colony is to be found. The Code was no doubt designed to suit the [p.33] circumstances of the people of the Colony. The elaborate structure of s. 330 suggests that it was intended to contain, as far as possible, full and statement of the law of sedition in the Colony. It must therefore be construed in its application to the facts of this case free from any glosses or interpolations derived from any expositions, however authoritative, of the law of England or of Scotland."

We set out the above extract at length because we feel that similar approach should be taken by the Courts in Sierra Leone when dealing with offences created by statutes, such as the one with which we are dealing here.

Having said that, we return to the case before us to consider the two issues raised by the appellant we bear in mind, of course that our function is that of an appellate one and that we defer to the learned trial judge the benefit of being a judge at first instance. Be that as it may, the salutary principle remains that a finding of guilt of an accused person by the trial judge must be supported by evidence adduced before the Court, establishing the elements of the offence beyond reasonable doubt.

Whether there was a seditious publication?

There is no question here that the two articles complained of were published on 3rd October 2003 and 7th October 2003 respectively, in the FOR Dl PEOPLE NEWSPAPER of which the appellant was the Editor. The first issue for determination is whether the publication was seditious and secondly whether it was done so with a seditious intention. These are the criminal intent and the criminal act in the offence, and they must be established before the offence is made out. See R. v Sullivan (above).

Our reading of the record shows that the learned trial Judge, while properly directing himself as to the need of proof of the ingredients of the offence and that it was the accused who committed the offence, failed to make any finding at all on issues raised as required by law in a criminal trial. There was no finding that the elements of the offence were proved beyond reasonable doubt or at all. The learned trial Judge had simply repeated evidence and submissions of Counsel for the prosecution and defence. Having done so, the learned trial Judge did not make any express finding that, on the evidence, each of the elements of the offence had been proved. His Lordship simply concluded that the appellant was guilty on both counts. We view such treatment of the evidence, in a serious case such as the present one, as very unsatisfactory, particularly where a trial judge is sitting alone. The purpose of reviewing, not necessarily rehearing the evidence, is to ascertain whether or not the evidence adduced prove each of the elements of the offence. A ton of evidence may be adduced at the trial, and which may not necessarily establish proof of the elements of the offence. Conversely, brief evidence may be adduced and may be sufficient to prove the ingredients of the offence. As we have found, the learned trial Judge had failed to ascertain whether or not the elements of the offence had been proved on the evidence before the Court. This is an error of law and is fatal to the conviction of the appellant.

The error became obvious also because the learned trial judge proceeded to determine the issue of whether or not His Excellency President Kabbah was a true convict, instead of concentrating on the elements of the offence. With respect, the issue of whether His Excellency was a true convict was not an element of the offence that was required to be established. The learned trial Judge clearly misdirected himself in law by directing himself to the issue of the truth or the untruth of the statement referring to the President as a true convict. Even the accused cannot plead the truth of the statement that he makes as a defence: R v Aldred (1909) 74 JP 55; 22 Cox CC 1). In any case, the authorities are clear that in dealing with the article in seditious libel cases, the [p.35] Judge or jury should not merely look at the objectionable sentence or word in particular, but the whole article: R v Burns (above), R v Lamin and Taqi (above); R v Sullivan (above).

Consequently, the learned Trial Judge failed to make any finding that the essential elements of the offence were established as required by law and could not have come to the conclusion that the offences with which the appellant was charged were proved against him. Publications of remarks or innuendoes may be capable of satisfying the definitions of seditious libel. However, in a charge of seditious libel the prosecution must prove the required intention, namely seditious intention which must be established on the facts.

This Court cannot accept the submission by Counsel for the respondent that there was no necessity for the learned trial Judge to make specific finding as to proof of each of the elements of the offence. Not only that such an approach would be contrary to our notion of the law and practice of criminal law, but that it will set a dangerous precedent contrary to our sense of justice.

We do not lose sight of the fact that those who disseminate information through media publication, whether by print or broadcast, cannot shelter behind the principles of freedom of expression where such publication interferes or threatens the rights of others. This is demonstrated by the South African cases of Khumalo and Others v Holomisa (14 June 2002) CCT 53/01 CC where it was held that the common law on defamation provides a justifiable limit to the right of freedom of expression, and S v Mamabolo (E TV, Business Day and the Freedom of Expression Institute Intervening) 2001 (3) S.A. 409 CC where it was pointed out that the right to freedom of expression is also limited by the rights of others, and that these conflicting rights have to be balanced. The House of Lords had recently reiterated the need to balance these conflicting rights also in the case of the celebrated famous model, Naomi Campbell and the 'Mirror' newspaper: Campbell v MGN Limited [2004] UKHL 22. In that case, Lord Hope [p.36] of Craighead, commenting on the competing right of free speech and individual right to privacy, under Articles 8 and 10 of the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms said,

"The context for this exercise is provided by articles 8 and 10 of the Convention. The rights guaranteed by these articles are qualified rights. Article 8(1) protects the right to respect for private life, but recognition is given in article 8(2) to the protection of the rights and freedoms of others. Article 10(1) protects the right to freedom of expression, but article 10(2) recognizes the need to protect the rights and freedoms of others. The effect of these provisions is that the right to privacy which lies at the heart of an action for breach of confidence has to be balanced against the right of the media to impart information to the public. And the right of the media to impart information to the public has to be balanced in its turn against the respect that must be given to private life.

There is nothing new about this, as the need for this kind of balancing exercise was already part of English law: Attorney General v Guardian Newspapers (No 2) [1990] 1 AC 109, per Lord Goff of Chieveley. But account must now be taken of the guidance which has been given by the European Court on the application of these articles."

In our own jurisdiction the provision and the extent of the right to freedom of expression can be found in section 25 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone which clearly provides that:

"25. (1) Except with his own consent, no person shall be hindered in the enjoyment of his freedom of expression, and for the purpose of this section the said freedom includes the freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart ideas and information without interference, freedom from interference with his correspondence, freedom to own, establish and [p.37] operate any medium for the dissemination of information, ideas and opinions, and academic freedom in institutions of learning:

Provided that no person other than the Government or any person or body authorized by the President shall own, establish or operate a television or wireless broadcasting station for any purpose whatsoever.

(2) Nothing contained in or done under the authority of any law shall be held to be inconsistent with or in contravention of this section to the extent that the law in question makes provision —

(a) which is reasonably require:

(i) in the interests of defence, public safety, public order, public morality or public health; or

(ii) for the purpose of protecting the reputations, rights and freedoms of other persons, preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence, maintaining the authority and independence of the courts, or regulating the telephony, telegraphy, telecommunications, posts, wireless broadcasting, television, public exhibitions or public entertainment; or

(b) which imposes restrictions on public officers or members of a defence force, and except in so far as that provision or, as the case may be, the thing done under the authority thereof, is shown not to be reasonably justifiable in a democratic society.

Thus freedom of expression is not a limitless right. However, the baseline is that the Constitution guarantees protection to the right of freedom of expression or freedom of the press. That is the starting point in considering the right to freedom of expression. The consideration of any limitation on that right follows thereafter. It is therefore incumbent on the Courts, in a case such as the present one, to be guided by the spirit of the Constitution in considering the case against the accused, taking into account the nature of the publication together with the surrounding circumstances of the case as a whole. The Court should not allow itself to be solely influenced by the objectionable language used in the passage complained of. See R v Lamin and Taqi (above).

One of the classic demonstrations of this was the 1962 New Orleans case of Garrison v Louisiana, 379 U.S. 64 (1964) where Garrison sought the Fiat of the criminal judges to bring proceedings against the French Quarter of New Orleans. The eight criminal judges refused to give their approval. At a press conference Garrison accused the judges of laziness and inefficiency and of hampering his efforts to enforce the vice laws, adding that the judges' refusal raised "interesting questions about the racketeer influences on our eight vacation-minded judges." Garrison was charged with criminal defamation in violation of the Louisiana Criminal Defamation Statute, which in the context of criticism of official conduct includes punishment for true statements made with "actual malice" in the sense of ill-will as well as false statements if made with ill-will or without reasonable belief that they were true. He was convicted, sentenced to a fine of $1000 and four months in prison. The state appeal court affirmed the conviction, holding that the statute did not unconstitutionally abridge the appellant's rights of free expression. The Court went on to hold that". . . the use of the words 'racketeer [p.39] influences' when applied to anyone suggests and imputes that he has been influenced to practice fraud, deceit, trickery, cheating, and dishonesty." The Supreme Court of the United States overturned the conviction and said that public officials cannot collect for public criticism unless a statement is made with actual malice. Justice Black's comment is most telling when he said that:

"Indeed, 'malicious,' 'seditious,' and other such evil-sounding words often have been invoked to punish people for expressing their views on public affairs. Fining men or sending them to jail for criticizing public officials not only jeopardizes the free, open public discussion which our Constitution guarantees, but can wholly stifle it. I would hold now and not wait to hold later...that under our Constitution there is absolutely no place in this country for the old, discredited English Star Chamber law of seditious criminal libel."

That libertarian stand found in the United States is unique to that country where the importance of free media under the First Amendment has been accorded presumptive priority. See Douglas v Hello! Ltd [2001] 1 QB 967, 1004. We must, of course, bear in mind the state of our own circumstances and the public mind of the people in Sierra Leone in this area of the law. We can do no better than to choose according to our intuition and hopes as relevantly determined by our circumstances, bearing in mind that seditious libel is still part of the law of Sierra Leone.

In the present case, considering the circumstances and manner in which the appellant's case had been dealt by the trial judge, we are satisfied that the errors of law raised in the grounds of appeal have been sufficiently established. Consequently, as we had announced on 29th November 2005, the appeal must be allowed and for the reasons that we have now published.

THE STATE

R.A. Caesar for the Appellant

C.J. Peacock for the Respondent

ADEMOSU J.A.

On 6th February, 2003 the Appellant was arraigned before the Kenema High Court of Sierra Leone holden at Kenema on a two count indictment for the offences of Murder Contrary to Law and Wounding with intent Contrary to Section 18 of the Offences Against the Person Act 1861 and to which he pleaded not guilty. On the 12th of February, 2003 the Jury was empanelled. But it is observed that after the jurors had been sworn and had chosen their Foreman there is no evidence that the indictment was read and explained to them and to tell them that upon the indictment the Accused/Appellant had pleaded not guilty. Suffice it to say that the provisions of Section 187 of the Criminal Procedure Act No. 32 of 1965 relating to giving the accused in charge of the jury were completely ignored. The Trial Judge simply started receiving evidence from witnesses for the prosecution. There is no evidence that the jury took part in the whole proceedings because one would have expected the record to show whether or not questions were asked by the jury. This trend continued until the case for the prosecution closed. For the defence one witness was called after which the Defence's case closed. It was after the Prosecuting Counsel had addressed the court, that the Defence Counsel advised the appellant to plead guilty to a lesser offence of Manslaughter and also pleaded guilty to the offence of Wounding with Intent. The Trial Judge without asking the jury for their verdict recorded a verdict of guilty on its own and sentenced the Appellant to a term of 50 years imprisonment on each count but that the sentences were to run concurrently.

Mr. Caesar for the Appellant's contention is that the Appellant having pleaded guilty to a lesser offence of Manslaughter he should not have been sentenced to 50 years imprisonment. In other words; his complaint is that the sentence is excessive. He started his argument by saying that the Learned Trial

Judge erred, having heard the plea of the Appellant he failed to direct the jury to return a verdict of guilty, before he proceeded to pass sentence on the Appellant. For this proposition, he relied on the case of R. v Hayes (1950) 2 ALL ER, 587. In that case the accused changed his plea of not guilty to one of guilty after he was given in charge of the jury; and without any verdict taken he was sentenced. The conviction was quashed on the ground that the trial was a nullity. Coming back home, the local authority on this issue is Basma v. Reginam (1957-60) A.L.R.S.L. 301.(W.A.C.A.) in which the [p.65] court emphasised the principle that in R v Hayes (Supra) the jury must return a verdict even where accused changes his plea to guilty during trial. The court held that the trial is a nullity where verdict is not taken.

I must state here that the record of proceedings in this matter does not indicate whether or not the jury took part in the purported trial of the Appellant and consequently the inescapable conclusion is that the purported trial is a nullity. If the trial is a nullity the next point to consider is whether or not to order a retrial. But before deciding to order a retrial the court is duty bound to examine the evidence adduced properly so as to ascertain whether the evidence taken as a whole disclosed a substantial case against the appellant and to ensure that a retrial would not occasion a greater miscarriage of justice. Mr. Caesar's argument is that the appellant has spent almost four years awaiting the appeal and bearing in mind that he is a first offender it would work a great injustice to order a retrial. The theme of Mr. Peacock's submission is that he conceded that the trial is a nullity. He submitted that the legal consequence of it is for the court to order a retrial. But when his attention was drawn to the fact that the accused had already spent some four years coupled with the fact that it may not be possible to get all the witnesses to start a fresh trial in Kenema, Mr. Peacock dropped the idea of ordering a retrial. He urged the court to decide on a sentence that would meet justice of the case on each count.

This judgment will not be complete without considering the sentence of 50 years imprisonment passed on the 2nd Count of Wounding with Intent. In the considering the sentence passed we are guided by what the Court of Appeal said in Mottidge v. R. (1964-66) A.L.R.S.L. 571 at Page 573 on the issue of long prison sentence for the offence of wounding with intent. In that case although there was no appeal against the sentence of 10 years which in the face of the evidence seemed to the court to be unnecessarily severe Here is a sentence of 50 years. The court held that such sentences can only be justified on a proved record that the person concerned was of a violent nature and had previous convictions for similar violent acts. In the plea mitigation among the things said in his favour was that the accused/appellant was a first offender and that he had never had problem with anybody. I believe that the trial Judge could not have taken these facts into consideration before he passed a sentence of 50 years imprisonment. It goes without saying that this sentence is too severe and inordinate. On the proved facts and the circumstances of this case I think a sentence of two (2) years imprisonment will meet the justice of the case. In the premises, the sentence of 50 years imprisonment is reduced to two (2) years imprisonment.

As regards the offence of Manslaughter, the appellant having already pleaded guilty to the offence I think it would be fruitless ordering that he be retried for the same offence, mindful of the fact that it would be unfair to the relatives of the Victim if we set the appellant free instantly. For this reason, the sentence of 50 years imprisonment passed on him is reduced to six years imprisonment.

The Sentences to run concurrently.

This is an application by way of Notice of Motion dated the 27th October, 2006 on behalf of the Respondent for the following Orders:—

1. That the Notice of Appeal dated the 1st day of August, 2006 filed on behalf of the Defendants/Appellants/Respondents be struck out by this Honourable Court.

2. Any further or other reliefs.

3. That the costs of this application be borne by the Defendants/Applicants/Respondents.

The application is supported by the affidavit of Editayo Pabs-Garnon sworn to on the 27th day of October 2006 and filed herein together with Exhibits attached hereto, to wit, Exh. EPG1 — Final Judgment of the Hon. A.N.B. Stronge J.A. dated 25th day of May, 2006.

Exh. EPG2—- Notice of Appeal dated 21st day of July, 2006.

There is an affidavit in opposition sworn to by Elvis Kargbo Esq., Barrister and Solicitor of the High Court of Sierra Leone and No.14 Upper Patton Street, Freetown in the Western Area of Sierra Leone.

Editayo Pabs-Garnon Esq. appears for the Plaintiff/Respondent/Applicant and Elvis Kargbo Esq., for the Defendant/Appellant/Respondent.

We have heard the arguments of Counsel and their submissions in respect of this application. We are of the view that to grant this application will be tantamount to keeping in the file the grounds of appeal filed by the previous solicitors, who have been replaced by Messrs. Betts and Berewa, whilst the grounds of appeal filed by them would result in being discountenanced. To start with, this fetters the discretion of the present Solicitors and deprives the Appellant of his constitutional right of appeal.

The fact that Messrs. Betts and Berewa are the new Solicitors cannot be ignored and the affidavit in opposition is clear and unequivocal that E.E.C. Shears-Moses Esq., is no longer in the matter. The question may be asked, will it be just and in consonant with the principles of justice to force Betts and Berewa to adopt the grounds of appeal filed by the former Solicitor? The answer no doubt, will be a resounding no. It is our view that the Appellant should have an unimpeded access to this Court. Application is accordingly dismissed. Each party to bear its costs.

JUDGMENT

TEJAN-JALLOH JSC:

This is an appeal against the Judgment of Hon. Justice A.B, Raschid delivered on the 23rd day of November 2005 in which the learned Judge made the following Orders against the Appellant:

(a) A declaration that plaintiff is the Lessee and entitled to possession of all that Piece or Parcel of land situate lying and being at off Ross Road, Cline Town, CT1 Freetown in the Western Area of Sierra Leone. Damages for trespass assessed at Le.1,000,000 (One Million Leones).

(b) General damages, assessed at Le. 1,000,000 (One Million Leones).

(c) General damages, assessed at Le.1,000,000 (One Million Leones).

(c) An injunction restraining the defendant either by, himself, his servant, agent privies or otherwise howsoever from entering upon or otherwise, leased with the Plaintiff's land.

(d) Costs to be borne by Defendant. Such costs to be taxed.

The appellant dissatisfied with the decision/Order contained in the said Judgment of the 23rd day of November 2005 appealed to the Court of Appeal upon the ground set below:

1. That the Learned Trial Judge erred in law in adducing further evidence from D.W.2 DONALD MORRIS JONES on 21st June 2005 after the parties had closed their case, after the Defendant's Solicitor had addressed the Court and in the middle of the address by the Plaintiff's Solicitor.

2. That the Learned Trial Judge erred in law in continuing to hear the address of the Plaintiff's Solicitor following the further evidence of DW 2 and not affording the Defendant's Solicitor the opportunity to address him further following the further evidence of DW 2.

3. That the Learned Trial Judge erred in recalling DW 2 to further testify in this action at this stage of the proceedings.

4. That the Learned Trial Judge erred in examining DW 2.

5. That the Learned Trial Judge erred in failing to allow Counsel for the Defendant to address the Court on his objection to the recall of DW 2.

6. That the Learned Trial Judge failed to consider or to adequately consider the documentary evidence adduced on behalf of the Appellant.

[p.19]

7. That the Learned Trial Judge misunderstood and consequently misconstrued the evidence of DW 2.

8. That the Learned Trial Judge erred in law and in fact in holding that the Respondent's (Plaintiff's) purported lease for three years had to be revoked before it could come to an end Exh. O

9. That the Learned Trial Judge failed to consider at all or to adequately consider that the issue that the Respondent's lease had been determined by effluxion of time.

10. The judgment is against the weight of the evidence.

Background

By a Writ of summons dated 7th December 2000, the Plaintiff (Respondent herein) instituted an action claiming inter alia a declaration that the Respondent is the owner and entitled to possession of that piece or parcel of land situate lying and being at Off Ross Road, Cline Town, Freetown; damages to trespass; damages for trespass to goods on the said land.

In his particulars of claim, the Respondent alleged that he is the owner and occupier entitled to possession of the said land; that he became entitled to the same by virtue of a lease from Government of Sierra Leone contained in letters dated 20th March 1996 and 19th July 1999.

An appearance was entered on behalf of the Appellant defendant dated 22nd December 2000 and a defence filed dated 4th January 2001. The Appellant denied inter alia the Respondent's assertions and avers that if the Respondent had a lease in respect of the said land the same had expired by effluxion of time. The Defendant denied that he had ever made any personal claims to the said land. He averred that by letters dated 22nd and 23rd September 1999 a portion of land situate Off Ross Road, Cline Town, Freetown was approximately 0.4477 acre in area was leased by the State to East End Lions [p.20] At the trial, the Respondent/Plaintiff and 2 other witnesses testified on his behalf. The Appellant/Defendant and Donald Morris Jones, the Acting Director of Surveys and Lands, testified on behalf of the Defence.

Learned Counsel for the Appellant addressed the Court on 23rd May 2005 (page 56-59 of the records). On 7th June 2005, the Respondent's Counsel commenced his address (pages 59-61). In the middle of his address the learned trial judge on his own volition orders that a subpoena be sent to DW 2 Donald Morris Jones, the Acting Director of Surveys and Lands. The Learned Trial Judge then examined the witness. The witness was cross-examined by Counsel for the Plaintiff/Respondent after which he proceeded to address the court.

Judgment was delivered in this action on 23rd November 2005. It is against this Judgment that Counsel appealed. As regards these grounds of appeal we find it convenient to deal with them together.

From the defence filed the Defendant/Appellant made it abundantly clear that he had never made any personal claims to the said land in dispute and that he only acted as the Chairman of the East End Lions Football Club, on whose behalf he acted, but yet he was sued personally when it should have been a representative capacity. Having made this disclosure, he ought to have been sued in a representative capacity and a representative capacity in which he had been sued must be indorsed on the writ before it is issued. See Ord, 6 r. 3 and should also be stated in the title of the action:

Re Tottenham (1896) 1 ch.628. The endorsement of the representative capacity is a very crucial matter:

Bowler v Johnson Mowlem…….. & Co. (1954) 2 All E.R. 556 CA.

2. During the cause of the trial the learned Trial Judge recalled DW.2, Donald Morris Jones in spite of the objection raised by the Appellants Solicitor. In a civil suit the function of the Court is to decide cases on evidence that the parties think fit to call before it. It is not inquisitorial.

[p.21]

function of the Court is to decide cases on evidence that the parties think fit to call before it. It is not inquisitorial.

Re Enoch v Zaretzky, Buck & Co. (1910) 1 kB 327.

The Judge has power to recall a witness only if neither party object. See Harlsburys Laws of England 3rd ed.; para 804 at page 445 where the learned author states that with consent of the parties or in the absence of objection, the judge may at anytime recall a witness who has already given evidence. The learned Judge erred in law when he recalled DW 2.

3. The records demonstrated that the appellant was denied a proper opportunity of putting his defence in that following the recall of D.W.2 the appellant's solicitor filed a motion with an affidavit dated 27th June 2005 praying inter alia, leave to appeal against the recall of D.W.2; stay of proceedings pending the hearing and determination of the appeal. The application was never heard.

4. It is abundantly clear in the records that it is erroneous to say that the action is a claim of title to land, because the title to the land vested in the state. This can only be a case of encroachment or trespass to land. The several exhibits tendered reveal that the land leased to the Respondent as per Exhibit C is situated at Off Ross Road, Cline Town, whereas the lease to East End Lions Football Club, is land at CT1 Ross Road, Cline Town Compound, Cline Town, Freetown. See Exh. J.

It is not in dispute that both parties derived their title from the state. Exh. O which emanated from Lessor has expressly stated that "as far as their records are concerned only the East End Lions Football Club are the legal Lessee of the land in question and that only they are entitled to physical occupation thereof.

Finally it is wrong to give judgment for possession of land personally against a person who is not laying any claim to it and who does not possess or occupy it personally.

In this case, the party against whom order or judgment should be directed was not a party to the action. For all the foregoing reasons this appeal is allowed, the judgment [p.22] delivered on the 23rd day of November, 2005 is set aside. Costs in this Court (Court of Appeal) and the lower court to be taxed and paid to the appellant.

DELIVERED THIS 6TH DAY OF FEBRUARY 2007

RULING

TEJAN JALLOH, J.S.C.

When this appeal came up for hearing, Berthan Macaulay (Jnr.) Esq., Counsel for the 1st and 3rd Respondents took preliminary objection pursuant to Rules 19 (2) of the Court of Appeal Rules — Statutory Instrument No. 29 of 1985 that Dr. Abdul Wahab Labi nor his Solicitor or Counsel has filed a Notice of Appeal pursuant to Rule 9 Sub-Rule (1) of the Court of Appeal Rules and that the time within which an appeal can be brought against the final judgment or an Application for an enlargement of time within which an appeal can be brought against such judgment has expired. He made several legal submissions to support his contention.

Serry Kamal Esq. Counsel for the Appellant argued that it was not necessary for all appellants to sign and file the Notice of Appeal. It was enough if one of them did and in the instant case the Notice of Appeal signed and filed by M.L. Bangura — covered other would-be-appellants. He submitted that according to Rule 9 (1) a prospective Appellant was not bound to employ civil Form 1 prescribed by the Rules as the Rule does not expressly state that it must be followed. He cited Rules 40 and 41 of the Court of Appeal Rules, which specifically state that notices shall be in Forms 1, 2 or 3 in Appendix C as the case may be.

But Rule 9 (1) reads as follows:

"An appeals shall be by way of rehearing and shall be brought by notice (in these Rules called "Notice of Appeal") to be filed in the Registry of the court which shall set forth grounds of appeal etc.”

[p.8]

Mr. Serry Kamal's submissions on Rules 40 and 41 in respect of the use of the forms and signatures are correct, but those Rules deal with Criminal Appeals and not Civil Appeals and therefore Rules are not relevant.

A careful reading of the Rules show that Rule 9 (1) is the pivot of all Civil Appeals and must be read with Rule 8, which provides that the forms set out in Appendices A and C shall be used in all cases to which such forms are applicable. The marginal note to Rule 9(1) mentions the use of Civil Form 1 in respect of notice and grounds of appeal. That form is to be found in Appendix A, which cites Rule 9 (1).

In addition, a column designated "Appellant" is provided in Civil Form 1 and Rule 1 of the Court of Appeal Rules defines appellant to include the party appealing from a judgment, order or decree and his Solicitor or Counsel. It follows that a Notice of Appeal under Rule 9 (1) can be filed and signed by not only the party appealing from a judgment but also order or decree by his Solicitor.

In the instant case there is no notice of appeal neither filed by Dr. Abdul Wahab Labi under Rule 9(1) nor signed by him or his Solicitor. The Notice of Appeal by M.L. Bangura cannot serve as a substitute as he is not Solicitor or Counsel for Dr. Labi nor can he avail himself if Sub-rule 3 of Rule 11 of the said Rules.

We therefore hold that there is no appeal by Dr. Abdul Wahab Labi.

JUDGMENT

A.N.B. STRONGE, J.A.:

This is an appeal from the decision of the High Court presided over by The HON. MR. JUSTICE A.B. RASCHID dated the 6th January, 2005. The appeal is on eight (8) grounds, namely:

1. The Learned Trial Judge erred in Law and misdirected himself when he held that in his opinion:

[p.44]

"The property situate at off Spur Loop measuring 0.4694 acre was forfeited to the State"

Having regard to the fact that there was no forfeiture of Assets Order before him.

(2) The Learned Trial Judge erred in Law and misdirected himself in holding that the Applicant is entitled to immediate possession to the property and/or is entitled to immediately re-enter the said property situate lying and being at off Spur Loop Wilberforce former residence of Mr. Foday Yumkella former Minister of Presidential Affairs as he had no jurisdiction to do so having regard to the fact that a judgment of the High Court (a Court of concurrent jurisdiction) granting immediate possession to the Respondent to the property and an Order of the High Court (a Court of concurrent jurisdiction) granting leave to issue a Writ of Possession to the Respondent in respect of the property subsists.

(3) The Learned Trial Judge erred in Law and misdirected himself when he held that the Applicant is entitled to an order setting aside all transaction leading to the sale and purchase of Government property situate lying and being at off Spur Loop Wilberforce also known as No. 2A Spur Loop Wilberforce former residence of Mr. Foday Yumkella formerly Minister of Presidential Affairs having regard to the fact that sufficient facts were not before him and further that the matter was not properly before him.

(4) The Learned Trial Judge erred in Law and misdirected himself when he held that the Applicant is entitled to an order cancelling the grant Deed of Conveyance dated the 5th September, 1991, pursuant to the findings of Report and Government White paper Report of the Hon. Mr. Justice Beccles Davies Commission of Inquiry as he had no jurisdiction to do so having regard to the provision of Section 7(3) of the Commission of Inquiry (Amendment) Act 1982.

(5) The Learned Trial Judge erred in Law and misdirected himself when he held that the applicant is entitled to an order for immediate possession and/or to an order that the Applicant is entitled to immediately re-enter the said Government property situate lying and being at off Spur Loop Wilberforce former residence of Mr. Foday Yumkella, former Minister of Presidential Affairs, in effect granting the Applicant relief which were prayed for in the alternative thereby making his ruling ambiguous.

(6) The Learned Trial Judge erred in Law and misdirected himself when he held that the order for forfeiture is found in the White Paper and nothing need be done after the publication of the White Paper to give legal effect to any order for forfeiture made when he said:

"In my view these provisions are clear as to the consequences of a Commission of Inquiry. Therefore Counsel for the Respondent cannot be heard to say that after the publication of the White Paper there must be publication of a Public Notice and Statutory Instrument." Having regard to the provisions of Section 7(2) and 7(4) of the Commissions of Inquiry (Amendment Act 1982.

(7) The Learned Trial Judge erred in Law and misdirected himself when he wrongly construed Section 149(4) of Act No.6 of 1991 thereby causing him to believe that the Respondent should have appealed against the adverse findings of the Commission.

(8) That the order dated 6th January, 2005 is against the weight of the evidence.

At the hearing of the Appeal Ms. S.G. Sesay appeared as Counsel for the Appellant and Mr. K. Bangura appeared for the Learned Attorney-General and Minister of Justice.

Ms. Sesay sought and obtained leave of the Court to deal first of all with Grounds 1 and 6 of the Grounds of Appeal. Counsel made the following submissions:

1. That there was no forfeiture of Assets Order before the Learned Judge and that he erred in Law and misdirected himself when he held that the Order for forfeiture is found in the White Paper and nothing need be done to give legal effect to any order for forfeiture made thereunder.

2. In the alternative if the Court were to hold as the Learned Trial Judge did that the provisions of the COMMISSIONS OF INQUIRY (AMENDMENT) DECREE No.5 of 1992 have been repealed by THE NATIONAL PROVISIONAL RULING COUNCIL DECREES (REPEAL AND MODIFICATION) ACT No.3 of 1996. Counsel will still submit that there was no forfeiture order before the Learned Judge. The COMMISSIONS OF INQUIRY (AMENDMENT) ACT No.l of 1982, SECTION 7(2) provide that the President may on the advise of Cabinet make an order forfeiting to the Government of Sierra Leone all or any part thereof of the assets of such person whether or not such assets are in his name.

3. That there must be an order made pursuant to the Act expressly identifying the asset to be forfeited and expressly declaring that the same is forfeited to the Government of Sierra Leone.

4. That after the publication of the WHITE PAPER a forfeiture of Assets Order must be made for the purpose of legally and validly divesting the person of his legal interest in the property and transferring the said interest to the STATE.

For reasons which will appear later in this Judgment I will at this stage consider and evaluate the above submissions and Mr. Bangura's reply thereto.

Mr. Kekura Bangura's reply to the Appellant's argument on GROUNDS 1 and 6 of the Appellant's Grounds of Appeal can be summarized as follows:—

[p.47]

1. That the subject matter of this Appeal was subject of a Commission of Inquiry appointed by the Government of Sierra Leone, to investigate into the Assets and other related maters of all persons who were Presidents, Vice presidents, Ministers, Ministers of State and Deputy Ministers, within the period from 1st day of June 1986 to the 22nd day of September 1991 and to inquire into and investigate whether such assets were acquired lawfully or unlawfully.

2. That by Section 149(4) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone "where a Commission of Inquiry makes an adverse finding against any person, which may result in a penalty, forfeiture or loss of status, the report of the Commission of Inquiry shall, for the purpose of this Constitution, he deemed to be a judgment of the High Court of Justice and accordingly an appeal shall lie, as of right, from the Commission to the Court of Appeal."

3. That there is an order of forfeiture against the Appellant which can be found at page 32 of the SIERRA LEONE GOVERNMENT WHITE PAPER ON THE REPORT OF THE JUSTICE BECCLES DAVIES COMMISSION OF INQUIRY, Volume 4 of March, 1994.

BACKGROUND:

To appreciate the nature of the Appeal it will be useful to set out the background to this case.

The N.P.R.C. Government in its attempt to eradicate corruption, mismanagement and in discipline in the affairs of Government, by Public Notice No. 172 in the Extraordinary Issue of the Sierra Leone Gazette dated Wednesday, 13th June, 1992, instituted the Justice Beccles-Davies Commission of Inquiry:— INTER ALIA:—

[p.48]

(i) To examine the Assets and other related matters of all persons who were Presidents, Vice-Presidents, Ministers, Ministers of State and Deputy Ministers within the period from the 1st day of June, 1986, to the 22nd day of September, 1991, and to inquire into and investigate whether such Assets were acquired lawfully or unlawfully;

(ii) To inquire into and investigate the activities of all persons who were Presidents, Vice-Presidents, Ministers, Ministers of State and Deputy Ministers within the period from the 1st day of June, 1986, to the 22nd day of September, 1991, and to ascertain as to—

(a) whether they maintained a standard of living above that which was commensurate with their past official emoluments;

(b) whether they were in control of pecuniary resources or property disproportionate to their past official emoluments.

(c) Whether allegations of corruption, dishonesty, or abuse of office for private benefit by them, or in collaboration with any person or persons in respect of such corruption, dishonesty or abuse of office are established;

(d) Whether they acted willfully or corruptly in such manner as to cause financial loss or damage to the Government, a local Authority, Corporation, a Statutory Corporation, or the University of Sierra Leone.

The Commission submitted its Report in Several Volumes, A Government White Paper (GWP) was subsequently prepared in several volumes as a result of the Report of the Commission of Inquiry. The Government White Paper was published in March, 1994. In Volume [p.49] FOUR of the Government White Paper which deals with the Appellant, the N.P.R.C. ordered that" State Land off Spur Loop measuring 0.4694 Acre ------- acquired by Mr. Sisay during the period under investigation whilst holding public office, be forfeited to the State".

THE HIGH COURT

Following the publication of the Commission of Inquiry Report and more particularly, the Government White Paper thereon, the Respondent instituted proceedings by way of Originating Notice of Motion in the High Court to set aside: "all transactions leading to the sale and purchase of Government property situate, lying and being at off Spur Loop Road, Wilberforce, also known as No. 2A Spur Loop Wilberforce Freetown, former residence of Mr. Foday Yumkella formerly Minister of Presidential Affairs and/or an order canceling the Grand Deed of Conveyance dated the 5th day of September, 1991, between the Government of Sierra Leone as Vendor of the one part and Ahmad Edward Sisay as purchaser of the other part and Registered as No. 1162/91 in volume 453 at page 12 in the Books of Conveyances kept in the office of the Administrator and Registrar-General at Roxy Building, Walpole Street, Freetown pursuant to the findings of Report and Government White Paper of the Hon. Mr. Justice Beccles Davies Commission of Inquiry into the Assets and other related matters of all persons who were Presidents, Vice Presidents, Ministers, Ministers of State and Deputy Ministers etc. and subsequent confirmation of the said confiscation by Justice P.L.V. Cross Commission of Inquiry (THE REPORT OF THE NATIONAL UNITY AND RECONCILIATION COMMISSION)." 2. Further that this Honourable Court grant immediate possession to the applicant herein and/or an Order for the applicant to immediately re-enter [p.50] the said Government property situate, lying and being at off Spur Loop Road Wilberforce, also known as No.2A Spur Loop Wilberforce, former residence of Mr. Foday Yumkella, Former Minister of Presidential Affairs.

By Order dated the 6th day of January, 2005, the High Court granted the two orders sought in the Originating Notice of Motion referred to above. It is against that order of the High Court that the Appellant has appealed to this Court.

THE COURT OF APPEAL

The EIGHT (8) GROUND of Appeal by the appellant have been reproduced. IN EXTENSU. The grounds of Appeal raise both procedural as well as substantive issues of law. It will be convenient in this Appeal to deal with GROUNDS 1 and 6 of the Appeal first.

As stated earlier in this Judgment, the Appellant made two submissions:

1. That there was no Forfeiture of Assets order before the Learned Trial Judge and that the Learned Trial Judge erred when he held that the order for forfeiture is found in the White paper.

2. The Commissions of Inquiry (Amendment) Act 1982, Section 7(2) provides that the President may on the advise of Cabinet make an order forfeiting to the Government of Sierra Leone all or any part thereof of the assets of such person whether or not such assets are in his name.

The Respondent sought to enforce the Report of the Justice Beccles-Davies Commission of Inquiry and the Justice P.L.V. Cross Commission of Inquiry, as they perceived these reports, by instituting proceedings in the High Court by way of Originating Notice of Motion for the reliefs stated earlier in this Judgment.

This Court is in agreement with the Appellant that the Respondent had no legal basis to institute the proceedings, such as that taken in this case to enforce the Report of the Commissions of Inquiry referred to. We agree that [p.51] the appropriate procedures are to be found under the Commission of Inquiry Act (CAP 54) as Amended. Sections 7 (2), (3) and (4) of that Act set out the machinery whereby the Report of a Commission of Inquiry may be enforced. Sections 7(2), (3) and (4) of the Act are as follows:—

Upon the receipt of such a report, if it appears to the President that any person has acquired assets for himself or in the name of any other person in an unlawful manner or is responsible for any irregularity or malpractice resulting in any financial loss to the Government of Sierra Leone or to any Local Authority or corporation, or any other body whatsoever, the President may on the advice of the Cabinet, make an Order—

(a) requiring such person to make good the financial loss to the Government of Sierra Leone, or any local authority or corporation or any other body as the case may be:

OR

(b) forfeiting to the Government of Sierra Leone or any Local authority or corporation or any other body as the case may be, all or any part thereof of the assets of such person, whether or not such assets are in his name. 7(3) Any Judge of the High Court shall upon application by the Attorney-General and

Minister of Justice make such Order or Orders as may be necessary for the purpose of giving full effect to the Order for forfeiture of assets made by the President under sub-section (2) hereof, and shall in particular but without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing, where necessary, order any person to execute such instrument as may be necessary for enabling any assets situate outside Sierra Leone to be vested in the Government of Sierra Leone, or any Local Authority or corporation, or any other body as the case may be.

Any order made under sub-section (2) may include provision for vesting the assets or any part thereof or the property in such assets or part thereof in a Department of Government, a Local Authority or corporation or any other body as the case may be and, in particular, the Order may direct:—

In the case of assets lodged in a Bank, the manager or a person in charge of the bank in which the assets are lodged shall pay the assets into the consolidated fund, or any bank account as the case may require:

(a) In the case of assets in the form of stocks, shares, debentures, bonds, or chooses-in-action, the responsible officer concerned shall register them as required or necessary, in the name of the Government of Sierra Leone or any local authority or corporation, or any other body as the case may require;

(b) In the case of assets in the nature of immovable property the Administrator and Registrar-General shall remove the name of the person or that of any person in whose name the property is registered from the Register and register forthwith such property in the name of the Government of Sierra Leone or any local authority or corporation, or other body as the case may be, and the property shall vest forthwith in the Government of Sierra Leone or local authority or corporation, or any other body (as the case may be) as from the date of such Order.

From the above provisions it is abundantly clear that the Power to enforce the findings and recommendations of a Commission of Inquiry is vested in the President [p.53] acting on the advice of the Cabinet. When an order of forfeiture has been made by the President acting on the advice of the Cabinet following the findings and recommendation of a Commission of Inquiry, the High Court is obliged to enforce such an order of forfeiture.

In glaring disregard of the obvious procedure laid down under the Commission of Inquiry Act, the Respondent chose to enforce the findings and recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry, as perceived by him, by instituting proceedings in the High Court by way of Originating Notice of Motion on the misconception that such a procedure is open to them under Section 149(4) of the Constitution. Such a procedure wrong. I nave searched in vain for any authority for the manner in which the Respondent purported to seize the Appellant's property as in this case. Apart from the procedure set out, in Section 7(2), (3) and (4) of the Commission of Inquiry Act, there are clear rules setting out the procedure to be followed in seeking an order of forfeiture of land. Correct legal procedure must be followed, particularly where a person's right to his property is to be forfeited.

This Court is of the view that the Learned Trial Judge erred in Law in his acceptance that the Appellant was entitled to enforce the Commission's finding, as perceived by him, by way of an originating, notice of motion under section 149(4) of the Constitution. The order granted by the High Court setting aside the Conveyance of the property in question between the Government and the appellant ought not to have been made. There is no basis in law for the granting of that Order. That order is hereby set aside.

The Appeal is allowed. Order of Court dated 6th day of January, 2005 is set aside.

JUDGMENT

TEJAN-JALLOH JSC:

The Plaintiff now Respondent's claim against the defendant now Appellant is for:

1. Recovery of possession of all that portion or piece or parcel of land situate lying and being off Macauley Street, Murray Town, Freetown in the Western Area of the Republic of Sierra Leone measuring about 0.0118 Acre;

[p.24]

2. An injunction restraining the Defendant whether by himself, his servant or agents privies or howsoever otherwise from trespassing, entering and or remaining on the said land or portion thereof and from carrying out or continuing the erection of a structure/building/fall on the said land or any portion thereof.

3. Damages for trespass to the plaintiffs said piece or parcel of land.

4. All necessary and consequential directions thereof.

5. Further or other reliefs.

6. Costs.

The matter went to trial at the conclusion of which the Hon. Mr. Justice Nylander found in favour of the Plaintiff now Respondent and ordered as follows:—

1. Recovery of possession of the disputed land as prayed for in Relief No.1 is granted with immediate effect.

2. A permanent injunction is granted as prayed for in relief No.2 of the prayer.

3. Damages for trespass — five million Leones.

4. The defendant shall pull down the Boys Quarters he erected in contravention of the Court Order during trial. This shall be done within 5 days of the date of the Judgment otherwise Plaintiff shall seek a further Court Order to pull the structure down.

5. The defendant shall pay the cost of this action (SIC) of this action, such costs to be taxed.

[p.25]

The Appellant, being dissatisfied with the decision of the Court appealed to this Court. He has filed five grounds of appeal, the pith and substance of which in my own opinion is that the judgment is against the weight of the evidence. This is because each of the grounds of appeal alluded to various parts of the evidence adduced at the trial and to the conclusion by the Judge.

In my opinion the issues raised in the appeal may be summarized as follows:—

1. Did the Respondent's title deed cover the portion of land in dispute?

2. Did the Respondent prove title to the land in dispute?

3. Who has proved a better right to possession?

It has to borne in mind that this was a case of trespass and there is no claim for a declaration of title. The law is well settled that in a case of trespass, what the plaintiff has to prove is a better right of possession than the defendant.

The evidence of the Respondent which the learned Trial Judge accepted is the fact that the Respondent claimed to have bought her land at Macauley Street, Murray Town in 1998 from one Pa Alpha Amadu Mansaray. She alleged that sometime in the year 2001, the Appellant encroached on her land and the encroachment was confirmed by his licensed Surveyor. The encroachment in the land was by building a Boys Quarters on her access road. That when she complained to the appellant that the land was hers, Appellant ignored her protest and also laid claim to the land. The matter was reported to the police. Pa Alpha Amadu Mansaray who sold to the Respondent confirmed that the Appellant encroached on the Respondent's land. The witness told the Court that he advised the Respondent to take the [p.26] matter to Court. It was clear from the evidence of the witness that he was positive that the Appellant was the trespasser and that he never met the Appellant up to the time he sold the land to the Respondent.

The Respondent admitted that the Appellant bought his land before hers, but she maintained that her land is at the back of the Appellant's land and that she has her own Access Road close to Macauley Street and that the Appellants' land is not close to Macauley Street.

The fact that Appellant bought the land before the Respondent is not without more, evidence of a superior title.

See Dr. Seymour Wilson V Musa Abess (unreported) Civ.App.5/79(SC)

The strength of the Appellants case appears to rest on the evidence of his licensed surveyor (DW.3) who advised him to block the Access Road. It is observed that when the Surveyor was cross-examined, his evidence revealed that he prepared his Encroachment plan solely on the Appellants documents. That since 2000 he had not revisited the land and he did not know if there was land dispute between the Appellant and the Respondent in 2000. In the case of the Respondent her Surveyor said inter alia:—

"I did a field exercise by drawing two plans showing the actual survey plan LS1259/01. I made a compact (Sic) composite plan from the two plans. I also drew up Survey Plan showing the actual physical position of the land."

In cross-examination, the witness also told the Court that he determined the Access Road by the facts on the grounds. The learned Trial Judge quite rightly concluded by saying,

"I am satisfied in my mind that the behaviour of the defendant [p.27] and his surveyor is high handed. The evidence of the defendant and his surveyor is conflicting, and on the facts. I also believe the evidence adduced by the Plaintiff." I do not believe the evidence by the defendant. I am satisfied in my mind that the Plaintiff has proved her case on the balance of probabilities, as such Judgment is in plaintiffs favour etc. etc.

In the premise, I see weighty and more convincing evidence in support of the Respondent' case that should entitle her to Judgment. As a result I see no merit in the complaint against the Judgment of Nylander J. As an Appellate Court, we should be more concerned with decision and not with reasons. I am guided in this view by what Blackhall P. said in Likejianya v Uchendu 13 WACA at page 46, — where he said:

"It seems to me, however, that what this Court has to decide is whether the decision of the Judge was right not whether his reasons were. It is only if the misdirection had caused him to come to the wrong decision that it would be material."

The decision of Nylander J, is in line with the justice of this matter. I agree with him. I affirm it. The appeal is dismissed with cost to be taxed.

RULING

HAMILTON J.A.:

This is an application by Notice of Motion dated the 2nd day of May, 2007 for the following Orders:—

An interim order that the order of the court dated the 25th day of October, 2006 and or all subsequent proceedings thereto be stayed pending the hearing and determination of the application.

An order that the order of the court dated the 25th day of October, 2006 and or all subsequent proceedings thereto be stayed pending the hearing and determination of the Appellants/Applicants appeal to the Court of Appeal.

On the 7th day of March 2007 the High Court did refuse a similar application. However when this application came for hearing both Counsel agreed that the status quo be maintained until this application is heard and determined. In this regard therefore Order one (1) on the face of the Notice of Motion was therefore discarded.

The materials before this court upon which a decision may be reached as to the grant or refusal of a stay is contained in the affidavits filed by both sides.

The applicants filed two affidavits in support of this motion. One by their Solicitor Abdul Franklyn Serry Kamal Esq. with eight (8) exhibits attached to it and the other by Marco Koroma the 1st Appellant/Applicant with two(2) exhibits attached to it The Respondents (1stt Respondent herein) Alhaji Baba Allie filed an affidavit in opposition.

Counsel for the Appellants/Applicants did submit that at the commencement of this matter there were seven (7) Plaintiffs and at its conclusion there are now only two survivors. He went on that as regards the undertaking if all die then there would be nobody to enforce on in case the appeal succeeds. Exhibits MK 1 and MK2 shows that part of the land close to the subject matter of this appeal was sold by seven vendors of which only two are now available. Counsel finally submitted that paragraphs 4 and 5 of the affidavit of Abdul Franklyn Serry-Kamal and paragraph 3, 8 and 9 of the affidavit of Marco Koroma disclose special circumstances to warrant a stay.

Mr. Patrick Lambert Solicitor for the Respondents opposes the application relying on the affidavit in opposition and submitted that the affidavits in support is a mere speculation not supported by evidence that the property would be sold. Paragraph 4 refutes sending anybody on the land and paragraph 5 gives an undertaking not to sell. Counsel further submitted that the fact that the Appellants/Applicants have resided for forty-five (45) years on the land and is their ancestral home does not amount to special circumstances.

It cannot be doubted that in applications of this nature there are certain general principles which should guide the court in deciding to grant or refuse a stay of execution. The court has an unfettered discretion but that unfettered discretion ought to be exercised judicially. A discretion to grant or refuse a stay of execution ought to take into consideration the compelling interests of the parties. It must be borne in mind that a winning or successful party in a litigation has the right to enjoy the fruits of his litigation. See Ghana Supreme Court in the case of Joseph V Jebeile (1963) 1 GLR 387 at 389.

Therefore the courts will in no circumstance form the practice at the instance of the unsuccessful litigant of depriving the successful party of the fruits of the litigation until such a judgment is set aside. It is accepted that the legal basis for the exercise of the court's discretion to grant or refuse a stay of execution, is that the applicant must establish that there are special or exceptional circumstances justifying the grant of a stay of execution. The onus is on the applicant to demonstrate that such circumstances exist in his favour.

There are abundant authorities on the aspect of special circumstances in our jurisdiction. In Africana Token Village Ltd. V John Obey Development Investment Co. Ltd. (26th April. 1994) Court of Appeal. Misc. App. 2/94 (unreported), it was held that this Court has unfettered discretion to grant stay of execution provided the applicant can [p.41] satisfy the court that special circumstances do exist to warrant the grant of a stay. See also Alhaii Abdul Wahid (Jr.) V Fatmata Floode and others (11th November 2003) Misc. App. 7/2003. Patrick Koroma V Sierra Leone Housing Corporation and Dolcie Beckley (26th May 2004). Court of Appeal. Misc.App. 9/2004. Yusufu Bundu V Mohamed Bailor Jalloh (23rd July 2004) Court of Appeal Misc. App. 23/2004 and Evelyn Avo Pratt Administratrix of the Estate of Betsy Rogers Parkinson (Deceased) Intestate V Jaccquiline Carew and others (16th July 2005) Misc. App. 7/05. It must be pointed out that the principle governing the grant of a stay of execution were expressed in the cases cited above. In each of those cases it must be pointed out had their own peculiar circumstances and each case depends on its own facts.

The question to be asked at this stage is: have the applicants here in shown special circumstances in their own case to warrant a stay of execution? Counsel for the applicants did argue that this matter started off with seven Plaintiffs and presently there are now only two surviving and secondly that lands close to this one on appeal which is the subject matter was sold by seven vendors and there are now only two surviving.

Considering these facts even with an undertaken given if eventually the land is sold by the two survivors who are now old, on whom can this undertaken be enforced? Counsel for the applicants did submit that to recover the land following such a sale would be rather expensive in case the appeal succeeds and in my opinion this is rightly so.

Counsel for the Respondent did rely on the case of Evelyn Ayo Pratt Administratrix of the Estate of Betsy Rogers Parkinson (deceased) Intestate V Jacquiline Carew and others Misc.App. 7/05 supra in which an application for a stay of execution was refused in relation to a house which was claimed as an ancestral home and the property was one that could not disappear nor be dissipated and if the appeal should succeed it could be within the court's power to order it to be restored to the successful party.

This application relates to land unlike that of the case of Evelyn Avo Pratt supra which relates to a house. If a sale is effected even with an undertaken by the Respondents a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of this appeal would have incurred a lot of expenses on the land and would suffer if the appeal succeeds.

In order to save such unwarranted future expenses and having examined the grounds of appeal that is herein exhibited appears to be substantial as is therein contained.

[p.42]

I am quite satisfied that the applicants herein have adduced good and sufficient reasons for the grant of this application.

I do therefore grant the application and make the following orders:

Execution of the judgment of the High Court dated 25th day of October 2006 is hereby stayed pending the hearing and determination of the appeal filed therefrom.

I order that the parties hereto be restrained from parting with the property or any interest therein or thereunder until the final determination of the appeal.

I make no order as to costs.

Because of the special circumstances of this application, I further order that the Registrar of the Court of Appeal do see that this appeal comes up expeditiously or hearing by the Court of Appeal within a period of two (2) months and which hearing I shall now fix for the 18th day of February, 2008. Order accordingly.

V.V. THOMAS ESQ., FOR THE 2ND RESPONDENT

DELIVERED THIS 3RD DAY OF APRIL, 2007.

RULING

TEJAN-JALLOH JSC:

The issue before the Court for determination is whether the Court of Appeal has power to allow ground 7 of which is one of the amended grounds of Appeal. That ground reads:

"That the Learned Trial Judge acted on wrong principle of law when he refused in Volume 2 Page 399 to grant amendments sought by the [p.29] Plaintiff/Applicant in Paragraphs 4, 5, 9 of the endorsement, of the Writ of Summons dated 11th March 2005".

At the commencement of the argument, Berthan Macaulay Esq, (Jnr.) Counsel for the 1st Respondent drew the Court's attention to Page 399 of the Record of Proceedings, where a ruling was given on ground 7. His contention is that it was an interlocutory matter for which an appeal can lie and according to him by leave only pursuant to Rule 10(1) of the Court of Appeal Rules — Public Notice No. 29 of 1985 as amended by Constitutional Instrument Act No. 1 of 2003. V.V. Thomas Esq. Counsel for the 3rd Respondent adopted the argument of Mr. Macaulay. Both Counsels are of the view that the interlocutory issue raised and determined cannot be a ground of appeal and can only be so when an applicant invoked sub-rule 1 of Rule 10 of the Court of Appeal Rules.

In reply, Serry-Kamal Esq., Counsel for the Appellant submitted that Rule 10 (1) was only one of several ways by which an Appellant can appeal against a ruling on an interlocutory issue and stressed that he is not precluded from raising the issue as decided on appeal because an appeal to the Court of Appeal is by way of re-hearing. Furthermore, he cited Rule 9 (6) which provides that the Court in deciding an appeal is not confined to the ground set forth by the Appellant, provided the Court does not rest its decision on any ground not set forth by the Appellant, unless the parties have had sufficient opportunity of contesting the case on that ground.

Ground 7 is an interlocutory issue, that is, an amendment which was sought and it was an interlocutory ruling in which an appeal could have been brought within 14 days as from the date of the ruling. The Appellant did not avail himself of that provision and decided to make it a ground of appeal in the substantive appeal itself. In such circumstances, Rule 9 (1) provides that all appeals shall be by way of rehearing. My understanding of the phrase is that the appeal is not a new or fresh trial, but a review or reconsidering of the trial or proceedings below [p.30] including the evidence adduced. Nothing precludes us to hear interlocutory issues,

This being the case, I hold that ground 7 can be argued and the objection is overruled.

DR. W.S. MARCUS-JONES FOR PLAINTIFF/RESPONDENT

RULING DELIVERED THIS 24TH DAY OF JANUARY 2007

RULING

TEJAN-JALLOH JSC:

By a Notice of Motion dated 1st November 2006, Mohamed Musa King, second Defendant/Applicant applied to the Court for enlargement of time for leave within which to appeal and for any other Order or Orders the Court may deem fit and just. The application is supported by the affidavit of the applicant sworn to on the 1st November 2006 and together with eight (8) Exhibits. The enlargement sought is to appeal against the Judgment of the Honourable Mr. Justice S.A. Ademosu, then High Court Judge delivered on 5th March 1990.

I remind myself that pursuant to sub rule 4 of Rule 11 of the Court of Appeal Rules, 1985, Statutory Instrument 29 of 1985, the affidavit must set forth good and sufficient reasons for the application and by grounds of appeal which prima facie show good cause. I am not concerned with the merit or otherwise of the appeal.

The said Judgment is Exhibit MM4 and inter alias, ordered property situate lying and being at 70C Wilkinson Road, Freetown — Exhibit MM3 — recorded in Books of Conveyance kept in the Office of the Registrar-General be expunged. Paragraphs 5 and 9 of the said affidavit state that the applicant moved into Exhibit MM3 in 1999 and has been living there since and no one has ever challenged his claim to ownership. The deponent in paragraph 6 also deposes that he had to leave the jurisdiction during the rebel incursion in Sierra Leone.

Dr. Marcus-Jones Counsel for the Plaintiff/Respondent filed an affidavit on behalf of Lynton Bankole Onesimus Nylander sworn to on the 21st day of November, 2006 in opposition to the Notice of Motion supported by 6 (six) exhibits. Exhibits LBON 1, LBON 2, and LBON 5 are letters purportedly copied to the Applicant and LBON 6, dated 17th April, 1990 deals with the removal of a wall. Juxtapose the two, the second defendant/applicant is concerned with the expunction of the Conveyance to his property at 70C Wilkinson Road, Freetown, from the books of Conveyances kept in the office of the Administrator and Registrar-General, and the Plaintiff/Respondent is concerned about a wall which according to paragraph 7 of the affidavit in opposition has been demolished. Nevertheless, Counsel for the Plaintiff/Respondent opposed the application because it was out of time. Dr. Marcus-Jones counsel for the Plaintiff/Respondent told the Court that his client is not laying any claim in respect of 70 Wilkinson Road, Freetown.

Counsel addressed the court on subrule 6 of Rule 11 of the Court of Appeal Rules 1985, whether the subrule is mandatory or directory. N.D. Tejan-Cole Esq. for the applicant submitted that no universal rule can be laid for the construction of Statutes as to whether mandatory enactments are to be considered directory only or obligatory; that in each case one must look to the subject-matter, consider the importance of the provision that has been disregarded and the relation of the provision to the general object intended to be served by the Acts and upon a review of the case in that aspect decide whether the matter is what is called imperative or only directory. He referred us to the case of Doyle v Stephenson, 1, West Indian Law Report 296 and at p. 298, Craies on Statute Law, 4th edition at 240 and Maxwell on the interpretation of Statutes 17th edition at p. 316. He also drew the attention of the Court to the case of B v B 1941 2AER p. 396 at 397 where Scarman J., said that prior authority on other statutes is not of great assistance to the Court in determining the intention of the legislature when the section was enacted.

Mr. Tejan-Cole also referred to the case of Alhaji Bockarie Kakay v Clementina Yambasu a decision of the Court of Appeal unreported and delivered on the 9th day of June, 1999 — Misc.App.3/98. He pointed out to the Court that enlargement of time within which to file an appeal against the judgment in the High Court was granted.

As regards the submission that applicant was kept abreast of the proceedings Mr. Tejan-Cole referred to the case of De Stempel v Dunkels 1938 A.E.R. (Anotated) Vol. 1 at P. 238 at 255G where quoting from Taylor on Evidence 12th edition, p.551, it said:

"There is in general no duty cast upon the recipient of a letter to answer and his omission to do so does not amount to any admission of the truth of the statements contained in it".

Mr. Tejan-Cole, argued that the applicant in this case does not fall within the interpretation of "Appellant" in Rule 1 of the Court of Appeal Rules. He urged that we exercise our inherent jurisdiction.

He referred the Court to the case of Sierra Leone Oxygen Factory Limited v P.B. Pyne-Bailey, a decision of the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone, unreported and delivered on the 10th May 1974. He made available the case of Thynne (Marchioness of Batton) v Thynne (Marquess of Bath) 1955 3 A.E.R. 129 and Attah-Quarshie v Okpote, 1977 1 Ghana Law Report p.59 at p.65.

In the case of Meier v Meier 1948 P cited in Thynne's case Lord Evershed said he would prefer not to attempt a definition of the extent of the Courts jurisdiction to vary, modify or extend its own orders if, in its view, the purpose of Justice requires that it should do so and it is my view that Rule 32 of the Court of Appeal Rules enables this Court to make an order that the lower Court ought to have made. Similar view was expressed by Lord Justice Lindley and Lord Justice Morris in the case of the Swire 30 Ch. D at pages 246 and 146 respectively.

Similarly, in the case of Attoh-Quashie v Okpote 1977 1 Ghana Law Report 57 the Court indicated that tradition has sanctioned three areas where the Court generally invokes its inherent powers. They include powers to prevent wrong or injury being inflicted by its own acts or orders or Judgment including the power of vacating Judgments entered by mistake and of reviewing Judgments procured by fraud and a power to undo what it had no authority to do originally. At page 65 of the Judgment Hayford — Benjamin J said as follows:

"Having found that the provisions of order 9 Rule 17 are mandatory it is now necessary to consider whether or not the submissions of Counsel that the Court has an inherent power to vacate its own valid orders is well founded. Inherent power is an authority not derived from any external source, possessed by a [p.4] Court. Where jurisdiction is conferred on Courts by Constitutions and statutes, inherent powers are those which are necessary for the ordinary and efficient exercise of the jurisdiction already conferred. They are essentially protective powers necessary for the existence of the Court and its due functioning. They spring not from legislation but from the nature and Constitution of the law itself. They are inherent in the Court by virtue of its duty to do justice between the parties before it. The scope of inherent powers however cannot be extended beyond its legitimate circumscribed sphere. The safest guide lies in precedents ".

In reply Dr. Marcus-Jones submitted that there is no difference between Applicant and Appellant and the reason for the use of the former is because the applicant wishes to appeal to this Court and has indeed filed proposed grounds of appeal. He argued that the whole of Rule 11 of the Court of Appeal Rules applies. He cited Maxwell on the interpretation of Statutes 10th edition at page 379 and opined that sub rule 6 of rule 11 is mandatory.

Counsel reminded the Court that it has power to correct wrongs complained of and that the applicant should go to the lower Court, where the mistake was made. He did not think that there is any room for the invocation of the doctrine of inherent jurisdiction. The Court of Appeal did not make the Order and the jurisdiction of this Court is to correct errors. He said that there are many decisions of the Court in respect of sub rule 6 of Rule 11 and one cannot come to this Court after the period prescribed and to grant the application will be opening flood gates. Even if it has been a day of non compliance, the applicant cannot come to this Court, he concluded.

I have considered the arguments on both sides. For the Plaintiff/Respondent there has been a non-compliance with the provision of sub rule 6 of Rule 11 of the Court of Appeal Rules. Counsel for the applicant has canvassed non-compliance as well as in application of the sub rule. In the case of Re Coles and Ravershear 1907 1K.B. Lord Collins said:

"Although a Court cannot conduct its business without a Code of Procedure the relation of the Rules of Practice to the work of justice is intended to be that of a hand maid rather than mistress and the Court ought not to be so far bound and tied by rules of procedure, as to be compelled to do what will cause injustice in the particular case ".

Furthermore, it has been said that courts do not exist for the purpose of punishing bad taste, and Bowen L.J. in Copper v Smith (1844) 26 Ch.D750 at page 818, said as follows:

[p.5]

"Now I think it is a well established purpose that the object of Courts to decide the rights of Parties, and not to punish them for mistakes they make in the conduct of their case……I know of no kind of error or mistake which, if not fraudulent……. the Court ought not to correct, if it can be done without injustice to the other party, Courts do not exist for the sake of discipline but for the sake of deciding matters in controversy ".

I foresee no harm will be done to grant the application of the applicant to argue his appeal. Incalculable injustice may occur if the applicant is so denied that right.

It is worth noting that subsection 2 of section 23 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991 Act No. 6 of 1991 encourages parties to make use of the Court for determination of the existence or extent of their civil right or obligation. And under subsection 2 of section 129 of the said Constitution that right of appeal in any cause or matter determined by the High Court of Justice is as of right to the Court of Appeal. Subsection 15 of section 171 of the Constitution provides that any law found inconsistent with the last quoted section is to the extent of the inconsistency, be void and of no effect.

We think this is a fit and proper case to exercise the inherent jurisdiction of the Court and the application for enlargement of time within which to appeal is granted. There will be no order as to costs.

JUDGEMENT

TEJAN-JALLOH, J.S.C.

This is an appeal against the judgement of the High Court dated 16th March 2005. The appellant being dissatisfied with the decision filed four grounds of appeal, namely:—

1. The learned trial Judge erred in law and in fact in holding that the plaintiff had not proved its title to the land on which the Defendant had trespassed and built a house.

2. The learned trial Judge erred in law and in fact in holding that, despite the fact that there was cogent and irrefragable evidence that the dimensions and boundaries of the plaintiffs land encompassed that of the defendants land the land did not, ipso facto belong to the plaintiff.

3. The learned trial judge erred in law and in fact in failing to hold that since there was clear evidence that defendants could not prove the legitimacy of their title to the property in dispute, while the plaintiff had proved its title to the said land Judgment should be entered for the plaintiff.

4. The Judgment is against the weight of the evidence.

The Parties gave evidence and called witnesses and produced documentary evidence to wit exhibits A and K; exhibits "A", copy of conveyance dated 10th November, 1992, exhibits K copy of lease dated 22nd August, 1983, and amongst others of particular importance are exhibits H1-H3 i.e. three (3) official reports from Messr Lincoln, Coker and Koroma which were produced by the witnesses called by the plaintiff/appellant. Amongst others of particular importance are exhibits H1 to H3 which were produced by the witnesses called by the plaintiff/Appellant. The evidence adduced clearly revealed that the portion of land being claimed and on which the defendants respondents built is a private [p.33] property and not state land that could have been sold to the plaintiff/ appellant as their plan depicted; and we note that the explanation for that is that the land was not surveyed when the plaintiff/appellant leased the land. The evidence is also to the effect that the Department of surveys and lands never inspected the property nor installed the boundary beacons at the time of the lease in 1970 as well as the time of the purchase of the free hold in 1992.

The evidence of PW6 together with exhibits H1— H3 confirm that the wall fence had been in place since 1958, when it was PWD works land, which was finally leased to Continental Fishing Company. We cannot ignore the evidence that Mrs. Princess Roberts occupied part of the land being claimed by the plaintiffs/appellants and the irrefutable evidence that she had seen in undisturbed occupation of the land and paying by leasehold rents to the Ministry for a period of about 26 years. Following the guidelines in Dr. Seymour Wilson Vs Musa Abess. C.V. App. No 5/79 (Unreported) that in an action for a Declaration of Title, the plaintiff must succeed on the strength of his title and not on the weakness of the Defendant's title, the appellant in an attempt to prove that the portion of land they are claiming belong to the state called witnesses who clearly testified that the place being claimed by the appellant could not properly be claimed by the appellants. Having heard all the arguments on both sides and after perusing the records, what I consider to be the heart and soul of the appeal is whether the appellant proved his case as pleaded. In answering this question, I am not unmindful that it is a well established principle of law that in a claim for declaration of title, the onus is always on the plaintiff to establish his claim and [p.34] that it is not open to him to rely on the weakness of the defendants' case as Mr. Browne-Marke was seeking to do.

We think it was obvious particularly at the stage when the evidence was adduced that the claim for a declaration of title was lost. It is clear that the claim of title which the appellant depicted by their pleading was not supported by the oral as well as documentary evidence tendered by the personnel of the Ministry of Lands and survey. The attack on the title of the defendants/respondents by Mr. Brown-Marke was designed to show the deficiency in the respondent's titles, but the law is clear that the appellants cannot and should not rely on that weakness.

There are numerous authorities on the point. We refer to Kodilinge vs. Odu (1935) WACA 336 at page 337-338. It was a case for declaration of title. The court said that onus lies on the plaintiff to satisfy the court that he is entitled and must rely on the strength of his case and not on the weakness of the defendant's case; that if the onus is not discharged the weakness of the defendant's case will not help him. Mr. Browne-Marke in his arguments placed reliance on this decision, but his argument seemed to ignore the principle of law emanated in the case. We do not think the plaintiff/appellant can succeed by canvassing a title, which itself was demonstrated to be defective. The trial Judge was not satisfied that the plaintiff/appellant discharged the onus on them to satisfy the court that they are entitled on the evidence brought by them to a declaration of title to the land in dispute, because the appellant's vendor represented by the personnel of the Ministry of Lands and survey have firmly established that they could not properly lay claim to that portion of land, where the defendants/respondents [p.35] have built, although the defendants/respondents building ought not to have been where it is.

On the question of evaluation of the evidence a witness has first to be believed before a court can be satisfied with his testimony. Believing or disbelieving witnesses is within the competence of the trial Court and where such belief is supported by any evidence howsoever slight an appellate court will not normally interfere. In this case, there was enough evidence to justify the stand taken by the trial judge not awarding title to the plaintiff/appellants. It is trite law that a declaration of title is a relief entirely at the discretion of the trial judge, who should be satisfied that from the totality of the evidence led, and that on the proper evaluation of that evidence he should rightly exercise his discretion in favour of the successful claimant. We agree with Mr. Jenkins-Johnson that the learned trial judge in this case rightly decided that the plaintiff's/appellant's case had failed and rightly dismissed it.

We do not believe that this case comes within the principles under which an appellate court can interfere with the findings of the trial judge. We agree that the law is well stated in the well-known case of Dr. Seymour Wilson Vs Musa Abess (Supra) which considered Watt or Thomas (1947) AC 484. And Benmax Vs Austin Motors Company Limited (1955) 1 All ER 326.

In that case, Justice E.L. Luke said, inter alia,

"It is trite law that in an action for a Declaration of Title, the Plaintiff must succeed on the strength of his title and not the weakness of the Defendants' title"

"One of the ways that he may do this is to prove that he has a better title to the land than the Defendant.... the Party who proves a better title succeeds even though there may be another person, not a party, who has a better title than him".

On the question of evaluation of the evidence by an appellate Court, His Lordship stated in the Seymor — Wilson's case (Supra) at page 67-68 as follows:—

"There is no doubt that an appellate Court has power to evaluate the evidence led in the Court below, to reach its own conclusion, and in a suitable case, to reverse the finding of fact of a trial judge. But these powers are exercisable on well settled principles, and an appellate Court will not disturbed the findings of fact of a trial judge unless these principles are applicable, (and citing Thomas v. Thomas (1947).A.C.484 the appellate Court is, however, free to reverse his conclusions if the grounds given by him, therefore, are unsatisfactory by reason of material inconsistencies or in accuracies, or if it appears unmistakably from the evidence that in reaching them he has not taken proper advantage of having seen and heard the witnesses, or has failed to appreciate the weight and bearing of circumstances admitted or proved, (and citing Benmax vs. Austin Motors Co. Ltd. (1955) 1 All ER 326 per Lord Reid at Page 329, said:—

“but cases where there is no question of the credibility or reliability of witness, and in cases where the point in dispute is the proper inference to be drawn from proved facts, an Appeal Court is generally in as good a position to evaluate the evidence as the trial Judge, and ought not to shrink from that task, thought it ought, of course, to give weight to his opinion".

Also, in Joint venture Construction Company vs. Conteh & Others A.C. 1971-72 ALR SL 145 per Mr. Justice Tambiah at Page 150 4452-10—

"It is a well known principle of law that judges' findings made after the hearing of witness, and observing their demeanour, are entitled to great weight and should not be disturbed, unless it is clear that they are unsound…… but it is often open to an appellate court to find that the view of a witness was ill-founded. Where the point in dispute has to be decided by the proper inferences to be drawn from proved facts, an Appeal Court is in as good a position to evaluate the evidence as the trial judge, and may form its own independent opinion".

A very important point that we did not lose sight of is the fact that it was the plaintiff's/appellants' witnesses, whom he cannot afford to disown or discredit that gave the damaging evidence against the plaintiff/appellant. The law is clear that the plaintiff's/appellants' cannot be heard to say that their witnesses should not be believed.

Mr. Brown-Marke also contended that since the defendants'/respondents' property was supposed to be at Roporting in Wellington, the plaintiffs/appellants should be held to have proved their case of trespass against the defendants/respondents on a balance of probabilities. This proposition over looked the fact that the land on which the defendants/respondents built has been said and declared by the plaintiff/appellant's witnesses to be a private land as against state land which they are claiming. The position would have been different if both places had been on state land.

For the forgoing reasons, we find the contention untenable and misconceived. We see no merit in this appeal and it is hereby dismissed. Costs to the Respondent to be taxed.

JUDGMENT

TEJAN-JALLOH JA:

This is an appeal against the Decision of Hon. Mrs. Justice L.A.E. Marcus-Jones dated 16th day of February, 1993.

The appellant's claims inter alia is

1. Cancellation of the Conveyance made in favour of the 2nd and 4th Respondents or any other person in respect of property situate at 13 Circular Road, Freetown.

2. Order of mandamus compelling 1st Respondent to carry out the order of the Court dated 24th day of March, 1986 by allowing the appellants or any of them to purchase the said property, or alternatively that the order of the court and subsequent proceedings be set aside for irregularity in that the Originating Summons was not personally served on Teddy Johnson.

It has to be noted that the order of the Court being sought to be set aside was contained in CC 582/85 1985 R. No.8, whereas the matter on appeal is CC 386/87 1987 J. No.19 dated 14th May 1987. The learned trial Judge held that she could not consider the Order in the proceedings. She agreed with Counsel for the Respondents that it should be a matter of appeal.

On the issue whether she could cancel the Conveyance in favour of the 2nd and 4th Respondents, the learned trial Judge held that as far as the purchasers were concerned, they had a right to infer that the Administrator and Registrar-General was acting fairly in the execution of his duty. That there was no evidence that they were aware of any irregularity if any. She concluded that she could not say [p.11] that the purchasers acted in collusion with the Administrator and Registrar-General. Judgment was entered in favour of the Respondents.

The Appellants being dissatisfied with the above decision of the Court dated 16th February 1993 appealed to the Court. The grounds of Appeal as amended by Notice dated 12th November 2002 reads:—

1. The decision is against the weight of the evidence.

2. The learned trial Judge acting on wrong principles in arriving at her decision in favour of the defendants.

3. The learned trial Judge misdirected herself or erred in-law when she ruled that she could not consider the evidence of Frederick Johnson.

4. The learned trial Judge failed to consider the case of the defendant, Frederick Johnson that he was not served with the papers leading to the Order of the sale of the property. Thus depriving the Plaintiff of an opportunity of having the Order of the Court dated 24th March 1986 set aside and allowing him to contest the granting of the aforesaid property.

5. The learned trial Judge failed to consider that the matter of Frederick Johnson and her children and grandchildren after her death had been in full and undisturbed possession of this property without paying any rent or acknowledging the title of any other person thereto for a total of 70 years. It was their family home. The Administrator-General was clearly with people whose title came after that of their parents. He simply treated the property as [p.12] part of the estate of Nathaniel King (deceased). That property was no longer part of that estate.

A.F. Serry-Kamal's contention if it can be summarized is that this action was brought to set aside the Order of the High Court dated 24th March, 1986 and all proceedings leading to it for irregularity. The Order for sale is CC582/85 and it was this Order that gave the 1st Respondent the authority to sell the property by public auction or private treaty. We share the view that the learned trial Judge was right in refusing to grant the application to set aside the Order in question. The appellants should have applied to intervene in the matter CC582/85 instead of taking a fresh action. The law is very clear where somebody's proprietary interest is affected; the person can apply for leave to be added as a defendant. An application may also be made after judgment if it is intended to set aside the judgment:

Jacques v Hamson (1983) 12 QB D 136.

See also Order Ord. 15/6/16 in the Supreme Court Practice 1999 or Order 52 rule 3 of the Annual Practice 1960.

Mr. Serry-Kamal placed great reliance on a passage in Halsbury Laws of England 3rd edition Volume 22 paragraph 1665 at page 785 under the rubric "After judgment or Order drawn up". He relied particularly on the passage which reads:

"or in a fresh action brought to review such judgment or Order". What the learned authors stated here, cannot with respect, be practised in this jurisdiction, because a Court of co-equal or concurrent jurisdiction cannot set aside a judgment or order of another Court in separate and distinct action like the appellants did in the matter on appeal. This therefore disposes of part of the argument advanced in support of Ground 3. As regards the other issues raised and the following authorities:

Re May (1883)25Ch.D.

Re Harrison's share under a settlement,

Harrison v Harrison (1985) 1 All E.R. 185,

Re Scott and Alvarez's Contract Scott v Alvarez (1985) 1 Ch. 596 C.A.

Re Nazaire Co (1879) 12 CR 288 CA at page 291.

It is sufficient to state that all these are sound propositions of law and I opine that they would have been applicable in appropriate cases and I repeat, not where one has instituted a fresh action.

In the famous case of Graig v Kanseen (1943) A/I ER 108). It was held that the failure to serve the summons upon which the Order was made, was not a mere irregularity, but a defect which made the Order a nullity and that an order which is a nullity is something which the person affected by it is entitled to have set aside ex debito justitiae.

Lastly, it was held that the Court in its inherit jurisdiction can set aside its own order and an appeal is not necessary. This authority clearly indicates that it is the Court that one must apply to and not to initiate another action in the High Court to set aside an Order in another High Court.

Mr. Serry-Kamal stated in his brief as well as in his argument that the two plaintiffs are persons affected by the Order dated 24th March, 1986 but that they were not served. A point which ought to be borne in mind is that it is good law that entering Judgment against a dead person or non-existent company can be a nullity, see Lazard Brothers & Co. v Banque Industrielle de Moscon (1932) 1KB 617 CA at Page 624 on appeal sub nom Lazard Brothers Midland Bank (1933) A.C. 289 296.

Mr. Serry-Kamal argued that the Administrator and Registrar-General (1st Respondent) had no authority to fix time limit within which the property was to be sold. He added that Section 21(2) of Cap.45 enjoined the 1st Respondent to protect the interest of the beneficiaries. He submitted that the 1st

Respondent acted in an arbitrary manner and in gross violation of Administration of Estates Act Cap 45 of the Laws of Sierra Leone.

Finally, he submitted that on the basis that one of the beneficiaries was not served the appeal ought to be allowed.

The dividing line between the Appellant's Counsel and Counsel for the 1st Respondent is that Mr. Taylor put in the fore front of his argument and as well as in his synopsis that the appellant should not have instituted a fresh action to challenge an Order affecting her made in the different action. For the reasons we have already stated we are in agreement with him on the authorities relied upon in support of it. Mr. Taylor drew our attention to the findings of the learned trial Judge, which are that she saw no irregularity in the proceedings leading to the sale of the property. He submitted that the Court cannot disturb the findings of fact of the trial Judge, unless it is plainly unsound or it appears unmistakenly from the evidence, that he has not taken proper advantage of having seen or heard the witnesses or has failed to appreciate the weight and bearing of circumstances admitted or proved. In support of the proposition, he relied on the decision of the House of Lords in the famous case of Watt or Thomas v Thomas (1946) A.C.484.

The case of the 2nd and 4th Respondent as presented by Mr. Michael is simply that assuming that the Order of the Court dated 24th March 1986 in the proceedings CC 582/83 which gave the Administrator and Registrar-General (1st Respondent) authority to sell the property at 13 Circular Road Freetown, should or could have been set aside for irregularity, his submission is that the setting [p.15] aside of that Order would not in anyway affect or interfere with the title or interest of the 2nd and 4th Respondents who purchased the property in question because according to him they are bona fide purchasers for value without notice. Mr. Serry-Kamal's contention is that they the buyers must have visited the property and that if they did they would have found the first Plaintiff and her brothers and sisters and cousins residing there.

In support of his submission Mr. Michael placed great reliance on the decision in the matter of the Estate of William Charles During v The Administrator-General, where Beccles-Davies J.S.C. (as he then was) delivering the Judgment of the Court of Appeal dated 10th July, 1980 said at Page 4:

"The revocation of a grant of letters of Administration would not affect the title of a purchaser, who has acquired any interest in real or personal property pursuant to an Order made under any Statutory power of the Court."

Mr. Michael also submitted that a purchaser from a personal representative obtains a good title irrespective of any irregularities in the administration of the estate unless he is a party to a breach of trust. In support of his proposition he cited the case of:

where it was held that a purchaser from a personal representative obtains good title despite irregularities in administration unless he is a party to the breach of trust. Mr. Michael argued that the appellant did not plead or allege that there was a beach of trust and therefore the 2nd and 4th Respondents cannot be deprived of the property they have acquired. He also relied on Harlsbury Laws of England 3rd Edition Volume 16 at Page 361 and 363 where the learned authors say as follows:—

[p.16]

"The purchaser from the representatives has the right to infer that the representative is acting fairly in the execution of his duty. And it rests upon the person seeking to impeach the validity of the transaction to prove that the purchaser has notice of the true state of affairs."

He argued that the appellants have failed to prove that his clients had any notice of any irregularity. In the light of the above authorities and being aware of the provisions of Section 70(i) of the Conveyancing and Property Act 1881, which are to the effect that the Orders of the Court are conclusive and that a sale cannot be invalidated on the ground of want of jurisdiction; want of any concurrence, consent, notice or service whether the purchaser has notice of any such want or not, we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Ms. S. G. Sisay, for the Appellant

DELIVERED ON 11TH DAY OF JULY 2008

RULING

BASH-TAQI, JSC:

This is an appeal against the Judgment/Decision of the Hon. Mrs. Justice C. L Taylor dated 9th April 2008 refusing the Appellant's application to appoint her as Legal Guardian of Hannah Memunatu Yillah, an Infant.

By an Originating Notice of Motion dated 28th February 2008, the Appellant, Admire Johnson had applied to Taylor, J for the following Orders:

1. That the Court grants an Order appointing her legal guardian of the infant/juvenile Hannah Memunatu Yillah.

3. That the Court grants permission to the Appellant to take the infant/juvenile out of the Jurisdiction of Sierra Leone.

The application was supported by the Affidavit of the Appellant Admire Johnson sworn on 28th February 2008 attached to which were six (6) exhibits, namely:

Exhibit "AJ 1"— the birth certificate of the Infant/juvenile;

Exhibit "AJ 2" — death certificate of the infant/juvenile' mother;

Exhibit "AJ 3" — Letter dated 6th July 2006 to the Chief Social Development Officer notifying them of the Appellant's intention to apply for an adoption Order in respect of the Infant;

Exhibit "AJ 4" — Letter from the Chief Social Development Officer granting consent to the proposed adoption;

Exhibit "AJ 5" — Letter to consent from the Infant's nearest relation living;

[p.23]

Exhibit "AJ 6" — Letter from the Appellant's employer stating her employment and financial status.

On 9th April 2008 the application came up before Taylor J. who dismissed it on the same date for want of jurisdiction. This is what the Learned Judge had to say in her Judgment:

"I have considered the application by way of Originating Notice of Motion dated 28th "February 2008 by Learned Counsel S. G. Sisay for legal guardianship by the Applicant Admire Johnson of Hannah Memunatu Yillah whose date of birth is 10th October 1990.

I have read the Affidavit in support and the exhibits attached thereto. This Court does not have jurisdiction to grant the orders as prayed as she is above the age of 17 years. In the light of the above the application is refused," (emphasis added)

It is against this Judgment that the Appellant has appealed to this Court on one ground, namely:—

1. The Honourable Mrs. Justice C. 1. Taylor Judge, misdirected herself when she held that the Court did not have the jurisdiction to grant the Order for guardianship to the Appellant as the juvenile is above the age of 17 years having regard to the fact that an Order for guardianship is not limited to any particular age bracket"

The facts leading to the application before the Learned Judge can be gleaned from the affidavit of the Appellant sworn in Support of the application. It would appear that the Juvenile, subject matter of these proceedings, is the eldest daughter of the Appellant's sister, one Tunde Coker, who is now dead. During her life time, Tunde Coker was very sickly and she was unemployed, so that she was unable to take care of the children and herself. The Appellant had assumed sole responsibility for her and her two daughters, namely, the Juvenile, subject matter of this application, and her younger sister Sarah Elysee Yillah. On 17th November 2007, Tunde Coker passed away (see Exh. "AJ2"). The Appellant instructed Solicitors to process an application for the adoption of Tunde Coker's two children by the Appellant. The Solicitors, pursuant to section 3(4) of the Adoption Act 1969 notified the Chief Social Development Officer by letter dated 6th July 2007, of the Appellant's intention to adopt the Juvenile and her sister Sarah Elysee Yillah. On 15th March 2007 and 20th April 2007 the Ministry of Social Welfare, Gender and Children's Affairs conducted a home visit and interviewed the Appellant and members of her family for the purpose of ascertaining the suitability and economic circumstances of the Appellant. The Chief Social Development Officer prepared a report of her assessment of the Appellant, and she granted permission pursuant to Section 3(4) of the Adoption Act No. 9 of 1969, for Adoption proceedings to be commenced in favour the two juveniles of the Appellant on behalf of Appellant. (See Exhibit "AJ4).

The Appellant who is ordinarily resident in the United States of America was unable to come back to Sierra Leone to pursue the Adoption process, and when eventually she was [p.24] able to come to Sierra Leone, the Juvenile Hannah Memunatu Yillah had attained the age of 17 years, beyond the age permissible for the Adoption of juveniles under the Adoption Act 1989. The Appellant proceeded with the process of adopting the Juvenile's younger sister Sarah Elysee, then 12 years, and had applied for permission to remove the said child out of the jurisdiction. With respect to the juvenile, Hannah, the Appellant's Solicitors having advised themselves that she was above the age limited by the Adoption Act 1989, presented the present the application to the High Court, for the Appellant to be appointed the juvenile's legal guardian. It is this application (for legal guardianship) that came before Taylor, J in the High Court, and which she dismissed for lack of jurisdiction, as I have already stated.

Counsel Ms Sisay submitted that unlike the Adoption Act No. 9 of 1989, Guardianship proceedings have no age limit; that the juvenile is an Infant as defined by Section 4 of the Interpretation Act 1971, opposed to being a child, as defined by the Adoption Act 1989; that the High Court has jurisdiction to determine and dispose of all applications of guardianship, maintenance or advancement of infants; that this jurisdiction is vested in the High Court by Order 42 Rule 5 of the former High Court Rules 1960; and by section 18(2) of the Court's Act No 31 of 1965, the High Court has unlimited original and supervisory jurisdiction in all cases and matters both civil and criminal; that this jurisdiction is also guaranteed by section 132 (1) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No. 6 of 1991; and finally that the application was properly before the High Court as the Court of competent and unlimited jurisdiction in these matters.

The legal definition of an "Infant", under Sec 4 of the Interpretation Act 1971 is a person who has not attained the age of 21 years. By that definition, we agree with Counsel that the juvenile in this matter has not attained 21 years as evidenced in the birth certificate, Exh. "AJ1". Counsel reminded us that under the Child Rights' Act 2007, a Child is defined as a person who is not above 18 years. Therefore even if the basis of the Judge's Ruling on the age limit of 17 was under the Child Right's Act of 2007, the juvenile in this case is still within the age bracket within that Act, since at the time of the application, she was not yet 18 years. Counsel further drew out attention to the fact that the juvenile's mother had already given her consent to her adoption by the Appellant;, that if the adopted order had been granted, it would have had the effect of extinguishing her parental rights. In the present application the legal and parental rights are not extinguished by the granting of the application. Ms. Sisay submitted finally that the Learned Trial Judge did not consider the interest and welfare of the juvenile, and urged the Court to grant the application in the interest of the welfare of the Juvenile in this case.

Ms. Sisay relied on the following authorities in support of the appeal:

Family Law by E. L. Johnson at page 290; Bromley's Family Law 4th Edition; Section 2 of the Child Rights Act No. 43 of 2007; Re Nevin (1891) 2 Ch. Page299; Johnstone v Beattie (1843) 10 Ch & F (HL) page 576.

I will now deal with what I regard as the present law on the subject in the absence of any provisions in our Rules regarding Guardianship proceedings.

Medieval law, Pollock and Maitland noted "never laid down any... rule that there [was] or ought to be a guardian for every infant." Had it done so it might have led to the formulation of a comprehensive definition of guardianship, which, in turn, might have checked the proliferation of different kinds of guardianships. In the long run the latter effect has not proved unduly harmful, for many types of guardianship have long been obsolete or of minimal significance particularly those limited to the estate of the minor, since they have virtually been absorbed into the laws of trusts. However, the lack of a unifying definition has had other serious consequences which have become increasingly apparent with the growth of "administrative family law". The necessary encroachment of the law upon the privacy of the family has not only undermined parental authority, it has put at risk the liberty of the child; there is a failure to adequately protect the interests of the child. It was to achieve this objective of providing adequate protection for the child that it was suggested to create a new kind of Office known as the Children's Guardian, who not only could represent the interests of the children in care, but equally could serve other needs of the children for which the law does not provide, for instance, to act with the mother's consent, as guardian of her illegitimate child where the father is unknown or shirks his parental responsibilities. One of the traditional categories of guardianship was that of guardianship by nature which expressed the relationship between the parent and his legitimate child. It is on this basis that the Common Law right of the father to custody and other rights which emanated therefrom are explained. The power to appoint a guardian was originally given to the father by the Tenures Abolition Act 1660, but the mother had to wait until the Guardianship of Infants Act 1886 was passed to give her greater rights in respect of guardianship of children; and even then her power was restricted until extended by the Guardianship of Infants Act 1925 (the Acts are not applicable in our Jurisdiction). Such an appointment traditionally appertains to the Chancery Division, although the county courts may appoint a guardian to act jointly with a surviving parent in cases where the deceased parent did not appoint a guardian or where the infant has no parent, no guardian, and no other person having parental rights with respect to him.

Today, the term 'Guardian' in its most common meaning describes a person who has been appointed either by a parent under a deed or will or by a court of competent jurisdiction to stand in loco parentis to the child, and it is the High Court that now has the inherent jurisdiction formerly possessed by the Court of Chancery to appoint guardians. Thus, a guardian may be appointed conditionally or until the child reaches a specified age which is less than the attainment of his majority or until some other event happens. In our jurisdiction, our High Court is equally vested with the similar powers, "to hear and determine all applications for guardianship, custody, and maintenance of infants .... ", etc. So that where the parents of an infant are dead, the Court may appoint a guardian to the infant on the ground that he is in need of protection. In deciding who to appoint as guardian, the Court will consider mainly the interests of the infant, and other things being equal," the Court, according to its ordinary practice, gives a preference to the nearest blood relations, and does not appoint strangers when fit persons are to be found among the relation" (see Chitty J in Re Nevin (1891) 2 Ch. 299, 303.

Having thus held that the High Court is the competent Court to determine the issue of legal guardianship, it now remains for us to determine whether an infant above 17, but under 18, can be the subject matter of guardianship proceedings. The Learned Trial Judge was of the view that she lacked jurisdiction to entertain the Appellant's application because the Juvenile, the subject matter of the application, is above 17 years, although under 18 years at the date of the application. Unfortunately, she did not state by what authority she came to that conclusion. We can only assume that the Learned Trial Judge confused the proceedings before her with those under the Adoption Act 1989, which require the child, for whose benefit an adoption order is sought, to be under the age of 17 years at the date of the order.

We hold firmly that there is no such requirement in our Rules in respect of an application for legal guardianship of a juvenile who has not attained the age of majority. Authorities abound that in our jurisdiction the age of majority is 21 years; this age is recognized by our Constitution, it being the age of eligibility for any citizen seeking election to the Sierra Leone House of Representatives (Parliament); it is also the age recognized in the Interpretation Act 1971 as the age of majority. In Johnstone v Beattie (1843-60) ALL E. R.576 at 582, Lord Brougham held, in that case, that a guardianship order extends over the whole period of the infant's minority; that the guardians are appointed until the infant is twenty-one years of age. It stands to reason therefore that an infant below the age of 21 years can still be the subject of a guardianship order, and we see no reason to depart from the authorities on this point.

We think in this case, the interest and welfare of the juvenile is a paramount consideration — the love and affection the Appellant bear to the juvenile is undoubted. I have no doubt that the juvenile's welfare will scrupulously be guarded by the Appellant. I am satisfied that as the juvenile's nearest relation by blood, and as the person who has had sole responsibility for her welfare and that of her sister and mother, before and after the mother's death, the Appellant is the proper person to be appointed the legal guardian of this infant.

We are told that the Appellant has already obtained an Adoption Order in respect to the juvenile's younger sister, Sarah Elysee, and she would be taking her out of the jurisdiction to live with her in the United States where she resides. It would be a very strange and unusual combination of circumstances that would make it to the interests of these children to be deprived at their ages, of association with each other or with their aunt. Refusing the application would mean cutting away from this juvenile all the tender associations and affection which she has experienced in her young life with her sister and with the Appellant.

Having regard to all these circumstances, I am exercising my discretion in favour of the Appellant and accordingly uphold the appeal and make the following orders:

1. The Appellant, Admire Johnson, is hereby appointed legal Guardian of the Juvenile, Hannah Memuna Yillah.

[p.27]

2. That the Appellant, Admire Johnson, is hereby granted permission to take the Juvenile, Hannah Memuna Yillah, out of the jurisdiction

3. That no order is made as to costs.

JUDGEMENT:

TEJAN-JALLOH - J.S.C.

This is an appeal against the decision of the High Court contained in the Judgment of Hon. Mr. Justice A.B. [p.29] Rashid, of March, 2005. The appellant being dissatisfied with the decision filed four grounds of appeal, namely:

I. The learned trial Judge wrongly evaluated the evidence in holding that the plaintiff gave the Defendant money to procure a visa to travel abroad and ignored the fact that the agreement was for the defendant to assist in getting his son to travel.

II. The learned trial Judge failed to consider the evidence by both sides and that the Defendant did all that was practicable to assist the plaintiff's son travel to Europe.

III. The learned trial Judge failed to consider that there was an intervening factor (novus interveniens) which prevented the plaintiff's son from getting to his destination having embarked on the Journey.

IV. The learned trial Judge failed to consider whether the agreement was to do acts contrary to immigration rules for the plaintiffs son to enter a European country illegally which would be contrary to public policy.

V. The decision is against the weight of the evidence.

The main complaint which could be discerned from the grounds of appeal filed on behalf of the appellant is that the contract or transaction was illegal.

From the material point of the pleadings filed on behalf of the parties it appears clearly enough that the sole issue is whether or not the appellant was liable to refund the sum of U$ 2,800.00 (Two Thousand Eight hundred — US dollars) received from the respondent.

It is essential that a pleading if it is not to be embarrassing should state the facts which would put those against whom it is directed on their guard and feel them what is the ease which they will have to meet c per Lord cotton L.J. in Phillips V Phillips (1878) 4 QBD 129 Page 139.

Each party must plead all the material facts on which he means so rely at the trial; otherwise he is not entitled to give any evidence of them at the trial. No averment must be omitted which is essential to success. For instance when the evidence at the trial establishes fats different from those pleaded and which constitute a radical departure from the case as pleaded the action will be dismissed (Waghorn V George) Wimpey & Co Ltd (1969) 1 WLR 1764, (1970) 1 All. E.R. 474. Even in pawding V London Brick Co. (197) 4 KIP 2007 where the plaintiff succeeded on findings of fact not pleaded by him the judgment not allowed to stand. It was said that the Court of Appeal could either discuss the action or order a new trial.

Similarly, a defendant may be prevented from relying at the trial on a ground of defence not pleaded by him. (Davie V New Merton Board Mills Ltd. (1956) 1 WLR 233, (1956), 1 ALL. E.R. 379. In the case in hand it [p.31] was at the trial not in his pleadings that the defendant raised the issue of illegality.

The law is well settled that certain matters must be specifically pleaded. Our High Court Rules are clear on it. The law requires a defendant in any pleadings subsequent to a statement of claim to plead specifically any matter, for example, performance, release, the expiry of any relevant period of limitation, fraud or any facts showing illegality,

(a) Which he alleges makes any claim or defence of the opposite party not maintainable, etc. etc.

The requirement for a party to plead illegality is mandatory (Shell Chemicals. U.K. Ltd V Vinul Ltd) formerly Vinyl Products (1991) 135 SJ 412 (1991) The Times March 7 C. A.)

At the discretion of the court, a party may be debarred from raising a case totally inconsistent with and contradictory to the case previously argued: Exp. P. Reddish, Re Wilson (1877) 5 Ch. D1 882.

Counsel for the appellant quite rightly referred to the evidence of the appellant, which is that the transaction was illegal, but in my view the learned trial Judge was entitled to ignore it as he right did, because if he had taken cognizance of it he would have been accepting a case contrary to and manifestly inconsistent with that which the parties had pleaded. In the words of Lord Normand, that would amount to [p.32] condemning a party on a ground of which no fair notice has been given;

Esso Petroleum Co. Ltd V Southport Corporation (1956)

Ac. 218 at page 239 (House of Lords).

And — Oloto V Williams (1944) 10 WACA 23.

In these two case, the court accepted a case contrary to and manifestly in consistent with that which they pleaded.

There can be no doubt that the purpose of giving the appellant money was to enable PW2, Agustin Marco Kamara to travel to Holland; The evidence before the learned trial Judge revealed that no attempt was made by appellant to obtain the Visa therefore consideration for which the money, was given to appellant totally failed. I share the view that the respondent is entitled to a refund of his money. The issue has been rightly disposed of by the learned trial Judge. I do not intend to repeat the other various contentions in the synopsis filed as they are irrelevant.

For all the reasons we have already stated, the conclusion we have reached is that we see no merit in the appeal; it is therefore dismissed; no order as the costs.

RULING

This is an application by Notice of Motion dated 5th October, 2007 or the following Orders:—

(1) That there be an interim stay of execution of the Judgment dated 13th July, 2007 pending the hearing and determination of this application.

(2) That there be a stay of execution of the Judgment dated 13th July, 2007 pending the hearing and determination of an appeal to the Court of Appeal intituled Civ. App. 32/2007 lodged on the 2nd August, 2007.

(3) That this Honourable Court grants such further or other orders as it may deem fit.

The applicant herein filed an affidavit in support of this application sworn to on 5th October 2007 to which was attached eight (8) exhibits (CBC[1] to CBC8). The Respondent herein filed an affidavit in opposition sworn to on 10th October, 2007 by Patrick Lambert.

Counsel for the applicant Mr. E.E.C Shears-Moses submitted that there are two principles to be considered thus:—

(i) Looking at the appeal and the existence of success and

(ii) the existence of special circumstances to grant the stay. Counsel then submitted that if the respondent goes on to administer the estate he will be at liberty to do what he wishes relying on Exhibit CBC6. Counsel finally referred to the affidavit in opposition especially paragraph 4 in which Exhibits CBC4 1-6 fully satisfies it.

Counsel for the Respondent Mr. R. Johnson opposes the application relying on the entire affidavit in opposition. He then submitted that paragraphs 5-7 discloses no special circumstances since the accounts in Exhibit CBC4 1-6 is disputed as a sham in that there are no documents to support it.

Mr. Shears-Moses in his reply submitted that there is no locus to administer the Estate of Mabel Cox. He referred to Exhibits CBC2 and CBC7 and submitted that the respondent has no fixed abode therefore enforcement of the appeal if it succeeds would be difficult as such a stay is necessary.

Paragraphs 5, 6 and 7 of the affidavit in support of the application reads as follows:

"5. That pursuant to the Judgment of the 13th July, 2007, several orders were made by the High Court inter alia that I give an account of all the properties, real and personal including rents and profits collected, and monies in the Bank which I received whilst acting as Administrator of the estate of Mabel Cox deceased. I have complied with this order. Produced and shown to me is a copy of the account tendered and marked CBC4 1-6.

"6. That the matter pertains to a deceased person which if in the wrong hands could lead to serious repercussions later on.

"7. That the Respondent was meddling with the estate of Mabel Cox and selling properties belonging to it even before he purportedly obtained a grant for Cynthia Eduwu which had several defects. Produced and shown to me is a copy of the grant marked CBC5."

Paragraph 4 of the affidavit in Opposition reads:

"4. That the Appellant/Applicant is occupying one of the properties forming part of the Estate of Mabel Cox situated at 4 Nurse Horton Drive Brookfields Freetown and has been solely collecting the rent from the other property situate at 35H Beckly Lane off Tengbeh Town Freetown since the death of Mabel Cox in 2005."

It is clear that the principles to be applied in determining whether to grant or refuse a stay of execution are well known and have been applied in numerous cases by the Courts in this our jurisdiction. The Applicant must show that he has a prima facie good grounds of appeal and also that there are special circumstances justifying a stay. The main reason for this is based on the fact that a successful litigant should not be deprived of the fruits of his judgment; See Patrick Kororma v Sierra Leone Housing Corporation and Dolcie Beckley Misc.App.9/2004 C.A. (unreported). It will be wrong to grant a stay of execution where an appeal is frivolous or where a grant of a stay will create hardship on the successful litigant. See: Firetex International Co. Limited Vs. Sierra Leone External Communications and Sierra Leone Telecommunications Misc.App.19/2002 C.A. The applicant therefore must show that there are special circumstances to justify the granting of a stay of execution and this involves a consideration of the need to balance the interest of the successful litigant and the Applicant's claim for a stay — See Patrick Koroma v SALHOC Supra.

From the affidavit in support and especially paragraphs 5, 6, 7 and Exhibit CBC1 and the submissions of Counsel for the Applicant the question to be determined is whether the averments constitute special circumstances to warrant a stay of execution.

The Respondent has not stated in his affidavit evidence or show that a stay of execution would cause him any hardship nor has he demonstrated that in case the appeal succeeds he would be in a position to restore the Applicant to his normal position.

I have considered the submissions of both Counsel and carefully examined the averments in the Affidavits in support and opposition. I am satisfied that if a stay is not granted extreme hardship would be caused to the Applicant. I am satisfied that the Applicant has shown that special circumstances do exist for this Court to exercise its unfettered discretion to grant a stay of the execution of the Judgment dated 13th July, 2007 pending the hearing and determination of the Appeal to the Court of Appeal, and would therefore grant the stay. I shall make no order as to cost.

DELIVERED ON THE 11TH DAY OF JULY 2008

RULING

BASH-TAQI, JSC:

The Defendants/Applicants who were the Defendants in the High Court, have appealed against the Ruling of Kamanda, JA (as he then was sitting as Judge of the High Court) dated 2nd May 2007, in which he upheld the objection of the Plaintiff/Respondent and struck out the Applicant's Notice of Motion dated 10th May 2007.

By that Motion, the Defendants/Applicants were applying, 1) for leave to be granted to them to appeal against the Ruling of the Learned Trial Judge of 2nd May 2007, 2) an interim stay of execution pending the hearing and determination of that application, and 3) for a similar order as in (2) above pending the hearing and determination of the proposed appeal to be filed if the application on the Notice of Motion was granted. It is alleged that while Counsel for the Defendants/Applicants was moving the Court on his application, but before completing his submissions, Counsel for the Respondent took an objection to its further hearing. The Judge after hearing Counsel upheld the objection and struck out the Defendants/Applicants' Notice of Motion.

It is against this Ruling that the Defendants! Applicants have applied to this Court by Notice of Motion dated 22nd June 2007 seeking the following Orders:

1. "That leave be granted to the Defendants/Applicants herein to appeal against the Ruling/Decision of the Hon. Mr. Justice Jon Kamanda, Learned Trial Judge(in this matter which is dated the 2nd May 2007 in the High court matter intituled CC460/0S 2005 H. NO. 9 Between Cornelius Augustine Harding (Plaintiff) and Mustapha Allie Abou Tarraf (1st Defendant) and Nasser Ayoub (2nd Defendant).

2. That this Honourable Court orders an Interim Stay of proceedings in the High Court matter intituled CC460/05 2005 H. NO. 9 Between Cornelius Augustine Harding (Plaintiff) and Mustapha Allie Abou Tarraf (1st Defendant) and Nasser Ayoub (2nd Defendant) pending the hearing and determination of this application.

3. That this Honourable Court orders a Stay of Proceedings in the High Court matter intituled CC 460/05 2005 H. NO. 9 Between Cornelius Augustine Harding (Plaintiff) and Mustapha Allie Abou Tarraf (1st Defendant) and Nasser Ayoub (2nd Defendant) pending the hearing and determination of the proposed appeal to be filed pursuant to an order made by the Court under Order 1 sought on the face of this motion."

The application is supported by the Affidavit of Patrick Lambert sworn on the 22nd day of June 2007 and a Supplemental Affidavit sworn on 21st day of May 2008 together with the exhibits attached thereto.

A brief background is necessary at this stage before going into the substance of the application before us.

The Plaintiff/Respondent herein had instituted proceedings in the High Court by Writ of Summons on 2nd May 2005 for possession of premises at No 5 Spur Road Freetown occupied by the Defendants/Applicants under a Lease, and for damages upon forfeiture for alleged breaches of covenants. On 12th May 2005, the Defendants/Applicants delivered a Statement of Defence and Counterclaimed for relief against forfeiture. On 18th May 2005, the Plaintiff/Respondent then filed a Reply and Defence to the Counterclaim.

On the 17th October 2006, the Defendants/Applicants served interrogatories on the Plaintiff/Respondent pursuant to Order XX © (1) seeking answers to the following questions:

1. Whether the plaintiff declared to the Income Tax. Department/The National Revenue Authority the amount of rent he had received from the 1st and 2ncl Defendants for the years 2002-2005;

2. Whether the declared rental value (if at all declared) was the same as provided for in the lease agreement between the parties;

[p.54]

3. Whether plaintiff did receive from the 1st and 2nd Defendants, rental payments in excess of that provided in the said lease agreement;

4. If there was an excess, the plaintiff to state the amount of excess for the years 2002-2005;

5. Whether plaintiff did sign a supplemental agreement in which the rental value for the demised premises was different from that in the initial agreement.

Upon receipt of the above interrogatories, the Plaintiff/Respondent applied to the Court by Motion seeking an Order that the interrogatories of 17th October 2006 served on him be within-drawn, On the 2nd day of May 2007, the Learned Trial Judge Kamanda, J.A, then gave a detailed Ruling, part of which is reproduced hereunder as appears at paragraph 3 of Mr. Lambert's Affidavit in Support of his application. It states:

i) "I will here attempt to the Central issue in the instant case as I see it. It is whether in a case for the possession of the premises resulting from breaches by a tenant of covenants relating to use of the demised premises, the tenant can raise issues of (or) serve interrogatories relating to what declaration the landlord had made about rent to the Income Tax or the Internal Revenue Authorities"

ii) "Interrogatories are not made to provide details which are within the knowledge of the person issuing them.

iii) "Further it is my view that the issuing of interrogatories in this matter, fails to satisfy the test laid down in the Foundation in that the Foundation of this case rests on alleged breach of covenant by the Defendants who are tenants of the Plaintiff. To hold in these circumstances that interrogatories pending to raise taxations issues are relevant would be to over stretch the tests for the applicability of interrogatories. I fail to see their relevance in this case, and will Order that they be withdrawn, and the matter continue to the next stage."

Thereafter Counsel drew up and filed the Judge's Order, which reads as follows:

"DATED THE 2ND DAY OF MAY 2007"

"UPON READING the Notice of Motion dated 27th day of October 2006 together with the affidavits in support and opposition thereto AND UPON HEARING N. D. TEJAN-COLE ESQ. of Counsel for the Plaintiff/Applicant and P. LAMBER ESQ, of Counsel for the Defendants/Applicants,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED as follows:

1. That the interrogatories be withdrawn.

[p.55]

2. That the Costs of this application be costs in the cause"

On the 10th day of May 2007, being dissatisfied with the said Ruling, the Defendants/ Applicant applied by Notice of Motion for leave to appeal against the same and for an Interim Stay of proceedings pending the hearing and determination of the proposed appeal to be filed if the application succeeds.

The Motion came up for hearing before Kamanda, J A, on 15th May 2007. During the course of Mr. Lambert's arguments before the Learned Trial Judge, and according to him, before he had completed his submissions on his Motion, Counsel for the Plaintiff/Respondent, Mr. N. D. Tejan-Cole, objected to the Defendants/Applicants' application on the grounds that the full Ruling/Decision, the subject matter of the application, had not been exhibited with the Motion papers. The Learned Trial Judge heard the arguments of both Counsel on the objection and thereafter adjourned for Ruling.

On 8th June 2007, the Learned Judge gave the Ruling below, which I have found necessary at this point to reproduce in full as it appears in the Judge's handwritten notes supplied to the Court at our request, by Mr. Lambert and attached as exhibit "J" to his Supplemental Affidavit sworn on 21st May 2008. The Ruling/Decision reads:

"RULING"

"The background to this application will help to make this Ruling clearer. As part of the process in bringing this matter through its preliminary stages to trial, Mr. Lambert issued interrogatories on the Plaintiffs. On 2nd June (2nd May) 2007, I ruled against the interrogatories being issued (see pages 29 to 33 of these Records), and ordered that they be withdrawn.

"Consequent upon this order Mr. Lambert has moved this Court on a notice of motion dated 10th May 2007 for the following orders.

1. That leave be granted to the Defendants to appeal against the Ruling/Decision of the Learned trial Judge in this matter dated 2nd May 2007.

2. That this Hon Court Orders an interim stay of proceedings in this matter pending the hearing and determination of this application

3. That this Court orders a Stay of proceedings pending the hearing and determination of the proposed appeal to be filed pursuant to an order made by this Court under Order 1;

[p.56]

"Five documents were exhibited to an affidavit sworn to on 10th May 2007 by Mr. Lambert.

"What was however not been exhibited was the Ruling/Decision, the subject matter of the proposed appeal.

"Mr. Tejan-Cole for the Plaintiff/Respondent has submitted that the Ruling/Decision ought to be exhibited. Mr. Lambert holds a contrary view; such is the substratum of the Ruling.

"Put more succinctly the Ruling is to determine whether on an application seeking leave to appeal against a Ruling/Decision, that Ruling/Decision has to be exhibited, because the drawn-up order alone is not sufficient.

"My considered and categorical answer is Yes, and for the following reasons amongst others.

1. Mr. Lambert's leave sought to appeal against the Ruling/Decision as recorded in paragraph 1 above. How can that document be examined by Counsel for the Plaintiff/Respondent if it is not exhibited and seen by him? He would have to refer to the very Ruling/Decision to answer the points raised by Mr. Lambert.

2. Mr. Lambert has exhibited the Drawn-Up Order. This is deemed to have arisen from the Ruling/Decision, but is not drawn-up by the Court. Mr. Lambert's complaint is against what the Court has done in giving the Ruling/Decision it has reached. It will be absurd to think that the complaint is against the drawn-up order.

3. Mr. Lambert has supplied the Court with authority for the submission that "it is not necessary to exhibit in an affidavit the entire ruling of this Court for which leave is sought to be appealed against". He refers to Halsbury's Laws of England (3rd Edition) Vol. 15 page 335 where it is stated that:

"The Court is entitled to look at its own records and proceedings before it on any matter and take notice of their contents although they may not be formally brought before the Court by the parties".

There is no dispute whatsoever on this point of practice, where Judicial notice is concerned. What I do hold firmly though, is that the authority here, dealing with Judicial Notice, has no relevance whatsoever on the issue in dispute, and is in no way authority for the submission that a Decision/Ruling being appealed against need not be exhibited. My taking judicial notice of the records does not compensate for Counsel on the other side not to be served with the document. My taking judicial [p.57] notice of the records does not compensate for Counsel on the other side not to be served with the document.

I hold very firmly that Counsel for the Plaintiff/Respondent should be served with the Ruling/Decision complained of, and this is done by first exhibiting the Ruling/Decision.

I have no doubt that leave could have been granted if the application were made to file a supplemental affidavit to which the Ruling/Decision could have been exhibited and served on Counsel for the Plaintiff/Respondent.

In the absence of that on the strength of Mr. Tejan-Cole's objection and submission, and on my own analysis, I uphold the objection and strike out the Defendants/Applicant's Notice of Motion.

Signed: J/A Kamanda

7 June 2007" (emphasis added)

Subsequently, Mr. Lambert drew up and filed the following Order pursuant to the said Ruling:

"DATED THE 8TH DA Y OF JUNE 2007

UPON READING the Notice of Motion dated 10th day of May 2007 together with the affidavit in support thereto AND UPON HEARING P. LAMBERT ESQ of Counsel of the Defendants/Applicants herein and N.D. TEJAN-COLE of Counsel for the Plaintiff/Respondent

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED as follows:

1. I uphold the objection and strike out the Defendants/Applicants Notice of Motion

SIGNED: BY THE COURT M&R

Being dissatisfied, the Defendants/Applicants instructed their Counsel to appeal against the said Ruling. Mr. Lambert then applied to the Trial Judge for leave to appeal against the above Ruling pursuant to Rule 10 of the Court of Appeal Rules 1985, and I shall now deal with Mr. Lambert's application before this Court.

Rule 10 (1) & (2) of the Rules of this Court read:

"10(1) Where an appeal lies by leave only any person desiring to appeal shall apply to the Court below or to the Court by Notice of Motion for leave within fourteen days from the date of the decision against which leave is sought.

[p.58]

"10(2) Whenever an application may be made to the Court below or to the Court it shall be made in the first instance to the Court below, but if the Court below refuses the application the applicant shall subject to the provisions of rule 11 (4) be entitled to have the application determined by the Court"

Mr. Lambert first applied to Kamanda, J.A for leave to appeal against the Learned Trial Judge's interlocutory order made on 2nd May 2007. His submission is that the Trial Judge refused/dismissed his application when, on 8th June 2007, he ruled:

"I uphold the objection and strike out the Defendants/Applicants Notice of Motion."

He argued further that he had complied with the Rules of this Court by first making his application to the High Court, before coming to this Court. He laid emphasis on those portions of the High Court proceedings before the Trial Judge appearing at pages 36 paragraph 2 up to page 37 of the Judge's Ruling, and submitted that he had introduced the subject matter of his application in his arguments before Kamanda, JA, and had thereby moved the Court, before Counsel for the Plaintiff/Respondent took his objection; that that objection was not a preliminary objection which could have resulted in the striking out of the Motion. He further stressed that there is no rule of law that in an application for leave to appeal, the full text of the Ruling intended to be appealed against should be exhibited with the application. In the circumstances, there was no obligation on the Defendants/Applicants to exhibit the full text of the said Ruling, particularly so, Counsel added, for the reasons given by the Learned Trial Judge. Therefore when the Judge ruled "I uphold the objection and strike out the Defendants/Applicants' Notice of Motion", striking out the Motion in these particular circumstances amounted to a refusal of his application by the trial Court, and he was therefore at liberty to make a fresh application before this Court.

Mr. Tejan-Cole on the other hand strongly disagreed with Mr. Lambert's submission. He stated that the High Court being a Court of Record is entitled to look at the Records of its proceedings at any time, more so where there is doubt as to the contents of its Record or where there are complaints of misdirection. He submitted that Mr. Lambert's complaint before the Trial Judge was one that could be described as a misdirection; that the circumstances in which a misdirection can arise include cases where the Judge has misconceives the issues, or has summarizes the evidence inadequately for one side or the other or has made a mistake in the law applicable to the issues in the case. He submitted that in the above circumstances, it is obligatory on the Applicant to make available the complete record of the proceedings leading to the particular complaint. In this present case, Mr. Tejan-Cole submitted, Counsel failed to make available the full Ruling despite indications from judge for him to do so; that it was because of Counsel's insistence that he was under no obligation to produce the Record of the full text of the ruling that his Motion was struck out. Mr. Tejan-Cole, finally submitted that the Learned Trial Judge's ruling was quite clear and when viewed within the prevailing arguments and [p.59] circumstances, the Learned Trial Judge meant to strike out the application, not merely refused it.

The question we have to determine therefore is: Was the application of 10th May 2007 for leave to appeal really heard and determined by Kamanda, J.A? And did the Learned Judge exercise his discretion on way or the other in the matter?

In other to answer those questions one has to look at the true meaning of Kamanda, JA's Order.

"I uphold the objection and strike out the Defendants/Applicants Notice of Motion."

In my opinion, what the learned Trial Judge was saying in summary, was that in his view, the application seeking leave to appeal against a Ruling/Decision ought to exhibit the full text of that Ruling/Decision; that a drawn-up order only, filed by Counsel relying on the Ruling, is not sufficient for an application of this nature, as it does not give an opportunity to Counsel opposing the application to examine said Ruling and counter the points that may be raised in argument by the Counsel for the Applicant. Since that had not been done, he could not entertain the application, as he felt an essential part on which the application is based is absent; he therefore felt, in my view, that the application was not properly before him. I suppose if Counsel has thereafter applied to the Learned Trial Judge for leave to produce his Ruling/Decision in a Supplemental Affidavit he would have entertained and determined the application. Indeed at paragraph 3 of Exhibit ''J'' the Learned Trial Judge had this to say:

"I have no doubt that leave could have been granted if the application were made to file a Supplemental Affidavit to which the Ruling/Decision could have been exhibited and served on Counsel for the Plaintiff/Respondent. In the absence of that and on the strength of Mr. Tejan-Cole's submissions and on my own analysis, I uphold the objection and strike out the Defendants/Applicants' Notice of Motion" (Emphasis added)

It appears from reading the Ruling/Decision of the Learned Trial Judge, he did not go into the merits of the application before him. Rule 10(2), in our view gives a condition precedent to an application to this Court for leave, and that condition, in our view, is that the merits of the application for leave ought to be considered by the Court below and if that Court rightly or wrongly refuses the application after examining the merits, an application can be made to this Court for such leave.

We are confronted in this instant case, with an application for leave against a Decision of a lower Court, when that Court has not had the opportunity of examining the merits of such application and making a pronouncement on it.

We find, for this reason, that application in this Court before us is premature. We accordingly dismiss it. The costs of this application will be costs in the cause.

IN THE HIGH COURT OF SIERRA LEONE

BETWEEN:

AND

OKEKY FISHING CO. LTD — DEFENDANT

3) An order that the cost of this Application be costs in the Appeal"

The Motion is supported by the Affidavits of the Applicant and his Solicitor Henry H. Sandy both sworn to on 7th day of June 2008 and the application is made pursuant to Rule 27 of the Court of Appeal Rules 1985. Counsel relies particularly on paragraphs, 3, 4, 5, 6, of the Affidavit of Hamid Mojoe Kamara and paragraphs 8, 10, and 11 of that of Henry H. Sandy.

The Applicant, stated in his Affidavit deposed that he was the Plaintiff in the High Court above, and exhibited to the said affidavit is a ruling of the High Court in the matter, Exhibit "HMK1, and a Record Book of Income and Expenditure Exhibit HHK 2. In "HHK1, the Trial Judge, had ruled that the Photostat copy of the Record Book of Income and Expenditure (Exh. HHK2) was admissible in evidence in the trial before the court. However, during the trial, this exhibit was not tendered in evidence.

Mr. Halloway, for the Applicant submitted that this Court should allow the Applicant to adduce new evidence in the form of this Record Book of Income and Expenditure in support of his appeal and that such an order would further the ends of justice. He relied on Rule 27 of the Court of Appeal Rules as the basis for the first order prayed for on the motion, and that Rules 31 & 32 referred to on the Motion papers are in aid of the second [p.17] Order prayed for above. He submitted that because of the absence of the evidence contained in the Record Book of Income and Expenditure, there was insufficient evidence before the Trial Judge to persuade him to come to a different conclusion. He stressed that in all the circumstances of the case this new evidence ought to be considered by the Court.

Mr. Shears-Moses for the Respondent strongly opposed the application. He submitted that the three requirements necessary to invoke Rule 27 have not been met; that in order to benefit from Rule 27, the applicant must show:

1. That the evidence sought to be adduced was unavailable at the time of the trial;

2. That the evidence is such that if available at the trial, it would have a substantial effect on the outcome of the case; and

3. That the evidence is credible.

He submitted that the evidence sought to be used and tendered was available at the time of the trial before the Learned Trial Judge. To substantiate his submission, Mr. Shears-Moses referred to the Ruling (Exh. "HHK1") at page 19 of the Records where the Judge in his ruling stated that he had perused the Record Book. He also relied on the Ruling of Gelaga-King, J.A, in the case of Aiah Momoh v Sahr Samuel Nyandemoh, Misc. App.1/2004 at page 2, where the Learned Justice of Appeal cited the dictum of Lord Denning in the case of Ladd v. Marshall 1954 3 All ER 745 at p. 748, to emphasized the point that the Court must be satisfied that the evidence was unavailable at the time of the trial. In his further submissions, Counsel questioned the propriety of the application before the Court; he submitted that Rules 31 & 32 do not affect evidence that is not before the Court; that the second limb of the application is no different from the first. He concluded that what is being sought by the present application is to protract litigation contrary to the principle of law that there must be an end to litigation. In these circumstances, he concluded, the applicant cannot avail himself of Rules 31 & 32. He urged us to refuse the application with consequential orders.

Mr. Halloway, asked us to distinguish the case Aiah Momoh v Nyandemoh from the present application, in that in the present application, the evidence was not available to the Court in the sense that the Judge was unable to see and assess the contents of the Record Book. In the Momoh & Nyandemoh case, the evidence was not available, and there was nothing to show that the evidence could not have been obtained with reasonable diligence for use at the trail. He submitted that in the present case the absence of the evidence had an effect on the outcome of the case, namely the Judge was unable to assess the quantum of Special damages. He therefore stressed that the Court should use its extensive powers to make the Orders prayed for, in furtherance of the interest of justice.

Rule 27 of the Court of Appeal Rules reads:

"27. It is not open as of right to any party to an appeal to adduce new evidence in support of his original case; but for the furtherance of justice, the Court may, where it thinks fit, [p.18] allow or require new evidence to be adduced. Such evidence shall be either by oral examination in Court or by affidavit or by deposition taken before an examiner or commissioner as the Court may direct, A party may, by leave of the Court allege any facts essential to the issue that have come to his knowledge after the decision of the Court below and adduce evidence in support of such allegations.

It is quite clear from the above Rule that it is not a matter of right that a party to an appeal can invoke the Rule so as to adduce new/fresh evidence in support of his original case. However, the Rule empowers this Court with discretion, where it thinks fit, and in furtherance of justice, to allow new/fresh evidence to be adduced on appeal. Nevertheless such discretion must only be exercised based on settled principles, not arbitrarily. The principles on which Courts could exercise their discretion judicially have been deliberated on in a number of cases over the years in this jurisdiction and elsewhere. In well known case of Brown v Dunn {1919} A.C. 373, Lord Loreburn L.C, laid down the guidelines to be observed in the exercise of judicial discretion when he said in his dictum at page 374 thereof:

"When a litigant has obtained a judgment in a court of justice, whether it be a county court or one of the High Court, he is by law entitled not to be deprived of that judgment without very good grounds; and where (as in this case) the ground is the alleged discovery of new evidence, it must at least be such as is presumably to be believed, and if believed would be conclusive" (emphasis added)

It was thought that the use of the word "conclusive" in the above case was too strong; the modern view therefore which is now generally accepted and applied in modern cases is that which was expressed by Lord Shaw in his speech, which is, to the effect, that the evidence should be such as is presumably to be believed. (emphasis added)

In Ladd V Marshall 19 54 3 ALL ER 745 Lord Denning, in the Court of Appeal stated the principles to be applied quite clearly when he said:

"In order to justify the reception of fresh evidence or a new trial, three conditions must be fulfilled: first, it must be shown that the evidence could not have been obtained with reasonable diligence for use at the trial; second, the evidence must be such that, if given, it would probably have an important influence on the result of the case, although it need not be decisive; third, the evidence must be such as is presumably to be believed, or in other words, it must be apparently credible, although it need not be incontrovertible." (emphasis added).

In the present application, it is very clear that the first condition, which is mandatory, has not been satisfied. The Plaintiff/Applicant has failed to show by his Affidavit evidence that the Record Book of Income and Expenditure could not have been obtained with reasonable diligence for use at the trial; there is clear indication in the Applicant's Affidavit and that of his Solicitor that the evidence, the Record Book of Income and [p.19] Expenditure, was available at the time of the trial, and even if not immediately available at the precise moment it was required, it could have been obtained with reasonable diligence for use at the trial.

In support of the above conclusion, I will here refer to the Affidavits in support of the application. The Applicant in his Affidavit had this to say at paragraphs 4, 5, 6, and 8 and in relation to the absence of the evidence at the trial:

"3) That when I was led in evidence in chief, Counsel for the Defendant/Respondent herein objected to me tendering a Photostat copy of the Record Book of Income and Expenditure of the Rural Artisenal Fishing Union.

4) That the original of the Record Book of Income and Expenditure of the Rural Artisenal Fishing Union was not then in my possession in Court.

5) That Defense Counsel objected to me tendering the copy of the Record Book of Income and Expenditure of the Rural Artisenal Fishing Union, but the late presiding Judge Hon. Justice A. B. Raschid, after having heard arguments from counsel of (sic) the Respondent and Counsel for the Appellant/Applicant herein, reserved his ruling on the question whether the Photostat copy can be admitted in evidence.

6) That the late Judge on the 15th June 2004 ruled that the Photostat copy was admissible in evidence, ……."

7) ……

8) That regrettably and to my detriment, my Counsel did not tender in evidence the Photostat copy of the Record Book of Income and Expenditure which the late learned Judge ruled was admissible in evidence,"

Mr, Henry H. Sanely who was Counsel and Solicitor for the Appellant/Applicant in the High Court matter, in his Affidavit in support of the Applicant's applicant, deposed at paragraphs 8, 10 and 11 as follows:

"8. that I inadvertently omitted to tender in evidence the said Record Book of Income and Expenditure;

10. that in his own words the Judge said "I have carefully perused the Record,"

11. That the Court was therefore aware of the Record Book;"

The above clearly shows that the Record Book sought to be tendered was available at the time of the trial; that it is not new or fresh evidence that surfaced after the trial. For this reason, I hold that the first condition has not been satisfied.

It is equally clear that the second condition has not been satisfied. The second condition is that the evidence must be such that, if given, it would probably have an important influence on the result of the case, although it need not be decisive.

A careful perusal of the Record Book shows that it was prepared by the Appellant/Applicant; that it was prepared by him on behalf of the Artisanal Fishing Union. Would the Trial Judge have been satisfied that the content of the Record Book of Income and Expenditure was sufficient proof of the Applicant's claim for Special damages, having regard to the fact that the Record Book was prepared by the Appellant/Applicant himself for the purpose of the trial? And could it be said that the contents of the Record Book reflected an accurate and true statement of the Applicant's Income and Expenditure so as to satisfy the principle of law that special damages must be strictly proved? The answer to that question is no. There is nothing to show that if the evidence had been given at the trial, it would probably have had an important influence on the outcome of the case; all these matters and more would have been considered by the Judge in deciding the question of the quantum of damages, which I presume was the purpose for which the Record Book was to be tendered. The Learned Trial Judge in his Ruling in dealing with the evidence sought to be adduced ("Exhibit HHK 2"), had this to say in so far as credibility of the document is concerned:

"……..I have carefully perused the Record Book…… In my view the maker of a document or someone who has custody of the document is eligible to tender it in evidence. The weight to be attached (sic) to produce a document is the Judge to decide. In the light of the above, I will admit it in evidence."

In other words although the Book can be admitted in evidence by the Appellant/Applicant as the maker thereof, the weight to be attached to the Book and its contents was for the Judge to determine; meaning that the admission of the Record Book alone is not in itself incontrovertible evidence of proof of what it is intended to establish in the case. Therefore it cannot be said that the Record Book, even if admitted, would probably have had an important influence on the outcome of the case.

Thirdly, even if the Record Book was accepted in evidence, the next question to consider will be: Is the evidence contained in the Record Book likely to be believed taking into consideration that it was prepared by one of the parties to the litigation and prepared on behalf of the Artisanal Fishing Union who are not parties to this action? In other words, is the evidence "apparently credible." No other witness gave evidence for the Appellant/Applicant although it is said that he brought the action on behalf of the Artisanal Fishing Union. I am not here saying that his evidence alone would not have been sufficient to persuade the Trial Judge, what I am saying is that it would have been helpful and would have lent more credibility if another member of the Union had given evidence in the matter in addition to the Appellant/Applicant. In this respect also I find the third condition not satisfied.

In my Judgment therefore, in the light of the foregoing, this application is dismissed.

The Registrar is hereby ordered to fix a date for the hearing for the substantive appeal.

[p.21]

The costs of the application will be costs in the cause.

D.G. THOMPSON FOR THE APPELLANT

DELIVERED THE 22TH DAY OF MAY 2008

JUDGMENT

S.A. ADEMOSU, J.A.

This is an Appeal by the Appellant against the judgment of the Hon. Mr. Justice R.A. Shuster before whom he was indicted for the offences of

1. Causing grievous bodily harm with intent. Contrary to Section 18 of the Offences against the Person Act 1861

2. Wounding with intent. Contrary to Sections 18 of the offences against the Person Act 1861

[p.130]

3. Wounding. Contrary to Section 20 of the Offences against the Person Act 1861.

On the 8th of November, 2005 the Appellant was convicted of the offence of Causing grievous bodily harm with intent and sentenced to 8 years imprisonment.

The Appellant being dissatisfied with the conviction on the 25th of November, 2005 filed a Notice of Appeal for leave to appeal against sentence and the Grounds of Appeal reads as follows.

That on the facts of the case the sentence was too severe.

On the same date another Notice of Appeal for leave to Appeal against conviction was filed on behalf of the Appellant. The Grounds stated are as follows:—

1. The Learned Trial Judge failed to consider the defence of alibi adequately or at all.

2. There was no evidence to support the verdict.

3. That the verdict is unreasonable and cannot be supported having regard to the evidence.

D.G. Thompson Esq., for the Appellant argued Ground 1 separately and Ground 2 and 3 together. In arguing Ground 1 he referred to the evidence of DW1 and 2 who were the accused/appellant himself and his sister Umar Safu Mahoi. The evidence of DW1 the appellant as far as relevant is to the effect that the complainant Mrs. Kadiatu Weston is her sister-in-law. That on the material day 15-4-03 at about 3 p.m. he saw one Joseph Beya and about 9 others coming towards his shop armed with stones and that Yusufu Mahoi was among them. By the way Yusufu Mahoi is the complainant's husband and he was P.W.2. Appellant further told the court that the group was throwing stones at the provision shop and damaged his drinks. According to the Appellant he was stabbed with a bottle by a boy. He said his sister came to his rescue. That she removed his under vest to stop the blood and from, there got a taxi which took him to the Police Station.

As regards the time of the alleged incident the Appellant is recorded as saying under cross-examination as follows:—

"about three o'clock. I have a big clock in the shop. I did not look at the time. I was stab(sic) but I saw it at the clock (Q) It was three o'clock. (A1) by the wall clock I saw it.

This is briefly the Appellant Testimony in the Lower Court.

Turning to the testimony of DW2 — Umar Safu Mahoi. The witness told the court inter alia that the appellant was her brother and the complainant Mrs. Weston was her sister-in-law. She remembered 15-4-03. She was at 2A Fanna Street Allen Town, something happened at about 3 O'clock. She was sitting when a group of people went towards her with stones and using abusive language. That the group threw stones inside the Appellant's Bar. She said the Appellant told her not to run and the appellant went along the street and then went to the Police Station to make a report. From there Maribi Vamboy took a bottle and his Appellant on the head with it. That she went along the junction to help the Appellant by taking his vest to tie his head.

In cross-examination she said she was not aware of any other incident. She stayed with the Appellant for 12 years and the Appellant was the one who took care of her during the period.

She confessed that she could not tell the exact time of the alleged incident. Mr. Thompson referred to the evidence of P.W.1 and P.W.2 who were the complainant. Mrs. Kadiatu Weston and her husband Yusufu Mahoi respectively. He submitted that the time of the incident alleged by them was 6 p.m. or thereabout and in his opinion this evidence is substantiated by Exhibit “E” indicates that the alleged incident was at about 1745 hrs and not 6 p.m. as canvassed by Mr. Thompson. He submitted that the evidence before the Lower Court is not strong to support the conviction and that it is unsafe to base the judgment on He then invited the court to allow the Appeal and quash the conviction.

Mr. Peacock for the Respondent on the other hand urged the court to dismiss the appeal and uphold the conviction. In support of the submission Mr. Peacock referred copiously to the evidence adduced which indicates that the Appellant was properly identified and there is no question of mistake identity.

In his judgment the Learned Trial Judge said inter alia.

"The Defendant puts forward as his sole defence, the defence of alibi. The defendant says that he was not at the scene of crime when it was said to have been [p.132] committed on the 15th April, 2003. As the prosecution has to prove his quilt so that I am sure of it, and the accused does not have to prove he was elsewhere at the time. On the Contrary the Prosecution must disprove the alibi"

Mr. Peacock for the Respondent contended that the Trial Judge stated the principles of law involved correctly. I agree with him. It is worthy to note that after quoting the law extensively on issue of identification, the Learned Trial Judge alluded quite rightly to a very important and pertinent point that the case before him involved close relatives and those parties had known each other for many years. He did all he could to spot light the evidence which weighed more with him.

I will add that the evidence before the court disclosed that the complainant Kadiatu Weston is the Appellant's sister-in-law whilst her husband- Yusufu Mahoi is the brother of the Appellant by the same father. These two people identified the Appellant. The Learned trial Judge indeed said recognition may be more reliable than identification of a stranger. He also referred to the quality of the identification evidence adduced. He alluded to the fact that those who identified the Appellant were long standing relatives.

I agree with Mr. Peacock that the Learned Trial Judge came to the right conclusion that the prosecution had proved its case beyond reasonable doubt before he rejected the defence of alibi. It is my view that this matter was a straight issue of fact.

The law is settled that the Court of Appeal should be reluctant to interfere with the judgment of the Lower Court in a case in which every issue was before the jury and in which the jury was properly directed. I derive support for this view in what Widgery L.J. said in R v Sean Cooper (1969) 53 Cr. App. R. 82. He stated inter alia." The court must recognize the advantage which a jury has in seeing and hearing the witnesses, and, if all the material was before the jury and the summing up was impeccable, this court should not lightly interfere. It is conceded that this was not a jury trial the principle enunciated by Learned Lord Justice is applicable in a case where the judge had the benefit of seeing and hearing the witnesses and there is no misdirection complained of by the Appellant. It is trite law that the Court of Appeal is always reluctant to differ from a trial judge on a finding of fact based on credibility of witnesses. It seems to me that the crux of the matter [p.133] hinges on the credibility of the witnesses. The learned trial judge saw and heard the witnesses coupled with the fact that he had the opportunity of watching the demeanour of the witnesses before him. The ascription of probative values to oral evidence is preeminently the duty of the judge. The learned trial judge gave his reasons for accepting the evidence of the prosecution. I am unable to see any justifiable grounds of complaint. In the circumstances I dismiss all the grounds of appeal as they are unmeritorious. I confirm the decision of the learned trial judge. As the complainant has lost one eye completely, I confirm the sentence. I cannot share the view that it is severe. The appeal fails and is dismissed accordingly.

The application, made pursuant to Rule 28 of the Court of Appeal Rules 1985, is supported by the Affidavit of Crispin Feio Edwards sworn on the 22nd day of November 2007, attached to which are five exhibits namely:

Exhibit CEF 1 — copy of the Certificate of the Order of the Court of Appeal;

Exhibit CEF 2 — copy of the Notice of Appeal to the Supreme Court;

Counsel for the Applicant relies on the entire contents of his Affidavit particularly on paragraphs 4 to 11, and more especially on paragraphs 6, 7, 10 and 12 thereof. He submitted that the purpose of the application is not to deny the Respondents of the fruits of their judgment, but that special circumstances, exists which make it necessary for the Applicant to apply for the Stay.

[p.62]

There is an Affidavit in Opposition sworn to by Alhaji Umaru M. Bah the Attorney of the 2nd Respondent exhibiting his Power of Attorney as Exhibit "A", a copy of the Judgment of the Court of Appeal as Exhibit "B"; copy of the High Court Order dated 3rd September 2002 ordering the sale of the property subject matter of this action as Exhibit "C".

BACKGROUND

A brief background of the case is that the 1st Respondent, Mrs. Josephine E. E. Mac-Thompson, having been appointed sole Administratrix of the Estate of John Jeremiah Thomas, applied to the High Court by Notice of Motion dated 19th September 2001, and obtained an Order to have the property at 21 ECOWAS Street Freetown, (subject matter of this application), sold by public auction or private Treaty pursuant to section 21 of the Administration of Estates Act Cap 45 of the Laws of Sierra Leone.

On the 31st day of January 2003, the 1st Respondent instituted an action in the High Court against the Appellant/Application, seeking, inter alia, an Order for recovery of possession of the portion of the premises the Applicant occupied at 21 ECOWAS Street, damages for trespass, arrears of rent and an Injunction. The Appellant/Applicant in his defence admitted to being in occupation of the premises and doing business thereon for the past 15 years, having been put there by one Mackie. He has, therefore, during this time established goodwill in his business and employed about 20 workers; he denied being in arrears of rent and further asked to be given 5 (five years) within which to vacate the premises. In the meantime, the said property had been sold and conveyed to the 2nd Respondent by the Master & Registrar by a Conveyance dated 9th March 2004 pursuant to the Order of the High Court dated 19th October 2001 referred to above.

On 2nd day of November 2004, the High Court (Nylander, J) gave judgment to the effect that the 1st Respondent was entitled to possession of the property at 21 ECOWAS Street, on condition that in the event of a sale of the property, Appellant/Applicant should negotiate for the purchase of the property and be given first option to purchase same, and it is only when negotiations for such a sale fell through that the Appellant/Applicant was ordered to vacate the property.

On 31st December 2004 the Appellant/Applicant took out a motion seeking (a) Specific Performance of the sale of 21 ECOWAS Street, and cancellation on the 2nd Respondent's Conveyance of 9th March 2004. On 28th September 2005, the Hon. Mr. Justice Nylander, delivering the ruling of the Court ordered that the 2nd Respondent's Conveyance be cancelled and the Appellant/Applicant given first option to purchase the property in compliance with his Order of 2nd November 2004.

The Respondents, being dissatisfied with the High Court Judgment appealed to the Court of Appeal. During the course of arguments in the Court of Appeal, the 2nd Respondent, who was not a party to the original action in the High Court, was granted leave to be joined as a party and was represented by Counsel. On the 1st November 2007, the Court of Appeal gave Judgment in favour of the Respondents and further ordered the 2nd Respondent's Conveyance to be re-instated in the record Books of Conveyances. The Court of Appeal further confirmed [p.63] the High Court judgment regarding the 1st Respondent entitlement to possession of the property at 21 ECOWAS Street Freetown. The Appellant/Applicant being dissatisfied with the Court of Appeal Judgment filed a Notice of appeal dated 19th November 2001 to the Supreme Court.

It is against this background that the Applicant has now applied to this Court for an Order for Stay of Execution.

Mr. E. E. C. Shears-Moses of Counsel for the Appellant/Applicant, relied on the Affidavit in support particularly paragraphs 6, 7, 8,9 and 12 of the said Affidavit to show that there are special circumstances why a Stay should be granted. He submitted that the Applicant has occupied and carried on business in the premises for over 15 years thus building an enormous amount of goodwill; that "a sudden movement will cripple his business and necessitate the dismissal of some 20 workers thereby increasing unemployment. He referred to the Applicant's Notice of appeal filed in the Supreme Court which said would be rendered nugatory if a Stay is not granted. Referring to paragraph 12 of the Affidavit in support Counsel submitted that that by the time the appeal is disposed of in either way, the applicant would have made adequate arrangement for alternative business premises in the vicinity so as to maintain goodwill and save the business from collapse; also that "should the appeal succeed, it will create difficulty for the parties to start moving out and in." In called in aid the unreported cases of; African Tokeh Village v John Obey Development Co. Ltd Misc. App. 2/94, C.A.

Mr. Tejan-Cole referring to Rule 38 of the Court of Appeal Rules submitted that an appeal does not operate as a Stay of Execution; that from 9th March 2004 when the 2nd Respondent bought the premises, he became the owner/lessor thereof and consequently entitled to rent from the occupants. He referred to paragraph 6 of the Affidavit in Opposition and submitted that since 2001 the Applicant has occupied the premises rent free in sense the Respondent has not received any rents from the Applicant for the premises. He submitted further that since the Respondent's purchase of the property in 2004, he had not been given vacant possession of it. He urged the Court to dismiss the application and to give the Respondent vacant possession of the premises as no special circumstances have been given to warrant the granting of a Stay of Execution.

It has been held in numerous cases in our jurisdiction and elsewhere that the Court's power to grant a Stay of Execution is entirely discretionary and the legal basis for the exercise of this discretion is that the Applicant must establish that there are special or exceptional circumstances justifying the grant of a Stay. Equally, it is also well established that the filing a Notice of Appeal does not operate as a Stay of Execution no matter how meritorious the grounds of appeal may be (see Rule 28 Court of Appeal Rules 1985). It is left therefore for the party requiring a Stay of Execution pending an appeal to show special or exceptional circumstances justifying the grant of a Stay. In this regard the onus is on the Applicant to demonstrate that such special or exceptional circumstances exist for the Court to exercise its discretion in his favour. In considering the circumstances relied on by an applicant for a Stay of Execution, we call in aid the decision in the unreported case of John Michael v. Adnan Abess Misc. App. 7/96 that,

"It is for this Court to determine what circumstances are special. It will look at all the facts and circumstances and decide whether or not they are so far above the usual and normal run of things to the extent of making it absolutely necessary and incumbent on it, in the interest of justice to intervene and stay proceedings."

Following from the above, it now remains for us to consider whether the Appellant/Applicant in this case has shown the requisite evidence of special circumstances in his Affidavit for this Court to be able to exercise its discretion in his favour, and in doing so we will look at all the facts and circumstances and decide whether or not they are so far above the usual and normal run of things....

We are told that the Applicant has been doing business in the premises for over 15 years, and he says a sudden move will cripple his business; meaning if a Stay is not granted he will be required to close his business and give up the property. We note from the Judgment of the Court of Appeal, Exhibit "B", in the Affidavit in Opposition, that the action giving rise to this application commenced by Writ of Summons dated 31st January 2003, that the action was for recovery of possession of the property at 21 ECOWAS Street Freetown. Since that time the Applicant must have known that there is a likelihood that he would be required to deliver up possession of the property, especially so in the light of the Judgment of the High Court of 2nd September 2004 declaring that the 1st Respondent is entitled to take possession of the property at 21 ECOWAS Street. The Applicant's basis for occupying the premises has not been disclosed in the Affidavit evidence; the Affidavit is vague on this point. Suffice it to say that there is no dispute that the Applicant is still occupying the premises. Furthermore the Affidavit in support of the application has not stated whether the Applicant has been paying rent for his occupation, and if so, to whom such rents were or are being paid. At paragraph 12 of his Affidavit, Counsel for the Applicant merely deposed that the Applicant informed him "that he will pay all the rents demanded from him", giving credence to the allegation that he has not been paying rent.

This Court has on a number of occasions emphasized that when a party makes an Affidavit in Support of an application, the affidavit must contain all the relevant facts that the party relies on, including sufficient background information, to assist the Court to come to a fair conclusion of the matter before it. Regrettably the Affidavit in support in this present case is vague in the salient facts as stated above.

Moreover as recently as November 2007, when Counsel for the 2nd Respondent wrote, Exh. CFE 3A, and CEF 3C, to the Applicant's Solicitor referring to the Applicant's occupation of the premises rent free, there was no corresponding answer from the Applicant's Solicitor to say whether or not the Applicant was paying for the premises. If this is the case then this Court cannot be seen to grant a Stay of Execution which is intended merely to prolong the applicant's occupation of the premises. The fact that the Applicant has doing business on the premises for 15 years and the loss of goodwill, can in other circumstances, where the equities are equal, be considered as special circumstance, but not in this case; similarly the laying off of 20 workers cannot amount to special circumstances. It has been held by this Court that moral, social, or political consideration do not and ought not to form the basis of the exercise of the Court's discretion to grant or refuse a Stay of Execution of an Order of the Court. We [p.65] are of the view that the laying off of 20 workers does not amount to special or exceptional circumstances in this case.

The Applicant contended in his application that he has substantial grounds of appeal which have very good chances of success in the Supreme Court, and in the event of this happening he would encounter great difficulty in moving into the premises having moved out if a Stay were refused. He has also said that by the time the appeal comes up for hearing, a time which he estimated to be five (5) years the Applicant would have found alternative premises within the vicinity. While we are prohibited from discussing the grounds of appeal, nevertheless we are legally required to consider the chances of it success. There is no suggestion that these grounds appeal contains important questions of law which in more appropriate cases may amount to Special circumstances. There is no dispute that the property in question belongs to the Respondents. The High Court Judgment confirmed this when the trial Judge gave possession of the premised to the 1st Respondent. The subject matter of the action, that is, the property in this case, is a solid structure which is not likely to disappear or be destroyed. If the appeal succeeds the Court always has the power to Order that possession of the property to be given to the Applicant.

In the light of the finding of facts before us and the conclusion of the trial Judge on the status of the premises, it will be difficulty to see the special circumstances that exist to justify a Stay of Execution, especially as it appears, that from the facts, the Applicant has no legal or equitable right over the property other than his occupation. This Court would be doing an injustice to a successful litigant if it is to grant this application. Accordingly, a Stay of Execution is refused and the application dismissed with costs to be taxed if not agreed.

A.F. SERRY-KAMAL, ESQ, FOR THE RESPONDENT

DELIVERED ON 20TH DAY OF JUNE 2008.

JUDGEMENT:

TEJAN JALLOH, J.S.C.

The present appellant was the defendant in the High Court where he was sued by the present respondent for:—

1. Recovery of possession of premises known as 18 Sani Abacha Street, Freetown.

2. Mesue profits at the rate of U$ 200,000 per annum from the 1st day of January 2002 until possession is yielded up.

3. Interest there on at such rate as the court shall allow.

The Defendant/Appellant filed a defence and Counterclaim. For the purposes of this appeal it is only the Counterclaim that is important. It is a claim for specific performance of an agreement in 1998 to buy from the Plaintiff/Respondent part of S.C.O.A. property more particularly delineated on Survey Plan LS 2922/95 dated 29th of December, 1995, hereinafter referred to as the property) initially at a price of U$ 100,000.00. (One Hundred Thousand U.S. Dollars). The present appeal is against this Counterclaim, which was dismissed on the 21st day of October 2005 by Honourable Mr. Justice S.A. Ademosu. The Defendant/Appellant being dissatisfied with the decision filed four grounds of appeal which are as follows:

1. The learned trial Judge misdirected himself when he held inter alia as follows:—

in that the learned Trial Judge failed to consider or adequately consider Exhibits A written by the Plaintiff's Solicitors dated 24th July, 2002, wherein the said Solicitors wrote to the Defendant requesting him to collect the sum of U$ 130,000.00 which said sum included the U$ 120,000.00 being the agreed purchase price for the property, the subject matter of the Defendant's Counterclaim".

2. The learned Trial Judge misdirected himself when he held as follows:—

"The general principle of law is that he who asserts must prove. The onus is on the Defendant to prove that the signature in Exhibit L is that of the Plaintiff. This burden the Defendant did not discharge. Rather than discharging it I had been called upon to compare the signature of Exhibit L with other signatures on the Exhibit tendered before me "having regard to the fact that the Defendant gave evidence during the course of the trial that he was familiar with the handwriting of the Plaintiff and that he had received receipts (including those tendered at the trial) signed by the Plaintiff and was therefore in a position to and did compare the [p.36] signature of the 'Plaintiff with that set out in" Exhibit L thereby discharging the onus on him to prove that the said signature on Exhibit L was that of the Plaintiff.

3. The learned Trial Judge misdirected himself when he held that it was not in dispute inter alia that:—

"That since 25.2.1 when the Plaintiff offered to refund the Defendant's money to him is a clear manifestation of the Plaintiff s disinterestedness in the purported contract of sale".

in that there was documentary evidence before the learned Trial Judge in the form of Exhibit E15, being a receipt in the sum ofU$60,000.00 representing the balance of the purchase price of U$ 120,000.00 dated the 20th of April 2001 and signed by the Plaintiff himself thereby failing to properly evaluate the evidence before him.

4. The Judgment of the Court, in respect of the Defendant's Counterclaim is against the weight of the evidence adduced before the learned Trial Judge.

Mr. Berthan Macaulay Junior for the Appellant argued grounds 2, 3, 1 and 4 together. He drew the Court's attention to the judgment of the learned Trial Judge at Page 80 line 26 where the learned Trial Judge said:

"The Plaintiff's explanation about the U$60, 000.00 received from the Defendant by his sons is that he said the Defendant demanded a receipt which he gave to him and the receipt in question was written by the Defendant's Secretary. I note that this piece of evidence was not denied by the Defendant. In my opinion, the said receipt is one which the Defendant is using as his trump card. I now refer to Exhibit 12 for U$ 60,000.00 dated 25.2.01 back of which reads:

Grantee to pay on behalf of Umaru and M.B. Barrie the sum of Sixty Thousand U$ Dollars U$ 60,000.00

[p.37]

It is my view that the picture or story is incomplete if I leave out other salient points raised by the learned Trial Judge as regards another receipt which is Exhibit 15 for the sum of U$ 60,000,00 dated 20.4.01 and the analysis of the Plaintiff's case as he perceived and evaluated it.

The learned Trial Judge further said as follows:—

"In my own opinion the endorsement at the back of Exhibit E12 is a clear indication that the Plaintiff offered to refund the money his two sons took from the Defendant. It cannot be taken as an endorsement of the sons' plan to sell the property. I think it is important to note that there are certain facts that are not in dispute in the case.

Among them are:

1. The plaintiff went to Guinea after the 29th April, 1992 Coup detat and finally returned to Sierra Leone in year 2000.

2. That whilst in Guinea he gave his two sons Umaru Sanu Barrie and Borbor Sanu Barrie a Power of Attorney.

Exhibit D refers:

It is patently clear that Plaintiff did not clothe his sons with authority to sell his property at 18, Sani Abacha Street formerly known as 18, Kissy Street, Freetown.

3. That since 25. 2.01 when Plaintiff offered to refund the Defendant's money to him this is a clear manifestation of Plaintiff's disinterestedness in the purported contract of sale.

I pause here to say that Counsel for the Appellant attacked these findings of the learned Trial Judge and referred to the Exhibit L, which appears to be the main stay and trump card on which he hinges the claim for specific performance because it is there it is alleged that the purchase price should be increased to U$ 120,000.00, but the learned Trial Judge has rightly considered this letter as well as the oral testimony of the Plaintiff/Respondent as to the authenticity of Exhibit L coupled with the fact that the Plaintiff/Respondent strongly denied being the author of the signature on Exhibit L dated 11.1.96, when the Plaintiff/Respondent was resident in Guinea. It is beyond argument that the Respondent is an illiterate, who cannot read or write, but can only append his signature.

There is no doubt that the Respondent's sons took money from the Appellant but there is evidence which the learned Trial Judge accepted, that the Respondent disowned the letter and denied authorizing any person to write it. He went further to offer to refund the money taken by his sons. I have asked myself the question that taking all the circumstances into consideration after the Respondent had returned to Sierra Leone whether he agreed to sell this property to the Appellant. I see no evidence of that on the record.

Mr. Berthan Macaulay Junior referred to the evidence -in-chief of the Appellant at Page 59 of the records which reads as follows:—

"Whilst the Plaintiff was in the Republic of Guinea he sent two of his sons namely, M.B. and Umaru. M.B. is in Court. He sent them to me that if I wanted to buy the property he needed to pay some debt in Guinea. I told them that if they wanted the money I would give them provided the sell the place to me (emphasis mine). They told me that they would go and discuss it with the Plaintiff and come back to me. They went away and subsequently came back.

They asked me how much I would pay for the place (emphasis mine). I told them that I would not pay more then U$100, 000.00 for the place. They went away and came later to say that the Plaintiff had agreed to accept that amount, but would like me to give him some of the money. I gave them at first the sum of U$60,000.00. The Conveyance in respect of the purchase was prepared by Jesse Gooding Esq. They collected the U$60,000.00 and the Conveyance was given to them to take it to the plaintiff etc.

It is trite law that the essential basis of a legally enforceable contract is an agreement between two or more persons. From the Viva voce evidence of the Appellant it was he who said he would not pay more that U$1,000,000.00 as the: purchase price of the property and not the Respondent. This is, therefore, clearly a case of an offer to receive an offer. Such an offer is merely a preliminary step in the formation of an agreement. No purported "acceptance of it can result in genuine agreement between the parties". I take judicial notice of the fact that in a case of sale of property it is the owner of the property who puts the property out for sale and who should dictate the selling price. According to the Appellant it was he who told them how much he was to pay for the place. This sounds to me like it was the children who were finding a way to take [p.39] money from the Appellant. The Power of Attorney "given to them did not authorize or empower them to sell any property for that matter. There is no evidence that the Conveyance prepared by Jesse Gooding Esq. was upon the instructions of the Respondent and when it was taken to the Respondent he refused to execute it. Another point one should not lose sight of is that the Respondent can not be bound in law by any misrepresentation made by his sons to the Appellant.

Mr. Serry-Kamal maintained there was no enforceable concluded contract. As regards Exhibit L he submitted that this is a case in which the provisions of Illiterates Protection Act Cap. 104 can be invoked because of lack of compliance with the Act as the preparer of the document did not sign it. The exact general effect of such non-compliance is that the document is not rendered void in the strict sense, as the illiterate can rely on it but it is unenforceable against the illiterate. The effect of this is that the Appellant cannot force or tie the Respondent to a document he denied signing.

Berthan Macaulay Jnr., contended that the learned Trial Judge was wrong in saying that the Appellant should have called a handwriting expert to prove the signature on Exhibit L. He submitted that the signature can also be proved by non-experts including the Appellant. He derived support for this view in Philipson on evidence 11th Edition paragraph 1317 at Page 527528. In this Appeal, the Appellant would want the Court to believe that the signature on Exhibit L was that of the Respondent whilst the Respondent strongly denied that it was his own. This is Oath against Oath. The learned Trial Judge formed his opinion by comparing the handwriting alleged to be that of the Respondent. He pointed out the dissimilarities between the signatures on the receipt signed by the Respondents and the signature on Exhibit L. before he came to the conclusion that the signature on Exhibit L could not be that of the Respondent. In our view, the course pursued by the learned Trial Judge was proper in the circumstances. I am of the view that the reasoning of the learned Trial Judge was sound in the circumstances and no argument of any substance has been addressed to us to disparage those conclusions. We have observed that the authorities relied upon in support of grounds 1 and 2 were the same as those canvassed before the Court below. We have also considered the cases referred to by Counsel for the Appellant, but we do not think that they assist the Appellant on the fact before the Court likewise the additional evidence, which consists of documents which were apparently available during the course of the trial in the Court below. I wish to add that the application made for additional evidence was misconceived. Any application of that nature should only be made in special circumstances, where the admission of it will help the cause of justice and its rejection could cause a miscarriage of [p.40] justice. I opine that there is no such situation in this matter. The decisive consideration in this type of transaction is the intention of the parties. Were the parties ever ad idem on the issue of selling and buying of the property? There is one golden rule which is of very general application, namely, that the law does not impute an intention to enter into legal relationships where the circumstances and the conduct of the parties negative any intention of the kind; see Booker v Palmer (1942) 2 ALL. E.R. 674 per Lord Green M.R. where the principle was emphasized.

In this appeal effort has been made by Counsel for the Appellant, to impugn the learned Trial Judge's decision on the ground that it is against the weight of the evidence. Counsel's arguments in this connection, however, have been quite unconvincing and as we have already indicated, we find the learned Trial Judge's decision amply warranted.

We are not persuaded that any ground for interference with the learned Trial Judge's conclusion has been established and accordingly we dismiss the appeal with Costs to the Respondent to be taxed.

RULING

This is a motion by Plaintiff/Applicant for an order of stay of execution of all subsequent proceedings of the judgment of the Honourable Mr. Justice A.B. Halloway dated 12th day of June 2008 be granted pending the hearing and determination of an appeal against the same in the Court of Appeal of Sierra Leone.

In support of the application is the affidavit of Hussein Abess Musa sworn on 8th day of July 2008 attached to it are exhibits HAM1-HAM18. Mr. Ngakui for the Plaintiff/Applicant told the court that the special circumstances relied upon are contained in paragraphs 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 and 14 of the affidavit. The averments in the aforementioned paragraphs are to the effect that the 2nd Defendant/Respondent was negotiating to lease the property subject-matter of this action to World Vision but the transaction only stalled by the injunctions granted by the Court. That application was made for stay of execution of the judgment was refused but the 2nd Defendant/Respondent was restrained from disposing of the property in question by way of sale until the appeal is heard and determined. See exhibit HAM13. It is further averred that the 2nd Defendant/Respondent has filed a motion for assessment of damages. That such assessment will [p.82] lead to monetary judgment and that it will be very difficult to recover from the 2nd Defendant/Respondent the money the deponent would have parted with should his appeal succeed. That if a stay is not granted and third party right or interest is vested in the property through the conduct of the 2nd Defendant/Respondent, it will be unjust for that third party interest to be affected adversely should the appeal succeed. Mr. Ngakui's contention is that there is a real probability that the appeal will succeed in the Court of Appeal. He urged the Court to exercise its unfettered discretion to grant a stay of execution.

The application is opposed by both Defendants/Respondents. The 2nd Defendant/Respondent filed an affidavit in opposition to which he attached several exhibits including the judgment of the lower Court. The two salient averments there are that the Deponent/2nd Defendant/Respondent had calculated the total loss incurred as a result of the injunction granted on the application of the Plaintiff/Appellant. He averred that this application for a stay of execution is an attempt to deprive him of the use and occupation of the property which the Court has found that he bought lawfully and regularly.

The law is well settled that if the application for a stay is opposed, the principle is that the application should not be granted unless irreparable injury might be done by refusing it. Chesler v Powell (1885) 1 T.L.R. 390.

In my view, this Court should confine itself to the issues properly raised before us and which are on the judgment already delivered to determine whether or not special circumstances have been shown. The sum total of acceptable evidence is that the subject matter of this action is a property situate at No.45 Signal Hill, Freetown. That the 2nd Defendant/Respondent was about to lease it to the World Vision for a few years. The question to be answered is that does the Plaintiff/Applicant stand the danger of his appeal becoming nugatory if he succeeds as Mr. Ngakui has contended? In support of this contention Mr. Ngakui relied on the ruling of this Court in the matter of Ibrahim Mansaray v Adama Manasaray, Civ. App. 31/81 delivered on 4th day of March 1982 where a stay of execution was granted. In that case there was an order transferring Real Property or an interest therein by Deed of Conveyance. The Court said in such cases where an appeal has been lodged the Court should not readily refuse stay because the property or right thereunder or therein before the final determination of the Appeal might have [p.83] passed to a bonafide purchaser for value who has no notice of the Appeal pending relating to such property. With respect to the learned Counsel the facts and circumstances of the case are far removed from the ones in this application. It has to be borne in mind that the learned trial Judge has already indirectly granted a stay by the restraining order that the property should not be disposed of.

Granting of the lease without more does not, in my opinion amount to alienation of the property. In my settled view to stop the 2nd Defendant/Respondent from leasing the property will cause both economic and equitable waste. It would be tantamount to depriving the 2nd Defendant/Respondent of the fruit of his litigation if this Court were to grant the stayed prayed for. We do not have to be reminded that it has never been the practice of Courts to deprive a successful litigant of the fruit of his litigation (Monk v Bartram 1891) 1Q.B.346 C.A. The Court will as a rule only grant a stay of execution if there are special circumstances which must be deposed to on affidavit unless the application is made at the hearing. See Halsbury's Laws of England 3rd edition. Volume 16 at page 35 paragraph 56

As far as I am concerned the issue about assessment of damages which would become monetary judgment is not yet before us and so the question of whether or not the Respondents would be in a position to repay it if the appeal is successful or what should happen in that case is not before us in the strict sense of it and I so rule.

Terms under which a stay is ordered are also in the discretion of the Court but in regard to payment of costs under the judgment or order appealed from, they are usually that the costs be paid to the Solicitor on the other side on his undertaking to return them if appeal is successful see Swyny v Harland (1894) 1 Q.B. 707 per hopes L.J. at page 709.

For all the foregoing reasons, I am in full agreement with Messrs. Shears-Moses and Jenkins Johnston that the burden of showing special circumstances to justify the granting of stay of execution has not been discharged by the Plaintiff/Applicant. The result is that the application is refused with costs to the Defendants/Respondents. Costs to the solicitors for the defendants assessed at …….

RULING

S. BASH-TAQI:

By Notice of Motion dated 21st September 2007 the Applicant moved this Court for a Stay of Execution of the Judgment of the Court of Appeal dated 24th May 2007 and all subsequent proceedings:

a) pending the hearing and determination of this application;

b) pending the hearing and determination of the appeal against the Judgment of the Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court;

When this application came up for hearing, Counsel for the Respondent/Applicant informed the Court that he would be confining his arguments only to the second relief above.

The Applicant's Motion is supported by the Affidavit of Ibrahim Abdul Hussein Basma sworn on the 21st June 2007 together with Exhibit "IAHB 1" which is the certificate of the [p.6] Order of the Court of Appeal, Exhibit "IAHB2" Notice of Appeal to the Supreme Court, Exhibit "IAHB3 1-4 valuation certificates of Applicant's properties within the jurisdiction.

Against the Applicant's Affidavit is the Affidavit of the Appellant/Respondent sworn to by Adnan Youssef Wanza on the 26th June 2007 opposing the application and exhibited thereto is Exhibit "AYW1", a photocopy of a Sierra Leonean Passport issued to the Appellant/Respondent by the Government of Sierra Leone.

A brief background to this application is that following an appeal by the Appellant/Respondent to the Court of Appeal against the High Court Judgment in this matter in which the latter's appeal was upheld; the Respondent/Applicant filed a Notice of Appeal to the Supreme Court against the judgment of the Court of Appeal

The Applicant has now come to this Court, seeking a stay of the execution of the judgment of the Court of Appeal. The relevant paragraphs relied on by Counsel, Mr. A. F. Serry-Kamal for the Applicant in aid of his Motion are paragraphs 5-7 of the Affidavit of Ibrahim Abdul Hussein Basma referred to above, pending the hearing and determination of that appeal by the Supreme Court. The relevant paragraphs read as follows:

"5. Prior to my illness, I had acquired substantial real properties. These include the following:

1. 17 Spur Loop Wilberforce Freetown;

2. 19 Smart Farm Road, Off Wilkinson Road Freetown;

3. Property Off Peninsular Circular Road Tokeh;

4. Property South of Cantonment Wilberforce, Freetown;

5. Properties at 22 and 24 Spur Road, Freetown;

6. Properties at 16 and 16A Spur Road, Freetown;

7. 2 Back Street, Freetown;

8. 2, Rock Street, Freetown;

"6. The values of the above properties are in excess of the judgment sum and cost of this action thus far. True copies of the valuation of some of my said properties in 2005 are now produced and shown to me marked Exhibits 3 1-4

"7. The Appellant/Respondent is a Lebanese national and if the Judgment sum is paid to him and he leaves the jurisdiction soon thereafter, I will not be able to recover the said [p.7] judgment sum if my appeal to the Supreme Court succeeds. My appeal will thus be rendered nugatory.

"8. I have no intention of disposing of any part of my property. I am prepared to give whatever undertaking not to dispose of any or some of my properties to the value of the judgment sum if the Court so orders……."

Counsel for the Applicant submitted that the above paragraphs contain special circumstances warranting a stay of execution. He emphasized that the Applicant's Appeal would be rendered nugatory if a stay of execution were not granted, in that settlement of the judgment debt in full pending the outcome of the appeal would depend on the realization of the Applicant's assets listed in paragraph 5 of the Affidavit, so that if a stay were not granted and the Applicant succeeded in his appeal, it would be difficult for the Applicant to get back the real value of the assets. He re-iterated that the Applicant had no intention of disposing of the properties until the outcome of the case, (see paragraph 8 of his Affidavit in Support). Counsel further submitted that the Respondent was a businessman whose domicile of origin is Lebanon, and if the Court were to order the judgment debt to be paid in full to him, and he left the jurisdiction, the Applicant's appeal would be rendered nugatory in the event of the appeal succeeding.

Mr. A. Koroma for the Appellant/Respondent in opposing the application submitted that the Respondent being the successful litigant ought not to be deprived of the fruits of his judgment; further that a stay of execution is granted at the discretion of the Court which must be exercised taking into consideration the special and extraordinary circumstances furnished by the Applicant in his Affidavit. He submitted that the Applicant's Affidavit showed no such special circumstances, and that the averments in the Affidavit as to the value of his properties showed nothing more than that the Applicant possessed properties in the jurisdiction. He submitted that Counsel's submission that the Respondent was likely to leave the jurisdiction was unsupported by evidence. He pointed out that the Respondent was also a Sierra Leonean albeit by naturalization; and the action being one for the payment of a debt which the Applicant had already acknowledged, there was no chance of the appeal succeeding.

The principles to be applied in determining whether a stay of execution should be granted are well known and have been applied in a number of cases by the courts in this and other jurisdictions. The Applicant must show that he has prima facie good grounds of appeal and there are special circumstances justifying a stay; the rationale for this being that the successful litigant should not be deprived of the fruits of his judgment; See case Patrick Koroma v Sierra Leone Housing Corporation and Dolcis Beekley Misc. App. 9/2004 C.A. Therefore, in those circumstances, it will be wrong to grant a stay of execution where an appeal is frivolous or where a grant of a stay will inflict hardship on the successful litigant. See Firetex International Co. Ltd v Sierra Leone External Communications and Sierra Leone Telecommunications Misc. App. 19/2002 C.A. The Applicant must therefore demonstrate that there are special circumstances in this case justifying the grant of stay of execution, and it has been held that demonstrating "special circumstances" in an application for stay of execution involves consideration of [p.8] the need, among other things, to balance the interest of the successful litigant and the Applicant's claim for stay. (See Patrick Koroma supra).

It is clear from the applicant's affidavit, the exhibits and submissions, that the two main reasons for seeking the stay of execution are, firstly, that a refusal to grant the stay would result in the disposal of the applicant's assets listed above to payoff the judgment debt, and that in the event of his appeal succeeding, he would be unable to get back the assets or the original value thereof. Secondly, he fears that if he is ordered to pay the judgment debt and the Respondent, being of Lebanese origin, leaves the jurisdiction before his appeal is heard, he would be unable to recover the judgment debt if his appeal succeeds. Thus his appeal would be rendered nugatory.

The question that the Court has to determine is whether the above reasons can be said to constitute special circumstances to warrant a stay of execution. There is no doubt that the quantum involved is huge; there is equally no doubt that if a stay is not granted payment of the judgment debt at this time will involve the selling of the Applicant's properties mentioned in paragraph 7 of his affidavit. The Respondent has not stated in his Affidavit evidence or shown that a stay of execution would cause him any hardship, nor has he disputed the fact that realization of the Applicant's assets will be enough to satisfy the judgment debt in the event the Applicant's appeal is dismissed. It has equally not been shown that the Applicant has other means of satisfying the Judgment other than by selling his assets, and the Respondent has not disputed the Applicant's ability to satisfy the Judgment at any time. The Applicant has stated in his Affidavit that he has no intention of disposing any of the properties listed in his Affidavit, and the Respondent has not disputed this averment.

We have considered the submissions of both Counsel, and have examined the averments in the Affidavits in Support and in Opposition. We are satisfied that if a stay is not granted extreme hardship would be caused to the Applicant. We are also satisfied that the Applicant has shown that special circumstances do exist for this Court to exercise its discretion and grant a stay of execution of the judgment.

Accordingly, I grant a stay of execution of the judgment of the Court of Appeal dated 24th May 2007. I will further order that because of the special circumstances of this matter, the Applicant/Respondent deposits the Title Deeds to the properties listed in the Affidavit of Ibrahim Abdul Hussein Basma sworn on 21st June 2007 to the Registrar of the Court of Appeal until final determination of the appeal.

ADEMOSU J.A

By a Writ of Summons dated the 28th July, 2003 the Plaintiff claimed against the defendant the following reliefs

1. Declaration that she is the owner and/or person entitle to a possession of piece or parcel of land situate at 96 Blackhall Road Kissy

2. Damages for trespass

3. Possession of the said land

4. An injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with the said land

5. An order setting aside the conveyance

6. Cost of the defendant

By a notice of motion dated 1st September, 2003 the plaintiff applied for order for substituted service was made on 16th September, 2003

The action proceeded to trial on the 11th February, 2004 with the defendant being absent and unrepresented. Judgment in default of appearance was entered in favour of the plaintiff on 1st October, 2004.

The plaintiff/Respondent to enforce the judgment by applying for leave to issue a writ of possession which was granted on the 24th February,

On the 19th of April, 2005 a conditional appearance was entered on behalf of the defendant by Messrs Serry-Kamal & Co and also filed consent by one Alpha Bundu to act as Guardian and when for the defendant. By a notice of motion dated 19th April 2005 the defendant applied to set aside the judgment in default of 1st October, 2004 and all subsequent proceedings on the grounds of irregularity. Mr. Shears-Moses applied to cross-examine Alpha Bundu on his affidavit and did cross-examine but not without any objection being raised by A.F. Serry-Kamal Esq. This despite the fact that Mr. Serry-Kamal's submission that the defendant was a minor and even that there were triable issues and that the defendant had a defence the learned trial judge upheld Mr. Shears-Moses objection and entered judgment in favour of the plaintiff. The ruling was in these terms.

"Having entertained all these submission and or arguments on both sides of this motion. The court is still not satisfied that the said Ibrahim Kamara whose address is No. 11 Leiceister Road, Freetown is the same person now held to be at 71, Leicester Road a minor. More is desired than what has been said in this argument. How come that Ibrahim Kamara now held to be minor entered a legal transaction held in Exhibit "AB2" is the same person who executed the conveyance as portrayed in Exhibit AB1" In Exhibit "AB3" a plan was attracted not to an empty vacant land i.e. without structure? No I don't think so"

I am not satisfied that the deponent has been fair and helpful to the court in this matter. Unless and until the person holding himself out as Ibrahim Kamara is clarified as the defendant in this motion, the motion must fail"

Being satisfied with the ruling of the court the four grounds of appeal were filed on behalf of the defendant/appellant. The grounds are as follows.

[p.87]

1. The learned trial judge failed to consider that it ha unfettered discretion to set aside a judgment in default where the defendant shows that he has a defence on the merits.

2. The decision is against the weight of the evidence

3. The learned trial judge erred in law when she went into matters not yet open to her for decision

4. The learned trial judge considered extraneous matters which were not within the province of the matter before her for a decision.

Jenkins-Johnston Esq., for the appellant informed the court that he was relying substantially on the synopsis he had already filed but drew out attention to the important point that this point that this matter on appeal judgment had been taken against an infant even though no guardian ad. litem was appointed or joined Mr. Jenkins-Johnston's contention is that such irregularity is very crucial.

Having perused the record before the court I agree that there was a Birth Certificate and affidavit evidence before the court showing the circumstances surrounding the purchase of the property in question in the name of an infant. The law is not in doubt that if judgment by default is signed against an infant without knowledge of the infant the court will set it aside whether the plaintiff know of the disability or not (Leaver v. Torres (1899) 43 S.J 778 but it is noted that such irregularity may be waived.

Mr. Shears-Moses' strong point which he emphasized is that the irregularity must be proved and perhaps be investigated as he appeared to have led the trial judge to do. In my considered opinion; the discretionary power to set aside a default judgment which has been entered regularly is unconditional and the court should not lay down rigid rules that my result in depriving it for jurisdiction. The primary consideration in exercising the discretion is whether the defendant shows that there is an issue to be tried on the merits.

In the court below the record clearly demonstrates that the court was engaged in securitizing the reasons given for the defence and went on [p.88] to give a ruling on the credibility of a Deponent on the affidavit filed. Granted that court is entitle to take into the account the explanation of the defendant as to how the default occurred (Alphine Bulk Transport Co. Inc. v. Saueli Eagle (1986) 2 Lloyds Report 221 at 223 L.A) With due respect to the learned trial judge she had no duty or right to decide on the objection without allowing the defendant's side to say what they want to say to the action. I hold firmly to the view that regardless of the reason given for disputing the claim the learned trial judge's duty was to hear the suit and not to the action. I hold firmly to the view that regardless of the reason giving for disputing the claim the learned trial judge's duty was hear the suit and not to question the validity of the reasons given for defending. There is established by a long line of decisions of which the correctness has so far I know, never been seriously challenged among them is Evans V. Barthan (1937) 2 ALL E.R. 646. I noted that Mr. Shears-Moses placed great reliance and Kabia v. Conteh (1964-66) A.L.R.S.L. 354 but that authority says that a judgment in default may be set aside without affidavit showing defence on the merits if to obviate clear injustice. In Grimshaw v. Dunbar (1953) 1 .Q.B.408 at P.416 Jenkins L.J said that the court should seldom, if ever, refuse to set aside a judgment merely on the ground that the defendant's case appears to be a weak one.

The practice of the court is generally to grant rather a refusal of application to set aside a default judgment. This is clearly illustrated in Berthan Macaulay v. Diamantopoulos (1962) 2 S.L.L.R 14 where it was held that even though the defendant treated the court with contempt by not appearing to the writ even when the plaintiff wrote to tell him that he would sign judgment within a certain time yet the court held that this is not necessarily good ground for refusing to set the judgment if there is disclosed a defence on the merits and circumstances warrants it. I am satisfied that sufficient issues have been raised to take this matter to trial.

In this case the learned trial judge has given the reasons which will enable this court to know the considerations which have weighed with her.

The question is in what the circumstances in which the Court of appeal can interfere with the discretion of the judge? In Ward v. James (1966) 1 Q.B. 293 at 294; (1965) 1 ALL E.R. 570 at 571. It has since be settled that the court can, and will interfere, if satisfied that the judge was wrong.

I am satisfied that these proceeded are ill-advised. I am of the opinion that justice would be done if the action went to trial. I am unable to say for reasons already stated, that the judgment in this case should stand as it is. The result is that the appeal is upheld. The judgment dated the 17th day of October, 2005 is hereby set aside. I order that the matter should go for trial.

DIVISION: COURT OF APPEAL, SIERRA LEONE

DATE: 14 NOVEMBER 2008

LANCE COPRORAL DANIEL SANDI & 10 OTHERS — APPELLANTS

AND

THE STATE — RESPONDENT

C.A. OSHO-WILLIAMS (now deceased) and C.C.V. TAYLOR Esq for the Appellants

S.A. BAH Esq for the Respondent

DELIVERED ON 14TH NOVEMBER, 2008

JUDGMENT

1. This is an appeal brought by the 11 Appellants herein against their respective convictions and sentences, for the offences of Treason and Misprision of Treason by the High Court. On 20th December, 2004 the High Court of Sierra Leone, RASCHID, J (now deceased) Presiding with a Jury, convicted the 1st to the 10th Appellants on a three Count Indictment: two Counts for the offence of Treason contrary to Section 3(1) (a) and (b) respectively of the Treason and State Offences Act, 1963 as amended, and the 11th Appellant on one Count for the offence of Misprision of Treason. The 1st to 10th Appellants were sentenced to death by hanging on both Counts; and the 11th Appellant was sentenced to a term of Imprisonment of 10 years.

2. By Notices of Appeal dated 10th January, 2005 the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 5th and 6th and 11th Appellants appealed against their respective convictions and sentences. By Notices of Appeal dated 7th January, 2005 the 4th, 7th, 8th, 9th, and 10th Appellants, appealed against their respective convictions and sentences.

3. The Treason charges in Counts 1 and 2 of the Indictment state that the Appellants, and other persons, three of whom were acquitted at the trial, prepared, by conspiring together to overthrow the Government of Sierra Leone by unlawful means, in that they agreed to overthrow and take over the Government by unlawful means; and to suspend the Constitution of Sierra Leone by means other than that provided by Law. It was alleged also, that these same persons endeavored to overthrow the Government [p.135] by unlawful means, in that they agreed to over throw and take over the Government by unlawful means; to suspend the Constitution by means other than that provided by law; and to overthrow the Government by unlawful means, by carrying out and participating in an armed attack at the Army Engineers' Regiment at Wellington, Freetown. The convoluted and tautologous manner in which the Indictment was drafted, shows that the prosecution was in trouble from the word "go." Thus, for example, the Indictment alleges that the Appellants prepared to overthrow the Government by unlawful means, by conspiring to do so, and by agreeing to do so.

4. Count 3 of the Indictment, charges the 11th Appellant alone with the offence of Misprision of Treason. Misprision of Treason is the offence of concealing the commission of an act of Treason.

5. 40 witnesses were called for the prosecution, none for the defence. The exhibits tendered, were lettered "A" to "DDDD." The trial would have commenced on 23 April, 2003, but for non-compliance with the Orders of the Court for service of copies of the Indictment, and the proofs of evidence on the Appellants. B V S KEBBIE Esq, DPP appeared for the prosecution together with A K A BARBER Esq, O V ROBBIN-MASON Esq, S A BAH Esq, MS C C JARRETT, and J E O KEBBIE Esq. For the defence were the late C A OSHO-WILLIAMS and S M SESAY Esq. The matter was thus adjourned to 1 May, 2003 when the Court was informed by the by MR ROBBIN-MASON the current Acting DPP, that the Chief Justice had appointed a Special Session for the trial of the Appellants pursuant to Rule 5(1) of the High Court (Criminal Sessions) Rules, 1965, and that Notice of the Appointment had been published in the Gazette. On the next adjourned date, 9 May, 2003 amendments were made to the Indictment after which the charges were read out to the Appellants and their co-accused. All of them pleaded Not Guilty to the charges. A jury was empanelled between that date, and 15th May, 2003. On 19 May, 2003 the then AG & MJ opened the case for the prosecution, and began leading evidence.

6. During the course of the trial, the jury was reduced below 12, and the prosecution and the Appellants gave their respective consents to the trial proceeding with 11 jurors. The prosecution closed its case on 15th June, 2004. On 23rd June, 2004 the accused persons were put to their election. All the Appellants, save the 5th Appellant, chose to rely on their [p.136] statements to the Police. He had first elected to testify on oath. Later, on 29 June, 2004 the 5th Appellant changed his option, and informed the Court he was relying on his statement to the Police. The DPP addressed the Court between 13 July, 2004 and 24 August, 2004. The late MR OSHO-WILLIAMS addressed the Court on behalf of the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 6th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th and 16th accused person, beginning 25 August, 2004 and ending on 12 October, 2004. S M SESAY Esq addressed on behalf of the 4th, 12th, 13th, 14th and 15th accused persons between 13 October, 2004 and 11 November, 2004; and A KOROMA esq for the 5th accused between 16th and 17th November, 2004. Summing-up should have commenced on 22 November, 2004 but due to the absence of jurors, did not actually commence until 7th or 9th December, 2004 and ended on 20 December, 2004 when the jury delivered the verdicts set out above.

7. I have narrated the course of the trial so as to give some perspective to the immense task the Trial Judge faced. The trial spanned a period of nearly 20 months. There were long breaks in between due to the absence of Counsel, the jurors, witnesses or likely witnesses, and electricity. Even the Summing-Up it seems ended abruptly at page 394 of the Record. Though it is clear there must have been several adjournments during the Summing-Up, none of this has been recorded by the L TJ. We do not know at what stage he invited the jury to retire to consider their verdicts. All we have are his minute at page 395 recording the verdicts of the jury. We do not know whether the jury took time to consider their verdicts, and the length of time this consideration took; nor do we know whether they were sequestered after the end of the Summing-Up until the verdicts were delivered. All of these procedures have to be recorded by the L TJ as evidence that the trial has been conducted in accordance with the Criminal Procedure Act, 1965. The lack of evidence that there had been due compliance with that Act would of itself have compelled us to set aside the convictions as being unsafe and unsatisfactory.

8. Given the spasmodic manner in which the trial was conducted, mistakes were bound to be made by the LTJ. The LTJ had himself been an experienced Prosecutor before transferring, first, to the Magisterial Bench in 1986, before his elevation in late 1992 to the High Court Bench. But the task he faced was enormous and taxing to his failing health, and may have been, in my estimation, not unconnected with his sudden demise nearly two years later. This explains in some measure why the complaints [p.137] made by the Appellants are supported by the Record before us, and why MR BAH for the Respondent, conceded the grounds argued, and we have decided to allow the appeals

9. We allowed the Appellants to file and to argue additional grounds of appeal. Filing was done on 24 April, 2008 and arguments were heard from both sides on 30 April, 2008 on which date Judgment was reserved. The late OSHO-WILLIAMS Esq began by abandoning his original grounds of appeal, and sought our leave to argue the fresh grounds filed on 24 April/2008. The two main complaints which run through all of the appeals are that the trial Judge failed to analyze the evidence led by the prosecution and to relate the same to the law; and that the LTJ failed to direct the jury adequately on the law relating to accomplices, and to the danger of convicting on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice. Other grounds canvassed, were that the L TJ failed to direct the jury on the issue of alibi raised by the 2nd Appellant, and that the verdicts were against the weight of the evidence. We hold the view that the complaints relating to the directions on the evidence of accomplices, and on the issue of alibi evidence, are justified.

10. It is well established in our jurisprudence, (now abrogated in the UK by Section 32 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act, 1994) that where the guilt or otherwise of an accused person depends on the evidence of an accomplice, it is the duty of the Trial Judge to warn the jury that though may convict the accused person on such evidence, it is dangerous to do so unless it is corroborated. He should explain what corroboration means in law, and should indicate the type of evidence which could amount to corroboration. It is for the jury to decide whether such evidence amounts to corroboration or not. Failure to give such warning will result in a conviction being quashed irrespective of whether there was corroborative evidence or not. The duty of the trial Judge is spelt out at page 155 in the Judgment of AMES,P in the Court of Appeal in SABRAH v R[1964-66] ALR SL 154. The duty of a trial Magistrate to do so was also emphasized in THOMAS v R [1957-60] ALR SL 187 at 190 LL26-35. The point was also taken by the Court of Appeal in KHAZALI v THE STATE [1974-82] SLBALR 5 at pages 15-17. All of these cases restate the position of English Law as expounded by the Court of Criminal Appeal in BASKERVILLE (1916) 12 Cr App Rep 81. See also the case of JALLOH v R [1964-60] ALR SL 20 C.A. at page 22. It follows therefore, [p.138] that if the Trial Judge failed to give this direction, the convictions cannot stand. Let us therefore examine what the LTJ actually said to the jury on this all important issue. We have gone through the whole of the Summing-Up recorded in pages 333-395 of the Record. We do not find any mention of the term accomplice, though it is clear from the evidence that at least PW1, 11, 14 and 17 were accomplices (PW11 later became an informant). They had taken part in the meetings at Devil Hole and elsewhere, and/or in the attack at Wellington. They were therefore accomplices in fact as well as in Law. A corroboration warning was certainly required in respect of their evidence. Regrettably, none was given. The omission is an error this Court cannot, on the authorities, correct.

11. As regards the compliant by the 2nd Appellant, that no direction was given to the jury on the issue of alibi, we think it is well grounded. The LTJ's direction on this all important issue is to be found at page 359 of the Record. He said inter alia, "... when an accused raises an alibi he cannot raise an alibi that is vague; he must particularize. In my view, to say I went to a man who lodged me with my wife behind soap factory; the man can say I was with him at the time of the shooting; I went to this man at about 1.30am.' Now you do not expect the police to investigate such an alibi because it is vague. The investigators cannot go to soap factory and ask questions about any particular man; he has not given his name; he has not given his address ... It is our considered Judgment that this direction was palpably wrong. The legal burden always, and at all times rests on the prosecution to prove every element of the offence with which an accused person is charged, and where this is necessary, his presence at the scene of the crime at the relevant time. Once the 2nd Appellant had raised an alibi, it was for the prosecution to destroy it. The Appellants were in custody from the date of their arrest to date. There was nothing stopping the investigators taking the 2nd Accused to the back of soap factory, there to request him to identify the person supporting his alibi. This was clearly not done. The direction given may have left the jury with the impression that it was down to the 2nd Appellant to prove the truth of his alibi; this was clearly a misdirection. The necessity for a proper direction where the defence of alibi is raised, was acknowledged, though obliquely, in R v KOROMA (1960-61) SLLR 221 at 223 per WISEHAM, CJ; that the burden of disproving the alibi raised, rested [p.139] throughout on the prosecution, was considered as settled by the Court of Appeal in SILLAH v R [1964-66] ALR SL 517 at 520 LL5-9 per SIR SAMUEL BANKOLE JONES, P. "In this passage, what the learned trial judge was saying was that it was the duty of the appellants to have called evidence to prove their innocence. This is clearly a misdirection in law. Certainly, it is not the law in a case where an accused person has set up an alibi as a defence. In the case of R v Johnson ([1961] 1WLR 1478) it was held that if an accused person puts forward an alibi as an answer to a criminal charge, he does not thereby assume a burden of proving the defence, but the burden of proving his guilt remains throughout on the prosecution, "

12. As to the complaint that the LTJ did not adequately relate the law to the evidence in order to assist the jury to arrive at just verdicts, we think it is well grounded. What the L TJ did at the start of his Summing-Up, was to explain what was meant by the words "prepare" and endeavour." What he did not do subsequently, was explain to the jury, whilst dealing with the evidence, which parts of the evidence were probative of the actus reus of preparation, and of endeavouring. The jurors were therefore left to grope in the dark for directions in these respects. The LTJ merely directed them, repeatedly, that if they believed the evidence of the prosecution, they must find each accused guilty of the offence of Treason; if they did not believe the prosecution's evidence, they must return verdicts of Not Guilty. This was clearly insufficient in a case of Treason, where any act of preparation, or of endeavour could constitute the offence.

13. The LTJ also made the mistake of equating the firing at the ATC Compound, as probative by itself, of the offence of Treason. It is our respectful opinion, that the firing at that compound could only be considered as an act of preparation, if conjoined with the meetings held, where it was agreed to overthrow the Government. The evidence of these meetings was provided by the accomplices, four of whom I have referred to above, and in the recorded interviews given by some of the Appellants, some of which contained admissions, or which could be described as confessions. These meetings were not by themselves, irrefragable evidence of an agreement to overthrow the Government. Some of the· discussions held at these meetings had more to do with ways of [p.140] disturbing the peace, something more akin to an Unlawful Assembly than to full blown Treason.

14. I have dealt with the evidence of accomplices above. As regards confessions, the Law is clear. A jury could convict on the basis of a confession alone, but it is desirable to have outside the confession, some evidence, be it slight, of circumstances which make it probable that the confession was true. This is the direction approved by WACA in KANU v R 14 W ACA 30 and cited with approval in KULANGBANDA v R [1957-60] ALR SL 306 at page 307 LL 26-33. The only evidence outside the confessions in this case, connecting the Appellants with meetings during which a coup was planned, and the firing at the ATC Compound, is the evidence of accomplices which itself requires corroboration. As to the firing at the ATC Compound, there are more problems. There were several inconsistencies in the evidence of the prosecution witnesses which deprived it of reliability. Many of these inconsistencies have been highlighted in the synopsis dated 18 March, 2008, submitted on behalf of the Appellants jointly, and I need not here repeat them.

15. If the verdicts in respect of Treason cannot be upheld, it follows that the verdict in respect of the offence of Misprision of Treason cannot be upheld as well.

16. In the result, we agree with the Appellants, that the verdicts are unreasonable and cannot be supported having regard to the evidence. We therefore allow all the appeals, and set aside the all the convictions and sentences.

JUDGMENT

This is an Appeal by the Appellants herein Mathew Mustapha Mannah and Mohamed Sylvanus Koroma against their conviction and sentence by the High Court in Freetown presided over by Honourable Akiiki Kiiza J, on a four (4) Count Indictment of the offence of CORRUPTION contrary to Section 8(1)(a) of the Anti-Corruption Act, [p.147] No. 1 of 2000 (As Amended). The Appellants were convicted and sentenced on the 30th August, 2006.

This Appeal is brought pursuant to Section 57(b) and 57(c) of the Courts Act, 1965 (as amended by Section 6 of Act No. 21 of 1966) and the powers of the Court of Appeal on the hearing of such an Appeal are fully spelt out in Section S. 58(1), 58(2), 58(3), 58(4) and Sections 59(1), 59(2) and 59(5) of the Courts Act supra. I will not reproduce these sections on this Judgment.

The trial was held at the Freetown High Court as a result of the Anti Corruption Act No.1 of 2000 a (as amended) under which proceedings were taken:

MOHAMED SYLVANUS KOROMA on a day unknown between 1st September, 2001 and 31st January, 2002, at Port Loko District in Sierra Leone did accept an advantage of Le.200,000.00 (Two hundred thousand Leones) from AMADU DRAB THULLA as an inducement to perform an act as a public officer.

The trial properly commenced on 21st June, 2006 and the learned Trial Judge in his recorded Judgment on 31st August, 2006 found 1st Appellant guilty on Counts 1 and 2 and 2nd Appellant guilty on Counts 3 and 4 and sentence the 1st Appellant to three months imprisonment on Counts 1 and 2 to run concurrently and the second Appellant to three months imprisonment on Counts 3 and 4 to run concurrently.

It is against these verdicts of Guilty and sentence that both Appellants have appealed to this Court on the following grounds of Appeal.

(1) The Judgment is unreasonable and cannot be supported having regard to the evidence before the Court.

[p.150]

(2) The Learned Trial Judge erred in allowing the Prosecution not to call a witness listed on the back of an indictment either to examine him or merely to tender him for cross examination by Defence Counsel.

(3) That the Judgment is against the weight of evidence.

In my humble opinion grounds one (1) and (3) can be conveniently entertained under one ground as being ground one (1).

GROUND (1) (One)

The Judgment is unreasonable and cannot be supported having regard to the evidence before the Court. When an appeal is anchored on this general and over used ground of appeal in criminal cases it is inviting the Court of Appeal to in other words review and evaluate the evidence that was adduced before the trial Court.

I have fully perused the record of proceedings especially the judgment of the learned Trial Judge. However, it is for me to note that there are very strict limitations on the power of the Court of Appeal to set aside or reverse the decision of the trial Court on issues of fact. The Court of Appeal cannot embark on a re-evaluation of the evidence and thereby arrive at a different conclusion from that of the trial Court because an appellate Court is not permitted to inquire into disputes but to inquire into the ways the disputes have been tried and settled. Moreover, to reverse the decision of the trial Court which is based on its assessment of the quality and credibility of witnesses [p.151] who testifies before it, the appellate Court must not only entertain doubts that the decision of the trial Court is right but must also be convinced that it is wrong. Findings of fact made by a trial Court are entitled to respect by an appellate Court, particularly when it is clear that the trial Court had performed its primary duty of evaluating and ascribing probative values to the evidence before it properly.

It is not every minor error committed by a trial Court that will result in its judgment being set aside. It must be demonstrated that the error was substantial and formed part of the basis of the decision complained of and that it resulted in a miscarriage of justice (Emphasis Mine).

On the basis of the above exposition and more so the underlined emphasis let me turn to the merits of the arguments in this appeal

The main argument by both Counsels for the appellants in support of ground one is that the evidence of P.W.2, P.W. 3, P.W.4 and P.W.5 were full of inconsistencies which rendered their evidence unreliable since they were filled with many contradictions and discrepancies which the Learned Trial Judge ought to have fully considered in detail.

This could be distilled thus — whether there are material contradictions in the prosecutions' case which ought to have been resolved in favour of the appellants and the failure of which occasioned a miscarriage of justice.

In considering the inconsistencies the Learned Trial Judge without in any way considering or showing some the inconsistencies in the prosecutions' evidence however slight, minor or major they may be said at Page 44 of the records:

"I have carefully reviewed all the evidence and have critically analysed the demeanours of the prosecution witnesses on this point and I find P. W.3, P. W.4 and P. W.5 reliable witnesses ..... there were minor inconsistencies are material ones in the prosecution witness testimonies. These could safely be ignored by the Court ……”

What are those minor inconsistencies? With due respect to the Learned Trial Judge the contradictions ought to have been treated seriatim and pointed out in some detail by the Learned Trial Judge and see whether or not they ought to have contradictions whether minor or not to see whether or not they go to the material issues of the case alleged against the appellants since a material point in the prosecutions' case does create a doubt in their case that the Appellants are entitled to benefit from. The Learned Trial Judge ought to have considered them however minor before dismissing them as not being material ones in the prosecutions' case. However it must be re-emphasized that it is not every minor contradiction that is fatal to the prosecutions' case but it must be pointed out clearly especially in a case of this nature where the Learned Trial Judge is both Judge of Law and fact. For the reasons above given, I shall resolve this issue in favour of the appellants.

GROUND 2(Two)

Both Appellants have argued that the Learned Trial Judge erred, in allowing the prosecution not to call witness whose name appeared at the back of the Indictment, either for him to be examined in-chief, or for him to be tendered for cross-examination. The witness was Abdulai Gbla 11. The Record does not state why it is he was not called. The prosecution did not ask for him to be dispensed with before closing its case; nor did the Defence request that he be brought to Court, for the purpose of him being examined in-chief, or for him to be cross-examined. The defence at the trial had a right to make this request,

It is true that the prosecution has a duty to call all of the witnesses whose names are listed at the back of the Indictment; but failing to do so does not necessarily invalidate a trial; nor does it render a conviction null and void. ARCHBOLD 35TH Edition of paragraph 1373 states "that the prosecution must have in Court the witnesses whose names appear at the back of the Indictment but there is a wide discretion in the prosecution whether they should call them and having called them either to examine them or merely to tender then for cross-examination". The duty of the prosecution is also emphasized in HALSBURY'S LAWS OF ENGLAND 2nd Edition at page 164. Unless there are exceptional reasons for not doing so, Counsel for the prosecution should call all witnesses listed at the back of the Indictment so that the Defendant may have an opportunity of cross-examining them. The situation contemplated in the citations from ARCHBOLD and HALSBURY'S LAWS OF ENGLAND is one [p.154] where there has been a preliminary investigation, and an Indictment has been filed in the Crown Court based on a committal. That was the position in KELFALA v R (1937-49). The Learned Trial Judge may have been wrong to say, for the reasons he gave, that he was not bound by the decision of an Appellate tribunal. He said that was an old decision, and had no relevance in the present age. The point is that that decision was irrelevant in the present age, because, here the witnesses whose names appeared on the back of the Indictment had not testified at a preliminary investigation. Their names were listed at the back of the Indictment as persons whose summaries of evidence would be served on the defence in accordance with provisions of the Anti-Corruption Act, 2000, and who would testify at the trial.

Failure to call Mr. Gbla at the trial did not therefore invalidate the trial, as no request was made by the defence for him to be called.

One point I would like to highlight at this penultimate stage of this judgment is that in reading the records it is clear that Pa Roke Sesay was the one who demanded the Le.500,000.00 (Five hundred thousand Leones) and the food items which he received as Regent Chief (Acting Paramount Chief). By virtue of Sections 8(3) and 8(4) of the Anti-Corruption Act 2000 such are fully covered as gifts under native law and custom especially when issues of the settlement of bush land disputes and it is a recognized customary practice by Paramount Chiefs and Regent Chiefs (Acting Paramount Chiefs). It is not surprising that the prosecution did not call Pa Roke Sesay to testify in this matter as this would have put an end to the matter.

In conclusion of this Judgment it must be made clear "extract of findings or extract of evidence" in Anti-Corruption investigations does not form part of the evidence led in Court. Therefore Counsel for 2nd Appellant's submission of juxtaposing the evidence of witnesses in Court and the summary or extract of evidence is untenable and completely irrelevant.

I therefore hold that the conviction of both appellants is unsafe and unsatisfactory. The appeal is therefore allowed and the conviction quashed.

I Order that a verdict of acquittal and discharge be entered in the case of each appellant.

ADEMOSU, J.A.

The subject matter of this appeal is a House, Land and hereditaments situate lying and being at 22, Sibthorpe Street, Freetown in the Western Area of the Republic of Sierra Leone, property of Mrs. Henrietta Rosanna James (deceased) Intestate and survived by [p47] her four (4) children namely: Archie Benson James, Mrs. Eunice James; Mrs. Vivat Davies (the Appellant and Mrs. Lucy Agbaje.

Letters of Administration to administer the Estate were granted to the 1st Respondent.

On 4th March ,1987 the 1st Respondent took out an Originating Summons in the high Court seeking inter alia an order that the property subject matter of this Appeal at 22, Sibthorpe Street be sold by public auction or private treaty.

The High Court ordered on 2nd February, 1988 that the land and house at 22, Sibthorpe Street, Freetown be sold by private treaty rather than by public auction.

2. That the Master and Registrar do appoint an independent valuer to assess current value of the estate comprising land and house at 22, Sibthorpe Street, Freetown and report to the Court.

There was no Appeal against that Order. The Order appealed against is the order dated 7th June, 1989 although the Notice of Appeal refers to it as Judgment dated 8th June, 1989.

The Order of the Court dated the 7th day of June, 1989 is as follows:

1. That both the Plaintiff and all the Defendants being beneficiaries the Estate of Henrietta James (Deceased) are entitled equally to the Estate of Henrietta James (Deceased) viz: House and land situate known as No. 22, Sibthorpe Street, Freetown.

2. That the property comprising of the said Estate situate at No. 22, Sibthorpe Street, Freetown be sold by private treaty.

[p.48]

3. That the current value of Le 100,000.00 as assessed by the Independent Valuer be the reserved price below which Estate MUST NOT be sold.

4. That the Administrator of the Estate of Henrietta James Deceased is hereby empowered to sell the said property to the highest bidder, and to prepare the conveyance and convey to the successful purchaser.

5. That the proceeds of sale be distributed amongst the beneficiaries of the Estate after deduction of all expenses (including the Le500.00) charged by the Independent Valuer incidental thereto.

6. That the costs of the proceedings be borne by the Estate such costs to be taxed.

Being dissatisfied the Appellant appealed and the Two Grounds of Appeal filed are as Follows:—

1. That the Learned Trial Judge erred in failing properly to evaluate all the evidence before the court before arriving at his decision for the property to be sold by private treaty simpliciter, without giving the 2nd Defendant/Appellant or any other beneficiary first refusal to purchase the property, or the opportunity to match the bid of the highest bidder before selling the property to any outsider.

2. That the Learned Trial Judge erred in ordering that the property be sold by the Administrator of the Estate of Henrietta (Deceased) and also to prepare the Conveyance and convey to the successful purchaser, having regard to the facts that as disclosed in the evidence [p.49] that the said Administrator is also the Plaintiff in the action, a beneficiary of the Estate and therefore an interested party, this being contrary to the maxim "Memo Judex insua causa" of the one cardinal rules of Natural Justice.

The Reliefs Sought

(i) That the judgment of the Lower Court be set aside in so far as it orders that.

(a) The property to be sold by private treaty.

(b) That the sale be conducted and conveyance prepared by the Administrator of the Estate of Henrietta James (Deceased).

(ii) That this Court orders that the 2nd Defendant/Appellant do have the first refusal to purchase the property at a price not less than the value stated by the Independent Valuer i.e. Le100,000.00

Or

in the alternative

That the 2nd Defendant/Appellant do have the first refusal to purchase the property if he can match the highest bid made at the close of bidding, otherwise the property will be sold to the highest Bidder.

(iii) That the Court Order that the sale be conducted by any competent person or authority other than any or the parties to the action.

(iv) That the costs in the court below and in the court be borne out of the Estate.

(v) Any further or other relief which to the court may seem just and equitable.

On behalf of the Appellant J.B. Jenkins-Johnston Esq., cited many authorities in support of the two grounds of appeal filed. The pith and substance of his argument is that the Appellant ought to have been given the opportunity to purchase the property and the property having been sold to an outsider the sale as ordered by the Court should be set aside. O.O. Nylander Esq. contended that the sale should not be set aside on the grounds that his client was a bona fide purchaser for value without notice.

In my considered opinion, this case should be judged in accordance with the general principles of law governing alienation by personal representatives and not by considering any hardship or hurt to one's pride or sentiments.

The general principle is that a personal representative is presumed to be acting fairly in the execution of his duty. Except the person seeking to impeach the validity of a transaction can prove like in the instant case that the purchaser had actual notice of the true state of facts, a purchaser from a personal representative obtains a good title despite irregularities in administration of Estate(Corser v, Courtwright (1873) L.R. 8 Ch. 971 per James L.J. at Page 976. The decision of Butler-Lloyd Ag. C.J. in Camarah v. Marcauley (1920-36) A.L.R. 150 at Page 153 is also in point. In that case the evidence before the court did not show that the purchaser acted collusion with the Administrator who sold. Butler-Lloyd Ag. C.J. at Page 153 concluded: thus.

"I am of the opinion that the sale by the Administrator to the defendant gave the latter a valid and unimpeachable title. The action was dismissed. I think I should do the same as there is no iota of evidence that the purchaser — Aminata Bangura [p.51] (4th Respondent) was aware of any irregularities complained of. In that case the plaintiff brought an action against the defendant for recovery of land which had formed part of her deceased father's estate. The plaintiff heard of the sale contending that since her consent to the sale had not been obtained, the conveyance to the defendant was invalid and she was therefore entitled to recover' the property. The defendant contended that she was not aware of any irregularity. As stated earlier the court held that the defendant had an unimpeachable title.

The evidence revealed that the 2nd Respondent who was the Administrator of the Estate applied and successfully obtained the Order of the High Court approving of sale to Madam Aminata Bangura at the reserve purchase price fixed at Le300, 000.00. I am aware of the provisions of Section 70(1) of the Conveyancing and Land Act 1881 which provides that the Order of the Court is conclusive and that any sale ordered by the Court shall not be invalidated on the ground of wants of jurisdiction or wants of any concurrence, consent, notice or service whether the purchaser has notice of any such wants or not. The inevitable conclusion reached is that this appeal is dismissed. Each party to bear his costs.

RULING

ADEMOSU, J.A

By a Notice of Motion dated 5th May 2008 the applicant prayed Inter alia for an order that execution of the judgment of the High court dated 25th day of January 2008 and all subsequent proceedings be stayed pending the hearing and [p.67] Determination of Appellant/Applicant's appeal to the Court of Appeal for Sierra Leone.

The application is supported by the affidavit of Richard Owiredu Appellant/applicant and exhibits thereto attached. The application was opposed on behalf of the 1st Respondent but only technical on grounds which we have already rejected. Although R. Johnson Esq. in his argument maintained that this application should not be granted because in his opinion special circumstances have not been shown by the Appellant/Applicant.

Turning to the substance of the application it is necessary to see whether or not this Court ought to grant the application for stay of execution of the judgment. Counsel for the applicant has urged that the Court should grant the application because of the reasons deposed to in the supporting affidavit and the exhibits attached. The reasons advanced that are not in dispute are:

1) That Appellant/Applicant stood for bail for the 2nd Respondent at Aberdeen Police Station on condition that he produced him the next day.

2) That he produced the 2nd Respondent as required after which the case file and the 2nd Respondent were transferred to Congo Cross Police Station for further investigation and the Appellant/Applicant had nothing to do with the case again.

3) That Ghanaian High Commissioner even verified what he has deposed to but action was taken against him

The contention of counsel for the Applicant is that the document the 1st Respondent relied on as a guarantee for the debt of the 2nd Respondent was discharged when the Applicant produced the 2nd Respondent to the Police. Counsel for the 1st Respondent's argument is that the guarantee still stood. Whether or not the guarantee still stood is an issue which would be fully considered by the Court of Appeal. For now, we are content to say that the Applicant has shown prima facie good grounds of appeal. What remains for us to consider is whether special circumstances have been shown to warrant a stay. In his affidavit the Applicant states inter alia that the judgment of the High Court has a potential of devastating his business completely if not stayed. By the way the amount involved is U$23,975/87 plus interest on the said sum at the rate of 15% per annum and costs assessed at Le4, 500, 000. 00 That the basis of the 1st Respondents claims pursuant to the judgment of the High Court was founded on the said guarantee to which he had 'already complied by producing the 2nd Respondent to the Police at Aberdeen Police Station. What I can consider to be a serious averment is the one where the Applicant states that he carries on business here and the judgment debt and costs will paralyze his business because it would eat into his capital base and force him to layoff some of his staff. He has stated that he is prepared to enter into a Bond to abide the outcome of his appeal.

The granting of stay of execution is based on proof of exceptional or special circumstances Radar V Jaber (1950-56) ALRS L 115. In Tuck V Southern Counties Deposit Bank (1889) 42 Ch.D. 471; 61 L.T. 348 it was held that the court should consider all the facts before deciding whether they constitute proper facts for its discretion to be exercised.

As this Court has said before it is not every ground of law that qualifies as a special circumstance for a stay of execution. For a ground of law to so qualify it ought to be shown it is substantial; that a decision on it one way or the other will affect the substratum of the whole case and the applicant has some chance of success. I am satisfied that an issue of law has been raised on which the compelling right of the parties depend so that is desirable to resolve it in the Court of Appeal. The result is, I feel that justice of the case demands that a stay be granted.

In the premises, a stay of execution of the judgment dated 25th January 2008 is hereby granted as prayed but on condition that the Applicant do pay costs under the judgment to the solicitors for the 1st Respondent on their undertaking to return them if the appeal is successful.

RULING

S. BASH-TAQI, JA

This is an application for Stay of Execution of the Judgment of the Court of Appeal dated 11th December 2007 pending the hearing and determination of an Appeal against the said Judgment to the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone. The application originally came before the full panel of the Court as an Ex parte application in which the Applicant sought two orders namely (1) an Interim Stay of Execution of the said Court of Appeal Judgment pending the hearing and determination of the application and (2) a similar Order as in (1) above pending the hearing and determination of an Appeal against the said Judgment to the Supreme Court.

When the motion came before us on 18th March 2008 we ordered the application to proceed inter parties and directed that Counsel for the Appellants/Respondents be served with the Motion papers. At the adjourned hearing, on 19th March 2008, due to the Easter Vacation and the absence of one of the Judges of the panel, the application came up for consideration before a single Justice of the Appeal Court, who dealt with the first order prayed for and granted the Applicant an interim Stay of Execution pending hearing of the substantive application before the full panel.

It is this substantive application for a Stay that is now before the full panel of the Court of Appeal and which is being considered in this Ruling.

BACKGROUND

A brief background of this application is that the Appellant/Respondents (hereinafter referred to as" the Respondents") were and are still the owners of premises located at Scan Drive, Wilberforce, Freetown comprising of four (4) flats. The Respondent/Applicant (hereinafter referred to as "the Applicant") in this application was the Defendant in the Court below and he leased the said premises from the Respondents [p.11] by a Lease Agreement dated 28th August 2002 for a term of sixteen years starting from 1st January 2002 at the yearly rent of Eight Thousand United States Dollars (US$ 8,000). It was expressly agreed that the rent should be paid yearly in advance on the 2nd day of January in every year. The Lease was conditional upon the Applicant refurbishing the premises at an agreed amount not exceeding US$ 99,722.55, and not to assign, sublet or otherwise part with the possession of the premises without the prior written consent of the Respondents. The Respondents alleged that Applicant defaulted in payment of rent and breach the condition against subletting without their prior written consent.

On the 23rd January 2003, they brought the action in the High Court claiming, inter alia, possession of the property upon forfeiture for breaches of fundamental covenants of the Lease, Arrears of the rent, and Damages for breach of covenants. On the 17 May 2006, the High Court, (Nylander J), in delivering the Judgment of the Court, adjudged that he was "constrained to record an equitable judgment", by which he ruled that he could not entertain the relief against forfeiture and breaches of covenant, but ordered the Applicant to pay all arrears of rent due to the Appellants/Respondents in not more than two installments and interest at the rate of 4% per annum from 1/1/03 until judgment....

On 25th July 2006, the Respondents, being aggrieved by the said judgment, appealed to the Court of Appeal, and on 11th December 2007, the Court of Appeal allowed their appeal; set aside the High Court Judgment of 17th May 2006, and ordered the Applicant to pay the mesne profits of US$ 8,000.00 assessed from 23rd January 2003, (the date of the Writ), until possession of the demised premises is delivered to the Respondents. On the 17th December 2007, the Respondents proceeded to levy execution by issuing out a Combined Writ of Possession and Fieri facias for the amount of the Judgment debt and possession of the premises. There was some confusion as to whether execution was completed before the filing of this Motion. Be that as it may, on the 20th February 2008, the Applicant paid the Respondents the sum of US $ 4,000.00, being half of the mesne profits ordered by the Court of Appeal. Following receipt of this amount, on 28th February 2008, the Respondent wrote to the existing tenants of the premises notifying them of the Judgment and giving them an option to contact the MD of the Respondent Company within one week, should any of them wished to continue to reside in the premises. On the 7th March 2008, the Applicant filed a Notice of Appeal to the Supreme Court against the Court of Appeal Judgment of 17th December 2007.

The Applicant has now come to this Court pursuant to Order 60 R. 2 of the Supreme Court Rules 1982, seeking a Stay of Execution of the Judgment of the Court of Appeal, pending the hearing and determination of his Appeal to the Supreme Court.

The application is supported by the Affidavit of Hussein Hamoud sworn on 13th March 2008 filed together with exhibits "H.H 1-12C", and a Supplemental Affidavit sworn on 3rd April 2008 by Mustapha Santigie Turay attached to which is post dated cheque, Exhibit "M.ST 1", drawn on Pro-Credit Bank, in favour of the Respondents for the sum of Le 12,000,000.00 representing the Leone equivalent of the remaining US $ 4,000.00 mesne profits ordered in the Court of Appeal Judgment.

The Applicant relied on both Affidavits in Support and especially, on paragraphs 4, 5, 6, and 7. Counsel for the Applicant acknowledged that this Court will not, as a rule, deprive a successful litigant of the fruits of his judgment. He, however, went on to submit that a [p.12] stay of execution is usually granted where an applicant convinces the Court that special circumstances exist which warrants a stay. In support of this principle, Counsel referred to certain facts deposed to in the two supporting affidavits, and I have endeavoured to state these in detail as follows:— that the Applicant had expended considerable sums to repair the premises which were in a dilapidated condition; that the Respondents knew that the Applicant's business is to lease premises for the purpose of subletting the same to tenants, and that it was based on this knowledge he rented the premises to certain diplomats and experts; that he had paid part of the mesne profit ordered by the Court of Appeal and that by giving a post-dated cheque for the balance of US$4,000.00, he has shown good faith and an intention to pay the judgment sum; that having regard to the status of the occupants of the premises in this country any execution of the judgment will not only seriously affect the country's international relations with the tenants' countries of origin, but will also give a bad name to Sierra Leone; that contrary to what the Appellant deposed to in his Affidavit in Opposition, the premises subject matter of the action, are not the only assets of the Respondents; that a Stay of Execution will not create any hardship on the Respondents. He relied on the decisions in the following unreported Court of Appeal cases: —

Commercial Enterprises Ltd v. Witaker's Property & Other, Misc. App. 12/91; Africana Tokey Village v. John Obey, Civ. App.31/81;

Lucy Deeker & Others v Goldstone Deeker.

Mr. E. Kargbo for the Respondent vigorously opposed the application. He relied on his Affidavit sworn of 4th April 2008 attached to which are five (5) exhibits including the Combined Writ of Possession and Fieri Facias, Exhibit "EK3", and the returns to the Writ by the Under Sheriff of the High Court, Exhibit"EK6", evidencing that execution of the Judgment has been completed. He submitted that no special or exceptional circumstances had been shown to warrant this Court exercising its unfettered discretion in favour of the Applicant and granting a Stay of Execution; that the reasons proffered in the affidavits in support are only an attempt to buy time for Applicant's tenants whose monies he had collected as rents. He reminded the Court of the principle of law that a successful ought not to be deprived of the fruits of litigation; further that payment by post dated cheque is not compliance of the Court's order and is no guarantee on the part of the Applicant of his willingness to pay; moreover, Counsel submitted, there is no agreement between the parties for the tenants to continue to remain in occupation of the premises; that far from these tenants being expatriates and diplomats, they are businessmen and a journalist respectively as shown on the business cards exhibited to his Affidavit; that a stay of execution will create undue hardship on the Respondents who rely on the proceeds from these premises to pay the salaries of their several workers; hence the Respondents need the property in order to continue in business; that no international issue is of importance when considering an application for a Stay of Execution, therefore the Court must balance the competing interests of the parties in considering an application of this nature. He submitted finally that the Respondents are willing to sign an undertaking to refund all expenses and costs of the Appeal in the event of its being successful. He urged the Court to dismiss the application. He relied on the unreported C. A. decisions in:—

Yusuf Bundu v. Mohamed Bailor Jalloh, Misc. App.23/2004; Desmond Luke v Bank of Sierra Leone Misc. App. 22/2004; Ibrahim Basma v Adnan Wanza Misc. App. 53/2005; Patrick Koroma v Sierra Leone Housing Corporation and Dolcie Beckley Misc. App.9/2004; and African Tokeh Village v John Obey.

It seems to us that in coming to a decision, the crucial issue is whether the Applicant has shown convincing special or exceptional circumstances to enable this Court to grant a stay. The principle of 'special circumstances' is the underlying principle of every application for a stay of execution. Therefore before coming to a conclusion as to whether or not the Applicant has adduced evidence of special circumstances, we must first of all examine the reasons advanced in the supporting affidavits to ascertain whether these or any of them amount to 'special or exceptional circumstances' to warrant the granting of a Stay. The reasons relied on according to Counsel for the Applicant in his submissions, are contained in paragraphs 12, 13, 16, 17, 18 and 19 of the Affidavit in support of the application.

Reading through these paragraphs starting with paragraph 12, it seems that the Applicant's first concern for wanting a Stay is that he had spent a considerable amount of money in refurbishing the premises in accordance with the Lease Agreement; then at para. 13. that he has sub-let the premises to diplomats and expatriates; that Respondent attempted to levy execution, but stayed action when the applicant paid part of the mesne profits ordered; that he had already paid the sum of US $ 4,000.00 pursuant to the said .Judgment (see para.17); that the Respondent notified the Applicant's sub-tenants of their intention to levy execution within 7 days (see para. 18), and "that having regard to the status of the occupants in this country some of whom are diplomats and expatriates, any such execution on them will seriously affect the country's international relation with their country of origin and obviously give a bad name and taint the image of this country."(see para. 1 9).

The question to be determined is: Do the above reasons amount to Special or exceptional circumstances justifying the grant of a Stay. In our judgment, having examined the reasons, we are of the view that most of the matters relied on in the Affidavits in support as 'special circumstances' relate to the issues in the pleadings which we believe had been dealt with in the course of the trial or if not, will be dealt with in the appeal. I shall here attempt to refer to a few; the issue whether or not the Applicant expended considerable amount of money to carry out the necessary repairs to the premises in accordance with the Lease Agreement, is matter in the pleadings, being a condition precedent in the Lease Agreement; that the Applicant had already paid the mesne profits ordered by the Court of Appeal, which seems to us to mean that he would not have paid the rent if he had not been so ordered; that the premises are occupied by diplomats and expatriates. Surely it was not part of the Lease agreement that the Applicant should rent the premises to diplomats and expatriates. The use to which the premises were put was purely a matter for the Applicant and had nothing to do with the Respondents. In any case, we do not believe that any international issue is of such importance when considering an application for a stay of execution, to deprive a successful litigant of the fruits of his judgment. Similarly, the fact that the Respondents levied execution while negotiations were going on between the parties cannot be a circumstance that is special in the present case, simply because the Respondents having obtained judgment in the matter, it is within their right to recover the judgment.

We note from the affidavit evidence, the case concerned the delivery up of possession of premises which are in the possession of the Applicant, and for which, from all indications, no rents had been paid to the owners since 2002, the date of the Lease, even though from the receipts exhibited by the Applicant himself, the rents he received from [p.14] subletting the premises to three of the so-called expatriates, amounted to a total of US $21,000,00 for the current year, Furthermore, the Writ of Summons for forfeiture of the Lease was issued on 23rd January 2003 and since that time the Applicant has continued to sublet the property up to the date of the Court of Appeal Judgment of 17th December 2007, It is with full knowledge that Judgment had been entered against him that he continued to rent the premises in December 2007 for the current year; this means that he was prepared to take the risk since he must have known that there is a possibility that he will be dispossessed. The likely hardship therefore envisaged by the Applicant in this case cannot be termed "special or exceptional circumstances" justifying the grant of a stay of execution.

The Applicant has referred us to the Notice of Appeal filed in the Supreme Court against the Court of Appeal Judgment and urged us that the appeal contains substantial grounds. In considering this issue, we reminded ourselves of what Sir John Muria, .JA (as he then was) had lo say in the case of Yusuf Bundu v Mohamed Bailor Jalloh, when considering similar issue in an application for a stay of execution:

"A person against whom a judgment or order to deliver up possession has been issued, needs to show in the affidavit "special circumstances" justifying a stay of execution against him beyond simply filing of a notice of appeal". (Emphasis added)

We adopt the above principle for the purpose of this ruling. Although prima facia good grounds of appeal may in some circumstances be a reason to grant a stay, we do not think that it is sufficient by itself alone. There must be, as has been pointed out, proof of special circumstances, The onus is on the Applicant to show by affidavit evidence that the two requirements exist, bearing in mind the fundamental principle that the successful litigant should not be deprived of the fruits of the judgment in his favour (See Firetex International Co. Ltd v Sierra Leone Telecommunications and Anor 6th August 2003 C.A. Misc. App. 19/2002.

In conclusion, having reviewed the affidavit evidence and Counsel's various submissions, we dismiss the application for stay of execution. The Applicant is to pay the cost of this application assessed at Le 3,000,000.00 (Three Million Leones)

On the 8th day of July F.M. Carew Esq. swore to an affidavit of search stating that no appearance had been entered by any of the defendants and seeking leave to sign judgment against all the defendants. Meanwhile on the 13th of July 2004 appearance was entered on behalf of all the defendants by E. E. Shears Moses Esq. By then judgment in default of appearance which had been applied for since on the 8th July 2004 was not signed until 15th day of July 2004 two days after the late appearance on behalf of the defendants. There can be no argument that the judgment signed was irregular. But pursuant to that judgment F.M. Carew Esq. wrote to the administrator and Registrar-General exhibiting the judgment in default of appearance and this Culminated in expunging the statutory declaration of the 1st Respondent from the Record Books of Statutory Declarations page 43 of the records confirming the evidence of the 1st Respondent that the 1st Respondent Statutory Declaration was cancelled [p.43] and/or expunged. The learned trial Judge has cause to put on his record as follows: Court records show the document was expunged from the records.

The 1st Respondent Alpha Abdulai Sallu is recorded to have said in inter alia:

"I was never send (sic) with an order cancelling my Statutory Declaration".

This shows that at the time of the trial of the action the Statutory Declaration had been expunged and the judge without ensuring that the original Statutory Declaration was produced she allowed the 1st Respondent to continue to give evidence using the photocopy of a document which legally speaking no longer existed. This is to say, the least, palpably wrong — procedurally. Strictly speaking, what has been expunged from the records cannot be admissible evidence or made use of unless there is an order to reinstate it. In this case there was no such order. The legal consequence of this is that the court was not clothed with jurisdiction at the time it is purported to be trying the case.

The judgment in default of appearance dated 15th day of July 2004 reads as follows:—

1 "NO APPEARANCE having been served by all the 1st 2nd and 3rd Defendants in this Action., IT IS THIS DAY ADJUDGED that the plaintiffs are declared the fee simple owners and do recover possession of all that piece or parcel of land and hereditaments situate lying and being at no. 10, Regent Road, Wilberforce, Freetown the Western Area of the Republic of Sierra Leone.

2. That the joint Statutory Declaration Establishing possession title of Alpha Abdulai Wahid Sallu, 1st Defendant herein and others sworn to on the 29th day of December 2003 and registered as no 96 at page 78 in volume 81 in the Book of statutory Declaration kept in the office of the Administrator and Registrar-Genera/'s Office No. 8, Walpole Street, Freetown be expunged there from on the Grounds of Fraud.

3. That plaintiffs do recover general damages from defendants for trespass to land such damages to be assessed.

4. That Plaintiffs do recover all costs from Defendants. Such costs to be taxed".

I think it is pertinent to state that any judgment entered prematurely i.e. before actual default had been made by defendant, whether failing to enter appearance or service of defence entitled defendant to have such judgment set aside exdebito Justitae C. Anlaby V Praetorious (1888). 20 QBD 764. It has also been the duty of the defendant to apply to. set it aside for irregularity "within" a reasonable time and before he has taken "any fresh steps after he becomes aware of the irregularity. (see Singh V Atombrook Ltd) 1989 1 WLR 810; (1989) 1 ALL E.R. 385 C.A. In the instant case the Respondents solicitor cannot be heard to say that he was unaware of the above default judgment. If he claimed to be ignorant of it, the question would be asked' what did he do when his client testified about the cancellation of his statutory declaration.

The Law is settled that jurisdiction is fundamental in any Judicial process. As it has been clearly demonstrated above, any Judgment however irregularly obtained stands until it is set aside. In this case the irregular judgment was not set aside or vacated at the time the matter went to full trial. As stated early the learned trial judge should have stopped the case when she discovered that the Statutory Declaration had been expunged from the records. In the premises, it is fruitless going into the merits of this appeal.

You cannot have 'two contradictory judgments in one action. In Hotby V Hodron (1889) 24 QBO 103 at page 107, Lord Esher said that judgment takes effect from the date of the entry and it is an effective judgment from that date.

I think it is appropriate to recall the words of Lord Denning in Macfoy V UAC Ltd (1962) A.C, 152 where he said "you cannot put something on nothing, It will fall". As the judgment in default of appearance dated 15th July 2004 is not yet set aside. I hold that it still stands.

We order that costs paid by Appellant to Respondent in High Court be refunded to the Appellant.

JUDGMENT

BROWNE-MARKE J.A

INTRODUCTION

1. This is an appeal brought by way of Notice of Appeal dated August, 2000 by the Appellant, SOLUKU JERMILL BOCKARIE against his conviction and sentence for the offence of Larceny contrary to Section 17(2)(a) of the Larceny Act, 1916, by the High Court sitting in Freetown, The Hon Mr Justice S.A. ADEMOSU, presiding, on August, 2000. The Notice contains five grounds of appeal. Later, another, three grounds were added; and in January this year, ground 9, was added on.

2. The grounds of appeal essentially relate to misdirections on the burden and standard of proof; failure to adequately consider the case presented by the Appellant; that the aggregate sum of money which the Appellant was convicted of stealing could not have been the property of the Government of Sierra Leone, in that it was money obtained from Bank; that the Indictment was bad in law in that it did not charge the Appellant with stealing any particular sum of money between certain stated dates; and that the verdict was unreasonable and cannot be supported having regard to the evidence.

THE TRIAL

3. On 25 August, 1999 The Hon. Mr Justice L B 0 Nylander, High Court Judge, gave his consent in writing for the preferment of a one count Indictment for the offence of Larceny by Servant contrary to Section 17(1)(a) of the Larceny Act, 1916 against the Appellant. He also Ordered that the Accused be arrested [p.113] by Warrant. On 26 August, 1999 the Appellant appeared before the said Learned Judge; he was identified as the person named in the Indictment; and his date of trial was fixed for 17 September, 1999

3. The Indictment read as follows

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE

LARCENY CONTRARY TO SECTION 17(2) (a) of the larceny Act 1916.

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE

SOLUKU BOCKARIE on a day unknown between 1st and 30th June, 1999 at Freetown in the Western Area of Sierra Leone, being Clerk or Servant to the Government of Sierra Leone stole the sum of Le294,433,411/00 from the said Government of Sierra Leone.

4. There is no indication in the Record, the number of witnesses listed at the back of the Indictment, but a perusal of pages 6-19 of the Record shows that there were about 10 additional witnesses, the respective summaries of whose evidence, appeared in these pages. The brevity of these summaries, (save for at least two, which were copies of statements obtained from these witnesses by the Police), apparently filed in pursuance of Section 188 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1965 when contrasted with the length of evidence led from these same witnesses, provides considerable food for thought as to whether the prosecution quite knew what its case was at its commencement, or whether it merely wished to 'ambush' the Defence. This practice, or rather 'ambush tactic' though not unlawful, in my judgment, detracts from the cohesiveness and consistency of the prosecution's case and has the tendency to way-lay the prosecution.

5. Though the trial date was fixed for 17 September, 1999, the Record does not show that any proceedings were taken that day. The case was first mentioned for hearing on 21 September, 1999 before the Hon Mr. Justice M O TAJUDEEN now deceased. No plea was taken on this date, nor on the 9 other adjourned dates, until 2 March 2000 when the Appellant pleaded Not Guilty to the Indictment before the same Judge. The matter was again adjourned at the request of the prosecution to another date, and to other dates until 30 May, 2000 when the said Judge noted at the bottom of Page 25 of the Record, that he was 'disabling himself from this case as from now.' No reasons for so doing were given. The case was adjourned to 8 June, 2000.

6. On 8 October, 1999 the then Attorney-General & Minister of Justice filed an Application pursuant to section 144(2) of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1965 for

7. On 8 June, 2000 the Appellant appeared before The Hon Mr Justice S. A. ADEMOSU, then High Court Judge. The charge was again read over to the appellant and he pleaded Not Guilty to the same. The prosecution began leading evidence on that day. 14 witnesses in all were called by the prosecution. The prosecution closed its case on 8 August, 2000. On 11 August, 2000 after his rights had been explained to him, the Appellant elected to rely on his statement to the Police. He had no witnesses. The matter was adjourned for addresses. The then DPP addressed the Court on behalf of the prosecution on 17 August, 2000; and the Appellant's Counsel, R. A. CAESAR Esq on 21 August, 2000. Judgment was reserved for 30 August, 2000 on which date it was delivered.

ISSUES

8. The first matter which has exercised my mind, is the charge in respect of which Mr. Justice Nylander gave his consent on page 2 of the Record. The charge, there is Section 17(1) (a) of the Larceny Act, 1916. The Application for trial by Judge alone, also refers to Section 17(1) (a) of the same Act, The Indictment filed, and which appears on page 1 refers to Section 17(2) (a). The Judgment at page 133 also refers to Section 17(2) (a). At page 35 of the record DPP applied for the Indictment to be amended so that 17(1) (a) should be read as 17(2) (a). The Application was granted. But no consequential amendments were made, so that the Order for Trial by Judge Alone which governed, the conduct of the trial applied only to a trial for an offence under Section 17(1)(a). The question which arises here is, could the Appellant be lawfully convicted of an offence in respect of which no consent was given by a Judge, and in respect of which he had not been committed for trial, notwithstanding Section 148 of the CPA165? Also could he lawfully be tried by Judge alone, notwithstanding the absence of an Order authorized him to be so tried in respect of the amended charge? If the answer to these questions is no, then it would seem the trial was a nullity.

THE CHARGE

9. Notwithstanding the query I have posed above, I propose to deal with the substance of the appeal. I shall start off with the charge. The charge refers to a lump sum of Le 294,433,411/00 which the Appellant is alleged to have stolen on a day unknown between two days. As this is an aggregate amount, the question arises whether it is proper to charge the larceny of a lump sum in one count, or in other words, whether it is proper for the prosecution to bring a charge where there has been a general deficiency of monies. The subject [p.115] matter of the charge is the proceeds of the encashment of 35 cheques. On the evidence, it is clear that 24 of these cheques are dated 3 June, 1999 and the remaining 11, 4 June, 1999. Two of these cheques, GSL153945 — pages 263 & 264 of Volume II of the Record, and GSL153936 — pages 273 & 274 of the same volume, were encashed on 9 June, 1999 by PW5 FRANCIS JOHNNY TOMA; and the others were encashed by PW6 ALLIE KHADAR on 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 14th, 18th, and 23rd June, 1999 respectively — see pages 263-297 of the same volume, These cheques were drawn for specific amounts of money. Clearly, the offence of Larceny was committed on several days and not, as was canvassed by the Prosecution, and held by the Learned Trial Judge (LTJ) on a day unknown between two days. The substance of the prosecution's case is not that the Appellant received these monies on a particular day, but on different days after the same had been collected by PW5 4 PW6 respectively. The evidence led, was thus at variance with the charge.

10. Rule 3(1) of our Indictment Rules which are to be found in the 1st Schedule to the CPA.1965, tells us that "....where more than one offence is so charged....each offence shall be set out in the information or indictment in a separate paragraph called a count. "Archibald 30th Edition tells us at paragraph 1738 that" It is not sufficient to prove a general deficiency of money; some specific sum must be proved to have been embezzled, in like manner as a larceny some, article must be proved to have been stolen." In paragraph 1738 it is stated further that" Where the Indictment contains only one count, charging the receipt of a gross sum on a particular day, and it appears in evidence that the money was received in different sums on different days, the prosecutor will be put to his election and must confine himself to one sum and one day". But if it had been the duty of the employee to render an account and hand over all monies received on a certain day, he could be charged with embezzling the whole amount on the day he was due to render such an account. This was certainly not the case here. It is stated further, that where it is possible to trace the individual items and to prove an embezzlement of individual property or money, it is undesirable to include them in a count alleging a general deficiency. R v TOMLIN [1954] Vol. 2 All ER 272. C.A. is sufficient authority for this proposition of Law, though on the facts of that case, the individual amounts embezzled could not be traced There PEARSON, J stated at page 274 para. A "Where separate offences can be charged in separate counts the court regards as improper an "omnibus" count in an indictment charging an aggregate of fences over a long period." The Court approved the reasoning along the same lines of LYNSKEY, J in R v LAWSON [1952] Vol. I AIIER 804 at page 808.

11. BLACKSTONE'S CRIMINAL PRACTICE 1992 Edition also deals extensively with this issue under the rubric of Duplicity and Quasi-Duplicity. At Paragraph 08.16 page 1134 the Editors state that "if the evidence called at the trial in fact establishes more than one offence, then, subject to amendment of the indictment, if possible, the accused will be entitled to an acquittal, not because the count was bad, but because the prosecution have failed to prove him guilty of the precise offence charged in the count even though they may have proved him guilty of some other offence." In the instant ease, the prosecutions have alleged that a day unknown between two dates, the Appellant stole a specific amount of money, whilst the evidence led at the trial was to the effect that several amounts of money were stolen on different dates. It is not the case here as it was in JEMMISON v PRIDDLE (1979) 69 Cr App R 83 at pp 86-78 where LORD WIDGERY in the QBD Div Ct held that".... what it means is this, that it is legitimate to charge in a single information one activity even though the activity may involve more than one act." There the activity was shooting deer without a gaming licence, and the issue was whether the firing of several shots by the Appellant was one activity or several activities. The instant case appears to me to sound more of Quasi-Duplicity than Duplicity simpliciter. Once evidence had been led from PW5 &. 6, it is my considered opinion that the prosecution should have been called upon, if that were possible at that stage, to sever the Indictment into several counts, reflecting the dates the several cheques were encashed.

POINT NOT CANVASSED

12. I have noted that this point was not canvassed by the Defence at the trial, and it may be argued that that being the case, the Appellant may not have suffered any injustice, and that this Court should apply the proviso. I would be most willing to do so where the circumstances to so permit. But in order to do so, I should have to do considerable violence to our criminal jurisprudence, and I do not wish to embark on such a perilous course. It seems to me, that where the Court below went wrong, was in its focus on the Appellant's explanation of what he did with the proceeds of the cheques. It appears to me that the LTJ was put off by the allegations made by the Appellant in his statement to the police, and by Counsel in his cross-examination of the then Minister of Education, Dr Alpha Wurie, PW13, that some of the monies so received were passed on to him. In that statement, the Appellant had clearly admitted that the proceeds of the several cheques were indeed received by him, and that he disbursed the same in a particular manner. This was clearly criminal conduct of most reprehensible kind, coming as it did, so soon after the bloody rebel invasion of Freetown. But a Court of Law should not allow itself to be swayed by righteous indignation, but by sound principles of Law. The LTJ has considerable [p.117] experience in trying criminal cases, but he appears to have cast aside this reservoir of knowledge as a result of such indignation. His frequent references to the above allegation during his Judgment, provides evidence that his mind was greatly exercised by this apparent calumny, than by the propriety and efficacy of the prosecution's case.

BURDEN .AND, STANDARD OF PROOF

12. It led also to his summary dismissal of Defence Counsel's submissions on the burden and standard of proof. That the principle enshrined in WOOLMINGTON's case applies to all criminal cases, is without doubt. It applies much more strongly, where the Judge is both Judge of Law and fact. The LTJ erroneously, in my view, confined that principle to cases of murder or manslaughter only at page 146 of the Record. The Sierra Leone cases confirming this principle are numerous, and I shall only cite those which have been reported: HALL v R [1964-66] ALR SL 189; LABOR-JONES v R [1964-66] ALR SL 471; KOROMA v R [1964-66] ALR SL 542; BOB-JONES v R [1967-68] ALR. SL 267; AMARA v R [1968-69] ALR SL 220; KARGBO v R [1968-69] ALR SL 1354; SAHR BOMBAY Cr App 1/76 C.A was unreported. All of these cases confirm that the legal burden of proof in a criminal case always rests on the prosecution, and that it never shifts; and that the burden lies on the prosecution to prove every element of the offence with which an accused person has been charged beyond a reasonable doubt. Could this Court hold that the prosecution in the Court below proved beyond a reasonable doubt that on a day unknown between the 1st and 30th day of June, 1999, the Appellant stole the aggregate, sum of Le294,433,411/00? I opine not. The evidence points in the opposite direction. There is credible evidence that the Appellant did, in his capacity as an employee of the Government of Sierra Leone, receive the various amounts of money exhibited at pages 263-297 of Volume II of the Record. But rather unfortunately, he is not charged with the larceny of these individual amounts. I consider this omission a grave error on the part of the prosecuting authorities, and I consider it also rather unfortunate that right up to the end of the case, the error was riot brought home to them, and thus rectified.

ARGUMENTS OF COUNSEL

13. I have read through the written submissions filed and presented by Counsel for the Appellant and for the Respondent respectively. I note that Counsel for the Respondent, in that written submission, has not seriously contested the issues raised by the Appellant. Nor did Counsel who appeared in this Court on behalf of the State. The Appellant argued further, that the money stolen was not the property of the Government of Sierra Leone, but that of the Government's Bank, the Bank of Sierra Leone, in that the monies were on the [p.118] several dates, collected from the Bank by PW5 & PW6, and brought to the Appellant in his office. That may be true where the person accused has not reduced the money, nor the valuable security, into his employer's possession through his own hands, or the hands of a co-employee. Here, the evidence clearly shows that whenever the cheques were encashed, the proceeds thereof were handed over to the Appellant by these two witnesses, and the same was misappropriated by the Appellant. Such conduct amounts to stealing the Government of Sierra Leone's money within the meaning of Section 17(2)(a) of the Larceny Act, 1916. It proscribes stealing money "entrusted to, or received or taken into possession by a person by virtue of his employment." Counsel also relied on the old case of SOLOMON v R (1920-36) ALR SL 59. There, the money alleged to have been stolen was never reduced into the possession of the accused person's employer. The money was paid over by Genet, at the accused person's behest, to his wife, who then paid the same over to one Betts. Though Solomon's employer was the eventual loser, since he had to repay Genet the money he had paid over to Solomon's wife, the facts of the case had stronger affinity with the offences of obtaining money by false pretences and fraudulent conversion of property, rather than with Larceny. Mr. Justice Purcell's direction to the jury on the intent to defraud at page 62 LL15-17 bears this out.

CONCLUSION

14. Had it not been for the view I have taken in paras 11-12 above, and had this Court the power to sever the Indictment into its several parts as the evidence led at the trial so demands, I should have had no hesitation in holding that the money stolen belonged to the Government of Sierra Leone.

15. In the result, I hold that the Indictment as it stands, is insupportable in law, and cannot ground a conviction for Larceny under the Larceny Act, 1916. I do not think this an appropriate case in which to apply the proviso. It follows that the Appellant's appeal is allowed. His conviction and sentence are SET ASIDE and an ACQUITTAL AND DISCHARGE substituted in their stead.

JUSTICE OF APPEAL

HAMILTON, J.A

I have had the opportunity of reading before hand the draft judgment of my learned brother Honourable Justice N.C. Browne-Marke and the dissenting judgment of my learned brother Honourable Justice Bode Rhodes- Vivour.

I agree entirely with the conclusion reached and the reasons therefore of my learned brother Honourable Justice N.C. Browne-Marke. I have nothing useful to add to his conclusion. I do concur with the decision reached by him therefore that the appeal be allowed, the conviction and sentence set aside and an acquittal and discharge be substituted.

DISSENTING JUDGMENT OF HON. JUSTICE BODE RHODES- VIVOUR JSC

I have had the benefit of reading in draft the judgment of my learned brother, Hon. Justice N. Browne-Marke and regret that after full consideration of the issues involved in this appeal, I find myself unable to agree with his conclusions. At the trial fourteen prosecution witnesses gave evidence. Evidence led showed that the appellant stole the sum of Le294, 423,411/00. The said sums were salaries for teachers in the Southern Province for the period April and May, 1999 and at the time the offence was committed the appellant was the Permanent Secretary in the Ministry of Education, Youths and Sports.

After the prosecution closed its case this is what transpired.

DEFENCE

Accused is informed of his rights. He elects to rely on his statement to the Police and calling no witness.

The appellant did not give evidence or call any witness in defence of the charge; rather he relied on his statement to the Police. The contents of this statement is alarming. It reads in part:

"…….. From time to time I gave cheques to Allie Khadar who was a ward to me to encash the said cheques at the Bank of Sierra Leone to meet the Ministries demand. In this way the total value of the thirty five Government of Sierra Leone cheques drawn in favour of teachers salaries in Bo for the months of April and May 1999 was [p.121] expended. Like I had always said such unauthodox arrangements are never recorded not witnessed and are built on confidence between the parties, i. e. the Minister and I. I now regret that 1 trusted him only to find that he was using me as a scape goat to divert attention away from himself……".

PW5 is Francis Johnny Toma. In his sworn testimony in Court he said he gave 35 cheques to the appellant. PW6 is Allie Khadar. He agrees with the statement above, that the appellant gave him cheques to encash and he encashed them and handed the money to the appellant.

The case for the appellant is that he stole the said sum for the then Minister of Education, Youths and Sports. He and his Counsel apparently forgot that stealing/larceny is a strict liability offence. The appellant has to answer for his acts. That is why the learned trial judge in a well considered judgment found as follows:

"In my judgment and on the authorities earlier cited I hold that the accused bears full responsibility for all the proceeds of the thirty five cheques he encashed through PW5, Toma and PW6, Allie Khadar.

Without any iota of doubt in my mind I am satisfied enough to say that the guilt of the accused has been proved by the prosecution beyond any shadow of doubt. For all the forgoing reasons I find the accused guilty as charged……".

The reasoning and conclusion above is based on the clearest and most compelling evidence. The appellant was found guilty and sentenced to seven years imprisonment.

According to my learned brother the appellant was charged with stealing a lump sum of Le294,423,411/00 on a day unknown between two days. Since the subject matter of the charge is the proceeds of the encashment of 35 cheques, there ought to be 35 counts. The evidence led, was thus at variance with the charge.

The ipsissima verba of the charge reads:

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE

SOLOKOR JEHMIL BOCKARI on a day unknown between 1st and 30th June 1999 at Freetown in the Western Area of Sierra Leone being Clerk or Servant to the Government of Sierra Leone stole the sum of Le294, 423,411/00 from the said Government of Sierra Leone.

The well laid down position of the law is that charge(s) for any offence(s) may be joined in the same indictment if those charge(s) are founded on the same fact or from or are a part of a series of offences of the same or similar character. That is to say all charge(s) of the same character can be lumped together. See

Rv. Tavlor 1925 18Cr. App R.P. 25, R v. Clarke 1925 18 Cr. App R.P. 166. In this case PW6 was instructed by the appellant to encash the said cheques. He encashed them and gave the money to the appellant. In my view if there were 35 counts the evidence to prove them would be the same or similar in [p.123] character. In the instant case the charge is not even defective, but assuming that it is defective, the law is that a defective charge could in appropriate cases be cured. It is settled law that a defect in a charge which does not render it bad in law cannot nullify a conviction so long as an offence known to law is disclosed in the charge. In the Particulars of the offence the appellant as servant to the Government of Sierra Leone, which he was as Permanent Secretary stole the sum of Le294,423,410. An offence known to law is very clearly disclosed in the charge. The second rule to apply in criminal appeal is to consider whether the conviction is right. To my mind the conviction is right.

The indictment charged the appellant with having on divers days between February 1909 and 4th October 1910 unlawfully had carnal knowledge of his daughter. A second count charged him with a similar offence on divers days between 4th October 1910 and the end of February 1913.

Objection was taken to the indictment on the ground that the two counts referred to were bad as charging more than one offence in fact an indefinite number of offences in each count. The objection was not sustained and the appellant was convicted.

On appeal it was held that the indictment was irregular in form ……. but that as the appellant had not been embarrassed or prejudiced in any way, the Court would act under and give effect to section 4 of the Criminal Appeal Act 1907, and dismiss the appeal.

The Court came to the conclusion that an amendment to an indictment ought not to have been made but there being no miscarriage of justice the proviso to section 4 of the Criminal Appeal Act 1907 came into operation, and their Lordships dismissed the appeal.

In John Harris 1910 5 Cr App R. 285

The decision was based upon the view that the indictment was bad, and the Court held, assuming that the indictment was bad, that the case came within the proviso of section 4(1) of the Criminal Appeal Act 1907, inasmuch as the jury had convicted on the clearest evidence and there was no appeal on the merits, and they found it impossible to say that any actual miscarriage of justice was occasioned.

In Rex v Asiegbu 3 WACA P.142

Both counts were open to objection on grounds of duplicity. The appeal was dismissed. The reasoning of the West African Court of Appeal was that since no objection was made in the trial Court to the charge, the Court of Appeal is therefore satisfied that the appellant was not prejudiced in any way and that no miscarriage of justice has resulted.

The old form of procedure was for the accused person not to object to a bad/defective charge at the trial Court. Allow the trial to proceed to conclusion and be convicted, then raise the issue of the charge being bad and then get off on appeal. Several accused persons got off on appeal, despite clear evidence. This prompted Parliament in England to promulgate the proviso of section 4 of the Criminal Appeal Act 1907. The intention of [p.125] Parliament was that no purely technical point should succeed. The test is whether the appellant was prejudiced in the trial.

Once the appellant was not embarrassed or prejudiced and no miscarriage of justice had occurred the appeal would be dismissed. In this case, the appellant pleaded not guilty to the charge, and was represented by Counsel right through the trial by Mr. R.A. Caesar. If the appellant was in any way prejudiced or embarrassed by the way in which the charge was framed objection could and should have been taken. See Rex v. N. Asiegbu (supra).

There was no objection to the charge rather the acts constituting the offence were admitted. The facts proved established the guilt of the appellant beyond reasonable doubt. The appellant was convicted on the clearest and most compelling evidence.

Miscarriage of justice is a failure of justice. It means failure on the part of the Court to do justice. It is justice misapplied, misappreciated. It is an ill conduct on the part of the Court which amounts to injustice. By no stretch of imagination can it be said that there was miscarriage of justice in the trial Court.

One of the objects of Section 4(1) of the Criminal Appeal Act 1907 is to prevent the quashing of a conviction upon a mere technicality which had caused no embarrassment or prejudice. It reads:

"Provided that the Court may notwithstanding that they are of opinion that the point raised in the appeal might be decided in favour [p.126] of the appellant, dismiss the appeal, If they consider that no substantial miscarriage of justice has actually occurred ".

Allowing this appeal by my learned brother is on a mere technicality and very peripheral. As long ago as 1907 the Courts have been departing from technicalities to doing substantial justice. Indeed in the Commonwealth of which Sierra Leone is a proud member, Courts of Law are more concerned with doing substantial justice. Courts of Law and Equity ought not to follow arid legalism or technicalities to the extent that justice in the matter is not done to the parties. Rules of Court must at all times be interpreted to prevent undue adherence to technicalities. Reliance on mere technicality to defeat the cause of justice will at all times be rebuffed by the Courts because for quite a long time now they are enjoined to do substantial justice. The days of technicality which sadly my learned brother relied on to allow the appeal are now in the remote past.

I must digress at this stage to say a thing or two about Counsel.

A Counsel retained to conduct a case has general authority to decide in his discretion how to conduct the case. Once a Counsel is retained, the client is bound by his conduct of the case. If the client is dissatisfied with the way Counsel conducts the case he can withdraw the case from him. It follows that a Counsel who has been briefed and has accepted the brief and indicated to the Court that he has instructions to conduct the case, he is to conduct the case in the manner proper to him. He can even compromise the case. He can submit to judgment. He could filibuster if he considers it necessary for the conduct of his case. The only thing open to the client is to withdraw [p.127] instructions from the Counsel, or if Counsel was negligent, sue in tort for professional negligence. Such are the powers but such are also the risks.

On 8/6/2000 the charge was read and explained to the appellant (see page 26 of the Record of Appeal). The appellant pleaded not guilty without a qualification of his plea that the charge as couched was ambiguous or unintelligible. Mr. R.A. Caesar represented the appellant throughout the trial. At no time did the appellant or his Counsel complain that he did not understand the charge. Rather his defence was his statement which is abundantly clear that the appellant stole the sum of Le294,423,411/00. When the charge as laid which avers that the appellant stole the sum of Le294,423,411/00 is read against the background that the appellant offered no sworn testimony, and no objection to the charge as couched, then any complaint of the charge being defective becomes hollow. To my mind is a mere storm in a teaport.

If the appellant was in some confusion as to the real purport of the charge his Counsel, Mr. R.A. Caesar should have so indicated by way of objection. He did not do so. That is not all. Learned Counsel for the appellant neither raised the issue during trial nor at final address. This to my mind clearly shows that the appellant was not misled, embarrassed or prejudiced by the charge and no miscarriage of justice occurred. On page 36 of the Record of Appeal after the trial judge ordered amendment of the charge inter alia to read Le294, 423,411/00 and not Le175, 093,000/00, this is what Mr. R.A. Caesar learned Counsel for the appellant had to say:

"I have no objection to the application for this amendment being sought but only to warn that I hope other amendments would not be made that might embarrass ".

Learned Counsel knew when his client could be embarrassed. As far as he was concerned the appellant was never embarrassed. It is clear the appellant was never embarrassed. The main and dominant issue in this appeal is whether the charge was sustainable. The charge is the substance of this appeal as quite rightly pointed out by my learned brother. Other points raised are trivial, not worth commenting on as anything said cannot improve this appeal.

The position of the law then and now is that since the appellant was not misled by the charge, no embarrassment or prejudice had been suffered, and there had not been a substantial miscarriage of justice the appeal would be dismissed. This is an appeal which is dismally devoid of merit. I hereby dismiss the appeal for lack of substance.

JUDGEMENT

ADEMOSU J.A.

By a generally indorsed Writ of Summons dated 16th February, 2004 the plaintiff instituted an action against the Defendants for the following relief?

1. A declaration that the Deed of Conveyance dated 25th November 1988 expressed to be made between the plaintiff and Samuel Olatilewa John covering an area of 84. 7265 acres registered as No. 529/88 in Volume 420 at page 120 of the Books of Conveyances is valid and did convey to the plaintiff freehold title.

2. A declaration that the Deed of Conveyance expressed to be made between the same Vendor and the plaintiff in respect of land at the [p.72] same Regent Road off Hill Station Regent Village registered as No. 156/91 at page 67 in Volume 446 of the Books of Conveyances is valid and did convey to the plaintiff the freehold title to 20.4723 acres.

3. A declaration that the Deed of Conveyance dated 21st day of April 1999 expressed to be made between the same Samuel Olatilewa John and Marcus Macauley and the plaintiff in respect of land at Regent Road, off Hill Station, Regent Village is valid and did convey to the plaintiff the freehold title to 409.1482 acres.

4. Perpetual injunction restraining the Defendants and each of them from signing any survey plans or leasing or in any way alienating any land contained in any of the 3 (three) recited conveyances.

5. Order for immediate possession for any already sold or leased.

6. Canceling and revoking any Deed of Conveyance or lease made by the defendants.

7. Damages for trespass.

8. Any further order

9. Costs.

The plaintiff has pleaded that by virtue of the 3 recited conveyances he acquired the free hold title to the respective pieces of land totaling 514.3388 acres.

The plaintiff filed a Statement of Claim. For the purposes of this judgment the salient averments are contained in paragraphs 5,6 and 7 and which are in these terms:

5) The plaintiff avers that all of the land above referred to and purchased by him was part of a total of 560 acres of Forest Reserve Land released by the Ministry of Agriculture, Natural Resources and Forestry to the Ministry [p.73] of Lands, Housing and Environment to be utilized for Residential Development and the records in the relevant Ministries would clearly substantiate and confirm this.

6) The plaintiff avers that to his consternation he discovered sometime in 1999 that Government Surveyors and other officials from the Defendants Ministry were busy trespassing on his land dividing it up and apparently selling or leasing parts of the said property to private individuals as if it were state land. It was suggested that part of the plaintiff's land should be utilized to create a "Land Bank" for the Government.

7) The plaintiff further avers that more recently, a huge chunk of his land has been given to the British Forces in Sierra Leone and it would appear that they have built on it and now in occupation thereof.

In the Joint Defence filed, the defendants denied paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 of the plaintiff's Statement of Claim and put the plaintiff to strict proof. The defendants further denied paragraph 5 of the Statement of Claim. Thereafter the defendants pleaded inter alia that the 560 acres of Forest Reserve Land released to the 1st defendant/appellant was done in response to a request from that Ministry for use as State Land for Government to lease to individuals for private residential development and further averred that no records exist at both the Ministry of Lands Country Planning and Environment and the Ministry of Agriculture, Natural Resources and Forestry that such an enormous acreage of land was ever released to the plaintiff/respondent or any of his predecessors in title.

The defence is closed with the general traverse.

The matter eventually went to trial. The plaintiff testified as to how he bought the land. He identified the 3 (three) recited conveyances which were executed in his favour. In support of his case the 3 recited conveyances were produced and tendered by one Ekundayo Pratt from Registrar-General's Office as exhibits A, B and C respectively. One Foday Jibba Anthony testified to the effect that he was [p.74] the licensed surveyor who prepared and signed the survey Plans in exhibits A and C. One James Morlai Bangura who was also a Licensed Surveyor deposed that the plaintiff engaged his services to prepare a composite plan incorporating all his properties at Regent Road, Hill Station and which he did and signed. It is in evidence as exhibit L.

I think it is significant to note that under cross-examination of the plaintiff, the plaintiff told the court inter alia.

"I cannot recollect off head now the total acreage of the land I bought but I do agree it is over 500 acres.

Presently I can remember 6 (six) off head of what is left of the land that is with me. There is a portion that has not been taken by the defendants. There are portions that I have sold long ago. I never know that this property had been under the control of Forestry nor was I ever told about it. All the beacons I had on the land were broken and State Land beacons are on it. They are claiming the entire land. I do not agree the said property is State Land. All the reliefs I am now claiming should be given to me as I am the real owner of this property".

This is briefly the evidence adduced in support of the plaintiffs/Respondent's claim against the defendants/appellants.

Evidence was called by the defendants/appellants side in support of their contention that the land was State Land.

After Counsel's addresses the learned trial judge reserved his judgment.

On the 12th of July, 2006 the learned trial judge entered judgment for the plaintiff/respondent and granted the following orders:

[p.75]

1. Declaration of title to the land in the 3 recited conveyances.

2. Perpetual injunction

3. Immediate possession of any portion that may have been leased or sold by the defendants.

4. Canceling or revoking any Deed of Conveyance or lease made by the defendants.

5. Damages for trespass assessed in the sum of Le 15,000,000.00

6. Order to reclaim land already acquired by any person or persons.

7. Costs to be taxed if not agreed.

Being dissatisfied with the decision the defendants have appealed to this Court. Six grounds of appeal were filed among which is the omnibus ground that the judgment is against the weight of the evidence.

The most remarkable aspect of the case is that while the plaintiff/respondent pleaded in his statement of claim that all of the lands in the 3 (three) recited Conveyances purchased by him were part of a total of 560 acres of Forest Reserve land released by the Ministry of Agriculture, Natural Resources and Forestry to the Ministry of Lands, Housing and Environment to be utilized for Residential Development and going on further to assert that the records in the relevant Ministries would clearly substantiate and confirm this.

It is observed that what happened at the trial was a complete departure from the above pleadings. The 3 (three) recited conveyances exhibits A, B, and C show that the lands which were conveyed to him were private lands through and through. It is trite learning that parties are bound by their pleadings and that any evidence adduced outside the pleadings goes to no issue.

That is why the law says that each party must plead all the material facts on which he means to rely at the trial otherwise he is not entitled to give any evidence of them at the trial.

Where the evidence at the trial established facts different from those pleaded by the plaintiff/respondent which constitutes a radical departure from the case pleaded by him the action will be dismissed. See Waghorn v. George Wimpey & Co. Ltd (1969) 1 W.L.R. 1764. More-over, if the plaintiff/respondent succeeds on findings of fact not pleaded by him like in the instant case, the judgment will not be allowed to stand and the Court of Appeal will either dismiss the action or order a new trial. See Lloyds V West-midland Gas Board (1971) 2 All E.R. 1240 C.A.). The learned trial judge based his findings on the three recited Conveyances expressed to be made between Samuel Olatilewa John and the plaintiff in respect of two of the conveyances and the third one between Samuel Olatilewa John and Marcus Macaulay on the one hand and the plaintiff on the other hand. The plaintiff was adjudged to be freehold title owner of the lands mentioned and described in those conveyances.

Whereas the learned trial judge did not avert his mind to the recitals in the said conveyances. For instance, the recitals in the conveyance (exhibit A) between Samuel Olatilewa John and the plaintiff indicate that one James Akie John died seised of a certain piece or parcel of land at Regent Road off Hill Station, Regent Village and the letters of Administration were taken out on 1/9/88 by Samuel Olatilewa John. That on 17.11.88 a Vesting Deed was executed in favour of plaintiff's vendor. It is noted that the plaintiff did not produce either the aforementioned letters of Administration or the Vesting Deed referred to in Exhibit A which would have revealed whether or not James Akie John died possessed of 84.7265 acres of land shown in survey plan LS597/85 attached to Exhibit A. dated 14th June 1985. Instead of proving that James Akie John died possessed of 84.7265 acres of land the Valuation certificate accompanying the letters of Administration reveals that James Akie John died possessed of 21/2 acres of land to convey to the plaintiff (nemo dat quod non habet).

Turning to exhibit B the conveyance between Samuel Olatilewa John and the plaintiff dated 23rd January 1991, the recitals are to the effect that the plaintiff's vendor Samuel Olatilewa John became seised of the property in exhibit B by virtue of conveyance dated 28th December 1990 which was not produced in evidence.

I think it is worthy to note that the plaintiff pleaded conveyance dated 10th July 1991 which was not produced or tendered in evidence. The long and short of this is that the plaintiff did not show that his vendor had title to 20.4723 acres which he purportedly passed to him.

Finally, as regards exhibit C dated 21st April 1999 between Samuel Olatilewa John and Marcus Macaulay on one hand and the plaintiff on the other hand, the situation here is even worse. The vendors claimed to be "Joint Owners". There was no document before the court indicating that they were Joint Owners of even one plot of the land conveyed in exhibit C showing a total of 409.1382 acres. They could not and were not Beneficial Owners of the properties which they purportedly conveyed to the plaintiff/respondent. At best they were personal representatives as it was only in that capacity they could have acted because the properties were not vested in them.

The law is settled that the recitals in a title deed are presumed to be evidence of the truth of the facts recited therein. It is nevertheless not conclusive proof of them and cannot operate as estoppel against a party who is able to show that he has a better title than the person named in the recitals. It is beyond argument that the plaintiff failed woefully to prove his case as pleaded.

The document (Conveyances) on which he founded his claim are far removed from his pleadings. The learned trial Judge should have stopped the plaintiff's case when the evidence being adduced was different from the pleadings. In the instant case without amending plaintiff's pleadings the matter proceeded on to judgment resulting in the learned trial judge pronouncing judgments on documents not pleaded. The law is that such a serious irregularity cannot be [p.78] waived by acquiescence on the part of counsel for the respondent. To me this seems to be a case of something being put on nothing. It is bound to fall.

The plaintiff failed to produce evidence that the Forest reserve lands he pleaded in his statement of claim had been released as pleaded by him and that there was some nexus between such released land and his conveyances upon which he based his title to the land he is claiming. Yet the learned trial judge declared that the conveyances were valid and did convey freehold title to the plaintiff.

The issue of boundaries is most crucial in a case of this nature identifying the land with certainty as well as credible evidence describing and establishing the origin of the title down to the plaintiff. It is always the duty of the plaintiff who seeks the decree of declaration of title to land to produce an accurate plan of the land sought to be so declared. Such a plan must also show clearly the dimensions of the land, the boundaries thereof and other salient features appertaining to the said land. See Akinola Baruwa v Ogunshola & Ors. 4 WACA 159; Kwadze v Adjei 10 WACA 274. England v Official Administrator (1964-66) A.L.R. SL 315 In Bittar v Baoma Tribal Authorities (1957-60) A.L.R. S.L. 123, it was held that it is important in drafting a summary in an action for ejectment or declaration of title that the area in question should be clearly defined and the test to be applied in determining this is whether a surveyor, from the record of the proceedings could produce a accurate plan of the land in dispute. In Udekwe Amata v Modekwe & ors 14 WACA 580 which was a claim for a declaration of title to land, a plan had been put in by consent. The defendant complained that the evidence of the boundaries was inadequate and that the boundary in dispute was undefined. Held that the precise boundaries were necessary particularly on the site in dispute but that the plan exhibited was inaccurate and the evidence so unsatisfactory that no judgment should be founded upon it.

In the plaintiff's statement of claim there is no description of the lands being claimed by him under cross examination and only told the court inter alia that he could not remember the amount of land he bought or what was left after what was taken away by the defendants. That he had sold portions of the land in [p.79] question to the National Insurance Company, MAGIC. Hon Justice Thompson Davies; Alhaji Baba Allie and others. There is no evidence indicating the portions he had sold to the above people.

It has been laid down as far back as 1935 that a plaintiff seeking a declaration of title to land must establish to the satisfaction of the court by evidence brought by him that he is entitled to such a declaration. Kondinye v Odu 2 WACA 336 at 337. The mere production of conveyance is not a proof a fee simple title. He must go further and prove that his predecessor in title had title to pass to him. See Seymour Wilson v Musa Abess (1981) Civ. App. 5/79 S.C. (unreported) per Livesey-Luke C.J.

In this appeal the plaintiff's case reveals two irreconcilable stories. One is that the land used to be part of Forest Reserve. The other is that the land was a private land owned by certain people who are unconnected with those the Forest Reserve was released to. Apart from tendering the conveyances, no evidence was produced to show how his predecessors-in-title came to possess the lands. This is fatal to the plaintiffs case. See Seymour Wilson supra at page 82. The issue about Estoppel raised by J.B. Jenkins-Johnson Esq. does not in any way help the plaintiff in discharging the heavy burden laid upon him by the law. The law is well settled that in an action for a declaration of title no burden lies on the defendant except when he puts up a counterclaim. There is no counterclaim in this case. The question about Estoppel is therefore of no moment.

I wish only to point out that as far as the facts of any given case are concerned the address of counsel is supposed to deal only with the evidence before the court. The mere mention of a matter in the course of such address is never a substitute for the evidence that has not been led nor can it supplement the inadequacy of the evidence already given at the trial. This goes for most of the submissions made by Counsel for the respondent.

In all the circumstances, I am satisfied and I hold that there was no sufficient evidence adduced to justify the granting to the plaintiff/respondent the reliefs [p.80] sought by him. For all the foregoing reasons, the judgment is set aside completely together with the order for costs. Costs of this appeal to the Appellant and such costs to be taxed if not agreed. Costs in the ……..and here to be taxed.

At the end of the trial he found the 1st and 2nd defendant guilty of Conspiracy to Defraud in Count 1, the 3rd defendant not guilty. On the nine other counts he found all three defendants not guilty and acquitted and discharged them. He sentenced the 1st and 2nd defendants on the first count, to a fine of Le500, 000 each.

BRIEF FACTS

In May/June 1998 the Ministry of Agriculture required seed rice for supply to farmers in Sierra Leone, presumably this was as a result some arrangement with the World Bank as they the World Bank were to finance the venture. The late Mr. P.O. Palmer, then deputy Director General, mindful of obtaining the seed rice from the West African sub region of Nigeria, Ghana, Ivory Coast and Guinea, solicited Profoma Invoice from businessmen to facilitate the supply of the said seed rice on the 26th June 1998 the 3rd accused Bockarie Kakay trading as Mariama & Sons submitted a Proforma Invoice through Mr. Abdul Cole Sales Manager in the 3rd accused business with the following details:—

The supply of 1000 metric tons of seed rice at $1,350 per metric tons - Le l, 350: supply should be completed between three to four weeks. The source of the supply was to be Ghana and was to be CIF Freetown.

The 3rd accused was invited to the Ministry of Agriculture and subsequently on the 3rd July 1998 a contract emboding all the terms and condition in the Profoma Invoice Exh. A was reproduced in a contract signed by the 1st accused 1st appellant Harry Will then Minister of Agriculture on behalf of the government and witnessed by the 2nd accused/2nd appellant [p.96] Lamina Feika the then Director General. The 3rd accused/respondent also signed the contract. Mr. Abdul Cole, Sales Manager of the 3rd accused business enterprise also signed the contract as a witness.

It is this contract which is the subject matter of the action brought by the State against Harry Will 1st accused, Lamina Feika 2nd accused and Bockarie Kakay trading as Mariama & Sons, 3rd accused culminating in the indictment against them for conspiracy etc.

THE RIGHT OF APPEAL

The 1st and 2nd accused/appellant Harry Will and Lamina Feika respectively appealed to the Court of Appeal against their conviction and sentence on Count 1. The State cross appealed on a question of law against the acquittal of the 3rd accused Bockarie Kakay on Count 1, 3, 4, 6, 7, 9 and 10 against 1st and 2nd accused on Counts 2, 5, and 8.

The appeal is brought pursuant to Secs. 57a and 57b of the Courts Act 1965 No.31 of 1965 as amended and Sec. 6 of Act No. 21 of 1966 which state as follows:

S.57(1) "A person convicted by the Supreme Court now High Court may appeal to the Court of Appeal against the conviction on any ground of appeal which involves a question of law alone

(b) and with leave of the Court of Appeal or upon the certificate of the Judge who tried him that it is just case for appeal against conviction on any ground of appeal which involves a question of fact alone, or a question of mixed law and fact, or any other ground which appears to the court to be sufficient ground of appeal."

(c) "With the leave of the Court of Appeal against sentence passed on his conviction unless the sentence is one fixed by law."

S.57(1) "Any person aggrieved by the acquittal or discharge of an accused or defendant before the Supreme Court (now High Court) may appeal against such acquittal or discharge."

Sec. 129 of the Constitution; Act No. 6 of 1991 also gives the Court of Appeal power to hear and determine appeals from the High Court.

Sec. 129 states:

"The Court of Appeal shall have jurisdiction throughout Sierra Leone to hear and determine, subject to the provisions of this section and of this constitution appeals from any judgment [p.97] decree or order of the High Court of Justice or any justice thereof and such other appellate jurisdiction as may be conferred upon it by this Constitution or any other law."

And any such appeal from the High Court lies as of right to the Court of Appeal. See Sec. 129(2) of the Constitution.

The powers of the Court of Appeal on an appeal on a question of law is spelt out in Sec. 58 (a) and (b) of the Courts Act No.31 of 1965 as amended, by sec. 7 of the Act No.21 of 1966 which states:

58a on an appeal against acquittal or discharged of the accused or defendant the Court of Appeal notwithstanding that it is of the opinion that the question of law raised in the appeal might be decided in favour of the appellant dismiss the appeal if it considers that no substantial miscarriage of justice has actually occurred.

(b) Subject or without prejudice to the provision of paragraph (a) the Court of Appeal may affirm or alter the decision appealed against.

(ii) Except in cases where an accused has been acquitted of a criminal offence punishable by death, reverse the decision appealed against.

(iii) Order a retrial of accused or defendant.

(c) In every such case the Supreme Court now High Court may give such consequential direction as it may deem fit."

GROUNDS

The grounds of appeal of the 1st appellant is as follows:

1. The learned trial Judge erred in law in failing to properly consider the ingredients of the offence of Conspiracy to defraud and consequently failed to consider whether the essential ingredient of the offence were proved by the Prosecution.

2. That the learned trial Judge erred in law in failing to properly relate the law to the facts and to properly evaluate the evidence and thereby effectively denied the appellant the prospect of being acquitted of the offence of conspiracy to defraud as charged in the indictment.

[p.98]

That the verdict is unreasonable and cannot be supported having regard to the evidence adduced.

The grounds of appeal of the 2nd Appellant Lamina Feika are as follows:

1. That the learned trial Judge's verdict is unreasonable and cannot be supported having regard to the evidence.

2. That the learned trial Judge (the trial being by Judge alone) misdirected himself in that he failed or failed adequately consider the case or at all the case put forth by the defence.

3. The learned trial Judge misdirected himself in arriving at a verdict of guilty on Count One.

When the appeal came up for hearing in the Court of Appeal Mr. R.A. Caesar Learned Counsel for the 2nd Appellant successfully applied for an amendment to his ground of appeal by the addition of the following particulars:

Particulars of Errors of Facts

4(a) In the review of the evidence of the 2nd accused (2nd appellant) the learned trial Judge said inter alia "After the 1997 coup we had a lot of problems distributing on our production area. Distribution of 40% production. 40% till now. In 1998 the level of destruction has not yet been measured. I have seen the 2nd page of Exh. T the second paragraph. According to Exh. T the production capacity has been destroyed 60%-70 %.

There is clear contradiction between the learned trial Judges conclusion inter alia in his judgment at page 594 at lines 17-25. Page 595 lines 1-5 said: if the contract was signed there is no evidence that there was rice in the country. Yet the learned trial Judge found that "I believe the evidence of this witness seed rice was available during this period.

(b) P.W. 8 Korteque under examination in chief said he signed the document regarding the loan. If he was not satisfied that the correct procedure had been adopted, see page 208 line 13 onwards.

[p.99]

Under cross-examination by Counsel for the appellant the said P.W. 8 said:

I signed the application forms. I signed Exh. U because the correct procedure had been adopted. I would not here signed it 208 lines 7 onwards."

As I said earlier the state appealed against the acquittal of the 1st and 2nd appellant on the other ground and the 3rd accused the other Counts including Count 1 on which he was acquitted.

The Grounds (cross Appeal)

Harry Will — 1st Respondent

1. That the learned trial Judge erred in law in failing to consider adequately or at all the role played by the respondent Harry Will and the legal effect and consequence of that role in relation to the transaction in respect of which the said respondent Harry Will was charged with the offence of causing money to be paid to another by false pretences and thereby he erred in law in acquitting and discharging the said Harry Will of the several charges of causing money to be paid to another by false pretences preferred in the indictment against him.

2. That the learned trial Judge erred in law in failing to consider and/or apply adequately or at all and accurately the correct and appropriate legal principles relating to the offence of "Causing money to be paid to another by false pretences" contrary to Sec. 32(1) of the Larceny Act of 1916 and the said legal principles applied to the said offences with which the Respondent Harry Will was charged and thereby he erred in law in holding that the several charges of the said offence preferred against the said Respondent in the several counts in the indictment had not been proved beyond reasonable doubt by the prosecution and in consequence he erred in law in acquitting and discharging the said Respondent of the said offences.

3. The Learned trial Judge erred in law in failing to evaluate the evidence as adduced against the Respondent Harry Will in respect of the counts preferred against him and to apply the appropriate law to such evidence as he had a duty in him to do but merely read and recited the address of Counsel without any analysis of the appropriate law and into application to such evidence as adduced at the trial and thereby erred in law by evincing a [p.100] total lack of appreciation of both the appropriate law and the evidence adduced in support of the charges preferred against the said respondent.

4. Having regard to:

(a) The charge of conspiracy to defraud as laid against the respondent Harry Will and two other persons to wit Bockarie Kakay trading as Mariama and Sons and Lamin Feika.

(b) The finding of the learned trial Judge that the falsity of the representation made by the said Harry Will and Lamina Feika in the said charges of conspiracy to defraud was proved beyond reasonable doubt against the said respondent Harry Will and Lamina Feika.

(c) The finding of the learned trial Judge that the money to the account of Mariama & Sons in the several counts of Causing money to be paid to another by false pretences preferred against the respondent Harry Will and the said Lamina Feika were made as a result of the said false representation found to have been made by the said respondent Harry Will and Lamina Feika.

The learned trial Judge in the premises erred in law in arriving at an inconsistent and or absurd decision when he acquitted and discharged the respondent Harry Will of several charges of causing money to be paid to another by false pretences contrary to section 32(1) of the Larceny Act 1916.

I note that the grounds in the cross appeal with regards to Lamina Feika the 2nd respondent is the same as the ground pertaining to the 1st respondent which I have already recited in this judgment. Therefore there is no need for me to record the ground of cross appeal pertaining to 2nd respondent and whatever I say in this judgment relating to the 1st respondent is applicable to the 2nd respondent.

The other grounds relate to Bockarie Kakay trading as Mariama & Sons the 3rd respondent. The state being dissatisfied with the acquittal of Bockarie Kakay trading as Mariama & Sons and whose address is 21 Charlotte Street, Freetown do hereby give you Notice of Appeal against the acquittal and discharge of the said Bockarie Kakay [p.101] trading as Mariama & Sons (the particulars of which here after appear) to the Court on a question of law, that is to say the question of law on which the state desires to appeal. In that the learned trial Judge erred in law in failing to consider and or apply adequate or the correct legal principle relating to the offence of conspiracy to defraud with which the respondent Bockarie Kakay trading as Mariama & Sons in the transaction which formed the subject matter of the charge of conspiracy to defraud preferred against the respondent, Bockarie Kakay trading as Mariama & Sons and others in consequence where of he held that the said Bockarie Kakay trading as Mariama & Sons was not guilty of the said offence of conspiracy to defraud.

That having regard to:

(a) The offence of conspiracy to defraud as charged against the respondent Bockarie Kakay trading as Mariama & Sons and two other persons to wit Harry Will and Lamina Feika.

(b) That the findings of the learned trial Judge that conspiracy to defraud charged was proved against the said two other accused person.

(c) The object of the said conspiracy to defraud as found out by the learned trial Judge.

(d) The role played by the respondent Bockarie Kakay, trading as Mariama & Sons in the said transaction as found by the learned trial Judge."

The learned trial Judge erred in law in arriving at an inconsistent and/or absurd decision in respect of the said count and thereby erred in law in acquitting and discharging the said respondent of the said offence.

3. That the learned trial Judge erred in law in failing to consider adequately or at all the legal effect and consequence of the role played by the respondent Bockarie Kakay trading as Mariama & Sons was charged with the offence of Causing money to be paid to him by false pretence.

4. That the learned trial Judge erred in law in failing to consider and/or apply adequately of at all the law relating to the offence of Causing money to be paid to another by false pretences contrary to Sec.32(1) of the Larceny Act 1916 with which the respondent [p.102] Bockarie Kakay trading as Mariama & Sons was charged and thereby erred in law in holding that the charge of the same offence preferred against the said respondent in the several counts said against him had not been proved beyond reasonable doubt by the Prosecution and in consequence he erred in law in acquitting and discharging the said respondent of the said offence.

5. That the learned trial Judge erred in law in failing to consider and/or apply adequately or at all and accurately the law relating to the offence of obtaining money by false pretences contrary to Sec. 32(1) of the Larceny Act 1916 with which the respondent Bockarie Kakay trading as Mariama & Sons was charged and thereby erred in law in holding that the charges of this offence preferred against the said respondent in the several counts of the indictment had not been proved beyond reasonable doubt by the Prosecution and in consequence erred in law in acquitting and discharging the said respondent of the said offence.

6. That the learned trial Judge erred in law in failing to consider adequately or at all the correct or proper legal principles as they apply in respect of each of the several charges preferred in the indictment against the Respondent Bockarie Kakay trading as Mariama & Sons and as consequence he erred in law in holding that as a matter of law the said charge had been proved beyond reasonable doubt by the Prosecution and thereby acquitting and discharging the said respondent of each of the said counts.

7. That the learned trial Judge erred in law to evaluate adequately or at all the evidence as adduced against the respondent Bockarie Kakay trading as Mariama & Sons in respect of several counts preferred against him and to apply the appropriate legal principles to such evidence as he had a duty in law to do but merely or generally read or recited the address of counsel and the evidence without any analysis of the appropriate law and its application to such evidence as adduced at the trial and thereby emoting a total lack of appreciation of both the appropriate law relating to the case in relation to the evidence adduced in proof of the said charges preferred.

Count 1:

Statement of Offence: — Conspiracy to defraud

[p.103]

Particulars of Offence: Dr Harry Will, Laimina Feika and Bockarie Kakay trading as Mariama & Sons on divers days between the 1st day of June 1998 and the 31st day of July 1999 at Freetown in the Western Area of Sierra Leone with intent to defraud (together with other persons unknown) the Government of Sierra Leone by causing the said Government to incur greater liability and expenses than was warranted by means of false representation oral or written by the said Dr Harry Will, Lamina-Feika and Bockarie Kakay trading as Mariama and Sons relating to the time of supply CIF Freetown to the said Government by the said Bockarie Kakay trading as Mariama and Sons of 1000 metric tons of good quality seed rice from Ghana, and also by means of oral and written representation made by then relating to the cost price of the said 1000 metric tons of the seed rice and the urgency and the need for procuring the same from outside Sierra Leone.

THE LAW OF CONSPIRACY:

Conspiracy is defined in Barons Dictionary of legal terms as “a combination of two or more persons to commit an unlawful act or to commit a lawful act by unlawful means” Unless two or more persons are found to have combined there can be no conviction for conspiracy see R. v Plumner 1902 2 K.B. 328. The agreement is an advancement of the intention to commit the crime of conspiracy. If the act or the design rest with the intention only, it cannot be a conspiracy, see Mulcahy R. 1868 WR 34. The offence is complete when there is an agreement to do the substantive act. R. v Aspinall 1876 2 OBD 48

It is a common law offence and common law is usually defined as the common sense of the community, crystallized and formulated by ancestral sages. Blackstone refers to the common law as "the cornerstone of the laws of England which is a general and immemorial custom or common law from time to time declared in the decisions of the court of justice which decisions are preserved among our public court, explained in our reports and digested for general use in the authoritative writings of the venerable sages of the law."

Generally it is laid down by the decisions of the courts as opposed by statute law or laws enacted by Parliament.

The Prosecution to succeed on an indictment for conspiracy to defraud it must prove the following:

The existence of a conspiracy or circumstances from which the court may presume that the accused person were engaged in a conspiracy see R. V. Murphy 1837 E.q. Volume 23, It must be shown that the accused person pursuance of a criminal purpose. See R. v Griffith 42 CAR Page 279.

That the unlawful acts are done in pursuance of the same objective - it makes no difference whether the unlawful acts are started by one and completed by the other.

The acts done in pursuance of the agreement are merely evidence to prove the fact of the said agreement. The agreement presupposes that it may be expressed or implied, to achieve the common purpose. The act done must be within the ambit of the common purpose, see R. Smith 3 AER 597. It is the general rule that once the agreement is proved, the act or statement of the accused persons involved are admissible evidence against a co-conspirator. The agreement is not always proved by direct evidence, by looking at what the accused person said and did. These are commonly called the overt acts, see DPP v Doot 1973 1 AER 946 at 1943, but also by circumstantial evidence. However in cases in which conspiracy is alleged to have been committed in the course of a transaction as in this case under my pen, in which each accused has his own duty to perform it is vital for the prosecution to lead evidence of participation by each accused to the conspiracy in order to prove concert, consistent and overt act on the part of each accused person calculated to bring into fruition the offence of conspiracy.

Where the conspiracy is to commit a substantive offence as in this case "with intent to defraud". The prosecution must prove fraud. In R. v Sinclair 1968 WLR 1246 the court said that in proving such fraud the prosecution must establish that the conduct of the accused was deliberately dishonest and the test of such dishonesty is subjective.

THE ISSUES

The object of the contract between the 1st appellant and the 3rd respondent was for the supply of 1000 tons seed rice to the Ministry of Agriculture for the contract price of $1, 350 per metric ton. It seems clear to me that the prosecution is saying that the means of achieving this objective was unlawful. This being the case and before I proceed further, it is of some relevance if is dwell a little on the word "unlawful" in the indictment.

"Unlawful" is defined in Barons Dictionary of legal terms as "an act performed without the bounds of the law or authorized by the law and which gives rise to an activity which is illegal and contrary to public policy."

Can it then be said that when the 1st appellant entered into the contract with the 3rd respondent for the supply of seed rice, he was acting unlawfully? I opine not.

Sec. 53(1) of the 1991 Constitution states:—

"Subject to the provision of the Constitution the executive powers of Sierra Leone shall rest on the President and may be exercised by him directly or [p.105] through member of his Cabinet, Ministers, Deputy Minister or Public Officers subordinate to him."

There is no dispute that up to the time the 1st appellant was indicted for the offence of conspiracy etc. he was a Minister in the Government of Sierra Leone. Section 56 (1) of the same Constitution states:

"There shall be in addition to the office of Vice President such other office Minister and Deputy Minister as may be established by the President."

It is also not in dispute that the Ministry of Agriculture was established by the President and the 1st appellant appointed to that Ministry as the Minister of Agriculture.

Sec. 62 of the Constitution also states:—

"Where any Minister has been charged with the responsibility for a department of Government he shall exercise general direction and control, the department shall be under the supervision of a Permanent Secretary whose office shall be a Public Office."

It seem clear to me that the combined effect of Sec. 53 (1) and 56(1) gives the President the power to create a Ministry and appoint a Minster who will assist him in carrying out the duty and functions of Government. One such appointment was the 1st appellant to take charge of the Ministry of Agriculture and when such appointment is made Sec. 62 of the Constitution makes it clear that, that person is charged with the responsibility of controlling and supervising the department. Therefore when the 1st appellant entered into the contract for the purchase of seed rice he was carrying out his function within the limit or ambit of his ministerial powers.

In my view entering into such a contract on behalf of the government per se cannot be regarded as an unlawful act. Moreover the World Bank who was to finance the Project had given the go ahead to the Ministry.

The next point I wish to raise is the issue of cost price in the particulars of the offence in the indictment. I shall quote the relevant portion:

" ……the said sum $1,350,000 which was the Cost price of 1000 metric tons of seed rice."

I shall also refer to the contract document Exhibit L. For ease of reference, I will quote the relevant passage.

"Whereas the purchaser (the Ministry) is desirous that certain Goods and ancillary services should be provided by the supplier viz. 1000 tons of low land rice and has accepted a bid supplier for the goods [p.106] and services in the sum of US$1,350,000.00 (One million three hundred and fifty thousand dollars) CIF Freetown (hereinafter called the contract price."

It is obvious, from the two quoted excerpts (from the indictment and the contract) that the description of the prices are different. The indictment refers to cost price and Exh. L the contract refers to contract price. The Attorney General addressing the court refers to the price as the cost price of the seed rice bought in Ghana and went on to say that "it shows that purchase of rice abroad shows that the cost price was much less than the contract price even when you are to add all the expenses incurred." Of course it has to be so. The Attorney General concluded" In that regard there is a false misrepresentation as to the cost price as stated in the contract."

With the utmost respect to the learned Attorney General Exhibit L did not say anything about cost price, it mentioned "contract price" of the seed rice which was $1,350,000 for 1000 metric tons of seed rice. It is the indictment which mention "cost price". Therefore the comparison with the cost price of the seed rice in Ghana is of no moment. The submission is completely irrelevant to the issue. In my opinion this is a case which can be aptly described by the latin phrase of ab ovo. It was flawed from the beginning i.e from the drafting of the indictment.

Undaunted I shall continue, having earlier on stated the brief facts of the case, the law applicable, and some touching comments on some aspect of the case I must now proceed to consider the grounds of appeal and the cross appeal if need be.

The grounds of appeal in my view can be conveniently entertained under the usually over worked ground of appeal in criminal cases — That the verdict is unreasonable and cannot be supported having regard to the evidence. When an appeal is anchored on this ground the appellant is in effect inviting the Court of Appeal to review and evaluate the evidence that was adduced at the trial.

I have perused the record of proceedings, in particular the judgment of the learned trial Judge; but first let me at this point agree with the Attorney General, when he said in his cross appeal that the learned trial Judge "merely read and recited the address of Counsel without any analysis of the appropriate law". I shall go one stage further and say, the learned trial Judge did not only stop there, but rewrote the evidence in extenso in his judgment which he had earlier on recorded during the trial. This cannot with respect be regarded as a review of the evidence.

I repeat the trial was by Judge alone, it therefore gives the learned trial Judge the added responsibility and duty to review and evaluate the evidence emphasizing the salient features of the evidence in order to arrive at a just and imperverse verdict. Failing which, if there is an appeal the responsibility is thrust on the appellate court to forage through the transcript of the Record for the salient features of the evidence to decide the point on appeal and give a decision accordingly.

Let me at this stage say I am fully conscious of the duty of an appellate court when it comes to considering a decision based on the facts as in this case. I am guided by the principle that an appellate court should not lightly differ from the decision of the lower court, bearing in mind that the learned trial Judge or the lower court had the advantage of seeing and hearing the witnesses and observing their demeanour. It should also not be easily lost on the appellate court that a review of the evidence is generally based on the transcript of the record which is not the same as hearing and seeing the witnesses first hand.

The gist of the prosecution's case is that the contract between the appellant representing the government of Sierra Leone and the 3rd respondent in the cross appeal had a conspiratorial flavour — there is an element of conspiracy to defraud the government of Sierra Leone by oral or written misrepresentation such misrepresentation being false, as to the cost price of 1000 metric tons of seed rice, delivery time, insurance policy etc. The prosecution to substantiate this allegation led both documentary and oral evidence in support of this allegation against the 1st and 2nd appellant and the 3rd respondent.

I note however that the evidence adduced contained many irregular and irrelevant materials which ran contra to the general principle on admissibility of evidence. Relevant evidence must be admissible though it matters not how obtained — not irrelevant evidence. See Karuma v R. 1956 AC 203. On this point Lord Goddard had this to say:—

"It matters not how you get it if you steal it even it will be admissible."

In my judgment the admissibility of these irrelevant materials must have blurred the issue and the evidence in support of the charge against the 1st and 2nd appellant, rendering the trial unsatisfactory.

In view of what I have said, my evaluation will be specifically confined to the evidence which refers and support the conviction of the 1st and 2nd appellant. The evidence in the main is the evidence of P.W. 5 Wilfred Borbor Kargbo, acting Project Manager, Seed Multiplication Project and Ex. N the status Report of the seed Multiplication Project which showed that seed [p.108] rice was available in Sierra Leone, when the 1st appellant wrote to the World Bank stating that the Ministry of Agriculture had "explored and exhausted" all the seed rice in Sierra Leone. P.W. 5 confirmed what he had written in Ex. N. He said:

"I received the letter in Kambia on the 23rd of April 1998 at 6 p.m. I reacted on the 24th of April 1998. In the Kambia area before my status Report we had 8500 bushel of seed rice received from the contract farmers As loan recovery there was prospect of buying up to 1000 bushel of seed rice from farmers in the Kambia area ..... After submitting Ex. N I have no reaction from the Ministry of Agriculture. At the time I was writing Ex. N the seed rice was available is the same rice that could be distributed country wide."

As I said the learned trial Judge used Ex. N and the viva voce evidence P.W. 5 to support the conviction of the 1st and 2nd appellants. This is how he used it. I refer to the passage in his judgment, It reads:—

I believe the evidence of this witness (referring to P.W. 5) seed rice was available during the period but the 1st and 2nd accused preferred the seed rice instead from the sub region for reason best known to themselves of the case for the prosecution that seed rice was available in Sierra Leone at the time and this was not made known to the 3rd accused.

In my view and from the evidence adduced in court the answer is no. After going through the entire evidence it is my judgment that there is a cogent and convincing evidence on the charge of conspiracy against the 1st and 2nd accused respectively no evidence of conspiracy against the 3rd accused.

With the utmost respect to the learned trial Judge seed rice was not procured from abroad "for reasons best known to themselves".

Ex. W the voluntary statement of the 1st appellant which I dare say was unchallenged speaks clearly of an agreement between the Ministry of Agriculture and the World Bank as far back 1997/98 as to the procurement of seed rice abroad which statement was never considered by the learned trial Judge. The relevant passage reads:—

"The whole concept of the emergency programme under the [p.109] Agricultural Sector Support Project was discussed with the World Bank while we were exiled. In the year 1997/98 and this was to commit funds for Agricultural Development aspect to an emergency programme was part of the arrangement. It was agreed to procure seed including rice seed from external sources particularly from the West African region. As a rule to undertake any procurement in an emergency programme the Ministry has got to get the concurrence of the World Bank. In this particular instance we agreed to proceed with procurement of seed rice from either Ivory Coast or Ghana. However when we returned from exile the Ministry discovered some amount of seed could still be obtained in Sierra Leone. We then decided to do the major part of the procurement in Sierra Leone and a limited procurement from Ivory Coast or Ghana."

Ex. E the statement of the 2nd appellant was in similar vain more or less re-echoing what the 1st appellant said on this point.

To my mind Ex. N and the evidence of P.W. 5 and juxtaposing the statement of the 1st and 2nd appellant raise a doubt as to the intention and actions of the 1st and 2nd appellant, culminating in the agreement with the 3rd respondent to procure seed rice from Ghana. It does not seem to me that the procurement of seed rice from Ghana was a deliberate and dishonest act from which the 1st and 2nd appellant derived any benefit. I agree it might have caused the government greater liability than warranted but that is not to say that the 1st and 2nd appellant intended to defraud the government of Sierra Leone. See R. v Thompson, 1966 50 criminal App. 1 which was quoted with approval in The State v During and 6 others C.A.13/74 unreported.

The prosecution made much play of the Status Report Exh. N and the letter Ex. 0 written by the 2nd appellant to the World Bank on the 28th June before the contract Ex. L was signed, in which the 1st appellant said "internal sources of seed rice had been explored and exhausted". Exh. O was written some three and a half months after Exh.N was compiled. It may well be at the time Exh. O was written to the World Bank seed rice was hard to come by locally. Afortiori Ex. N was only a probability that seed rice will be available locally to accommodate the required procurement need. These are matters which in my opinion the learned trial Judge ought to have taken into consideration in arriving at his verdict.

Let me here hasten to say that the Judge who tried this matter had been a Judge in a court of first instance for a considerable number of years before he was elevated to the Court of Appeal. He had a wealth of experience on criminal cases. He knows what the law is nevertheless the use of the unfortunate phrase "best known to themselves" without any supporting evidence, if this was a jury trial can easily be labeled a misdirection. In my judgment he did not consider other evidence in particular the statement of the 1st and 2nd appellant which would raise some doubt as to the guilt of the 1st and 2nd appellant. Therefore I am content to hold that to say the 1st and 2nd appellant "preferred to procure seed rice instead from the sub region for reasons best known to themselves" was erroneous as the statement cannot be supported by any evidence.

One point which I would like to highlight at this penultimate stage of this judgment is the acquittal of the 3rd respondent and how the law looks at it in relation to the conviction of the 1st and 2nd appellants. I shall refer to the case of R. v Anthony 1965 49 CAR P. 104:

"It was held that where on a charge of a defendant with a named co-conspirator and with other persons unknown and the named co-conspirators have been acquitted the jury should be warned that they cannot convict the persons unless they are satisfied that there were other persons concerned in the conspiracy with whom the prisoner did in fact conspire.

In this case the trial was by Judge alone: and so he was a Judge of both the law and fact. In Count 1 the 1st and 2nd appellant where not only indicted for conspiring with the 3rd respondent, but also with persons unknown. On the authority of R. v Anthony supra the learned trial Judge must be satisfied that the unknown persons in the indictment were also concerned with the conspiracy. How should it be done? In my view there must be hard and compelling evidence that the 1st and 2nd appellant conspired with these persons unknown. I find no such evidence in the record. In the result the learned trial Judge erred in law when he convicted the 1st and 2nd appellant for the said offence.

On the whole let me say that this is a matter which has no place in our criminal justice system, if anything, any action should have been pursued by a civil claim, for the so-called alleged breaches of the contract. In the light of what I have said above I find no merit in the grounds of the cross appeal. The cross appeal is dismissed.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion I hold that the conviction is unsafe and unsatisfactory. The appeal of the 1st and 2nd appellant is allowed. The conviction and sentence are set aside.

[p.111]

I order that a verdict of acquittal be entered in the case of each appellant - Harry Will and Lamina Feika respectively. Fines if already paid be refunded to the 1st and 2nd appellant. Order accordingly

JUDGMENT

S.A. ADEMOSU JA.

At the High Court Kenema presided now by Hamilton J.A. sitting with a jury on the 20th day of October 2003 the appellant was charged with the offence of murder of one Sorie Kamara. On the 13th of May 2004 he was found guilty by the unanimous verdict of the jury and sentenced to death. He has appealed against his conviction on the following grounds.

1. That there was no substantial evidence before the Court to support the charge against me.

2. The learned trial judge exercised power by passing sentence on me even though my case clearly indicates that I am innocent.

3. That the sentence is manifestly excessive.

Pursuant to the order of this Court Elvis Kargbo Esq. filed two grounds of appeal

The new and amended grounds of appeal as can be gleaned from the records are:

(a) That the judgment is unreasonable and cannot be supported having regard to the evidence.

(b) That the learned trial judge failed to put or direct the jury in his summing up the possible defence open to the appellant which is very vital in Criminal Law.

The case for the prosecution was that the appellant and Sorie Kamara (deceased) were together at Buima market, Tongo Fields on 21st July 2002. Whilst there a quarrel ensued between them culminating in a fight. Whilst they were fighting one Fatmata Kamara who was the sister of the [p.142] deceased went and informed one Mohamed Bangura about the fight. Mohamed Bangura and others rushed to the scene and separated them.

The prosecution's side alleged that after the separation of the two parties the appellant went his way and the deceased too went his own way. That the accused went and removed a fence stick with a nail on it and rushed at the deceased and hit him heavily on the head at the point where the nail was. The deceased collapsed and the appellant wanted to run but was apprehended, with the stick and taken to the Police Station. The deceased was taken to Kenema Government Hospital where he was admitted and died the following day. This was the version of the prosecution's case which was put to the jury:

At the trial the prosecution called four witnesses but only one was a witness of fact whilst one of the three others was the Doctor who performed the autopsy. One Dr. David Fatta Sesay was the doctor. In his testimony he said he found a deep laceration meaning a big wound caused by a sharp object which poisoned the blood. He explained that the may be caused by a nail.

One Mohamed Bangura was P.W. 1. He deposed that on the material day and time he was at where he was doing his business when the deceased's sister came and informed him about the fight. He said he went there and met the deceased and the accused fighting, and separated them. He further told the court that after the parties went their separate ways. The appellant collected a stick with which he hit the deceased on the head. That the stock had a nail on it and the deceased fell to the ground. The appellant was apprehended whilst he was trying to run away. The deceased became unconscious with blood flowing from the head. He was taken to Kenema Government Hospital where he later died. The witness could not tell where the appellant got the stick. The other two witnesses were Police Officers; one of them was the Exhibit Clerk who produced and tendered the stick with a nail, the other was the investigator who obtained caution statements from the appellant.

At the close of the prosecution's case the appellant relied on his statements to the Police and called no witnesses. The accused's statement on which he relied as far as relevant is briefly as follows:

"On the 21st of July year 2002 at about 2 p.m. I was at my brother Mohamed market table Labour market, Tongo field selling for him ready made shirt and trousers including watches. Whilst there I was playing a workman which I borrowed from one of my friend called Gibrilla. All of a sudden the deceased came and slapped me on my both jaw together with a comment (Borbor you de enjoy — o) meaning I am enjoying.

Added further saying I have many girl covers because I am now doing business for somebody which in fact he made me to eye fitted them, After which he steps forward to go to his market table wherein, I then remarked telling him that since he had taken in palm wine and behaved to me in such a manner he must do same thing to other people in the market. Immediately I told him this, he returned and gave me a hot slap on my right jaw in an attempt to blow me again I held him tightly pleading to him not to beat me again. Sooner I released him he left me telling me that I do not regard his position as Watch Seller Chairman eye fitting him so he is going to call his boys which he did. He returned with two people Mohamed Bounzing and Yarroh I was then collared (sic) by Mohamed Bounzing without asking me to explain what transpired between me and their brother (deceased). At this point there was a scornful (sic) with them three of them started beating me all over my body. Mohamed Bounzing took a stone hit me with it on right jaw as a result I sustain injury. The stone which fell near me I also took it sent it to Mohamed Bounzing but he escaped it so the stick hit on the head of Sorie Kamara (deceased). After which I saw blood oozing from his head where the stone landed. Because of that people came and held me took me to the Police Station both of us explained" See exhibit B dated 23/7/02. I shall now turn to the grounds of appeal.

Ground 1 In arguing this ground Mr. Kargbo referred to the evidence of Mohamed Bangura, the only eye witness. He drew the Court's attention to the records which show that there was no evidence of how the incident started. He referred also to the statement of the appellant in which he explained how the fight started. He expressed the view that the prosecution should rely on the statement of the accused to which there is no contrary evidence. He submitted that the evidence reveals provocation and self-defence. He argued that the issue of provocation should have been put to the jury. In support of this proposition, he cited the case of Koroma V Regina (1964-66) A.L.R. S.L. 542. In that case the appellant was convicted of murder by the Supreme Court (High Court). The case arose out of a fight which handing to the appellant was provoked by the deceased. The prosecution called no eye-witness to the occurrence to give evidence but relied entirely for their case on an alleged confession made by the appellant to the police. The appeal was allowed and the conviction was quashed on the grounds that the trial judge did not direct the jury in the manner he ought to have done.

In this matter the records show that the learned trial judge simply read the statements made by the appellant to the Police. He inadvertently failed to direct the jury specifically to acquit the appellant if his explanation left them in doubt. The learned trial judge should have put the appellant's case adequately to the jury and draw their attention to the law which is that while the prosecution must prove the guilt of the prisoner there is no such burden laid on the prisoner to prove his innocence and [p.144] that he is not bound to satisfy them of his innocence. See Woolmington V. D.P.P. (1935) 25 Cr.App. R.72 at page 95.

As I have already stated the learned trial judge simply glossed over the appellant's statements which constituted his defence. For instance, the appellant said it was a stone he threw at Mohamed Bounzing who had stoned him on his right jaw that hit the deceased on the head. In his summing up the learned trial judge in referring to the stick with the nail, also said:

"The accused in using the stick to hit the deceased is a cruel act from which implied malice can be implied."

I think that by the foregoing passage the learned trial judge must have left the jury with the impression that the prosecution had satisfactory proved the essential ingredients of the offence of murder.

The question whether the prosecution had proved the elements of the offence charged was one of fact for the jury to determine and in my view the learned judge was therefore not justified in usurping that function. While a judge is entitled to express his own views and express then strongly he must go further and tell them that they are not bound to accept his own because the decision on facts is theirs. See R v O Donnel (1917) 12 Cr. App. R 219 at p.221.

It is now trite law that it is the duty of a trial judge to put specifically to the jury the essential aspect of the defence however weak or stupid that defence may be. See R v. Barima 1945) II WACA 49. It has been held in a long line of cases in which it has been consistently held that such an omission will be fatal. See R V. Mills (1955) 25 Cr. App. 138; R v. Murtagh (1955) 39 Cr. App. R.72.

The appellants' statements to the police on which his defence is based raised the issues of self defence and provocation. The law is settled that where self-defence is raised the burden of proof is on the prosecution Chan Kan v. R. (1955) A.C. 206; R v Lobell (1957) I All E.R. 734 and R v Porritt (1961) 3 All E.R. 463. The onus is never upon the accused to establish this defence-Chan-Kan v. R (supra)

On the issue of provocation the law on this point was clearly stated by Lord Goddard in Kwaku Mensah V R. (1946) A.C. 83 at pages 91 - 92. He said inter alia:

"But if on the whole evidence there arises a question whether or not the offence might be manslaughter only on the ground of provocation as well as on any other ground the judge must put that question to the jury etc etc. In Koroma V. Regina (supra) an appeal against Conviction for murder was [p.145] allowed because the trial judge omitted to put a defence of accident or misadventure to the jury. Held that this was a fatal error.

After a very careful consideration of the whole evidence. I am satisfied that there was sufficient material on which it might fairly be taken that there was-provocation which was likely the appellant being beaten by three people was likely to deprive the appellant the power of self control in the circumstances in which he found himself. Consequently, I hold that the learned trial judge erred in dismissing the issue of provocation. As I have already started, the learned trial judge, failed to put the defence of the appellant fully and fairly to the jury.

For all the reasons I have stated above, I quashed the sentence of death, set aside the finding that the appellant is guilty of murder and substitute a finding of manslaughter. The appellant to a sentenced to 5 years imprisonment.

The conclusion I have reached above makes it unnecessary to consider other inconsequential points raised by counsel for the appellant.

AGIP v. ABASS ALI & ANOR.

COLE, C.J.

My Lords, the portion of land in dispute in this appeal is situated at Bo in the Kakua Chiefdom in what was in the old days the Protectorate, but now, the provinces of Sierra Leone. The site was of great commercial value or at least had great potential commercial value. I shall hereafter refer to it as "the land". Being situated in the Provinces the land was and is still subject to the provisions of the provinces land Act. Cap. 122 of our laws. I shall hereafter refer to it as "the Act". By Section 2 thereof, the Act should be read and construed as one with the Provinces Act, Cap. 60. I have mentioned this because of the fact that both the appellants and the first respondent are non-natives. The expression "non-native" is defined in Section 3 of the Interpretation Act, 1961 (No. 46 of 1961 – which is the Act relevant to this appeal) to mean —

“any person other than a native”

The same Interpretation Act by that same section defines “a native’ as being “any person who is a member of a race tribe or community settled in Sierra Leone (or the territories adjacent thereto) other than a race, tribe or community—

(a) which is of European or Asiatic origin; or

(b) whose principal place of settlement is in the Western Area".

The Provinces Act, Cap. 60, does not define the expression "non-native", but it does define the expression "native". That definition which is contained in Section 2 (1) thereof state that—

"native" means any member of the aboriginal races or tribes of African ordinarily resident within the Provinces or within the territories adjacent thereto outside Sierra Leone".

Under the Act all land in the provinces is vested in the Tribal Authorities who hold such land for and on behalf of [p.2] Authority” to mean

"paramount Chiefs and their councillors, and men of note, or sub-chiefs and their councillors, and men of note".

The second respondents fall within this definition.

By Section 3 of the Act a non-native cannot occupy land in the Provinces unless he first obtains the consent of the Tribal Authority as well as the approval of the District Commissioner to his occupation of such land. As a matter of law no non-native can occupy land in the Provinces except under and in accordance with the Act. Let me here and now state that it is my considered view that from the whole tenor of the Act the legislature intended to confer just as great a benefit on non-natives who wish to hold land in the Provinces as on the Tribal Authorities who, as I have already stated, hold such lands on trust for the native communities. On a proper construction of the Act I hold the view that non- natives holding land of the Tribal Authorities under and by virtue of the Act are meant to have their tenancies not only regulated but also made secure. At the same time the Act protects Tribal Authorities against unlimited squatting.

By a lease dated the 16th day of July, 1962, the second respondents leased to trill first respondent —

"All that piece or parcel of land situate at Bo in the Kakua Chiefdom of the Bo District of the Protectorate of Sierra Leone the boundary whereof commencing at a Property Beacon marked AA1 which beacon is 130.ft. on a bearing of 150 degrees 45 minutes to Property Beacon marked AA2; thence on a distance of 87.0ft. on a bearing 240 degrees 45 minutes is property Beacon marked AA3; thence on a distance of 130.0ft. on a bearing 328 degree 06 minutes to property Beacon marked AA4; thence on a distance of 93.0 ft. with a bearing of 60 degrees 40 minutes to Property? Beacon marked AA1 which is the point of commencement thus enclosing the area of 0.2685 acre of the sane several dimensions little more or loss as the same premises or more particular delineated and shown edged RED on the Cadastral plan No. LS/471/58 attached, which piece or parcel of land for great clearness and so as not to restrict or enlarge the description [p.3] hereinbefore contained is delineated on the plan attached here to and thereon colored RED together with the buildings and other fixture and fittings now the room and specified in the schedule hereto TO HOLD the said premises hereby unto the format from the 16th day of May 1962, for the Term of the seventy five years yielding the paying therefore during the said term the yearly rent of Le65.00 (Le130) in the manner hereinafter set forth".

I shall hereafter refer to it as "the lease". The lease is Exhibit B. No question arises here that the lenses was not obtained will the prior consent of the Tribal Authority and the prior approval of the District Commissioner. Although the term demised is said to be seventy five years yet by virtue of Section 4 of the Act the first respondents tenancy could not exceed a torn of fifty years. I do not think that the term stated in the lease by exceeding the statutory term in any way affects the validity of the lease and is o hold. In any case this point was never at any stage raised nor was it over made on issue.

It was amongst other things mutually agreed between the parties to the lease that if the lease was not registered within sixty days of its execution in the office of the Registrar-General in Freetown then the lease was voidable at the option of either party.

Section 9 of the Act provides as follows:—

"Every deed creating a tenancy of land shall be voidable by either party, unless it—

(a) is executed in the presence of two witnesses by the lessor before the District Commissioner of the district in which the land is situated; and is executed in the presence of two witnesses by the lessee or his attorney or his agent before a Magistrate; and

(b) has endorsed upon it certificates of execution in their presence signed respectively by the District Commissioner and the Magistrate before when it was executed; and

(c) provides that the lessee shall not sublet or assign him interest thereunder except [p.4] with the comment of the Tribal Authority with approval n writing of the district commissioner, provided that such consent shall not be unreasonable withholds; and

(d) contains stipulations with regard to all the matters set out in rule 3 to the Schedule to this Act; and

(e) is registered within sixty days in the office of the Registrar-General".

It should at once be noted that what both the Act and the lease confer is the right of avoidance of the lease in certain specified circumstances. It is quite clear that the Act does not make a lease void ab initio or invalid if the provisions of Section 9 of the Act are not complied with.

To go back to the facts. The lease, though executed on the 16th day of May, 1962, was due to some technical reasons concerning the plan to be attached to the lease, not registered within sixty days as required by Section 9(e) of the Act nor did it comply with Section 9(a). The lease was infact registered on or about 27th November, 1962". According to Exhibit J which is dated 28th December, 1962, the District Officer acknowledge receipt of a registered copy of the lease. At that date he must or ought to have been aware that certain provisions of Section 9 of the Act had not been complied with. It is my considered view that knowledge of the District Officer (formerly District commissioner) of any non-compliance with the provisions of the Act was in the circumstance also knowledge of the second respondents. I of the opinion that the whole structure not only of the Act but also of the Provinces Act, Cap. 60 (with which, as I have already pointed out, it should be rend as one) shows that the District Officer (formerly District Commissioner) is legally the main pivot on which the whole of the administration of the districts in the provinces and all that went with them revolves.

With this knowledge of non-compliance by the first respondent not only the second respon-[p.5]dents allowed the first respondent to take possession of the land and to spend considerable sums of money on its improvement but they also received rents in respect of the land of the years 1962 and 1963. I am satisfied on the evidence that the second respondents did receive the full rent stipulated in the lease for the years 1962 and 1963 in spite of the fact that the commencement date of the lease was 16th may, 1962.

By Exhibit V2 dated the 20th January, 1964, the second respondents wrote to the first respondent as follows—

1. The lease dated the 16th day of May, 1962 registered as No.168 in value 50 at Page 5 in the Register of Lenses kept in the Registrar General's office in Freetown and made between the Paramount Chief and Tribal Authority of Kakua Chiefdom aforesaid of the one part and YOURSELF of the other part under which you hold a piece plot or parcel of land situate lying and being at the angle of Bo Bye Pass and Fanton Roads in Bo Town Kakua Chiefdom aforesaid contains a proviso as follows:—

"Provided always that if this indenture is not registered within SIXTY days of its execution in the office of the Registrar-General in Freetown then the said deed shall be voidable at the option of either party to the same".

2. You have failed to register the said lease within sixty days of its execution and have so committed a breach of the said Proviso or condition contained in the said lease.

3. YOU have also failed. to execute the aforesaid Lease

4. In view of the matters stated above we the said lessor have decided to avoid and determines the said lease and have therefore this day exercise our right to re-entry on the land in respect of which the said lease was made and henceforth the said lease shall determine.

Dated the 20th day of January, 1964.

(Sgd.) Abu Baimba III Paramount Chief Kakua Chiefdom

(Sgd.) Mr. Mokuwa 1st Speaker Kakua Chiefdom

(Sgd.) Lahai Magao 2nd Speaker Kakua Chiefdom approved

(Sgd.) D. K. Jenkins District Officer".

Exhibit V2 was issued after the second respondent had received rents although the lease had not been avoided and was therefore va1id and subsisting. Mr. Gelaga-King concedes that at least up to 20th January, 1964 (the date of Exhibit V2) the lease, was still valid. I shall deal with what I consider to be the legal effect of this at a later stage. Proceeding on with the facts, on that same date, i.e. 20th January, 1964 the first respondent by letter bearing that date, Exhibit H, forwarded to the District Commissioner, Bo, a cheque covering payment of rent for the land as well three others. The cheque was returned. No reason was given for its return.

In the meantime the appellants had come into the picture because I find that by a letter dated 28th January, 1964, Exhibit V1, the District Commissioner was forwarding to the appellants for information and for record purposes a copy of Exhibit V2. Also on the 31st January, 1964, the second respondents by Exhibit W leased certain land s at Bo in the Kakua Chiefdom to the appellants. Those lands included the area leased to the first respondent. From the evidence it clear that the appellants had been involved in the land long before January 1964. It is interesting to note that this lease to the appellants, Exhibit W, contains a provision regarding [p.7] registration similar to that contained in Exhibit B. I find the District Commissioner on the 30th June 1964. writing Exhibit T to the appellants in these Terms—

"Dear Sir,

LEASE OF LAND TO AGIP (S.L.) LTD

I have to refer to the above subject and to forward herewith original and copy for lease duly registered for your retention.

2. Please acknowledge receipt"

It is reasonable to conclude that the District Commissioner registered or caused to be registered the lease granted to the appellants. Why then did he not registrar or cause to be registered the lease to the first respondent?

In pursuance of Exhibit W the appellants took possession of the area called for by Exhibit W which, as I have said, included the land in question as well as all the improvements which the appellants found thereon.

The first respondent then consulted a solicitor and on the 13th July, 1996, the first respondent commenced legal proceedings in the High Court.

Although the lease Exhibit B which was the subject matter of the action and of the appeal was granted to Abess Allie we find the writ of summons was issued in the name of as plaintiff. The relevant Power of Attorney was put in evidence at the trial. It was Exhibit A and was made at Beiruit on the 19th April, 1996. On perusal thereof it would be seen that the person appointing Adnan Nayef Abbas Al Allie as his Attorney was not Abess Ali as described in Exhibit B as the lease but one Abbas Ali Mohamed Edmask. Learned Counsel for the appellants tried to make the point before us that the Abess Ali described in Exhibit B as the lessee could not be one and the same person as Abbas Ali Mohamed Edmask referred to in [p.8] the Power of Attorney and in whose name the action was brought. In effect eh was saying that the first respondent had no locus standi in this matter. We stopped him from pursuing the point as we felt it was too belated. The action as well as the trial had proceeded on the footing that Allie Abbess and Abass Ali Mohamed Edmask were one and the same person. The position appeared to have remained the same before the Court of Appeal. That disposes of the point.

By his amended statement of claim the first respondent claimed against the appellants and the second respondents possession of the land. As against the appellants he claimed damages for trespass to the land for inducing a breach of contract between the second respondents and himself. He also claimed against respondent damages for breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment.

There was at not time any claim for special damages.

The learned trial judge after reviewing the evidence found—

(i) that the lease between the first and second respondents was valid subsisting lease which had not been avoided or terminated according to lay;

(ii) that the failure to register the lease entitling the second respondents to claim that the lease was voidable was waived by the second respondents receipt of rents due under and in terms of the said lease.

The learned trial Judge then proceeded to make the following awards—

(a) damages for breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment — Le2,500.00

(b) refund of expenses during negotiations, shake hand and refund of two years rent Le6,260.00

(c) damages for trespass — Le20,000.00

(d) damages for inducing a breach of contract — Le5,000.00

(e) damages in lieu of recovery of possession — Le9,000.00

[p.9]

Against this judgment the appellants appealed to the court of Appeal. That court (Sir Samuel Bankole Jones, P., G. F. Dove-Edwin and J.B. Marcus-Jones JJ.A) hold that the learned trial Judge was wrong in law in coming to the conclusion that the lease was a valid subsisting lease which had not been avoided or terminated according to law. Accordingly they held that the first respondent was not entitled to possession or damages in lieu thereof. By a majority decision of two to one (Dove-Edwin, J. A., as he then was, dissenting) that Court agreed with the findings of fact by the learned trial Judge that the appellants induced a breach of contract between the first and second respondents "albeit a voidable one". The Court of Appeal awarded exemplary damages of Le30,000 thereby varying the award under this head of the High Court. The Court of Appeal also awarded special damages of Le15,390 which again was a variation of the damages awarded 'by the learned trial Judge. Dove-Edwin J.A., naturally, in view of his opinion, award no damages but allowed the appeal. It is against the judgment of the learned trial Judge as well as that of the majority decision of the Court of Appeal that this appeal arises.

There is also a cross-appeal by the first respondent as to recovery of possession. It is the contention of the first respondent in this regard that if the proposition that the lease was not avoided or terminated according to law as the learned trial Judge found, was right in law, then the first respondent was entitled to an order for recovery of possession.

It is therefore of the essence of this appeal that one of the first questions that should be disposed of is whether the lease Exhibit B was properly terminated or avoided according to law.

In this regard it should be remained that all that Section 9 of the Act confers in a right be avoid at the [p.10] option of either party. It follows therefore that until a lease made under the provisions of the Act is avoided in accordance with law such a lease remains valid and subsisting.

The Imperial Statutes (Law of Property) Adoption Act Cap. 18 of our Laws came into force on the 1st January, 1933. It was an Act passed to adopt and apply to Sierra Leone certain Statutes of the British Parliament relating to real and personal property, and to make provisions for amending the law of real and personal property. This Act applied to the then Colony of Sierra Leone, amongst others, certain sections of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881. One of the sections so applied is Section 14 which imposes restrictions on, and relief against, forfeiture of leases. The lease in question was made in May, 1962. It is clearly stated in Section 11 of the Interpretation Act, 1961 (No. 46 of 1961) as follows—

"11 No Act passed before the 1st day of July, 1953 shall apply to the Provinces unless it is so provided by the Act itself or is extended thereto by an Act".

Since the Imperial Statutes (Law of Property) Adoption Act Cap. 18 at the material time did not apply to the Provinces, the provisions of section 14 thereof cannot be relied upon. I do hope the authorities will look into this matter within the near future because in the present constitutional set-up such a situation would appear highly discriminatory.

The next point I think that should be considered is the question of waiver. Where a person entitled to anything expressly and in terms gives it up, it is said to be express waiver. It is implied when the person entitled to anything does acquiesce in something else which is inconsistent with that to which he is so entitled. One of the main questions in this appeal therefore is whether there [p.11] was waiver in law. I hold the view that the second respondents' acceptance of rent with knowledge of the breaches complained of in exhibits V2 effected in law a waiver. I consider the propositions of law set out with approval in this regard in the case of CENTRAL ESTATES V. WOOLGAR (No.2) (C.A.) (1972) 1. W.L.R. 1048 sound and I would adopt and apply them. At pages 1051 and 1052 Lord Donning, M. R., said, inter alia:—

"The cases on waiver are collected in the notes to Dumper's case (1603) 4 Co. Ref. 1196 in Smith's Leading Cases, 13th ed. (1929), pp. 39-44. These note show that the demand and acceptance of rent has a very different effect according to how the question arises. If it is sought to say there is a new tenancy by acceptance of rent; for instance, after a notice to quit has expired the question always is, as Lord Mansfield said: "Quo animo the rent was received and what the real intention of both parties was". See DOE D. CHENY V. BATEN (1775) 1 Cowp. 243, 245 and CLARKE V. GRANT (1950) 1 K.B. 104.

But if it is sought to say that an existing continues in existence by waiver of forfeiture, then the intention of the parties does not matter. It is sufficient if there is an unequivocal act done by the landlord which recognises the existence of the lease after having knowledge of the ground of forfeiture. The law was well stated by Parker, J. In MATHEWS V. SMALLWOOD (1910) 1 Ch. 777, 786, which was accepted by this Court in OAK PROPERTY CO. LTD. V. CHAPMAN (1947) K.B 886, 896: It is also, I think reasonably clear upon the case that whether the act, coupled with the knowledge, constitutes a waiver is a question which the law decided and therefore it is not open to a lesser who has knowledge of the breach to say 'I will treat the tenancy as existing and I will receive the rent, or I will take advantage of my power as landlord to distain; but I tell you that all I shall do without prejudice to my right to re-enter, which I intend to reserve'. That is position a position which he is not entitled to take up. If, knowing of the breach he does distrain or does rent, then by law he waives the breach, against the law will avail him anything".

I known Harman J. in CHERRY V. SUMMERSELL AND FLOTHRIDE & CO. LTD. (1949) Ch. 751, said that in waiver of forfeiture "the question …..tins quo animo was the act done". But [p.12] that statement was explained by Megaw J. in WINDMILL INVESTMENTS (LONDON) LTD. V. MILANO RESTAURENT LTD. (1962) 2 Q. B. 373. He said that at p. 376, that it meant only that — 'It is n question of fact whether the money tendered is tendered as, and accepted as rent … Once it is decided as a fact that the money was tendered and accepted as rent, the question of its consequences as a waiver is a matter of law'.

Similarly Sachs J. in SEGAL SECURITIES LTD. V. THOSEBY (1963) 1 Q. B. 887 said, at page 898: 'It is thus a matter of law that once rent is accepted a waiver results. The question of quo animo it is accepted in forfeiture cases is irrelevant in relation to such acceptance'.

So we have simply to ask: Was this rent demanded and accepted by the landlords' agents with knowledge of the breach? It does not matter that they did not intend to waive. The very fact that they accepted the rent with the knowledge constitutes the waiver".

"I agree that the demand for and acceptance of rent by the landlords did effect a waiver of the forfeiture. It is clear on the authorities that an unequivocal act is required to bring about a waiver. When money is demanded as rent after the land lord knows of the facts giving rise to the forfeiture and is paid as rent and accepted as rent, and then the law regards the demand and acceptance as an unequivocal act.

I regard this proposition as established by MATHEWS V. SMALLWOOD (1910) 1 Ch. 777, approved in this Court in OAK PROPERTY CO. LTD. V. CHAPMAN (1947) K. B. 886 and I consider that if the decision of Harman J. in CRERLY V. SUMMERSELL AND FLOWERDEW & CO. LTD. (1949) Ch. 751 can be supported, it must be on the basis suggested by Megaw J. in WINDMILL INVESTMENTS (LONDON) LTD. V. MILANO RESTAURANT LTD. (1962) 2 Q. B. 373. This being so, the state of mind of the Landlord is irrelevant; an if he acts through an agent who has actual or ostensible authority to demand and receive the rent, it does not seem to me that the state of mind of the agent can be enquired into".

That being the legal position, in my view, when the second respondents accepted rents as is clearly shown by Exhibits C1 and C2 and D with knowledge of the breaches complained of as Exhibit J indicates they waived any and all such breaches. Here the rents were paid and accepted whilst there was in existence a valid subsisting lease.

The question of quo animo the rents were accepted does not therefore arise. The learned Trial Judge in my view came to the correct conclusion in this regard. To hold otherwise would, in my view, be repugnant to natural justice, equity and good conscience. Nor do I seriously think that such a finding is incompatible either directly or by necessary implication with the Imperial Statutes (Law of Property) Act Adoption to which I have already referred or any other Act applying to the Provinces. It should not be forgotten that the Act more or less (with the emphasis on more) by Section 9 imported, without limitations as to the circumstances in which waiver can be exercised, certain English legal and equitable notions into the land law of the Provinces. In construing the Act therefore this indisputable fact has clearly to be borne in mine. I am satisfied that my construction does not run contrary to the Act.

Before I deal with the consequences that flow from my finding in regard to the legal position I would at this stage like to dispose of what I consider to be another very important issue in this appeal, namely, whether there was inducement on the part of the appellant of the breach of contract contained in Exhibit B. In this connection I am of the view that the propositions of law and practice laid down in the case of SRIMATI BIBHABATI DEVI VS. KUMAR RAMENDRA NARAYAN ROY (1946) A. C. 508 relating to concurrent findings of fact contain good sense and I have no reason to depart from or modify or vary them. These pro-positions, by way of reminder, are stated in these words:—

"From a review of previous decisions of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council the following propositions are do rived as to the present practice of the Board to decline to review the evidence for a third time where there are concurrent judgments of two courts on a pure question of fact, and as to the nature of the special circumstances which will justify a departure from the practice:—

(1) That the practice applies in the case of all the various judicatures whose final tribunal is the Board.

(2) That it applies to the concurrent findings of fact of two courts, and not to concurrent findings of the judges who compose such courts. Therefore a dissent by a member the appellant court does not obviate the practice.

(3) That a difference in the reasons which bring the judges to the same finding of fact will not obviate the practice.

(4) That, in order to obviate the practice, there must be some miscarriage of justice or violation of some principle of law of procedure. That miscarriage of justice means such a departure form the rules which permeate all judicial procedure as to make that which happened not in the proper sense of the word judicial procedure at all. That the violation of some principle of law or procedure must be such an erroneous proposition of law that if that proposition be corrected the finding cannot stand; or it may be the neglect of some principle of law or procedure, whose application will have the same effect. The question whether there is evidence on which the courts could arrive at their finding is such a question of law.

(5) That the question of admissibility of evidence is a proposition of law, but it must be such as to effect materially the finding. The question of the value of evidence is not a sufficient reason for departure from the practice.

(6) That the practice is not a cost-iron one, and the foregoing statement as to reasons which will justify departure is illustrative only, and there may occur cases of such an unusual nature as will constrain the Board to depart from the practice.

(7) That the Board will always be reluctant to depart from the practice in cases which involve question of manners, customs or sentiments peculiar to the country or locality from which the case comes, whose significance is specially within the knowledge of the courts of that country.

(8) That the practice relates to the findings of the courts below, which are generally stated in the order of the court, but may be stated as findings on the issues before the court in the judgments, provided that they are directly related to the final decision of the court".

In the present appeal I find no special circumstances, namely, any miscarriage of justice or any violation of some principle of law or procedure nor do I consider it a case of an unusual nature on this particular question, to justify a departure from this well-established practice. There is evidence in support of the concurrent findings of both the Trial Court and the Court of Appeal on the issue of inducement. I would not disturb these concurrent findings. As regards the issue of damages I shall give due consideration to it later.

Having stated these propositions of law I now come to the question of the remedies sought. I shall deal with the first which is recovery of possession. It having been established that the lease was and is still valid and subsisting the first respondent had and still has a legal estate in the land prior in time to that created to the appellants. The appellants took subject to that legal estate. The first respondent is in those circumstances entitled to possession of the land. The first respondent has shown in law a better title to that of the appellants. Furthermore, because of the concurrent finding of fact, supported by law, that the appellants induced a breach of contract, which finding, as I have stated, I will not disturb, the appellants cannot invoke equity to its aid. He who comes to equity must come with clean hands. The learned trial Judge therefore erred in awarding damages in lieu of an order for recovery of possession. The first respondent was entitled to possession of the strength of his title. I would therefore award the first respondent his claim for recovery of possession of the land the area of which I have already set out in the course of this judgment. I would vary the judgment accordingly and set aside the damages awarded.

I now turn to the question of damages. In this [p.16] connection it is my opinions that were an appellate court finds that an award is either erroneous or excessive or based on wrong principles of law or because of any other good and sufficient reasons such as award ought to be varied or set aside, that Court should and must interfere. Of course where an appellate court varies an award such a variation must be based on its own estimate of a proper award.

With regard to special damages I hold the view that the Court of Appeal went astray in awarding this item.

It was never pleaded as it should have been done and the fact that no objection was raised does not in any view cure this defect. Furthermore it was never an issue raised before the Court of Appeal. In these circumstances I would disallow this item awarded by the Court of Appeal.

As regards the award od Le30,000 in respect of inducement by the Court of Appeal I do feel that it is most excessive. The learned trial Judge's award of Le5,000 is in my view exemplary enough. I would set aside the award of Le30,000 made by the Court of Appeal and restore the trial Judge's award, in the regard, of Le5,000.

The learned trial Judge awarded a return by the second respondents of the customary shake-hand of Le6,000 as well us the two years rent of Le260. In view of the fact that I would order recovery of possession of the land I would disallow those two items and the learned trial Judge's judgment is hereby varied accordingly.

I now come to the award of the trial Judge of Le20,000 as damages for trespass. He did not give any reason why he awarded such an enormous amount. Maybe he was greatly influenced by the fact that recovery of possession was not being ordered. Since I am of the view that the first respondent is in law entitled to recovery of possession, this award needs some reconsideration.

I agree that the trespass here is a continuing trespass and that the first respondent has been on kept away from the use of the land for over nine years. I also take into consideration the fact that because of the provisions of the lease granted by the second respondents to the appellants, Exhibit W, as well as the oral evidence before the learned trial Judge, the character of the land has substantially been changed. I am aware that in order to perform the covenants stipulated in the lease, Exhibit B, the first respondent would, because of the order for possession, have to expand money in reconstructing the land. I also take into consideration the point of law that the object of an award of damages is to put the party who has been injured, or who has suffered, in the same position as he would have been in if he had not sustained the wrong for which he is now getting his compensation or reparation. I have also considered the proposition that the appellants' conduct have been calculated to make a profit for itself and that in such a case it is the object of the law to teach the appellants that tort does not pay. This, in my view, is certainly not a case where this court can say to the first respondent "you are technically right, but morally wrong". Taking all the circumstances into consideration, however, I would reduce the award of Le20,000 to Le10,000. The learned trial judge's award in the regard is hereby varied accordingly.

With regard to the question of interest missed under section 4 of the Law reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, Cap. 19, it is my considered view that it is a matter which should have been raise before the court of trial. I do not think we can at this stage properly interfere.

In my judgment the final results of this appeal should therefore be as follows:—

[p.18]

(i) The judgment of the Court of Appeal is hereby reversed and set aside. The cross appeal succeeds.

(ii) The judgment of the High Court is upheld and affirmed subject to the following:—

(a) The order of the learned trial Judge awarding the first respondent damages in lieu of un order for recovery of possession is hereby sot aside und an order for recovery of possession of the land in favour of the first respondent against the appellants and the second respondents substituted therefore for the residue of a tern of fifty years from the 16th day of May 1962.

I would ardor that if the sum of Le9,000 awarded by the High Court has been paid it should be refunded.

(b) The order of the learned trial Judge ordering the return by the second respondents to the first respondent of the customary shake-hand of Le6,000 as well as the two years rent paid of Le260 is hereby set aside and, if already paid, should be refunded.

(c) The order of the learned trial Judge awarding Le20,000 for damages for trespass is hereby varied to Le10,000.The difference, if already paid, should be refunded.

CHIEF JUSTICE

FORSTER J.S.C.:

My Lords, the facts of this case are set out in the judgment of my brother the Honourable Chief Justice which I have had the advantage of reading and I need not repeat them. I agree with him that the appeal should be allowed. I also agree with him that the cross-appeal succeeds, but wish to add something about one issue which, in my opinion, is of great interest and importance in the case; that is the doctrine of waiver.

Lord Aitkins, in UNITED AUSTRALIA LTD., V. BARCLAYS BANK LTD., (1941) A.C. 1, at 29 and 30, Said:

"It is essential to bear in mind the distinction between choosing one of two alternative remedies and choosing one of two inconsistent rights…… if a man is entitled to one of two inconsistent rights, it is fitting that when, with full knowledge, he has done an unequivocal act, showing that he has chosen the one, he cannot afterwards pursue the other which, after the first choice, is by reason of the inconsistency no longer his to choose".

Thus a lessor who has brought ejectment proceedings by way of forfeiture for breach of covenant cannot afterwards sue for rent — see JONES V. CARTER (1844) 15M & W.M 718. Anything therefore, which exhausts or extinguishes one of the causes of action, destroys the other also.

Counsel on both sides referred us to the case of SEGAL SECURITIES LTD., v THOSEBY (1963) 1 All E.R., 500, on different points, but the relevance of this case in the appeal before us, in my opinion, [p.20] is confined to limiting the effect of the waiver to breaches occurring prior to the issuing of the Notice, Exhibit V2, dated 20th January, 1964, inter alia, that,

"the demand for rent, by letter dated June 25, 1962, although written 'without prejudice', operated as a waiver of any right of forfeiture for the defendant's breach of the covenant up to the tine when the Notice of June 8, 1962 was issued, but did not operate as a waiver of the later breach continuing between July 6, when the time set for the Notice expired, and August 7, 1962, when the writ was issued……."

The breaches complained of in Exhibit V2, took place before 28th November, 1962, the day after the Lease, Exhibit B, was registered. Rent for both 1962 and 1963 under the said Lease was tendered and received by the 2nd Respondents on the 7th March, 1963 as evidenced by Exhibits C1 and C2 respectively.

The case of CENTRAL ESTATES (BELGRAVIA) LTD., v. WOOLGAR (2) C.A. (1972) 3 All E.R. 610, not cited or referred to by any counsel before us, has been considered and applied quite correctly, in the judgment of my brother, the Honourably Chief Justice. I wish to mention another case, much older and one which, I think, merits more than cursory reference here. It is the case of DAVENPORT v THE QUEEN, 37 L. T. (N.S.) 727. It went up on appeal from the Supreme Court of Queensland to the Judicial of the Privy Council in 1877. In that case, the appellant predecessor in title became lessee of [p.21] crown lands under the Agricultural Reserves Act, 1863, and the Leasing Act, 1866, but failed to cultivate and improve his allotment as required by the former Act. Section 8 of the Agricultural Reserves Act, 1863, provides that:

"if any person selecting lands in Agricultural Reserve shall fail to occupy and improve the same, as required by sec. 7 of this Act, then the right and interest of such selector to the land shall cease and determine."

Section 8 of the Leasing Act, 1866, also states—

"Land in Agricultural Reserves, if taken up on lease, shall be subject to the same conditions ……as to cultivation, etc. as if they were selected by purchase."

After becoming aware of the non-improvement, the Government received rent for the allotment, but a Notice was issued to the effect that 'Rent which may be received upon selections as may have been forfeited by operation of law shall be deemed to have been received conditionally, and without prejudice to the right of the Government to deal with the same according to the provisions contained in the Agricultural Reserves Act, 1863, on that behalf'. In an action brought to recover the land, it was held,

(reversing the judgment of the court below) that, notwithstanding the Notice. The receipt of rent operated as a waiver of the forfeiture. In disposing of the Davenport case, the Judicial Committee [p.22] considered and applied the case of CROFT v. LUMLEY.6 H.L., 692, cited to us, incidentally, by counsel for 1st Respondent. In that case, the facts were much more favourable to the contention that there was no waiver than in the Davenport case. The tenant there, tendered and paid rent due on the lease after the landlord had declared that he would not receive it as rent under the existing lease, but merely in compensation for the occupation of the land. The opinion of all the judges except one, was that the receipt of the money under these circumstances operated as a waiver. One of the learned judges, Williams J., gave his opinion thus:

"It was established as early as Pennant's case,3 Rep. 64A, that if a lessor, after notice of a forfeiture of the lease, accepts rent which accrues after, this is an act which amounts to the affirmance of the lease, and a dispensation of the forfeiture. In the present case, the facts, if think, amount to this: that the lessor accepted the rent, but accompanied the receipt with a protest that he did not accept it as rent, and did not intend to waive any forfeiture. But I am of opinion the protest was altogether inoperative as he had no right at all to take the money unless he took it as rent: he cannot, I think, be allowed to say that he wrongfully took it on some other account, and if he took it as rent, the legal consequences of such an act must follow, however much he may repudiate them".

In the Davenport case, as already stated, the rent was received as rent, with, at most, a protest that it was received conditionally, and without prejudice to the right to deal with the land as forfeited. The Judicial Committee said that it was not necessary for it to [p.23] invoke this opinion of Williams J. to its full extent in the case before them, but it was enough for them to say that where money was paid and received as rent under a lease, a mere protest that it was accepted conditionally, and without prejudice to the right to insist upon a prior forfeiture, cannot countervail the face of such receipt.

I join the Honourable Chief Justice in his hopeful pleas for a more uniform system of land ownership in our unified sovereign independent state of Sierra Leone, and finally, I am in agreement with the order proposed by him. First Respondent's legal title to the land was never extinguished and the findings of the learned trial judge that the appellant both trespassed on that land and induced the 2nd respondents to terminate Exhibit B, for which finding, in my opinion, there was abundant evidence, make it inequitable, to say the least, for any other than an order for recovery of possession to be made in favour of the 1st Respondent. It may be that the 1st Respondent will find himself saddled with a White Elephant or a Trojan Horse, but be it what it may, quiquid plantatur solo, solo cedit.

S. J. FORSTER.

JUSTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT

DAVIES, J.A.

I have had the advantage of reading the judgment of His Lordship the Chief Justice (Mr. C.O.B. Cole) with whose reasoning and conclusions I agree. I, however, wish to add a few words of my own.

Negotiations for the lease began as long ago as 1961. The lease (Ex. B.) was not executed until the 16th May, 1962. On the 14th December the first respondent forwarded to the District Officer Bo, a copy of the duly registered lease and this was acknowledged by the District Officer one D. K. Jenkins, by letter dated 28th December, 1962 (Ex. J.). Sometime in 1964, the second respondents sought to determine the lease (Ex. "B") on the ground that it has not been registered within the prescribed period of 60 days. The First respondent by his solicitor, Mr. J.E.R. Candappa, wrote to the District Officer as follows (Ex. Z dated 13th February, 1964):—

"Dear Sir,

Your letter L/3/263 dated 25th January, 1964, addressed to Mrs. Abbass Allie c/o Abess Brothers and Sons Limited, Freetown together with what has been called a notice of Re-entry addressed among others, to Mr. Naïf Abess has been handed to me for reply.

Perusing both the Notice of Re-entry and the lease, I find that the registration for the Lease dated 16th May, 1962, in face took place on the 27th November, 1962, technically in breach of section IX (e) of the Provinces Land Act, Chapter 122 but under the following circumstances.

The plan attached to the Deed which the Tribal Authority signed and therefore is an intrinsic and necessary part of the Deed itself, was a plan which does not bear the counter signature of the Director of Surveys and [p.25] Lands as is required by Section 15 of Ordinance 14 of 1960 amending Section 25(1) of the Registration of Instruments Ordinance Cap. 256. When this deed was presented for registration, it was rejected on this score and the plans were sent to the Director of Surveys and Lands for the counter signature. This took time hence the delay in registration, due to an unforeseen and supervening impossibility. You will agree that if the document had been prepared by a Solicitor instead of in the office of the Tribal Authority, this would not have arisen. The document having been prepared by the Tribal Authority I do not see how they could complain on this score.

As for the failure of Abbas Allie to sign lease the Tribal Authority is no doubt aware that although the Agreement for the Lease had been entered into and payments including shake hand had been received by the Tribal Authority it was physically impossible to get Mr. Abbass Allie to sign the Lease as at the time the lease became available for signature, Mr. Abbass Allie had been deported from Sierra Leone, leaving Mr. Naif Abbess as His Attorney.

In law, this would not be a defect making the lease void or even voidable because the Lease itself was drawn up in pursuance of an Agreement for which payment had been received.

That such an Agreement was not only entered into but acted upon is clear from the fact that throughout the material period since before and after execution of the lease and up to date and including the whole of 1964, payments of rent due on the lease have been received by the Tribal Authority via the appropriate receiving authority. In these circumstances, the Tribal Authority is bound in equity by the covenant.

I trust this matter could be settled without re-course to law.

Yours faithfully

(Sgd.) J.E.R. Candappa."

By this time, the second respondents had entered into negotiations with the Appellants for the lease of the said land. On the 28th January, 1964, the District Officer, Bo [p.26] wrote to the Appellants (Ex. "V1" II dated 28th January, 1964) in the manner following:—

"Gentlemen,

" I am requested by the Kakua Tribal "Authority to forward to you for your "information and for record purposes the "attached notice of the Tribal Authority "of re-entry in respect of the piece of "land held under lease made to Abbass "Allie, now in Lebanon.

" I am, Gentleman,

" Your obedient servant

" (Sgd.) D.K. Jonkins

Ag. District Officer"

Three days after the District Officer's letter to the, appellants, i.e. on the 31st day of January, 1964, the second respondents demised the same piece or parcel of land with a little over to the appellants.

There is no doubt, as Marcus-Jones, J.S.C. observed in his judgment, that the appellants are a wealthy petrol company with large financial backing. Had they not intervened, the second respondents would never have sought to avoid the lease (Ex. "B"). I am beginning to wonder why it became necessary to forward to the appellants for information or for record purposes a copy of the "Notice of the Tribal Authority for re-entry in respect of the piece of land held under lease made to Abbass Allie, now in Lebanon." The only reason which presents itself to me very forcibly is that it was in pursuance of a pending deal between the appellants and the second respondents aided by the District Officer. In his judgment already referred to, the learned Chief Justice said "..... the District Officer (formerly District Commissioner) is legally the main pivot on which the whole of the administration of the Provinces and all that went with it revolves." I agree [p.27] with the learned Chief Justice absolutely. I should have though that what a prudent and .....to District Officer would have done after the receipt of Mr. Candappa's letter (Ex. "Z") was to refer the matter to the Law Officers for legal advice. This he never did. ..... All he offers to be concerned about was to send a copy of the Notice of Re-entry to the appellants as if to say" we have cleared the way. We may now complete the deal". As I have already stated, three days after the letter forwarding the notice of Re-entry, the land was demised to the appellants.

The learned trail judge in his judgment found as follows:—

"I am satisfied that the Plaintiff (i.e) "first respondent in this Court) had "adduced sufficient evidence to support "para. 7 of the Statement of Claim.

"(a) That the lease between the Plaintiff and the second defendants was a valid subsisting lease which had not been avoided according to law.

"(b) that the alleged failure to register entitling the second defendants to claim that the lease was voidable was waived by the second defendants by receipt of rent due under and in terms of the lease."

I agree with the findings of the learned trial Judge. It has been established that the lease was and is still valid and subsisting and that the first respondent had and still has a legal estate in the land prior to that created in favour of the appellants. The appellants took subject to that prior legal estate. In the circumstances, the first respondent is entitled to possession of the land.

Justice of Appeal.

LIVESEY LUKE J.S.C.

By virtue of the Provinces Land Act Cap, 122 of the Laws of Sierra Leone, Chiefdom Councils in the Provinces, may with the consent of the District Commissioner, grant leases of land in their Chiefdoms to "non-natives" for periods of up to 50 years under the terms and conditions laid down in the Act.

On 16th May, 1962, the Paramount Chief und the chiefdom Councillors of Kakua Chiefdom, Bo District, (the 2nd respondents in this Appeal) granted a lease of land situated at Bye Pass Road, Bo to Abess Allie (the first respondent in this Appeal for a period of 75 years (hereafter referred to as the Abess Lease). The Abess lease was by deed and was executed by the Paramount Chief and the principal men of the Chiefdom. The consent of the District Commissioner was duly endorsed thereon. But the lease was not executed. On the 27th November, 1962, the Abess lease was registered at the office of the Registrar General, Freetown. By Notice dated 20th January, 1964 and served on the agents of Abess Allie, Kaku Chiefdom purported to avoid and determine the Abess lease in exercise of powers under the proviso to Clause 4 of the Abess lease, on the grounds that Abess Allie had failed to execute the Lease and had failed to register it within 60 days from the date of execution. Prior to the service of the Notice, the leasee executed some works on the land.

On 31st January, 1964 the Paramount Chief and the Chiefdom Councillors of the said Chiefdom, with the consent of the District Commissioner, granted a lease of the said land together with another small piece of land to Agip (Sierra Leone) Limited [p.29] (the Appellants in the Appeal) for the term of 21 years (hereafter referred to as the Agip Lease). The Agip lease was by deed and was executed by the Paramount Chief and Principal men of the Chiefdom and the consent of the District Commissioner was endorsed thereon. The lease was registered in the office of the Registrar-General, Freetown on 19th February, 1964.

The parties will be referred to hereafter as "Kakua Chiefdom", "Abess" and "Agip."

Thereafter Agip proceeded to construct a petrol filling station on the land. On 28th May, 1965, while the construction was in progress, the agent of Abess wrote Agip informing them that they were trespassing on Abass land. But Agip continued with the construction. On 13th July, 1966, Abess issued a Writ of Summons against Agip and the Kakua Chiefdom claiming damages for trespass against Agip and damages for broach of covenant for quirt enjoyment against Kakua Chiefdom. An order for amendment of the Writ was made on 6th May, 1968. In the Amended Writ Abess claimed recovery of possession of the land, damages for trespass to land and damages for inducing a breach of contract against Agip and damages for breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment against Kakua Chiefdom.

The action was tried by Browne-Marke, J. According to the pleadings, the main issues at the trial were

(i) whether Kakua Chiefdom had properly and vividly avoided the Abass Lease;

(ii) whether Kakua Chiefdom had waived their right to avoid the Abess lease by acceptance of rent and

(iii) whether Agip had induced a breach by Kakua Chiefdom of the Abess Lease.

[p.30]

Browne-Marke, J. reserved judgment on 1st May, 1969 and after an inexplicable delay of some 14 months gave judgment on 16th June 1970 for Abess. On the issue of the avoidance of the lease, Browne-Marke, J. held that the Abess lease was a valid lease and that it had not been avoided or terminated. On the issue of waiver, he held that the right to avoid the Abess lease had been waived by Kakua Chiefdom by the receipt of rent. On the issue of inducement of a breach of contract, he held that Agip had induced a breach of the Abess lease by Kakua Chiefdom. The Learned Judge accordingly made the following order:

(i) Damages for breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment Le2500.

(ii) Refund of expenses during negotiations and shake hand Le6,000.

(iii) Refund of mo yours rent Le.260.

(iv) Damages for Trespass by Agip Le 20,000

(v) Damages for inducing breach of contact Le. 5,000.

(vi) Damages in lieu of recovery of possession Le9,000

Agip appealed to the Court of Appeal against the decision, complaining against the findings of trespass and inducement and the measure of damages awarded. Kakua Chiefdom also appealed complaining against the finding of breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment and the order for refund of Le6,000 expense. Abbess also cross-appealed, complaining against the failure of the Judge to order recovery of possession and the measure of damages awarded.

[p.31]

Thus all the parties to the action were in one way or another dissatisfied with the decision of Browne-Marke, J. The appeal was heard by the Court of Appeal consisting of Sir Samuel Bankolo Jones, P., Dove-Edwin, J.A. and Marcus-Jones, J.A. on 1st March, 1971 and subsequent days. Judgment was delivered in 30th July, 1971 varying the order of Browne Mark J. (Dovo-Edwin, J.A, dissenting). In the majority judgment delivered by Marcus-Jones, J.A. it was held that the Abess lease had been properly avoided and terminated and that the right of Kakua Chiefdom to avoid the Abess lease had not been waived by acceptance of rent. The majority of the Court of Appeal also held that Agip had induced a breach of contract by Kakua Chiefdom. The Court (majority) refused on order for possession and varied the award of Damages to the extent:—

Damages for inducing a breach of contract — Le30,000

Special Damages — Le15,390

No damages were awarded for breach f contract or breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment. This is not surprising in view of the finding of the majority that Kakua Chiefdom had not committed a breach of Contract by terminating the Abess lease.

Dove-Edwin, J.A. agreed with the majority that the Abess lease had been properly avoided and terminated and that Kakua Chiefdom had not waived their right to avoid the Abess lease. He however disagreed with the majority on the question of inducing a breach of contract. He held that Agip had not committed any inducement of breach of Contract. He accordingly allowed the appeal, set aside the judgment of Browne-Marke, J. and dismissed Abess's claim.

The main issues in the appeal are

(i) whether Kakua Chiefdom had lawfully avoided the Abess lease.

(ii) whether the right to avoid a lease conferred by Section 9 of Cap. 122 can be waived.

(iii) if the right to avoid existed, whether in fact Kakua Chiefdom had waived their right to avoid the Abess lease.

(iv) whether Agip had induced a breach by Kakua Chiefdom of the Abess lease.

(v) whether possession of the land should be granted to Abess.

(vi) whether the damages awarded were excessive or inadequate.

The right to avoid a lease is conferred by section 9 of Cap. 122. The section roads: —

"9. Every deed creating a tenancy of land shall be voidable by either party, unless it.

(a) Is executive in the presence of two witnesses by the Lessor before the District Commissioner of the district in which the land is situated; and is executed, in the presence of two witnesses, by the lessee or his attorney or his agent before a Magistrate; and

(b) Has endorsed upon it certificates of execution in their presence signed respectively by the District Commissioner and the Magistrate before whom it was executed; and

[p.33]

(c) provides that the lessee shall not sublet or assign his interest thereunder except with the consent of the Tribal Authority with the approval in writing of the District Commissioner, provided that such consent shall not be unreasonably with-held; and

(d) contains stipulations with regard to all the maters set out in rule 3 to the schedule to this Act; and

(e) is registered within 60 days in the office of the Registrar-General."

The proviso to Clause 4 of the Abess lease also conferred a right, of avoidance in those terms:—

"Provided always that if this indenture is not registered within sixty days of its execution in the office f the Registrar General in Freetown then the said deed shall be avoidable at the option of either party to the same."

The question arises, how is the right to avoid thus conferred exercisable? The answer would depend on, first whether or not section 9 of the Act or the proviso to Clause 4 created a condition, secondly whether or not the section or the proviso conferred a right of re-entry. The importance of the distinction is this: breach of a covenant by a tenant does not entitle the lessor to resume possession by re-entry upon the premises, unless an express stipulation to that effect is contained in the lease. On the other hand, a stipulation which [p.34] is framed, not as a mere covenant, but as a condition, carries with it at common law a right of re-entry if the condition is broken.

A condition is defined at p.424 of Cheshire's Modern law of Real Property 11th Edition as follows:

"A clause which shows clear intention on the part of the landlord, not merely that the tenant shall be personally liable if he fails in his contractual duties, but that the lease in his contractual duties, but that the lease shall determine in the event of such a failure."

In my opinion, none of the sub-sections of section 9, nor the proviso to Clause 4 of the lease make the lease determinable on the failure of the lessee in his contractual duties. In my judgment therefore neither section 9 nor the proviso to Clause 4 create a condition.

Turning now to the right of re-entry, it is perfectly clear that what section 9 confers is a right to avoid and not a right, to re-enter. Also it is quite clear that the proviso to Clause 4 does not confer a right of re-entry.

The position therefore is that neither section 9 of the Act nor the proviso to Clause 4 constitutes a condition or confers the right of re-entry. Consequently Kakua Chiefdom did not have a right to re-entry on the land.

In my opinion, since the, proviso to Clause 4 is not a condition and does not confer a right of re-entry, its inclusion in the Abess lease does not in any way add to or subtract from the right of avoidance conferred on both parties by section 9 of the Act. The parties would still have had the right to avoid under section 9 of the Act for non-registration, within 60 days even if the proviso to. Clause 4 had been omitted. In my judgment therefore the proviso to Clause 4 is surplus age.

The question then arises, how is the right to avoid conferred by section 9 of the Act exercisable? Kakua Chiefdom purported to exercise the right by service of a notice on Abess. The notice was headed "Notice of Re-entry" and it stated inter alia:—

"4. In view of the matters stated above, we the said lessors have decided to avoid and determine the said lease and have therefore this day exercised our right of re-entry on the land in respect of which the said lease was made and henceforth the said lease shall determine."

It was contended on behalf of Abess that notice was not sufficient to avoid the lease. Mr. Cotran submitted that the proper mode of exercising the right of avoidance by a lessor was for the lessor to give the lessee reasonable notice followed by an action of ejectment. He cited no authority for this proposition. Mr. Gelaga King submitted that all that a lessor has to do to avoid a lease is to do some act evidencing his intention to determine the lease and that the act must be a final and positive act which cannot be retracted. Mr. Davies submitted that a leasor could avoid the lease by re-entry or by leasing to some other person. He relied on a passage in Cheshire's Modern Law of Real Property, 11th Ed. p.425 which reads:—

"However clearly the proviso may state that the lease shall be void on breach of condition, it has been held in a long series of decision that its only effect is to render the lease voidable. It is at the option of the landlord whether the tenancy shall be determine or not, and it is only if he does some act which shows his intention to end it that the [p.36] 1 case will be avoided. Thus an actual entry by the landlord or the grant of a lease to a now tenant works a forfeiture, but the usual practice at the present day is to sue for the recovery of possession instead of making a re-entry etc."

It seems to me that this statement of the law is applicable to cases where there is a proviso conferring a right of re-entry, us clearly indicated in the opening words of the passage. It does not apply where the lesser does not have the right of re-entry.

In my judgment the right to avoid a lease is exercised by the person having the right doing some unequivocal act indicating the intention to avail himself of the option conferred on him to avoid the lease. But the unequivocal act would depend on whether or not a right of re-entry exists.

The position with regard to leases where there is a right of re-entry was stated by Parke, B. in JONES V. CARTER 15 M. &. W. 718. He said at p.724:

"In like manner, the lease would be rendered invalid by some unequivocal act, indicating the intention of the lessor to avail himself of the option give to him, and notified to the lessee, after which he could no longer consider himself bound to perform the other covenants in the lease; and if once rendered void, it could not again be set up. An entry, or ejectment in which entry is admitted, would be necessary in the case of a chatted interest, where the terms of the lease provided that it should be avoided by re-entry."

Thus if a party has a right of re-entry, he may exercise his right of avoidance by re-entry, by granting a lease to a new tenant or by action for ejectment. But if a party does not have a right of re-entry it would be unlawful for him to exercise his right of avoidance by re-entry or by granting a lease to new tenant. In my judgment the unequivocal act in [p.37] a case where the party avoiding the lease does not have a right of re-entry is the issue and service of a Writ of Summons for recovery of possession: See CANAS PROPERTY CO. LTD. V. K. L. TELEVISION SERVICES LTD. (1970) 2 ALL E.R. 795.

In my judgment therefore the purported determination of Abess lease by Kakua Chiefdom was unlawful and constituted a breach of contract and of the covenant for quiet enjoyment.

The next question is whether Kakua Chiefdom still has the right to avoid the lease when they purported to exercise it. The case of Abess is that Kakua Chiefdom had waived their right to avoid the lease by acceptance of rent after knowledge of the cause of avoidance and whether such acceptance of rent amounted to waiver in law.

The undisputed evidence is that on or before 28th December, 1962 the District Commissioner Bo had received the registered Abess lease. Indeed he acknowledge receipt of it by letter dated 28th December, 1962. It is also not disputed that the District Commissioner was the agent for Kakua Chiefdom. So it must be accepted that Kakua Chiefdom received the registered Abess lease on or before 28th December, 1962. On that date they know or out to have known of the defects in the registered Abess Lease of which they later complained i.e. late registration and non-execution by the lease or his attorney. Yet with that knowledge Kakua Chiefdom, according to the evidence, took no steps to avoid the lease for several months. In the meantime, on 7th March, 1963, Abess paid rent for two years to the Accountant General, Bo. Admittedly, according to Clause 2(5) of the Abess lease the rent should be paid "into the office of [p.38] the District Commissioner." But the payment of rent to the Accountant General instead of "into the office of the District Commissioner" was not complained of by Kakua Chiefdom, nor was it made an issue in this case. Indeed, payment of rent to the Accountant General instead of "into the office of the District Commissioner" was not mentioned in the notice of 20th January 1964 as one of the grounds on which Kakua Chiefdom purported to determine the lease. So nothing turns on the payment of rent of the Accountant General. According to the evidence, the District Commissioner made an entry of the receipt of the rent paid by Abess in the Kakua Chiefdom lease Decree book kept by him. In my opinion the entry in the Decree book by the District Commissioner clearly evidenced a receipt and acceptance by the District Commissioner, acceptance by the Kakua Chiefdom? The answer to this question is provided by Clause 2 (5) of the Abess lease which stipulates inter alia

The District Commissioner was thus the agent for the receipt of rent for and on behalf of Kakua Chiefdom, and it follows that acceptance of rent by him is equivalent to acceptance of rent by the Kakua Chiefdom. I therefore hold that Kakua Chiefdom accepted rent from Abess in March, 1963.

What then is the legal effect of the acceptance of rent by Kakua Chiefdom with knowledge of the cause of avoidance?

In my opinion it is well-settled that acceptance by a landlord of rent accrued due after the cause of forfeiture (or avoidance) with knowledge of the cause of forfeiture (or avoidance) constitutes a waiver of the right of forfeiture [p.39] (or avoidance). A comprehensive and what has been accepted as an authoritative statement of the principles governing this field of law is to be found in the judgment of Parker, J. in MATHEWS V. SHALLWOOD (1910) 1 Ch. 777. He said at p.786

"Waiver of a right of re-entry can only arise where the lesser, with knowledge of the facts upon which his right of re-entry arises, does some unequivocal, act recognising the continued existence of the lease. It is not enough that he should do the act which recognises, or appears to recognise the continued existence of the lease, unless at the time when the act was done, he had knowledge of the facts under which, or from which, his right of entry arises. Therefore, though an act of waiver operates with regard to all known breaches, it does not operate with regard to breaches which were unknown to the lessor at the time when the act took place. It is also, I think reasonably clear upon the cases that whether the act coupled with the knowledge, constitutes a waiver is a question which the law decides, and therefore it is not open to a lessor who has knowledge of the breach to say: 'I will treat the tenancy as existing, and I will receive the rent, or I will take advantage of my power as landlord to distrain but I tell you all I shall do will be without prejudice to my right to re-enter, which I intend to reserve.' That is the position which he is not entitled to take up. If knowing of the breach he does distrain, or does receive rent, then by Law he waives, and nothing he can say by way of protest against the law will avail him anything.

"Logically therefore, a person who relies upon waiver ought to show, first an act unequivocally recognizing the subsistence of the lease, and secondly, the knowledge of the circumstances from which the right of re-entry arises at the time that act is performed.”

I would not have considered it necessary to refer to any other authority on this point, but for a submission made by Mr. Gelaga King to the effect that the important question always is "Quo animo was the act done? In the case of payment of rent "Quo animo was the rent accepted." The question of [p.40] quo animo has been considered by the English Courts in a number of cases. The principal laid down in these cases is that the intention or motive of the landlord in doing the act relied on a waver is irrelevant. Thus is SEGAL SECURITIES LTD. v THOSEDY (1963) 1. Q.D 887 at p.898 Baahs, J. said

"It is thus a matter of law that once rent is accepted a waiver results. The question of quo animo it is accepted in forfeiture cases is irrelevant in relation to such acceptance."

In the recent case of CENTRAL ESTATE (DELEGRAVIA) LTD. V. WOODGAR (No. 2) (1972) 1. W.L.R. 1048, Lord Denning M.R. said at p.1052—

"So we have simply to ask: Was this rent demanded and accepted by the landlord's agent with knowledge of the breach? It does not matter that they did not intend to waive. The very fact that they accepted the rent with the knowledge constitutes the waiver."

and he continued in the same page—

"I Know that the judge found that the agents had no intention to waive, and finds also that the tenant knew they had no intention to waive. That seems to make no difference. The law says that if the agent stated in terns "we do not intend to waive", it would not have availed them, if an express statement does not avail a landlord, nor does an implied one."

Buckley, L.J. also said at p.1054

"In my judgment, the effect of an act relied on as constituting a waiver of a right to forfeit a lease must be considered objectively, without regard to the motive or intention of the landlord or the understanding or belief of the tenant."

Applying the above-stated principles, I hold that the intention or motive with which the District Commissioner accepted the rent paid by Abess and the understanding or belief with which Abess paid the rent are irrelevant. In my judgment, the rent having been accepted with knowledge of the cause of evidence the right of Kakua Chiefdom to avoid the lease was waived and [p.41] the lease was thereby confirmed and ratified. Therefore the right to avoid the lease under section 9 of Cap. 122 was non-existent on 20th January, 1964 when Kakua Chiefdom purported to exercise it. In the circumstances, I hold that the purported avoidance of the lease by Kakua Chiefdom was unlawful and consequently constituted a breach of contract and of the covenant for quiet enjoyment.

It was in the forefront of Mr. Gelaga King's and Mr. Davies' arguments that the provisions of section 9 of Cap. 122 are mandatory and for the public good and as such they cannot be waived. Reliance was placed on the decision of the Privy Council in EDWARD RAMA V. AFRICAN WOODS LTD. (1960) 1 All E.R. 627 where it was held that a concession of timber rights to land in Ashanti, Gold Coast under the Gold Coast Concessions Ordinance was invalid because the words in S.12 and S. 13 (11) of the Ordinance were clearly imperative, being designed to protect the grantor in the public interest, and there could be no waiver of any of the conditions laid down in S. 12. Section 12 of the ordinance lays down certain conditions which an applicant for a concession should comply with and certain steps which certain officials should take and then 13 (11) provides—

"13. No concession shall be certified as valid…

(11) Unless, in the case of a concession granted in respect of an area of land of which either the whole or the greater part is situated in Ashanti, the concession has been obtained in accordance with the provisions of S.12."

Delivering the judgment of the West African Court of Appeal, Sir Hanley Cossey, P. said inter alia—

"It is true that there are no negative words in the sections referred to but the affirmative words are absolute, explicit and peremptory and when you find in an ordinance only one particular made of effecting the object, one train of formalities to be observed, the regulative provisions which the section prescribes are essential and imperative. To render the purpose of S.12 unmistakable, sub s. (4) provides that the terms of the agreement can only be embodied in a concession after they have been agreed upon before the official named. The policy of the law clearly insits upon strifct observance of the steps already alluded to before there can be a concession. Section S.12 and S. 13 (11) are so clearly designed to protect the grantor in the public interest that in my opinion the learned judge erred in holding that a waiver is possible of any of the conditions of S. 12 and that the grantors had waived them. The accede to this proposition would be to entirely ignore the intention of the legislature for the public good and to defeat one of the main purposes of the Concessions Ordinance".

The Privy Council agreed with this statement of the law.

In my opinion the provisions of sections 12 & 13 of the Gold Coast Ordinance are quite different from the provisions of section 9 of Cap. 122. The Gold Coast Ordinance provides that if certain conditions are not complied with or if certain steps are not taken the concession shall be invalid, whilst section 9 of Cap.122 provides that if certain things are not done or certain provisions are not included in the loose, the lease shall be "voidable by either party." Section 9 or Cap. 122 confers on either party the right to avoid the lease at his option, and if neither party chooses to exercise the right of avoiding the lease, it remains a valid lease. In my opinion, if the right to avoid is left to the option of either party, that right, being a right which neither party is obliged to exercise, could be waived by non-exercise of it or by other means. Quite clearly it could not be said in relation to S.9 [p.43] of Cap. 122. — "The policy of the law clearly insist upon strict observation of the step already alluded to before there can be a concession."

In judgment the provision of S.9 of Cap. 122 are not mandatory and strict observance of them cannot be insisted upon. I therefore find the submission of Messrs Gelaga King and Davies untenable and I held that the rights conferred by S.9 of Cap. 122 can be waived.

I now turn to the question of inducing of breach of contract. I have already held that Kakua Chiefdom committed a breach of contract by purporting to determine the Abess lease. But it was contended on behalf of Abess that there need be no breach of contract for the Plaintiff to be entitled to succeed in an action for damages for inducing a breach of contract. The Court of Appeal (majority) seems to have accepted this contention, because having held that Kakua Chiefdom had not committed a breach of contract by determining the Abess lease, they proceeded to hold that Agip had committed the tort of including a breach of contract. the contract, the breach of which Agip was found to have included, was found to have induced, was the Abess lease, which the Appeal Court (majority) held had not been breached. The question then arises, does a plaintiff in an action for damages for inducing a breach of contract have to prove a breach of contract in order to succeed?

In my judgment the necessary ingredients of the tort of including a breach of contract are—

(i) Knowledge (actual or constructive) of the existence of the contract by the defendant and intention to induce its breach

(ii) that the defendant induced the breach of contract.

[p.44]

(iii) breach of the contract by the person induced

(iv) that the breach of contract was the necessary consequence of the inducement.

(v) that the plaintiff has suffered damage or at least that damage can be inferred from the circumstances.

Jenkins, L.J. stated the ingredients of the tort in his judgment in D.C THOMPSON & Co. LTD. V. DEAKINS & ORS. (1952) 2 All E.R. 361. He said at p.379:

"But while admitting this form of actionable interference in principle, I would held it strictly confined to cases where it is clearly shown, first, that the person charged with actionable interference know of the existence of the contract and intended to procure its breach, secondly, that the person so charged did definitely and unequivocally persuade, induce or procure the employees concerned to breach their contracts of employment with the intent I have mentioned, thirdly, that the employees so persuaded, induced or procured did in fact breach their contract of employment; fourthly, that breach of the contract forming the alleged subject of interference ensued as a necessary consequence of the breaches by the employees concerned of their contracts of employment."

That was a base dealing with breach of contract of service, but in my opinion, the principles therein stated apply to inducing the breach f contracts generally. Mr. Cotran urged us to accept the idea of "liability, breach or no breach," relying on the dictum of Lord Denning, M.R. in EMERALD CONSTRUCTION CO. LTD. V. LOWTHIAN & ORS. (1966) 1 ALL E.R. 1013. Lord Denning said at p.1017

"Some would go further and hold that it is unlawful for a third person deliberately and directly to interfere with the execution of a contract, even though he does not cause any breach. The point was left open by Lord Reid in J.T STRATFORD & SONS LTD. V. LINDLEY. It is unnecessary to pursue this today. Suffice to that the intention of the defendants was to get this contract terminated at all events, breach or no [p.45] breach, they were prima facio in the wrong."

Mr. Cotran submitted that even if the contract is lawfully terminated, if the other elements of the text are present, the person "interfering" with the contract is liable. I think that the dangers inherent in the acceptance of such a proposition are considerable. It would kill lawful competition in business. I think that the answer to Mr. Cotran's submission was provided by the House of Lords as long ago as 1897 in ALLIEN V. FLOOD (1898) A.C. 1 LORD Macnaughten said at p.151—

“I do not think that there is any foundation in good sense or in authority for the proposition that a person who suffers loss by reason of another doing or not doing some act which that other in entitled to do or to abstain from during at his own will and pleasure, whatever his real motive may be, has a remedy against a third part, who by persuasion or some other means not in itself unlawful, has brought about the act or omission from which the loss comes, even though it could be proved that such person was actuated by malice towards the plaintiff, and that his conduct if it would be inquired into was without justification or excuse.

“The case may be different where the act itself to which the loss is traceable involves some breach of contract or some breach of duty and amounts to an interference with legal rights.”

Lord Shand said at p.167

"The employer's act in dispensing with the services of the plaintiff at the end of any day was a lawful act on their part. The defendant induced them only to do what they were entitled to do, and in the absence of any fraud or other unlawful means used to bring this about the action fails."

And Lord Davey said at p. 172 —

“To persuade a person to do or abstain from doing what that person is entitled at his own will to do or abstain from going is lawful and in some cases meritorious, although the result of advice may be damage to another."

[p.46]

And Lord James said at p179

"Every man’s business is liable to be "interfered with" by the action of another, and yet no action lies for such interference. Competition represents "interference, "and yet it is in the interest f the community that it should exist. A new invention utterly ousting an old trade would certainly "interfere with" it. If, too, this language is to be held to represent a legal definition of liability, very grace consequences would follow."

In my judgment therefore a breach of contract is a necessary ingredient of an action for damages for inducing a breach of contract. So if a contract is lawfully terminated there can be no liability in an action for damages for inducing a breach of that contract.

It seems to me that a distinction should be drawn between cases in which a breach of contract has actually occurred, where the action is for damages for inducing a breach of contract, and cases in which a breach has not occurred but is merely threatened, and the action is for a guia timet injunction. In my opinion, in the first class of cases, it will be necessary for the plaintiff to prove an actual breach of contract. for the simple reason that a breach has not taken place, the purpose of the action being to prevent a breach taking place.

It is important to note that in EMERALD CONSTRUCTION CO. LTD. V. LOWTHIAN & ORS. supra, the court was concerned with the question whether or not an interlocutory injunction should be granted to restrain the defendants from procuring a breach of contract. In the present case, the plaintiff (Abess) pleaded actual breach [p.47] of contract in the Amended Statement of Claim. He must therefore, in my opinion, prove that an actual breach of contract resulted from the inducement by Agip. I have already held that Kakua abstain Chiefdom committed a breach of contract by determine the Abass lease.

On the issue of inducement, Mr. Cotran submitted that there were concurrent findings of fact by the High Court and the Court of Appeal and consequently the findings of the two courts should be accepted and the evidence ought not to be reviewed a third time. He relied on SRIMATI BIBHABAIT DEV V. KUMAR RAMENDRA NARAYAN ROY (1946) A. C. 508, already referred to by the Hon. The Chief Justice, which was a decision of the Privy Council. The learned trial Judge found that Agip knew that the land was under lease to Abess and then he went on to say "I hold that the plaintiff had proved his claim for (1) ……. (2) Damages for inducing a breach of contract with the plaintiff by the 2nd defendant." The learned judge did not make any finding as to what acts of Agip amounted to inducement. In Davi's case, Lord Thankerton in stating the exceptions to the general rule said inter alia at p.521 —

"The question whether there is evidence on which the Courts could arrive at their finding is a question of law."

It seems to me therefore that in the absence of any finding by the trial Judge as to what evidence amounted to inducement, I am entitled to review the evidence for the purpose of I determining whether in fact there was any evidence to support that finding.

In my opinion the evidence of inducement by Agip is the fact that they paid "shake-hand" to the Paramount Chief after they had known of the Abess lease, and the fact that they went on the land and surveyed it in November, 1963 after they had [p.48] knowledge of Abess Lease. This evidence, in my opinion, encountered to inconsistent dealing with knowledge of the existence of the contract. It is well settled that inconsistent dealing with a contract breaker by a third party begun or continued, after the third party has notice of the contract constitutes the tort of inducing a breach of contract. In D.C. THOMPSON & CO. LTD. V. DEAKIN & ORS supra at p.378 Jenkins, L.J. stated the principle in these words: —

"But the contract breaker may himself be a willing party to the breach, without any 'persuasion by the third party, and there seems to be no doubt that if a third party, with knowledge of a contract between the contract breaker and other, has dealings with the contract breaker which the third party knows to be inconsistent with the contract he has committed an actionable interference: see for example, BRITISH INDUSTRIAL PLASTICS LTD. V. FERGUSON where the necessary knowledge was held not to have been brought home to the third party; and BRITISH MOTOR TRADE ASSOCN. V. SLAVADOR. The inconsistent dealing between the third party and the contract breaker may, indeed, be commenced without knowledge by the third party for the contract thus broken, but, if it is continued after the third party has notice of the contract, an actionable interference has been committed by him."

In view of the foregoing, I hold that there was evidence before the trail judge on which to base a finding of inducement of breach of the Abess lease by Agip. In my judgment all the ingredients of the tort of inducing a breach of contract were present in this case and I see no good reason to disturb the judgment of the trial judge against Agip in this regard.

Abbess claimed recovery of possession in the Amended Writ. But the trial judge refused an order for possession and granted instead damages in lieu of possession. He based his order on equitable principles, because at the end of his judgment he said:—

[p.49]

"This is a case in which I consider it equitable to grant damages against the defendants in lieu of recovery of possession etc."

The Court of Appeal also refused an order for recovery of possession.

Unfortunately neither the trial judge nor the court of Appeal stated on which equitable principle or principles he or they relied in refusing an order for possession. I am aware that the superior courts have a general equitable jurisdiction. But it seems to me that it is in exceptional cases that the court exercises that jurisdiction. Find on exceptional circumstances in this case and none has been urged in this court. In cases where a trespasser has built and expended money on the land of another the Courts have applied the principles stated by Lord Crawnworth, L.C. in RAMSDEN DYSON (1866) L.R. 1. H.L. 129. He said at p.140.

“If a stranger begins to builds on my land, supposing it to be his own, and I, perceiving his mistake, abstain from setting him right, and leave him mistake, abstain from setting him right, and leave him to persevere in his error, a court of Equity will not allow me afterwards to assert my title to the land on which he had expended money on the supposition that the land was his own. It considers that when I saw the mistake into which he had fallen, it was my duty to be active, and to state my averse title and that it would be dishonest in me to remain willfully passive on such an occasion, in order afterwards to profit by the mistake which I might have prevented. But it will be observed that the raised such an equity two things are required, first, that the person expending the money supposes himself to be building on his own land; and secondly, that the real owner at the time of the expenditure knows that the land belongs to him and not to the person expending the money in the belief that he is the owner. For if a stranger builds on my land knowing it to be mine, there is no principle of equity, which would prevent my claiming the land with the benefit of all the expenditure made on it.

There would be nothing in my conduct, active or passive, making it inequitable in me to assert my legal rights.”

It seems to me that the important questions in such a situation are, (i) has the trespasser expended money on the land under the mistaken belief that eh land was his? (ii) has the landowner "stood by" i.e. knowing of the trespasser's mistaken belief, permitted or encouraged the trespasser to build either directly or by abstaining from asserting his legal right?

Without going into the question of mistaken belief, there is undisputed evidence that Abess wrote to Agip on 28th May, 1965 informing them that they were building a Abess land. Agip ignored this warning and completed the building in not be said, in my judgment, that Abess "stood by" while Agip built on the land.

In my opinion having taken the risk to continue building after they had been warned, Agip must suffer the consequence of their folly and they are not, in such circumstances, entitled to the protection of equity.

On the question of damages, I agree with the learned Chief Justice that the award by the Learned Trial Judge of Le20,000 as damages for trespass was excessive and ought to be reduced. The Learned Chief Justice also mentioned the Trial Judge probably took into consideration the fact that recovery of possession was not being ordered. It is also probable that the Trial Judge took into consideration the highly speculative claims amounting to Le84,423,240, made by Abess which were itemized in a document headed "Cost and [p.51] Expenses of land of Abess" (Ex. F). Possession of the land "with all that goes with it" in being granted to Abess. A petrol filling station built at a cost of over Le37,000 is one of the things that goes with the land to Abess. Even if Abess has to demolish the petrol filling station, he would still take the installations and fittings on the land. Taking all the circumstances into consideration, I think that the figure of Le10,000 awarded by the Learned Chief Justice is excessive. In my opinion an award of Le2,500 would be fair, reasonable and adequate compensation to Abess and I would award that amount.

In all other respects, I agree with the order proposed by the Honourable Chief Justice. For the reason given by the Learned Chief Justice and those I have myself expressed I would allow the Appeal and the Cross-Appeal to the extent stated by the Honourable Chief Justice, subject to what I have said on the question of damages for trespass.

JUSTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT.

TEJAN, J.A:

The facts in this case have been fully 'stated in the Judgment of the Honourable the Chief Justice and they need not be repented in detail. The appeal in this case concerns Land in Bo in the Kakua Chiefdom, Southern Province of Sierra Leone. The land was leased by the second respondents to the first respondent on the 16th day of May, 1962 under the provisions of the Provinces Land Act Cap. 122. Under the provisions of Section 3 of Cap. 122, provincial land cannot be occupied by a non-native unless he has first obtained the consent of the Tribal Authority and the approval of the District Officer.

Paragraph 4 of the lease created in favour of the first respondent and which is Exhibit "B" contains a provision by mutual agreement that the lease was to be voidable if it was not registered within sixty days of its execution in the office of the Registrar General in Freetown. Section 9 of Cap. 122 provides that "every deed creating a tenancy of land shall be voidable by either party, unless it:

(a) is executed in the presence of two witnesses by the lessor before the District Officer of the District in which the land is situated; and is executed, in the presence of two witnesses, by the lessee or his attorney or his agent before a Magistrate; and

(b) is registered within sixty days in the office of the Registrar General.

The proviso contained in paragraph 4 of Exhibit [p.53] "B" and section 9 of Cap. 122 do not make a lease void if the provisions of section 9 are not complied with. They only create the right of election to void and determine a lease.

Exhibit "B", the lease, was executive on the 16th day of May 1962. Owing the some technical defects in the plan, the registration of the lease was refused, and accordingly the plan had to be submitted to the Director of Surveys and Lands for his signature. As explained by Mr. Candappa in Exhibit "Z", this procedure took some time with the ultimate result that the lease could not be registered within sixty days as required by section 9 of Cap. 122. The lease was registered on the 27th day of November, 1962, and the District Officer acknowledged receipt of the copy registered lease by Exhibit "J", a letter dated the 28th day of December, 1962. Assuming that the second respondents had no knowledge of the breaches, the District Officer, who was responsible for the administration of the province particularly in respect of provincial land, as can be seen from the powers conferred on him by the Provinces Land Act, must be taken to have known of the breaches on receipt of the copy registered lease at the latest on the 28th day of December, 1962. The District Officer, no doubt, was and still is the recognised agent or representative of the Tribal Authority with regard to provincial land, [p.54] and the general rule is that the knowledge of an agent is the knowledge of the principal. Accordingly, the Tribal Authority must have had imputed knowledge of the breaches on the 28th day of December, 1962. The second respondents, having knowledge of the breaches, permitted the first respondent to take possession of the land and to spend money on it. The second respondents then went further to accept rents as evidenced by Exhibits C1 and C2. No oral evidence was given as to what period the acceptance of rents covered but a document was tendered in evidence. This document which is Exhibit "J", a letter written by Mr. Candappa to the Acting District Commissioner states in paragraph 6 as follows:

"That such an agreement was not only "entered into .but acted upon is clear "from the fact that throughout the "material period since before and after "execution of the Lease and up to the "date and including the whole of 1964, "payment of rent due on the lease have "been received by the Tribal Authority "via the appropriate authority."

I am satisfied that on the 7th day of March, 1963, the Tribal Authority accepted rents for 1963, and 1964.

On the facts, I have no doubt that the lease Exhibit "B" was a subsisting lease on the 20th day of January, 1964, the day on which the second respondents served a notice of re-entry on the first respondent. The proviso contained in paragraph 4 of the lease Exhibit "B" was quoted in the notice of re-entry which is Exhibit "B" was quoted in the notice of re-entry which [p.55] is Exhibits V².

The proviso is as follows:

"Provided always that if this indenture "is not registered within sixty days of "its execution in the office of the "Registrar General in Freetown then the "said deed shall be voidable at the "option of either party to the same".

Paragraphs 2, 3, and 4 of the notice of re-entry read as follows:

2. “You have failed to register the said "lease within sixty days of its executions "and have so committed a breach of the "said proviso or condition contained in "the said lease.

3. “You have also failed to execute the "aforesaid lease.

4. “In view of the matters stated above, "We the said Lessor have decided to "avoid and determine the said lease "and have therefore this day exercised "our right to re-enter on the land in “respect of which the said lease shall "determine".

Section 9 of Cap.122 also stipulates that a lease created under the Provinces Land act shall be voidable by either party if the lease is not executed by the lessee, and if it is not registered within sixty days in the office of the Registrar General.

I have said earlier that these provisions do not make a lease void. Instead they merely render the lease voidable if certain requirements are not complied with. In the circumstances any breach of the provisions can be waived. I think it is necessary to draw a distinction between the words “void and voidable”. I agree with Lord Denning, when, in distinguishing the two words in the case of MACFOY V U.A.C. LTD [p.55] (1962) A.C. 152 he said, "The distinction between the two has been repeatedly drawn. If an act is void, then it is in law a nullity. It is not only bad but incurably bad. There is no need for an order of Court to set it aside. It is automatically null and void without more ado, though it is sometimes convenient to have the court to declare it to be so. And every proceeding which is founded on it is also bad and incurably bad. You cannot put something on nothing and expect it to stay there. It will collapse. But if an act is only voidable, then it is not automatically void. It is only an irregularity which may be waived”.

Section 9 of Cap. 122 provides for a voidable lease and so is the proviso contained in paragraph a of the lease (Exhibit "B"). It therefore follows that the covenants contained in Section 9 are capable of being waived.

There are many ways of avoiding and determining a lease. The second respondents elected to avoid and determine the lease by re-entry. Paragraph 2 of the lease contains certain covenants on the part of the first respondent with the following proviso:

"Provided always that if any part of the rent hereby reserved shall be in arrear for twenty-one days (whether demanded or not) and if any covenant or stipulation on the tenant's part herein contained [p.57] shall not be performed or observed and a written statement to the effect has been deposited with the district Officer then and in any of the said cases, it shall be lawful for the Tribal Authority at any time thereafter to re-enter upon any part of the demised premises in the name of the whole and thereupon this demise shall determine".

The expressions "herein contained" and "then and in any event" on their true construction apply only to covenants contained in paragraph 2 of the lease (Exhibit "B"). They do not apply to either Section 9 of Cap. 122 or the proviso contained in paragraph 4 of the lease (Exhibit "B") under which the lease was avoided and determined by re-entry by the second respondents. The second respondents would have been entitled to avoid and determine the lease by re-entry if there has been an express stipulation to that effect. Cheshire on Modern Real Property, 6th Edition at page 183 clearly says that a breach of covenant by a tenant does not entitle the lessor to resume possession by a re-entry upon the premises, unless an express stipulation to that effect is contained in the lease.

Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant, 27th Edition at page 877 also says that a lease may be determined by entry or ejectment for a forfeiture incurred either by (1) breach of a condition in the lease or (2) for a breach of any covenant in case (and in case only) the lease [p.58] contains a condition or a proviso for re-entry for a breach of such covenant.

Section 9 of Cap. 122 contain covenants and not conditions. A right of re-entry cannot be implied in a covenant but can be implied in a condition since a condition carries with it at common law a right of re-entry if the condition is broken. The present practice, even in the case of conditions, is to sue for recovery of possession. This practice will, however, give the tenant the opportunity of applying to the Court for a relief against forfeiture. It is unfortunate that Section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, is inapplicable to the Provinces by virtue of the Imperial Statutes (Law of Property) Adoption Act, Cap. 18 under Section 14 a land lord is allowed neither to re-enter nor to bring an action for recovery of possession of the premises until he has served on the tenant a notice specifying the particular breach complained of, and, if the breach is capable of remedy, requiring him to remedy it and in any case requiring him to make compensation in money.

Section 8 of Cap. 122 contains merely covenants without a proviso for re-entry, and I think, that the second respondents cannot avoid and determine the lease (Exhibit "B") by means of re-entry, and by doing so, I hold that the re-entry was unlawful.

Section 9 of Cap. 122 provides that the lease shall be voidable by either party unless certain stipulations are complied with. This however, confer a right on the second respondents to avoid and determine the lease (Exhibit "B") for non-observance of any of the stipulations. According to Section 9 of Cap.122, the first respondent was required to execute the lease and to register it within sixty days of its execution otherwise the lease would be voidable. The lease was made on the 16th day of May, 1962, and registered on the 27th day of November, 1962, the late registration being due to some technical defect in the plan. When the lease was registered, a copy was sent to the District Officer, who on the 28th day of December 1962, acknowledged receipt of the lease. The District Officer, then knew of the breaches complained of. His knowledge as representative and agent of the second respondents was also knowledge of the second respondents. On the 7th day of March 1963, the second respondents accepted rents for the leased land for 1964 and 1964. The second respondents was also knowledge of the second respondents. On the 7th day of March 1963, the second respondents accepted rents for the leased land for 1963 and accept rents for the leased land for 1963 and 1964. The question is, was the acceptance of rents a waiver of their right to avoid and determine the lease.

In waiver, the Landlord should be aware of the commission of the act of forfeiture by the tenant, and he should do some positive act which is a recognition of the tenancy.

In this case the second respondents had knowledge [p.60] of the brouches now complained of not later than the 28th day of December, 1962. With this knowledge they accepted rents as evidenced by Exhibits C1 and C2. The common law rule is that acceptance of rent accrued due after the landlord's knowledge of the tenant's breach is regarded as inconsistent with an election to avoid the lease and consistent with an election to avoid the lease and consistent only with its recognition. The act of acceptance of rent is an unequivocal act that will disentitle the landlord to avoid the tenancy even if he qualifies his acceptance. The common law rule has been consistently followed by several English Authorities. In CRFERY V. SOMMERSELL (1949) Ch. 751, after the lessor had become aware of facts entitling him to forfeit, his clerk, in ignorance of the facts, sent a routine demand for rent. Harman, J. held that had been no waiver, saying that the question in such a case is quo animo, the demand is made and that such question is rather one of fact than of law. This was an exceptional case on special facts and does not affect the general principle that the law will, where the lessor or his duly authorized agent has with knowledge done some unequivocal act, presume an intention to waive the forfeiture whatever the lessor's actual intention may be: see also SEGAL SECURITIES V. THOSERBY (1963) 1 Q. B. 887. Waiver was also dealt with by Megaw, J. in the case WINDMILL INVESTMENTS (LONDON) LTD. V MILANO RESTAURANT LTD. [p.61] (1962 2 Q.B.375. After reviewing the facts in this case, His Lordship held that (1) the plaintiff's knowledge at the latest by the end of February, 1959, was sufficient in law to constitute knowledge of the breach; and (2) the plaintiff's subsequent acceptance of rent was a waiver of the breach.

Before coming to this conclusion, Megaw, J. referred to some authorities with regard to waiver.

He said:

"I was at one time during the argument oppressed with the difficulty that there appeared some authority for the proposition that the question whether or not an acceptance of rent amounts to a waiver in Parker, J. in MATHEWS v. SMALLWOOD (1910) 1 Ch. 777,786 clearly says that it is a question of law — a question, as he puts it, which the law decides. On the other hand, in CROFT v. LUMLEY (1858) 6 H.L.C. 672, Lord Wensleydale (who, with Lord Cranworth; decided the appeal in the House of Lords, after hearing the advice of the Judges) in an obiter dictum said, by way of postscript of to his speech which he had already delivered: what I stated upon this subject was guard against the supposition that I entirely concurred in the argument used by the learned judges who though that there was a waiver. It seems to be a matter of fact, rather than that I should have come to the conclusion that the money was received as rent, or that that was the effect that ought to be ultimately ascribed to the transaction".

Again, in CREERY V. SOMMERSELL, HARMAN, J. said:

"The opinions, however, of the judges in CROFT v. LUMLEY, show that it is not the demand nor even the receipt of rent which will of themselves waive a forfeiture. These acts are merely evidence to show that the lessor has elected not to avoid the lease.

[p.62]

The question remains quo animo was the act done. No doubt given must be held responsible for the conveances[sic] consequences of his acts, and the question is rather one of fact than of law, as Lord Wensleydale pointed at the end of the hearing of CROFT v. LUMLEY……..

The explanation is that it is a question of fact whether the money tendered is terdered as, and accepted as, rent, as distinct, for example, from money tendered and accepted as damages for trespass. That is a question of fact. Once it is decided as a fact that the money was tendered and accepted as rent, the question of its consequence as a waiver is a matter of law".

Again, in the case of CENTRAL ESTATES V. WOOGLAR (No. 2) C.A. Lord Denning after the reviewing the facts and relevant authorities said, "So we have simply to ask:— Was this rent demanded and accepted by the Landlord's agent with knowledge of the breach? It does not matter that they did not intend to waive. The very act that they accepted the rent with knowledge constitutes the waiver".

Considering the legal propositions with regard [p.63] to waiver, and I accept these propositions as being very sound, I hold that the second respondents, having accepted rents after knowledge of the breaches, waived their right of re-entry if they had any. The lease was a valid subsisting lease and the question of quo animo does not arise, and I agree with the learned trial judge that the lease between the first respondent and the second respondents was a valid subsisting lease which had not been avoided or terminated according to law, and that the breaches complained of had been waived by the second respondents by receipt of rent due and in terms of the said lease.

The first respondent cross-appealed and asked for a variation of the order for damages in lieu of possession. I have found that the lease (Exhibit "B") was and is still valid and subsisting, and in such a case the first respondent had and still has a legal estate in the land prior to that created to the appellants. The appellants then took subject to the legal estate. I am quite aware that eh appellants had expended money on the land; there is sufficient evidence given by their own witnesses Jacob Kojo Jokoto [p.64] and Papa Bakolo that the appellants ought to have known that the land belonged to somebody. Instead they disregarded this fact and expended money on the land and built a petrol station on it. The fact that the appellants had expended money on the land in my view, should not deprive the first respondent of possession of the land. In the words of Lord Cranworth in the case of RAMSDEN V. DYSON (1866) L.R. 1, H.L. 129 at page 141, "if a person builds on the land of another knowing him to be the owner of thereof there is no principle of equity which would prevent the owner from claiming the land with the benefit of all the expenditure on it". I think the learned trial judge ought not to have given damages in lieu of possession. I would therefore make an order for recovery of possession of the land by the first respondent, that is, the area of land leased to him.

The appellants also appealed against the findings of the learned trial judge and the Court of Appeal that the appellants induced the second respondents to breach their contract with the first respondent.

The first respondent, or the other hand, [p.65] submitted that since there were concurrent findings of fact, he was entitled to judgment, relying on the principles laid down in SRILATI BIBHABATI DEVI V. KUMA RAMENDRA NARAYON ROY (1946) A.C. 508. The principles laid down in his case were followed in the cases of YACHUK AND ANOTHER v. OLIVER BLAIS CO. LTD. (1949) A.C. 386 and in the STOOL OF AYNABINA vs. CHIEF KOJO ENYIMADU (1953) A.C. 207

I have read the entire evidence at the hearing, and in my opinion, it would be hopeless to contend that there was not sufficient evidence to support the findings. The learned trail judge might not have given all the reasons on which he arrived at his finding, but the evidence taken as a whole, in my view, fully substantiates the conclusion at which both the trial Judge and the Majority of the Court of Appeal arrived at the findings. In the circumstances, I would not disturb the concurrent findings of fact. Since it has now been established that the appellants induced the breach of contract, equity cannot under the circumstances render any assistance to them. The maxim is, "he who comes to equity must come with clear hands".

I cannot usefully and anything to the judgment of the Honourable the Chief Justice with regard to damages. I entirely agree with his finding. But I have this to say with regard to special damages awarded by the learned trail judge and the majority of the Court of Appeal. The Honourable Chief Justice has rightly said in his judgment that special damages ought not to have been awarded because they were not pleaded. Sometimes plaintiffs confuse general damages with special damages. General damages are damages which the law will presume to be the direct natural or probable consequence of the act complained of. Special damages, on the other hand, are damages which the law will not infer from the nature of the act. They do not follow in the ordinary course, and therefore they must be claimed specifically and proved strictly.

In this case, the plaintiff put in evidence a document showing his expenses incurred. This is not sufficient. Lord Goddard in the case of BONHAM CARTER v. HYDE PARK HOTEL (1948) T.L.R. 177 makes the position clear. He said that, "Plaintiffs must understand that if they bring actions for damages it is for them to [p.67] prove their damage; it is not enough to write down the particulars, and so to speak, through then at the head of the Court, saying, "This is what I have lost; I ask you to give these damages".

DIVISION: SUPREME COURT, SIERRA LEONE

DATE: 29 OCTOBER 1974

CORAM: MR. JUSTICE S.C.W. BETTS, JSC (PRESIDING)

ACTING CHIEF JUSTICE

MR. JUSTICE E. LIVESEY-LUKE, JSC

MR. JUSTICE N. E. BROWNE-MARKE, JSC

BETWEEN:

GEORGE BERRESFORD COLE — APPELLANT

AND

SAHR MENDEKIA — RESPONDENT

Dr. W.A. Marcus-Jones for the Appellant

G. Gelaga-King Esq. for the Respondent

JUDGMENT

S.C.W. BETTS, JSC

On the 13th October, 1970, the Plaintiff, Sahr Mendekia, (whom I hereinafter refer to as the Respondent), issued a Writ of Summons accompanied by a Statement of Claim against George Beresford Cole, (whom I shall hereinafter refer to as the Appellant), for breach of a written contract dated 3rd December, 1968. The written contract provided, inter alia, that the Appellant would construct a two-storeyed building of four-self contained flats for the sum of Le24,000 (twenty-four thousand leones) within a maximum period of six (6) months, that is to say by June, 1969. The Respondent paid the appellant an advance of Le14,000 (fourteen thousand leones), and agreed to pay the balance on or before the 28th of February, 1969. As a matter of fact, the balance of Le10,000 (ten thousand leones) was paid on the 16th December, 1968. After the expiration of the time for the performance of the contract, the Appellant, according to the Respondent's evidence, asked for one more months to complete the building, that is to say, in July 1969. The Respondent said he [p.168] accepted. The building however was till incomplete at the end of July, 1969.

Litigation started by a Writ of Summons which was filed on the 13th October, 1970, followed by a Statement of Claim. The Appellant filed a Statement of Defence and counter-claim on the 28th April, 1971. By leave of the court, an amended Statement of Claim was delivered and filled on the 3rd of November, 1971. The Respondent claimed damages — general and special — for breach of contract. The action was tried by Ken During, J, (as he then was) who gave judgment ton the 10th April, 1972, dismissing both the Respondent's claim and the Appellant's counter-claim. The Respondent appealed against that judgment and the Court of Appeal (Percy R Davies, JA, O B R Tejan, JA and Rowland Harding, J,) allowed the appeal on the 11th July 1973, and ordered the Appellant to pay the Respondent Le14,085 (fourteen thousand and eighty-five leones) as general damages; Le500 (five hundred leones) as special damages and costs of the action in the high Court and the Court of Appeal.

The present appeal is against the judgment of the Court of Appeal and the following issues were raise.

(a) Was the Appellant a gratuitous Agent of the Respondent?

(b) Was Exhibit 'B' a contract or a receipt?

(c) If it was a contract, was there a breach of it?

(d) Was the Respondent entitled to the damages he was awarded or to any damages at all?

It will be useful at this stage to set out Exhibit 'C' as it relates significantly to the answers to be given to the issues raised.

Having set out Exhibit 'C' I propose to construe it to determine whether its intention was to appoint the Appellant as an agent or to create an agony. If one or the other kind of relationship can be ascribed to the document as a result of the construction, then that is the end of the matter, in regard to the agent or agency excluding other incidents. But if not, Exhibit 'C' will be subject to further construction to determine if it is a contract or a receipt. It is accepted that the word 'agent' is capable of being used in a number of ways and in these proceedings it was sought to use it by the Appellant's counsel as a 'conduit pipe' merely to effect the transportation of the terms of agreement between the Respondent and some other third party. Halsbury's 3rd Edition, Volume I at page 146 and paragraph 351, states that an agent has been defined as a "person primarily employed for the purpose of placing the principal in contractual or other[p.171] relations with a third party and it is essential to an agency of this character that a third party should be in existence or contemplated". Wilson v Short (1848) 6 dare 366, refers.

There are other definitions but that is the one relevant to our present purpose. It may however he necessary to refer to the distinction between the conduct and exercise of the functions of an independent contractor and an agent. The distinction between an independent contractor and an agent is clearly stated in Halsbury's 3rd edition at page 146, paragraph 350 Volume I as follows, "an independent contractor, on the other hand, is entirely independent of any control of interference, and merely undertakes to produce a specified result, employing his own means to produce that result". . . "An agent, though bound to exercise his authority in accordance with all lawful instructions which may be given to him from time to time by his principal, is not subject in its exercise to the direct contract or supervision of the principal." I think this is a point to be kept in mind in construing Exhibit 'C'. the above examples indicate that two roles are contemplated — one whose only duty is the production of a specified result without any control and the other in which lawful restrictions may be imposed during the performance of the object to be achieved. It cannot be denied that the Respondent attached his right thumbprint to Exhibit ‘C’ and that such act was as a legal accompanied by other legal requirements to make it effective. Exhibit ‘C’ also contains a paragraph which reads:—

"I, Sahr Lebbie Mendekia aforesaid for myself, my heirs and successors in title do hereby contract with my agent George Beresford Cole, Real Estate Agent of 23 Liverpool Street, Freetown, Sierra Leone”, and signed, “George Beredsford Cole, Real Estate Agent".

Appellant’s counsel argued that because George Beresford Cole was referred to as ‘my agent’ in the passage quoted above, and because of other references to him the appellant as ‘Real Estate Agent’, there is sufficient evidence to show that his duty as an agent was to bring the principal and the third party together, and that his was particularly so because he, the Appellant, was receiving no payment for his service.

The first general rule of construction of a written document is that the language of the instrument is to be understood in its ordinary and natural meaning, notwithstanding the fact that such a construction may appear not to carry out the view which it may be supposed the parties intended to carry out. This view was expressed in the case of Lee v. Alexander (1883) 8 App Cas 853 at pages 869 and 870. One of the cardinal rules of construction is that words must be construed as they stand. In the case of Throckmerton v Tracey 75 ER page 222; Staunford, J., laid down the rule that “words shall be construed according to the intend of the parties and not otherwise”. In determining the intent of the parties, the document in question should be construed as a whole. In an instrument of the kind we are considering, Wilson v Short already quoted requires it as essential to an agency that a third party should be in existence or contemplated. In Exhibit ‘C’ there was only one reference to the words ‘my agent’, from which one could arrive at the sense in which the word, ‘agent’ was used. The words ‘Real Estate Agent’ are merely descriptive of what I may call — the primary occupation of George Beresford Cole. In construing Exhibit ‘C’ it is necessary to examine the sense in which ‘my agent’ is used. Does it imply the existence or contemplation of a third party when considered along with various other portions of the document? A passage of the document reads, “I, Sahr Lebbie Mendekia aforesaid for myself, my heirs and successors in title do hereby contract and [p.173] agree with agent, George Beresford Cole, Real Estate Agent of 23 Liverpool Street, Freetown, Sierra Leone, to pay to him the balance of Le10,000 (ten thousand leones) in full on or before the 28th February, 1969, for the fulfillment of the purposes hereinbefore contained”. The purposes hereinbefore contained are set out in another section of the same document — ‘for the costs of construction of a two-storeyed building with boys, quarters and car port; to be built and constructed with the best labour and materials available; within a maximum period of six calendar months; from the date hereon, that is when the document was signed between the Appellant and the Respondent. The words, ‘do hereby contract and agree’ are significant as also the words, ‘for the fulfillment of the purposes herein before mentioned. One would ask, what do the words, ‘my agent’ really signify. Do they imply a mere conduit pipe or are they of much greater importance? Do they create a situation in which the principal could exercise his authority by giving lawful instruction to the agent or do they indicate that the principal is only interested in the production of a specified result. Put in this way, the answers are obvious. The role of the Appellant in these circumstances is incompatible with either bringing the principal and a third part together or binging himself under the direction or control of the principal. I believe that the words, 'agent' and 'agency', as argued by Counsel for the Appellant, do not have any relevance to the Appellant or to his relationship with the Respondent for at no time was a third party mentioned by name or description nor was there any suggestion in Exhibit 'C' that a third party was in existent or contemplated. I do not agree with the argument canvassed by counsel for the Appellant that Appellant was a gratuitous agent. From all the material which could be gathered [p.174] in the word 'agent' in my opinion used an Exhibit 'C' showed that the relationship between Appellant and Respondent was that of Principal and an independent contractor; and also that the use of the word 'agent' has not changed the nature of that relationship.

One of the issues which emerged as a result of the argument of Counsel for the Appellant was that Exhibit 'C' was not a contract. He submitted that it with a receipt. I propose to deal with that submission as it was strongly canvassed.

In the course of his argument, counsel for the Appellant said that, the object of Exhibit 'C' was to acknowledge the receipt of money and not as the Court found, a contract to erect buildings on the land'. The whole of Exhibit 'C', by that I mean, its entire content, is called in question. When read and appraised as a document relevant in its entirety to the subject matter of this appeal, could it be said that it evokes only an impression of-acknowledgement of money received? Before referring to the component sections of the exhibit in some detail it will be useful to outline the main characteristics of a 'receipt', and then attempt to discover whether the contents of Exhibit 'C' would match the constituent elements of a receipt as defined by law. Stroud's Judicial Dictionary Volume IV, 4th edition, beginning at page 2278, defines 'receipt' as requiring 'no particular form of words necessary to constitute a receipt. The word 'settled' or 'paid', or any other word purporting to give a discharge, together with signature of the creditor, or his more signature on a document specifying the amount due without any words indicating payment, is sufficient (R v Martin) 7 C & P 549: Spawforth v Alexander. 2 Espinasse 621; R v Boardman 2 Moore & R 147 In Jowitt's Dictionary of English Law, a receipt is defined as 'an acknowledgement in writing of having received a sum of money, which is prima facie but not conclusive evidence or payment', Skife v Jackson (1824) 3 B and C. 421. In Webster's New World Dictionary, 'receipt is a written acknowledgment that some [p.175] thing, as goods, money, etc, has been received'. In the light of these definitions, it could be concluded that the essential elements of a receipt are that it is an acknowledgement; it is in writing; it is a mere admission of a fact that money or some other form of valuable has been received. In none of these definitions is it even mildly suggested that any further information is required, while in Strand's Judicial Dictionary already referred to, it is stated that a mere signature on a document specifying the amount without; any words indicating payment is sufficient' R v Harbin.

The Appellant is entitled to raise the question that if the other parts of the document are expunged, could Exhibit 'C' not be regarded as a receipt? If it is argued that that should be the proper approach, then Exhibit 'C' would inevitably be acknowledged to be a fragmentary document. But this is not so.

It takes into account a whole range of connected incidents and fuses them into a distinctly discernible pattern in such a way that each section is linked up with the preceding and subsequent one. The topics specified that the Respondent was paying, at the time the document was drawn up, the sum or Le1l4,000.00 for a particular type of building at a named, site as delineated on Director of Surveys and Lands Plan LS1070; the buildings to be completed in six (6) months The buildings were treated on a unit basis and an attempt was made to set a price for each unit. The Respondent then went on to contract and agree with the Appellant for himself, heirs and successors to pay a balance of Le10,000 by the 28th February, 1969. These to my mind do not suggest that the document was a mere acknowledgement of money received. It did not simply acknowledge a receipt of money, it made provisions as to the fulfillment by the Appellant of specific obligations and also created binding legal, duties for the Respondent, his heirs and successors.

Having disposed of this, I come to counsel's strong contention that Exhibit 'C' was a contract stressing that there was no 'ad idem' that is, 'a mutual understanding between the parties as to the exact type of buildings to be constructed'. The plan approved for the buildings, Exhibit 'B', was produced on the 11th December, 1960, and counsel argued that if a contract Exhibit 'C' had been signed on the 3rd December, 1968, the approved plan could not necessarily have been the same plan the parties had in mind when Exhibit 'C' was executed. In the case of Falok v Williams. (1900) A C 176 P C where the same words were used with different meanings, it was said that the parties were not at one and therefore there was no consensus ad idem. The facts in this case are different and distinguishable. Both sides conducted negotiations together before the project was decided upon. The layout and general character of "the; project wore determined and these resulted. In the production of an approved plan on the 11th December, 1968. On the 16th December, 1968, the approved plan was seen by the Respondent after it had been prepared on the instruction of the Appellant. There was no question at this time that the parties were not of the same mind. In the instant case, the Appellant was solely responsible for all constructional arrangements and Exhibit 'C', which, as I have already mentioned was drawn up by the Appellant. It will sound very harsh in the month of the Appellant to say that in the month of December, 1968, the Respondent and himself did not have a mutual understanding of the kind, nature and quality of building was agreed and contracted to construct. Even concealing that Exhibit 'B' was to be the basis on which Exhibit 'C' was to be constructed, when it did turn up, apart from the details in measurements which were included, was there any substantial difference at all in the basic ideas [p.177] incorporated in the two documents: I say no. Further, since the Respondent paid on the 16th December, 1968, that is, after the Appellant had seen Exhibit 'B', which was in his possession, would his conduct not amount to an adoption of the two documents? How then could it be said that there was no consensus? Counsel for the Appellant leant heavily on the case of Scammell v Ouston (1941) 1 All E R page 14. Lord Wright quoting Lord Dunedin said, "however, as Lord Dunedin said in May & Butcher, Limited v R (5) (reported in a note to Foley v Classique Coaches Limited (6) at page 21:

"To be a good contract there must be a concluded bargain, and a concluded contract is one which settles everything that is necessary to be settled and leaves nothing to be settled by agreement between the parties. Of course, it may leave something which still has to be determined, but then that determination must be a determination which does not depend upon the agreement between the parties".

This passage very succinctly puts the case for the Respondent against the Appellant. Exhibit ‘C’ did leave certain things out but these things were not dependent on a further agreement between the parties. In counsel for the Appellant’s own words, I quote, "there were many areas in which agreement should be reached such as, how the buildings were to be erected was a subsequent term to be considered; and that there was no decision about who was going to be the building contractor or surveyor or costs". The most cursory of examination will show that these were not matters dependent on agreement between the parties as all the indices leading to a concluded bargain had already been embodied in Exhibit 'C’. The cases cited Hutton v Watling (1948) Ch 398 at p 403/405; Caddick v Sikdmore (1857) 44 E K 907: and Penn v Simmonds (1971) 3 A C R 327/240 by the Counsel for the Appellant did not do anything; to improve the inconsequential vein of thin particular submission.

I have read with interest the case referred to above and observe that the former two were cited by the counsel for the Appellant in support of his submission that a good contract is one which has settled everything necessary to be settled between the parties leaving nothing for future determination between them; whilst the latter was a submission that in construing written agreements only evidence of factual background should be received. All these cases in my opinion, do not effect this issue. It is significant that Hutton's case was referred to by Counsel for the Appellant. I shall read out a portion of the judgment of Lord Greene, M R, he said, and I quote, "the first thing we have to do, as I have said, is to construe that document. The true construction of a document means no more than that the Court puts upon it the true meaning being the meaning which the other party, to whom the document was handed or who is relying upon it as an ordinary intelligent person construing the words in a proper way in the light of relevant circumstances". It, goes on to say, "what then would the purchaser when she received the document have thought it meant as an ordinary reasonable person intelligently understanding the English language and construing it in the light of the relevant circumstances? She could only have understood that the vendors were deliberately and solemnly recording the terms of an agreement into which they were prepared to enter, or indeed, into which they had entered". It continues, "I should have thought it quite impossible for the vendors to turn round now and say, 'although the document which we handed to you on 6 September, 1937, quite clearly purports to record the agreed terms between us . . . . . there was no consideration’. With a slight change of words the situation could easily be that in the instant case. Of course, the appeal was dismissed. The reference in this case to the absence of consideration is also [p.179] apposite. As the principles involved are similar to those in the instant case, and as they have been accurately analysed and the law properly applied, I adopt and apply them. Exhibit ‘C’ has been examined fragmentally as well as cohesively and the examination has revealed hat there was a concluded bargain between the parties and this constituted a valid contract. It should be particularly borne in mind that it was the Appellant who drew up Exhibit ‘C’.

Counsel or the Appellant questioned if it was conceded that Exhibit 'C’ was a contract whether the Respondent should be entitled to both the Le6,000 which he had spent out of pocket and the Le14,085, the amount estimated to complete the buildings after the Le24,000, the agreed amount in the contract had been spent? With regard to the Le6,000, the trial Judge had this to say. "As regards the Defendant's counter-claim although he alleged therein that he spent an extra sum of Le6,000 of his own money thereon with the concurrence and at the request of the Plaintiff, there is abundant evidence before this Court that the allegation is not true". Those are strong words and the Court of Appeal rightly did not pursue the matter. Counsel also submitted that the award of Le14,085 would amount to an unjust enrichment as that vast sum would be supplemental to the ownership of the buildings or whatever else the Respondent had acquired from them. He cited the case of Nathaniel Stuart v Lawrence Pardoe (1963) 1 WLR p 677. Chalmers's case was based on an oral agreement of land in Fiji which could not be leased without the permission of the Native Land Trust Board. The said land was leased and a building erected thereon. Before an application for the Board's consent was made the Appellant and Respondent fell foul of each other. No consent was in fact obtained though the building had been erected. Sir Terence Donovan delivered the judgment of the Privy Council and advised Her Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed. It is [p.180] pertinent to point out that that case related, to the application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel. This principle does not arise in this case. The question here is based on contract. Had the Appellant any authority to vary or break the terms of Exhibit 'C' without reference to the Respondent? The outstanding questions now are — was there a breach? If there was, was the Respondent entitled to the quantum of damages he was awarded?

In considering whether the conduct of the Appellant amounted to a breach account should be taken of the performance of his promise, if these were executed in the manner and the time agreed upon. In the case of Hawkins v Rogers (1951), 85 1 T R 128, "a race horse had been sold with its engagements; after the sale the vendors, in whose name the engagements stood, without consulting the purchaser cancelled the engagements. The High Court of Eire held that such cancellation was a clear interference with or violation of the purchaser's contractual rights and was intended to and did injure him. The purchaser was entitled to damages, which wore assessed at £750". Any breach of contract of one party gives the other party an immediate cause of action for damages. Usually time is not of the essence in contracts involving work and labour, but where the contract so provides time becomes of essence. In the case of Charles Richards v Oppenhaim (1950) 1 K B 616 C A (following Crawford v Toogood (1879) 13 BP 153 and ------- Hymans (1920) 3 K B 475) the facts are that "in August, 1947, the Defendant placed an order with the Plaintiffs for the building of a body on to the Chasis of a motor car on the footing that the Plaintiffs could obtain it within six months, or, at most seven months". From March, 1948, onwards the Defendant kept pressing for delivery. On 28 June, 1948, the Defendant wrote the Plaintiffs, "I regret I shall be unable to accept [p.181] delivery after 25th July". When the Defendant learnt from the Plaintiffs that the body of the car would not be ready by that date, the Defendant cancelled the order. The Plaintiffs completed the car on 18th October, 1948, but delivery was refused by the Defendant. The Plaintiffs thereupon brought an action claiming the price of the body of the car Lord Denning delivering the judgment said,

"If this had been originally without any stipulation as to time and, therefore, will only the implication of reasonable time, it may be that the plaintiffs could have said that they had fulfilled the contract; but in my opinion, the case is very different when there was on initial contract, mailing time of the essence of the contract; within six or at the most, seven months".

Exhibit 'C' contained the terms of the contracts which stipulated among other things that a "two storey-building with Boys' Quarters; and car port was to be constructed on 1907 acre of land situated off Kissy

Bye Pass Road within a maximum period of six (6) calendar months from the date hereon, that is the 3rd day of December, 1968. There is no contention that the building as described was incomplete to six or even seven months after; also that the building was not ready either for occupation or rental. The original provision was inscribed in the contract, Exhibit 'C' and had not been performed in the manner and time agreed upon, then on the basis of the cases cited, a breach had been committed for which the Respondent was entitled to take action for damages. This means that his right of action for damages had therefore accrued. The facts of this case reveal that Exhibit 'C' was signed on the 3rd December, 1968. The Appellant entered into an agreement to carry out the purposes inscribed in Exhibit 'C' for the sum of Le24,000. On the 10th December, 1960, Exhibit 'B' had been produced. This was handed over to Malhab, Defendant's 1st witness, some time during [p.182] that month for an estimate to be prepared. In that same month, the estimate was prepared and found to be Le36,209.95 cents. This was before the commencement of construction of the building. These facts were never reported to the Respondent until the 11th June, 1969, when the completed building should have been delivered up. Assuming that Malhab's figures were correct, then the Appellant was taking on an obligation voluntarily and deliberately entering into a contract he knew it was impossible for him to fulfill. This could not release him from his liability to pay damages. Before going on to deal with Appellant's contention, I should refer to the effect of a building contract which is absolute. An extract from Halsbury's Laws of England 3rd Edition Volume 3 at p 444 Paragraph 843, reads as follows:

"If the contract to build or erect works is absolute (which this is), 'and unrestricted by any condition expressed or implied, and it impossible to do the work and the contractor does not complete it, he will not be excused from the consequences of not fulfilling the contract or from a liability to pay damages. In the case of Jones v St John's College, Oxford, (1870) L R 6 Q B 116 at page 127, Hawner, J., said, 'In that case a contractor undertook unconditionally to perform a contract within a specified time, including any extras which might be ordered; and extras were ordered, which made completion impossible within the contract time; the contract was held liable to pay damages for the delay'.

The Court of Appeal ordered as follows:

(1) That the Respondent pay to the Appellant the sum of le14,085.00 as general damages;

(2) That the Respondent pay to the Appellant the sum of le500.00 as special damages; and

(3) That costs on the claim in the High Court, costs of appeal in this Court and costs on the Respondent's notice be paid by the Respondent

The basis on which damages under the first head were fixed was the evidence of John Thompson, a Chartered Surveyor, who, in January, 1971, estimated the value of the work required to complete the buildings as Le17,450.00. From the amount, the Court deducted Le3,370 leaving the sum of le14.085. Counsel for Appellant forcefully contested this award. He referred to the case of Philips v Ward (1956) 1 All E R 874 C.A (Denning, Morris, Roamer L J J), and quoted a principle which he alleged emanated from Lord Denning. The alleged principle was "that where cost of completion or reinstatement is widely disproportionate to the advantages of undertaking such work, the measure of damages is to be assessed by calculating the diminution in the value of the property caused by the breach of contract". I am sorry to say those words were not used in my report. The major finding of that Court of Appeal was based on the dictum of Viscount Haldane L C in British Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company Limited v Underground Electric Rys Company of London Limited (1912) A C at p. 689. The Court of Appeal in fact held that—

"The measure of damages was the difference between the fair value of the property if it had been in the condition described in the Defendant's report (£25,000) and its value in its actual condition (£21,000); accordingly the amount recoverable in damages was £4,000".

In the course of his judgment, Lord Denning did say, I take it to be the clear law that the proper measure of damage if is the amount of money which will put the Plaintiff into as good a position au if the surveying contract had been properly fulfilled'; and also, 'the proper criterion is to take the difference in value between the premises as they ought to have been delivered up in repair, and the value of the premises they are delivered out of repair. The difference is the measure of the damages to which the landlord is entitled'. I am [p.184] afraid I am at a loss as to what the alleged principle quoted really means but I will accept it could mean the difference between the actual and the assessed prices. That is near enough to the finding in that Court of Appeal, I do not however accept that the principle by which damages were determined in Philips case is applicable in the instant case. The basis on which damages in the Philips case was founded was in negligence and damages were measured to satisfy the requirements of a liability in tort as per the dictum of Viscount Haldane in the British Westinghouse Electric case supra. What is being considered in this case is damages in respect of a breach of contract. The Incase of Mertons v Home Freehold Company Limited (1921) 2 KB 526 gives an admirable exposition of the proposition in such a case. In the course of his judgment in that case Lord Sterndale, M R said:

"I think the right measure is correctly stated in Hudson on Building Contracts, 4th edition, Volume I, p 491, on the authority of an American case: Hirt v Hahn". 'B agreed to erect for the plaintiff according to plans for a certain day. The defendants were B's sureties. After partly completing, B ceased work, and the plaintiff, after giving notice to the sureties, entered and completed and sued the sureties. Held, that the measure of damages was what it cost the plaintiff to complete the house substantially as it was originally intended, and in a reasonable manner, less any amount that would have been due and payable B by the plaintiff had B completed the house at the time agreed by the terms of his contract'. It is true that that is an American case. Though I cannot put my finger on them for the moment, I feel satisfied that there are English cases which fix the same measure of damages".

This, in my opinion, is the principle applicable and I find nothing wrong with the measure or damages awarded. The second [p.185] leg of the finding in Philips v Ward was, "that the damages should, be assessed at the date the damage occurred, viz, 1952, and accordingly, allowance she not be made for the increase of the coat or executing the requisite work of repair between that time and the date of bearing of the action". Whilst I agree with this statement as an underlying principle it must however be actively borne in mind that occasions could arise when individual tests are necessary. In this case, the conduct of the Appellant made it impossible for any assessment to be done before action commenced. I would therefore hold that the proper time that assessment could have been made here is when the keys were obtained considering all the circumstances of the case.

As there is no contention that the building was not completed in the time agreed I would have to consider whether circumstances had changed so fundamentally that made it impossible for the contract to be performed. In building contracts, hardships, inconvenience for material loss are not grounds for the frustration of contracts. In the case of Davis Contractors Limited v Fareham U D C (1956) A C 696 729, the Plaintiff agreed to build seventy-eight houses for the Defendant for a fixed price, the work to be concluded in eight months. As a result of weather, shortage of labour, the work took twenty-two months to complete at an extra cost of £17,000. It was claimed for the contractors that the intervening circumstances over which they had no control had frustrated the contract. The House of Lords held unanimously that the circumstances did not frustrate the contract.

In the instant case, also, such an argument cannot be supported by the facts as the Appellant had voluntarily contracted terms which turned out to be onerous. He had with him the estimate submitted by Malhab and if he was so minded he could have informed the Respondent and or sought a revision of the [p.186] terms of Exhibit 'C' during the currency of the contract. This he failed to do. Liability to damages is the legal consequence for a breach of contract and in view of all the circumstances of this case, I find no justification to interfere with the awards made. The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs to the Respondent in this Court and the Courts below. Costs to be taxed.

I agree that this appeal should be dismissed. I would, however, like to make a few observation of my own.

1. Contract or Receipt

Counsel for the appellant submitted with considerable force that Ex. C (hereafter referred to as the document) was not a contract but a mere receipt. In order to determine the soundness of that submission it is necessary to construe the document in order to understand its nature and purpose. The general principle upon which the Court acts in construing documents is well settled. The primary purpose of construction is to ascertain the intention of the parties having regard to the words used in the whole document and to the circumstances under which it was made. In this connection the words of Lord Greene M.R. in HUTTON v. WATLING (1948) 1 Ch. 398 are appropriate. He said at p.403:—

"The true construction of a document means no, more than that the Court puts upon it the true meaning, being the meaning which the other party, to whom the document was handed or who is relying upon it, would put upon it as an ordinary intelligent person construing the words in a proper way in the light of the relevant circumstances. This document, on the face of it, intended to be handed to the purchaser, and it is produced by the purchaser. Indeed, the whole tenor of the document indicates that it is to be purchaser's document. What then would the purchaser when she received the document has thought it meant as an ordinary reasonable person, intelligently understanding the English Language and construing it in the light of the relevant circumstances? She could have understood that the [p.188] vendors were deliberating and solemnly recording the terms of an agreement into which they were prepared to enter, or, indeed into which they had entered."

I now propose to analyze several portions of the document which I consider significant, in order to ascertain the nature and purpose of the document. The document starts off with the words "Received the sum of Le.14,000 from Sahr Lebbie Mendekia, Esq., Farmer of 27, Yaradu Road Koidu Town, Kono District in the Eastern Province of Sierra Leone being part payment of the sum of Le.24,000." In my opinion this is quite clearly an acknowledgement by the appellant (George Beresford Cole) of the receipt of the sum of Le.14,000 from the respondent (Sahr Lebbie Mendekia) as part payment of a total sum of Le.24,000. My understanding of a receipt is that it is an acknowledgment in writing of the receipt of money, chattel etc. In my opinion therefore the above quoted portion of the document if signed by the appellant would have constituted a sufficient receipt by the appellant of the sum of Le.14,000. But the document goes on to make further and detailed provisions relating to the purpose of the payment of the Le.14,000. After the receipt portion quoted above the document continues "for the cost of construction of a Two Storey building with Boy's Quarters and Car Port on 1907 Acre of land situate off Kissy Bye Pass Road, Kissy Village as more fully described and delineated on Director of Surveys and Land Plan I.S 1090/68 dated 28th November, 1968 to be built and constructed with the best, labour and materials available within a maximum period of (6) six calendar months from the date hereon". In my view, this portion states that the money was paid for the construction of a two storey building etc. (hereinafter called the building), specifies the land on which the building was to be built, makes stipulations as to the quality of workmanship and materials and stipulates the period for the completion of the building. These are terms which are common in building contract. The document then goes on to spell out the specifications and costing of the various sections of the building. I do not think that it can be seriously contended that a mere receipt for money received would make such detailed provisions. In my opinion these provisions point [p.189] unequivocally to the fact that the document is a building contract, The document then goes on to provide that "I Sahr Lebbie Mendekia aforesaid for myself, my heirs and successors and title do hereby contract and agree with my agent George Beresford-Cole, Real Estate Agent of 23, Liverpool Street, Freetown, Sierra Leone to pay to him the balance of Le.10,000 in full on or before but not later than 28th February, 1969 for the fulfillment of the purposes hereinbefore contained By this provision, the respondent solemnly bound not only himself but also his heirs and successors in title to pay the balance of the contract price for the fulfillment of the purposes of the contract i.e. the construction of the building. By this provision, the appellant also took steps to protect himself by ensuring that the respondent entered into the obligation not only on his own behalf but also on behalf of Ids heirs and successors in title.

Another significant aspect of the document is that it was signed by both the appellant and the respondent. If the document was a mere receipt, one would expect that only the appellant who received the money would have signed it. In my opinion the fact that it was signed by both parties is a clear indication that it was more than a receipt and that it contained obligations binding on both parties.

It is important to state that the document was prepared by the appellant, was type-written and was stamped with a fifteen cents stamp. What then was the nature and purpose of the document? In my opinion having regard to what I have sad above, it was a contract entered into between the appellant and the respondent for the appellant to construct a building etc. at Kissy Bye Pass Road, Kissy Village in accordance with the specifications stated in the document and to complete the same within 6 months in consideration of the respondent paying to the appellant the sum of Le.14,000 on the date of the execution of the document and the sum of Le.10,000 on or before 28th February, 1969. Quite clearly that was the meaning put upon the document by the responder as an ordinary reasonable and intelligent person in Sierra Leone, and not surprisingly he regarded it ma a solemn document, for apart from fulfilling his initial obligation by paying the sum of Le14,000 on the [p.190] date of the execution of the document, he fulfilled his other part of the bargain by paying the balance of le.10,000 well in advance of the date stipulated in the document.

In coming to this conclusion, I am guided by words of Lord Wright in SCAMMELL v. OUSTON (1941) 1 All E.R. 14, H.L. He said at pp. 25-26

"The object of the Court is to do justice between the parties, and the Court will do its best, if satisfied that there was an ascertainable and determinate intention to contract, to give effect to that intention, looking at substance, and not mere form. It will not be deferred by difficulties of interpretation. Difficulty is not synonymous with ambiguity, so long as any definite meaning can be extracted. The test of intention, however, is to be found in the words used. There are many cases in the books of what are called illusory contracts — that is, where the parties may have thought they were making a contract, but failed to arrive at a definite bargain. It is a necessary requirement that an agreement, in order to be binding, must be sufficiently definite to enable the Court to give it a practical meaning. Its terms must be so definite, or capable of being made definite without further agreement of the parties, that the promises and performances to be rendered by each party are reasonably certain."

In this case, the parties took the trouble to reduce their contract into writing. But it is necessary to emphasize, in view of certain arguments Advanced by learned Counsel for the appellant, that the contract need not have been in writing, the reason being that since it was a contract to be performed within a year, it is not required by Section 4 of the Statute of Frauds 1677 (which the relevant Statute applicable in Sierra Leone) to be in writing. And even assuming that it was a contract required by the Statute to be in writing, the document satisfied all the requirements of the Section. It contains the names of the parties i.e. George Beresford Cole and Sahr Lebbie Mendekia; it states the subject matter of the agreement i.e. the construction of a building etc, at Kissy Bye Pass Road; it states the consideration for the work i.e. le.24,000; and it was signed not only by the party to be charged i.e. George Beresford Cole, but also by the other party. With respect, it is therefore idle to argue that there was not a concluded or enforceable contract "between the appellant said the respondent.

Learned Counsel for the appellant laid much emphasis. On fact that a building plan had not been prepared when the document was signed. In fact the building plain dated 11th December 1968 — eight days after the signing of the document. Learned Counsel submitted that in view of this fact, there was not a concluded contract between the parties. But an examination of the facts would reveal that the submission is misconceived. It is important to emphasize that the building plan was prepared on the instructions of the appellant, with full knowledge of the terms of the document including the specification, the unit costs and the total cost of the building. So one would expect the appellant as a reasonable business man to prepare a plan that would comply with the specification and at the same time keep within the unit cost state and within the total cost of the building. If he chose to exceed the total figure agreed upon he has only himself to blame. Learned Counsel relied on PENN v. SIMMONDS (1971) 1 W.L.R. 1381 H.L. for his submission. In that case it was held inter alia that in construing a written agreement evidence of negotiations or of the parties intentions ought not to be received by the Court, and that evidence should be restricted to evidence of the factual background known to the parties at or before the date of the contract, including evidence of the 'general and objectively the "aim" of the transaction. In my opinion that decision does not support the case for the appellant. The evidence adduced before the Court in the instant case was the document signed by both parties and evidence of the "genesis" of the transaction. No evidence was adduced of any negotiations or of the intention of the parties. In fact no such evidence was necessary in the case, because the result of any negotiations and the intention of the parties were reduced into writing and clearly set out in the documents.

2. Consideration

Learned Counsel for the appellant also submitted that no consideration flowed from the respondent to the appellant. With the greatest respect, I do not think that this submission has any merit. One is bound to ask what did the appellant receive the sum of Le24,000 for? If it was not is consideration of constructing the buildings, what was it for? Quite [p.192] clearly, the Le.24,000 was the consideration flowing from the respondent to the appellant for the construction by the appellant of the building. I think that the position is so clear that any excursion into the law relating to consideration will be an unnecessary academic exercise.

3. Agency

It was also contended on behalf of the appellant that on a proper construction of the document the relationship between the respondent and the appellant was that of principal and agent, and not that of employer and contractor. Learned Counsel for the appellant submitted that the appellant was an agent of the respondent to secure the services of some third party independent contractor to execute the work provided for in the contract. A reference to the pleadings would show that this submission is the result of an afterthought. In the Defence and Counterclaim the appellant averred inter alia:—

"1. The Defendant denies the allegations contained in paragraph 1 of the Statement of Claim, but say that following verbal negotiations, he agreed with the plaintiff on a friendly basis to help him with the construction of the said building as described. The Defendant on the 3rd December, 1968, gave the plaintiff a receipt for the cum of Fourteen Thousand Leones (Le.14,000) and contracted and agreed to pay the balance on or before the 28th February, 1968.

6. The Defendant says that the plaintiff has failed to pay the necessary extra amount required to complete the building and has rendered it impossible for the defendant to do so."

In my opinion what the appellant was alleging in the two paragraphs quoted above was, first, that he agreed with the respondent to help with the construction of the building and secondly that the respondent had failed to pay the extra money required by him (the appellant) to complete the building and that the respondent had rendered it impossible for him (the appellant) to complete the building. There was no suggestion in those paragraphs, or indeed anywhere in the Defence and Counterclaim, of any agency, or that some third party, and not the appellant, was the contractor. The question of agency was raised for the first time in the final stages of the address of learned Counsel for the appellant before the learned trial judge. The learned trial Judge found that on a proper [p.193] interpretation of the document and on the evidence, the relationship between the respondent and the appellant was that of principal and agent. With, respect, the learned trial Judge went astray. Agency was not an issue before him. Besides, in paragraphs 1 & 6 of the Defence and Counterclaim, the appellant accepted that he, and not some third party, was to build the building for the respondent. But even assuming agency was an issue at the trial, the finding of the learned Judge was, in my opinion, erroneous, I have already stated what I consider to be the proper construction of the document. But in view of the finding of the learned Judge it is necessary to emphasize certain points Admittedly, the word 'agent' was used in the body of the document, but in my opinion that was a mere description of the occupation of the appellant and not a statement of the capacity in which the appellant was making the transaction. At the very beginning of the document it is stated that the appellant received the sum of Le14,000 as part payment for the construction of a two storey building to be built and constructed within a maximum period of six months, and no where in that part of the document, or indeed any other part, is it stated, or even suggested, that a third party was contemplated. And if a third party was not contemplated, the reasonable conclusion is that-the appellant was the person under an obligation to construct the building. With regard to the evidence, I think that even the evidence adduced on behalf of the appellant overwhelmingly disproves any case of agency. I need refer to only two pieces of evidence. First, in a letter dated 11th June, 1969 (Ex, E) written by the appellant to the respondent, the appellant demanded the payment of extra money to, in his own words, "enable me to complete construction as scheduled". (The emphasis is mine). Secondly, the appellant said in evidence that the independent third party engaged in the construction of the building was one Turner, The appellant tendered a file (Ex, P1-181) which he claimed contained records of his expenditure on the building. But when the file is examined it is discovered that all the invoices for materials supplied were issued in the name of the appellant and not in the name of Turner, Furthermore the monthly wages sheets of the appellant show quite clearly [p.184] that far from being an independent contractor, Turner was employed by the appellant as a daily waged artisan at Le.2.25c a day. It is also important to state that the records show that Turner was not employed throughout the period of construction. In my judgment therefore, both on the construction of the document and on the evidence, the appellant was not an agent but the contractor who contracted to construct the building for the respondent.

4. Damages

The appellant did not complete the building within the time stipulated in the contract (i.e. 2nd June, 1969). He applied for and was granted a month's extension of time within which to complete the building. But up to the date of the issue of the writ of summons (i.e. 1.3th October, 1970), and up to the time of the trial, the building had still not been completed. In my judgment the failure of the appellant to complete the building by 2nd July, 1969 (i.e. the extended period) constituted a breach of contract. The Court of Appeal awarded the respondent the sum of Le.14,085 as general damages and the sum of Le.500 as special damages for breach of contract. The Court of Appeal based their assessment of the general damages on a valuation of the coat of completion of the building made in January, 1971 by John David Thompson a Chartered Quantity Surveyor. Mr. Thompson gave evidence at the trial. Learned Counsel for the appellant attached the award of general damages on several grounds. He submitted that the Court of Appeal erred in failing to take into consideration the fact (as alleged by the appellant) that in addition to the sum of Le.24,000 paid to him by the respondent, he had expended some Le.6,000 of his own money on the building, what then is the proper measure of damages in such circumstances? In my opinion the proper measure is the cost of completing the building in accordance: with the contract in a reasonable manner, and at a reasonable time. What is important is not the value of the building in its present state or the amount of money actually expended on the building, but the cost of completing the building. So even if the claim of the appellant that he had expended some Le.30,000 on the construction of the building is true, he would still be liable in damages measured according to the cost of [p.195] completing the building. If the appellant had in fact expended Le.30,000, it was his misfortune for which the respondent should not be made to suffer. Ridley J. stated the law correctly in H. DAKIN & CO. LIMITED v. LEE (1916) 1 K.B. 566 when he said at p. 571:—

"..... that where there is a contract to do work for a fixed sum you are not simply to measure and value the work actually done; the proper course is to deduct from the contract price the cost of the work which has not been done."

Learned Counsel for the appellant also submitted that the Court of Appeal erred in basing their assessment on January 1971 costs. He said that the assessment should have been based on the costs in July, 1969 the time of the alleged broach. With respect, I do not agree with Counsel's submission. A similar argument was advanced to and accepted by the English Divisional Court in MERTENS v. HOME FREEHOLDS CO. The question in that case was whether the measure of damages for breach of a building contract should be fixed in the year 1916 when the breach took place, or in the year 1919 when the employer was allowed to complete the work and by which time the price of all building materials, work, wages and labour had increased enormously. The Court of Appeal reserved the decision of the Divisional Court: see (1921) 2 K.B. 526. Dealing with the question of the proper time for fixing the measure of damages, Lord Sterndale M.R. said at p. 534:

"The Official Referee has given to the plaintiff the amount that it cost him when he was allowed to do 'the " work in 1919. The defendants say that either he is entitled to nothing, or that if he is entitled to anything the measure of damages ought to be fixed in the year 1916. The Divisional Court have adopted the defendants' contention. I cannot agree with them. The first particular in which I differ from them is that I do not think they ever looked at the contract in the right way. They have considered the contract as if it were one to deliver goods in September, 1916 — a contract to deliver a roofed house on the ground In September, 1916 — and what they have said is, that all that the plaintiff is entitled, to is the difference between the price of the work, in fact, done by the defendants through Lawrence and .the price of a roofed house in September, 1916. That is to say, they have treated the contract as if it were one for the sale of goods and have held that the measure of damages is the difference between the market price of the day of what the plaintiff ought to have had and what he got. In [p.196] my humble opinion that in on entirely wrong way of looking at the contract. There is no contract to deliver goods, and there is no market price for a roofed house.

"But the building owner must set to work to build his house at a reasonable time and in a reasonable manner, and is not entitled to delay for several years and then, if prices have gone up charge the defaulting builder with the increased price."

And Warrington, B. H said at pp. 58-539

"The Divisional Court has substituted for the measure of damages adopted by the Referee what, with all respect, appears to me to be an incorrect measure of damages — namely, they have treated the contract as if it were one for the sale of goods and have held that the plaintiff is entitled to the difference between the value of the thing he got ft the material time — that is so say, when the breach was committed — and the value of the thing which he would have got if the defendant; had done his duty. In my opinion that is not the true measure of damages in a contract of this kind."

I think that these dicta state the right measure of damages the proper time at, which the damages should be measured in contracts such the one in the instant case. Of course, what is reasonable time in which the employer should complete the work would depend on the circumstances of each case. What then were the circumstances in the Instant case? The breach occurred in July, 1969 but the appellant refused to hand over the keys of the building, and consequently the respondent could he gain access to the building. According to the evidence, up to October, 1970 the keys were still in the possession of the appellant (See Ex. N) and up to 8th February, 1972 when the appellant was being re-examined h admitted that some of the keys were still with him. It is not revealed it by the evidence when some of the keys were handed to the respondent.

But even assuming all the keys had been handed over in October, 1970, three months (i.e. up to January, 1971) would in the circumstances be a reasonable time within which to complete the building. In my judgment the Court of Appeal applied the right measure of damages, and therefore this Court should not interfere with the award.

JUDGEMENT ON THE 17TH DAY OF OCTOBER 1973

BETTS, J.S.C.:

This is an appeal from the Court of Appeal against the judgment of that court (Cole, C.J., Harding and Davies — J.J.A) confirming a grant of an award of Le9,490.41 cents (damages and costs) together with interest of 6% per annum form the date of the accident, 14th July, 1966 to 21st August, 1970 the date of judgment. This action arose from a motor traffic case which started in the Magistrate's Court, Kono, in which Sahr Kissi Kondewa was charged with several offences including driving a vehicle "without first obtaining a licence to do so". He pleaded guilty to that charge and was fined Le100 or three months imprisonment in default. After Kondewa's conviction Toufic Bazzy who was injured as a result of the accident brought an action for damages against one Sorie Mansaray, the insured, and the driver Kondewa in the High Court then Supreme Court. On the date of the accident 14th July1966, the vehicle WU 809 was insured with the Royal Exchange Assurance Company Limited. Judgment was given for the Plaintiff in the sum of Le6,500 (Six Thousand Five Hundred Leones) with costs which were taxed at Le2,990.41 (Two Thousand Nine Hundred and Ninety Leones and Forty-one cents) and interest. The Plaintiff notified the defendants about the judgment against the insured and the driver. The judgment remaining unsatisfied, the Plaintiff thereupon successfully sued the Royal Exchange Assurance Company [p.82] Limited for the recovery of the judgment debt. The Royal Exchange Assurance Company Limited appealed to the Court of Appeal which dismissed the appeal. It is this decision that the Royal Exchange Assurance Company Limited appealed against to this Court. The Appellants/Defendants argued that the Court of Appeal was wrong in law in their construction of Sections 9 and 11 of the Motor Vehicle (Third Party Insurance) Act, Chapter 133 of the Laws of Sierra Leone. They argued in effect that in the particular circumstances of the accident, they are not obliged in law to satisfy the judgment in favour of the Respondent. Chapter 133 of the Laws of Sierra Leone (hereinafter referred to as the Act) makes provision for a Third Part who suffers death or injury as a result of a motor vehicle accident, or the dependants in the former case, to seek redress, if necessary in the Courts of the land against the owner of the vehicle and/or an insurance company. The provision is entitled "An Act to make provision against third part risks arising out of the use of motor vehicles."

The effect of the argument on behalf of the Appellants/Defendants is that on a proper interpretation of Section 9 of the Act, the Respondent/Plaintiff should not have been causgt5 by the condition contemplated by Section 9 and therefore ought to be outside the scope of the policy under this Act and no entitled to the benefits arising out of an independent right of action against the Appellants/Defendants' Company, contained in Section 11(1), [p.84] covering its was the policy should be issued by a recognised insurer, and a cognisable person or classes of person to be covered by the policy. The policy required under the Act is not, quite prudently, left exclusively with the insured and the insurers, some restraints being statutorily brought to bear on their normal capacity to contract. One of the conditions is set out in Section 9 of the Act. It is of great moment in this case and I think it is necessary to set it out in extensor. It states that "Any condition in a policy or security issued or given for purposes of this Act, providing that no liability shall arise under the policy or security or that any liability shall so arising shall cease in the event of some specified thing being done or omitted to be done after the happening of the event giving rise to a claim under the policy or security shall, in respect f such liabilities as are required to be covered by a policy or security issued for the purposes of this Act, be of no effect."

Counsel for the Appellants/Defendants strenuously argued against the interpretation given to this section y the Court of Appeal which help that "Any condition in a policy or security whether considered as precedent or subsequent if caught within the ambit of that section, Section 9, shall be of no effect." The judgment of the Court of Appeal went on to spell out the material portions of the section and ended with the words "In other words."

The Act provides is Section 3 (1) "that no person shall use, or cause of permit any other person to use a motor vehicle unless there is in force in relation of the user of that motor vehicle by such person or such other person, as the case may be, such a policy of insurance or such a security in respect of third party risks as complies with the provisions of this Act." The Act imposes a criminal section for a contravention of this provision in order to impress the imperative and comprehensive character of its specific requirement. Imperative conditions are also set out in Section 7(1)(a) and (b) of the Act. (a) Provides that the Insurer must be approved by the President and (b),which is more immediately relevant to the issue states that, for the purpose of this act, the insurance policy must "insure such person or classes of person as may be specified in the policy in respect of any liability which may be incurred by him or them in respect of the death of or bodily injury to any person caused by or arising out of the use of a motor vehicle covered by the policy",. This is a statutory mandatory condition and I think it is relevant to point out here that impliedly the law empowers the insurers to exercise a right of restricting the persons or classes of person they would cover. To achieve the purpose of the Act there are certain fundamentals necessary. These outlined are:— No motor vehicle is to be used on the highway without an insurance policy [p.86] the section in my view embraces two separate and distinct types of conditions, namely, those which have the effect of negativing liability ab initio upon the breach of a condition and those which made the negativing of the condition conditional upon the doing or omitting to do some specified thing after the happening of the event giving rise to a claim under the policy or security". Obviously the construction applied is disjunctive with each type of condition being independently "of no effect" and completely ignoring the appropriate time when that provision should take effect.

It is important at this stage to enquire what effect such a construction will have on Sections 10 and 11(1) of the Act. Section 10 lists certain events which is included in a policy purporting to restrict the insurance of a person insured should be considered of no effect were a certificate of insurance has been issued. Section 11(1) while conferring a right on third parties to institute independent action against insurers that right can only be exercised after judgment is obtained against the insured. According to the construction referred to before, any condition in a policy of insurance will be absolutely void (and Section 10 giving specified exceptions would be necessary.) if this construction was correct Section 11(1) would not have made it obligatory on insurers to satisfy a judgment only after a successful action against the insured.

Counsel for the Appellants/Defendants argued that the construction which ought to be given to Section (should be conjunctive. The words "Any condition in a policy or security issued or given for the purpose of this Act providing that no liability shall arise under the policy or security" and "that any liability so arising shall cease in the event of some specified thing being done or omitted to be done," should be controlled by the words "after the happening of the event giving rise to a claim under the policy or security". Construed in this way one particular class of events, if included in the policy will be avoided statutorily. That class of events, is all conditions arising "after the event giving rise to a claim". In point of time those conditions become operative only after the accident and have no reference to events occurring either before or contemporaneously with the event giving rise to the claim. There also appears grammatical support. Black's Law Dictionary, 4th Edition at p.334 defines a comma as "A point used to mark the smallest structural division of a sentence, or a rhetorical punctuation mark indicating the slightest possible separation in ideas of construction." As against similar legislation in Kenya and the United Kingdom the use of the comma in Section 9 is most restrictive coming for the first time after the words "or security shall" suggesting not even the slightest separation in ideas or construction as conceivable in [p.87] the Kenya and United Kingdom Legislations. This view is supported by McGillivray on insurance Law, Vol. 2 5th Edition p.1010 paragraph 2080. It is stated at p.1011 "in the event of some specified thing being done or omitted" apply to "no liability shall arise" as well as to "any liability to arising shall cease." See Gray v. Blackmore (1934) 1 K.B. 95.

In the United Kingdom legislation there are three commans whilst there are four in the Kenya. For further support I make reference to the case of Appeal, Ghana — Civ. Appeal No. 165/71. Adjoa Pokuia — Plaintiff/Appellant v. State Insurance Corporation, Kumasi, Defendants/Respondents. I borrow the words of A.N.E. Amissah J. A. used in the course of his judgment, on the construction of Section 8 of their Act which is similar to our Section 9 of the Act. He stated "HARDY V. MOTOR INSURERS' BUREAU (1964) 2Q. B. 745 teaches us no more that this that where the user of the vehicle is covered by compulsory insurance a victim of an intentional criminal act any recover under the policy even though the perpetrator of the act himself cannot as a matter of public policy take advantage of his act. "He goes on to say that "Hardy's case does not, and cannot be taken to say that where the user is not covered, as it was not in the instant case, the third party can get on to the Insurance Company. Our duty in this case calls for the construction of an act, not a non-existent agreement (Motor Insurance Bureau [p.88] in England)". Further along he said "There is, no reason why the legislature should not choose to distinguish between conditions excluding liability dependent on occurrences after an accident on the one hand and those where the occurrences are before the event, takes place." Later he said" I am convinced that this simple distinction determines the approach of Section 8 of the Act — (our Section 9 of Chapter 133) to the issue. It must be remembered that though the objects of the Act as set out is to make provision for the protection of third parties against risks arising out of the use of motor vehicles and for purposes incidental thereto" it did not in fact provide a comprehensive cover for third parties in all cases.". In addition Halsbury's Laws of England 3rd Edition Vol. 22 at P. 372 paragrpah 763 states that “Accordingly it was provided that certain conditions in the assured’s policy were to be of no effect in relation to claim by a person to whom an assured was under a compulsorily insurable liability. The conditions to that extent avoided are any condition providing that no liability shall arise, or that any liability which has arisen shall cease, in the even of some specified this being done or omitted to be lone, after the occurrence of the event giving rise to the claim.” Halsbury goes on to say that “If, therefore my admission of liability is made after an accident contrary to a condition in the policy or if contrary to any coalition in the policy, [p.89] proper notice of the accident is not given to the insurers, the injured party is not affected so far as his claim is concerned. REVEL V. LONDON GENERAL INSURANCE COMPANY (1934) All E, R p.744.” these references indicate that the construction given to Section 38 of the R.T.A. (1930) of the United kingdom which is similar to Section 9 of the Act tends to stress a continuity instead of a separation of ideas. In the circumstances it would seem to me more appropriate in view of the logical — in terms of the relationship and sequence of the provisions- grammatical and textual support that such a construction should be the one applicable to all and any conditions which do not occur after the happening of the event giving rise to a claim. I am inclined to accept the reasoning and construction founded upon it.

Counsel for the Respondent/plaintiff contended that with regard to section 9, the argument advanced by the Appellants/Defendants was that “Any condition in a policy issued etc. “was not a definition but what it says a condition — and in that case would be caught by Section 9. He relied on the dictum of the learned Chief Justice in the instant case and the case of NEW INDIA INSURANCE COMPANY v. CROSS (1966) E.A.L. Report page 90, and particularly on the judgments of Newbold V.P. and Crabbe J.A. He further argued that this section should not be given a narrow construction but one which will accord with the intention of the legislature.

With respect I have already stated that I accept and adopt the reasoning advocated on behalf of the Appellants/Defendants and therefore I do not support the constructions put on the section by the learned Chief Justice. It is my opinion that the construction advanced by both Newbold V. P. and Crabbe J. A. are substantially based on a complete disregard of the history of the development of the Insurance (motor vehicle Third Party Risks) provisions. It appears to me that the several United Kingdom acts dealing with the problem — 1930, 1934, 1946 and 1960 constitute a gradual progressive improvement of the rights of third part and corresponding incursions into the preserves of a sector of the commercial world. The several acts are in fact an admission of the inadequacy in providing an omnibus set of legislation for the protection of third parties which will at one and the same time afford a reasonable measure of contractual freedom for investors and those engaged in the business of insurance. It is obvious that hose acts are not absolute and in the nature of the circumscribing circumstances they cannot be disinclination to grapple with the fundamental questions which arise. These are, if the provision of the third party risks are not absolute in the sense that they cover every and any liability incurred by the use f mother vehicles on the highway, how for a short are they from affording complete protection for third parties? What compulsory rights will be awarded insurance companied [p.91] for their total surrender?’ The Answered, in my opinion, are matters for the legislature. The duty of the Courts is to construe? Acts as they find them and not to substitute their considered opinion for the intention of the legislature however deserving and humanitarian the cause may be.

Having determined the construction of Section 9 in this way I should now proceed to examine Section 11(1) in order to discover to what extent, if at all, that section ensures to the benefit of third parties. Counsel for the Respondent/Plaintiff in the course of his address in reply to Counsel for the Appellants/Defendants observed that his learned friend did not attempt to construe Section 11(1) of the Act. In spite of the observation he himself did not attempt to construe Section 11(1) of the act. In spite of the observation he himself did not over-reach his attempt to do so. He however said that to get at the real meaning of Section 11(1) it should read together with subsections 5 of the same section. Reproduced 11(1) says "if after a certificate of insurance has been issued favour of a person by whom a policy has been effected or a certificate of security has been issued in favour the person whose liability is covered by such security judgment in respect of any such liability as is required to be covered by a policy or security issued for the purposes of the Act, being a liability covered by the terms of the policy or security, is obtained against any [p.92] person insured by the policy or whose liability is covered by the security, as the case may be, then notwithstanding that the insurer or giver of the security, as the case may be, the insurer of giver of the security shall, subject to the provisions of this section, pay to the persons entitled to benefit of such judgment any sum payable there under in respect f costs and any sum payable by virtue of any law in respect of costs and any sum payable by virtue of any law in respect of interest on that sum or judgment." Sub-section 5 says: "In this section liability covered by the terms of the policy or security' means a liability which is covered by the terms of the policy or security' means a liability which is covered by the policy or security" means a liability which is covered by the policy or the security; as the case may be, or which would be so covered were it not that the insurer or the giver of the security' means a liability which is covered by the policy or the security as the case may be, or which would be so covered were it not that the insurer or the giver of the security is entitled to avoid or cancel or has avoided or cancelled the policy or the security, as the case may be."

To my mind Section 11(1) is extremely important; so important that it can be maintained to be the focal point of the Act. It turns on practically every functional aspect connected with the act. For example 7(b) ensures that "such person or classes of person as may be specified in the policy must be insured against any liability which may be incurred by his or them. The liabilities of course arise from the terms and conditions which may be incurred by him or them. The liabilities of course arise from the terms and conditions which together with other requirements constitute the aggregate of the policy.

7(b) would therefore cover those liabilities in respect of the death or bodily injury caused by a designated person or designated class of persons specified in the policy and whose vehicle is covered by the policy as well. It is however not usual that despite this mandatory demand of the sub-section some policies issued contained provisions limiting these to whom the privilege of the designation or class extend and thus attempting to frustrate the intention of the Act. As a result, the courts have had to be resorted to determine whether these exclusion clauses should be construed subject only to the intention of the Act or, when the occasion arises, independently of it. Some Courts have favoured deciding that such exclusion clauses should not frustrate the intention of the legislature in the case of NEW GREAT INDIA ASSURANCE v. CROSS while others have approached it as a simple contractual arrangement between the parties. There are two cases from Ghana holding the latter view. This state of uncertainty is very disturbing especially as it vitally effects the rights of the innocent third party. There is no doubt that the legislature has done practically every thing to protect him from the wiles of the insurers but the calamity which could befall him could as in this case come from the other end of the spectrum — the insured, and generated by, one could say, a not un-natural human factor.

Section 11(1) contemplates also other provisions contained in the act and fuses all the various elements making them functional. The section makes and as reference to the [p.94] Act in relation to the satisfaction of a judgment. It says — "the person whose liability is covered by such security, judgment in respect of any such liability as is required to be covered by a policy or security issued for the purposes of the Act." The Section then goes onto the liability covered by the terms of the policy and also refers to those matters which are "subjects to the provisions of this Section." The liability as is required to be covered by a policy or of security issued for the purposes of the Act and that covered by the terms of the policy are both subject to provisions of avoidance and cancellation. The similarity however ends there. Liability arising under the provisions of the Act are fixed and unreliable, concept of course by legislation and avoidance or cancellation is generally applicable. A liability which arises under the terms of the policy on the other hand would necessitate a distinction between a liability to which the words "subject to the provisions of this section", does apply. We find that whenever a liability arising under the policy to which the words "subject to the provisions of the section" apply such a liability could be avoided or cancelled. Where for instance, some arrangement is made between the insured and the insurer by which the jurisdiction of the Court to enforce the rights conferred on Third parties by this section is ousted, such agreement, being [p.95] in violation on the provisions of the section, could be declared void. The court has a duty to satisfy judgment obtained by persons duly insured against third party risks. Any condition therefore contained in a policy, to deprive a third party from obtaining a judgment by the court of injury or death suffered would be liable to be avoided or cancelled and could even be avoided or cancelled if the agreement had taken effect. On the other hand we find some claims giving rise to liabilities not caught within the scope of this section which though they are made on a party and party basis are not restricted by the section but are allowed to be construed in the same way as any ordinary contract. I am of opinion that though Section 11(1) empowers the third party as distinct from the insured, to institute an independent action, this right is subject to conditions already stated which impose a reasonable amount of restriction on the exercise of the right. If there is no limit in any manner as to how the vehicle is used, or in other words if there is no condition governing the kind of liability which might arise out of the use of the vehicle as there was in the case of IN RE Williams (Deceased, Konneh (Deceased) v. Official Administrator, Williams, Kargbo and Caledonian Insurance Company, reported in 1964-1966 A.L.R. S.L. 511 at p.516, in which Sir Samuel Bankole-Jones, President Court of Appeal, held that the Caledonian Insurance Company was not liable where the driver was driving outside of the scope of his employment [p.96] as continued in the policy. If this were not so the liability of the insurer will be inescapable. This to my mind is obviously not the intention for the section which seeks to provide order and not chose in the community.

It was conceded by both sides that a certificate of insurance was in fact issued to the insured although it was not produced at the trial. There is no contention on that point. A judgment has also been obtained against the insured and the usual notification to the insurers. Those conditions having been satisfied the Third Party under the Act has acquired an independent right of action against the insurers. The Appellants/defendants have argued, quite rightly in my opinion, that before a liability for which a judgment has been obtained arising sunder this section can be sustained, two conditions he nature of conditions precedent must be fulfilled (a) satisfaction of the conditions as required by the Act (b) satisfaction of the conditions of terms of the policy. While Section 11(1) highlights the conditions under the Statute, Sub-section 11(5) stresses those under the policy by defining them. It appears to me that this distinction advocated above by the Appellants/Defendants is inherent in the Act and much difficulty might have been avoided by looking at the Act itself. The case of SULAIMAN SEISAY v. WHITE CROSS INSURANCE (1961) S.L.L.R. p. 162 at p. 164 was citied in support of this proposition. It was further urged [p.97] that this section should be read together with Section 7(1) (b) to ascertain those who are covered by the policy. The case for JUBILIEE ASSUANCE CO.LTD. v. OHBAKE Civil Case 548 of the Kenya High Court based on Sections 8 and 10 of their insurance (Motor Vehicle Third Party Risks) Act, reveals that the provisions of these sections are similar to our Sections 9 and 11 respectively. In the course of his judgment Farrell J. supported the proposition advocated by the Appellants/Defendants. He said "such being the facts, the issued which arise fall to be decided in the light of the construction to be given to the terms of the policy and to the provisions of the Act." In that case obtaining a judgment, as under Section 11(1) of our Act is a pre-condition to the settlement of by liability which might arise under the Act. The Plaintiffs settled the claim without a judgment having been obtained when there was no compulsion on them to pay the third party and the Plaintiffs had no right under the policy to settle the third party's claim after repudiating liability to the Defendant. I would draw particular attention to the ultimate portion of Ferrell J.'s judgment that "the plaintiffs had no right under the policy to settle after repudiating liability to the defendant." The Appellants, in this case, have consistently denied liability on the ground that the insured was in breach of a term of the policy. According to the construction which I have placed on Section 11(1) and Subsection 11(5) the conditions in the policy visa-a-vis the parties must be [p.99] that could be the result of strict interpretation of Section 207(1) of the United Kingdom Road Traffic Act (1960). As we have no provision whatsoever acting as a palliative in this respect the insured may sometimes be exposed to the inflexibility of the construction which could be put on our 11(1) of the Act. Kenya and Ghana suffer the same disability as Sierra Leone because none of us enjoy the coverage offered by the Motor Insurance Bureau of the United Kingdom. Our Legislations (the three mentioned states), dealing with third party risks, emanate from the same source and are similar among themselves and with the original. Sections 8 and 10 of the Insurance (Motor Vehicle Third Party Risks) Act of Kenya and Sections 8 and 10(1) of the Motor Vehicle (Third Party Insurance) Act of Ghana are similar to our Sections 9 and 11(1). I have already referred to the case Jubilee assurance Co. Ltd. v. Ombake in which it was held that the "plaintiffs had no right under the policy to settle after repudiating liability to the defendants'. In Ghana, quoting a reference made by Amissah, J.A in his judgment in the case of Adjoa Pokua v. state Insurance Corporation 165/71, he cited the State insurance Corporation v. Afua Mensah, (civil appeal No. 76/67). He said in the course of his judgment, "the liability must in fact be covered by the terms of the insurance policy but for the fact that the insurers are entitled to avoid or cancel or have avoided or cancelled the policy. If [p.100] though the liability is one which should be covered by insurance it is not in fact so covered no insurance company is liable." The passages of the decisions referred to, do support the submission advocated by Counsel for the Respondent/Plaintiff.

In further support of his argument he again referred to the case of New Great India Assurance Co. and cited the case of John T. Ellis v. Hinds (947) 1 A.E.L.R.. pp. 337 and 338 to establish that his submission is and had been for some time in the past viewed with approval by the Court. In my view that case has not a complete applicability to the instant case. The dominant considerations in that case were the criminal aspect and the application f constructive knowledge. In the instant case the question is whether or not the policy covered a driver not holding a current driving license. The user of the vehicle was never a point of contention as was in the case cited. I am of opinion that where a policy has been obtained covering the use of a vehicle on the highway, prudence would dictate that the insured having determined the manner in which he intends to use his vehicle should take out a policy to cover that particular use. Branson J. observed in GRAY v. BLACKMORE "I see nothing in the statute which prevents an under-writer and an assured from agreeing to a policy with any conditions they choose; but if the assured takes the car upon the road in breach of these conditions it cannot throw a greater obligation upon the under-writer.

[p.101]

To my mind the construction which the respondent/Plaintiff seeks to put on Section 11, that if the statutory provisions in favour of a person whose liability as covered by a policy or security for the purposes of the Act, already referred to, are satisfied, then the insurers are obliged to make payment for that judgment together with costs and incidentals, cannot be maintained. McGillvray on Insurance Law 5th Edition Vol. 1 at page 340 states "Policies of Insurance are to be construed like other written instruments. There are not peculiar rules of construction applicable to the conditions and clauses in a policy which are not equally applicable to the terms of other contracts. The conditions are to be construed fairly between the parties, and the Court will endeavour to ascertain their meaning by adopting the ordinary rules of construction. HART v. STANDARD MARINE (1889) 22.Q.B.D. 499, 501."

Halsbury's laws of England, 3rd Edition Vol. 22 at page 212 reads, para. 401.

"It is not the function of the Court to make for the parties, by a process of construction, a reasonable contract which they have not made for themselves. If the words are clear, precise, and unambiguous, effect must be given to them, however unreasonable the result may be."

It cities the case of Joel v. Law Union and Crown Insurance Company (1908) 2.K.B. 863 in support. Bearing these basic requirements in mid I am to observe that four conditions emerge as a result of the construction of the Act. By condition I mean whatever the Act requires and whatever is agreed between the parties to be [p.102] incorporated in the policy. They are:—

(1) The conditions contemplated by Section 9 of the Act, that is liability arising after a event giving rise to claim, excluding conditions precedent or contemporaneous.

(2) Conditions void ab anitio arising under Section 10 of the Act, which restrict but do not avoid the policy.

(3) Conditions in the policy which are not caught by (1) and (2). These are those conditions which the law does not preclude from being made on a party and party basis and not subject to the provisions of Section 11(1), including conditions precedent or contemporaneous.

(4) A policy which is inter-party and subject to the provisions of Section 11(1) and may be conditions precedent or contemporaneous."

The provisions contained in Conditions (1), (2) and (4) above have been examined. These coming under condition (3) will now be considered.

The policy produced at the trial, Exhibit "B', prepared in the usual form, contains, as part of the policy and which comes under (3) above, a schedule with a proviso stating who a driver is. Driver therein is (a) "The insured; the insured may also drive a motor car not belonging to him and not hired to him under a hire purchase agreement. (b) any other person who is driving on the policy-holder's order or permission — provided that the person driving is permitted in accordance with the licensing or other laws or regulations to drive the motor car or has been so permitted in accordance with the licensing or other laws or regulations to drive the motor car or has been so permitted and is no disqualified in that behalf from driving such motor car." Counsel for the Respondent/Plaintiff argued that the provision of a disqualification having been included in the exclusion clause in the policy all the various alternatives must [p.103] be proved before the avoidance could come into operation. This is a point which has arisen ex improvise and was taken at the latest possible stage of the proceedings. It could have been canvassed at an earlier stage of the proceedings but even then I am inclined to doubt its efficacy in the civil sector. What to my mind is important is that up to the Supreme Court Stage the case had been fought on the basis that the driver was unlicensed; a fact which had been conceded by the Counsel for the Respondent/Plaintiff himself. It is significant that the attitude adopted by Counsel for the Plaintiff both at the High Court and Court of Appeal was that there was no contention that the driver was unlicensed and I would think that it is not only too late to change stances before the Supreme Court but rather unfair to all concerned.

What is commonly referred to in policies as avoidance clause in unusually found in that portion where the law does not forbid an exercise of contractual freedom between the parties, that is under condition (3) referred to above. As a result of the interpretation given by me to Section 9 of the Act, I have excluded as applicable any condition which gives right to a liability either precedent to or contemporaneous with an event not happening after the occurrence which gives right to a claim. It is however necessary again, in relation to this construction, to refer to the case of NEW GREAT INDIA [p.103 INSURANCE CO. v. CROSS in which both Newbold V.P. and Crabbe J.A. gave a wide interpretation to, "Any condition in a policy or security etc. as being independent of the qualifying phrase "after the happening of the event giving rise to a claim etc." The effect of such a construction was to give efficacy to "Any condition" which would in fact included the avoidance clause and render the insurance company liable even though the driver was unlicenced. That case originally came up for hearing in Nairobi on the 17th and 18th June and the 30th July, 1965. Crabbe F.A. was then uncompromising in his attitude. He said "I agree with the conclusion of the learned Vice President but as there is a difference of opinion among us on a matte of such public importance, I feel I ought to state my reasons in my own words." What he says next is very important. "The sole point turns entirely on the exception clause in the policy." He concluded by saying, "Therefore since the use of the car on the road in the particular circumstances of the case was a user covered by a policy of insurance in respect of third party risks which complied with the requirements of the Insurance (Motor Vehicle Third Party Risks) Act, I think that the relevant exception clause does not relieve the defendant company from the liability of satisfying a claim brought under Section 10(1). There is no doubt that the use of a [p.105] vehicle uninsured under the Act is almost sacrosanct but it is, in my view, amazing that conditions governing that use can be so constantly overlooked as a result of our Section 11(1). What is most significant is the complete change of attitude of Crabbe J.A., who in 1971 was Acting Chief Justice, Ghana. This change of attitude is manifested in the decision of the Court of Appeal, Ghana in the case of Thomas Sosu (2) Madam Yaa Akyaa, Plaintiffs/Respondents and Another. The Plaintiffs were passengers on a bus traveling from Manpong to Kumasi. The vehicle ran off the road, landed in a ditch and the two plaintiffs were injured. The trial judge found the 2nd defendant who was the driver of the said vehicle negligent — that he drove to fast into the middle of the road. On seeing a vehicle, the driver, one Kwame Ampofo, coming from the opposite direction, he served suddenly and applied his brakes. The vehicle as a result ran off the road and landed in a ditch. The two plaintiffs were injured. The first defendant in the suit was the owner of the vehicle. Judgment was given against the 1st and 2nd Defendants jointly and severally. The 1st Plaintiff was awarded damages in the sum of ¢1200 and the 2nd Plaintiff ¢2400. By an originating summons brought under Section 10(1) of the vehicles (Third Party Insurance) Act, 1958, the Plaintiffs/Respondents sough to recover the damages awarded by the Court from the Defendants/Appellants as insurers [p.105] of the bus in question. There was an agreement for the hire-purchase of this vehicle between one Kwasi Addae who was insured with the Defendants/Appellants and one Kwame Ampofo. The purchase price had been paid less ¢10. The Defendants/Appellants did not know of this agreement neither did they know or had any contractual relationship with Ampofo. Under the policy the only person entitled to drive was Kwasi Addae. The Insurers repudiated liability and said that they were responsible only when Kwasi Addae was driving. The Court held that the Plaintiffs/Respondents could recover under the policy only when Kwasi Addae was driving and referred to HERBERT v. RAILWAY PASSENGERS ASSURANCE COMPANY (1938) All E.R. p.650. the Court went on to point out that the learned trial judge failed to consider that the owner's right under the policy ceased once the vehicle, which was the subject matter of the policy, was sold. See also ROGERSON v. SCOTISH AUTOMOBILE AND GENERAL INSURANCE CO. LTD. L.T.R. Vol. 146, p. 25 and p.27. The judges who sat over that case were Crabbe Ag. C.J., Lassey J.A. and Juagge J. A. The decision was unanimous and as far as Crabbe Ag. C.J. was concerned his outlook had completely reversed. McGillvray on Insurance Law 5th Edition Vol. 2p. 1001 put the position very clearly at paragraph 2065 as follows: "Motor Vehicle policies frequently contain clauses restricting the liability of insurers in various ways; e.g. the indemnity afforded may be limited by reference to the driver of the vehicle or [p.106] the purposed----[sic] for which it is used. After some conflict of opinion it has now become clear that such a policy complies with the Act pro tanto; that is to say, that provided that the liability provided against is that specified by the Act, the vehicle my lawfully be used within the limits laid down by the policy, although an offence will be committed by any one who uses it, or causes it to be used outside those limits." The portion I would like to stress is "provided that the liability provided against is that specified by the Act, the vehicle may lawfully be used within the limits laid down by the policy." In the course of his judgment A.N.E. Amissah, J.A. cited the recent cases of OWUSU v. ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE AND STATE INSURANCE CORPORATION v. AFUA MENSAH, both of which I have not had the privilege of reading, and THOMAS SOSU & ANOTHER v. ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE of 4th May 1970. The case in which these citations were made was ADJOA POKUA v. STATE INSURANCE CORPORATION of 20th December, 1972. The appellant in an action for damages against one Bandoh had obtained judgment for ¢2600. At the time he had an insurance policy issued by the respondents, the state Insurance Corporation, covering the use of the vehicle. The appellant, as in this case, sued the respondents for the payment of the ¢2600 awarded against Bandoh. The Respondents disclaimed liability on the ground that the vehicle was being driven at the time of the accident by some person other than Bandoh's driver, Kwame Amoah [p.108] who was the named driver in the policy. Judgment was given by the Circuit Court of the respondents. The point at issue was that the policy was inoperative if the term a driver was not observed. In the Court of Appeal, Ghana, as against the judgment of Bentsi-Enchill J.S.C. both Ammissah J.A. and Sowah J.A. confirmed the decision of the Circuit Court. In the instant case there has been a breach of a term included in the schedule to the policy by permitting an unlicenced driver to be the driver of the Vehicle WU 809 at the time when the accident occurred; and which gave rise to the liability the subject matte of this claim. In the case ADJOA POKUA v STATE INSURANCE COMPANY referred to before, the Court held that the policy involved was rendered inoperative as the vehicle was being driven at the time of the accident by some person other than Bandoh's driver Kwame Amoah who was the named driver in the policy. In the Pokua case and also in the instant case the underlying principle is that a broach of an exclusion or exception clause had occurred resulting eventually in an action in each case. As a result of the breach in the Pokua case the policy was declared inoperative. I am of opinion that decision should be followed in this case and my opinion is further strengthened by the decisions in the cases of REVELL v. GENERAL COMPANY LTD. (1954) 1 A.E.R. p. 573 Jones v. Kenyon (1952) 2 All E.R. p. 726 and Passmore v. Vulcan 1956) L.T.R. The Appellants/Defendants were urging this appeal [p.109] on the ground that the award to the Respondent/Plaintiff of damages, cost and interest amounting to Le9,490.41 cents was wrong because the insured was in breach of a term of the policy by allowing an unlicenced driver to drive the vehicle WU 809 which was involved in an accident as a result of which Toufic Bazzy was injured. I agree and for reasons already stated would allow the appeal, and reverse the judgment of the Court below with costs in this Court below with cost in this Court and the Courts below to be taxed against the Respondent/Plaintiff.

I would wish to observe that this is no indication of lack of sympathy or even or harshness towards the Respondent/Plaintiff. It is in my opinion that no legislation, however generously devised, can provide total and absolute protection for third parties. The insurance business is one which in characterized considerably by the element of chance. When once that clement is removed by the introduction of an Act which is absolute then the whole exercise becomes nugatory and the humanitarian service which the legislature intends to provide will be completely destroyed. This, I think, is the conclusion arrived at in the United Kingdom where the Motor Insurance Bureau has been created to relieve hardship in the nature of that which has currently engaged the attention of our Supreme Court. I do not think it could be over emphasized that if the present position requires improvement the remedy lies with the Legislature and not with the Judiciary.

The issues raised in this appeal are of considerable importance to Insurers, Insured and the general public.

The Appellant Company are approved Insurers for the purposes of the Motor Vehicles (Third Party Insurance) Act, Cap. 133 (hereafter referred to as "the Act"). One Sorie Mansaray insured his Motor Car WU 805 (hereafter referred to as "the car") with the appellants for the period 6th December 1965 to 5th December, 1966 against inter alia "accident cause by or arising out of the use of the Motor Car against all sums including claimants costs and expenses which the Insured shall become legally liable to pay in respect of death of or bodily injury to any person." The terms and conditions of the insurance were act out in a Policy of Insurance dated 4th January, 1966. The car was involved in an accident in Koidu Town, Kono on 14th July, 1966 as a result of which Toufic Bazzy the respondent sustained bodily injuries. At the time of the accident the car was being driven by one Sahr Kissi Kondowa. It is agreed by both parties that at the time of the accident Sahr Kissi Kondowa was an "unlicensed driver". On 30th April, 1968, the respondent instituted proceedings against Sorie Manasarya and Sahr Kissi Kono was claiming damages for the injures sustained in the accident and on 21st August, 1970 the High Court gave judgment in favour of respondent for Le6,500 damages and cost which word later taxed at Le2,990.410. Having failed to recover the judgment debt from Sorie Mansaray and Sahr Kissi Kondewa, the respondent issued a write of summon against the appellants on 22nd June, 1971 claiming the judgment debt plus interest. In [p.112] their Defense, the appellants disputed liability on the ground that Sahr Kissi Kondewa was a liability on the ground that Sahr Kissi Konowa was an "unlicensed driver" and therefore the liability was not covered by the terms of the policy. The action was trial by Tejan J. (as he then was). The learned Judge gave judgment for the respondent and he gave what appears to be a summary of his reasons at the end his lengthy judgment. He said

"In the present case, the driver had no driving licence but at the time he drove the vehicle which injured the plaintiff, there was a policy of insurance which covered the use of the vehicle. Since the use of the vehicle in the particular circumstances of this case was a user covered by a policy of insurance in respect of third party risks which complied with the requirements of the Motor Vehicles (Third Party Insurance) Act, Cap. 133 (An Ordinance to make provision against third party risks arising out of the use of Motor vehicles) and following the principles in the authorities cited and particularly the case of THE NEW GREAT INSURANCE CO. OF INDIA LTD. v. LILIAN CROSS AND ANOTHER. I think that the "B" i.e. The Insurance Police does not relieve the defendants company from the liability of satisfying the claim under section 11 of Cap. 133."

The appellants appealed to the Court of Appeal against the decision of Tejan J. The appeal was heard by the Court of Appeal (Cole C.J., C.A. Harding J.A. and P.R. Davies J. A.) and judgment was delivered on 19th May, 1972 dismissing the appeal. The judgment was delivered by the learned Chief Justice and the other two Justices agreed with him.

The Court of Appeal held that at the time of the accident the car was being driven by a person (i.e. Sahr Kissi Kondowa) "caught within the ambit of the proviso to the definition of "Driver" in the schedule [p.113] to Ex. B…….. in that the driver was an unlicensed driver", but that the proviso was a condition, that section 9 of the Act inter alia rendered "any condition in a policy providing that no liability shall arise under the policy" of no effect, that the proviso was such a condition and wherefore the proviso was of no effect. Put succinctly, the Court of Appeal said in effect that although Sahr Kissi Kondowa was caught by the proviso yet the appellants could not rely on the proviso to repudiate liability because the proviso was a condition rendered of no effect by section 9 of the Act.

The important issues in the Appeal may be summarized thus:—

(i) Whether all conditions in a Policy of Insurance whether relating the events accruing before or after the happening of the event giving rise to a claim under the Policy, for death or bodily injury caused by or arising out of the use of the motor vehicle covered by the policy, are of no effect as against third parties.

(ii) Another a third party claimant against an Insurer for the recovery of a judgment debt obtained against the Insured in respect of death or bodily injury caused by or arising out of the use of a motor vehicle covered by the Policy which also covers liability in respect of death or bodily injury, is entitled to succeed irrespective of the terms of the policy.

Compulsory Third Party Insurance of Motor vehicles was introduced in Sierra Leone in 1951. The legislation introducing it, the Motor Vehicles (Third Party Insurance) Act Cap. 133, was passed in 1949 but it did not come into force until 1st April, 1951. The act incorporated certain provisions of two British Acts of Parliament i.e. the Road Traffic Act, 1930 and the Road Traffic Act, 1934 (hereinafter referred [p.114] to as "the 1930 Act" and "the 1934 Act" respectively). The answer to the first question formulated above turns on the construction of section 9 of the Act, which is in the following terms:—

"Any condition in a policy or security issued or given for the purposes of this Act providing that no liability shall arise under the policy or security or that any liability so arising shall cease in the event of some specified thing being done or omitted to be done after the happening of the event giving rise to a claim under the policy or security shall, in respect of such liabilities as are required to be covered by a policy or security issued of the purposes of this act, be of no effect:

Provided that noting in this section shall be so constructed as to render void any provision in a policy or security requiring the person insured or secured to repay to the insurer or the giver of the security any sums which the insured or the giver of the security may have become liable to pay under the policy or the security and which have been applied to the satisfaction of the claims of third parties."

This section is substantially the same as section 38 of the 1930 Act. The material difference between the two sections is that in the British section there are commas after the word "ACT" where it first appears, and after the word "cease".

The contention of the respondent is that the provision in the policy, that liability shall only be covered by the policy if the car was being driven at the time of the accident by the Insured or by a driver as defined in the policy, is a condition rendered of no effect by section 9 of the Act. According to this argument, all conditions in a policy are rendered of no effect by the section. On the other hand it was argued by Council for the appellant that in the first [p.115] place the said provision relating to the driver of the car was not a condition within the terms of section 9 but classification of persons insured within the terms of section 7(1) (b) of the Act, and that, in any case, section 9 of the Act related only to a thing done or omitted to be done after the happening of the event giving rise to a claim under the policy.

The question then arises, is the provision relating to the driver of the car a condition? It is provided in section III of the Policy under the heading "General Receptions" that:—

"The Company shall not be liable under this Policy in respect of

(1) . . . . . .

(2) . . . . . .

(3) any accident loss or damage and/or liability caused sustained or incurred whilst any motor car in respect of or in connection with which insurance is granted under this policy is

(a) . . . . . .

(b) being driven by any person other than a driver."

It is also provided in section II (headed "Liability to Third Parties"), clause 3 as follows:—

"in term of and subject to the limitations of the indemnity which is granted by this section to the Insured the Company will indemnify and Driver who is driving who Motor Car on the Insured's order or with his permission provided that such Driver"

(a) is not entitled to indemnity under any other policy

(b) shall as though he were the Insured observe fulfill and be subject to the terms exceptions and conditions of this Policy in so far as they can apply."

[p.116]

And "Driver is defined in the schedule (which, it is not disputed, forms part of the policy) as follows:—

"Any of the following:—

The Insured.

The Insured may also drive a Motor Car not belonging to him and not hired to him under hire-purchase agreement.

Any other person who is driving on the policy holder's order of with his permission.

Provided that the person driving is permitted in accordance with the licensing or other laws or regulations to drive the motor car or has been so permitted or is not disqualified by order of a Court of Law or by reason of any enactment or regulation in that behalf from driving such Motor Car."

I shall deal first with Mr. Rogers-Wright's argument relating to classification and for that purpose it is necessary to act out the relevant provision of section 7(1)(b) of the Act. The relevant act of the section which is copied from section 36 of the Road Traffic Act, 1930 reads—

"7(1) a policy of Insurance for the purposes of this Act must be a policy which

(a) . . . . . .

(b) insures such person or classes of person as may be specified in the policy in respect of any liability which may be incurred by him or them in respect of the death of or bodily injury to any person caused by or arising out of the use of a motor vehicle covered by the policy,"

Mr. Roger-Wright's argument is that the provisions in the policy (including the schedule) relating to the driver of the car merely specifies the "person or classes of person" insured within the meaning of section 7(1) (b) and is not a condition. While clearly the "person or classes of person" insured by the policy are (1) the [p.117] Insured and (ii) any other person who is driving on the Policy holder's order or with his permission, provided that person is not caught by the restrictions laid down in the proviso to the definition of “Driver” Clause. And the liability covered by the policy, according to section II Clause 1 of the Policy, includes “liability in respect of death or bodily injury to any person” in the event of accident caused by or arising out of the use of the motor car, which in my judgment is the liability required to be covered by section 7(1)(b) of the Act. I agree therefore that the combined effect of the clause headed “General Exception” quoted above, Section II Clause 3, the definition of “Driver” in the Schedule to the policy and Section II Clause 1 of the Policy is to specify the person or classes of person insured by the policy, to use the words of the sub-section, “in respect of the death of or body injury to any person caused by or arising out of the use of the motor vehicle.” But that is not the end of the matter, because to say that a provision in a policy specifies the “person or classes of person” insured by the policy does not mean that that provision is not condition of the policy. Mr. Rogers-Wright denied a condition as “a term of a contract which qualifies a primary obligation,” and submitted that the provision in the policy specifying the “person or classes of person” insured does not qualify the primary obligation under the policy and therefore that provision is not a condition. I do not think that it is necessary to go into the question of whether or not the provision “qualifies the primary obligation”, because in my opinion, the definition of “condition” urged by [p.118] Mr. Rogers-Wright is too restrictive. I agree that “condition” is sometimes used in that sense, but it is frequently used in a less restrictive sense. In the recent case of L. SCHULER S.C v. ICKMAN MACHINE TOOL SALES LTD. (1973) 2 W.L.R. 683 LORD Morris of Borth-y-Cost Said p. 694,

“Just as the word “warranty” may have differing meanings according to the context so may the word “condition”. The words “condition precedent “may have a specific meaning. But the “conditions” of a contract may be no more than its terms or provisions. A condition of a context be a term of it or it may denote something to be satisfied before the contract comes into operation or it may denote something basic to its continuing operation.”

I think that it is the right approach and I adopt it. In my opinion, the word “Condition” in section 9 of the Act means no more than a “term” or a “provision” of the policy. Viewed in this light, the provision in the policy relating to driver is, in my opinion, a condition. It is a condition specifying the “person or classes of persons” insured by the policy.

I now turn to the question whether or not section 9 of the Act renders all conditions in a policy ineffective or affects only conditions relating the acts done or omitted to be done “after the happening of the event giving rise to a claim under the policy.” The Court of Appeal construed who section disjunctively and held that the section rendered all conditions in a policy of no effect as against a third party. The learned Chief Justice who delivered the judgment said inter alia:—

"This brings us to a construction of section 9 of the Act. In construing this section I think it is immaterial whether a condition falling within its ambit is precedent or subsequent; for whether it is precedent or subsequent so long as it is caught within the ambit of that section it is of no effect . . . . . .

. . . . . .

Let me now spell out the way I read the material portion of section 9 of the Act.

I read them in this way—

Any condition in a policy or security issued or given for the purposes of this Act providing—

(i) that no liability shall arise under the policy or security;

(ii) That any liability arising under the policy shall cease in the event of some specified thing being done or omitted to be done after the happening of the event giving rise to a claim under the policy or security.

In other words the section in my view embraces two separate and distinct types of conditions, namely, those which have the effect of negativing liability an initio upon the breach of such a condition and those which make the negativing of the liability conditional upon the doing or omitting to do some specified thing after the happening of the event giving rise to a claim under the policy or security. The section deals with conditions in a policy which seek to prevent liability from arising on the one hand and those which seek to avoid a liability which has arisen on the other. That I think is the only reasonable and proper construction that can be put to section 9 which will not render it either non-sensical or, stronger still, which will not result in defeating the object of the Act, namely the protection of third parties using the highway against death or bodily injury by the use of a motor vehicle on the highway."

My Smythe, learned Counsel for the respondent, urged us to accept the construction put on the section by the Court of Appeal and also relied on the case of THE NEW GREAT INSURANCE COMPANY OF INDIA LTD. v. LILIAN EVERLYN CROSS & ANOTHER (1966) Fast African Law Reports 90. The facts of that case are in many respects similar to those in the present case. The respondent was injured [p.120] in a motor accident and recovered judgment against the owner of the car, the user of which the Insurer (the appellant) had covered by a third party policy. The driver, who had the insured's permission to drive was at the time disqualified from holding a driving licence. The policy contained an Exceptions clause excluding liability of the Insurer "in respect of any claim arising whilst the motor vehicle is being driven by ……. any person other than the Authorise Driver." The Schedule to the policy defined an "Authorized Driver" as "any person driving on the insured's order or with his permission provided that (he has a licence) and is not disqualified ……. from driving." The respondent sued the Insurer. The insurer's defence was that they were not liable because the driver, being disqualified, was not an authorized driver. The West Africa Court of Appeal (Newbold V.P. and Crabbe J.A. Lestrang J. A. dissenting) gave judgment for the respondent.

Dealing with section 8 of the Kenya Act (which is substantially the same as our section 9 — except for the positioning of commas), Newbold V.P. said at p.97 –—

"The section in the Act differs from the British section, which appears as the Road Traffic Act, 1930 s.38, in that in the Kenya Act the Comma appears after the word "policy" instead of after the word "cease". Grammatically the words in the event of some specified thing being done or omitted to be done after the happening of the event giving rise to the claim" can, with the comma where it is in the Kenya Act, apply only to the words "any liability so arising shall cease" and not to the words "no liability shall arise".

I accept that the rule of construction in Britain in relation to old statutes was that the Courts did not have regard to punctuation in interpreting a section. The reason for this was that until about 1850 the punctuation of sections was inserted after the legislation had been enacted, with the result that the [p.121] punctuation had received no legislative authority. Whether that role of construction would apply in Britain in relation to modern statutes is open to doubt. However, whatever may be the position in Britain, I have no doubt whatsoever hat in West Africa the Courts should in construction of a section, have regard to the punctuation of the section just as much as they should have regard to any other part of it. The reason for this is that the section as enacted by the legislature contains punctuation. Indeed, there are a multitude of examples of amendments to sections containing amendments to the punctuation. In any event I cannot see how it is possible to attach the words "in the event of some specified thing being done…… after the happening of the event giving rise to a claim…." To the words "no liability shall arise" for the simple reason that liability shall arise" for the simple reason that liability would already have arisen before the event; therefore, those words clearly attach and attach only to the words "any liability so arising shall cease." This logical construction is merely reinforced by the positioning of the comma in the Kenya Act. . . . . .

The effect, therefore, of the section is that a conditioning a policy of insurance providing that no liability shall arise under the policy is ineffective in so far as it relates to such liabilities as are required to be covered by a policy under s.5 (b) of the Act and in so far as any such condition is prayed in aid to avoid liability to a third part who has been injured. Insofar, however, as the relationship of the insurer and the insured is concerned, then by virtue of the proviso to the section, if the policy contains a provision requiring the insured to repay to the insurer any amount which the insurer has had to pay to a third part in circumstances in which the condition applies, such a provision is perfectly valid".

In view of fact that the West African Court of Appeal attached so much importance to the commas in the section, it will be useful to set out the relevant part of the section of the Kenya Act. It reads:—

"Any condition in a policy of insurance, providing that no liability shall arise under the policy, or that any liability so arising shall come in the event of some specified thing being done or omitted to be done after the happening of the event giving rise to a claim under the policy, shall, as respects such liabilities [p.122] as are required to be covered by a policy under s.5 of this act, be of no effect."

It is important to note that the punctuation of the Kenya section is quite different from the punctuation of ours. In the Kenya section, there are no less than four commas, whilst in our section there are only two commas. I share the view that punctuation marks in a statute may be called in aid in construing the statute. But I would add that they are only aids and as such they should not be allowed to override the clear and unambiguous meaning of a statute when read as a whole. In view of the difference of the punctuation between the Kenya section and ours and in view of the importance attached to the punctuation of the Kenya section by the East African Court of Appeal, we cannot, in my opinion, derive must assistant from the decision in the NEW GREAT INSURANCE COMPANY CASE in construing our section 9.

How then is our section 9 to be construed? The construction put on the section by the Court of Appeal amount to this:— all conditions relating to something happening before or after the event given rise to the claim are of no effect. To my mind this construction means that all conditions in a policy are of no effect, because in my opinion all conditions in a policy of Insurance must relate to something done or omitted to be done either before of after the happening of the event. If an unauthorized person drives the vehicle, and an accident occurs that will be something done before the happening of the event (i.e. the accident). If the insured fails to report the accident to the Insurers, that will be something omitted to be done after the happening of the event. It is an important rule of construction of [p.123] statues that statute must be read as a whole and the intention of the legislature must be gathered from the statute as a whole, each section throwing light on the rest. Applying this rule, it is quite clear that it was not the intention of the legislature to render all conditions in policies of Insurance ineffective. The Act itself recognizes that it is perfectly permissible to inset conditions in policies Sections 7 and 10 of the Act put this beyond any doubt.

Section 7(3) provides:

"A Policy shall be of no effect for the purpose of this act unless and until there is issued by the approved insurer in favour of the person by whom the policy is effected a certificate (in this Act referred to as a "Certificate of Insurance") in the prescribed form and containing such particulars of any conditions subject to which the policy is issued and of such other matters as may be prescribed."

In my opinion, if it was the intention of the legislature to put a ban[sic] on all conditions in policies of Insurance, the words "such particulars of any conditions subject to which the policy is issued," would not have been inserted in the sub-section. Quite clearly those words indicate in no uncertain terms that an insurer may issue a policy subject to specified conditions. Such specified conditions may include conditions relating to something to be done or omitted to be done before the happening of the event. The relevant part of section 10 of the Act is in the following terms—

"10.Where a certificate of insurance has been issued in favour of the person by whom a policy has been effected or where certificate of security has been issued in favour of the person whose liability is covered by such security so much of the policy as purports to restrict the insurance [p.124] of a person insured thereby, or, in case of a security, such conditions attached thereto as purport to restrict the liability of the giver of the security in respect of any of the following matters —

(a) The age or physical or mental condition of persons driving the motor vehicle; or

(b) The condition of the motor vehicle; or

(c) The number of persons that the motor vehicle carries or;

(d) The weight or physical characteristics of the goods that the motor vehicle carries; or

(e) The times at which or the area within which the motor vehicle is used or

(f) The horse-power or cylinder capacity or value of the motor vehicle; or

(g) The carrying on the motor vehicle of any particular apparatus; or

(h) The carrying on the motor vehicle of any particular means of identification other than any means of identification required to be carried under the provisions of the Road Traffic Act, shall in respect of such liability as are required to be covered by a policy or security issued for the purposes of this Act, be of no effect."

In my opinion the intention of this section is to specify certain conditions, which if inserted in a policy, would be ineffective against third parties. If the intention of the legislature in enacting section 9 was to render all conditions ineffective, then it would not have been necessary to enact section 10. This conclusion is reinforced by the fact that the equivalent provision in Britain to our Section 10 Was first enacted in 1934 by section 12 of the Road Traffic Act, 1934. It seems to me that if section 38 of the 1930 Act, (our section 9) had rendered all conditions in a policy ineffective it would not have been necessary for the legislature to enact section 12 of the 1934 Act providing [p.125] that certain specified "conditions" in a policy were ineffective. In my opinion, most, if not all, of the matters set out in section 10(a) to (h) are matters relating something done or omitted to be done before the happening of the event. If therefore section 9 affected conditions relating to something done or omitted to be done before the happening of the event section 10 would not have been necessary.

In my judgment the intention of the legislature in enacting section 9 was to prevent Insurers defeating claims by injured persons or by the dependants of persons killed as a result of an accident, by relying on conditions in the policy providing that there shall be no liability if some thing is done or omitted to be done after the accident.

For the sake of clarity, I shall spell out the way I read the section. It is:—

Any condition in a policy or security issued or given for the purposes of this Act providing

(a) that no liability shall arise under the policy or security

or

(b) that any liability so arising shall cease

In the event of some specified thing being done of omitted to be done after the happening of the event giving rise to a claim under the policy or security in respect of such liabilities as are required to be covered by a policy or security issued for the [p.126] purpose of this Act

Shall

Be of no effect.

In my opinion therefore the words "in the event of some specified thing being done or omitted to be done after the happening of the event giving rise to a claim under the policy or security" govern the words “no liability shall arise under the policy or security” as well as the words “ any liability so arising shall cease.”

In my opinion this is the logical, grammatical and common sense construction of the section. I am fortified in this opinion by the fact that this has been the construction put on the equivalent section (section 38 of the 1930 Act) by the English courts and Text Book writers. The English Divisional Court considered section 38 of the 1930 act in BRIGHT v. ASHFOLD (1932) 2 K.B. 153. Lord Howarth C.J. put the point of the decision succinctly AT P.158. He said—

This case I think is really to clear for argument. The policy referred to did not cover use whilst carrying a passenger unless a side car was attached to the motor cycle. In these circumstances, which were the circumstances in the present case, there was no policy of insurance in force in respect of third party risks. Reliance was placed by the respondent upon S.38 of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, but I think it is quite clear that section has no relation to a condition such as a contained in this policy

This was a condition which circumscribed the operation of the policy from the beginning. There was, therefore, the policy of insurance against third party risks at all in force in relation to the use of the motor cycle by the respondent, where a passenger was being carried otherwise than in the side-car.”

This GRAY v. BLACKMORE (1934) 1 K.B. 95, Branson J. said at p.105-107 (and I respectfully adopt his reasoning):—

“Then comes S.8, which is relied upon by the plaintiff in this as doing away with the provision of the policy under which it is agreed that the policy shall not cover the car when it is being used otherwise that for private purposes…. The argument is that a provision in a policy that the car shall not be covered if it is being used for a certain purpose is rendered of no effect by this clause. It is said that the clause must be read without a comma in it and, as I understand it, in the following way:

“Any condition (a) that no liability shall arise or (b) that any liability so arising shall cease in the event etc shall be of no effect.” How, it seems to me that is an impossible construction to put upon this clause whether you put a comma after “cease” or not. The motion seems to me to be perfectly clearly expressed as it stands and to provide that any conditioning the policy providing that no liability shall arise under it in the event of some specified thing being done etc” apply equally to the words “that no liability shall arise ……” as they do to the words, “that any liability no arising shall cease” I think the matter may be tested by leaving out one of the suggested alternatives, and dealing with the other by itself. So treated, the section, according to the plaintiff’s argument, would read “Any condition providing that no liability shall arise under the policy shall be of no effect” which is obviously a provision which the statute never meant to enact; and the attempt to break up the words of the section seems to me to be a nonsensical provision in the statute. It said that there is no logical difference between the enactment which parliament obviously intended, that the failure to observe conditions as to something to be done or omitted after the happening of an accident should not be allowed to affect the under-writers’ liability in cases of third party claims, and an enactment that, no matter what the parties agreed in the policy, if the car did an injury to a third party the underwriter should have to pay; but it seems be that there is all the difference in the world between the two positions. A man may agree to have certain cover and he goes forth upon the road covered according to that agreement, before an accident happens, what offence has he committed? He has got a policy which for all that he has hitherto done covers hi, and he is saved from s.35; and yet if the policy contain conditions as to something which he must not do after an accident has [p.128] happened, a failure on had part in that restrict may enable the underwriter who was on trial at the time when the accident happened to escape, and one can well understand the legislature saying that that shall not be permitted.

If all was in order between the assured and the underwriter when the accident happened, the position cannot be altered by subsequent breaches or by acts or omissions on the part of the assured so as to make him less able to compensate the person who has been injured. But it would be an entirely different matter for the legislature to go back to the time before the accident had happened and to say that, if anyone chooses to underwrite a policy in connection with a motor-car, no .imitations as to the time during which or as to the persons by whom, or as to the manner in which, that vehicle can be used can have any avail to save the underwriter from liability."

The English Court of Appeal also construed the section in CROXFORD v. UNIVERSAL INSURANCE CO. LTD., NORMAN v. CROSHAM FIR AND ACCIDENT INSURANCE SOCIETY LTD. (1936) 2. K.B. 233. Sleaser L.J. delivered the leading judgment. He said at p.68

"It will be notice that the conditions which are not be exempt the insurance company from liability to a third party, even if they be broken by the assured, in 3.38 are limited to reason of "some specified thing being done or omitted to be done after the happening of the event giving rise to a claim under the policy" in other words, the fact that in assured fails, for example, under the conditions of a policy to give notice of the accident, which might otherwise, as between he assured and the insurance company he a sufficient answer for the insurance company not to pay, shall not avail as against the third party; but it will be noticed that the protection of the third party notwithstanding the fact hat the assured has not complied with all the conditions, which is giving by section 38, is limited to things done or omitted to be done after the happening of an event giving rise to a claim"

In MANGILIVRAY ON INSURANCE LTD 5th Edition Vol. 2 it is stated at p.1010 para.2080:

"Conditions in a policy issued under Part VI of the Act, relieving the insurers from liability by reason of some act or omission by the insured after the happening of the event giving rise to a claim under the policy, are of no effect against third parties.

The words "in the event of some specified thing being done or omitted" apply to "no liability shall arise" as well as to "any liability so arising shall cease." The effect of the section is that if all was in order between the assured, the position cannot be altered by subsequent breaches or by acts or omissions on the part of the assured."

In HALSBURY'S LAW OF ENGLAND 3rd Edition Vol. 22 it is stated at p.373 para. 764:—

"A motor policy normally contains a large number of restrictive conditions, qualifications and provisos describing and limiting the scope of the insurance. The only conditions, however, which, as against an injured third party with a compulsorily insurable claim, were rendered void by the foregoing enactment i.e. S. 38 of the Road Traffic Act 1930 were conditions relating to something being done or omitted after the accident."

To take another example, in Bingham's motor Claims cases, 6th Edition p.635 in a note on section (206) (2) of the Road Traffic Act, 1960 (which is the same as our section 9 and s. 38 of the 1930 Act) it is aid that:—

"This section relates to breaches of policy conditions after accident, such a failure to report an accident, but does not affect breaches before or at the time, such as not having a driving licence in force."

And coming nearer home, the Ghana Courts have hold in a number of cases that section 8 of their Motor Vehicles (third Party Insurance) act, 1958 (which is the equivalent of our section 9) applies only to conditions relating to something done or omitted to be done after the happening of the event giving rise to a claim under the policy.

[p.130]

In ADJOA POKUA v. THE STA[sic] CORPORATION

Civil appeal (Ghana) No. 16571 decided in December, 1972 Amissah J.A. in the course of his judgment said:—

"It seems to me that if the intention of the legislature had been be avoid all conditions excluding liability as is suggested by section 8, section 9 (the equivalent of our section 10) which avoids restrictions in particular causes would not have been inserted. All the restrictions set out in section 9 are in that case already safely incorporated in the ban in section 8. Not only is section 9, in that case unnecessary, the insertion is certainly impliedly contradictory. The enactment of section 9 and especially coming immediately after the section alleged to impose a total ban, strongly argues that that construction put on section 8 is mistaken."

And in the same case, Sowah J.A. said inter alia:—

It was also argued by Mr. Smytho that the policy of the Act is to protect third parties using the highway against injuries or death by the negligent use f the highway by users of motor vehicles on the highway. It was said that that policy may be gathered from the long title of the Act and from section 3(1) or the Act. In pursuance of the policy, so the argument went, the legislature by section 6 intended to prohibit as against third parties all conditions in a policy relating to something done or omitted to be done by the insured before or after the accident; otherwise the intention of the legislature would be frustrated. That argument was accepted by the Court of Appeal, for the learned Chief Justice said in [p.131] the courage of his judgment:—

“It is beyond dispute that the Act was passed principally for the protection and benefit of third parties using the highway. A close and careful study of the whole structure and provisions of the Act clearly shows this. That being the case, I share most strongly the view that people should be entitled to feel assured, as they walk along the streets or make any other lawful use of the highway that the legislature has protected then against the hazards of motor accidents. It becomes the duty of the Courts therefore to construe the Act in such a way as to suppress all manoeuvres which tend to frustrate the spirit and policy of the Act.”

Let the first deal with the argument based on the long title of the Act. The long title is in the following terms:—

"An act to make provisions against third party risks arising out of the use of motor vehicles."

In my opinion the Act did achieve that object. The Act did make provision for compulsory third party insurance and went on to make provision relating to how may issue Insurance Policies, the risks to be covered by the policy, the person to be insured, what may be specified in the policy, conditions which shall not be effective against third parties, a direct cause of action by third party against the Insurer etc.

The legislature chose to achieve its object stated in the long title by the various provisions made in the body of the Act, in plain and unambiguous language. I do not agree that the legislature did not achieve its stated object. We shall be standing the words of the long title if we were to say that the object of the legislature was to make provision against third party risks irrespective of the terms of the policy and irrespective of the circumstances of the accident. In my opinion, the Act [p.132] itself shows quite clearly what the intention of the legislature was, and our duty as a Court of law is to interpret the words used in the Act. But even if the long title had the wide meaning attributed to it by learned Counsel for the respondent, it must be remembered that what we have to interpret are the words used in the act. If the words are ambiguous, the long title may be looked at the resolve the ambiguity. But if the words are plain and unambiguous, the long title may not be used to modify or control the meaning. It is a not always that Parliament achieves its stated object by the words actually used in the body of the statute.

“3(1) subject to the provisions of this Act no person shall use, or cause or permit any other person to use a motor vehicle unless there is in force in relation to the user of that motor vehicle by such person or such other person, as the case may be such a policy of insurance of such a security in respect of third party risks as complies with the provision of the Act.”

This section was copied from section 35(1) of the 1930 Act. Section 3(2) of our Act provides for a penalty in case of contravention of section 3(1). Mr. Smythe submitted that what section 3 (1) required the owner of a vehicle to cover by a policy of Insurance was the use of the vehicle on the road and not the person using the vehicle. He relied for that submission on the case of JOUN T. ELLIS LTD. v. WALTER T. HINDS (1947) 1 K.B. 475 which was a decision of the English Divisional Court. I agree with the submission. But Mr. Smythe went further and submitted that since section 3(1) required only the use of the vehicle to be covered and not the [p.133] person using the vehicle any conditions in a policy limiting the use of the vehicle to a named person or to particular class of persons were of no effect as against third parties. With respect, that submission fails to appreciate the object of section 3(1) of the Act. In my opinion, what section 3(1) does is to provide what cover a vehicle owner must take out if he is to escape the consequences of section 3(2). The vehicle owner must cover by Insurance the use of the vehicles on the road if he is to escape the consequences of section 3(2). The section does no provide for and says nothing about the liability of Insurers to third parties. In my opinion, when section 3(1) is read with another sections of the Act, it is quite clear that the legislature intended to make provision against third party risks arising out of the use of motor vehicles on the road, but on conditions, not specifically rendered ineffective by the Act, specified in the policy including conditions relating to the "person or classes of person" insured by the Insurer and in respect of whose liability the insurer undertakes to be liable in the event of an accident resulting in death of or bodily injury to any person.

The argument based on the policy of the Act is not new. It was advanced by Counsel for the respondent in BRIGHT v. ASHFOLD (see (1932) 2 K.B. at p. 157) but was rejected by the Court. In his judgment in GRAY v. BLACKMORE Branson J. had this to say at p. 105:—

"That is sought in this case is a construction of the section (i.e. S. 35 of the 1930 Act) which should say that any policy issued in respect of any vehicle which may be used on the road must cover that vehicle whenever used on the road for any purpose for which any vehicle can be used on the road. I do not see that the [p.134] Statute says anything of the sort. It is defining the protection which a man must have if he is to escape the consequences of S.35. That that is so, appears from the provisions of S.36, Sub-S.5 relating to the certificate of insurance, that the policy may contain conditions the nature of which is left completely open. So it clearly contemplates that the policy may be issued subject to certain conditions and unless they are to be conditions limiting the liability of the underwriter what possible reason can there be for their inclusion in the certificate, the object of which is to make clear to whom it may concern the conditions, if any, subject to which the policy has been issued."

In my judgment the provision in the policy relating the "driver" is a perfectly valid condition and it is not rendered ineffective by section 9 of the Act. The argument of Counsel for the respondent based on section 9 therefore fails.

I turn now to the other important question raised in this Appeal. The answer to that question turns on the proper construction of section 11 of the Act, which is copied from section 10 of the 1934 Act. Section 11(1) and (2) provide as follows:—

"11(1) If after a certificate of insurance has been issued in favour of the person by which a policy has been effected or a certificate of security has been issued in favour of the person whose liability is covered by such security judgment in respect of any such liability as is required to be covered by a policy or security issued for the purposes of this Act, being a liability covered by the security, as the case may be, then, notwithstanding that the insurer or the giver of the security may be entitled to avoid or cancel or may have avoided or cancelled the policy or the security as the case may be the insurer or the giver of the security shall, subject to the provisions of this section, [p.135] benefit of such judgment any payable there under in respect of the liability including any sum payable in respect of costs and any sum payable by virtue of any law in respect of interest on that sum or judgment.

"(2) No sum shall be payable by an insurer or the giver of a security under the provisions of sub-section (1)

(a) in respect of any judgment unless before or within fourteen days after the government of the proceedings in which the judgment was given the insurer or the giver of the security had notice of the …… bringing of the proceedings, or;

(b) in respect of any judgment so long as execution thereon is stayed pending an appeal; or

(c) in connection with any liability if before the happening of the event, which was the cause of the death or bodily injury giving rise to the liability, the policy or security was cancelled by mutual consent or by virtue of any provision contained therein and either—

(i) Before the happening of such event the certificate of insurance or the certificate of security, was surrendered to the insurer or the giver of the security, as the case may be, or the person to whom such certificate was delivered made a statutory declaration stating that such certificate had been lost or destroyed and so could not be surrendered; or

(ii) After the happening of such event but before the expiration of fourteen days from the taking effect of the cancellation of the policy or of the security the certificate of insurance or the certificate of security, as the case may be, was surrounded to the insurer or the giver of the security or the person to whom such certificate was delivered into a statutory declaration that such certificate had been lost or destroyed and so could not be surrounded; or

(iii) either before or after the happening of the event, but within a period of fourteen days from the taking effect of the cancellation of the policy or the security the insurer or the giver of the security had commenced criminal proceedings under section 15 of this Act in respect of the failure to surrender the certificate of insurance or the certificate of security, as the case may be."

Mr. Smythe contended that when once a certificate of insurance has been issued, if judgment is obtained against any person insured by the policy in respect of liability for death or bodily injury and if the policy covers liability in respect of death or bodily injury the only defence upon to an Insurer in an action by a third party under section 11(1) or the Act are those provided by section 11(2)(a)(b) and (c) and section 11(3). Section 11(3) provides that the insurer shall not be liable to pay the judgment debt if before or within three months after the commencement of the proceedings in which the judgment was given he has obtained a declaration that apart from any provisions contained in the policy, he is entitled to avoid the policy on the ground that it was obtained by the non-disclosure of material fact or by misrepresentation or if he had avoided the policy on that ground that he was entitled to do so apart from any provision contained in it.

The argument amount to this: that unless the Insurer can avail himself of one of defences provided in section 11(2)(a), (b) and (c) and 11(3) (what Mr. Smythe termed "Statutory Defences") he is liable to pay the judgment debt irrespective of the terms of the policy. In my opinion there is nothing in section 11 which supports the view that the Insurer is limited to only the so-called [p.137] statutory defences. In construing the section it must be remembered that the third party's rights against the Insurer are maintainable under the section not on the basis of contract, but on the basis of an Insurance Policy in force. If there is no Insurance Policy in force there will be no claim against the Insurers. In my opinion, in a case based on a policy of Insurance, the third party must prove (i) that a certificate of insurance has been issued in favour of the person by whom the policy was effected (ii) that judgment has been given in his favour in respect of such liability as is required to be covered by a policy (iii) that the liability is in fact covered by the terms of the policy (iv) that the judgment is against any person insured by the policy. there is no dispute that a certificate of Insurance was issued in favour of Sorie Mansaray, or that judgment was given in favour of the respondent in respect of bodily injury which is a liability required to be covered by a policy or Insurance by virtue of Section 7(1) (b) of the Act, or that the judgment was given against a person insured by the policy i.e. Sorie Mansaray. The only dispute is as to whether the Insurer is liable irrespective of the terms of the policy. Mr. Rogers-Wright submitted that the terms of the policy must be looked at for the purposes of determining whether the liability to the respondent is naturally covered by the "terms of the police".

Section 7(1) (b) provides for the insurance of a "person of classes of person" specified in the policy against liability for death or bodily injury to any person.

The "person or classes of person" insured by the policy is this case against liability for death or bodily injury Sorie Mansaray and any other person coming within the definition of "Driver" in the Schedule to the Policy. In my opinion if Sahr Kissi Kondowa did not come within the definition of "driver" he was not a person insured by the Policy and therefore liability for death or bodily injury when the car was being driven by him was not covered by the "terms of the Policy".

I derive support for this opinion from a number of English decisions, text book writers and Ghanaian decisions. In ADMIN v. ZURICH GENERAL ACCIDENT AND LIABILITY INSURANCE CO. LTD. (1945) 1 All. E.R. 316, a decision of the English Court of Appeal, Lord Greene N.R. stated his views forcefully at p.319. He said —

"There is no question of contract. It is question of a document which, by virtue of a statute, confers a benefit on a third party. How that third party can pick and choose and pick out that part of the document which suits him and omit that part of the document which does not suits him and omit that part of the document which does not suit him, I am at a loss to understand. He must take it or leave it as he finds it, and, if he claims the benefit, he must suffer the burden."

In my opinion, this statement should be read subject to the provisions of section 38 of the 1930 Act (our section 9) and of section 12 of the 1934 Act (our section 10).

In HERBERT v. RAILWAY PASSENGERS ASSURNCE CO. (1938) 1 All E.R. 650, Wilkinson was insured with the defendant Company against third party risks in respect of a side-car and the policy provided that the defendant company should not be liable in respect of my accident incurred while any motor cycle was being driven by or was for the [p.139] purpose of being driven by him in charge of any person other than the insured. Wilkinson, while driving with a friend, fell ill, and allowed the friend to drive the side-car. While being so driven the side-car collided with a lorry with the result that the plaintiff was injured. In an action against Wilkinson the plaintiff recovered damages and then sought to recover them from the Insurance Company. Judgment was given for the Insurance Company. In the course of his judgment Porter J. (as he then was) said at p.652.

"First of all, with regard to the question as to whether the company are protected because they only insured Mr. Wilkinson, their assured, while he was driving himself, I think that they have made a general exception which in sufficiently clear terms indicates that they will cover their assured only if he is driving himself. So far as his knowledge is concerned, if that is material, or so far as the proposal form is concerned, if that is material, that plainly indicates that he only intends to drive it himself. That, of course, even with the incorporation of the proposal form, could not be fatal, unless the exception says that the company do not cover him except when he was driving himself. When say that, I do not say that as necessarily applying to all cases. In motor-traffic cases, one has to consider the provisions of the Act. In this case, taking the wording of the policy alone, and nothing else, I do not think that one can fairly construe it as meaning anything other than that the insurer shall not be liable while the motor in being driven by any person other than the insured, or is, for the purpose of being driven by him in the charge of any person other than the insured."

"I did raise the question, and Mr. Elkin raised it before no, as to whether there might not be a claim under section 36(1)(b), in that the wording of that section was so wide that it included any case where the assured was liable owing to the use of any motor on the road, and in that section 10 of the Act of 1934 imposed a liability upon the insurers where the assured was liable and could not pay. [p.140] But Section 10 does not, I think, impose any such liability in a case where the insurers have limited their liability by the wording of the policy, but only in a case there are is an apparently valid policy covering the liability, which yet they could have avoided or cancelled because of some misrepresentation or conclusion on the part of the assured."

It is also stated in RECGLILIVRAY ON INSURANCE LAW 5th Ed. Vol. 2 para. 2065 at p. 1001 that

"Motor-vehicle policies frequently contain clauses restricting the liability of the insurers in various ways e.g. the indemnity afforded may be limited by reference to the driver of the vehicle or to the purposes for which it is used. After some conflict of judicial opinion it has now become clear that such a policy complies with the Act pro tento; that is to say, that provided that the liability insured against is that specified by the Act, the vehicle may law-fully be used within the limits laid down by the policy, although an offence will be committed by anyone who uses it, or causes or permits it to be used, outside those limits."

That was the construction given to section 10 of the 1934 Act before 1946. It is also the construction given by the Ghana Courts to the equivalent section of their Act (see ADJOA POKUA v. THE STATE INSURANCE CORPORATION (super). I think that that is the proper construction and the construction which, in my opinion, we should give to section 11 of our Act.

The Road Traffic Acts of 1930 and 1934 introduced revolutionary changes in British Law to the extent that they inter alia made provision for compulsory insurance of motor vehicles, gave the injured third party a direct cause of action against the insurer in certain circumstances and imposed restrictions in the conditions an insurer may insert in a policy of Insurance. But the changes were not as revolutionary as some people had imagined. The changes did not solve the problem of the [p.141] driver whom from one cause or another, was not insured at all or was not covered by a policy in force in respect of the vehicle he was driving. In this connection the words of Goddard J. (as he then was) in JONES v WELSH INSURANCE CORPORATION LTD. (1937) 4 all E.R 149 are appropriate. He said at pages 152-153:—

"The result is that the action fails, and must be dismissed, though I come to this conclusion with as much regret as a judge may properly feel when he gives effect to what he decides are the legal rights of the parties. For this adds another to the growing list of cases which show that in spite of the statutory provisions for compulsory insurance, persons injured by motor cars through no fault of their own may be left with no prospect of obtaining compensation, a position to which the late Swift J. not long since called attention in vigorous and pointed language. The public believe, and with reason, that the Road Traffic Acts insure that, if they have the misfortune to be killed or injured by a driver's negligence, there will at least be compensation for themselves or their dependants, knowing nothing of the pitfalls which still abound in policies, in spite of Sec. 12 of the Act of 1934. No one can fairly expect insurers to pay on a risk additional to that for which they have received a premium

No legislation can guard against the criminal who willfully drives an insured car, but it is just as well that it should be realized that, though there may be a policy in force, and an unauthorized person is driving the car which causes injury, there is no certainty that liability will attach to the insurers."

It was to solve that problem that an Agreement was entered into between the British Minister of Transport and the Motor Insurers' Bureau on 17th June 1946. The object of that Agreement was to secure compensation to third party victims of road accidents in cases where, notwithstanding the provisions of the Road Traffic Acts relating to compulsory insurance, the victim was deprived of compensation by the absence of insurance, or of effective [p.142] insurance.

Clause 1 of the said Agreement provides as follows:—

"1. If judgment in respect of any liability which is restricted to be covered by a policy of insurance or a security (hereinafter called "a contract of insurance") under Part II of the Road Traffic Act, 1930 is obtained against any person or persons in any court in Great Britain whether or not such person or persons be in fact covered by reason only of the provisions of subsection 4 or section 35 of the said Act is in fact covered by a contract of insurance and any such judgment is not satisfied in full within seven days from the date upon which the person or persons in whose favour the judgment was given then the motor Insurer Bureau will…….pay or satisfy or cause to be paid or satisfied to or to the satisfaction of the person or persons in whose favour the judgment was given any sum payable or reaming payable thereunder in respect of the aforesaid liability including taxed costs (or such proportion thereof as is attributable to the aforesaid liability) whatever may be the cause of the failure of the judgment debtor to satisfy the judgment."

I need hardly say that, being an agreement, the Motor Insurers Bureau Agreement did not, and indeed could not, in any way amend the provisions of the Road Traffic Acts 1930 and 1934. The provisions of these Acts remained in tact. These provisions were replaced by Part VI of the Road Traffic Act, 1960 which has recently been replaced by Part VI of the Road Traffic Act 1972, but no material change in this breach of the law was affected by other of the Acts just referred to.

It is evident from the provisions of the said Agreement, that it is not necessary now in Britain, for a third party victim of road accident, to claim the judgment debt recovered by him from the Insurer of the vehicle involved in the accident. He may claim directly from the [p.143] Motor Insures Bureau. If the English Law Reports are sufficient evidence to go by, we result is that since 1964 very few, if nay, claims based on Section 10 of the 1934 Act (or section 207 of the Road Traffic Act, 1960 which replaced it) have come before the English Courts. This fact, I think, emphasizes the importance and relevance of pre-1964 cases like HERBERT v. RAILWAY ASSURANCES CO. (super).

A comparison of Section 10 of the 1934, Act (our Section 11) and the said Agreement would reveal that whilst under the Section it is essential for the third party claimant to prove that the liability in respect of which the claim is made is a liability covered by the terms of the policy, the Agreement stipulation no such requirement. So under the said Agreement the third party claimant my succeed in a claim against the Motor Insurers Bureau irrespective of the terms of the policy and even if there is not policy in force. In my opinion therefore, decisions based on claims under the said Agreement are of little relevance or assistance to us in construing our Section 11. Mr. Smythe relied on such case i.e. IVEDY v. MOTOR INSURERS BUREAU (1946)2 All E.R. 742, which was a decision of the English Court of Appeal. That case was based on a claim against the Motor Insurance Bureau under the said Agreement. There was no Insurance Company involved, and there was no Insurance Policy to be construed. Suffice it to any that the construction of section 207 of the Road Traffic act, 1960 (the equivalent of section 10 of the 1934 Act) was not necessary for the Court's decision and the court certainly did not decide that the terms of the policy must be disregarded [p.144] in claims based on section 207 of the Road Traffic Act, 1960. In my opinion therefore that decision is of little relevance or assistance to the solution of the problem with which this Court is faced.

Mr. Smythe submitted before us that the appellants did not prove at the trial that Sahr Kissi Kondowa was not a "driver" within the meaning of the definition clause in the Schedule. That may be so. But it was alleged in the Defence that he was an unlicensed driver" and that the liability which arose was not covered by the terms of the policy. Mr. Smythe himself conceded at the trial that Sahr Kissi Kondowa was an "unlicensed driver". That term was taken by the Trial Judge to mean that he had never had a licence and that as such he was not a driver within the definition. The Court of Appeal also accepted that Sahr Kissi Kondowa was not a driver within the definition. That was the whole basis on which the case proceeded at the trial and before the Court of Appeal. Indeed far from saying that it was not proved that Sahr Mr. Smythe submitted before the trial judge and before the Court of Appeal that the word "knowingly" should be implied in the proviso to the definition clause. It would, in my opinion, be without justification and contrary to precedent for this court of depart from the basis on which the case proceeded in the High Court and the Court of Appeal. In the circumstances I think that it is too late to raise the point, even assuming it has any merit.

Mr. Smythe submitted before us that the word "knowingly" should be implied in the proviso to the definition clause. He made the same submission before [p.145] the trial judge and the Court of Appeal, but neither court considered it. I do not think that a convincing case has been made for implying the word in this case and the submission accordingly fails.

It has been said that people are entitled to feel assured, as they walk along the streets or make any other lawful use of the highway, that the legislature has protected them against the hazards of motor accidents. That may be desirable and progressive policy, but in my opinion, it is certainly not the policy of the Road Traffic Act (Cap.133). As Judges, we should always bear in mind, that however much we may sympathize with a certain policy, we are not entitled or justified to strain the words of a statue so as to accord with that policy, our function is to interpret the law as we find it. To do otherwise would be usurping the function of the Legislature. As I said earlier in this judgment, our Act has given some protection to third party victims of read accidents. That protection may not accord with what we consider desirable in the public interest. But it is not for us to decided whether what we consider desirable is politic. In the final analysis it is for parliament and/or the Government, in their wisdom, to decide whether to adopt that policy and how to put it into effect. They may decide to make some arrangement with the local Insurance Companies or with the National Insurance Company, similar to the Agreement between the British Minister of Transport and the Motor Insurers Bureau, or they may decide to amend the Road Traffic Act (Cap. 133) to provide in unmistakable term that a third party victim of road accident shall be entitled to recover in any event, [p.146] irrespective of the terms of the Policy or of the non-existence of a Policy. They my find some other solution. When such a policy is adopted and made law in whatever form, then it will be our duty as Judges to interpret and apply the law as we find it then. But until then third party victims of road accidents must be content with the rights and benefits given to then by the Road Traffic Act (Cap. 133) and by the other laws of the land.

For these reasons, I would allow the appeal

SIERRA LEONE OXYGEN FACTORY LIMITED v. P. B. PYNE-BAILEY

[CIV. APP. 1/73] [p.147-166]

SIERRA LEONE OXYGEN FACTORY

LIMITED — PLAINTIFFS/APPELLANTS

AND

P.B. PYNE-BAILEY — DEFENDANT/RESPONDENT

JUDGMENT DELIVERED ON FRIDAY THE 10TH DAY OF MAY, 1974.

JUDGMENT

BROWNE-MARKE, J.S.C.

This appeal is from the judgment of the Sierra Leone Court of Appeal dated the 25th day of May, 1972, dismissing an appeal an Order of the High Court dated 30th November, 1971, ordering that the judgment in default of appearance obtained on the 14th day of June, 1971 be set aside.

The proceedings were commenced by a writ of Summons accompanied by a Statement of claim and dated the 24th day of March, 1971. The appellants claimed on the said write, damages for breach of contract and for wrongful detention of goods. In the statement of claim signed by their Solicitor the appellants alleged the following:—

"On or about the 26th day of October,1969 the Defendant collected from the Plaintiff for rewinding one (1) 85 Horse Power Electricity Motor No. 027490 made by Enrico Bazzi of Milan in 1965 which the Defendant examined and agreed to rewind at the sum of cost of One thousand three hundred and Fifty leones (le1,350.00). The Plaintiff paid to the Defendant the whole of the sum of Le1,350.00 in advance at the Defendant's request on the 7th November, 1969.

2. It was an implied term of the contract that the machine would be properly and efficiently re-wound and the defendant impliedly represented and held out of the Plaintiff that he had the necessary skill and knowledge to do so.

3. The motor was being used at the Plaintiff's premises in the manufacture of oxygen and time was of the essence of the contract.

4. After a considerable delay and in early 1970, the Defendant returned the motor to the Plaintiff, but the work had been so inefficiently carried out that the inductor wire would not even fit in the case and the motor was unusable. The Plaintiff there upon forthwith informed the Defendant who after a few days inspect the motor and subsequently collected it for re-winding.

5. Up till the 31st August, 1970, the defendant neither repaired the motor nor refunded this sum of Le1,350 notwithstanding several requests by the Plaintiff for the Defendant to do so.

6. In the result the Plaintiff incurred considerable loss while the machine was in the possession of the Defendant and had to secure a replacement motor to enable it to execute its contract.

The Plaintiff has suffered loss and damage thereby.

[p.148]

7. On or about the 19th day of August, 1970, the motor was collected by the Plaintiff and repaired by another firm at the cost of Le548.

Particulars of less and damage

(a) Cost of obtaining another motor	Le3,000.00
(b) Loss of Sales of manufactured products	Le1,500.00

8. The Plaintiff therefore claims

(a) Special damages of Le.4,500.00

(b) A refund of the deposit of Le.1,350.00

And the Plaintiff claims general damages.

The affidavit of service sworn by one David Momoh on 11th June, 1571 states that the writ of Summons was served on the respondent at his place of business Sierra Engineering Agencies, 14, Pademba Road, Freetown, on the 25th march, 1971. The said David Momoh swore to a second affidavit of search on the same date which states that no appearance had been entered by or on behalf of Respondent.

Judgment in default was obtained as to part of the claim on 14th June, 1971, for Le1,350.00, damages to be assessed and costs to be taxed. The judgment was signed by Mr. William Johnson, Master and Registrar.

On the 25th day of October, 1971, the Solicitor for the appellants made an application for a Writ of Fieri Facias endorsed to levy Le5,850.00 and interest thereon at the rate of Le10.00 per cent per annum as from 14th June, 1971. The Deputy Master and Registrar signed the writ of Fieri Facias on behalf of the Master and Registrar to levy execution for Le5,850.00 with interest at 4 percent per annum.

By notice of motion dated 2nd November, 1971, Mr. N.O. Mackay applied to the High Court on behalf of the Respondent for an order that the judgment in default of appearance dated the 14th day of June, 1971, be set aside and execution there-under be stayed for the reasons shown on the affidavit of the Respondent sworn on the same date. Further that the statement of Defence exhibited by the respondent be filed and served on the appellants Solicitor.

The application came up before Ken During, J. on 8th November, 1971, but Mr. Mackay on behalf of Respondent/Applicant requested an adjourned date was 9th November, 1971, on which date Dr. Marcus-Jones appeared for Appellants/Respondents and Mr. Beckay on behalf of Respondent/Applicant.

After hearing Counsel for both parties and reading the affidavit filed in support by the Applicant/Respondent the application was refused. No mention was made of the Statement of Defence which was exhibited.

On 10th November, 1971 Mr. Mackay entered an appearance in the Master's Office on behalf of the Respondent. On the same date he filed another notice of motion for an Order that for the reasons shown in the affidavit of the Respondent/Applicant which was also filed, the writ of Fieri Facias and the whole proceedings be set aside on the ground of irregularity.

On the 12th day of November, 1972, the said motion came before Tejan J., Mr. Rogers-Wright with Mr. Mackey appeared on behalf of Respondent/Applicant. Council for Appellants/Respondents raised a preliminary objection that the motion was short served and Tejan, J., ordered an interim stay of the writ of Fieri Facias.

On 30th November, 1970, the said motion came before Tejan, J., and the and after hearing counsel for both portion, the learned judge ruled as follows:—

"I have considered the agreement of both Counsel. Where is no doubt a breach of the ruled has been considered. In the interest of Justice, I allow the application to net aside the judgment. Cost in the cause."

On 10th December, 1971, Tejan, J. granted on application by Counsel for Appellants/Applicants for leave to appeal against the interlocutory judgment of the 30th November, 1971. The application was supported by an affidavit sworn by the Solicitor for Appellants on 7th December, 1971.

The ground of appeal as recorded was "That the Learned Trial Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the Respondent's Notice of motion dated 10th November, 1971, by reason of the fact that on the 9th day of November, 1971, the High Court of Sierra Leone by an order of the Hon. Mr. Justice ken O. During had dismissed a similar application made by the Notice of motion dated 2nd November, 1971, which said order remains in full force and effect."

[p.150]

The appeal was heard by the Sierra Leone Court of Appeal on 24th and 25th May 1972. The judgment of the Court (Cole, C.J., Harding and Davies JJ/A) was as follows: —

"In the interest of Justice we feel that the matter should go to trial. We therefore invoke our powers under Rule 36 of the Court of Appeal Rules and dismiss the appeal. He order as to costs."

Counsel for Appellants applied to that Court for leave to appeal from its judgment of 25th May, 1972 dismissing the appeal of Appellants. Conditional leave to appeal to the Supreme Court was given on 30th June, 1972 and Final leave on 13th July 1972.

In the case of Appellants the principal question raised were

(i) That the judgment of Ken During J., of 9th November, 1971, was regular and that the High Court in exercising its undoubted discretion found no merit in the application to set it aside and properly refused leave to the Respondent to defend action. That in the circumstances a further application to the same tribunal was inappropriate and untenable except by way of leave to appeal.

(ii) That the effect of the Order of Tejan, J., was to reverse the decision Ken During J., although the Respondents' Counsel had specifically stated that it obtained on 14th June, 1971, on the grounds of irregularity.

That the ground of irregularity alleged with respect to the judgment of 14th June, 1971, were neither set out in the motion dated 10th November, 1971, as regarded by order 50 rule 3, nor as any shown in the argument of Counsel, nor any specified by Tejan, J., as justifying his order to set aside.

(iii) That the remedy, if any, open to the Respondent was to apply for a stay of the writ of Fieri Facias (Order 30 Rule (16a) or to appeal to the Court of Appeal from the Order of During, J.

(iv) That judges of equal jurisdiction could not reverse each other whether on a matter involving exercise of discretion or otherwise.

Counsel for Appellants submitted:—

That since the appeal before it was from the judgments or order, of Tejan, J., the Court of Appeal could not properly or validly have exercised its powers under Rule 36 of the Court of Appeal Rules.

[p.151]

In the case for the Respondent the principal questions raised were:—

(i) Whether the Deputy Master and Registrar on 25th October, 1971, had jurisdiction to sign a writ of Fieri Facias for the sum of Le5,850.00 when the judgment of 14th June, 1971, referred to in the said Writ was for the sum of Le1,350.00

(ii) Whether the application before Ken During, J., was the same as that before Tejan, J.

It must be stated at this point that the application by Respondent dated 2nd November 1971, was for an order that the judgment in default of a appearance dated 14th June 1971, be set aside and execution thereunder stayed for the reasons stated in the affidavit. The second application was for an order that for the reasons shown in the affidavit of the Respondent sworn on the 10th November, 1971, the writ of Fieri Facias and the whole proceeding be set aside on the round of irregularity.

The Deputy Master and Registrar on behalf of the master and Registrar signed a writ of Fieri Facias on 25th October, 1971, but no mention was signed a writ of Fieri Faciase on 25th October, 1971, but no mention was made of it in the notice of motion dated 2nd November, 1971.

By order 23 rule 15 of the High Court rules "Any judgment by default whether under this order or under any other of these rules, may be set aside by the Court upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as such Court may think fit." By order 50 rule 3 "Where an application is made to set aside proceedings for irregularity, the several objections intended to be insisted upon shall be stated in the summons or Notice of Motions." The application before ken During J. of the 2nd November, 1971, did not question the regularity of the judgment; although the writ of Fieri Facias had already been issued, the respondent only requested that the statement of defences exhibited be filed and served on appellant's solicitor. Ken During J. in his order gave no reasons for refusing the application and one cannot speculate that he considered the intended statement of defence before deciding in this application respondent relied on Order 23 Rule 12 which provides that "any verdict or judgment where one party does not appear at the trial way be set aside." It is not clear as to whether this rule led Ken During J., to refuse the application. The appearance entered on 10th November, 1971 was unconditional. The application before Tejan J. was made on the same date.

In it the respondent requested "that for the reasons shown on his affidavit sworn on the 10th day of November, 1971, and filed, the writ of Fieri Facias and the whole proceeding be set aside on the ground of irregularity."

It seems from the second application that the complaint was not concerning the regularity of the judgment of Ken During, J. but instead that the whole proceedings including the writ of Fieri Facias was irregular.

No further action was taken after the judgment of 14th June 1971, for a writ of Fieri Facias and no action was taken to amend the amount claimed although it was palpably incorrect.

The appellant being dissatisfied with the judgment and order of Tejan J. appealed to the Sierra Leone Court of Appeal to have the judgment set aside. Section 56 of the Courts act No. 31 of 1965 provides:—

Subject to the provisions of this section, an appeal shall lie to the court of Appeal—

(a) from any final judgment, order, or other decision of the Supreme Court given or made in the exercise of its original, prerogative or supervisory jurisdiction in any suit or matter; and

(b) by leave of the judge making the order or of the Court of Appeal, from any interlocutory judgment, order or other decision, given or made in the exercise of any such jurisdiction as aforesaid:

In my view both a applications were based on different fact and although the rules provide that the irregularities complained of must be specified the Court cannot close it eyes to a patent irregularity in the proceedings by which a greater amount was claimed than that for which judgments was obtained.

It is settled law that in certain circumstances a Court can vacate its own judgment.

In Thynne vs. Thynne reported in (1955) 3 All E.L.R. 129, Moris, D.J. in the course of his judgment said at page 145

“I respectfully agree with what was indicated by Livershed, L.J. in Meier v. Meier (19) (1948) p. at p.95):

'I prefer not to attempt a definition of the extent of the court’s inherent jurisdiction to vary, modify or extend its own orders if, in the view, the purposes of justice require that it should do so.'

[p.153]

"Without in any way purporting to categorise and certainly without indicating any limits, a few illustrations in regard to the court’s powers may be mentioned. (a) If there is some clerical mistake in a judgment or order which is drawn up there can be correction under the powers given by R.S.C Ord. 28, ----, 11, and also under the powers which are inherent in the jurisdiction of the court. (b) if there is some error in a judgment or order which arises from any accidental slip or omission, there may be correction both under Ord. 28, R. 11, and under the court’s inherent powers. (c) if the meaning and intention of the court is not expressed in its judgment or order then there may be variation. In lawrie v. Less (10), Lord Ponzance said (7 App. Cas. At p. 34):"

‘I cannot doubt that under the original powers of the court; quite independent of any order that is made under the judicature Act, every court has the power to vary its own orders of the court to vary them in such a way as to carry out its own meaning and, where language has been used which is doubtful, to make it plain. I think that power is inherent in every court.'

"To the same effect were the judgments in the Swire (15). Lindley, L.J., said (30 Ch. D. at p. 246)."

"……if an order as passed and entered does not express the real order of the court, it would, as it appears to me, be shocking to say that the party aggrieved cannot come here to have the record set right……. It appears to me, therefore, that, it is once made out that the order, whether paused and entered or not, does not express the order actual made, the court has ample jurisdiction to set that right, whether it arises from a clerical slip or not.

"A court may in the exercise of its inherent jurisdiction in some circumstances of its own motion (after hearing the parties interested) set aside its own judgment."

Again in the case of Attah-Quarshie vs. Okpots reported in (1973) 1. G.L.R (59) the following principle was laid down at page 60.

"(3) Tradition has sanctioned three areas where the court generally invokes its inherent powers. First, where the exercise of the powers is necessary for the maintenance of the court's dignity and independence, such powers include the power to punish for contempt and enforce obedience to its mandates and judgments and orders. Secondly where the powers are necessary to ensures the control of its officers (including lawyers) the power to hold its officers to a proper accountability and any default or misfeasance in the execution of its process. Thirdly powers to prevent wrong or injury being inflicted by its own acts or orders or judgments including the power of vacating judgments entered by mistake and of relieving judgments procured by fraud, and a power to undo what it had no authority to do originally.

Hayfron-Benjamin J. in the course of his judgment in the same case said at page 65

"Having found that the provisions of Order 9, R. 17 are words of ------[sic] it is now necessary to consider whether or not the submission counsel that the court has an inherent power to vacate its own----[sic] [p.154] invalid orders is well founded. Inherent power is an authority not derived from any external source, possessed by a court. Whereas jurisdiction is conferred on courts by constitutions and statues, inherent powers are those which are necessary for the ordinary and efficient exercise of the jurisdiction already conferred. They are essentially protective powers necessary for the existence of the court and its due functioning. They spring not from legislation but from the, nature and constitution of the court itself. They are inherent in the court by virtue of its duty to do justice between the parties before it. The scope of inherent powers however cannot be extended beyond its legitimate and circumscribed sphere. The safest guide lines are precedents".

Unfortunately the judgment of the Appeal Court did not provide any guide lines on which this court may arrive at its decision but there appears to be two important issues which must be considered.

(1) Is it proper for a second application to be made before Tejan, J. the first application having been refused by Ken During, J.

(2) Is the amount for which judgment was obtained on 14th June, 1971 liquidated or unliquidated damages.

With regard to (1) having found that the applications before both judges I were not the same, I hold the view that is was proper for the Court to vacate the judgment in default in the light of the authorities cited above.

On the second point if the amount claimed was for liquidated damages then execution could be levied for the amount for which final judgment was obtained. If, on the other hand, the amount claimed was for liquidated damages then execution could be levied for the amount for which final judgment was obtained. If, on the other hand, the amount claimed should in fact be for unliqudated damages then it is subject to assessment by the court. From the particulars in the statement of claim it could easily be deduce that there was some consideration moving from the premise.

Paragraphs 4, 5 and 7 already recited refer.

According to appellants, the work was inefficiently carried out but not that no work was in fact done.

I am of the opinion that this matter should proceed to trail for the following reasons:

1. Judgment in default was for liquidated damages which was not supported by the statement of claim, and as I have held that the claim was for unliquidated damages, such damages must be assessed.

2. Despite the requirements of order 50 rule 3, of the High Court Rules, Order 50 rule 1 provides as follows:—

“Non-compliance with any of these rules, or with any rule of practice for the time being in forced, shall not render any proceedings void unless the court shall [p.155] so direct, but much proceedings or may be set aside either wholly or in part as irregular or amended, or otherwise dealt with in such manner and upon such terms as the court shall think fit.

Who appeal is hereby dismissed. Costs to the respondent in this court and the High Court.

N.E. BROWNE-MARKE

JUSTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT

LIVESEY LUKE, J.S.C.

On 20th March, 1971, the Sierra Leone Oxygen Factory Limited (hereinafter referred to as the Appellant Company) issued a writ of summons against P.B. Pyne-Bailey, carrying on business under the name of Sierra Engineering Agencies, (hereinafter referred to as the Respondent) claiming damages for Breach of Contract and for wrongful detention of goods. The writ was accompanied by a Statement of Claim which has already been set out by my learned brother Browne-Marke, J.S.C. The writ and the statement of claim accompanying it were served on the Respondent on 25th March, 1971. The 8 days limited for entering appearance expired without the Respondent entering an appearance, and up to 11th June, 1971 the respondent had still not entered an appearance. On that date the Appellant Company by their Solicitor applied to the Master and Registrar to enter judgment in default of appearance for the sum of Le5,850, damages to be assessed and costs to be taxed. The Master and Registrar refused to sign the judgment on the ground that the Appellant Company could not sign judgment for Le5,850. The Master and Registrar accordingly informed the Appellant Company's Solicitor that no mention of the sum of Le5,850 should be made in the judgment. Three days later however (i.e. on 14th June, 1971), the Appellant Company's Solicitor again submitted the judgment in default in an amended form of to the Master and Registrar for signature and on this occasion it was signed and entered by the Master and Registrar. Judgment was entered for Le1,350, damages to be assessed and cost to be taxed.

No further steps were taken by either party until 25th October, 1971 when on the application of the Appellant Company's Solicitor, the Deputy Master sealed a writ of Fieri Facias to levy execution against the Respondent in respect of the judgment dated 14th June, 1971. The writ of Fieri Facias was for the recovery of le5,850 and interest thereon at the rate of Le4 per centum per annum from the 14th day of June, 1971, "by a Judgment of our said Court bearing the date 14th day of June, 1971 adjudged to be paid by the said P.B. Pyne-Bailey to the Sierra Leone Oxygen Factory together with certain cost in the said judgment mentioned." It is pertinent to recall that the judgment dated 14th June, 1971 was for Le1,350, damages to be assessed and [p.157] costs to be taxed. And it is important to note that the damages had not been assessed nor the costs taxed. It is therefore curious, to say the least, that the writ of Fieri Facias was issued for Le5,850, an amount not sanctioned by the judgment which it was intended to enforce and especially as the Master and Registrar had declined to sign judgment for that same amount a few months earlier. Be that as it may, execution was levied against the Respondent, albeit without much success.

By Notice of Motion dated 2nd November, 1971 the Respondent, by his Solicitor, applied "for an order that the Judgment in Default of Appearance dated the 14th day of June, 1971 be set aside and execution thereunder be stayed". The motion was supported by an Affidavit sworn by the Respondent. In his affidavit, the Respondent explained the reason for his failure to enter appearance to the Writ of Summons and ended by saying that he had a good defence to the action. He also exhibited a copy of his draft Defence. Suffice it to say that neither in the Notice of Motion nor in the affidavit did the Respondent allege any irregularity in the Judgment in default. So, obviously the Respondent was putting himself at the mercy of the Court and asking that in the exercise of its discretion the court may set aside the judgment. The application came before Ken During, J. (as he then was) for hearing on 9th November, 1971. Counsel for the Respondent stated inter alia that the default of the respondent had been due to inadvertence on the part of the respondent and referred to the draft Defence. Counsel for the appellant Company on the other has opposed the application on the ground that the respondent did nothing for several months after the service of the Writ of Summons on him and in the meantime execution had been levied and that in the circumstances, the application was too late. It is quite clear therefore that the argument before Ken During J. preceded on the basis that the judgment was a regular judgment. At the end of the argument the learned Judge refused the application without assigning any reasons.

On the following day (i.e 10th November, 1971), a Solicitor entered appearance to the Writ of Summons on behalf of the Respondent, and on the same day he took out a Notice of Motion on behalf of the client applying for an order that the whole proceedings be set aside on the ground of [p.158] irregularity. The motion came before Tejan J. (as he then was) on 12th November, 1971. It was adjourned on the ground that it was short-served but the learned Judge however granted an interim stay of execution of the writ of Fieri Facias. The motion was heard by Tejan J. on 30th November, 1971. Counsel for the respondent stated inter alia that the application was for an order to set aside the judgment obtained on 14th June, 1971 on the ground of irregularity. Counsel for the Appellant Company stated that the same application had been made before Ken. During J. and that the learned Judge had dismissed it. In reply counsel for the respondent said inter alia that the application was not based on the same facts which Ken. During J. had deliberated upon, and that the irregularity was discovered after the application to ken. During J. the ruling of Tejan J. was short. He said:—

"I have considered the arguments of both counsel. There is no doubt a breach of the rules has been committed. In the interest of justice, I allow the application to set aside the judgments. Costs in the cause."

The Appellant Company appealed against that order to the Court of Appeal on one ground, namely:—

"That the learned Trial Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the Respondent's Notice of Motion dated 10th November, 1971 by reasons of the fact that on the 9th day of November, 1971 the High Court of Sierra Leone by an Order of the Hon. Mr. Justice Ken O. During had dismissed a similar application made by the Notice of Motion dated 2nd November, 1971 which said order remains in full force and effect."

The Appeal was heard by the Court of Appeal on the 24th and 25th days of May 1972. After listening to two days of argument by counsel for both parties the Court gave the following judgment on 25th May, 1972:—

"In the interest of Justice we feel that the action should go to trial. We therefore invoke our posers under Rule 36 of the Court of Appeal Rules and dismiss the Appeal. No order as to costs."

[p.159]

It is against that judgment that the Appellant Company have appealed to this Court.

The main issues in this appeal may be stated thus: —

(i) Whether Tejan J. had jurisdiction to entertain the application to set aside the judgment in default after a similar application had been dismissed by Ken. During J.

(ii) Assuming that Tejan J. had jurisdiction, was his decision to set aside the judgment in default right?

(iii) Whether the Court of Appeal were right in dismissing the Appeal.

Dealing with the first issue stated above, Dr. Marcus-Jones, learned Counsel for the Appellant Company, submitted that in view of the fact that Ken. During J. had dismissed respondent's application to set aside the judgment in default, neither Ken During J. nor any other judge of the High Court had jurisdiction to entertain any other application to set aside the judgment and that the only remedy of the respondent was by way of appeal. In order to determine the soundness of this submission it is necessary to consider the power of the High Court to set aside such judgments is contained in Order 10 Rule 10 of the High Court Rules which is in the following terms:—

"Where judgment is entered pursuant to any of the preceding rules of this order it shall be lawful for the Court to set aside or vary such judgment upon such terms as may be just."

It is well settled that in exercising the power conferred by this rule the court should draw a distinction between a regular judgment and an irregular judgment. In the case of a regular judgment the judge has a discretion, having regard to all the circumstances as to whether to set aside the judgment or not. But in the case of an irregular judgment, the judgment set aside Ex debito justitiae which in ordinary language means that he is entitled to have it set aside as of right. In the words of Upjohn L.J. [p.160] (as he then was) "This means no more than that, in accordance with settled practice, the Court can only exercise its discretion in one was namely, by granting the order sought." (See In re Pritchard deceased (1993) 2 W.L.R. 685 at p.696 C.A.).

In this connection, it is pertinent to quote also the words of Fry L.J. in Anlaby v. Practerious (1888) 20 Q.B.D. 764 C.A. He said at p.768

"In such a case the right of the defendant to have the judgment set aside is plain and clear. The court acts upon an obligation, the order to set aside the judgment is made ex debito justitiae, and there are good ground why that should be so, because the entry of judgment is a serious matter, leading to the issue of execution, and possible to an action of trespass."

and he said at P.679

"There is a strong distinction between setting aside a judgment for irregularity, in which case the Court has no discretion to refuse to set if aside, and setting it aside where the judgment, though regular, has been obtained through some slip or error on the part of the defendant, in which case the Court has a discretion to impose terms as a condition of granting the defendant relief."

As I stated earlier, neither in the notice of Motion which was heard by Ken During J. nor in the argument before him was any allegation of irregularity of the judgment made. The whole proceedings proceeded on the basis that the judgment was regular. On the other hand, and as I pointed out earlier, irregularity was alleged in the Notice of Motion which was heard by Tejan J. and Counsel for the respondent stated that the application was to set aside the judgment on the ground of irregularity. So whilst Ken During J. was asked to exercise his discretion to set aside the judgment, Tejan J. was asked to exercise justitiae to set aside the judgment. I therefore cannot accede to the view, urged upon as by Dr. Marcus-Jones, that the application dealt with by Tejan J. was the same as the one which had been disposed of by Ken. During J. it is therefore erroneous to contend that Tejan J. constituted himself into a Court of Appeal over the exercise of [p.161] discretion by Ken. During J. In my judgment Tejan J. had jurisdiction to entertain the application.

Learned Counsel for the Appellant Company relied on the case of In re Nazaire Company 12 Ch. D. 88 C.A. in support of his submission.

The head note of that case reads: —

"Under the system of procedure established by the judicature Acts no judge of the High Court has any jurisdiction to rehear an order, whether made by himself or by any other judge, the power to rehear being part of the appellate jurisdiction which is transferred by the Acts to the Court of Appeal."

In my opinion, the simple answer tot hat submission is that Tejan J. did not rehear or even purport to rehear the order of ken. During J. as I have pointed out earlier the application which was dealt with by Tejan J. was quite different from that dealt with by Ken During J. in this connection I would adopt the words of lord Atkin in Evans v. Barthlam (1937) A.C. 473 at p.480 H.I. He said:—

"The principle obviously is that unless and until the Court has pronounced a judgment upon the merits or by consent, it is to have the power to revoke the expression of its coercive power where that has only been obtained by a failure to follow any of the rules of procedure."

See also Craig v. Kenseen (1943) 1 All E.R. 108, C.A

But quite apart from what I have just stated, there is an added reason why Tejan J. had jurisdiction to entertain the application, and that is that the applicant before Ken. During J. had no locus standi. As stated earlier, the respondent entered appearance to the writ of summons for the first time on 10th November, 1971 ------ i.e. the day after the application had been dismissed by ken. During J. So the Solicitor who filed the Notice of Motion and the papers which constitutes the application before Ken. During J. was not o the record as Solicitor acting for the respondent or anyone at all. He was a stranger to those proceedings and the learned Judge should have taken no cognizance of any papers filled by him. Presumably that was why [p.162] the learned Judge dismissed the application although he did not state any reasons. In contrast, when the other application came before Tejan J. the position was completely different. The respondent entered appearance on 10th November 1971. This he was entitled to do, in my judgment. Order 9 R. 13 of the High Court Rules provides that a defendant my enter appearance at any time before judgment. Judgment in default had already been entered, but it is settled and accepted practice under the rule that appearance entered after judgment would sand in the event of the judgment being set aside. It stands to reason therefore that since the intention of the respondent was to set aside the judgment, his first proper step was the entry of appearance. Thereafter the respondent filed the notice of Motion which was eventually heard by Tejan J. In view of the foregoing, I am of the opinion that was the only application to set aside the judgment properly made. In the circumstances Tejan j. clearly had jurisdiction to entertain it.

The next question is whether Tejan J. was right in setting aside the judgment. The answer would depend on whether or not the judgment was regular or irregular. But Dr. Marcus-Jones submitted that this court should not consider this question because the application to set aside the judgment did not comply with order 50 R. 3 of the High Court Rules which reads as follows:—

"Where an application is made to set aside proceedings for irregularity, the several objections intended to be insisted upon shall be stated in the summons or notice of motion."

It was conceded by Counsel for the respondent that not objections were stated in the Notice of Motion. The Notice of Motion merely alleged irregularity without specifying it. In those circumstances, should the court of Appeal or this Court set aside Tejan J's order on that ground?

In my opinion, the answer is No. The substance of the complaint is the non-compliance with a rule (i.e. 0.50 R. 3). The Rule making body in its wisdom has made provisions for dealing with cases where there has been non-compliance with the Rules order 50 R.1 of the High Court Rules provides as follows:—

"Non-compliance with any of these rules, or with any rule of practices for the time being in force, shall not render any proceedings void unless the Court shall so direct, but such proceedings may be set aside either wholly or in part as irregular, or amended, or otherwise dealt with in such manner and upon such terms as the Court shall think fit."

This rule empowers the Court to disregard irregularities and to decide on the material question. The court is thereby enable to do justice without placing undue premium on technicalities.

Counsel who represented the Appellant Company before Tejan J. did not take a preliminary objection to the Motion based on the ground of non-compliance with 0. 50 R. 3. He allowed the Motion to go on without pointing out the irregularity to the judge. In my opinion, in those circumstances, he is deemed to have waived the objections. See Re Macrae (1884) 25 Ch. D. per Cotton L.J. at p. 19 C.A. Moreover, Tejan J. having entertained the motion in the irregular form, it is reasonable to presume that he invoked his powers under 0. 50 R. 1 and decided to disregard the irregularity and decided the material questions.

Having disposed of the technical point raised by Dr. Marcus-Jones, I shall now turn to the substantial point as to whether the judgment in default was regular or irregular. The Appellant Company's claim was for damages for Breach of Contract and for wrongful detention of goods. The statement of claim also gives particulars f loss and damages suffered by the Appellant Company including the sum of Le1,350. The rule under which the Appellant Company purported to enter judgment in default is 0.10 R. 7 of the High Court Rules which is in the following terms:—

"Where the writ is indorsed with a claim for damages only or for detention of goods with or without a claim for pecuniary damages and is further indorsed for a liquidated demand, whether specially or otherwise, and any defendant fails to appeal to the writ, the plaintiff may enter final judgment for the debt or liquidated demand, interest and costs against the defendant or defendants failing [p.164] to appear, and interlocutory judgment of the value of the goods and damages, or the damages only as the case may be, and proceeding rules of this order as may be applicable."

The Appellant company entered final judgment for the sum of Le1,350, and interlocutory judgment for damages. It is not surprising that they did not enter interlocutory judgment for the value of the goods, because according to paragraph 7 of the Statement of Claim the motor alleged to have been detained was returned to the Appellant Company on or about 19th August, 1970 i.e. before the issue of the Writ of Summons. In the circumstances the claim for "wrongful detention of goods' was unwarranted.

The question which calls for decision therefore, is whether the claim for Le1,350 was a liquidated demand entitling the Appellant company to enter final judgment for that amount. What then is a "liquidated demand"? In my opinion it means a claim for an amount which can be ascertained by calculation or fixed by any scale of charges or other positive data. A claim for a stated sum of money paid to the defendant for a consideration which has failed is a recognised form of liquidated demand. On the other hand when the amount depends upon the circumstances of the case and is fixed by opinion or by assessment for by what may be judged reasonable, the claim is generally unliquidated. I quote, with approval, the words of Barrowclough C.J. in the new Zealand case of Paterson v. Wellington Free Kindergarten association Inc. (1966) N.Z.L.R. 468, at p. 471:—

"In my opinion there can be no doubt that, in deciding whether a demand is liquidated, important factors are that it be capable of arithmetical calculation and that no investigation of the amount claimed should be necessary other than inquiry as to well established scales or charges etc.

According to the Appellant Company's Statement of Claims, the Respondent agreed to execute the work for Le1,350 and that amount was paid to him but that when the respondent returned the motor to the Appellant Company the worked had been "So inefficiently carried out" that the motor was unusable and that the Appellant Company delivered the motor to another --------[sic] which [p.165] repaired it at a cost of Le548. The sum of Le1,350 was clearly money paid to the respondent for a consideration. But had the consideration failed? In my opinion, it had not because it was admitted in the Statement of Claim that the respondent had done some work, Albert inefficiently. It was not a case where the workman gave himself out as possessing some skill which he did not possess or where he had done no work at all. In my opinion this was a case where the Court would have to assess the value of the work done by the respondent and arrive at the amount payable to the Appellant Company as refund and also as damages for breach of contract. It was not a case where the plaintiff was entitled to a refund of the whole amount. In those circumstances the claim for Le1,350, was, in my opinion, not a claim for a "liquidated demand," but for unliquidated damages. In my judgment therefore the Appellant Company were not entitled to sign final judgment for that amount, the judgment was irregular. This conclusion is supported by a number of English cases. In Muir v. Jenks (1913) 2 K.B. 412 C.A. it was held that where a plaintiff signs judgment in default of appearance for a sum in excess of that which is due to him the defendant is entitled to have that judgment set aside, subject to the right of the plaintiff, in a proper case, to apply to have the amount of the judgment reduce. In Hughes v. Justin (1894) I Q.B. 667 C.A. it was held that where a writ of summons is indorsed for a liquidated demand, which is reduced by payment after writ issued, judgment in default of appearance ought only to be entered for the amount actually due at the time when such judgments is entered, and the defendant has a right to have any judgment entered for a larger amount set aside.

It is settled law that where a plaintiff proceeds to sign judgment in default he must comply strictly with the rules empowering him to do so, and that failure to comply strictly with the rules would render the judgment irregular. This principle was stated by Vaughan Williams L.J. in Hany-Adams v. Hall (1911) 2 K.B. 942 at p. 944 C.A. in these words:—

"Where proceedings are taken by a plaintiff in the absence of the defendant it is most important that there should be at every stage a strict compliances with the rules"

[p.166]

And Buckley L.J. in the same case stated it as follows at p. 945

"Where a plaintiff proceeds by default every step in the proceedings must strictly comply with the rules, that is a matter strictissimi juris."

In my opinion the judgment in default signed by the Appellant company was not in compliance with 0.10 R. 7 and the judgment was therefore irregular. In my judgment, on the principle laid down in Anlsay v. Praetorius (supra) the respondent was entitled to have the default judgment set aside ex debito justitiae.

In my judgment, therefore, Tejan J. was justified in setting aside the judgment in default and the Court of appeal were also justified in dismissing the appeal. I would dismiss the appeal.

AND

ALJHAJI ABDUL WAHID BICKIEU — RESPONDENT

Cyrus Rogers-Wright, Esq. for the appellant

Dr. W.S. Marcus-Jones for the Respondent

JUDGMENT DELIVERED ON 3RD DAY OF JULY, 1973.

LIVESEY LUKE J.S.C.

This is an appeal against an order as to cost only. It will however be convenient at the outset of this judgment to give a brief history of this case.

Kultumi Abayeh died intestate on 23rd December, 1954 seised in fee simple is possession of a house and land situate and known as 27 Dan Street Freetown and survived by a legitimate and only child Zainabu Fatmata Sankoh. Kultimu Abayeh (hereafter referred to as “the deceased”) was a Mohammedan. At the time of the death of the deceased, Zainabu Fatmata Sankoh was an infant. The respondent in this appeal, Alhaji Abdul Wahid Biokieu is the brother of the deceased and on the death of the deceased he became the guardian of Zainabu Fatamata Sankoh and he took possession of the property. Sometime after Zainabu Fatmata Sankoh had attained her maturity, she asked the respondent to give her possession of the property but he refused. There after sometime in 1969, Zainabu Fatmata Sankoh

[p.69] issued a writ to summons against the respondent claiming inter alia a declaration that the deceased died seised of the said property in fee simple in possession and possession of the said property. In his Defence the respondent denied that the deceased died seised of the said property in fee simple and alleged that the deceased had sold the property to him sometime in 1951 and he counterclaimed for a declaration that he was the fee simple owner of the property having bought it from the decease for £800 (Le1600). The trial judge dismissed the claim of Zainabu Fatmata Sankoh on the ground that the property of the deceased vested in the Administrator-General by virtue of Section 2(1) of the Administration of Estates Act, (Cap. 45) and not in Zainabu Fatmata Sankoh and therefore she was not entitled to sue for recovery of possession. The trail judge also dismissed the counter claim on the ground that the respondent had failed to prove the alleged sale of the property to him.

Both Zainabu Fatmata Sankoh and the respondent appealed to the court of appeal against that decision. The Court of Appeal consisting of Dove Edwin Ag. P., Marcus-Jones J.A. and Tambiah J.A. delivered judgment on 23rd April, 1970 dismissing both appeals.

Dealing with the appeal of Zainabu Fatmata Sankoh, Dove-Edwin Ag. P. said inter alia

"I agree with the learned Judge's decision. This matter should have gone to the official administrator in the first place and plaintiff was wrong in suing as she did. The fact that she is a Mohammedan did not alter the position in my opinion. I would dismiss her appeal holding that the matter be taken up by the Administrator-General".

[p.70]

Inter alia:—

"In y view, the respondent's counter-claim must fail on it evidence which he did produced. He relies to a great extent on a document marked Exh. B5. This document is a receipt which the defendant claimant suggested he got from the deceased when to bought the property in Dan Street. It was supposed to be signed by the deceased who made her thumb mark on it. The judge believe that at the time the receipt was made deceased could sign her name. An important witness whose name appears on Exh. B5 and was said to be alive and somewhere in Sierra Leone was not called……

……

He (i.e. the respondent) was in the position after the plaintiff's mother died to take over all the properties available, that is deeds, etc. and no one was in a position to challenge him. There is evidence that he took more than decent advantage of his power over his own niece by his relationship with her."

In his judgment Tambiah J.A. said inter alia:—

"The learned Judge in a careful judgment has chosen not to accept the defendant's version that there was a sale of this property to him by Kultumi Abayoh. He has held that the property forms part of the estate for the deceased…….. In other words the learned judge has held that the receipt is a forgery although he has used euphemistic language."

It would appear that in the same month that the Court of Appeal judgment just referred to was delivered (i.e. April, 1970) Zainabu Fatmata Sankoh gave writer information to the Administrator General, in accordance with Section 10(1) of Cap. 45, that her mother Kultumi Abayeh (the deceased) had died intestate leaving estate within the jurisdiction of the court.

Sometime thereafter (the records do not disclose when) the respondent applied to the Master and Registrar of the High Court for the grant of Letters of Administration of the estate of Kultumi Abayeh. The Administrator-General thereon entered a caveat. As a result of the entry of the caveat, the respondent issued a writ of summons against the Administrator-General on the 5th of November, 1970 [p.71 estate of Kultumi Abayeh. In his statement of claim the respondent averred that he was the lawful brother of the deceased according to Mohammedan law and that Zainabu Fatmata Sankoh was the illegitimate daughter of the deceased and therefore that she had no interest in the estate. In his Defence the Administrator-General disputed these averments and denied that the respondent had any right or prior right of administrate to him. The Administrator General also counterclaimed for a grant to him of letter of Administration to administer the estate of the deceased. The administration action was tried by Ken-During J. the judgments of the Court of Appeal delivered on 23rd April, 1970 were tendered in evidence at the trial. The learned judge delivered judgment on 30th November, 1971. In his judgment the learned judge found that the respondent "was the lawful elder brother of the deceased." The learned judge held that "the Court had a discretion in granting letters of Administration of the estate of the deceased, in law, equity, inherently and on ground of public policy.' In exercise of that discretion he refused a grant of letters of Administration to the respondent and ordered that letter of Administration of the estate be granted to the Administrator-General on application to the high court. In the result the learned judge dismissed the respondent's action with costs and ordered that the respondent pay the costs of the counter-claim.

On the 24th of February, 1972 the respondent lodged an appeal against the decision of Ken During F. The Appeal was heard by the Court of Appeal on the 13th and the 14th days of June, 1972.

[p.72]

At the close of argument by counsel, the court, there and then, make an order allowing the appeal and adding 'the court will give its reasons later when counsel will be heard on costs."

The court of Appeal gave its reasons for its decision on 23rd June, 1972 and also made an order in these terms.

"Costs to be paid by the Administrator-General personally on Solicitor and Client basis here and in the court below."

It is against that order that the Administrator General has appealed to this court. On 10th October, 1972 the Court of Appeal granted the appellant conditional leave to appeal and on 3rd November, 1972 that Court granted him final leave to appeal.

The main issue in this appeal to whether the Court of Appeal was right in ordering the Appellant to pay cost personally instead of out of the estate. In their judgment the court of Appeal said inter alia:—

"In the process of administration of the estate of a deceased intestate of the Mohammedan Faith, one Kultumi Deen (nee Abayeh), arose a series of errors for which we hold the respondent officially liable."

The person there referred to as respondent is the present appellant. I have searched the record for any evidence to support this statements by the court of Appeal. I regret to say, with respect, that my search has been in vain and that there is no evidence to support of warrant such a bold assertion by the Court of Appeal. Indeed, in my opinion, the evidence is to the contrary. It is pertinent to recall that the appellant was informed by Zainabu Fatmata Sankoh that Kultumi Abayeh had died intestate leaving estate within the jurisdiction [p.73] of the court. The machinery for obtaining an order for a grant of Letters of Administration of the estate of the deceased was thus set in motion. Section 10 of Cap. 45 sets out the stops to be taken by the Administrator-General after receiving the prescribed information. It is not necessary for the purposes of this judgment, to reproduce the section, but suffice it to say that it provides that

(i) The Administrator-General shall serve notice on the widow or widower, next-of-kin and others and publish the notice in the Gazette and any other public paper calling upon the widow or widower and next-of-kin etc. Within one month of such services or publication to show cause why an order should not be made for him to administer the estate, and

(ii) If no cause is shown to the satisfaction of the High court within one month the Administrator General shall position the High Court for an order grating him letters of Administration of the estate.

It was after the appellant had received the said written information and the machinery for obtaining a grant by him had been put in motion, that the respondent applied for a grant to him of Letters of Administration of the estate of the deceased. According to section 9(2) of Cap. 96, the respondent was only entitled to a grant of Letters of Administration in preference to the Appellant if he was "(a) the oldest son of the Intestate if of full age according to Mohammedan Law, or

(b) The eldest brother of the intestate, if or full age according to Mohammedan Law."

[p.74]

The respondent claimed to be the lawful brother of the deceased according to the modern Law. It is patently clear that such a claim by the respondent did not entitle him to grant of letter of Administration of the estate of the deceased. According to section 9(2) of Cap. 95, to be entitled to a grant of letters of Administration, the respondent had to prove that he was the "oldest brother" of the deceased and not only merely that he was the "lawful brother of the deceased." Therefore, in my opinion, on the basis of the claim of the respondent alone, if on no other ground, the Appellant was entitled and justified to dispute and oppose the grant of Letters of Administration of the estate of the deceased to the respondent. And in addition the court of Appeal had said in a considered judgment delivered on 23rd April, 1970 inter alia:—

"This matter should have gone to the Official Administrator in the first place and plaintiff was wrong in suing as she did. The fact that she is Mohammedan did not alter the position in my opinion, I would dismiss her appeal holding that the matter to be taken up by the Administrator-General."

Without going into the question of whether or not the judgment of the Court of Appeal constituted sufficient written information under section 10(1) of Cap. 45, the Court of Appeal by the above quoted statement and other statements in the judgments, had clearly indicated that the appellant was entitled to Letters of Administration of the estate of the deceased in preference to the respondent.

In the circumstances I am of the opinion that the appellant was justified in entering a caveat to a grant of Letters of Administration to the respondent, if for no other reason but for the respondent prove to the satisfaction of the Court [p.75] of deceased according to Mohammedan Law but was also the oldest brother of the deceased according to Mohammedan Law and thereby entitled to a grant of Letters of Administration for the estate of the deceased in preference to the appellant.

It was contended by Counsel for the respondent that the order appealed against is justifiable on the ground that the appellant was guilty of culpable neglect of duty by his failure to investigate adequately or at all the respondent's claim or entitlement to a grant. But what was the respondent's status which he claimed entitled him to a grant? It was, as stated in paragraph 1 of the Statement of Claim, that he was the "Lawful brother according to Mohammedan Law and one of the persons entitled to share in the Estate of Kultumi Deen (nee Abayeh) etc." Is this claim that deserves investigation? In my opinion, it is not, for the simple reason that the proof of such a claim would not entitle the respondent to a great of Letters of Administration under Section 9(2) of Cap. 96. And even assuming that the appellant investigated the claim and found it to be true, the appellant would still be justified in resisting the claim to a grant of Letters of Administration because, as I have said before, the proof of such a claim would not entitle the respondent to a grant of Letters of Administration. In my judgment the finding of the learned trial Judge that the respondent was "the elder brother" and not the oldest brother of the deceased indicated the appellant's action in challenging the claim of grant of Letters of Administration by the respondent. Indeed there was no evidence before the learned [p.76] judge that the respondent was the oldest brother of the deceased and Dr. Marcus-Jones, learned Counsel for the respondent, conceded that before us.

In view of the forgoing I am of the opinion that the Appellant was not liable officially or otherwise for errors, if indeed there were any, which might have been committed in the administration of the estate of the deceased.

But even if the Appellant had been guilty of errors in connection with the administration of the estate of the deceased, could he be held personally liable? Counsel for the respondent answered this question in the affirmative replying a section 6 of Cap. 45, the relevant part of which (as amended) provides:—

"6. Neither the Administrator and Registrar-General nor any agent shall be personally liable to any person in respect of assets in the possession at the time of his death of any person, whose estate shall be administered by the Administrator and Registrar-General and generally neither the Administrator and Registrar-General nor any agent shall be liable for any act done bona fide in the supposed and intended performance of their duties, unless it shall be show that such act was done not only illegally but willfully or with gross negligence."

Dr. Marcus-Jones submitted that the appellant had acted mala fides, willfully and with gross negligence. I, for my part do not think that his submission has any merit because there is no evidence that the appellant acted "mala fides or willfully or with gross negligence." The submission also ignores the very important words in the section "not only illegally." In my judgment, if the Administrator-General has done any act willfully or with grows negligence but bona fides, in the supposed and intended performance of his duties, he is not personally liable unless he had also acted illegally. Similarly, if he has acted illegally he is not personally liable unless he had also acted willfully or with gross negligence. There [p.77] is no evidence and indeed no suggestion by ……. for the respondent that the appellant acted illegally. In my opinion, section 6 of Cap. 45 and similar statutory provisions are for the protection of public officers in the public interest. The appellant was indisputably public officer and public policy dictates that such officers acting in bon fide and honest performance of their actions. To ignore this principle would be putting public officers in an intolerable and unenviable position.

It was suggested on behalf of the respondent that the appellant should be made personally liable for the costs because there was some irregularity in his appointment as "Official Administrator." But with respect, the appellant did not appoint himself and I do not think that there is any principle of law or justice which would make him personally liable in such circumstances. If indeed there was any irregularity in his appointment, and we are not called upon decided that issue, it has been rectified by the Administration of Estate (Amendment) act, 1972 (act No. 19 of 1972 which was made retrospective to 14th May, 1964. The Amendment Act substituted the words "Administrator and Registrar-General" for the words "Official Administrator" wherever the latter words appear in the Administrator of Estates Act (Cap.45) and make the Administrator and Registrar-General a Corporation sole.

In my opinion the manifestly erroneous view of the Court of Appeal that the Appellant was "officially liable" for certain errors in the [p.78] administration of the estate of the deceased, which presumably was the basis for the other costs, is a sufficient grown for disposing of the appeal in favour of the appellant. But Dr. Marcus-Joes further contended that the Court of Appeal had exercised a discretion in ordering the appellant to pay the costs personally and that in the circumstances this court should not interfere. I agree that as a general rule costs are in the discretion of the Court. But his rule is subject to certain well-established exceptions and to the over-riding principle that the discretion must be exercised judicially. Mr. Rogers-Write submitted that by virtue of section 15 of Cap. 45, the appellant is a trustee and that he was thereby entitled to the payment of his costs out of the estate by virtue of order 46 rule 1 of the High Court Rules. Section 15 of Cap 45 as amended provides as follows:—

"The Administrator and Registrar-General and every administrator appointed under this act shall be deemed a trustee will in the meaning of any Imperial Statute or local Act, now or hereafter to be in force, relating to trusts and trustees and the relevant part of 0.46 R.I reads:—

"Subject to the provisions of any Act and there rules the costs of and incident to all proceedings in the High Court including the administration of estates and trusts shall be in the discretion of the Court:

"Provided that noting herein contained such deprive an executor, administrator, trust mortgage who has not unreasonably instituted or carried on or resisted any proceedings, of any rights to costs out of a particular estate or fund to which he would be entitled according to the rules hitherto acted upon in the law court of Justice in England."

I do not think that it is disputed that the Rules of the High Court have statutory effect. Dr. Marcus-Jones' Contention was that the appellant acted unreasonably in resisting the claim by the respondent for a grant of Letters of Administration. With [p.79] unreasonably. In my opinion all the evidence point unequivocally to the conclusion that the appellant acted reasonably in resisting the respondent's claim. In my judgment therefore the Court of Appeal noted erroneously in depriving the appellant of the costs out of the estate.

I share the view that when it is shown that the Court of Appeal in dealing with costs has fallen into error on a point of law which governs or affects costs, that is sufficient ground for allowing an appeal as to costs (see Donald Campbell & Co. Ltd. V. Pollak (1927) A.C. 732). For the foregoing reasons I would allow the appeal and set aside the order of the Court of Appeal relating to costs. I would order that the appellant's costs in the Court and the courts below be paid out of the estate.

With regard to the respondent's costs, I think that the learned trial judge had ample justification on the basis of the evidence before him for depriving him of his cost out of the estate. A piece of the respondent's evidence referred to by the learned Judge in the judgment is not only curious but telling.

The respondent said:—

"I am of the opinion that it is desirable for Letters of Administration to be granted to me instead of the Administrator-General in the light of previous court proceedings I have referred to. It is because although I bought property from the deceased she did not transfer the same to me that I am of the opinion that is desirable for Letters of Administration to be granted to me."

I, for my part, taking all the circumstances into consideration, would deprive the respondent of his costs out of the estate and order that he become his own costs in this court and the courts below:—

The Respondent herein, Grant Salu Bundu Kamara, on 4th March, 1961, mortgaged his freehold property No 21D Elk Street, Freetown to the Development of Industries Board (D.I.B for short) to secure the repayment of a loan of Le2,000 with interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum payable on 4th March, 1965; the mortgage was effected by a conveyance of the said property to the Mortgage subject to a proviso for redemption. On 22nd July 1964, i.e. before the date fixed for redemption, one Allie Bundu (the Appellant herein) a judgment creditor of Grant Sallu Bundu Kamara (the Mortgagor) in execution of the judgment debt, purported to purchase the Respondent's equity of redemption in the mortgaged property at an auction sale by the Sheriff of Sierra Leone made under Section 5 of the Execution Against Real Property Act, Cap. 22.

On 18th November 1969, Allie Bundu as execution creditor took out an Originating Summons in which the Mortgage (i.e. the D.I.B) and the Sheriff were the Defendants/Respondents, praying for an Order that the D.I.B. (the Mortgage) do sign a Deed of Release of the mortgaged premise to his favour upon payment by the Sheriff to the D.I.B of the balance of the mortgage debt and interest due and owing in respect thereof, this summons was supported by an affidavit sworn to by the applicant. The Mortgagor, i.e. the Respondent herein, was not made a party to those proceedings.

The matter came up before Dobbs, J. on 21st January, 1966, and no objection having been made by the Solicitor-General who at the time represented both the D.I.B and the Sheriff, an Order, as was prayed, was made accordingly. On 2nd May, 1966, the D.I.B in compliance with the said Order duly executed a Deed of Release of the mortgaged premise in favour of the Appellant. In that same year the Respondent who had been in possession of the premises was evicted therefrom by the Appellant who thereupon entered into possession.

Subsequently, in 1970, the Respondent instituted proceedings in the High Court against the D.I.B, and on 5th October 1977 Browne-Marke J. (as he then was) made Order as follows:—

1. Release of Mortgage dated 2nd May 1966 by the Defendant (i.e. D.I.B.) to one Allie Bundu of the Plaintiff's mortgaged property situate at Freetown on 21D Elk Street Freetown is bad in law and null and void.

2. The grant conveyance transfer of the legal fee simple of he plaintiff's said mortgaged property by the defendant to one Allie Bundu by way of a purported Release of Mortgage dated 2nd May, 1966 is set aside.

3. The Defendant to re-convey to the plaintiff the plaintiff's said mortgaged property premises and land situate at and known as 21D Elk Street, Freetown.

[p.105]

Actually enough the appellant was not made a party to those proceedings even though the respondent was fully cognizant of the fact that the Appellant was then in possession of the premises.

It is therefore not surprising that the Respondent found it necessary, in 1973, to institute further proceedings against both the D.I.B. and the appellant claiming a reconveyance to him of the mortgaged property and such further or other relief. The case was heard by Warne J. (as he then was) and he, on 25th January 1974, gave judgment dismissing the respondent's claim with costs. On appeal by the Respondent to the Court of Appeal (Coraii: Rejan J.S.C. Awunor-Renner J.A. and S.B Davies J.A.) the judgment of Warne J. was set aside and an Order made for the Respondent (the appellant therein) to have half the costs both in that Court and in the High Court. Against this decision the Appellant therein has appealed to this Court.

In his statement of claim filed in the High Court, the Respondent averred not only the judgement of the Browne-Marke J. (above mentioned) but also the execution by him of the Mortgage Deed of 4th March 1961 in favour of the D.I.B (who was the first defendant in that action) and the subsequent release on the 2nd May, 1966 of the said mortgage to the Appellant without his (Respondent's) consent. He further alleged that the D.I.B did not at any time between the said 4th day of March 1961 and the said 2nd day of March 1966 exercise any of its rights under the said mortgage including the right to foreclose; on the contrary, the D.I.B continued to receive from him installment repayments of the loan up to and including November, 1965. [Among the receipts tendered in support of such repayments was one dated 27th January, 1965]

The D.I.B. in their Defence filed, merely admitted the execution of the said mortgage and the subsequent release thereof to the Appellant.

The Appellant (the 2nd Defendant in the action) in his amended Defence denied that the Respondent was entitled either in law or in equity to a reconveyance of the premises ad stated that the Respondent's “equity of redemption” was sold by public auction under due process of law to satisfy a judgment debt against the Respondent and that by such sale the Respondent lost his right to redeem the property and that the Appellant as purchaser for value thereof became subrogated to, or in [p.106] substitution of, the rights of the Appellant to redeem the mortgaged property. He also pleaded the Order of Dobbs J. dated 21st January, 1966, ordering the D.I.B to sign a Deed of Release of the mortgage in his favour on payment by the Sheriff to the D.I.B. of the mortgaged debt and interest then due and owing. He further stated that in compliance with the said Order the D.I.B duly executed the Deed of Release and that he was in possession of the property under a bona fide title and that he was legally entitled to remain in possession and that the Appellant's claim was unfounded and that the action was frivolous vexatious and an abuse of the process of the Court.

The Learned trial Judge in dismissing the action said inter alia:—

“Whether the Court presided over by the learned Judge Browne-Harke J.S.C had jurisdiction to review the Order of 21st January 1966 is doubtful; suffice it to any that one shall consider whether the 2nd Defendant has a good title to the property and if the plaintiff as a result of the purchase lost his “equity of redemption” of the said property.

The 2nd Defendant went into possession by the Deed of Release executed in 1966 in pursuance to the Order referred to herein made on the 21st January 1966. Counsel for 2nd Defendant contends that 2nd Defendant became an assignee of the plaintiff/mortgagor as a result of the operation of law – that is to say when he purchased the property in execution of the judgment debt herein before mentioned and therefore had a right to redeem the mortgaged property. I agree with counsel for 2nd Defendant. 2nd Defendant became entitled to the property 2D Elk Street Freetown under section 5 of Cap. 22 of the Laws of Sierra Leone.

“The plaintiff cannot be heard to say he had no notice of the sale, because I find as a fact that he had notice [p.107] of the sale. There was nothing at law preventing 2nd Defendant from purchasing the estate. His relation with the plaintiff was not the same as that of the trustee and cestui que trust where the trustee is prohibited from buying the trust property from the cestui qui trust.

By this sale the plaintiff lost the “equity of redemption”. The plaintiff could have exercised his right to redeem before the sale. In my view, by his conduct he waived his right to redeem and indeed abandoned his rights of redemption.

“No. 21D Elk Street was in fact seized in satisfaction of the judgment debt and was sold by Public auction. The 2nd Defendant having acquired the said property purchased at the public auction became entitled to the "equity of redemption" heretofore vested in the plaintiff.

- - - - -

The 2nd Defendant obtained judgment for a debt owed to him by the plaintiff, there was due execution of this judgment. The judgment having been fulfilled gave the 2nd Defendant a right to the "equity of redemption" of the mortgage to the 1st Defendants. The 2nd Defendant has acquired a good title to the property situate at 21D Elk Street, Freetown both in law and in equity. The plaintiff, having lost his right to redeem in law there is no state to re-convey to him both by the 1st Defendants and the 2nd Defendant."

As has been stated this judgment was set aside on appeal to the Court of Appeal. The main grounds of the appeal were:—

"1. The Learned trial judge erred in law when he stated that by the purchase of the [p.108] mortgaged property by the 2nd Defendant, at the time when the legal estate thereof was vested in 1st Defendant, the 2nd Defendant thereby became an assignee of the plaintiff mortgagor.

- - - - -

3. The Learned trial Judge erred in law when he concluded that by the sale of the mortgaged property by the Sheriff the plaintiff lost the "equity of redemption."

- - - - -

5. With a valid subsisting and enforceable judgment and Order of the High Court against the 1st Defendant/Respondent in favour of the plaintiff/appellant in respect of the same transaction, the Learned trial Judge erred in law in delivering an opposite or contradictory judgment as between the plaintiff/appellant and the 1st Respondent."

The Court held (1) "that since the 2nd Respondent (i.e. Allie Bundu) had paid the mortgage debt to the 1st Respondent (i.e. the D.I.B) the Appellant's (i.e. Grant Sallu Bundu Kamara) obligating to redeem his property is simply to pay what he owed to the 2nd Respondent" and (2) "that the mortgage is still subsisting notwithstanding that it was paid off without the knowledge of the Appellant (i.e. the Mortgagor Grant Sallu Bundu Kamara)."

The Cases relied upon by the Court for so holding included:—

(i) Parker & Another vs. Jackson & Another (1936) 2A.B.R.281

(ii) Monks vs. Whiteley (1911) 2 Ch.D. 461

(iii) Butler vs. Rice (1910) 2 Ch.D. 277

(iv) Chetwynd vs. Allen (1899) 1 Ch. 353

(v) Ghana Commercial Bank vs. D.T. Chandiran & Anor.(1960) 3 WLR 328: (1960) G.L.R. 178

The Court of Appeal in the course of its judgment stated:—

“Whether the judgment of Browne-Marke J. as he then was, was in accordance with legal procedure in the absence of an appeal, this court is not prepared to inquire into what the amazing situation in this case is that after the judgment of Browne-Marke J. and instead of adopting the various steps to execute or enforce the judgment, the Appellant instituted proceedings praying for an Order for a reconveyance of his Mortgaged property to him. In my view, this is the substance of the case before Warne J. as he then was.

- - - I think that the pith and narrow of the case is whether a court can be called upon to execute a judgment, this being the case before Warne J. (as he then was)

- - - - -

Warne J. by setting aside the judgment of Browne-Marke J. and giving judgment for the 2nd Respondents, constituted himself without the slightest justification and contrary to all legal judicial and statutory authorities an appeal to Judge, and this being the case his judgment is set aside for lack of jurisdiction."

“Surely the Orders made by Browne-Marke J. do not truly represent the decision which he intended to make. It is the view of this court that a Judgment should be made clear and easy of enforcement, and in this case it is not only sufficient to declare the release of the mortgage null and void and to set aside the transfer of the mortgaged property to the 2nd Respondent. We think that a further Order to the effect that the deed of conveyance to the 2nd Respondent be expunged from the Registrar of Conveyances, and that failure of the 2nd Respondent to convey the property to the Appellant within [p.110] a specified time, the Master and Registrar was to convey would have made the Judgment capable of easy enforcement.”

The grounds of appeal now before us are as follows:—

“(1) That the Court of Appeal was wrong in law when it held that a release of a mortgage can only be effected by the mortgagor himself to the mortgage.

(2) That the Court of Appeal was wrong in law when it held that because the Mortgagor was not a party to the action for the release of the mortgage to the 3rd party, the latter could not take subject to the right which the Mortgagor had against the Mortgagee.

(3) That the Court of Appeal was wrong in law to Order that a motion could be taken before the High Court to perfect Browne-Marke's J. judgment as the effect of such an Order if carried out would be to effect the Defendant/Appellant (Allie Bundu) who was not a party to the proceedings before Browne-Marke J.

(4) That consideration was never given to the following submissions of Counsel:—

(i) That by sale by the Sheriff by public auction of the Respondent's equitable interest in the property No. 21D Elk Street, Freetown for the payment of the Respondent's debt at which the said sale the appellant bought subject to the mortgage, the Respondent thereby lost the right to redeem the mortgage.

(ii) That by the sale as foresaid the Appellant as purchaser for value thereof became subrogated to, or in substitution of, the rights of the Respondent to redeem the said mortgage, and by operation of law became the Assignee of the Equity of Redemption [p.111] under the Mortgage Deed and a person entitled to redeem the mortgage.

(iii) That on the sale of the said premises at No. 21D Elk Street, by the Sheriff to the Appellant a Conveyance of the same was issued to him, that Section 8 of Cap. 22 provides that even if the judgment under which execution was levied is reversed (which is not the case here) such reversal shall not effect the purchaser.

(iv) That at the time the release of mortgage was executed by the D.I.B in compliance with the Order of the Court the Respondent had not fully repaid the mortgage debt and had lost the right to redeem by lapse of time and also by breach of the conditions of his contract loan."

Counsel for the appellant contended that there were two separate transactions in issue, viz; the first involving a loan granted by the D.I.B. to the Respondent in respect of which he executed a legal mortgage of his property situate at 21D Elk Street, Freetown, and the second, the subsequent purchase of the said property by the appellant in execution of a judgement debt.

With regard to the second transaction the Learned trial Judge made the following findings:—

(i) That the appellant was a Judgement Creditor of the Respondent:

(ii) That 21D Elk Street was seized in satisfaction of the judgment debt and sold by Public Auction;

(iii) That the Respondent had notice of this sale;

(iv) That the Appellant became entitled to the property 21D Elk Street, Freetown under Section 5 of Cap. 22 of the Laws of Sierra Leone;

(v) That Appellant had acquired a good title to the property situate at 21D Elk Street, Freetown both in law and in equity.

[p.112]

With regard to (i) and (iii) there can be no quarrel with the Learned trial Judge who also held that there was nothing to prevent the Appellant from purchasing the property i.e. the Respondent's equity of redemption.

Where there is no fiduciary relationship as in the present instance – between the parties, there is nothing to preclude the Judgement Creditor from purchasing the Judgement Debtor's property under a writ of fieri facias, and provided that there is no conflict of interest, no collusion, no fraud, the Courts will not interfere. This is a long established principle.

In Stratford vs. Twyman (1822) 37 B.R. Ch. 908 where the contention was that upon a sale under an execution, the creditor suing it out ought not to become the purchaser, Sir Thomas Plumor M. R. said (at page 909):—

“The point, therefore to be contended for must be that if the creditor would at law be permitted to purchase, yet that in a Court of Equity it cannot be permitted. But on what principle is that to rest? The case of trustees is quite different; with respect to them the principle is, that the same person shall not be buyer and seller. But here the Sheriff is the seller. In the case of a trustee there is a conflict of duty and interest, and the Court therefore says that he shall not be trusted to purchase unless he has divested himself of his character of trustee. The case of mortgagor and mortgagee alluded to stand again on a different principle, that the court will not allow one man to take advantage of the necessities of another. But here the party is proceeding adversely against his debtor, not by any private dealing, but by the public process of the law; and he is not the person who is to sell; that is the duty of the Sheriff; and what injury can arise from the creditor attending at the sale and bidding? I cannot find any principle for saying that he cannot purchase.”

[p.113]

Again, in Ex parte Villars In re Rogers (1874) 9 Ch. Ap.432, Hellish, L.J. held that there was nothing to restrain the Sheriff from selling to the creditor, who cannot be in a worse position than any other purchaser.

With regard to the seizure and sale of the mortgaged property, Section 2 of the Execution Against Real Property Act, Cap.22 states as follows:—

“The houses, lands and other hereditaments and real estate situate or being within any part of the Colony, belonging to any person whatsoever indebted, shall be liable to, and chargeable with, all just debts-, dues and demands, of what nature or kind soever, owing by, or due from any such person to Her Majesty, or any of her subjects, and shall be and are hereby made chattels for the satisfaction thereof, in like manner as personal estates within the Colony are seized,[CIS] extended, sold or disposed of for the satisfaction of debts”.

Under this provision the words “houses lands and other hereditaments and real estate” have been construed to include “the equity of redemption” which by the same Section “shall be and are hereby made chattels for the 'satisfaction” of a Judgment Debtor's debts, “in like manner as personal estates are seized, extended, sold or disposed of for the satisfaction of debts

It should be pointed out that the effect of this section is not to make the mortgaged premises i.e., 21D Elk Street a "chattel" but to make the Respondents (i.e. the Mortgager’s) equity of redemption of that property a "chattel" for the purposes of execution, (See Porter vs. Khoury A.L.R., S.L. Series 193/-49 p.126).

Section 5 of the Act provides for the sale by Sheriff under a writ of fieri facias of the premises and for the execution and registration of the deed of conveyance to the purchaser after which "the purchaser shall be, and is hereby declared to be, vested in as good and perfect on estate as the owner of such houses, lands, hereditaments or other real estate was seized of, or entitled unto at or before the sale thereof as aforesaid, and [p.114] as fully to all intents and purposes as if the person, against whom such writ of execution shall be granted, had sold such lands and premises to such purchaser and signed, sealed and delivered a good deed for the same and received the consideration money himself". Now what estate was the Respondent (i.e. the Mortgager) seized of or entitled to at the tine the Sheriff sold? On the execution of the Mortgage the legal estate had been conveyed to the mortgage (i.e., the D.I.B) and the only right, interest or estate which the Mortgager had left was the equity of redemption which undoubtedly must be an equitable estate. Thus at the time the Sheriff purported to sell the premises the legal estate was vested in the D.I.B and the equitable estate i.e. the equity of redemption (which was the only interest that could have been sold under the act) was vested in the Respondent herein. The writ of ferri facias could not have attached the legal estate of the mortgage premises which was then vested in the D.I.B. Hence whatever price was paid by the appellant was only for the equity of redemption which in itself is a valuable asset which can be disposed of by the Mortgagor either by sale, by gift inter vivos, or by will), and not for the whole for simple estate. By utilizing the proceeds of sale to pay not only himself on his execution debt but also to obtain for himself a release or conveyance of the legal estate which at the time was vested in the D.I.B) (and as such could never have been levied upon in an execution against the Mortgagor) the Appellant purported to purchase both the equitable as well as the legal estate in the mortgaged premises.

In the affidavit in support of the Originating Summons praying for an Order that the D.I.B do sign a Deed of Release of the mortgaged premises upon payment by the Sheriff of the balance of the mortgage debt and interest the appellant deposed inter alia:—

"1. I am the Purchaser of the premises situate at and known as 21D Elk Street, Freetown.

2. The said premises were on the 22nd day of July, [p.115] 1964 sold, by Public auction by the Sheriff of Sierra Leone (2nd Defendant here in) under due process of law executed against the property of Grant Salu Bundu.

- - - -

- - - -

- - - -

- - - -

7. At the sale of the said Mortgaged premises (subject to the mortgaged aforesaid) the 2nd Defendant herein obtained the price of Le3,560.00 sufficient to pay off the balance of the mortgage debt and interest and also the Judgment debt.

8. The 2nd defendant herein has by Deed conveyed to me this deponent the said premises No. 21D Elk Street, Freetown subject to the mortgage aforesaid.

9. There is now sufficient amount in the hands of the 2nd defendant herein to pay off in full the balance of the mortgage debt and interest now due and owing to the 1st defendant herein.

10. This affidavit is made in support of an application to the Court for an Order that the 1st defendant herein do sign a Deed of release of the said mortgage herein in my favour upon payment of the balance of the mortgage debt and interest now due and owing to him.

11. The application to the Court became necessary because the 1st defendant herein has refused to accept payment of the balance of mortgage debt and also to sign a Deed of Release in my favour."

As has been stated previously the Respondent (i.e., the Mortgagor) was not made a party to the proceedings and it is recorded that the Solicitor-General who represented both the D.I.B and the Sheriff at the hearing, had no objection to the application.

[p.116]

It is the duty of the Sheriff after seizure and sale of the debtor's goods to satisfy the Judgment debt and his own expenses after which to pay over the residue to the Judgment debtor. This procedure was not followed here and instead we find the Sheriff holding on to the residue for well over a year when application was made to the Court by the Judgment creditor (i.e. the Appellant herein) for payment out thereof by the Sheriff to the D.I.B (the mortgagor) who was then to sign a Deed of "Release of a Mortgage held by then and to which the Appellant was a complete stranger. Is it any wonder than, that the D.I.B at first "refused to accept payment of the balance of mortgage debt and also to sign a Deed of Release in his (i.e., Judgment creditor's) favour.

The Sheriff could not have conveyed the legal fee sidle in the premises to the Judgment creditor - only the "equity of redemption" which by virtue of Section 2 of Cap.22 of the Laws of Sierra Leone has been made a "Chattel".

The only interest which the Appellant could have purchased was the equitable estate which was retained by the Respondent. What the Appellant purported to have purchased, as could clearly be evinced from his conduct, was both the equitable and legal estate. It is pertinent to state that the Respondent did not receive any of the proceeds of sale which he was legally entitled to receive. Moreover, it was not proved that the conditions precedent to sale as contained in Section 7, 9, and 10 of the Execution against Real Property Act, Cap.22, were complied with by the Sheriff before he purported to sell the property in question. In such circumstances; I am not satisfied that the sale was bona fides. In my view the sale should be set aside. This also affects the release which was improperly obtained and which also should be set aside. In consequence of this the legal estate reverts to the D.I.B What in effect the transaction has amounted to is that the Appellant has utilized money he paid for acquiring the equitable estate only to pay for the legal estate as well and to depriving the Respondent of the residue of the proceeds of the sale legally due him.

[p.117]

The Learned trial Judge was clearly wrong when he held that “2nd Defendant (i.e. the Appellant herein) become entitled to the property 21D Elk Street Freetown under Section 5 of Cap.22” and also that "2nd Defendant has acquired a good title to the property…….. both in law and in equity”.

Having held that the sale by the Sheriff as well as the Release should be set aside it follows that the Respondent's right to redeem the mortgage had never been extinguished or lost. The Respondent is entitled to a reconveyance of the mortgaged property.

The Appellant is bound to account to the Respondent for all rents and profits received by him or which might or ought to have been received in respect of the mortgaged property since he has been in possession thereof, i.e., since the date of the Release, less of course, all outgoings such as rates, insurance, repairs and reasonable improvements.

Taking all the circumstances of this case into consideration I would make the following Orders:—

1. The appeal is dismissed

2. The Order of the Court of Appeal is hereby varied as follows:—

(a) The D.I.B within one month from date hereof or within one month after being so requested by the Respondent execute a reconveyance to the Respondent, at the expense of the Respondent, of property No.21D Elk Street, Freetown.

(b) The Registrar of the Supreme Court do take an account of the rents and profits received by the Appellant or which might have been so received in respect of property No.21D Elk Street, Freetown since the date of the Release, i.e. since 2nd May, 1966, as well as all reasonable outgoings and file same in this Court within three months from date hereof for necessary action by this Court.

(c) The Respondent pays to the Appellant the purchase price that Appellant paid to the Sheriff plus interest at the rate of 4 per dentun per annum as from date of sale to the date of such payment less the costs of Execution and less any balance in the hands of the Sheriff.

(d) The Sheriff pays to the Appellant any balance remaining in his hands out of the proceeds of sale.

3. Costs of this Appeal and costs in the Court of Appeal and in the High Court to the Respondent

4. Liberty to apply.

[p.119]

Ken During J.A.

I have had the opportunity of reading the separate Judgments of my brothers Harding J.S.C. and Luke J.S.C. respectively and have come to the conclusion that this Appeal should be dismissed.

The facts of this case have substantially been stated in the separate Judgments of my Learned brothers.

Reference has been made to the Execution against Real Property Act Cap.22. The Appellant in his pleadings averred that the sale to him of the said property was valid and in my view the burden was on him to prove the same and the presumption of regularity could not be invoked in this connection by him. The conditions precedent to the sale must be complied with where property is put up for sale under the provisions of Cap.22. The question as to whether the sale was bona fide or mala fide will only arise when conditions precedent have been complied with and as I have already stated the burden of proof was on the Appellant. Indeed, it was squarely on the Appellant. I agree with my brother Harding J.S.C. that there has not been sufficient proof that conditions imposed by the Act were complied with and in my view therefore the purported sale of the said property could not be regarded as a bona fide sale under the provision of the Execution against Real Property Act. Cap. 22.

What the appellant could have bought was the Equity of redemption. It is pertinent to note that before the date fixed for redemption, the Appellant purported to purchase the Respondent's Equity of Redemption; repayment of the loan of Le.2,000 with interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum was payable on the 4th of March, 1965.

The Order of Dobbs J. on the 21st of January, 1966 that the Development of Industry Board do execute a Deed of Release in favour of the Appellant in my view ought not to stand in that the basis on which the Trial Judge made the order was that the sale by the Sheriff was bona fide one under the Execution against Real Property Act. In my view also the Order of Dobbs J. was not binding on the Respondent in that ha was not a party to the proceedings before the Learned Judge. Justice surely demands that before such an Order was made, considering that the Board at first refused to execute a Release, that the Respondent should have been made a party so that he could be in a position to at least state whether or not he was then indebted to the Board.

My Learned brother Luke J.S.C. in his judgment considered the legal position when it is clear from the evidence that the respondent's money was in fact used to pay off Mortgage debt as a result of which the Development Industries Board executed the Release to the Appellant. I agree with my Learned brother that the surplus in the hands of the Sheriff belongs to the Respondent and that neither the Board nor the Appellant was entitled to it. Luke J.S.C. went further to consider the equitable doctrine of Tracing and is of the opinion that the Respondent could follow the money in its converted form in the hands of the Appellant and that the Appellant hold the legal estate as constructive trustee of the Respondent. I do agree with him. It will be iniquitous, unfair, unjust for the Appellant to hold on to the beneficial, interest in the legal estate when the Respondent's money was the consideration for which the release was made to him. This Court certainly will not allow the Appellant to hold such interest and I agree that the Deed of Release should be set aside. Even if sale of the Equity of Redemption was one which could be upheld as bona fide [p.121] under the Execution against the Real Property Act, I, for reasons I have stated above and those in the Judgment of Luke J.S.C. will set aside the Deed of Release and apply the equitable doctrine of Tracing.

My Learned brother Luke J.S.C. dealt with cases on Constructive Trust in his Judgment. He referred to what was said by Edmund L.J. (as he then was) on the subject, Constructive Trust in Carl Zeiss Stiftung vs. Herbert Smith & Co. No. 2 (1969) 2 L. Ch. 276 at p. 300 &. 301 respectively.

On the question as to whether or not the Appellant was a Constructive Trustee in coming to a conclusion I have applied the principle laid down by the Learned Lord Justice in that case.

I would make the Orders mentioned in the Judgment of my brother Harding J.S.C. and dismiss this appeal.

JUDGMENT

Cole, C.J.

For wall over thirty-nine years Mr. Luc Genet was the fee simple owner of a certain piece of land which he disposed of to the appellant by deed of conveyance dated the 17th day of August, 196l. That deed was put in evidence as Exhibit "A" in the trial Court, namely High Court. In it the piece of land in question was said to be at Kingtom in Freetown at Hand Street, off Hennessy Street. Both in the High Court and in the Court of Appeal as well as in this Court there appears to be no dispute between all concerned regarding the identity of this piece of land. I shall therefore hereafter refer to it as "the said land".

The respondents had been on the said land for a number of years - the first respondent since sometime [p.2] in 1955 and the second respondent since sometime in 1956. When they went on the said land Mr. Lucien Genet was still the owner in fee simple. The dispute regarding the said land relates to the question whether the respondents were merely monthly tenants of the said land up to and after the 17th August, 1961 (the date of the disposition to the appellant) or whether the respondents had acquired such interest in the said land as to raise the equitable doctrine of proprietary estoppel binding on the appellant. As regards the latter question it is but proper to mention that at no time was Mr. Lucien Genet ever sought to be made a party to the action.

The appellant issued her writ of summons on the 18th day of September, 1970, claiming a declaration that she is entitled in fee simple in possession of the said land; possession of the said land and mense profits from November, 1965 until possession is given up. In her Statement of Claim, after alleging that she was the fee simple owner absolute in possession of the said land it having been conveyed to her by Mr. Lucien Genet her predecessor in title she further claimed that the respondents were tenants of Mr. Lucien Genet on the date of the deed of conveyance. The respondents, on the other hand, denied these averments. The first respondent alleged—

"3. Further and in answer to paragraph 4 of the Statement of Claim, this defendant says that the said Lucien Victor Genet and his wife Mrs. Genet gave him permission to build on the said land in 1955. He did build on the said land between 1955 and 1956 and has been in possession of the [p.3] said land and building from the said date till now.

4. This defendant admits paragraph 5 of the Statement of Claim and says that the plaintiff on several occasions from 1965 onwards took action for ejectment against him in Magistrate's Court No.4 but on each occasion, over four times, the plaintiff's claim was dismissed.

5. Further this defendant says that if in fact the said land was conveyed to the plaintiff as alleged in paragraph 3 of the Statement of Claim, the plaintiff had notice of this defendant's interest in the said land and took subject to the defendant's interest."

The second respondent also alleged—

"3. Further and in answer to paragraph 4 of the Statement of Claim, this defendant says that the said Lucien Victor Genet and his wife Mrs. Genet gave him permission to build on the said land in or about 1955. He did build on the said land in or about 1956; and has been in possession of the said land and building from the said date till now.

4. This defendant does not admit paragraph 5 of the Statement of Claim.

5. Further, this defendant says that if in fact the said land was conveyed to the plaintiff as alleged in paragraph 3 of the statement or Claim, the plaintiff had notice [p.4] of this defendant's interest in the said land and took subject to this defendant's interest.

6. Further or in the alternative, this defendant will object in law that the plaintiff's alleged claim is barred by the Limitation Act."

At the close of the pleadings it would appear that the main issues to be determined by the High Court were

(a) Was Lucien Genet, previous to the 17th August, 1961 the fee simple owner absolute in possession of the said land?

(b) If so, did he effectively in law pass that interest to the appellant?

(c) What was the nature of the interests of the respondents in the said land?

(d) Were their interests such as to encumber the said land legally or equitably as alleged in their respective defences?

(e) If so, did the appellant have notice in law of any such encumberance?

(f) Did any of the Statute of Limitations apply?

It is clearly apparent from the record of proceedings both of the High Court and of the Court of Appeal that the defence set up by the second respondent based on "the Limitation Act" was never pursued.

The learned trial judge after an exhaustive review of the evidence and after consideration of the legal authorities applicable, said as follows:—

[p.5]

"Considering the entire evidence of the case with all its surrounding circumstances, I hold that the defendants (respondents) are the tenants of the plaintiff (appellant) in respect of the land in dispute and that she has successfully established her claims.

I will give judgment for the plaintiff (appellant) and I make the following orders:—

(a) That the plaintiff (appellant) is the owner of the land.

(b) That the defendants (respondents) give up possession of the land within three months from the date of this judgment.

(c) That the 1st defendant (respondent) pay as mense profit to the plaintiff (appellant) the sum of Le. 5.00 monthly from December 1965 until possession is delivered.

(d) That the 2nd defendant (respondent) pay as mense profits to the plaintiff (appellant) the sum of Le. 3.00 monthly from December, 1965 until possession is delivered."

The burden of proof was on the appellant to move that she was the fee simple owner of the said land and that she bought without notice, actual, constructive or in……. of any legal or equitable encumberance which would prevent the fee simple ownership in the said land legally passing on to her.

The appellant without objection produced her registered deed of conveyance Exhibit "A". She called as a witness her predecessor in ……. Mr. Lucien Genet [p.6] before her acquisition of the said land, the respondents were monthly tenants of the said land of Mr. Lucien Genet - the first respondent paying a monthly rent of Le.2.00 since 1955 and the second respondent paying a monthly rent of Le.2.00 since 1956.

There was abundant evidence before the learned trial judge of this fact both on the side of the appellant and of the respondents. The first respondent was for sometime a tyreman working in the tyre factory of Mr. Lucien Genet. The second respondent was for quite sometime a cook employed by Mr. Lucien Genet. Mr. Lucien Genet categorically denied that it was with his permission that the respondents built on the said land. c/bit

The appellant gave evidence which was corroborated by Mr. Lucien Genet that on a Sunday in 1962, after the acquisition of the said land from Mr. Luoien Genet, Mr. Lucien Genet called both respondents and herself at his 13 Mandalay Street Kingtom residence where in the presence of the appellant he told the respondents that he had sold the said land to the appellant and that ho was no longer the owner of the said land. She enquired of the respondents what rents they were paying. The first respondent said he was paying Le.3.00 monthly. The second respondent said he was paying Le.2.00 monthly, The appellant there and then increased the rents to Le.5.00 and Le.3.00 respectively. The respondents not only agreed to pay, but in fact paid, the increased rents. This incident was however denied by the respondents.

The respondents on the other hand gave evidence that. Mr. Lucien Genet and wife gave the said land to them to build on and told them then, that after paying ten years rent starting from the completion of the buildings, [p.7] the said land in question would become theirs absolutely. Relying on these arrangement they proceeded to build on the said land and paid what the second respondent described as ground rent.

The first thing of particular interest to note is that in spite of the case for the respondents as to the existing arrangements between them and Mr. Lucien Genet I find the following answers being given by Mr. Lucien Genet to learned Counsel for the respondents:—

“I did not tell them (respondents) that if they paid rent for eight years, I would convey the property to them.”

Later on in answer to learned Counsel for the respondents Mr. Lucien Genet said:—

“It is not true that I arranged with the1st defendant (respondent) that I would convey the land to him after he had paid rent for about eight years.”

The second respondent in answer to his own Counsel said:—

“I said that I was paying rent for land. Mr. Genet told me that, after ten years he would give me a document and that the land would belong to me. I built a house in 1956. I started to pay rent in 1951. I paid rent up to 1967”.

In answer to the Court this respondent said:—

"The agreement was to pay rent for ten years. I started to pay rent in 1951. I paid rent up to 1967".

In that very unsatisfactory state of the evidence relied on by the respondents how could any reasonable [p.8] Court have held that the alleged arrangements between Mr. Lucien Genet and the respondents, other than that of a monthly tenancy simpiliciter was proved.

The second thing about the case as the evidence was before the High Court is this. Evidence was led that the appellant took the respondents before the Magistrate under summary ejectment proceedings on three occasions after the acquisition of the said land by her. If there was any semblance of truth in the story of the respondents one would have thought that they would have taken such appropriate steps as to give effect to the arrangements alleged by them. There is no evidence that they took any such steps not even at that late stage when proceedings commenced in the High Court.

Taking the totality of the evidence before the High Court which I have carefully considered, the learned trial judge came to the right conclusion of fact in not believing the respondents but rather in accepting the case for the appellant. I shall consider the legal position later.

From the decision given by the learned trial judge (which decision was against the respondents) the respondents appealed to the Court of Appeal on the following grounds:—

"I. The Learned trial judge misdirected himself in law in distinguishing the case Inwards v. Baker (1965) 2 W.L.R. 212.

II. On the facts to witt:—

(a) that the defendants were given permission to build on the land by P.W.2, Lucien Genet.

[p.9]

(b) that they did build on the land on or about 1956.

(c) that the appellants had spent substantial sums of money in putting up their buildings as per evidence of J.G.E. Valentine-Cole and

(d) that the respondent knew at the time the purported conveyance was made to her that the appellants had built on the land and were in possession of the lands:

The appellants had established an equitable right to remain in occupation of the property and the respondent, if at all, should take subject to the appellant's interest.

III. The learned trial judge was wrong in law in that he failed to take into consideration the fact that P.W.R Lucien Genet said on oath that the respondent did not pay any money for the land.

IV. That the judgment of the learned trial judge was wrong both in law and in fact and was unjust and inequitable and the decision was against the weight of the evidence."

The Court of Appeal heard arguments on the 14th, 15th and 16th days of November, 1973. On the 16th day of November 1973 the appeal was "adjourned to a later date for decision."

The record of proceedings before the Court of Appeal discloses that the appeal came up before that Court on that date and the record of proceedings for that day, signed by all three Justices, reads:—

[p.10.]

"Court notifies parties that in the interest of justice the Valuation Officer of the Freetown City Council be called upon to produce the Record of Rate. Demand Note or Rate Valuation Roll of the property in dispute from the year 1950 to 1970. Counsel on either side to render the Valuation Officer all necessary assistance.

N.B. Both Counsel state that they have no objection. Court accordingly so orders. Adjourned to 19th December, 1973."

On the 19th December, 1973 the appeal was adjourned to the 22nd January 1974. On that date Mr. Frederick Eusobius Ngozika Kawallay, Valuer, Freetown City Council gave evidence as a witness of the Court. In view of the observations I shall make later it would be in place to set out, inextenso, the evidence this witness gave. He said—

"I have in my custody the Valuation Lists for 6A Handel Street, Kingtom for as far back as 1949/50. The owner is Musa Kamara and the assessment was Le.6.00 then per annum in 1949/50. He is also owner of No. 6. Was then Le.12.00 per annum. From my records property No. 6 Handel Street which was demolished in 1959. No change of ownership is shown in respect of No. 6A up to present date but the assessment has been increased to Le.74. as from 1968/69. There is no No. 6C at Handel Street. In respect of Hennessy Street there is a record in [p.11] respect of No. 6 and 6A as far back as 1949/50 and 1950/51. The owner for this period was Violet R. Smith. For the period 1951/57 the owner was still Violet R. Smith. From 1957-62 the owner was still Violet R. Smith. 6A was demolished during this period- no assessment. From 1962-68 Violet R. Smith was still owner of No. 6 - no assessment for No. 6A . Owner of 6B Hennessy Street from 1953-57.was.L.V. Genet. The first time this property was assessed was 1953/54. I can say that it was a new structure. Ownership changed in 1962 from L.V. Genet to Sierra Leone Enterprises Ltd. Speaking from my personal knowledge 6B was formerly the Tyresole Factory. It is now owned by Sierra Leone enterprises. 6C was first assessed in 1959/60 – was built around November 1958. There was no owner stated then in the Assessment List; however in the Survey File, Lucien V. Genet appeared as owner, from 1960/on to 1967/68 no name appeared on the Assessment List as owner. Prom 1968/69 to 1973, the name A. Koroma appears as owner. I became Valuer in 1966. No. 6C is adjacent to 6B and they have a common boundary wall. 6B is almost at the boundary wall and 6C is about 20 feet from the boundary wall. There are two structures in 6C. The smaller one is about 27 feet from the wall and the larger one about 20 feet from the wall.

Cross-examined by S.H. Harding: From the Survey File, when survey was done in 1958 both buildings in 6C wore constructed of C.I. Sheets roof and of C.I. sheets walls - the smaller one being made of old 44 gallons drum sheets. On 6th April, 1962 Mr. Lucien Genet wrote to the Town Clerk regarding change of ownership in respect of 6 Hennessy Street to Sierra Leone Enterprises Ltd. Properties 6A and 6C are two independent properties on the same plot of land- - that is, according to the Survey File, but in spite of this both have been assessed under 6C.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gelaga-King. I went with members of my staff after receipt of the subpoena to have a look at the property. I see this Demand Note for the year 1958/59 addressed to Mr. Amara Koroma for property No. 6 Hennessy Street. The property must have been assessed for the year 1958/59 at least. Demand Note tendered - marked exhibit 'A'. Mr. S. Hudson Harding is the City Solicitor. I have a site Plan in respect of No. 6C Hennessy Street. I see this Receipt for payment of City Council Rates for No. 6C Hennessy Street by Amara Koroma in I960 for the year 1959/60 - tendered marked exhibit B. I see this Demand Note from City Council for 1973/74 to A. Koroma in respect of 6C Hennessy Street - tendered marked exhibit C. When I visited the property in December last [p.13] year I observed that, that larger building is on a concrete base and the walls were painted yellow."

At the end of his evidence there appears this note—

"Both Mr. Hudson Harding and Mr. Galaga-King agree that the property the subject of this dispute is the same as that which the witness (the valuation Officer) has testified to be No. 6C Hennessy Street.

Adjourned to a later date for decision"

The judgment of the Court of Appeal was delivered on the 5th day of April, 1974. The Court allowed the appeal and set aside the judgment of the learned, trail judge. They ordered that plaintiff/respondent (now appellant) pay to the defendant/appellants (now respondents) the present day value of both buildings viz: Le.3,640.00 and Le.5,160.00 respectively or nailing that, the defendant/appellants (respondents) be allowed to retain possession of the said building for the rest of their respective lives. The Court of Appeal based their valuation on certificates dated the 10th July, 1972 given by a witness for the defence. It is interesting to note in passing that these valuations were done after the appellant had closed her case before the High Court and the 1st respondent had started giving evidence. That was after the 22nd June 1972 when the case stood adjourned to the 5th July 1972.

In the course of their judgment the Court of Appeal had this to say—

"Applying all the authorities quoted above to the facts in this case there is no doubt [p.14] that Genet allowed the appellants to build on the land in question. This can be gathered from the evidence adduced in the trial court, and also here in this Court. Janet first of all said that the appellants asked him to have the use of his land in the 1950's as it was near their place of work. He never asked them as any reasonable man would have done what they wanted to do with it. In short what connection has the land got to do with where they work unless it was for them to live there. He further said that when he let them have the use of the land that there was a shed there he himself never said that this shed was empty in fact he said that at the time he was using it to stock materials for his factory. There is no evidence that the appellants ever lived in the shed. In fact the evidence of kawallay throws a different light on this altogether. Finally Genet at first said that he only knew that buildings had been erected on the land in 1962, then he said 1961 then he said it was earlier than that he knew they were staying on his land in what he did not say. On the whole there is ample evident before this court to show that Genet must have known of the existence of the buildings on the land before he purported to part with the land in question to the plaintiff/respondent. We believe that he allowed them to build on the land without any objection from him."

My first comment here is that Mr. Genet was never made a party to these proceedings. Secondly, with respect, I fail to see how payment of rates affected the issue of proprietary estoppel for by Section 95 of the Freetown Municipality Act (Cap.65) as amended by section 3 of the Freetown Municipality (Amendment) Act 1964(No. 31 of 1964) the occupier is equally liable as the owner in respect of payment of rates. That section reads:—

"95. (1) If the City Bailiff acting as aforesaid finds no goods, or if the amount realised by any sale as aforesaid is insufficient, the Mayor is hereby empowered to authorise the City Bailiff in writing to demand from the occupier payment within fourteen days of any amount owing, less any poundage or other costs of levy upon the goods of the owner, and if at the end of such period of fourteen days as afore said, the occupier has not paid such amount, the City Bailiff is hereby authorised to direct, payment to the said City Bailiff by the said occupier of any rent due or accruing due to the owner, to the extent of the amount due to the Corporation in respect of the City rate, and every such payment shall be a valid discharge to the occupier of the rent to the extent of the amount so paid.

(2) If an occupier shall refuse or neglect to pay the rent as aforesaid to the City Bailiff when so required, the Mayor is hereby empowered to issue a [p.16] warrant under his hand and the seal of the Corporation directed to the City Bailiff requiring and commanding him to levy the amount due to the Corporation in respect of the City rate on the goods and chattels of such occupier in the like manner as is provided in section 93 and 94 for levying on the goods and chattels of a defaulting owner.

(3) An occupier may deduct any sum paid by him under this section from the amount of rent payable by him to the owner and should a levy have been made on the goods and chattels of such occupier he may also deduct from such rent the poundage and cost of such levy."

If the issue regarding "the Limitation Act" was being canvassed perhaps the relevance of the additional evidence would have been appreciated. That issue was, however, not pursued. It is my considered view that the additional evidence of Kawallay did not put the case for the respondents higher than it was when judgment was given for the appellant by the High Court. On the contrary, as Mr. Hudson Harding rightly pointed out before us, the whole tenor of this additional evidence tends to give additional strength to the appellant's case.

The position as regards findings on question of facts therefore in my view reverts to the position they were when judgment was given by the High Court. I would here and now re-iterate what this Court had laid down as guide-lines to the Court below in cases were that Court thinks it fit to disturb the findings of facts by the High Court. This is what we said on this question in [p.17] the yet unreported case of EL NASR EXPORT AND IMPORT CO. L.TD. vs. MOHIE EL DEEH MAMSOUR Civ. App. No. J/73 judgment delivered on the 25th April, 1974.

He said, inter alia—

"It is true that Rule 21 of the Court of Appeal Rules 1973 (Public Notice No.28 of 1973) gives very wide and swooping powers to the Court of Appeal even to the extent of re-hearing the whole case. At the same time it is settled law and good sense that it should be in the rarest occasions and in circumstances where the appellate court is convinced by the plainest considerations, that it would be justified in finding, that the trial judge had formed a wrong opinion. In this connection I quote with approval the words of Lord Thankerten in WATT or THOMAS v. THOMAS (1947) A.C. at page 487 referred to in the House of Lords case of BEEMAX v. AUSTIN MOTOR CO. LTD. (1955) 1 A.E.R. 326.

'1. Where a question of fact has been tried by a Judge without a jury, and there is no question of misdirection of himself by the Judge, and appellate court which is disposed to come to a different conclusion, on the printed evidence, should not do so unless it is satisfied that any advantage enjoyed by the trial Judge by reason of having seen and heard the witnesses, could not be sufficient to explain or justify the trial Judge's conclusion.

2. The appellate court may take the view that, without having seen or heard the witnesses it is not in apposition to come to any satisfactory conclusion on the printed evidence.

3. The appellate court, either because the reasons given by the trial judge are not satisfactory, because it unmistakably [p.18] so appears from the evidence, may be satisfied that he has not taken proper advantage of his having seen and heard the witnesses, and the matter will then become at large for the appellate court.

I also cite in support and with approval the older cases of KPONUGLO v. KODADJA (1933) 2 W.A.C.A. 24 and KIZIDGU v. DOMPREH (1937) 2 W.A.C.A. 281, decisions of the Privy Council. In the former case it was held that it was trito law that not possessing the advantages of the judge of first instance, a Court of Appeal should be chary of over-ruling his opinion on pure question of credibility. In the latter case it was held that an appeal in a case tried by a Judge alone is not governed by the same rules which apply to an appeal after a trial and verdict by a jury. It is a re-hearing. Nevertheless, before the Appellant Court can properly reverse a finding of fact by a trial Judge who has seen and heard the witnesses and can best judge not merely by their intention and desire to speak the truth but of their accuracy in fact, it must come to an affirmative conclusion that the finding is wrong. There is presumption of its correctness which must be displaced."

As I have stated earlier on, the state of the evidence before the learned trial Judge justified the findings of facts at which he arrived. I agree with these findings. Applying the relevant principles of law I am not satisfied that Court of Appeal had [p.19] good or reasonable grounds for disturbing these findings.

We all take cognisance of the fact that equity has still not past the age of childbearing and that one of her progeny, not necessarily the latest, is the doctrine of proprietary estopped. This equitable doctrine has from time to time been clad with a coat of many colours. In DILLWYN v. LLEWALYN (1862) 6 L.T.

878 the coat took the colour of operating through providing valuable consideration which in the circumstances of that particular case established a contract. The next one following as the privy council case of PLIMMER v. MAYOR OF WELLINGTON (1884) 9 App. Cas. 699. There the doctrine took the colour of making a revocable license irremovable. Then followed The House of Lords case of RAMSDEN v. DYSON (1865) L. R.L.H.L. 129 where, at page 140, the then Lord Chancellor (Lord Cranworth) said—

"If a stranger begins to build on my land supposing it to be his own and I, perceiving his mistake abstain from getting him right, and leave to persevere in his error, a court of law will not allow me afterwards to assert my title to the land on which he has expanded on the supposition that land was his own. It considers, that, when I saw the mistake into which he had fallen, It was my duty to be active and to state my adverse title; and that it would be dishonest in me to remain willfully passive on such an occasion, in order afterwards to profit by the mistake which I might have prevented."

[p.20]

As the learned authors of Snell's Principles of Equity 27th Edition (1973) at page 566 put it, this colour of the coat is based "on unconscionable behaviour or fraud".

The authors add—

'"knowledge of the mistake makes it dishonest for him to remain willfully passive in order afterwards to profit by the mistake he might have prevented. The knowledge must accordingly be proved by "strong and cogent evidence".'

I adopt this passage. In the instant case there was no allegation of mistaken belief in the defence of the Respondents, nor was there any evidence to that effect.

The most recent of the authorities in this line Cited before us is INWARDS v. BAKER (1965) 1 All. E.R. 446. That was an English Court of Appeal case. In that case there was a definite finding of fact on the evidence before the Court of first instance that there was a request or encouragement on the part of the father to his son to build.

The pith and marrow of the respondents' case before us is that the respondents, on the evidence before the learned trial judge and the justices of the Court of Appeal, were licencees by estoppel and their interests were therefore protected even as against the third parties. The legal authorities establish the principle that licencees by estoppel are protected against third parties taking with notion; but contractual licencees" are not. The protection based on estoppel will be essential if the licensor has transferred the property to a third party.

That brings me to this point, namely, that facts must be established for the equity to arise. The right of the parties must be determined upon the proper construction of the contract or arrangement, Lord Diplock in the English House of Lords case of GISSING v. GISSING (1971) A.C. 886 at p. 906 puts it this way—

"As in so many branches of English law in which legal rights and obligations depend upon the intention of the parties to a transaction, the relevant intention of each party is the intention which was reasonably understood by the other party to be manifested by the party's words or conduct notwithstanding that he did not consciously formulate that intention in his own mind or even acted with some different intention which he did not communicate to the other party. On the other hand, he is not bound by any inference which the other party draws as to his intention unless that inference is one which can reasonably be drawn from his words or conduct."

Each case must depend upon its own facts Learned Counsel for the respondents canvassed before us the question that the burden of proof of notice as to the nature of user of the said land was upon the appellant. I entirely agree with this proposition. Such a notice in law may be actual, constructive or implied. Actual notice is the simple case where the purchaser knew of other legal or equitable interests existing prior to his purchase. It is constructive where such knowledge [p.22] would have come to him if he had made all such enquiries as a prudent purchaser would have done. Implied notice covers actual or constructive notice to the purchaser's agent who was acting as such in the transaction in question. This burden is discharged where the purchaser showed by evidence that he or she took all reasonable care made enquiries and that having taken that care and made the necessary enquiries he or she received notice of any legal or equitable encumberance which affected the said land. The totality of the evidence before the learned trial judge justified a finding of fact that the only notice the appellant had was that of the respondents being merely monthly tenants of Mr. Lucien Genet and that on the Sunday in October 1962 when the meeting time of Mr. Lucien Genet, the appellant and the respondents took place at Mr. Lucien Genet's residence they attorned tenants to the appellant by not only agreeing to pay the increased rents but in fact paid the increased rents. That tenancy the appellant quite lawfully determined. In coming to this conclusion I have taken into consideration the fact that the burden of proving tenancy is on the party setting it up. In the west African Court of Appeal case of KATAH v. K. CHELLARAH & SONS reported in 1957-60 ALR.S.L. 7 that Court had this to say at page 10—

"It is in each case a question of fact as to whether in the particular circumstances it is shown to have been the intention of the parties to create such a tenancy or whether the facts to show that there was no such intention. It is, of course, upon the party setting up the tenancy to prove its creation and if the question [p.23] is upon the facts left in doubt he has failed to discharge the onus laid upon him."

In this case the learned trial judge's findings on this point are loud and clear in favour of the appellant. There is abundant evidence in support of such a finding. Counsel for the respondents has quite rightly drawn our attention to the fact that the law we have to apply in this case is that of the laws of all civilized nations". He relied on the dictum of Lord Chancellor Campbell in the case of CAIRNCROSS v. LORIMAR (1860) 5 L.T. 120 at page 123 quoted with approval in the West African Court of Appeal case of G.B. AMANGIO SANTOS v. IKOSI INDUSTRIES AND EPE NATIVE ADMINISTRATION (joined by Order of Court) reported in 8 WACA 29. I certainly agree with this proposition of law. Indeed it is the law I have applied in this case and I fervently hope it is the law that will be applied in the Courts of this Republic

The end result is that in my judgment this was a Case where the respondents were originally monthly tenants of the said land with Mr. Lucien Genet as landlord; that it was not established that the respondents built on the said land under any special circumstances that they subsequently became tenants of the appellant who on the 17th August, 1961, acquired the fee simple ownership of the said land and that she quite lawfully determined the tenancy. I would apply the principle of law laid down by the then Lord Chancellor (Lord Cranworth) in the case of RAMSDSN v. DYSON (1886) L.R. 129 at page 141, where he said—

"If any tenant builds on land which he holds under me, he does not thereby, in [p.24] he absence of special circumstances, acquire any right to prevent me from taking possession of the land and buildings when the tenancy has determined. He knew the extent of his interest, and it was his folly to expend money upon a title which he knew would or might soon come to an end."

I would allow the appeal, set aside the judgment of the court of Appeal and restore the judgment and order of the high court.

JUDGMENT

COLE, C.J.

This is an appeal from the judgment of the Court of Appeal for Sierra Leone dated the 11th day of April, 1974 allowing the appeal from the judgment of Warne, J., dated the 16th day of March, 1973, in an action in which the respondent in this Court was plaintiff and the appellant was defendant. The subject matter of the action touched and concerned certain premises at one time known as one time known as 41 Kainkordu Road, Keidu Town, Kono District, but later came to be known as 83 Main Kainkordu Road. There is no dispute between the parties as to the identity of the premises in question. I shall, therefore in this judgment hereafter refer to it as "the said premises."

By a specially indorsed writ of Summons dated the 17th day of March, 1972, the respondent claimed possession of part of the said premises, mesne profits at the rate of Le.4O per month and damages for trespass. In his Particulars of Claim, he alleged, amongst other things, that at all times material to this action, he was the owner of the said premises and the appellant was in occupation of part of the said premises that despite several demands by the respondent since April, 1964, for the appellant to quit the said premises, the appellant refused to do so.

The appellant by his amended Defence disputed the Ownership by the respondent of the said premises and averred in effect that he was the owner by purchase of the said premises. To this the respondent joined issue.

It is clear therefore that at the close of the Pleadings, one of the main issues which had to be determined by the trial Judge was ownership of the said premises. This naturally involves the question of title to the said premises.

The trial came to an end on the 16th day of March, 1973, when the learned trial Judge delivered his considered judgment dismissing the respondent's claim on the main ground that the evidence of the respondent did not support the pleadings. It should be noted in passing that there had been previous litigation between the said parties regarding the said premises before the High Court in 1968, the record of proceedings of which case was tendered in evidence in the present case and marked exhibit 'A'. In the former case, the appellant was plaintiff and the respondent was defendant. The respondent in that case raised the question of jurisdiction of the High Court to try that case but was [p.27] overruled by the learned trial Judge. The learned trial Judge, however, after hearing evidence, dismissed both the claim of the appellant and the count reclaim of the respondent. There was no appeal against the judgment in that case. For the purpose of this present appeal these facts are not very material, except, perhaps, regarding the issue of cases.

From the judgment of Warne, J, dated the 16th March, 1973, the respondent appealed to the Court of Appeal for Sierra Leone on three grounds, namely—

"1. The learned trial Judge misdirected himself as to the nature of the appellant's counterclaim in the previous action between the same parties above and which is exhibit 'A' in this action.

2. The learned trial Judge was wrong in law when he said the appellant was indirectly using his Court as an appellate Court.

3. The judgment is against the weight of evidence."

The Court of Appeal for Sierra Leone in their judgment dated the 11th day of April, 1974, said, inter alia—

"We allow the appeal and set aside the decision of the Court below dismissing the appellant's action with costs. We order that the respondent within 30 days do deliver possession of the 2 rooms occupied by him in the premises formerly known as 41 Kainkordu Road, [p.28] Kono district, and now known an 83 Kainkordu Road, Koidu Town, that the respondent do pay to the appellant mesne profits at the rate of Le.28 per mensom from the date of issue of the writ of summons herein."

The appellant being dissatisfied with this judgment and order has appealed to this court on a number of grounds. The first principal question posed for our consideration is —

"Whether the High Court of Sierra Leone had any jurisdiction to entertain this suit in view of the fact that the matter between the parties which the Court had to determine was a question of title to in the provinces, and whether the proper forum ought not to have been the local court in the Kono District."

It should be observed at the outset that on examination of the record of proceedings before the Courts below this question of jurisdiction was never raised. I am of the view, however, that since the pleading, before the learned trial Judge disclose sufficient material on which the issue of jurisdiction can be based, this Court can properly entertain the question in spite of the fact that it was not raised in the Courts below. I wholeheartedly adopt the views expressed in the Privy Council case of CHIEF KWAME ASANTE v. CHIEF KWAME TAWAI (l949) W N 40 at page 41 that—

"If it appeared to an appellate court that, an order against which an appeal was brought had been made without [p.29] jurisdiction, it would never be too late to admit and give effect to the plea that the order was a nullity."

I shall not confine this legal doctrine to orders only but would extend it to cover judgments or other decisions of any court. This ought to be the case for, in my considered view, jurisdiction is not only the legal authority but it is also the extent of the power of a court or judge to entertain an action, petition on or other proceeding. Due consideration ought to be given to it at any stage – particularly so where that jurisdiction is conferred or taken away by statute.

Now, what is the gravamen of this principal question of jurisdiction raised by learned Counsel for the appellant? It is this. He contends, amongst other things that, in the first place, from the pleadings it is clear that the said premises was land situated in the provinces; secondly, that the pleadings disclose that one of the main issues Warne, J., had to determine was the title of either party to the said premises; thirdly, that no question of any title to a leasehold granted under the Provinces Land Act (Cap. 122) arose; and lastly that therefore the jurisdiction of the High Court ousted by virtue of the provisions of section 21(a) (i) of the Courts Act, 1965 (No. 31 of 1965). These contentions automatically call for the construction of sections 18 (1) and (2) and 21 (a) (i) of the Courts Act, 1965 for the purposes of this appeal. Those, three subsections are as follows:

"18. (i) The High Court shall exercise the jurisdiction and powers conferred [p.30] upon it by the Constitution and any other enactment.

(2) Except as provided in subsection (2) of Section 7 and Section 19 or its jurisdiction is expressly excluded by an enactment, the High Court shall exercise unlimited original and supervisory jurisdiction in all causes and matters in the same manner and with the same powers and authorities and immediately before the commencement of this Act."

"21. Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to invest the High Court with jurisdiction in regard to—

(a) any action or original proceedings—

(i) to determine the title to land situated in the Provinces other than title to a leasehold granted under the provinces Land Act."

Those three subsections should be read together. It is my considered opinion that section 18 is subject to Section 21. Therefore, where in any action any question arises for determination relating to title to land situated in the provinces, unless, of course, the question related to title to a leasehold granted under the provinces Land Act (Cap 122), the jurisdiction of the High Court is ousted. No question arises for consideration in the present appeal of any leasehold granted to either party of the said premises under the provinces Land Act. Both parties wore each claiming ownership of the said premises which was disputed by the other side.

[p.31]

The High Court therefore, had to determine and In fact determine this issue.

The expression “title to land” is not defined in the Courts Act, 1965. It is also not defined in the provinces Land Act nor in the Interpretation Act, ---- (No. 8 of 1971). But the expression “land” is defined in Section 4 of the Interpretation Act, 1971. ------ includes — “land” covered by water, any house, building or structure whatsoever and any estate, interest or right in, to or over land or water”.

In the circumstances, I interpret the expression “title to land” for the purpose of this appeal to mean this namely, which of the two parties to this appeal is entitled to the ownership of the said premises. This interpretation in my view, clearly called for determination by the High Court of the question of title to land situated in the Provinces. This question both the High Court and the Court of appeal did determine. It is my considered view that another court had any jurisdiction under the afore-mentioned provisions of the Courts Act, 1965 to have determined this question nor did the High Court have any jurisdiction in law to have tried the action.

The legal position being such as I have found it to be, it is not surprising that Mr. Doe Smith, learned counsel for the respondent, with his usual can candour had to concede to this principal question. He should be commended for this. As I mentioned earlier, he himself had in the previous action in 1968 raised the issue before the High Court but he was overruled.

It might be of interest to compare the present section 21 (a) (i) of the Courts Act, I965s with the provision of Section 11 of the Courts Act (Cap 7) which latter Act was repealed and replaced by the Courts Act, 1965. Section 11 of the Courts Act (Cap 7) as far as this appeal is concerned reads as follows:—

"11. In addition to the jurisdiction conferred by this or any other Act, the High Court shall, within Sierra Leone and subject as in this Act mentioned, possess and exercise all the jurisdiction, powers and authorities, which are vested in or capable of being exercised by her Majesty’s High Court of Justice in England:

Provided further that nothing in this Act shall be deemed to invest the Court with jurisdiction in regard to—

(a) any question arising exclusively between natives—

(i) involving title to land situated within the Province.”

The Courts Act, 1965 which, as I have already said, repealed and replaced the Courts Act (Cap 7) came into force on the 7th October, 1965. It would be seen that, in comparison, up to the 6th October, 1965, for the jurisdiction of the High Court in matters involving title to land situated within the Provinces to be ousted such matters must also arise exclusively between "natives". The present legal position in relation to the High Court's jurisdiction relation to the High Court's jurisdiction regarding title to land situated in the Provinces appears to be [p.33] rather all-embracing. The main questions to be considered as the law stands at reset are, in my view—

(a) To the land in question situated in the Provinces, and if so,

(b) Does the action relating to the said land raise for determination by the High Court the issue of title to such land other than title to a leasehold granted under the Provinces Land Act?

If these questions are answered in the affirmative, then the jurisdiction of the High Court is ousted. This is exactly the position in the present case.

I held that the whole trial before Warne, J., was a nullity because of want of jurisdiction. Having so hold it follows that the judgment and orders of the Court of appeal are consequently null and void. In the circumstances, it is unnecessary for me to consider the other principal questions raised in this appeal,

I would allow the appeal and set aside the judgment and order of the Court of Appeal as well as the judgment and order of the high Court.

I now turn to the question of costs. It is true that costs should follow the event and that the appellant having succeeded in his appeal should have his costs. In view, however, of the peculiar circumstances of this case where the very question of jurisdiction on which the appellant now succeeds before us had previously been raised by the respondent in the 1968 action before Browne-Larko, J, as he then was, but was strongly opposed by this very appellant, I would hereafter in the name of equity that each party [p.34] Bears his own cost in this Court, in the Court of Appeal and in the High Court. Any costs which may have been paid in either of the Courts below by either party should be refunded. In this connection, I would give liberty to apply.

Hon. Justice Betts

In the main, I agree with the conclusion arrived at by the Chief Justice.

I have only this to add: that there are certain factors which one must take into consideration and these he has already outlined.

First section 11 (1) of the Act –Section 6 of the Act Cap 143 and Rule 10 of the Act but also what I think is the most important and I think has been referred to by my brother Justice Luke is the case of Royal Exchange Assurance Ltd. versus Toffic Bassil Civil Appeal Ho. 172 unreported.

In that case it was established at least it was said that the Insurance policy at the time that the accident occurred should have been in existence. I do not agree with the principle of strict interpretation against the whole tenor of the Act which provided for. Apart from that I agree in the main with the Lord Chief Justice's Judgment.

I would allow the appeal.

Hon. Justice Awunor-Renner:

I agree with the conclusion arrived at by the Learned Chief Justice and I would allow the appeal.

JUDGMENT

BETTS, J.S.C.

On the 21st January, 1975, the Court of Appeal delivered judgment dismissing an appeal from the High Court, judgment of which Court was dated the 6th December, 1973. The pith of that judgment was that the case of the plaintiffs/appellants was based on such unreliable foundation that it would be unsafe to make the declaration and orders sought. The Court of Appeal in affirming that judgment said inter alia —

"The various authorities cited before him" (the learned trial Judge) "were reviewed by him and he came to the right decision in dismissing the action as the burden [p.72] of proof cast on the plaintiffs/appellants was never discharged by them."

It is against the judgment that the following grounds of appeal were lodged.

(i) The Court of Appeal is wrong in law in upholding the judgment of the High Court with reference to that Court's rejection of the evidence of the 4th Defence Witness Mr. McEwen who had tendered Ex. W because it was prepared while the case was in progress.

(ii) That the Court of Appeal as was constituted was ultra vires the Constitution in that one of the Judges the Honourable Justice Ken. O. During, J. A. who heard the appeal had given a ruling in the matter in the High Court.

(iii) That the Court of Appeal was wrong in law in upholding the judgment of the High Court with reference to the ruling of Honourable Ken. During dated 27th April, 1972, refusing an application to strike out the defence of the 1st and 3rd defendants on the grounds that they violated the rules, principles and practice of pleading.

(iv) That having regard to the evidence and the law applicable the judgment is unsatisfactory.

(v) The Court of Appeal was wrong in law and acted contrary to all known principles of law and practice in merely accepting the findings of the trial Judge with- out even attempting to review the law and the facts.

For the purposes of this appeal counsel for the plaintiffs/appellants notified the Court that he was not arguing grounds 2 and 3. The grounds on which he was basing his arguments were 1, 4 and 5. These he proposed to deal with under five heads. Before arguments started however counsel for the defendants/respondents applied for an amendment to his case. Let me dispose of it at this point.[p.73] He drew the attention of the Court to the fact that consistently counsel for the plaintiff and plaintiff/appellants in the High Court and in the Court of Appeal endeavoured to obtain the rejection by the Courts of Ex. W and that in the Supreme Court counsel for the same parties has adopted a completed different line of approach by inviting the Court to consider Ex. W – a plan of the entire area including the portion allegedly trespassed. He argued, that if this approach is conceded then this Court might be called upon to assess and evaluate fresh matters. To support this argument he cited the case of EXPARTE REDISH III – IE-ALTOU (1877) 5. Ch. 1.882; and NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE vs EDES (1920) A.C. 254 et I. 263. [The highlighted in yellow is not legible in the original]

In the “JII EDDISIS” case, the situation was equivocal and at the hearing it was the fraudulent conduct of the plaintiff that was more strongly urged than that of the defendant. This was not a defence in the opinion of the Chief Judge but a new case being set up. It was a question of who had behaved fraudulently and to whom. Even if it is conceded that Ex. W – an exhibit could have some bearing on the case – it was not of such a nature as to affect its basic character. In that case “III REDDISH” and the subject matter cannot be compared. In the case of “NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE” already cited I would quote a portion of Lord Birkenhead’s judgment and then make a further distinction between what can be gathered from it and the submission of counsel:—

“The appellate system in this country is conducted in relation to certain well known principles and familiar methods. The issues of facts and law are orally presented by counsel. In the course of his argument it is the invariable practice of appellate [p.74] tribunals to require that the judgments of the judges in the Courts below shall be read. The efficiency and authority of the Court of Appeal and, especially of the final Court of Appeal, are increased and strengthened by the opinions of learned judges who have considered those matters below. To acquiesce in such an attempt as the appellants have made in this case is in effect to undertake decisions which may be of the highest importance without having received any assistance at all from the judges in the Courts below.”

From observations on the conduct of this case the counsel in the Courts below have made repeated submissions which drew the attention of the learned trial Judge to Ex W. even if it was only to reject it. The crucial point here however is that the rejection or admission of Ex. W as part of the evidence was unavoidably cast on the trial Judge. The distinction, to my mind, is that whatever decision on the point is arrived at by the trial Judge, that decision would be of a voluntary nature on the one hand and an involuntary one on the other. It was, at the worst, rather an obvious attempt by counsel to be unduly persuasive, and it cannot be said that a new matter was being advocated. With respect, I do not think the learned trial Judge was justified in excluding Ex. W from consideration before he had decided whether the plaintiffs/appellants were entitled to a declaration. The plaintiffs/appellants attached great prominence to the fact that the learned trial Judge withdrew Ex. W from his consideration. He argued that failure to consider the plan had adversely affected the learned trial Judge's view as otherwise his clients would have been adjudged entitled, to at least, 1.7 acres of land accepted [p.75] therein to have been trespassed upon. Counsel argued that the reason that the plan was prepared during the progress of the trial advanced by the Judge was untenable as the case on which he relied did not contemplate that specific contingency. JACKER v THE INTERNATIONAL CABLE COMPANY LTD. (1888-89) Vol. V LTR 13 carries a head-note, Appeals — Evidence improperly received in Court below — Duty of the Court of Appeal. This obviously was guidance for the Court of Appeal and not the Court of first instance but the case of BOWKER v WILLIAMSON (1808-1089) Vol. V L.T.R. 383, showed that the Court of first instance could reject from consideration, in certain circumstances as where there was a deliberate attempt to conceal the real terms of an agreement, evidence it had already received. No parallel was suggested in Bowker's to fit the case here. Counsel for the plaintiffs/ appellants realising that the failure of the trial Judge to ascribe an acceptable reason for the rejection of evidence does not automatically entitle Ex. W to consideration, even if admissible, referred to S.3(3) of the Evidence (Documentary) Act, Cap.26, 1926. The text is “Nothing in this section shall render admissible as evidence any statement made by a person interested at a time when proceedings were pending or anticipated involving a dispute as to any fact which the statement might tend to establish." After a document has been admitted S.4(l) of the same Act dictates how that statement is to be evaluated as to weight.

I have already referred to the fact that Ex. W was excluded from consideration by the learned trial judge.

[p.76]

This, in my opinion and with respect; was without a Satisfactory foundation in law. In determining whether D.W.4 was a person interested and whether Ex. W which he prepared could be admitted in the first place, and when admitted, secondly, ought to be considered, certain guide lines are necessary. When a person is interested his statement or document would be inadmissible under S.3(3) of the Evidence (Documentary) Act, Cap. 26,1926 in Sierra-Leone while in England the same effect would be produced by virtue of S.1(3) of their Evidence Act, 1938 and where the expression has come up for interpretation in a long and impressive line of cases. But let us begin with 'person'. It means 'any person whatsoever' as in BARKWAZ v SOUTH WALES TRANSPORT CO. (1949) 1 K.B. 54; and 'person interested' means a person interested in the result of the proceedings, pending or anticipated; thus a servant of a company is interested in the proceedings of the company where it is to his advantage for the company to succeed (PLOMIEN FUEL ECONOMISER COMPANY v NATIONAL MARKETING BOARD. (l94l) Ch. 248. So also a domestic servant where her reputation for care as a child-minder was in issue EVON AND EVON v NOBLE (1940) 1 K.B. 222 or (1948) 2 All E.R. 987. As the character and subject matter of the proceedings and the relation thereto of such person must be considered, all servants are not necessarily persons interested as in the case of IN RE HILL. BRAHAM v HASLEWOOD (1948) 2 All E.R. 490, in which a solicitor's clerk-was declared a person not interested. In two cases the word 'interest' was dealt with. FRIEND v. WALLMAN (1946) All E.R. 634, Somervell, L.J. said—

[p.77]

"Interest clearly means personally interested in the result of the proceedings."

and Delvin L.J. in BEARMANS LTD. V METROPOLITAN POLICE DISTRICT ……(1961) ……634, [….missing words] said —

"The word "interest" is not a word which has any well defined meaning and anybody who was asked what it meant would at once want to know its context in which it was used before he could venture an opinion. It may mean a direct financial interest on the one hand or on the other hand it may mean nothing more than the ordinary interest which everybody has in the outcome of proceedings in which he is likely to be a witness."

In order to arrive at a decision on whether D. W. 4 Mr. McEven was an interested person would have to ask myself whether he could conceivably have any personal interest in the outcome of the proceedings, whether D.W. 4's professional or financial interests were in issue, whether his conduct had been dictated by himself or whether he was under the control of some other person and whether he had the skill to execute the work for which he was engaged and what was his relationship with his employer.

These questions embrace in my opinion a reasonable examination of the circumstances; the contents of the document concerned; the factors which would establish the purpose why the document was made, and clearly, if the maker had a personal interests in the result of the proceedings. Applying these tests I can safely say I am satisfied that D.W. 4 Mr. McEven is not a person interested under the Act and Ex. W. has properly been admitted and ought to have been considered if the circumstances so required.

Counsel for the plaintiff/appellants treated the [p.78] statement of defence as an admission of trespass to the extent of 1.7. acres of land. He grounded his right to a judgment to that extent on the evidence of D.W. 4; Ex W; and the statement of defence. Counsel for the defendants/respondents strongly protested that he made any such admission and that his use of the word "overlap" should not and does not convey any such intention. In the case of CHRISTIAN YAO KISIEDU & OTHERS V DUOMBUAH DONPREY & OTHERS 2 W.A.C.A. 273 involving trespass to land in the Gold Coast (then) the word "overlap" was used in the course of the judgment. It reads

"There are many points which bear out this view that the area of Kisiedu's grant did not 'overlap' the area claimed by the appellants. The most striking is that Kisiedu's settlement and cultivation were entirely north of the road. This it should be noted was a case of trespass to land. The respective claims are shown on a plan Ex. A in the case, Kisiedu's claim being edged green and Dompreh's yellow. The trial judge decided in favour of Kisiedu's side and gave him £100 damages with costs to him and his associates, and granted an injunction against Dompreh and his associates, their agents or servants trespassing on the land"

I do not see how I can come to any other conclusion than that the word 'overlap' used in this way in connection with land is equivalent to the use of the word trespass. I must make it clear that I do not mean that trespass has been proved, what I have considered here is terminology instead of proof.

The core of the judgement of the Court below is contained in the words—

"I find the plaintiff's case to be based on such unreliable foundation that it would be unsafe to make the declaration and orders sought."

[p.79]

Before embarking on a detailed examination it is worthwhile to observe that there has been a considerable shifting of ground with regard to the acreage in this matter. The statement of claim, paragraph 2 states—

"The said Sarah Macaulay (herein- after called the testatrix, was at the time of his death seized in possession of and otherwise well entitled to ADD THAT piece of land situate lying and being at Barbardori, in Lamley Village aforesaid, commonly known as Barbardori Grass Fields, containing an area of 38 acrean."

In her own statutory declaration she described her entitlement as "38 acres more or less." In the petition of appeal before this court at paragraph A, counsel pleaded—

“That the case involves title to 26 acres of land at Lamley Village value about Le. 52,000.”

But in paragraph 4 in his case for the Appellants, Counsel sets down “The evidence of the ownership of the disputed land was given by P.W.1. P.W.2, P.W.3, P.W. 4. P.W. 5 a licenced surveyor gave evidence as to the encroachment or overlapping of the land of the plaintiff and gave the extent of the encroachment as 6.371 acres. In Court counsel was saying that he could at least have had judgment for 1.7 acres which he seemed willing to accept. That immediately revealed the indeciveness of the claim as regarding declaration of title. The plaintiffs/appellants therefore were faced with the difficulty of proving title to the whole 38 acres of land or of establishing possessory title thereto. If either of these was achieved then proof of title to 25 acres of land would be unnecessary as would be proof of the 6.971[p.80] acres. In that case if ownership of 38 acres is established in favour of the plaintiffs/appellants, then it would follow that they were entitled to a declaration for the 1.7 acres.

In order to resolve the uncertainties which beset the learned trial Judge he followed the principle outlined in the case _____ V_____ [ineligible in original text] 336 which states that “the onus lies on the plaintiff to satisfy the Court that he is entitled on the evidence brought before him to a declaration of title” and also the well know case of _____ V _____ [ineligible in origal text] which says the “the burden is on the plaintiff to prove his right to a title and other relief by independent means”. After giving due consideration to the law and facts before him the learned trial Judge found he could not make the declaration. In the case of WALTER RIDDLE V SAMUEL NICOL (1971) Court of Appeal (S.L.) – unreported, in which the case of _____ and _____ [ineligible in orig text] an appeal from the provincial Commissioner’s Court, cited in _____ [ineligible in orig text]it was held that before a declaration of title is given the land to which it relates must be ascertained with certainty, the test being whether a surveyor can from the record produce an accurate plan of such land. There is also the case of _____ V _____ [ineligible in orig text]_____ this quotation follows—

“In _____[CIS] V ADJEI, already cited, the West African Court of Appeal laid down the test to be applied as regard the delimitations of land in dispute.” Though this is an action for declaration of title the principles laid down by the Court as to the necessity for defining with certainty the area in dispute would, in my opinion, apply to an [p.81] action for ejectment. The Court of Appeal, along other things said: “The acid test is whether a surveyor, taking the record could produce a plan showing accurately the land to which title has been given”.

I would also refer to the aft repeated legal principle that they plaintiff must decide on the strength of the case not the weakness of the defendants contain in the case of ……. V…….. (1968-69) …… 399 and in …… v …… (1968-69) …… 326.

Applying these principles to this case it seems to be that the judge was justified in coming to the conclusion he did regarding, the declaration of title. I have to make a comment at this point to what might otherwise be considered to amount to a conflict. In an earlier portion of this judgment I came to a conclusion that I did not think the learned trial judge was justified in excluding Ex. …….. from consideration. I must not be taken to mean that the trial Judge was obliged under any circumstances to consider Ex …….. but that the exhibit was entitled to consideration in and when the necessity arose. This is completely different from a total denial of consideration, which appeared to have been the case.

Although the claim among other things was for trespass as well as a declaration, the trial Judge and the Court of Appeal dealt exclusively with a declaration. The declaration sought was for title to 38 acres of land. As a legal concept a claim for declaratory title demands a much higher degree of proof than that required for a claim for trespass; and though usually they are claimed together they can be considered as separate and distinct issues.

2 W.A.C.A. (1934-33) P. 339, Carey, J., gave a declaration in favour of the plaintiffs in respect of a piece of land at Ikot Esion of the value of £50. The plaintiffs had also claimed damages for trespass by collecting palm nuts etc., on the said land, but the trial Judge awarded no damages, the alleged trespass being in his opinion trifling and he stated that this part of the claim was not persisted in. It could be inferred that Carey, J. adverted his mind to the question of trespass quite separate and apart from the question of declaration. The core of this aspect of the complaint is that the learned trial Judge never treated the trespass to 6.371 acres as a separate issue.

In a claim for trespass the plaintiff need not prove title as stated in the case of GOSLYN v WILLIAMS (1720) Fortes. Rep. 378. Possession alone is indeed sufficient to sue in trespass as against a wrong-door, but it must be clear and Exclusive possession , (stress mine) as Best, C.J. said in REVETT v BROWN 5 Bing .7. In the case of CHIEF KOJO BOSOR v CHIEF KEBBIE there was a claim for £100 for trespass on the plaintiffs' land. The learned trial Judge found as a fact that the plaintiff had failed to prove possession of the land upon which the alleged trespass took place. The submissions and arguments made before this Court would, if either title or possession to the whole area or to the 6.371 acres had been established had been sufficient. In the case of McDOUGAL v McDOUGAL (1915) 49 N.S.R. 101, the facts were that plaintiff in trespass claimed under deed which gave him colour of title and in addition established a long, series of acts of possession on the part of his father [p.83] and himself, including working the property, and the as of the locus, the beach in front of the property, as a place for shipment of timber and produce and as a best landing, and the taking from ……. Sand, gravel, or other material of that nature they required. Held, the occupation ……. Coupled with the deed giving colour of title, constituted a title in the plaintiff which will enable him to maintain trespass against the defendant. Here again it comes out that the possession, in spite of the documentary assistance, must be clear and exclusive. Here, there was documentary help but the possession was neither clear nor exclusive.

The Court of Appeal's judgment was rather short and curt. That Court, from the arguments, concluded that there was no substance in any of the grounds of appeal. The Court went on to give a reason and this was—

"The various authorities cited before him were received by him and he came to the right decision in dismissing the action as the burden of proof cast on the plaintiffs was never discharged by them."

There, rightly or wrongly, the Court had arrived at the decision that the whole appeal was without merit as lacking in substance, and indication of the principal reasons ought to have been given. All it might have done was to have given this Court an opportunity of acquainting itself with their opinion (as per Lord Birkenhead). Perhaps a cautions advice to the Court of Appeal would be in place.

However in view of what I have already said I would affirm the judgment of the Court of Appeal with regard [p.84] to the ……..

I have had the privilege of reading to readite judgment of the Honourable Mr. Justice S.C. Betts in this case. With his final conclusion I very much agree. This case must go back to the High Court for a re-hearing.

Let me make, for the guidance of the court below, two points quite clear.

The first is this. The legal authorities, which have been referred to, show quite clearly that applying them to the evidence led before the High Court, the Learned trial Judge as well as the Court of Appeal was justified in dismissing the claim for declaration of title. That part of the appeal therefore fails.

The second point is this. I am clear in my mind that the claim for trespass was not considered either by the Learned trial Judge or the Court of Appeal. Even if this was done, neither court applied for the correct principles of law set out in the established authorities on this point so ably discussed in the judgment of my learned Brother Justice S.C.W. Betts. It is these circumstances that I would allow the appeal as regards the claim for trespass and would remit the case to the High Court for re-hearing as regards trespass and damages for trespass.

WARNE, J. A.

I have had the opportunity and privilege of reading the painstaking judgment of my learned brother, Betts, JSC. I entirely agree with his conclusion.

The legal authorities are very revealing. I hope they will serve as a reminder that there is a clear distinction between title per se and possession. The authorities show that even though a claim for a declaration for title fails, if a claim for trespass is sought, the courts should consider the evidence, to see if possession has been proved to found a claim for trespass

I agree that the case be remitted to the High Courts for re-hearing regarding the claim for trespass.

I have had the advantage of reading in draft the judgment of my learned brother Betts J.S.C. I agree with his conclusion. I too would, allow the appeal and remit the case to the High Court for a re-trial on the issue of trespass.

RULING

COLE, C.J.

In this application, for special leave to appeal to this Court, Mr. T.S. Johnson for the applicant, amongst other things, sought the leave of this Court to amend his Motion Paper by substituting the expression "28th day of October, 1976" for the expression "21st day of February, 1978" contained in line 7 of the Motion Paper on the ground that the "21st day of February, 1978" was a typographical error.

Mr. Halloway on the other hand objected to the application on two grounds. The first is that the amendment applied for went to substance. The second is that the Motion Itself is out of time since it was not brought within the required statutory period.

Let me here and now dispose of the second ground.

Rule 10 of the Supreme Court Rules 1976 (P.N. No.9 of 1976) states as follows:—

"An application for special leave shall be filed within one month of the date of the judgment from which Leave to appeal is sought or of the date on which leave to appeal to the Supreme Court is refused by the Court of …[p.125] Court of Appeal.

According to Section 4(1) of the interpretation Act 1971 (Act No. 8 of 1971) "month" means a Calendar month.

Rule 1 of the Supreme Court Rules 1976 also gives the same definition to the word "month".

According to the Affidavit filed in support of the Motion, which has not been challenged, the Court of Appeal in its Ruling given on the 21st day of February 1978, refused leave to appeal to the Supreme Court against the judgment of that Court dated the 28th day of October 1976. The question now arises - did the applicant make his application for special leave to appeal to this Court within a month after the refusal of leave by the Court of Appeal? Here it should be noted that the Motion Paper is dated, and was filed on , the 21st March 1978. This question turns on what Calendar month means.

The authorities seem to establish that in considering what is the length of a Calendar month it is sufficient when the months are broken, whatever be the length of either [CIS] to go from one day in one month to the corresponding day in the other month - See "FREEMAN VS. READ - 1863, 32 L.J.M 226; RADCLIFFE V. BARTHOLOMEW 1891-1894 A.E.R. Reprint page 829: "GOLDSMITH CO. VS. WEST METROPOLITAN RAILWAY, 1904 1 K.B., 1 at page 5; in the latter case where all the authorities were exhaustively reviewed by the English Court of Appeal.

I share the view that where a period of time from or after a given date or e event is prescribed as the period within which an act is to be done, the day of that date or event is to be excluded in the computation of the period and the act is to be done on or before the last day of the period. This seems to be the view shared by our Legislature when it stated in Section 39 (1(a) of the Interpretation Act 1971 (Act No. 8 of 1971) as follows:

"(1) In computing time for the purposes of any Act—

(a) a period reckoned by days from the happening of an event or the doing of any act or thing shall be deemed to be exclusive of the day on which the event happens or the act or thing is done:"

I agree that the expression used in that subsection reads "a period reckoned by days"; but I would construe that expression to mean "within a specified period". Taking all the circumstances into consideration I am of the opinion that this Motion was filed within a month of the date on which the Court of Appeal refused leave to appeal, that is, 21st February, 1978, which is an excluded day. I would therefore overrule Mr. Halloway's objection on this point.

With regard to the other point of objection, I think, this Court can properly deal with it within the ambit of Rule 5(2) of the Supreme Court Rules 1976 which states as follows:—

"(2) Where no provision is expressly made by these Rules regarding the practice and procedure, which shall apply to any appeal or application before the Supreme Court, the Supreme Court shall prescribe by means of practice directions such practice and procedure as in the opinion of the Supreme Court the justice of the appeal or application may require.

In the opinion of this Court I would like it to be stated as a practice direction that this Court has power within the ambit of Rule 5(2) of the Supreme Court Rules 1976 to consider applications for amendment and grant same if the justice of the case so requires. Taking all the circumstances of this case into consideration I [p.127] would grant the amendment sought since the evidence in support of the Motion shows clearly that the expression "21st day of February 1978" instead of "28th day of October 1976" was inserted in the Motion Paper in error.

This amendment, however, is being granted on terms as to costs.

DIVISION: THE SUPREME COURT OF SIERRA LEONE

HILDA PRATT - APPELLANT

Berthan Macaulay Q.C. with him Dr. W. S. Marcus Jones,

M.J. Clinton and Berthan Macaulay Jr. for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT

LIVESEY LUKE J.S.C.

Hilda Pratt and Anita O. John are sisters by the same mother Mabel Ijorma Nicols. The former is a legitimate daughter and the latter illegitimate daughter of their mother.

Mabel Ijorma Nicols died testate in Freetown on 2nd September 1970. Probate of her will dated 25th August, 1970 was granted by the High Court on 1st January, 1971 to Anita O. John and William B.G. Faux (the executors named in the will). Mabel Ijorma Nicols (hereafter referred to as "the testatrix") was survived by inter alia Anita O. John and Hilda Pratt both of whom are beneficiaries under the Will. The testatrix was predeceased by a natural daughter Helen Marke who died intestate in Freetown on 25th August 1969. The only specific devise in the Will of the testatrix is in the following terms:—

"I give and devise my house and land situate at King Street, the Maze, the property of my late natural daughter Helen Marke which devolved upon me on her death intestate, to my natural daughter Anita Oseh John for the term of her natural life and after her death to her children Filinda Olabisi John and Beverly Olujara John for the term of their natural lives as tenants in common and after their deaths to their children as tenants in common absolutely."

[p.89]

According to this devise the testatrix claimed that the property of Helen Marke at the Maze devolved upon her on the death of Helen Marke. Indeed, that property was among the assets in respect of which probate was granted to the executors of the testatrix. According to the evidence, sometime after the death of Helen Marks, Hilda Pratt moved the Administrator General to administer the estate of Helen Marks. The date on which the Administrator General was moved was not given in evidence nor was it disclosed whether it was before or after the death of the testatrix. But in my opinion that does not affect the position. What is significant, is that on 17th March, 1972 the Administrator General wrote to Dr. W. S. Marcus Jones, Solicitor for Hilda Pratt in the following terms:—

"Dear Sir,

ESTATE OF HELEN MARKE (DECEASED)

I have to refer to previous correspondence on the above subject-matter and to inform you that Anita John has produced a Deed of Conveyance dated 28th February, 1972 executed by the Government of Sierra Leone (Minister of Lands and Mines) convey the freehold of property No. 5 King Street, The Maze, Wilberforce Village to her. This Deed is registered as No. 134/72 at Page 77 Volume 251 of the Books of Conveyance in my Registry.

It would therefore now appear that this property cannot form part of the estate of the above named deceased.

Would you let me have full particulars of the car allegedly belonging to the deceased so that I can investigate its whereabouts.

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd)? ? Williams

Administrator General

Presumably acting under Section 10 the Administration of Estates Act, Cap.45, the Administrator General published a Citation in the Gazette on 13th April, 1972 in respect of the estate of Helen Marke.

[p.90]

So it would appear that the Administrator General proposed to proceed with the administration of the states of Helen Marke but that as far as he was concerned the property at the Maze did not form part of that estate. The Administrator General's letter seems to have prompted Hilda Pratt (hereafter called "the Appellant") to take Court action. On 7th July, 1972 she took out and Originating Summons asking for the determination of the following questions:

“1. Whether on a true construction of Section 9 and 10 of the Administration of Estates Act Cap.45 of the Laws of Sierra Leone, 1960, the dwelling house and premises standing on plot 8, at King Street, the Maze, Wilberforce belonging to Helen B. Marke, deceased, Intestate, now devolve upon the Administrator- General, the third defendant herein.

2. If the answer to 1 above is in the affirmative, whether the same property without more, can form part of the Estate of Mabel Ijorma Nicols, deceased

3. Further, whether it was competent for the said Mabel Ijorma Nicols deceased, to devise the same property by her Will to Anita John, the first defendant for life, with remainder over to her children as tenants-in-common.

4. How the costs of this application are to be provided for. And for all necessary and proper consequential Directions and Orders as in the circumstances may be just.”

The defendants to the Originating Summons were Anita O. John and William B.G. Faux (as executors and Trustees of the Will of Mabel Ijorma Nicols) and the Administrative General (representing the Estate of Helen Marke deceased and as Administrator thereof). It is important to state that the Originating Summons was taken out in the estate of Mabel Ijorma Nicols. The Summons was supported by and affidavit sworn by the appellant deposing certain material facts and exhibiting the Will of the testatrix, the Probate and the letter of the Administrator General dated 17th March 1972.

Anita John (hereafter called "the respondent) swore to and filed an affidavit in opposition in which she deposed inter alia, that she was the fee simple owner of the property at the Maze by virtue of the conveyance referred to in the letter of the Administrator General and exhibiting her Conveyance. The appellant swore to and filed an affidavit in reply, inter alia exhibiting a lease of the property at the Maze from the Governor of Sierra Leone to Helen Marke.

The action was tried by Lawrence-Hume Ag. J. Both the appellant and the respondent gave oral evidence, notices of intention to cross examine having been previously served by their respective Solicitors on the other side. In a considered judgment the Learned Judge answered the first question on the Summons in the affirmative, the second and third questions in the negative, and made the following consequential pronouncements directions and orders:—

1. I hereby pronounce that the purported Conveyance plot No. 8, the Maze Wilberforce to Mrs. Anita Oseh John by the Government of Sierra Leone on the 28th day of February, 1972 is null and void and of no legal effect whatsoever.

2. I hereby order that the records kept by the Surveys and Lands Department be corrected and amended to show that the piece or parcel of land known as Plot 8, the Maze, Signal Hill in Wilberforce Rural Area in the Western Area of the Republic of Sierra Leone to Miss Helen Bertha Marke, deceased, first day of January, 1961 is now held by implication as a lease from year to year as from the first day of January, 1964, until the fee simple in the said plot of land shall have been conveyed to the Administrator and Registrar General for the benefit of the estate of Miss Helen Bertha Marke, deceased, as hereinafter ordered.

3. I further order that Mrs. Anita Oseh John do forfeit to the Government of Sierra Leone and for and on account of the estate of the late Miss Helen Bertha Marke all moneys duly paid by her (the former) to the said Government in respect of and in connection with the purported purchase of this property.

[p.92]

4. I also further order that all moneys already paid by Mrs. Anita Oseh John, the first defendant herein, to the Government of Sierra Leone in respect of and in connection with this property pursuant to having the same conveyed to her in fee simple do stand and continue to remain in the records of the Surveys and Lands Department, and be made to appear as if the same had been paid by the Administrator and Registrar General, the third defendant herein, for the purpose of having such fee the estate of Miss Helen Bertha Marke, deceased.

5. I order that the Administrator and Registrar General, the third defendant herein, do take immediate steps to obtain in the usual manner a grant of letter of Administration in respect of the estate of Miss Helen Bertha Marke, deceased, who died intestate on the 26th day of August, 1969, leaving property.

6. I hereby direct that in accordance with Clause 3(2) of he lease and for the purpose of administering in its fullest entirety the estate of the late Miss Helen Bertha Marke, the Administrator and Registrar-General, the third defendant herein, do apply to the Government of Sierra Leone (Minister of Lands and Mines) to have the fee simple in the demised premises conveyed to him for the benefit of the estate of Miss Helen Bertha Marke, deceased, in consideration of the arrears of rent and the stipulated sum of Le.54 which have been duly paid by Mrs. Anita Oseh John and which now stand forfeited to the Government of Sierra Leone for and on account of the estate of the late Miss Helen Bertha Marke as herein before ordered.

7. I further order that Mrs. Anita Oseh John, the first defendant herein, not later than the 28th day of February, 1973 do prepare and submit to the Administrator and Registrar-General the third defendant herein a full and comprehensive account of all moneys received by her as rent and profits prior to, if any, and from the 28th day of February, 1972, in respect of the said property less any lawful and reasonable outgoings, and also to pay over the balance therefrom in full to the said Administrator and Registrar-General for and on account of the estate for Helen Marke deceased.

And he made the following order as regards costs:—

“I finally order that the first defendant herein, namely, Mrs. Anita Oseh John do personally pay the plaintiff's costs, to be taxed. That the second name defendant herein William B.G. Faux, be not called upon to pay any costs in these proceedings. That the Third defendant's costs be borne by the estate of Miss Helen Bertha Marke deceased.”

The respondent appealed to the Court of Appeal against the decision of the Learned Judge on the following grounds:—

1. That the Learned trial judge erred in law in deciding issues not before him and made orders on matters not in issue before him.

2. That there is no evidence to support the Learned trial Judge's finding that the property in question belongs to the estate of Helen Marke.

3. That the learned trial Judge's finding that the Government of Sierra Leone had no legal right to convey the freehold of the property to Anita John offends the rules of Natural Justice.

4. That in any event, the Learned trial Judge's order directing the Director of Surveys and Lands to correct their Records to the effect "That the land is now held on yearly lease as from 1964 until the freehold is thereof is conveyed to the Administrator-General for the benefit of Helen Marke's estate" is impossible of performance legally.

[p.94]

It should be noted that neither the Administrator General nor William G.B. Faux appealed to the Court of Appeal.

The Appeal was heard by the Court of Appeal on the 16th and 17th days of October, 1973. Judgment was delivered on the 18th day of January, 1976 allowing the appeal, setting aside the orders made by Learned trial Judge and dismissing the originating Summons.

The main issues raised in this Appeal may be formulated thus:—

(i) Whether action by Originating Summons was the proper procedure to adopt to determine the questions raised by the Appellant in the Originating Summons.

(ii) Whether the Learned trial Judge was right in making the Consequential Orders he made.

Before dealing with these issues it is pertinent to state that the Court of Appeal based their decision on the view that the procedure adopted by the appellant in the circumstances of the case was not proper and that the action should have been commenced by Writ of Summons and not by Originating Summons.

With regard to the first issue, the Court of Appeal said inter alia "An Originating Summons is the appropriate procedure to be used where the main point at issue is one of construction of a document or statute and declarations of the right of the person interested thereto, or is one of pure law. It is inappropriate to commence proceedings by such a procedure where there is likely to be a substantial dispute of facts – unless it is obligatory to do so under the provisions of some rule or an act.

It was wrong where there is any choice in the matter to bring proceedings by Originating Summons if it is known that the facts are disputed.

The issue of ownership is disputed and is a complicated one which cannot be determined merely on the basis of affidavit filed by the parties.

[p.95]

Order XLII (10) provides for the determination of any question arising under a deed, Will or other written instrument and declaration of the rights of the persons interested, but there is an important proviso viz:

"Provided that a Judge shall not be bound to determine any such question of construction if, in his opinion, it ought not to be determined on Originating Summons." It ought to have been abundantly apparent to the Learned Judge who heard the Summons that there are substantial dispute as to facts and that it was most desirable for the matter to have gone on trial."

Mr. Berthan Macaulay Q.C. Learned Counsel for the appellant submitted that the Court of Appeal erred in holding that the method by which the High Court was approached i.e. Originating Summons, was wrong. He submitted further that the method of approaching the High Court are various and none of them is mandatory except in these cases where one or other of the methods is specified. Learned Counsel referred to various rules of the High Court Rules starting with Order 1 Rule 1 where "action" is defined as meaning "a civil proceeding commenced by writ or in such other manner as may be prescribed by rules of court, but does not include a criminal proceeding by the State."

He submitted that a civil proceeding commenced by Originating Summons is one "such other manner" prescribed by the Rules of the High Court, referring to orders 41, 42 and 45 of the High Court Rules.

It is important to note that the respondent did not complain in her Grounds of Appeal to the Court of Appeal about the procedure adopted in commencing the proceedings. Learned Counsel for the respondent conceded that before us. Indeed Learned Counsel for the respondent candidly stated that he had no complaint against the answers given to the four questions raised in the Originating Summons. He said that his complaint before the Court of Appeal and before this Court is against the consequential orders made by the Learned Judge. But the Court or Appeal nevertheless dismissed the Originating Summons holding in effect that the four questions raised could not be determined in a proceeding commenced by Originating Summons. So the question is whether the Court of Appeal was right in this view.

[p.96]

Learned Counsel for the Appellant, in my opinion, rightly submitted that civil proceedings in the High Court may be commenced by Writ of Summons or by other method prescribed by the rules of Court, including an Originating Summons. Hence an Originating Summons is defined in Order 1 Rule 1 of the High Court Rules as:

"every Summons other than a Summons in a pending cause or matter"

An originating Summons initiates or originates proceedings whilst what is known as a "Judges Summons" is issued in proceedings which are already pending. In this connection the words of Cotton L.J. in Re Fawsitt (1985) 30 Ch. D.231 are relevant. He said at p.233:—

"I do not understand that as saying that no proceedings but what are mentioned in that rule are to be called actions. But even if that were the case, an Originating Summons is a civil proceeding and a civil proceeding commenced otherwise than a writ in manner prescribed by the rules is an action. I read Order II Rule 1 as meaning that every action is to be commenced by writ of Summons except otherwise provided by the rules. Then we have rule 3 of Order IV, providing that certain civil proceedings shall be commenced by Originating Summons instead of by writ of summons; and we find in Rule 1 or Orders LXXI and Originating Summons defined as a summons by which proceedings are commenced without writ. Taking that definition in connection with Section 100 of the Judicature Act, 1873 we must treat an Originating Summons as a civil proceedings commenced otherwise than by writ in manner prescribed by one of the rules of court, and consequently as falling within the definition of an action."

The High Court Rules prescribe many matters which may be commenced by Originating Summons. It is not necessary to refer to all of them. A reference to a few should suffice.

Order XLII provides

"The business to be disposed of in Chambers by Judges, shall consist of the following matters, in addition to the matters which under any other rule or by statute may be disposed of in Chambers –

(1) applications for payment or transfer to any person of any cash or securities standing to the credit of any case or matter where there has been a judgment or order declaring the rights or where the title depends only upon proof of the identity or the birth, marriage, or death of any person;

(2) - - - -

(3) - - - -

(4) - - - -

(5) - - - -

(6) - - - -

(7) applications connected with the management of property

(8) - - - -

(9) such other matters as the Judge may think fit to dispose of in chambers;

(10) the determination of any question of construction arising under a deed, Will, or other written instrument and declarations of the rights of the persons interested:

Provided that a Judge shall not be bound to determine any such question of construction if, in his opinion, it ought not to be determined on Originating Summons”

In my opinion this Order provides for the issue of an Originating Summons or an Ordinary Summons depending whether there is a pending action or not. If there is a pending action then a Judge's Summons can be issued, but if there is no pending action, then an Originating Summons is the proper method to employ. I shall return to this Order later.

Order XIV, so far as relevant, provides as follows: —

“1. The executors or administers of a deceased person or any of them, and the trustees under a deed or instrument or any of them, and any person claiming to be interested in the relief sought as creditor, devisee, legatee, next of kin or heir-at-law or customary heir of a deceased person or as cestui que trust under the trust of any deed or instrument, or is claiming by assignment or otherwise under such creditor or other person aforesaid, may take out, as of course, an Originating Summons returnable in Chambers for such relief of the nature or kind of following, as may by the Summons be specified and as the circumstances of the case may require (that is to say) the determination, without an administration of the estate or trust, of any of the following questions or matters:—

[p.98]

(a) any question affecting the rights or interests or the person claiming to be creditor, devisee, legatee next-of-kin, or heir-at-law or cestui que trust;

- - - -

(e) directing the executors or administrators or trustees to do or abstain from doing any particular act in their character as such executives or administrators or trustees;

- - - -

(g) the determination of any question arising in the in the administration of the estate or trust.

The court of appeal based their decision on Order XLII (10) emphasizing that the rule provides for the determination of any question of construction arising under a deed, Will or other written instruments and declarations of the rights of the persons interested”

With respect, that was not the relevant rule. A reading of the questions raised for determination in the Originating Summons shows quite clearly that no question of construction of the Will of the testatrix or of any deed or other instrument was raised. Put simply, the question raised are that having regard to the provisions of Sections 9 & 10 of Cap. 45, whether the property at the Maze which was stated in the Will to belong to Helen Marke devolved upon the Administrator General on the death of Helen Marke, or whether it devolved upon the testatrix upon the death of Helen Marke (as claimed in the Will) and therefore formed part of the testatrix's estate and whether it was in the power of the testatrix to devise the said property. In my opinion, none of these questions raised any question relating to the construction of the Will. In the final analysis the simple issue was whether the property devolved upon the Administrator General or upon the estate of the testatrix on the death of Helen Marke.

It was important before the executors of the testatrix proceeded with the administration of the estate and distribute in accordance with the Will to determine whether or not the property at the Maze formed part of the estate of the testatrix.

[p.99]

If it was part of the estate, then the executors could distribute it in accordance with the Will. But if it was not, they could not deal with it. In my opinion, these were questions arising in the administration of the estate of the testatrix and therefore in my judgment questions falling within the scope of Order 45 Rule 1(g) (already quoted).

The competence of the appellant to take out an Originating Summons under Order 45 Rule 1 has not been questioned. She is a legatee under the Will of the testatrix and as such she was entitled to take out "as of course" an Originating Summons for the determination of any questions or matter falling within any of the sub-heads (a) to (g) of the Rule: see Re Davies (1888) 38 Ch. D. 210.

Another reason given by the Court of Appeal for allowing the appeal was that it was wrong where there is any choice in the matter to bring proceedings by Originating Summons if it is known that the facts are disputed. That may be so. Support for this view can be found in some reported case.

In Re Suteliffe (1942) 3 All E.R. 296 Bennet J said at p.28

“[B]ut there is this further objection against proceedings by Originating Summons against persons who are said to have become legal personal representatives de son tort, that they may give rise to a disputed question of fact, and an Originating Summons is not The procedure by which decision on disputed questions of fact ought to be obtained.”

In Re Halleway (1894) 2 Q.B. 163, Lord Esher M.R. referred to the history and stated the object of Originating Summons. He said at p.166:

“It was found that the old mode of commencing a suit in the Court of Chancery by a bill gave many opportunities for delay and expense, and in order to avoid this delay and expense the system was devised of a Summons originating proceedings in Chambers, which in the course of time came to be called an "Originating Summons". The procedure was invented for the purpose of quickly determining simple points.”

So the questions arise was there any dispute as to the facts, were any complicated issues in the summon?

From the fact recited earlier it is quite clear that there was no dispute as to the facts. There was no dispute that Helen Marke was the illegitimate daughter of the testatrix, that Helen Marke had a leasehold property from Government at the Maze on which she had built a house, [p.100] that Helen Marke died in Freetown intestate without issue in August, 1969, that letters of Administration of the estate of Helen Marke had not been granted to anyone, that the testatrix died in Freetown in September, 1970, that the testatrix made a Will dated 15th August, 1970, that in her Will the testatrix stated that the property at the Maze belonged to Helen Marke, that in her Will the testatrix claimed that the property at the Maze devolved upon her on the death of Helen Marke intestate, that the respondent and William G. B. Faux were the executors named in the Will and that they had taken out probate of the estate of the testatrix. In view of these indisputed facts the simple but important question that the appellant sought an answer to was whether having regard to Sections 9 and 10 of Cap. 45, the property at the Maze devolved upon the Administrator-General or upon the testatrix on the death of Helen Marke intestate. In my opinion there was nothing complicated about the question, and a reference to Section 9 of Cap. 45 should demonstrate that point.

Section 9 provides as follows:—

"9(1) The estate of every person dying intestate after the date of operation of this Act shall devolve upon the official Administrator:

Provided that, upon the grant of letters of administration under the provisions of the Act, the estate shall devolve upon the Administrator General.

Provided that, upon the grant of letters of administration under the provisions of this Act, the estate shall de delivered from the Administrator General and be vested in the person or persons to which letters of administration have been granted as aforesaid.

All the assets of a deceased person shall be administered for the payment of all just debts of such person whether he died testate or intestate."

There could be no argument that according to the provisions of the Section the estate of Helen Marke devolved on the Administrator-General on the death of Helen Marke and not on any other person or authority including the testatrix. And according to the undisputed facts no other person including the testatrix has taken out a grant of letters of Administration of the estate of Helen Marke which by virtue of the second proviso to the Section would have divested the Administrator-General of the estate of Helen Marke. So Helen Marke's estate still remains where it was on her death i.e. vested in the Administrator General, and at no times has it been vested in the testatrix.

Indeed counsel for the respondent conceded that in his address in the High Court and he made the same concession before us. In my Judgment therefore the questions raised in the Originating Summon could properly be determined in proceedings commenced by Originating Summons. The Court of Appeal therefore erred in dismissing the Originating Summons.

With regard to the Second issue formulated above on the subject of the consequential orders made by the Trial Judge, the Court of Appeal expressed the view that the Learned Judge made pronouncements on issues he was not called upon to determine by the Originating Summons and concerning parties not before him. I share the view so far as most of the consequential orders are concerned. Indeed Mr. Berthan Macaulay readily conceded that the Learned Judge erred in making the consequential orders numbered 2, 3 and 4.

In my opinion with the exception of the Order numbered 5, all the consequential orders made are objectionable on several grounds.

In the first place, it must be conceded that a judge who has ordered an Originating Summons has power to any directions relative to, or consequential on, the matter of such application: See Order 11 rule 13. But in my opinion Orders 1, 2, 3, 4, 6 and 7 could not be said to be relative to or consequential on the matter of the application which related to the simple question of the devolution of the estate of Helen Marke on her death. For instance, pronouncing the conveyance of the respondent null and void as the Learned Judge purported to do in his Order I, could not be said to be consequential on his decision that Helen Marke had a leasehold interest in the property at her death and that the leasehold interest devolved upon the Administrator-General upon her death. I must not however be understood to be saying that the respondent's conveyance was valid. All I am saying is that the Learned Judge should not have adjudicated on the validity or otherwise of the conveyance in the proceedings before him.

Secondly, the orders affected persons who were not parties to the action i.e. – The Government of Sierra Leone, and the Surveys and Lands Department. Quite clearly these orders could not bind the Government or the Surveys and Lands Department. In my Judgement therefore the Court of Appeal was right in setting aside Orders 1, 2, 3, 4, 6 and 7.

I now turn to the Order numbered 5 which reads as follows –

“I order that the Administrator and Registrar-General, the Third defendant herein, do take immediate steps to obtain in the usual manner a grant of letters of Administration in respect of the estate of Miss Helen Bertha Marke, deceased, who died intestate on the 26th day of August, 1969 leaving property.”

It is pertinent to recall that the Administrator General had not moved to administer the estate of Helen Marke and that he had in fact published a Citation in the Gazette on 13th April, 1972. It should also be mentioned that on 17th March, 1972 the Administrator General had written a letter to the effect that the property could not form part of the estate of Helen Marke.

It should also be recalled that the Learned Judge found that Helen Marks had a leasehold interest in the property at the time of her death and held that her estate devolved on the Administrator General. It should be noted that according to the definition of estate in Section 2 of Cap. 45, a leasehold interest is an estate within the meaning of Section 9 of the Act. In my opinion, in view of the answer given to the first three questions raised in the Originating Summons, the evidence and the findings of the Judge, it was necessary to order the Administrator General to proceed with the administration of the estate of Helen Marke. This, in my view, is a consequence flowing from the answer to the first question raised in the Originating Summons. In my judgment therefore, Order 5 (quoted above) is a consequential order and should stand, and the Court of Appeal was wrong in setting it aside.

For these reasons I would allow the appeal.

JUDGEMENT

Livesey Luke. J.S.C.

On 1st August, 1971 two motor vehicles (a taxi car WU 6303 and a Landover WU 8075) were involved in a road accident. As a result of the accident the respondents who were passengers in the landrover at the material time suffered personal injuries. In due course the respondents instituted proceedings in the High Court against M.E.A. Thompson (hereafter referred to as the defendant) the registered owner of WU 6303 claiming damages for personal injuries. On 5th December, 1972 the High [p.37] Court delivered judgment against the defendant awarding damages as follows: the 1st respondent Le.1125.50c and the second respondent Le.1795.50c costs to be taxed (hereafter referred to as the judgment debt). Armed with this judgment, the respondent instituted proceedings in the High Court against the appellants (who are approved Insurers under the Motor Vehicles Third Party Insurance Act Cap. 133) on 9th December, 1972 claiming payment of the judgment debt pursuant to Section 11 of Cap. 133.

In their Statement of Claim the respondents alleged inter alia that on the day of the accident the appellants were the insurers of the defendant against third party risk in respect of taxi car WU 6303 (hereafter referred to as the taxi car). In their defence, the appellants denied that at the material time they were the insurers of the defendant against third party risk in respect of the said taxi car. The issue thereby raised by the pleadings was whether the appellants were the insurers of the defendants against third party risk in respect of taxi car WU 6303 On 1st August, 1971. That was the main issue that went to trial. And it is important to state that the burden of proof on that issue was clearly on the respondents.

The action was tried by Ken During J. (as he then was). The respondents called two witnesses. The first witness was the Senior Register, High Court who produced the case file of the action against the defendant. His evidence is not relevant for the purposes of this appeal. The second witness was one Elija Emmanuel Coker, a Police Sergeant attached to the Licensing Office, Freedom. He produced and tendered an index card in respect of the [p.38] taxi car. The index card was admitted in evidence and marked Ex. B. He said inter alia “on the 1st of August, the card show that the vehicle was insured with Motor and General Insurance Co. Ltd.”. The appellants called one witness namely Muctaru Mohamed Kamara, the General Manager of the appellant company. Mr. Kamara said inter alia that the vehicle was insured with his company from 2nd June, 1970 to 1st June, 1971 and that from 1st June, 1971 to 1st August, 1971 when the accident took place the vehicle was not insured with his company. Ken. During J. delivered judgment on 19th June, 1973 dismissing the respondents' claim. In. his judgment the learned judge said inter alia

"In fact there is no evidence before this Court that the defendants were insurers against Third Party risks of Mr. Thompson at the material time the accident took place."

The respondents appealed to the Court of Appeal against that judgment. The Court of Appeal (C.A. Harding, Tejan, JJ.A, (as they then were) and Beccles Davies J.A.) heard the appeal on the 23rd, 30th and 31st days of May, 1974. Judgment was delivered on 16th April, 1975 allowing the appeal and adjudging that the appellants pay the judgment debt to the respondents. The judgment was delivered by Tejan J.A., the other two learned justices concurring. The Court held that the learned trial judge was wrong when he said that there was no evidence that the appellants were the insurers against Third Party risk of the defendant in respect of the taxi car at the time the accident look place. The Court [p.39] further hold that there was some evidence, and that the evidence was provided by the evidence of Police Sergeant Coker and Ex. B. The Court then proceeded to draw the inference that the taxi car was insured with the appellants on 1st August, 1971 i.e. the date of the accident. The Court also held that the appellants were estopped by their conduct from disputing liability. It is against that judgment that the appellants have appealed to this Court.

The issues that arise in this appeal may be formulated thus:—

(i) Whether there was some evidence that a certificate of insurance in respect of a policy of insurance effected by the defendant and issued by the appellants in favour of the defendant in respect of vehicle WU 6303 was in force on 1st August, 1971, and if so whether the Court of Appeal properly evaluated that evidences.

(ii) Whether the appellants were estopped by their conduct or otherwise from denying liability.

The first issue is formulated in the way it is, because the respondents' claim was based on S. 11 (I) of Cap. 133 which reads as follows:—

"If after a certificate of insurance has been issued in favour of the person by whom a policy has been effected or a certificate of security has been issued in favour of the person whose liability is covered by such security judgment in [p.40] respect of any such liability as is required to be covered by a policy or security issued in favour of the person whose liability is covered by such security judgment in respect of any such liability as is required to be covered by a policy or security issued for the purposes of this Act, being a liability covered the terms of the policy or security is obtained against any person insured by the policy or whose liability is covered by the security, as the case may be then notwithstanding that the insurer or the giver of the security may be entitled to avoid or cancel or may have avoided or cancelled the policy or the security, as the case may be, the insurer or the giver of the security shall, subject to the provisions of this section, pay to the persons entitled to the benefit of such judgment any sum payable thereunder in respect of the liability including any sum payable thereunder in respect of the liability including any sum payable in respect of costs and any sum payable by virtue of any law in respect of interest on that sum or judgment."

For a plaintiff to succeed in an action based on this section he has to prove inter alia that a certificate of insurance has bean issued by the defendant insurer in favour of the person by whom a policy has been effected and that the policy was in force at the time the liability [p.41] arose. See ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE LIMITED v. TOUFIC BAZZY S.C. Civ. App. No. 1/72 unreported. So in the instant case the respondents in order to succeed had to prove inter alia that an insurance policy had been effected by the defendant with the appellants in respect of the taxi car, that the appellants had issued a certificate of insurance in favour of the defendant in respect of the taxi car and that the policy was in force on the day of the accident.

Mr. Basma submitted that there was evidence that a certificate of insurance had been issued by the appellants in favour of the defendants in respect of the taxi car and covering the date of the accident. He maintained that the evidence was provided by the evidence of Police Sergeant Coker and Ex. B. Mr. Garber conceded that there may be some evidence, but that it was worthless evidence. The Court of Appeal, as stated earlier, held that there was some evidence and then drew their inference that the taxi car was insured with the appellants on the day of the accident. It is therefore necessary to examine and evaluate the evidence relied on by the respondents.

Police Sergeant Coker's evidence was brief. It will be useful to quote it in full. It reads:—

"Elija Emmanuel Coker. I live at 12, Syke Street, Freetown. I am Police Sergeant No.218 attached to Licence Office in Freetown. I have in my custody Index Card in respect of vehicle WU 6301 which I produce -tendered - no objection - admitted and marked B. On the 1st of August the card show that the vehicle was insured [p.42]with Motor and General Insurance Co. Ltd. Before licence is issued Certificate of Insurance must be produced by applicant to Licence Authority. I do not make the entry. On the 13th December, 1972, I received a letter from the Commissioner of Police written by the plaintiff's solicitor and produce copy of the said letter dated 13th December, 1972 – tendered - no objection - admitted and marked "C". I know one Metzger -Sub—Inspector. She is in our Department. XXD by Garber: Licence Office does not make out a copy of cover note or Policy before licence is issued.

By the Court: S. I. Metzger is supervisor in the licence office."

From this evidence, there are certain matters which are beyond dispute viz: - (i) That Ex. B was produced from proper custody, (ii) that Police Sergeant Coker did not make the entries on Ex. B (iii) that Police Sergeant Coker's evidence that the taxi car was insured with the appellants on 1st August, 1971 was based on Ex. B and (iv) that before a licence is Issued a Certificate of Insurance must be produced by the applicant to the Licensing Authority.

The practice stated in (iv), is in accordance with Section 6 of the Motor Vehicles (Third Party Insurance) Act (Cap. 133) and Rule 10 of the Motor Vehicles (Third Party Insurance) Rules. Section 6 of Cap. 133 reads:—

"Notwithstanding anything in any law contained, no licence for a motor vehicle shall be issued under the Road Traffic [p.43] Act, until there has been produced to the licensing authority proof in such form as may be prescribed that on the date when the licence comes into operation there will be in force a policy of insurance or a security valid for the purposes of this Act in relation to the user of the motor vehicle by the applicant for the licence or by other persons on his order or with his permission or that the user of such vehicle is not required to be covered by any such policy or security by reason of the provisions of Section 5 this Act."

By virtue of powers conferred on the Governor in Council by Section 20 of Cap. 133, the Motor Vehicles (Third Party Insurance) Rules (hereinafter referred to as the Rules) were made to come into force on the same day as the Act (Cap. 133) i.e. 1st April, 1951.Rule 10 thereof prescribed the form of proof contemplated by Section 6 of the Act. Rule 10 (so far as relevant) reads:—

"In accordance with Section 6 of the Act, the person applying for a licence for a motor vehicle shall produce to the licensing authority—to show that on the date on which the licence comes into operation there will [p.44] be in force a policy or security in respect of such motor vehicle or that such motor vehicle will be exempted from the provisions of Section 3 of the Act."

(a) his certificate of insurance or of security in respect of such motor vehicle or;

(b) ……..

It is evident that the combined effect of Section 6 of the Act and Rule 10 of the Rules is to create a presumption that an applicant who has been issued with a licence once for a motor vehicle produced to the licensing authority a certificate of insurance in respect of such motor vehicle to show that on the date on which the licence comes into operation there will be in force a policy of insurance in respect of such motor vehicle. The presumption, however, is rebuttable.

I now proceed to examine Ex. B with a view to assessing its evidential value. Ex. B. is headed "Form A - Register of Motor Vehicles and Trailers - Reg. 3", and particulars are entered thereon under various headings and columns. The register of Motor Vehicles and Trailers is kept by virtue of Section 3(4) of the Road Traffic Act, 1964 which reads as follows:—

"The Principal Licensing Authority shall the central registrar of all motor vehicles and trailers and of all licences. He shall keep the prescribed registers and shall register therein in the prescribed manner all licences issued under this Act and the particulars of every motor vehicle and trailer registered by him or by Licensing Authorities on his behalf. Such registers shall, during normal working hours, be open to inspection [p.45] by the public on the payment to the Principal Licensing Authority of a fee of fifty cents." (Emphasis mine).

By virtue of the second proviso to Section 65 of the same Act, the regulations now in force are the Road Traffic Regulations, I960. Those regulations inter alia prescribe the "prescribed registers" provided for by Section 3 (4) of the Act, Regulations 3 and 4 provide as follows:

"3. Every licencing authority shall keep a register for the registration of motor vehicles as in Form A set out in The First Schedule.

4. (1) Every person who applies to register a motor vehicle shall lodge with the licensing authority an application duly completed as in Form B or C, as the case may be, set out in the "First Schedule".

I now propose to examine forms A and B in some detail. It is not convenient to set them out, but it would suffice to state the particulars prescribed in them. The following particulars are proscribed in Form A:— registered number of vehicle; name of owner; date of change of ownership (if any) and G.N.R. number; description of vehicle including the make, year and model number of letter, horse power, number of cylinders, engine number, chassis number, type of body, weights including net weight cwts, freight weight cwts, gross weight cwts; axle weight including front cwts and rear cwts; tyre sizes of the front, middle and rear giving the rim diameter and the width in each case; class of vehicle; date of registration; [p.46] renewal of licences stating the licence number, date and period of licence in respect of each renewal. The particulars prescribed in Form B include the full name and usual address of the applicant; the make of the vehicle, its year of manufacture, model number or letter, horse power and capacity, number of cylinders, engine number, classis number, type of body, date of purchase, country of origin of vehicle, net weight, axle weight of front, middle and rear axle, number of wheels, size of front, middle and rear tyres giving in each case the rim diameter and the width. A comparison of the particulars prescribed in Forms A and B, would reveal that most of the particulars prescribed in each form are identical. When an applicant for the registration of a motor vehicle lodges his application in Form B, he would have filled in the particulars there prescribed. It is from the completed Form B that the licensing Authority obtains most of the particulars that are entered in the register of Motor Vehicles and Trailers (Form a). The Registrar acts on the information supplied by another person. He has no personal knowledge of the facts. Most of the particulars stated in the register of Motor Vehicles and Trailers are therefore hearsay, and in normal circumstances the register would be inadmissible in evidence as offending the rule against hearsay. Thus in MYERS v. D.P.P. (1964) 48 Cr.App.R. 348 it was held by the House of Lords that car manufacturers' records of engine block numbers, proved by employees charged with keeping of records, but who had not actually compiled them were not admissible, not being public documents, they did not fall within any recognized exception to the rule against the admissibility of hearsay evidence. Some of the speeches in that case are [p.47] instructive, and it will be useful to refer to them. Lord Reid said at pp. 362-363:—

"It was not disputed before your Lordships that to admit these records is to admit hearsay. They only tend to prove that a particular car bore a particular number when it was assembled if the jury were entitled to infer that the entries were accurate, at least in the main; and the entries on the cards were assertions by the unidentified men who made them that they had entered numbers which they had seen on the cars. Counsel for the respondent were unable to argue that these records fell within any of the established exceptions or to adduce any reported case or any text book as direct authority for their admission."

And Lord Morris of Borth-y-Gest said at pp. 367-368—

"The card has no probative value unless it is used to prove that what it records is true. The sole purpose of introducing the card would be to prove that a particular motor car when manufactured did in truth have certain stated particular numbers attached to it. However alluring the language of introduction may be phrased, the card is only introduced into the case so that the truth of the statements that it records may be accepted. There is, in my view, no escape from the conclusion that, if the cards are admitted, [p.48] unsworn, written assertions or statements made by unknown, untraced and unidentified persons (who may or may not be alive) are being put forward as proof of the truth of these statements, Unless we can adjust the existing law, it seems to me to be clear that such hearsay evidence is not admissible,"

There are however many exceptions, both statutory and at common law, to the hearsay rule, One important exception I at common law is statements contained in public documents which, subject to certain qualifications are in general prima facie evidence of the truth of the facts recorded therein. Having regard to the provisions of Section 3 (4) of the Road Traffic Act, 1964 the Register of Motor Vehicles and Trailers (Form a) would appear to possess all the elements of a public document. But it is not necessary to decide in this appeal whether it is a public document. Suffice it to say that the legislature has taken care of the situation by enacting Section 6l(l) of the Road Traffic Act, 1964 which is in the following terms:—

"In any cause or matter relating to a motor vehicle or to any licence, permit, certificate or other document, issued under this Act or any regulation made hereunder, the production of a document purporting to be, a copy of an entry in a register or a copy of a licence, permit, certificate or other document as aforesaid by, or from the records of the Principal Licensing Authority or a Licensing Authority or any officer deputed by such authority for that purpose, shall be prima facie evidence of [p.49] any matter, fact or thing stated or appearing thereon."

This sub-section therefore creates a statutory exception to the hearsay rule. But it has been held that such enactments which alters the law of evidence must be construed strictly. Thus in NORTHAND v. PEPPER 10 L.T. 782, Erie C.J. said at pp. 782-783—

"An enactment altering the law as to evidence and creating statutory evidence whereby the rights of parties may be defeated, must be construed strictly. The law of evidence as it stands, is intended to maintain truth; any alteration of that law for a particular purpose is intended to maintain the truth in a better manner as far as that particular purpose is concerned and no further; otherwise the alteration would have been carried further."

Applying this strict rule of construction, it has been laid down in a long line of cases that there must be a statutory duty to make the entry (in the case of registers). But the rule also applies to other documents, the contents of which are hearsay, but which have been made admissible by statute. Examples of such documents are surveys, inquiries and reports. In some cases the statute makes the contents of the document "prima facie" evidence, in others it makes them "conclusive evidence". But whatever the document, and whether it constitutes prima facie or conclusive evidence, the principle is the same. There must be a statutory duty to make the entry, inquiry or report as the case may be. If there is no such duty then [p.50] the entry, inquiry or report, as the case may be, does not qualify as "prima facie" or "conclusive evidence" under the -relevant statutory provision. A few authorities should illustrate this point. With regard to registers, it is stated in Chapter 29 of Phipson on Evidence l1 Ed. (a Chapter dealing with the position both at Common Law and by Statute) at para, 1130 that —

“A register is evidence of the particular transaction which it was the officer's duty to record, even though he had no personal knowledge of its occurrence. Thus, entries made by an incumbent of parish burials reported to, but not performed by him, are admissible, so, of entries of births and deaths under the Births and Deaths Registration Act 1953 S.34. But entries of matters which it was not his duty to record are inadmissible.” (Emphasis mine).

In Halsbury's Laws of England 3rd Ed. Vol. 15 P. 331 para. 678 it is stated:

“Entries in the register of births, marriages or deaths, certified copies of those entries and certified copies of the registers are prima facie, though not conclusive, proof of the particulars of all the matters required by statute to be therein,” (Emphasis mine).

In Re STOLLERY, WEIR & OTHERS v. TREASURY SOLICITOR (1926) All E.R. Rep. 67 C.A. a case dealing with certificates of birth and of death under the Births and Deaths Registration Acts 1836 and 1874, (S.38 of the 1836 Act providing that the certified copies of entries [p.51] “shall be received as evidence of birth, death or marriage, to which the same relates.”) Lord Hanworth, M.R. said inter alia at p. 75:—

“Therefore, I should agree with. the view which was taken in the next three common law cases by Phillmore J., Sir Francis Jeune P and McCardie J,— that in the absence of any special statutory provision, those particulars in the certificate, which it was the statutory duty of the registrar to inquire into and learn, and state as a result of his inquiring and learning in the certificate are admissible evidence, although subject to contradiction by other evidence of the facts therein stated.” (Emphasis mine).

And Sergeant L.J. said inter alia at pp. 79-80

“I think that observation is of particular value when one comes to the fourth certificate in question here, the certificate of the death of one of the children of the union, Harriet Ellen Brown. In that she is described as being the daughter of John Brown, a jeweler deceased. What the Act requires to be entered, and what the registrar has to make inquiries about, is the rank or profession of the deceased., You find the statement in the register of something which is not a part of the rank or profession of the deceased, namely, [p.52] that she is a daughter of John Brown, a jeweler. It seems to me that as to that, it is very doubtful whether the register or the certified copy of the register is any evidence at all, because it is something which was not inserted in the register by the officer as part of his duty under the Act. The register does not make any provision for showing who are the parents of the deceased person.” (Emphasis mine).

With regard to inquiries and reports, two cases (NORTHARD V. PEPPER (Supra) and A.G. v. ANTROBUS (1905) 2 Ch.188) illustrate the principle. NORTHARD v. PEPPER (Supra) related to an action for a collision between two ships. The defendants' counsel, in order to show that the plaintiff's ship was in fault, proposed to put in evidence the statement of the plaintiff's captain made on oath, under the Merchant Shipping Act, I854, before a receiver of wreck. It was held that such evidence was inadmissible, notwithstanding that a section of the Act enacted that such examination shall be admitted in evidence in any Court as prima facie proof of all matters contained therein, as the question as to which ship caused the damage to the other was not a matter which the receiver had power to examine into under the Act.

Erie C.J. who gave the leading judgment said inter alia at p. 783:—

"I think his report is only evidence as to the matters into which it was his duty to inquire, and the part of the hull supposed to be struck in the [p. 53] collision is not one of those matters..... Upon this review of the statute, I think the rules of law relating to evidence are altered only for a specified purpose, and that the sections are drawn with great legal knowledge confining each alteration, to its appropriate purpose; and on this construction of the Act the examination of the captain was not admissible as substantive evidence that in the collision the starboard bow of the plaintiffs ship was struck." (Emphasis mine).

And Williams J. said inter alia at p. 783—

"It was argued by Mr. Brett that the evidence was improperly rejected, and that the language of the 449th Section is given without any restriction whatever, that the examination taken in writing in pursuance of the 448th Section shall be admitted in evidence in any court of justice, as prima facie proof, as proof of all matters contained in such written examination. Now it is clear that these general words must necessarily to some extent be controlled. It never was meant that matters contained in the examination were matters spoken to by a witness without having power to speak of his own knowledge; in other words, that this matter received in evidence is not to mean any matter contained in such examination. I think it necessary [p.54] to put some limit upon the generality of the words, and it seems to me contrary to the good sense and meaning of the words to impose any other limit than that the matters contained in such written examination into which the receiver might inquire. According to the ordinary rules of law that would be so, otherwise he might inquire into matters which it was not part of his duty to make an inquiry into." (Emphasis mine).

In ATTORNEY GENERAL v. ANTROBUS (1905) 2 Ch. 188 the defendant's counsel proposed to put in a map and award made in 1847 by the Tithe Commissioners under The Tithe Act 1836. According to Section 64 of the Act, "every recital or statement in a map or plan .....shall be deemed satisfactory evidence of the matters therein recited or stated or of the accuracy of such plan". In giving his ruling Farwell J. said inter alia at p. 194:—

"I must not be understood as deciding that, in my opinion, the tithe map would be evidence on any matter (although it is a public document) which is not within the scope and purview of the authority of the Commissioners who made it. I think they have to attend to their own business and I guard myself against being supposed to say that I should hold that the tithe map was evidence of something it was not their business to ascertain". (Emphasis mine).

I now return to Ex. B. It contains the particulars prescribed in form A and more. It contains particulars like the registered number of the vehicle (i.e. WU 6303) the date of registration, the name of the owner (i.e. M.E.A. Thompson) the address of the owner, description of the vehicle including the make (i.e. Peugeot 204), engine number, classic number and renewal of licences. There is no doubt that all these particulars constitute prima facie evidence by virtue of S. 61(1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1964.

But Ex. B also contains particulars about Income Tax and Insurance Policy. The question then arises: do these additional particulars constitute prima facie evidence by virtue of S.61 (1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1964. As far as I am aware the Road Traffic Regulations, 1960 have not been amended to provide that Form A should include these particulars. So there was clearly no statutory duty on the Licensing Authority to enter particulars about Insurance policy and income tax on the register. And if there was no statutory duty to make the entries on the basis of the principles stated above, those unauthorized entries do not constitute prima facie evidence under S.61 (1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1964. Similarly if particulars about the colour of the vehicle had been entered on the register that entry would not constitute prima facie evidence of the colour of the vehicle because the colour of the vehicle is not one of the particulars prescribed in Form A. In my judgment therefore the entries in Ex. B relating to Insurance Policy are not prima facie evidence of the matters "therein stated or appearing thereon". And these were the entries relied on by the respondents to prove that a certificate of insurance in respect of a Policy of [p.56] insurance effected by the defendant and issued by the appellants in favour of the defendant in respect of the taxi car was in force on 1st august, 1971. In my opinion the entries were of no evidential value and sergeant Coker's evidence based, as it was, on them was worthless. It may be desirable to amend the Road Traffic Regulations to provide that particulars relating to the name of the insurer, the date of commencement of the insurance, the date of expiry of the insurance and the serial number of the certificate of insurance be stated in the Register of Motor Vehicles and trailers (Form A). The licensing authority would obtain these additional particulars from the certificate of insurance produced when application for licence is made, because they, and other particulars, are all stated in the certificate of insurance (see the prescribed certificate of Insurance in form A of the schedule to the cap.133 Rules). Those additional particulars would then, and only then, in my view, constitute prima facie evidence under S.61 (1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1964. Such an amendment would certainly, in my view, facilitate proof and lighten the burden on third-party claimants under S.11 (1) of cap. 133.

But let me assume that the entries in Ex. B relating to insurance Policy constitute prima facie evidence. What then is the position? I will set out the relevant entry. It is

		Renewal of Licence
		Period		Insurance Policy
Year	Licence No.	From	To	No.	Closing Date
1971	529	27/8	31/12	Z	3.8.71

In my opinion this entry would constitute prima facie evidence that a licence numbered 529 was issued in1971 in respect of the period 27 August to 31st December, [p.57] 1971 and that a Policy of Insurance numbered Z was in force but expiring in 3rd August, 1971.It should be noted that what is entered in the register (Ex. B.) is the number of the Insurance Policy and not the name of the insurer. Indeed in the register (Ex. B.) is the name of the Insurer stated. So there is no evidence on Ex. B. of the name or identity of the Insurers issuing the Policy of Insurance or the Certificate of Insurance. How then could it be said that any entry on Ex. B. constitutes prima facie of the name of the insurers? I fail to see how.

Let me assume that "Z" is a code indicating the identity of the Insurers. But in the first place no evidence of any code was give. Secondly, Sergeant Coker, not having made the entry, could only tender the document. He could not give evidence of the truth of its contents, for the simple reason that he could not vouch for the accuracy of the entry. See MYERS V. D.P.P. (Supra). The document speaks for itself. I concede that if the maker of the entry had been called, he could have given evidence based on his recollection that he saw a valid Certificate of Insurance before making the entry and that the Certificate of Insurance was issued by a particular insurer. And for this he may have refreshed his memory from the entries in Ex. B. relating to Insurance Policy. See BRYANT & DICKSON 31 Cr, App, R. 146.

On closer examination of the entry it shows that a licence was issued on 27th August.1971 and the Insurance Policy on the strength of which that licence was issued expired on 3rd August, 1971. In other words the Insurance Policy had expired some 24 days before the licence was issued. According to Rule 10 of the Rules an applicant [p.58] for a licence should produce to the licensing Authority his Certificate of Insurance "to show that on the date which the licence comes into operation there will be in force a policy". According to the entry the licence came into operation on the 27th August, 1971. So a Certificate of Insurance to show that there will be in force a policy on that date should have been produced to the licensing authority. If no such Certificate of Insurance (what I would call an operative Certificate of Insurance) was produced, then in accordance with S.6 of Cap.133 no licence should have been issued. Section 6 of Cap.133 imposes a prohibition against issuing a licence for a motor vehicle until an operative Certificate of Insurance has been produced to the licensing authority as prescribed by Rule 10 of the Rules. The entry shows quite clearly that an operative Certificate of Insurance was not produced to the licensing authority in respect of the relevant renewal of licence. Consequently a licence should not have been issued. And if no licence should have been issued, no entry should have been made. The entry was therefore unauthorized and therefore no cognizance should be taken of it. Also the presumption raised by Rule 10 of the Rules that an operative Certificate of Insurance was produced to the licensing authority is rebutted. Furthermore the prima facie evidence (which I assumed to be provided by the entry under Section 61(1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1964) is also rebutted by the entry itself.

In the end, whichever way one looks at Ex. B, the result is the same. The entry relied upon by the respondents is of no evidential value and Sergeant Coker's evidence based on it worthless.

The Court of Appeal relied heavily on Ex. B and [p.59] Sergeant Coker's evidence in drawing the inference that the said taxi car was insured with the appellant company on the date of the accident and that the appellant company had issued a Certificate of Insurance in respect of the policy. That basis having collapsed, could the inference founded on it stand? Of course if the inference was founded only on that material, it would inevitably collapse along with its foundation. But the Court of Appeal also referred to the evidence of Muctaru Mohamed Kamara, the appellants' witness in drawing their inference. So the question is, could the evidence of Kamara alone support the inference? The answer must be "No" in view of the categorical evidence of Kamara that "I, after looking my records came to the conclusion that Policy held by the Insured expired on the 2nd August, 1972 which commenced on the 3rd August, 1971. Accident took place before the vehicle was insured. Previous insurance which commenced on 2nd June, 1970 expired on 1st June, 1971. From 1st June, 1971 to 1st August, 1971 when accident took place the vehicle was not insured with our company."

In my judgment therefore the Court of Appeal drew the wrong inference from the evidence.

It only remains to consider the second issue formulated above i.e. estoppel. The evidence relied on by the respondents in support of the estoppel is that the appellants engaged a solicitor to defend the defendant and undertook the defence in the action in the High Court [p.60] by the respondents against the defendant. The Court of Appeal held this conduct of the appellants to amount to an estoppel. Learned Counsel for the appellants submitted that the conduct relied on was due to a mistake of fact, that the respondents were strangers to the estoppel and that in any case estoppel was not pleaded. This issue can be disposed of briefly. The parties to the estoppel were the defendant and the appellants. The respondents were not parties to the estoppel, they were strangers to it. It is a well established principle of law that a stranger to an estoppel cannot rely on it.

In VANDEPITTE v. PREFERRED ACCIDENT INSURANCE CORPORATION OF NEW YORK (1933) A.C. 70, the appellant obtained a judgment in British Columbia against one Mr. Berry's daughter for damages for personal injuries caused by her negligence while driving her father's motor car with his permission. Execution issued, but nothing was recovered. Mr. Berry had effected in respect of his car an insurance in his own name with the respondents, and they had taken charge of the defence of the action. By the policy the respondents agreed to indenmify the insured against third party risks, and that the indemnity should be available to any person operating the car with the permission of the insured. The appellant sued the respondents to recover the amount of the unsatisfied judgment. It was held inter alia by the Privy Council that the fact that the respondents conducted the defence of the action did not raise an estoppel available to the appellant. Learned counsel for the respondents referred us to the case of THEOPHILUS GREENE v. NEW INDIA ASSURANCE CO. LTD. Civ. App. 15/71 unreported, a decision of the Court of Appeal, in support of his submission that estoppel arises in the instant case. But the facts of that case show quite clearly that the decision is not applicable to the facts [p.61] of the instant case. The facts of that case briefly were that the insurers instructed a solicitor to represent the insured in an action instituted against the insured by third parties for personal injuries. The third parties obtained judgment against the insured. The insured then instituted action against the insurer claiming indemnity in respect of the judgment debt. The Court of Appeal held that the insurer was estopped by their conduct in defending the insured in the action instituted by the third parties from denying liability. With respect that decision is in accord with the principle stated earlier. The parties to the estoppel were the Insurer and the insured, so that the insured cold raise and rely on the estoppel. But it would have been a different matter if the third parties had raised the estoppel in subsequent action by them against the insurance company. They were not parties to the estoppel and therefore they could not have raised it. In the insurance circumstances the issue of estoppel raised by the respondents fails.

I have great sympathy for the respondents. They have a judgment debt which still remains unsatisfied. I hope that all is not lost. However, I would regrettably allow the appeal.

E. LIVESEY LUKE – J.S.C.

Cole, C.J.

My Lords, I have already had the benefit and pleasure of reading before- hand the erudite judgments of my Learned brother, the Hon. Mr. Justice E. Livesey Luke, as well as that of the Honourable Mr. Justice S.C.E. Warne. Let me straightaway make it clear that with the final conclusion of the Honourable Mr. Justice Luke I have no assent.

There is one significant point, however, in the course of the reasoning of the Honourable Mr. Justice Luke with which I do not quite agree. It relates to that portion of his judgment in which he dealt in extensor with Exhibit 'B'.

With the greatest respect, taking into account his reasoning, I do feel that in this particular instance this ---- can be distinguished from the cases he has quoted. I agree that it may not have been expressly started in our relent Acts that the Motor Traffic Licensing Authority has a duty to ---------- record in writing the pre-requisite requirements that an [p.63] operative Certificate of Insurance should be produced to them either before or at the time a licence was issued. I do feel, however, that taking into consideration all the statutory provisions to which my learned brother Justice Luke has already referred — and I will not tire you by referring to them in detail again — there seems to me an implied duty imposed on the Motor Traffic Licensing Authority to place on some kind of record the details of the relevant Certificate of Insurance presented to that Authority as required by law. Such a Licensing Authority may wish to keep separate books for recording those details before evidence for a particular vehicle is issued.

I would however endorse the procedure now carried on the Motor Traffic Licensing Authority as disclosed by Exhibit 'B' as ------ appropriate in the circumstances of this case.

In my view, this neither renders Exhibit 'B' invalid or worthless or valueless. It has some evidential value which ought to be taken into account by both the High Court, the Court of Appeal ------ ourselves in considering the case of the parties concerned. In ------, I have done ------ in coming to my final decision. If my learned brother Luke's view is accepted on this point it will mean that, ---------- apart from the sociological jurisprudential value which opounds that Courts should endeavour where possible to make the law in their society work, where a defendant mulcted in damages and costs the High Court refuses for good and sufficient reasons to produce the trial before the High Court his or her third party certificate of insurance to satisfy the provisions of Section 111 of the Motor Vehicles (Third Party Insurance) Act (Cap. 133) (which shall hereafter refer to as 'Te Act') and the insurer refuses [p.64] to do same or gives excuses that he does not keep proper records, the public will have nowhere to turn to.

In my view the main purpose of the combined effect of section 11 of the Act – the basis of the claim before the High Court – and Section 6 of the Act was well as Rule 10 of the Habor Vehicles (Third Part Insurance) Rules (Cap. 133) hereinafter referred to as 'The Rules') is that what is required to be produced to the Motor Traffic Licensing Authority and what, in my view, should be entered in the records of that Authority amongst other things, is a Certificate to show that on the date on which the licence comes into operation there will be in force – and I stress the expression 'there will be in force' – an operative policy in respect of the motor vehicle which is being licensed.

The evidence before us prove the contrary in my view. For, according to Exhibit 'B' the relevant license came into force on the 27th August 1971 which there appears to be no operative Certificate of Insurance in force.

In sum, what I am endeavoring to say shortly and simply, is this. Section 11 of the Act should quickly be amended establishing effective provisions in our laws to enable members of the public who have been given judgment by the superior courts of our Republic to be lawfully indemnified by insurers regardless of the fact that the evidence a the trial points to the fact (as in this case) that notwithstanding that the required proof produced to the Motor Traffic Licensing Authority at the relevant time shows that on the date when the licence comes into operation there will not be in force a policy of insurance, in spite of the fact that there is conclusive evidence pointing to the fact that on the date of the accident there is a valid operative policy covering third parties. This is of obvious and utmost importance because, if as the law stands at present the provisions of Section 6 of the Act as well as Rule 10 of the Rules are not complied with, then Section 11 of the Act is in-operative. It is sincerely hoped that legislative insures regarding the whole question [p.65] of Motor Vehicles Third Party Insurance in Sierra Leone will be quickly reviewed in order to avoid hardship to the public as in this case with particular reference to victims of Motor accidents.

Finally, on the question of estoppel I do agree with the views expressed by my learned brother Luke that the principles of law expressed in Vandepitte's case propound very sound doctrines of law on the subject and I will adopt and apply them.

I do not think any useful purpose will be served in remitting this case to the High Court for a re-trail because Exhibit 'B' speaks for itself most eloquently. It is my sincere hope that the particular circumstances of this case, the appellants would not take gross advantage of legal technicalities. I say no more than this; that they will be properly and suitably advised in the public interest by their legal representative.

I would allow the appeal.

C.O.E. Cole

Chief Justice

Awunor-Renner, J.A.

My Lords, I have had the opportunity and pleasure of reading the erudite judgment of my Honourable and Learned brother Luke, J.S.C. I wish to express my gratitude and great appreciation for the industry he had exerted and the lucid reasoning has advanced in giving at his final conclusion. However, with the greatest respect for him, I do not agree with this reasoning nor the final conclusion. Consequently, My Lords, I shall treat the cause before us in this way.

The facts of the case have been clearly stated by my learned brother Luke, J.S.C. and the course the cause has traveled to this …… I entirely agree with him on what is to be proved by the respondents as required by S. 11(1) of Motor Vehicles (Third Party appearance) Act Cap. 133 of the Laws of Sierra Leone (hereinafter called …….. Act"). I shall not tire you with a repetition of what my [p.67] Learned brother has already stated.

It is my considered judgment that the claim of the respondents under section 11(1) of the act is Absolute. The respondents are not parties to the contract between the insurer and the insured, nonetheless this section gives the Respondents the right to make the claim. See sub-section 11(1) beginning at "not withstanding"……to end.

I agree with the matters which, my learned brother said are beyond dispute with regard to police sergeant Coker's evidence. Under (iv), I feel the requirements stated therein, in accordance with S. 6 of "The Act" and Rule 10 of the Motor Vehicles (Third party Insurance) Rules deal with the issue of road licence for the vehicle. This has nothing to do with third party under "The Act" except in so far the expiry date of the policy of insurance is concerned vis a vis his claim under S.11(1) of "The Act"

My Lords, I do not think it is necessary for this Court, in the instant case, to construe the provision of S.6 of "The Act" since the issue of a valid road licence for car WU.6303 does not arise. In order to sustain their claim, the resemblance did not have to prove whether the vehicle had a valid road licence or not.

What is the evidential value of Exh. "B"? I will concede that the Principal Licensing Authority entered more particulars of Ex "B" than was required by Law. Did this render the entry valid or no evidential value? I do not think so.

I will examine the provision of law which made Exh. "B" receivable in evidence S.61 (1) Road Traffic Act, No 62 of 64 had cured the infraction of what would otherwise be hearsay evidence.

S. 61(1) reads:

"In any cause or matter relating to a motor vehicle or to any licence, permit certificate or other document, issued under this Act or any regulation made hereunder, the production of a document purporting to be a copy of any [p.68] entry in a register or a copy of a licence, permit certificate or other document as aforesaid by or from the records of the al Licensing Authority or a Licensing Authority, or any officer deputed by such authority for that purpose, shall be prime facie evidence of any matter, fact or thing stated or appearing thereon."

It is therefore evident that the entries on Exh. "B" are prima facie evidence of what is stated thereon, provided the entries are ones required to be made according to law.

See Lyell V Kennedy 14App. Cas. 437 at 449

However a clear distinction must be drawn between the cases referred to by my Learned brother and myself supra, from the instant case. This Hon, Court has never been called upon to interpret the entries on the Register of Motor Vehicles And Trailers, nor has it ever given an opinion on their evidential value. In a long line of cases it has been held that what is not required to be entered according to law cannot be admissible in evidence as proof of such entry. It should be noted, however, that these cases have dealt primarily with registration of births, deaths, baptisms, marriages, and pedigree. In a cause of this nature, it is my considered view that the principle is not applicable.

As my Learned brother has clearly pointed out the relevant entry on Exh. "B" is:

RENEWAL OF LICENCE

PERIOD				INSURANCE POLICY
Year	Licence No.	From	To	No.	Closing Date
1971	529	27/8	31/12	z	3.8.71

The entries about insurance on Exh. "B" appear not to be those that should have been on it, but this was a document which ought to be produced under S.6 of the Act to the Licensing Authority, to obtain road licence. I think the Principal of [p.69] Licensing Authority had an implied duty to record which union of the Certificate Insurance so produced on Exh. "B". My Lords, the provision S.6 would be defeated if this were not done. Indeed the object in the Act would be nullified and the interest of Justice would not be promoted. In my opinion, this entry of the certificate of Insurance constitutes prima facie evidence, that Policy of Insurance identified "Z" expired on 3rd August, 1971.

One cannot go beyond what is on Exh. "B" S. 61 (1), which refers: also evidence is rebuttable but this has not been done.

This is the evidence the respondents relied on to prove their claim against Appellant, that on the 1st August, 1971 when the accident took place, the vehicle WU.6303 was insured with the Appellants company.

In any case, Ken During J. in making his findings did not rely only on this evidence, and rightly so. He considered the entire evidence before him. He relied also on the evidence of Muctarr Mohamed Kamara the witness for the Appellants.

The Learned Judge had this to say:

“In fact there is no evidence before this Court that the defendants were Insurers against Third Party risks of Mr. Thompson at the material time the accident took place.”

In the Court of Appeal, the Court found that there was some evidence before the High Court and they proceeded to evaluate and draw the necessary inference; the Court went further and dealt with the issue of estoppel in view of the evidence. The evidence of Police sergeant Coker has been stated in the judgment of my Learned brother. The evidence of Muctarr Kamara is pregnant with facts which the respondents could not have known or given in evidence.

My Lords, I am of the opinion that the Court of Appeal, after careful consideration of the evidence before the Lower Court drew correct inference that WU. 6303 was inspired with the Appellant [p.70] Company on the 1st August, 1971. The Court had this to say: “I think from this evidence it would have been proper to draw that the inference that the vehicle was insured on the 1st August 1971.”

My opinion is fortified not only by entry of the expiry date of Certificate of Insurance on Ex. "B", but also by the evidence of Kamara that “H.B.A”. Thompson has a fleet policy with us. Payment Exh. D ’F would be taken into account when it comes to payment of premium in respect of fleet policy; WU.6303 is part of fleet policy held by her. I cannot say whether the fleet taken in more than the two vehicles I have mentioned. She has more than 2 vehicles insured with us under fleet policy. Provided I am instructed I actually renew policy even though premium not paid. I have previously renewed on instruction M.E.A. Thompson policy in respect of vehicle insured with us.”

I will only add this point to what my learned brother has said about the issue of estoppel. That is to say, estoppel must be pleaded at the first opportunity. This, the respondents failed to do. They therefore cannot avail themselves of the issue of estoppel.

My Lords, in view of what I have said supra, I would dismiss the appeal. The appeal is accordingly dismissed.

WINIFRED E. HARRIS v. ROXY J. HARRIS

[SUP.CT.MISC.APP. 1/77] [122-123]

DIVISION: THE SUPREME COURT OF SIERRA LEONE

BETWEEN

WINIFRED E. HARRIS - APPELLANT,

AND

ROXY J. HARRIS - RESPONDENT

RULING

On 19th December, 1977 the Court of Appeal refused the applicant herein leave to appeal to the Supreme Court against an order of the Court of Appeal dated 12th July, 1977 dismissing the applicant's appeal against an order of the High Court dated 4th May, 1976. By Notice of Motion dated 21st December, 1977 the applicant has applied to this Court for Special leave to appeal to the Supreme Court.

Learned Counsel for the applicant raised the following questions of law, which he submitted ought to be submitted to the Supreme Court for determination:-

(i) Whether Section 56(l)(b) of the Courts Act, No. 31 of 1965, fetters in any way or contains any pre-condition for the exercise of the discretion of a Judge of the High Court in granting leave to an applicant to appeal against his interlocutory Order. If there is no such fetter, and if there is no pro-condition imposed by the said sub-section before granting leave, IN THE ABSENCE OF AN APPEAL, HAS THE COURT OF APPEAL any jurisdiction to call in question the exercise of the Judge’s discretion in granting leave to appeal?

(ii) Where the High Court or a Judge thereof has granted leave to appeal pursuant to an application made by an aggrieved party by virtue of Section 56 (l)(b) of the Court Act, and the Order drawn up, perfected, filed and acted upon, IN THE ABSENCE OF AN APPEAL AGAINST SUCH AN ORDER, has the Court of Appeal any jurisdiction to inquire into the validity or otherwise of the said Order and refuse to assume jurisdiction and hear the appeal?

(iii) Where the High Court or a Judge thereof in granting leave to an applicant to appeal against his own ruling, and in doing so, acted within the powers conferred upon him by section 36(1)(b) of the Courts Act, 1963, and moreover did nothing directly contrary to Rule 10 of the Court of Appeal [p.123] Rules, or assumed to himself new power which expressly taken away from him by the said Rule 10 or any other enactment, is the Order granting such leave to appeal void so as to deprive the Court of Appeal of any jurisdiction to entertain the appeal? If not has the Court of Appeal any right to ignore the existence of the Order even though there has not been an appeal against It?

(iv) In the instant case, the Court of Appeal having entertained and determined an appeal against the Order of Williams J. dated the 11th day of May, 1976 wholly setting aside his own order dated 5th May 1976 which had granted the appellant leave to appeal against his (Williams J) interlocutory order of 4th May, 1976, can it thereafter say it had no jurisdiction to entertain the appellant's appeal against the substantive order of 4th May 1976 in the same matter?

In our opinion the questions raised are of general importance. We accordingly grant the applicant special leave to appeal against the Order of the Court of Appeal dated 12th July, 1977 in respect of the four questions law raised.

Mr. B.A.C. Johnson for Respondent.

JUDGMENT DELIVERED

Tejan, J. S. C.

The events leading to this appeal can be briefly summarized as follows:- On the 24th day of March, 1976 the Respondent filed a petition against the petitioner for dissolation of marriage. A conditional appearance was made to set aside the petition for some violation of the Matrimonial Causes Rules on the 4th day of May, 1976. This application was dismissed by Williams J. The appellant, on the 5th day of May, 1976, on an ex parte application by summons applied for leave to appeal against the dismissal of his application. Leave was granted and on the same day, the appellant filed the order granting leave and also filed a notice of appeal in the Registry of the Court of Appeal. Shortly after the filing of the notice of appeal, the Respondent applied to the same Judge to set [p.129] aside his order of 5th May, 1976. The Judge having heard counsel for the Respondent in the absence of Counsel for Appellant, by Order dated 11th May, 1976, set aside the Order of 5th May, 1976. The Appellant becoming aware of Order of 11th May, 1976 applied to the Court of Appeal for an extension of time within which to appeal. The application was granted by the Court of Appeal on the 22nd June 1976 and the Court ordered that all proceedings be delayed until the Appeal against the Order of 4th May, 1976 be heard and determined. On the 18th March, 1977, and appeal against the Order of 11th May, 1976, was heard and determined by a differently constituted panel of the Court of Appeal. The Court allowed the appeal and made the Order in these terms:

"We order that the order made herein on the 11th day of May, 1976 setting aside the order herein made on 5th May, 1976, granting leave to appeal be set aside."

In passing, I think it is necessary to comment on this order of the Court of Appeal since there had been no application challenging the correctness or otherwise of that order. I would have thought that the urge to challenge the order was irrestible. However, since there had been nor application to challenge that order, it follows that the order of 5th May be restored and is therefore subsisting.

On the 25th March, 1977, the appeal against the order of 4th May, 1976 came before the Court of Appeal, and the Respondent raised a preliminary objection, notice thereof dated 16th March, 1977 having been given and filed. On the 6th day of July, 1977, the Court of Appeal delivered its ruling and the relevant portion reads:—

"I do not agree with Mr. Johnson that the words in section 56(1) (b) of the Courts Act by leave of judge making the order shall [p.130] be taken to mean that an applicant should go by summons and not by motion. An applicant can go by motion or summons depending on the rule applicable and the procedure laid down. Even if it was proper to go before the judge who made the order by summons, justice would demand that he should not do so ex parte unless the Judge for good cause so directs. The other side ought to be heard. Rule 10(1) specifically states the procedure to be followed when an applicant applies for leave to appeal to this Court and this rule in my opinion must be strictly followed. The Rule making Committee in my view in their wisdom made this rule there being no other rule laying down the procedure to be followed when an applicant asks leave to appeal to this Court against an interlocutory order. I do not agree with Mr. Johnson that the order was properly obtained to entitle us to assume jurisdiction, notwithstanding the order has not been set aside or appealed against the respondent. I would hold that we cannot entertain the appeal, that is to say assume jurisdiction and hear the appeal and would dismiss the appeal."

It is against that ruling the appellant has appealed to this court. There are four grounds of appeal but I do not consider it necessary to set them out. The following is a summary of the submissions which the appellant made in support of his appeal:—

(a) Whether jurisdictional power is conferred on the Judge who made the order of 5th May, 1976 giving leave to appeal;

(b) Whether an application for leave to appeal can properly be made by summons;

(c) If the application cannot properly be made by summons, what is the effect of an order obtained by an application by summons.

[p.131]

Mr. Johnson submitted that once a judge has made an order granting leave to appeal, that order stands whether or not the application was made by summons or motion. Mr. Garber on the other hand submitted that a Judge can only properly exercise his discretion to grant leave to appeal if the application is made under Rule 10 (l) of the Court of Appeal Rules, and that if the application was made otherwise than by motion, the discretion is not properly exercised judicially and the order is invalid. Section (l) of section 40 of the Courts Act has been repealed and replaced by section 2 of the Courts Amendment Act, No. 2 of 1972. This section enacts that "Subsection (l) of section 40 of the Principal Act is hereby repealed and replaced by the following new subsection—

(1) Subject to the provisions of this Part, the Rules of Court Committee established by section 22 may make rules of Court regulating the practice and procedure of the Court in the exercise of its jurisdiction, and, in connection with appeals brought to the Court, the practice and procedure of any Court from which appeals are brought.

Section 56 (1) provides that "subject to the provisions of this section, an appeal shall lie to the Court of appeal

(a) …….

(b) by leave of the Judge making the order or of the Court of Appeal from any interlocutory judgment, order or other decision, given or made in the exercise of any such jurisdiction as aforesaid.

Provided that no appeal shall lie, except by leave of the Court or Judge making the order or of the Court of Appeal.

(i) from an order- made ex parte, or

(ii) from an order as to costs only, or

(iii) from an order made by the consent of the parties.

[p.132]

It is not necessary to set out the composition of the Rules of Court Committee established by section 22 of the Courts Amendment Act No. 2 of 1972. Suffice it to say that the Committee was empowered by section 2 of Act No.2 of 1972 to make rules affecting the practice and procedure of the High Court, Court of Appeal and the Supreme Court.

I now come to the submissions made by Mr. Johnson and Mr. Garber set out earlier in this judgment. The important question is 'Did the Judge have jurisdiction to grant leave to appeal? According to section 56 of the Courts Act, the Judge clearly had jurisdiction to grant leave to appeal. Admittedly the procedure adopted to seek leave to appeal was irregular, but in my opinion that did not affect the jurisdiction conferred on the Judge by section 56 of the Courts Act. The next question, is "was, the order obtained on the application by summons a nullity ? In my judgment, the order would only he a nullity if the Judge had no jurisdiction to make it.

It was submitted by the appellant that the expression "by leave of the Judge making the order" in Section 56(1)(b) requires that the application must be made by summons. He further submitted that rule 10 (1) of the Court of Appeal is silent as to the procedure to be adopted when an application for "leave of the Judge" is required and that therefore rule 10(1) is applicable. It was conceded by both Counsel that the Court of Appeal Rules were made in pursuance of the Courts Act (As amended by Act No. 2 of 1972), and one of the objects of the rules was to regulate the practice and procedure to be followed by the Court in the exercise of its jurisdiction. Section 56 is what confers jurisdiction and Rule 10(1) is the provision laying down the practice and procedure in all cases where leave is required under section 56 of the Courts [p.133] Act, and that is, by notice of motion. The expression "leave by the Judge making the order" simply means that the application is to heard by the Judge who made the order.

Having regard to sections 1 and 2 of the Courts (Amendment) Act, 1972, and rule 10(l) I am at a loss to appreciate how the Court of Appeal arrived at the decision that "leave by the Judge making the order" can be either by summons or motion depending on the particular case. In every case, application for leave to appeal must be made by notice of motion. So quite clearly, the application made was irregular on which the order of 5th May, 1976 was obtained

What is required to be determined is whether the order of 5th May, 1970 was a nullity or a mere irregularity. The solution of this issue demands upon whether the order was void or voidable. The question now arises whether the Judge had the jurisdiction to make the order. I have stated out earlier that the procedure applied by the appellant to seek leave to appeal was irregular, but the irregularity did not affect the jurisdiction conferred on the Judge by section 56 of the Courts Act.

Lord Denning delivering the judgment in the case of Macfoy v. U.A.C. Ltd. (1962) A.C. l52 at 159 dealt with non compliance of the Rules of Court. In this particular he was dealing with order 50 Rule 1 to 4 of the Rules of the High Court of Sierra Leone. His Lordship said: This rule would appear at first sight to give the Court a complete discretion in the matter. But it has been held that it only applies to proceedings which are voidable, and not to proceedings which are nullity: for those are automatically void and a person affected by them can apply to have them set aside ex debito justified in the inherent jurisdiction of the Court without going under the rule: See Anlaby v. Practorious (1858) 200 B.D. 746; 4 P.L.R. 439 C.A.

The defendant here sought to say, therefore, that the delivery of the statement of claim in the long vacation was a nullit [CIS] and not a mere irregularity. This is the same, as saying that it was void and not merely voidable. The distinction, between the two has been repeatedly drawn. If an act is void then it is in law a nullity. It is not only bad, but incurably bad. There is no need for an order of the Court to set it aside. It is automatically 'null and void without more ado, though it is sometimes convenient to have the Court to declare it to be so. And very proceeding which is founded on it is also bad and incurably bad. You cannot put something on nothing and expect it to stay there. It will collapse. So will this judgment collapse if the statement of claim was a nullity. But if an act is only voidable, then it is not automatically void. It is only an irregularity which may be waived. It is not to be avoided unless something is done to avoid it. There must be an order of the Court setting it aside: and the Court has discretion whether to set it aside or not. It would do so if justice demands it but not otherwise. Meanwhile it remains good and a support for all that has been done under it. So will this statement of claim be a support for the judgment, if it was only voidable and not void.

No Court has ever attempted to lay down a decisive test for distinguishing between the two: but one test which is often useful is to suppose that the other side waived the flaw in the proceedings or took some fresh step after knowledge of it, could he afterwards, in justice, complain of the flaw? Suppose for instance, in this case that the defendant, well knowing that the statement of claim had been delivered in the long vacation, had delivered a defence to it? could he afterwords [CIS]have applied to dismiss the action for want of prosecution? [p.135] asserting that no statement of claim had been delivered? clearly not. That shows that the delivering of the statement of claim in long vacation is only voidable. It is not void. It is only an irregularity and not a nullity. It is good until avoided. In this case, the statement of claim not being avoided, it took effect, at the end of the long vacation and the time for defence then began to run. Likewise when the plaintiff signed judgment in default of defence that too was voidable but not void. It was not a nullity. It was therefore a matter for the discretion of the Court whether it should be set aside or not".

On the basis of the principles which I have just stated, I am of the view that the application made by summons instead of by a notice of motion rendered the order of 5th May 1976 voidable. The order was a mere irregularity and cannot in my opinion be said to be a nullity. Therefore the order was subsisting when it came before the Court of Appeal on 25th March 1977 and the/of Appeal was bound to take cognisance of it.

As set out earlier, the respondent sought to challenge the validity of the order by way of preliminary objection. But I am of the view that since it is a subsisting order, the only way it could have been challenged is by way of cross-appeal. If an appeal is incompetent, the respondent should cross-appeal, and not wait till the hearing, to object to its competency.

In this judgment, the Court of Appeal was clearly wrong in entertaining the preliminary objection and in refusing to assume jurisdiction to hear the appeal. The appeal is still pending and the appellant is entitled to have his appeal heard and determined by the Court of Appeal.

For these reasons I would allow the appeal and order that the appeal be remitted to the Court of Appeal for hearing.

Mr. Ade Renner-Thomas for Appellant

Mr. T.S Johnson for Respondent

RULING

TEJAN J.S.C.

By an agreement dated 6th day of February 1974 the respondent agreed to sell premises situate and lying at 33A Kainkordu Road, Koidu Town in the Kono District of the Eastern Province of the Republic of Sierra Leone for the sum of Le8,200,00 to the appellant of No.14 Section 11 Koidu Town in the Kono District in the Eastern Province at Sierra Leone. The agreement stipulated that the respondent was to remain possession of the said premises for a period of six months without payment of rent and that the said period was to end on the 31st day [p.51] of July, 1974. It was witnessed by several witnesses who thumb-printed it. The appellant then paid the agreed sum of Le8, 200.00 to the respondent.

After the 31st day of July 1974, the respondent neither gave up possession nor conveyed the premises to the appellant who then instituted proceedings against him by the issue of a Writ of Summons dated 18th day of April, 1975, claiming a decree of specific performance of the contract of sale, vacant possession of the premises and mesne profits from the 1st day of August 1974 to the date of giving vacant possession.

The respondent admitted in receiving the sum of Le8,200.00 but asserted that the sum of Le8,200.00 was received by him by way of a pledge or mortgage on the house which was a family property. The Respondent, however, agreed to pay into Court the full amount of Le8, 200.00.

On the 22nd day of January, 1976, the case came before Thompson-Davies J. for trial, and who after having heard the evidence and arguments on both sides, delivered on the 13th day of July, 1977, judgment in the following terms:—

"For all these reasons I find myself unable to grant the relief sought by the plaintiff. The plaintiff is entitled to have his money since to my mind exhibit "A" seems spurious and incomplete.

I cannot find my way clear to award [p.52] any damages. While refusing the plaintiff's request for specific performance I would order that the defendant do refund the sum of Le8, 200.00 to the plaintiff and that he pay the costs of this action. Such costs to be taxed."

In support of his conclusion, he relied on the passage in Halsbury Laws of England 3rd Edition.

Vol. 36 paragraph 359 at page 263 which reads thus:—

The remedy of specific performance is thus in contrast with the remedy by way of damages for breach of contract, which gives pecuniary compensation for failure to carry out the terms of the contract. The remedy is special and extraordinary in its character and the Court has a discretion to grant it, or to leave the parties to their rights at law. The discretion is however not an arbitrary or capricious discretion; it is a discretion to be exercised on fixed principles in accordance with the previous authorities. The Judge must exercise his discretion in a judicial manner. If the contract is valid in form and has been made between competent parties and is unobjectionable in its nature and circumstances, specific performance is in effect granted as a matter of course, even though the Judge may think it involves hardship."

[p.53]

The Trial Judge referred to paragraph 389:

"Where it is sought to enforce specific performance of a contract, the Court must be satisfied.

(1) That there is a concluded contract in fact;

(2) that the contract so concluded is not incomplete by reason that the parties have failed to agree expressly or by implication on some essential matter, or by reason that it fails to comply with statutory requirements relating to contract;

(3) that the contract is precise and certain or in other wares, that although all essential matters may have been dealt with, there is not such uncertainty and vagueness that exact performance cannot be ordered."

In the course of his judgment, the Learned Trial Judge said:

"Now the contract relied on by the plaintiff is contained in Exhibit "A" which without doubt speaks against the Illiterates Protection Act Cap. 104 Laws of Sierra Leone: that being so it is not sufficient to transfer any interest in land. Taking a closer look at the said document it seems to me that it was never signed by the defendant, that is the party to be charged, or his agent; [p.54] this is in clear breach of the statutory requirements — Section 4 of the Statute of Frauds 1677. It is true that the name of the Defendant is type-written on the document but on the thumb-print against which his name is typed is the name Alhaji Mohamed Saccoh (R.T.P.).

This makes it doubtful as to whose thumb-print is affixed to it. Since the said exhibit "A" fails to comply with these statutory requirements I would submit that 'the alleged contract is incomplete".

It is against the judgment that the appellant appealed to the Court of Appeal on the following grounds:—

(1) That the Learned Trial Judge erred in holding that a breach of the Illiterates Protection Act, Cap. 104 of the Laws of' Sierra Leone bars the transfer of any interest in hand.

(2) That the Learned Trial Judge was wrong in law in refusing to award damages to the plaintiff' in substitution for specific performance.

(3) That the judgment is against the weight of the evidence.

On the 6th day of July, 1979, the judgment of the Court of Appeal was delivered by Navo J.A. The Court of Appeal, after having agreed with Counsel's contention in ground 1, then proceeded to consider ground 2.

[p.55]

It seems to me that the wording of ground 2 is quite clear, and that no other meaning could be attached to it then that there is a clear appeal against the refusal of the Trial Judge to award damages.

But the Court of Appeal, instead of dealing with ground 2 as stated in the grounds of appeal went exhaustively into the law relating to specific performance and then made the following orders:—

(i) In the absence of evidence of the value of the property at the date of the judgment, we order the respondent to pay to the appellant his deposit of Le8,200.00 plus 5% interest per annum thereon from 1st August 1974 to date.

(ii) We order the respondent to pay to the appellant the sum of Le4,000.00 damages for loss of his bargain.

(iii) That the amount on this judgment be met within two months from today’s date, in default of payment, we order specific performance of the contract entered into on the 6th day of February 1974 that the respondent do deliver vacant possession and convey to the appellant the property referred to and known as 33A Kainkordu Road, Koidu in the Eastern Province of the Republic of Sierra Leone.

(iv) We award the appellant the costs of this action in this Court and in the Court below, such costs to be taxed.

[p.56]

When the appeal came before this Court, Mr. Johnson raised a preliminary objection that the appellant should not be allowed to argue paragraph 5 of the notice of appeal. This paragraph which falls under the reliefs sought reads:

"(i) That the judgment of the Court of Appeal to the extent that it awarded damages instead of specific performance be set aside and reversed.

(ii) That judgment be entered for the appellant for (a) Specific Performance, (b) Possession (c) Mesne Profits.

Counsel's contention is that Mr. Renner-Thomas, Counsel for the appellant cannot base any argument on the reliefs sought since there has been no appeal before the Court of Appeal against the refusal of the Learned Trial Judge to grant a decree of specific performance, and that the appeal before the Court of Appeal was against the refusal of the Trial Judge to award damages. In effect, the appellant's Counsel would be introducing new matter which was never argued before the Court, of Appeal. This Court upheld Counsel's contention and decided to give a ruling later.

There is a long line of well-established authorities which support the contention of Respondent's Counsel. See: — North Staffordshire Railway Company v. Edge (1920). App. Cas. 254; Thom v. Bigland 8 Ex. 725; Connecticut Fire Insurance Co. v. Kavenegh (1892) A.C. 473. The Tasmania, (1890) 15 App. Cas. 223 and 225.

However, Rule 9 (6) of the Court of Appeal Rules clearly states that "notwithstanding the foregoing provisions the Court in deciding the appeal shall not be confined to the grounds set forth by the appellant.

"Provided that the Court shall not rest its decision on any ground not set forth by the appellant unless the parties have had sufficient opportunity of contesting the case on that ground."

There is nothing on the record to how that the parties argued before the Court of Appeal on the issue of specific performance. However, Mr. Renner-Thomas in reply, conceded that he could find no material to enable him to invoke Rule 9(6) of the Court of Appeal Rules. Indeed, if the Court of Appeal decided to deal with the issue of specific performance, the Court could have invited both Counsel to address it on the issue, but according to the record this was not done. But the Court of Appeal, contrary to well-established principles and in particular to Rule 9(6) of the Court of Appeal Rules went on to deal exhaustively with the issue of specific performance, and making references to irrelevant authorities which I think would be futile to mention.

This Court in the case of Idrissa Conteh v. Abdul J. Kamara S/C Civ. App. No. 2/79 dealt with a similar matter, and Livesey Luke C.J. in his judgment said:—

"In my opinion, in the circumstances just related, the Court of Appeal should have adverted its mind to Rule 9(6) [p.58] of the Court of Appeal Rules 1973 and invited argument on special damages".

This Court therefore upholds the submission of the Respondent's Counsel.

Having disposed of the issue of specific performance, there are two matters which I think I have to consider particularly with regard to the orders made by the Court of Appeal.

The first is whether the Court of Appeal was right, having come to the conclusion that an award of damages would meet the ends of justice, to limit the time within which the amount awarded should be paid. I have made exhaustive researches in this aspect but I have not been able to find any authority to support the order made by the Court of Appeal. Even in the absence of authority but from my own experience there are remedies provided by law to enable a successful litigant to recover an award of damages. Some of these are by way of the issue of judgment debtor summons and writ of fieri facias. In my opinion therefore this order of Court of Appeal was untenable.

The next point is whether the Court of Appeal was right in awarding damages and then in default specific performance. Mr. Renner-Thomas attacked this order on the ground that it was wrong for the Court of Appeal to do so.

Specific performance is an equitable remedy, given by the Court to enforce against a defendant the duty of doing what he has agreed by contract to do.

Damages in breach of contract is a common law remedy, and it is my view that when the law states damages [p.59] may be awarded in lieu of specific performance, it does not mean that the remedies may be awarded in thee alternative. I uphold Mr. Renner-Thomas' argument on this point that the Court of Appeal was wrong to award damages, in default of payment thereof the alternative of specific performance.

Learned Counsel for the appellant submitted that in view of the erroneous order, particularly, order (111) by Court of Appeal the appeal should be allowed and on order for specific performance made because he contented that the Court of Appeal must have come to the conclusion that this was suitable case for an order for specific performance. In my opinion, that cannot be so. Because the Court of Appeal in their judgment clearly came to the conclusion that this was a proper case where an award of damages rather than an order of specific performance would meet the end of Justice. Therefore in my opinion, any reference made by Court of Appeal in its order to specific performance was mere surplusage. This Court has ample power to amend orders of Lower Courts, and by virtue of those powers I propose that we amend the orders of the Court of Appeal by deleting order (111).

Subject to this, I would dismiss the appeal.

AND

ANTHONY J. NAVO — RESPONDENT

J.H. Smythe Esq. Q.C. (with Manly-Spaine) for Appellant

J. T. Massaquoi Esq. for Respondent.

DAVIES J.S.C.

The plaintiff Mr. Anthony Jacob Navo entered the employment of Messrs Bata Shoe Co, the defendants on 14th August 1961. He started off as a salesman. He entered into a fresh written agreement of service with the defendants after every completed year of service. He continued in the defendants employment until his services were terminated on 30th April 1976.

The plaintiff was dissatisfied with the termination of his services by the defendants. He sued them claiming (a) damages for wrongful dismissal, (b) damages for wrongful deprivation of the benefit of earning commission and (e) damages for wrongful reduction of [p.37] salary. The defendants resisted his claim.

The action was tried by Williams, J. who apart from awarding the plaintiff his earned commission from! the week 36/75 (which would be about the second week in September 1975) to 30th April 1976, virtually dismissed the claim.

The plaintiff then appealed to the Court of Appeal. His complaints were that Williams J had refused to award (a) damages for wrongful reduction of salary (b) damages for wrongful dismissal and (c) general damages.

The Court of Appeal heard the appeal and allowed it. Cole J.A. delivering the unanimous judgment of the Court summed it up in these words:—

"In the main I have come to find that the termination of the Appellant was wrongful, the cancellation of his earned commission and the reduction of his salary were also wrongful.

The total amount of damages the Appellant is entitled to having regard to settled authorities are as follows. The difference between one month's salary which the Appellant should have received.

Loss of earned commission from weeks 25–36, 37, 38, 39/75 and on to 30th April 1976.

Loss of salary at the rate of Le14.00 per week as from week 51/75 on to the 30th April 1976 ....."

[p.38]

It is that judgment which has given rise to the present appeal.

The arguments before this Court fall under three topics.

Firstly, were the plaintiff’s services wrongfully terminated'? As I had said earlier in this judgment, the plaintiff and defendants entered into a fresh contract in writing at the expiration of every completed year of the former's services. The agreement at the date of termination of the plaintiff's services contained a clause relating to its termination. It is contained in Clause 9. It stipulates—

"Either party may terminate this agreement at any time and without cause by giving not less than one month prior notice in writing of such termination, and if such notice be given, this agreement shall terminate on the date specified in the notice. During the period after the giving of any such notice and before the effective date of the termination, the Company may at its election discontinue the pay until the effective date of termination." (Emphasis mine)

According to the terms of clause 9 therefore, the plaintiff or the defendants had the right to terminate the agreement between them "at any time and without cause" for such termination. This brings me to an examination of the defendants' letter to the plaintiff terminating the latter's services under the agreement It reads—

PERSONNEL OFFICER."

The defendants letter stipulated no cause for the termination of the plaintiff's services under the agreement. The plaintiff claimed that he had been wrongfully dismissed (that is to say that he had been dismissed without just cause or excuse) in consequence of that letter. Paragraph 7 of the plaintiff's statement of claim contained the allegation of wrongful dismissal. It reads—

"7. The defendants on the 30th April, 1976, gave the plaintiff one month's salary in lieu of notice, to quit his employment, and wrongfully dismissed the plaintiff without reasonable and/or proper notice and/or cause."

The defendants refused to be drawn into any contention as to whether there was reasonable and/or proper cause necessitating their termination of the plaintiff's services without cause, under the agreement. The defence stated inter alia —

"6. The defendants deny that they wrongfully dismissed the plaintiff.

"7. The defendants will contend that the plaintiff's appointment with them was terminated by letter dated 30th April 1976 according to Clause 9 of [p.41] the Agreement of employment between the plaintiff and the defendants. The issue when the matter went to trial was whether the plaintiff's services had been wrongfully terminated having regard to Clause 9 of the agreement between the parties.

At the hearing Counsel for the plaintiff tendered in evidence certain correspondence between the parties relative to the plaintiff's discharge of his duties. The last of such correspondence was dated 16th December 1975. It became clear during the closing speech of the plaintiff's Counsel that one of the purpose for which the correspondence was put in evidence, was to suggest to the Court that the defendants reason for terminating the plaintiff's services was heir claim that his services were satisfactory Counsel said—

"I submit that up to the time of his dismissal the plaintiff's services were never unsatisfactory. It is for the defendants to prove that his services were unsatisfactory."

That argument did not find favour with Williams J.

The same argument was apparently put before the Court of Appeal. In dealing with the point Cole J.A. said—

"Let me hasten to state that in the instant case the respondent did not give any reason for terminating the appellant's services. This is in keeping with Clause 9 of the agreement."

[p.42]

The learned Justice was quick to add the following statement—

"However it is my view that Exhibit 'M' dated 30th April 1976 is by implication the culminating effect of Exhibits 'C', D', 'E,'F' 'J' and etc."

There was no justification for the learned Justice's attempt in furnishing a cause for the termination of the plaintiff's' services.

The defendants in my view had acted within the provision of Clause 9 of the agreement relative to termination without cause.

Secondly, 'was the notice terminating the plaintiff's services adequate in this particular ease'?

The defendants had given the plaintiff a month's salary in lieu of notice. Clause 9 of the agreement dealt with notice of termination. It enjoined whichever party wishing to terminate the agreement to give to the other "not less than one month prior notice in writing".

Counsel for the plaintiff contended that the duration of the notice to be given was uncertain. It had a minimum period and that the maximum period was uncertain. He argued that it could be anything over a month depending on what was reasonable in the circumstances. The trial judge came to the conclusion that a month's notice was adequate and reasonable. Counsel for the plaintiff repeated his argument in the High. Court before the Court of Appeal. The Court of Appeal accepted Counsel's submission and held that reasonable notice in the circumstances should be six months. The issue on this point turns on the construction of the phrase 'not less than one month'.

[p.43]

The phrase 'not less than' in the computation of time has been the subject of judicial construction.

See Chambers v Smith (1843) 12 M & W 2, In Re Railway sleepers Supply Co (1885) 29 Gh D. 204. In R. v. Turner 1910 1 K.B. 346 at 359 in construing the phrase Channell J. said—

"Section 10(4)(b) of the Prevention of Crime Act 1908 provides that not less than seven days notice must be given to the proper officer of the Court and to the offender. The question whether the words 'not less than seven days' mean clear days is a troublesome one to answer as there have been decisions upon similar words which are not exactly in accord. Those decisions depend upon particular statutes and may therefore all be right and yet bring about apparently conflicting results. We have come to the conclusion that; the decision most nearly' in point is that in Chambers v." Smith, referred to by Chitty J. in In Re Railway Sleepers Supply Co. where he reviewed the authorities. In Chambers v. Smith the words were 'not' being less than fifteen days, and the court in the first instance held that what I may call the ordinary rule applied, namely, that where a certain number of days are specified they are to be reckoned exclusive of one of the days and, inclusive of the other unless clear days are expressed. But [p.44] although that is the rule, the difficulty is to ascertain whether clear days are expressed by the language of the particular statute. In Chambers v. Smith the court after having in the first instance thought that the words 'not less than fifteen days" were to be construed according to what I have called the ordinary rule namely inclusive of one of the days and exclusive of the other, on re-consideration came to the conclusion that they were to be construed as meaning fifteen clear days. The words upon which that decision was based are the nearest to be found in the authorities to those which we have to construe in the present case, and we therefore come to the conclusion that the provision that 'not less than seven days' notice has to be given means 'seven/clear days' notice and we so answer the question."

'Not less than' so many days or weeks means 'clear' days or weeks, as the authorities indicate since Chambers v. Smith. That construction of the phrase in the statutes is equally recognised in the construction of deeds and other writings. See NORTON ON DEEDS 2nd Edition at page 185. A period of 'not less than' a month's notice accordingly means a period of one month excluding the day from which it ran and the day on which the notice expired. Where the parties to a document use terms which have an established meaning in law, they will usually be taken to have used them in that established meaning.

The proper length of terminating the agreement under review is one clear lunar month's notice, because at common law 'a month' means a lunar month. In my opinion there was no uncertainty as/to the duration of notice to be given. The matter was put beyond argument when the defendants on 30th April gave the plaintiff a [sic]/calendar months salary in lieu of such notice. Indeed the plaintiff admitted this in paragraph 7 of his defence. In my judgment the plaintiff' was only entitled to alunar month’s notice and not six months as found by the Court of Appeal. The defendants therefore acted within the provision of clause 9 of the agreement relative to the length of notice for its termination.

Thirdly, 'was there a breach of the rules of natural justice'? It was during the course of Counsel for the plaintiff's closing speech in the High Court that the issue of the breach of the rules of natural just1ce was first raised. It emerged from the evidence that the plaintiff's commission had been cancelled on two occasions during September 1975 and that he had been reduced in rank from being in overall supervision of the Reserve and General Goods Stores to Storekeeper with a corresponding change in salary and Counsel's submission was that he had not afforded an opportunity of stating his case before the decision was taken to cancel his commission and to reduce his rank and salary.

The defendants' reason being the plaintiff's unsatisfactory performance of his duties. The High Court held that the rules of natural justice had not been breached. The learned trial judge however [p.46] approached the matter on the basis that the plaintiff's services had been terminated without having had an opportunity of proffering an explanation in that behalf. That with respect was not Counsel's ease. Counsel's submission related to the matters I have stated earlier. The Court of Appeal on the other hand put the submission in its proper perspective and proceeded to hold that the rules of natural justice had been breached. Now Clause 13(b) of the agreement between the parties provides—

"The employee covenants and agrees that in case of unsatisfactory performance of his duties the company reserves the right after due warning to transfer him from one schedule of duties to another with corresponding change in salary structure."

The plaintiff was transferred from one schedule of duties to another in consequence of which there was a reduction in his income. The defendants had addressed two letters to the plaintiff warning him of the consequences of his failure to improve the performance of his duties in their establishment. These letters were tendered in evidence by the plaintiff himself. Considerable light was thrown on this issue by yet another letter tendered in evidence by the plaintiff. It was a letter dated 24th December 1975 addressed by the Managing Director to the plaintiff. The relevant portions of that letter state—

"Dear Mr. Navo

I have received your letter dated 17th December 1975 listing down points for [p.47] my attention and an appeal for a review of our letter dated 16th December 1975 regarding change of status with corresponding income ……."

Before I proceeded on Annual leave on 25th August 1975, I had personally counselled you several times regarding your apparent lack of control and supervision of the Retail Store.

During the visit of Mr. Kucera an inspection of your store was conducted and he caught a member of your staff sleeping. This was much of an embarrassment. Also in the fact that 12 empty cases were missing from the store and that investigation could not hold any one responsible. You will agree with me that these cases could not have just vanished in the air.

It is also understood. Management offered you personal advices for your improvement and you took them in a different spirit until the situation became worse and uncontrollable. As a result of which Management decided to reorganise the Retail Store and split it into 3 stores each with a storekeeper ……." (Emphasis mine)

The above letter was a reply to that addressed by the plaintiff to the managing Director. He concluded that letter by referring to the Managing [p.48] Director in these words.

"You being the pillar holding the administrative influence of this establishment and well known for fair play and justice, I am therefore humbly submitting this of mine for favourable consideration ……"

Most of the reported cases deal with wrongful dismissal arising out of a failure on the part of the employer to observe the rules of natural justice. It is unnecessary to deal with those cases here. I am concerned with a servant whose income and status were reduced and who continued in the service of that employer after such reduction in status and income. I propose to approach the issue on the broad principle that since some proprietary interest was involved, then the rules of natural justice had to be observed. Were they observed in this case? I think they were. The Court of Appeal said that there should have been written charges. The strict rules of procedure and evidence in a Court of law do not necessarily have to be observed in a case such as this. The Managing Director had spoken to the plaintiff 'several times' regarding the unsatisfactory manner in which the latter discharged his duties. The Management had also proffered advice as to how he could improve the performance of his duties. He was not amenable to advice. Warning letters were addressed to him. The letter intimated that serious consequences would arise if he failed to improve his performance. He offered no explanation.

I suppose the reason for this is his description of himself in his letter for a review of his education in status. He described himself in his petition for a review of his reduction in status as "a man of very slow nature to complain. Not until the worse comes to the worst, as this is now the case, do i put up my case ……." In my judgment the rules of natural justices were not breached in this case.

I would allow the appeal, set aside the judgment of the Court of Appeal, and restore the judgment of Williams J.

GBASSAY KAMARA - APPELLANT

vs.

SALLY WALLACE - RESPONDENT

HARDING J.S .C.

This appeal came up for hearing as a result of a special leave having been granted by this Court to the appellant on 3rd May, 1978. The events leading up to it are as follows:—

On 12th April, 1976, Sally Wallace (hereinafter referred to as the Respondent) took out a Writ of Summons against Gbaasay Kamara (the appellant herein) claiming

(i) a declaration that she is entitled in fee simple absolute in possession of a certain piece or parcel of land situate at Matilda Taylor Farm via Newton [p.16] described on Survey Plan L.S. 1369/73 enclosing an area of some 16.8941 acres;

(ii) Possession of the said land;

(iii) damages for trespass;

(iv) mesne profits from 1965 up to the date of delivery of possession;

(v) an injunction to restrain the appellant, his servants or agent from entering or remaining or continuing in occupation of the said land.

On 1st May, 1976, Conditional Appearance was entered on behalf of the appellant without prejudice to an application being made within 10 days to set aside the service of the Writ; no such application was ever made and 80 the Appearance became Unconditional. On 4th May, 1976, the respondent's Solicitor delivered and filed a Statement of Claim, to which the appellant's Solicitor delivered and filed a Defence and Counterclaim on 1 at June, 1976. A Reply and Defence to Counter-claim was delivered and filed on 8th June, 1976.

On 17th June, 1976, the respondent's Solicitor gave notice of trial in the following manner:

"Take Notice that the above action has this day been entered for Trial. And that the same will be heard at the Court Hall, Law Courts Building Siaka Stevens Street, [p.17] Freetown on Tuesday the 29th day of June, 1976 at 9 O'clock in the forenoon.

The trial is likely to last for 2 days. Dated the 17th day of June, 1976,"

On the same date the matter was entered for trial as follows:—

"Enter this action for trial Dated 17th day of June, 1976."

The matter came up for hearing on 2nd July, 1976 whereupon counsel for the appellant objected to the matter being heard on the ground that 10 days notice of trial had not been given as provided for by Rules of Court.

Navo J. (as he then was) before whom the objection was taken, overruled it on 8th July, 1976, holding that the entry for trial was proper and that the matter should proceed.

On 21st July, 1976 Counsel for the appellant applied by notice of motion for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal against the ruling of 8th July.

In paragraph 4 of the Affidavit in support of the Notice of Motion sworn to by Counsel for the appellant on 10th July, 1976 the proposed grounds of appeal were set out as follows:—

"(a) The Learned Trial Judge erred in law in equating Notice of Entry for trail – a precondition for entry for trail — as required by Rules 4 and 5 of Order 25 of the High Court Rules, with Notice of Hearing when he concluded in this said Ruling as follows:—

"The Notice of trail stated that the matter would be heard in Freetown on Tuesday the 29th day of June a clear 12 days after it had been filed."

(b) Notice of Trial having been given in accordance with Rules 4 and 5 above quoted and no Order for a speedy trial having been first obtained in accordance with Rule 9 of Order 25 of the said High Court Rules the Learned Trial Judge erred in law in holding that the matter was properly before the Court for hearing on the said 2nd day of July, 1976."

The Judge declined to entertain the application and ruled as follows:

"Application refused.

[p.19]

It should be made to the Judge and by our Rules application to the Judge means application in Chambers.

This application is not properly before the Court."

An application was then made to the Court of Appeal on the 20th of July, 1976 for leave to appeal against the ruling of the Judge give on 8th July, 1976, but the Appeal Court on 28th October, 1976, dismissed the application on the ground that it was premature.

Leave was then sought from the Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court against the ruling of 28th October, 1976, but it was refused. Counsel for the appellant then applied to the Supreme Court for special leave to appeal from the ruling of the Court of Appeal made on 28th October, 1976, and on the 3rd day of May, 1978 the Supreme Court, inter alia, made the following Order:

"(1) The Court of Appeal has unfortunately not considered and determined the complaints of the applicant. Taking all the circumstances into consideration we would grant special leave in order to enable this [p.20] Court in the public interest to hear and determine the complaints of the applicant. We do feel that the grounds of appeals advanced are in order. Special leave granted accordingly for those grounds to be argued before the full court

When the appeal came before us for hearing on 23rd. January, 1980 it was pointed out to Mr. T.S. Johnson counsel for the appellant that the whole sum and substance of his complaints in his appeal to the Court of Appeal was whether this matter was ripe for hearing when it came up before the High Court on 2nd July, 1976, i.e. whether the "Notice of Trial and "Entry for Trial," both dated 17th June, 1976, given by the respondent in this matter were in accordance with Order 25 of the Rules of too High Court. Counsel was accordingly directed that it would be most expedient if he confined his arguments to that aspect only of the appeal, At his request we granted a day's adjournment of the hearing.

When the Court resumed sitting on the next day Counsel for the appellant stated that his two grounds of appeal were those set out in paragraph 4 of his affidavit in support of his application for leave to appeal against the Ruling dated 8th July, 1976 of Navo J. (as he the was) sworn to by him on 10th July, 1976, already referred to (supra).

As regards the first ground of appeal Mr. Johnson pointed out that the action was entered for trial on 17th June, 1976 and that notice of trial was also given on that same day and he then referred to Order 25 Rules 5 of the High Court Rules which stipulates that notice of trial shall be given before entering the trial. The Rule states as follows:—

"Notice of trial shall be given before entering the trial, and the trial may be entered notwithstanding that the pleadings are not closed, provided that the notice of trial has been given."

He also referred to Rule 4 of Order 25 which stipulates that 10 days notice of trial Shall be given; the Rules states as follows:

"4. Ten days notice of trial shall be given, unless the party to whom it is given has consented, or is under term or has been ordered to take short notice of trial and shall be sufficient in all cases, unless otherwise ordered by the Court. Short notice of trial shall be four days notice unless otherwise ordered."

He submitted that 10 days notice of trial must be given before entering the action for trial, and further that Rule 8 of Order 25 made it quite clear that the date of Notice of trial and date of Entry for trial cannot be the same day. When he was asked to state in what form the notice was to be given he submitted that the notice should state that:

"The above action will be entered for trial in the High Court, Law [p.23] Courts Building, Siaka Stevens Street, on the 27th day of June, 1976 at 9 O' clock in the forenoon. The trail is likely to last for 2 days. Dated 17th day of June, 1976."

On his second ground of appeal he submitted that notice of trial is not analogous to notice of hearing: notice of hearing is given by the Court; notice of trial is given by the party whose duty it is to see that the matter is entered for trial. He submitted finally that there was no Order — whether exparte or otherwise — for this matter to be given a speedy hearing.

Mr. Halloway, Counsel for the respondent, in reply submitted that the purpose of giving 10 days' notice of trial is not to take the other party by surprise. He stated that anyone looking at the Notice of trial itself Could see that the other party has been given 10 clear days notice of intention to proceed with the trial, and that in fact the notice was served on the same day i.e. 17th June, 1976 on the Solicitor on the other side, and if there was any irregularity at all steps should have been taken to set it aside under Order 50 of the Rules of the High Court. He referred to Rules 3 and 4 of Order [p.24] 25 of the High Court Rules and also to Order 36 Rule 13 of the English Rules particularly to Form No. 16 in Appendix B Part 11 of the Annual Practice 1957, end submitted that in as much as the Notice had complied with all these provisions it was a valid notice and not a nullity.

As regards the second ground of appeal Mr. Halloway submitted that Order 25 Rule 9 made it clear that "immediately an action has been entered for trial it shall be entered in a Cause List to be kept by the Master and shall come on for trial in its order upon the list unless otherwise ordered.

He stated that this was purely an administrative matter. Finally he submitted that under Rule 8 of Order 25 the matter could be entered for trial on the same date as notice of trial was given and that this in fact had been the long standing practice.

The Record shows that the Notice of Trial and Entry for Trial were filed on the same date.

Rule 8 stipulates:—

"If the party giving notice of trial omits to enter the trial on the day of or day after giving notice of trial the party to whom notice has been given [p.25] may, unless the notice has been counter manned under the last proceeding rule within four days, enter the trial."

Counsel for the appellant has never been able to adduce any reason to justify his suggestion that the action was entered for trial before ever notice of trial was given. Rule 8 makes it abundantly clear that notice of trial and entry for trial can be filed on the same date.

With regard to the form of the notice order 25 Rules 3 states as follows:

"3. Notice of trial shall state whether it is for the trial of the cause or matter or of issues therein and place and day for which it is to be entered for trial. It shall be in the form in use in the High Court of Justice in England on the 1st day of January, 1957, with such variations as Circumstances may require. The notice shall also state whether the trial is likely to take half a day or full day [p.26] or longer, and, if longer, it shall state how many days the trial is likely to take."

The form of Notice (Form No. 16) given in Appendix B Part 11 of the Annual Practice, 1960 which is applicable in the High Court by virtue of Order 52 Rule 3 of our High Court Rules, is as follows:—

"Take notice of trial of this _____ (or of the issues in this _____ ordered to be tried) (or as that the case may be) by a Judge (with a common or special jury)

(as the case may be) in_____ for the.

_____ day of _____ next

X. Y. plaintiff's Solicitor (or as the case may be).

Dated _____

To Z., defendant’s Solicitor (or as the case may be)"

It is quite evidence from the above that there is no special form of the notice required, but that there may be "such variations as circumstances may require."

[p.27]

The form of the notice given by the respondent's Solicitor complied in all respects with the provisions of Rules 3, 4 and 5 of Order 25 of the Rules of the High Court. "Ten days I notice of Trial" is computed exclusive of the day of service of the notice and the tenth day thereafter (which is the last day of the notice) may be named as the day of hearing. The appellant here in fact had more than 10 days notice of Trial. In my judgment therefore the complaint that the matter was not ripe for hearing when it came up before the Judge on 2nd July, 1976 cannot be supported haring regard to the aforementioned Rules.

I find no merit whatsoever in the appeal and I would accordingly dismiss it.

JUDGMENT

LIVESEY LUKE C.J.

The appellant is a farmer residing at Malel Village in the Tonkolili District. On 13th June 1975 while travelling as a passenger in a vehicle owned by the respondent the appellant sustained personal injuries as a result of the negligent driving of the vehicle by the respondent's servant' or agent. In May, 1976, the appellant instituted proceedings in the High Court against the respondent for damages for negligence. The respondent did not file a defence to the action. In due course the action came up for trial. Liability was not issue. The only issue was the quantum of damages. The appellant gave evidence in support of his claim for special and general damages. A surgeon specialist was called on behalf of the appellant. Both parties were represented by Counsel at the trial. The trial judge gave judgment on 24th November. 1977 awarding the appellant the sum of Le4000 as general damages and the sum of Le.2.067 as special damages.

The respondent appealed to the Court of appeal against the award. The appeal was heard on 8th June 1978 and Judgment was [p.29] delivered on 9th February 1979 allowing the appeal and reducing the general damages to Le.4,500 and wholly setting aside the award of special damages. It is against that judgment that the appellant has appealed to this Court.

The issues in this appeal may be briefly stated. They are (i) whether the Court of appeal was right in reducing the general damages awarded (ii) whether the Court of Appeal was right in wholly disallowing the special damages awarded.

In arguing the first issue, Mr. Berthan Macauley Jr. learned Counsel for the appellant submitted that the Court of appeal wrongly applied well-established principles governing the powers of an appellate Court in interfering with an award of damages. Before determining the issues raised, I think that it is necessary to consider whether the Court of appeal has any power to review awards of damages by a judge sitting alone, and if so, in what circumstances. I think that it is important to state that by virtue of rule 9(1) of the Sierra Leone Court of appeal Rules, 1973, and appeal to the Court of appeal is by way of re-hearing.

An appeal against an award of damages is, like appeals generally, by way of re-hearing and therefore the Court of Appeal has power to review the award. But a well established rule bas been accepted over the years as governing an Appellate Court in the exercise of its power to review an award of damages by a judge sitting alone. The rule is that an Appellate Court will not interfere with an award of damages unless it is satisfied that the judge acted on a wrong principle of law, or has misapprehended the facts or has made a wholly erroneous estimate of the damages to which the claimant is entitled. The rule was stated with much clarity by Greer L.J. in the English Court of Appeal in Flint v. Lovell (1935) 1 K.B.354. He said inter alia at p. 360:—

"..... I think it is right to say that this Court will be disinclined to reverse the finding of a trial judge as to the amount of damages merely because they think that if they had tried the case in the first instance they would have given a lesser sum. In order to justify reversing the trial judge on the question of the amount of damages' it will generally be necessary that this Court should be convinced either that the judge acted upon some wrong principle of law or [p.30] high or so very small as to make it, in the judgement of this Court, an entirely erroneous estimate of the damages to which the plaintiff is entitled"

In Owen v. Sykes (1936) 1 K.B. 192 C... Greer L.J. elaborated upon the rule. He said at p. 198:—

"It has been laid down in Flint v. Lovell that this Court does not readily interfere with the estimate of damages made by a learned judge at the trial. An assessment of damages is necessarily an estimate, and an estimate is necessarily a matter of degree, and it seems to me that unless we come to the conclusion that the learned judge took an erroneous view of the evidence as to the damage suffered by the plaintiff, or made some mistake in giving weight to evidence that ought not to have affected his mind, or in leaving out of consideration something that ought to have affected his mind, we ought not to interfere."

Lord Wright after expressly approving of the rule as stated by Greer L.J. in Flint v. Lovell (supra) continued his speech in the House of Lords in Davies v. Fowell Duffryn Associated Collieries Ltd. (1942) A.C. 601 at p. 617 as follows:—

"The scale must go down heavily against the figure attached if the Appellate Court is to interfere, whether on the ground of excess or insufficiency."

The rule has been adopted and applied by our Courts in Sierra Leone over the years, and in my view, rightly so.

In delivering the judgment of the Court of appeal in Suleman Lasawarrack v. Raffa Brothers & The Northern Assurance Co. Ltd. (1962) 2§.L.L.R. 196 Bankole Jones Ag. C.J. (as he then was) said inter alia at p. 197:—

"An appellate Court is not justified in substituting a figure of its own for that awarded below simply because it would have awarded a different figure if it had [p.31] tried the case at first instance. It can only properly interfere if it is satisfied that the judge applied a wrong principle of law or that the amount awarded is either so inordinately high or so inordinately low that it must be a wholly erroneous estimate of the damage."

It will be convenient to consider now the principles applicable in making assessment of general damages in personal injury cases. The most important principle applicable is that general damages, must be fair and reasonable compensation for the damage suffered and that perfect compensation is not possible or permissible. The judge making the assessment must do his best to arrive at a fair and reasonable estimate and for this purpose he may use certain aids by considering the award of damages under various “heads of damage_" The accepted heads are: the bodily injury sustained, the pain and suffering' endured, past, present and future, injury to health, loss of amenities, loss of expectation of life and the present and future financial loss. But the judge is not obliged to state the amount awarded under each head. His duty is to satisfy himself that at the end of the day the total of the sums awarded under the various heads is fair and reasonable:

See Watson v. Powles (1968) 1 Q.B. 596. In this connection the words of Lord Denning N.R. in Fletcher v. Autocar and Transporters Ltd. (1968) 2 W.L.R. 743 C.A are instructive. He said inter alia at p. 748:—

"In the first place, I think he has attempted to give a perfect compensation in money, whereas the law says that he should not make that attempt. It is an impossible task. He should give a fair compensation."

And he continued at p. 749:—

"In the second place, I think that the judge was wrong to take each of the items as a separate head of compensation. They are only aids to arriving at a fair and reasonable compensation …… There is to my mind, a considerable risk of error in just adding up the items. It is the risk of overlapping."

[p.32]

I would also commend to judges and Courts engaged in the task of assessing general damages for personal injuries the words of Lord Morris of Borth-y-Gest in H. West & Son Ltd. v. Shepherd (1963) 2 W.L.R. 1359 H.L. at p. 1368:—

"But money cannot renew a physical frame that has been battered and shattered. All that judges and courts can do is to award sums which must be regarded as giving reasonable compensation. In the process there must be the endeavour to secure some uniformity in the general method of approach. By common assent awards must be reasonable and must be assessed with moderation."

The next question I propose to consider is whether the court of appeal was right in holding that the award of Le.9,000 as general damages was excessive. I think that it should be stated at the outset that the Court of Appeal did not say or suggest that the learned trial judge applied any wrong principle of law. All that that Court said was that the award of general damages was excessive bearing in mind the quality of the evidence" which was before the trial judge. What then was the evidence before the trial judge on which he based his assessment? The evidence was that the appellant was a man aged about 35 years He was a farmer in a village in the Tonkolili District. He sustained the following injuries as a result of the accident:—

(i) Contusion of the chest wall and

(ii) Fracture of the right humerus complicated by involvement of radial nerve.

The fracture was united but he has been left with a wrist drop. He complained of pains in his chest. He would not be able to use his wrist as a farmer. He would not be able to lift any heavy object. He cannot lift any heavy object. He cannot use his cutlass with his right hand. He cannot grip well with his right hand. He used to grow rice and pepper and his wife used to assist him in the farm. He used to earn Le.800 per annum from his farming. Since the accident he had not been able to carry on farming, and he had not earned any income since then. According to the surgeon specialist the appellant's recovery could not be absolute, his recovery was only partial. He could follow other gainful employment. The surgeon specialist agreed [p.33] that physiotherapy plays an important role in the treatment of such injuries, but that he did not order physiotherapy treatment and that appellant had not received any such treatment. The surgeon specialist assessed the appellant's final residual disability at 12 per cent.

The “quality” of the evidence which appeared to have influenced the Court of Appeal in coming to their decision to reduce the general damages are (i) the evidence of the surgeon specialist that physiotherapy treatment could have played an important role in the treatment of the injury, and yet he did pot refer the appellant for physiotherapy treatment; (ii) there was no evidence from the surgeon as to the residual disability of the appellant.

With respect, it was clearly wrong to say that there was no evidence as to residual disability. That evidence was contained in the medical report prepared by the surgeon specialist and admitted in evidence. I think that undue emphasis was placed on the surgeon specialist's failure to refer the appellant for physiotherapy treatment. My understanding of the evidence of the surgeon specialist is that there was a possibility that such treatment might have improved the condition of the appellant. There was certainly no positive evidence that such treatment would have improved his condition. In my opinion the Court of Appeal misapprehended the evidence in support of the claim for General damages. The proper Course the Court of Appeal should have adopted was to consider the evidence as a whole including the evidence relating to the treatment of the appellant and his residual disability and then decide having regard to the various heads of damage, whether the award made was fair and reasonable.

When the evidence is taken as a whole, the Overall award Le.9000 as general damages may be said to be generous or high, but to say that an award is generous or high is not the same as saying that it is excessive. In my opinion the overall award was not so high as to amount to a wholly erroneous estimate of the damages to which the appellant is entitled. Therefore, in my opinion it can be said that the award was excessive. It may have been helpful if the learned trial judge had given some indication of the awards made under the various heads, but, as stated earlier, he was under no obligation to do that. The important duty of the judge was to ensure that the overall figure awarded was fair and reasonable. I have no doubt that the judge discharged that duty in this case. In my judgment there is no [p.34] valid ground for interfering with the award of the judge in this case. The Court of Appeal therefore erred in interfering with the award of general damages.

The appeal relating to special damages can be disposed of briefly. Judging from the record of the evidence at the trial it would appear that the respondent did not seriously contest the claim for special damages. And according to the records, when learned Counsel for the respondent addressed the trial judge he confined his address to general damages. He made no reference to the Special Damages claimed. Also in the three grounds of appeal relied, on by the present respondent before the Court of Appeal there was no specific ground complaining about the whole or any item awarded as special Damages. In my opinion a proper reading of the three grounds of appeal, the only reasonable conclusion is that all the complaints of the present respondent (i.e. the appellant in that Court) related to the award of general damages. That conclusion is supported by the fact that the recorded submissions of his Counsel before the Court of Appeal in arguing all three grounds were to the effect that the award was “inordinately high and that the trial judge must have used wrong principles.”

In my opinion such submissions are more germane to an attack on a general damages award than to a special damages award

In my opinion, in the circumstances just related, the Court of Appeal should, have adverted its mind to rule 9(6) of the Court of appeal Rules 1973 and invited argument on special damages. In all the circumstances, the Court of Appeal erred, in my judgment, in interfering with the award of special damages. But even assuming that the Court of Appeal could properly have interfered with the award of special damages, the result would have been the same been the because as Mr. Smythe learned Counsel for the respondent rightly and properly conceded there was unchallenged evidence in support of the items of special damages claimed and the learned judge was entitled to award each item and the total amount he awarded by way of special damages. The Court of Appeal was therefore wrong in holding that the special damages were not proved.

In the result I would set aside the judgment and orders of the Court of Appeal and restore the orders of the High court.

JESSIE ROWLAND H. GITTENS-STRONGE — APPELLANT

AND

SIERRA LEONE BREWERY LIMITED — RESPONDENTS

A.B.N Strong Esq. for the Appellant

Berthan Macauley, Jr for the Respondents

LIVESEY LUKE C.J.:

The appellant entered the employment of the Respondent Company (hereinafter called the Company) on 20th August, 1970 as a Brewer-in-training. The Company are brewers of beer and stout. On 1st June, 1971 the appellant was made an Assistant Manager. The letter informing him of this decision was dated 8th June 1971 and attached to it was "a summary of the terms and conditions of service for Assistant Management." The appellant was required to complete and sign the Service Agreement. That was the first time the parties signed a formal written Contract of Service setting out the terms and condition governing the appellant employment. The appellant was sent to Ghana in 1971 for further training with the Kumasi Brewery. He returned to Sierra Leone or about February, 1972 after the successful completion of his training. In September, 1972 he was sent to Heinekens Brewery in Holland for further training returning to Sierra Leone in or 1973 after the completion of the training. During the latter [p.61] period the Company made arrangements for the appellant to undergo a Management course in Britain. On 1st July, 1973 the appellant was promoted to the post of Brewer/Manager, which according to the letter (dated 5th June, 1973) communicating the good news to the appellant was of full management status." That letter, apart from informing the appellant of certain improved benefits and facilities to which he became entitled as full manager" did not state were his conditions of service as a full manager. Nor was fresh contract of service setting out his terms and conditions of service as a full manager signed then or at all. There was a misunderstanding between the Production Manager and the appellant in December, 1975 relating to production on 31st December, 1975. This resulted in a written query dated 5th January, 1976 being issued by the Production Manager Mr. A.O Bart-Williams to the appellant. The appellant promptly sent a written reply to the query, and the matter seemed to have ended there. Apart from that isolated incident the relationship between the appellant and his employers seemed to have been satisfactory and cordial. Indeed by letter dated 1st March 1976 the appellant was informed of certain improved benefits and salary to which he became entitled. Everything seemed to have progressed normally and satisfactorily until 5th October, 1976. The appellant reported for duty at 6 a.m. on that day. At about 9.00 a.m. he was summoned by the Acting General Manager. He immediately went to the General Manager's Office where he met the Acting General Manager Mr. Koopmans and the Production Manager Mr. Bart-Williams. He was asked to sit down and then the Acting General Manager proceeded to pronounce these words:

"The Company does not require your services any longer."

In a state of shock and disbelief the appellant retorted "I beg your pardon?" Whereupon the Acting General Manager repeated his previous, pronouncement. The appellant asked Mr. Koopmans whether there was any reason for such action. Mr. Koopmans replied that he had received a complaint a week before from the Head of Security that he had gone round one morning at about 2 a.m. and had found him (the appellant) sleeping whilst on duty, that on the previous Friday morning after he (the appellant) had finished work he had found some bottles of beer in the Bright Beer Cellar and that on that same Friday the security officer had found two casual workers who in his opinion were intoxicated and Mr. Koopmans added that he thought the foregoing allegations amounted to negligence on his (the appellant's) part. Mr. Koopmans further referred to the Production Manager's query of 5th January, 1976 and concluded by saying that the Company did not therefore need his services any longer. Mr. Koopmans suggested to the appellant that instead of having his services terminated or being dismissed, he (the appellant) should adopt an easy way out by tendering a letter of resignation. The appellant replied that he was not prepared to do any such thing. Whereupon Mr. Koopmans said that the appellant could take it that his services had been terminated and that he could go home and await a letter to follow. The appellant subsequently received the promised letter. It was dated 5th October, 1976 and in the following terms:—

"Dear Sir,

I confirm your interview in my office this morning in the presence of the Production Manager. You appear either unable or unwilling to conform, to the Company's requirements of its managers, as evidenced by the series of disciplinary instances. brought to your attention both verbally and in writing by the Production Manager, the General Manager and myself.

I regret therefore that I have no alternative but to terminate your employment with Sierra Leone Brewery limited with immediate effect.

You will be advised separately of your financial status with the Company, including your outstanding car loan, and your entitlements under Clause 11(a) of the Service Agreement. The Union African Pension Fund will also advise you as to your entitlement.

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) C.D.M. Koopmans

Acting General Manager."

A few weeks later the appellant received a letter dated 28th October, 1976 and signed by Mr. Koopmans. That letter referred to the letter dated 5th October, 1976 and proceeded to give details of the appellant's entitlement on termination of his employment including Le89.10 as salary for 1st to 5th October, 1976, Le58.33 as rent allowance for October, 1976 and Le1105 as 2 months salary in lieu of notice. The appellant was requested to call upon the Administratrix Union African Pension Fund, U.A.C. House, Freetown to collect the amount owed to him.

[p.64]

The Appellant was not satisfied with the way in which his services with the Company had been terminated. And so in December, 1976 he issued a Writ of summons against the Company claiming inter alia damages for wrongful dismissal. In his Statement of Claim the appellant inter alia referred to the letter of termination dated 5th October, 1976 and alleged that his dismissal was wrongful. In their Defence the Company pleaded inter alia that the appellant's employment was governed by the Service Agreement dated 1st June, 1971 and that in pursuance of that agreement the Company terminated the appellant's employment and paid him his entitlement including 2 months salary in lieu of notice. In the Reply it was inter alia denied that the appellant's employment was governed by the Service Agreement dated 1st June, 1971.

On the basis of the pleadings, the issues that went to trial may be summarized as follows:—

(i) Was the Service Agreement dated 1st June, 1971 the operative contract governing the employment of the appellant on the date of his dismissal i.e. 5th October, 1976?

(ii) If the answer to (i) above is in the negative what were the terms and conditions governing the appellant's employment on the date of his dismissal?

(iii) If the answer to (i) above is in the affirmative, was the appellant's dismissal in accordance with the terms of the said Service Agreement?

(iv) If the answer to (i) above is in the negative, was the appellant's dismissal in accordance with the terms and conditions as stated in (ii) above?

[p.65]

(v) If the appellant was wrongfully dismissed was he entitled to General Damages and what was the measure of such damages?

(vi) If the appellant was wrongfully dismissed was he entitled to Special Damages?

(vii) Was the appellant entitled to salary for the whole of October, 1976 or for only up to the date of his dismissal (i.e. 5th October, 1976)?

The trial in the High Court was by Williams J. The appellant (plaintiff) gave evidence on oath in the course of which he tendered in evidence relevant correspondence and other documents including the Service Agreement dated 1st June 1971 (marked Ex. "B"). He did not call any witness. Only one witness was called on behalf of the Company and that was the Chairman of the Board of Directors and General Manager of the Company in the person of John Jeffery Allan Clegg. The learned judge delivered his considered judgment on 22nd December, 1977 dismissing the appellant's claim. The learned judge held inter alia that the appellant's services were terminated 'and he was not dismissed, that the Service Agreement of 1st June, 1971 governed the appellant's employment on the date of termination, that the appellant's appointment had been properly and lawfully terminated by the Company in accordance with the terms of Clause 11(a) of the Service Agreement.

The appellant appealed to the Court of Appeal on two grounds of appeal which were rather vaguely worded. However, the hearing of the appeal proceeded on the basis of those two grounds. The main arguments in the Court of Appeal turned on whether there was a distinction between termination and dismissal and the significance of such distinction and whether the appellant had been properly dismissed under Clause 11 of the Service Agreement.

The learned trial judge's decision that the Service Agreement of 1st June, 1971 governed the appellant's employment on the date of termination appears to have been accepted on all sides. Learned Counsel for the appellant did not challenge it before the Court of Appeal or in this Court. Indeed the judgment of the Court of Appeal proceeded on the basis that that decision was right. However, I think that it is of interest to mention in passing that in the letter dated 8th June 1971 (Ex. "D") forwarding the Service Agreement (Ex. "B") to the appellant, the Service Agreement is referred to in paragraph 2 thereof as "a summary of the terms and conditions of service for Assistant Management ……." (Emphasis mine). If the issue had been raised, it would then have been necessary to consider whether those terms and conditions of service governed employees of full management status to which the appellant was appointed on 1st July, 1973 by letter dated 5th June, 1973 (Ex. "C"). But that issue does not arise in this appeal and therefore it is not necessary to consider it. The Court of Appeal (consisting of M.E.A. Cole, Navo and Turay JJ.A.) delivered judgment on 25th May, 1979 allowing the appeal, setting aside the judgment of the High Court and substituting judgment in favour of the appellant but awarding no damages or costs to the appellant. In a well reasoned judgment delivered by Navo J.A. and concurred in by Cole and Turay JJ.A. the Court held inter alia that the distinction between "termination" and "dismissal" was of little significance, and that the appellant had been summarily dismissed under Clause 11 of the Service Agreement but that the Company had failed to justify the reasons for the dismissal.

The appellant has appealed to this Court complaining against the refusal of the Court of Appeal to award him General damages, Special damages and costs. The Company has filed a notice of cross-appeal complaining that the Court of Appeal erred in law in holding that there was no legal difference between the words "Termination" and "Dismissal" and in holding that the burden is upon the master to justify the reason for the dismissal of a servant.

The important: issue raised in this appeal on which many other issues stand or fall is whether the termination of the appellant's employment was lawful or wrongful. Both the lower Courts held that the termination was under Clause 11 of the Service Agreement dated 1st June, 1971, but while the High Court held that the termination was lawful, the Court of Appeal took the contrary view. It is therefore necessary to consider the all important Clause 11 of the Service Agreement and the evidence relating to the termination of the appellant's employment.

Clause 11 is in the following terms:—

"11. The Company may terminate the employment of the Employee—

(a) without assigning any reason therefor by giving to the Employee two months' previous notice in writing or without previous notice by crediting him in account in its books with two months' salary or if the Employee shall not have completed two years service with the Company then by one month's previous notice in writing, or without previous notice by crediting him with one month's salary;

[p.68]

(b) summarily at any time and without previous notice if the Employee shall be guilty of any act or omission inconsistent with the due performance of the Employee's obligations under this Agreement, failure to obey orders or any other breach of this Agreement."

The important question then arises, did the Company "terminate the appellant's employment in accordance with Clause 11(a) or Clause 11(b)? The Company's case is that the termination was in accordance with Clause 11 (a) And the argument support of their case proceeds thus: they were not obliged to assign any reason for terminating the appellant's employment under Clause 11(a), if they either gave two months' written, notice, or without previous notice if they credited his account in their books with two months' salary, the termination was lawful. And that in the instant case they credited the appellant's account in their books with two months salary in Lieu or notice and therefore his termination was lawful. I shall now consider the evidence to determine whether this contention is tenable. It will be recalled that at the end of the interview on 5th October, 1976, Mr. Koopmans said to the appellant that he could take it that his services had been terminated and that he could go home and await a letter to follow. The letter that followed was Ex. "K" dated 5th October, 1976 which has been set out above. That letter confirmed that the appellant's employment was terminated with immediate effect and added "You will be advise separately of your financial status with the Company …… and your entitlements under Clause 11(a) of the Service Agreement." The crucial question that arises is this: Did that letter comply with the limb of Clause 11(a) that the Company is relying on? was there [p.69] any indication in that letter that the Company had fulfilled the condition for the exercise of that power of termination "by crediting him [the appellant] in its books with two months' salary"? The answers to these questions are in my opinion, clearly "No." The next significant event in this sad story is that in a letter dated 28th October, 1976 (Ex. "L") the Company detailed the appellant's entitlements on termination of his employment which included two months' salary in lieu of notice. That was the first intimation the appellant had that his account had been credited with two months' salary in lieu of notice.

Was crediting the appellant's account with the two months' salary over three weeks after his termination, a compliance with Clause 11(a) of the Service Agreement? In my opinion the answer must be "No."

Let me demonstrate my views by reference to termination with notice and termination with salary in lieu of notice.

Take the case of employer A who according to the terms of the Contract of Employment of his employee X has to give X one month's written notice or one month's salary in lieu of notice. On the 15th of the month A invites X to his office and gives him verbal notice of the termination of his service adding that a letter would follow. Five days later X receives a letter from. A dated the 15th and informing him that his services were terminated with effect from the 15th. In my opinion that would not be a valid termination of the employment because it does not comply with the requirement of one month's previous written notice. Similarly if A had told X that his services were terminated with immediate effect and that he would be hearing from him, and five days later he paid X a month's salary in lieu of notice, the position would still be the same. In my [p.70] view such an action on the part of A would not be in compliance with his obligations under the Contract of Service. If according to the terms of the employment, termination must be by written notice or salary in lieu of notice such or such payment of salary must, in my opinion, be contemporaneous with the act of termination.

It seems to me that if an employer dismisses his employee on the 1st of January and pays him his entitled salary in lieu of notice on the 1st of March, he is in breach of the Contract of Employment. So what he is paying on 1st March is not strictly speaking salary in lieu of notice but anticipated damages. Similarly, if an employer is under an obligation to pay salary in lieu of notice into his employee's account on termination of his employment, he is under an obligation to pay it contemporaneously with the termination. I am of the view that if the payment is made not contemporaneously but weeks later there is a breach and the payment ceases to be payment of salary in lieu of notice and becomes anticipated damages paid in mitigation of damages. Quite clearly, the circumstances contemplated by the first limb of Clause 11(a) are firstly the employer should give two months previous written notice, the notice to take effect from the date of its receipt and the employee is entitled to continue working during the period of the notice: See Addis v. Gramophone Company Ltd. (1909) A.C. 488 H.L. per Lord Loreburn L.C. at pp. 489-490.

Secondly the employer without previous written notice may terminate the employment by contemporaneously crediting the employee's account with two months' salary in lieu of notice. In my opinion the reasonable inference to draw from the letter dated 28th October, 1976 is that it was on that date that the salary in lieu of notice was paid into the appellant's account.

Certainly the Company did not lead evidence or even suggest that it was paid on an earlier date. Contemporaneously does not necessarily mean immediately. But in my opinion, by no stretch of imagination can it mean weeks afterwards.

In this connection it is necessary to remind ourselves that an action for wrongful dismissal is an action for breach of Contract. In this regard it is important to emphasize that in such an action there are two important and separate issues involved, namely breach of Contract and damages for the breech. A. plaintiff may succeed in establishing breach of Contract yet he may recover only nominal damages or no damages at all. The plaintiff's first burden is to prove a breach of the relevant Contract. So in an action for wrongful dismissal the plaintiff first has to establish breach of his Contract of employment. It is only after that that the question of damages would arise.

Was a breach of the Contract of employment established in this ease? According to their own admission, the Company terminated the appellant's employment without notice. They peremptorily terminated his employment on the 5th October, 1976 and it was not until 28th October, 1976 that he had any intimation that his account had been credited with any salary in lieu of notice. It seems to me that such a belated crediting of the appellant’s account could hardly be said to be a compliance of the requirements imposed by Clause 11(a) of the Service Agreement. In my view failure to pay salary in lieu of notice on the date due constitutes a breach of Contract for which an employee can institute immediate legal proceedings for wrongful dismissal. Applying that principle to the facts of this case, failure to credit the appellant’s account with the appellant's account with two months’ salary at the time due constitutes a breach of Clause 11(a) of [p.72] the Service Agreement and therefore a breach of Contract. The appellant was entitled to institute proceedings against the Company for wrongful dismissal from the 5th October, 1976 up to 27th October, 1976. Let us suppose that he had taken such action, what would have been the defence of the Company? They would have had to confess that they had not credited the appellant’s account with the two months' salary. How would they have avoided the consequences of that confession? By pleading that they intended to credit his account with the salary in lieu of notice due him at a later date? In my opinion that would not be a tenable defence to such an action. Payment of salary in lieu of notice, or in this case, crediting the appellant's account, on a later date than the due date in the circumstances of the particular case does not cure the original breach of Contract. Such late payment, or crediting, could only mitigate damages. I hold the view therefore the Company did not comply with Clause 11(a) in terminating the employment of the appellant.

In their judgment, the Court of Appeal did not consider the position under Clause 11(a) and Clause 11(b) separately. They seemed to have considered them together and then came to the conclusion that the appellant was summarily dismissed and. that the dismissal was wrongful and in breach of the Contract of Service. In other words they held that the appellant's dismissal was in breach of the whole of Clause 11 i.e. 11(a) and 11(b). It may have been neater to consider the sub-Clauses separately. Be that as it may, their conclusion on the Clause taken as a whole was beyond any doubt.

Having considered the appellant's position under Clause 11(a), I shall now proceed, out of deference to the Court of Appeal and in view of the cross-appeal, to consider whether he was summarily dismissed under Clause 11(b). It is reasonable to infer from the evidence as to what transpired at the General Managers' office on the morning of 5th October, 1976 and from the letter dated 5th October, 1976 (Ex. "K") that the intention of Mr. Koopmans was to summarily dismiss the appellant. There is no doubt that Clause 11(b) confers a right on the Company to summarily dismiss an employee (including the appellant). But it is important to note that that right is not and cannot be absolute. It is circumscribed within prescribed limits. It is limited only to the following circumstances "if the Employee shall be guilty of any act or omission inconsistent with the due performance of the Employee's obligations under the Agreement, failure to obey orders or any other breach of this Agreement."

I think that it is necessary to point out that the Company did not rely on Clause 11(b) in their Defence, and no evidence was led to prove that the appellant was guilty of any of the acts or omissions specified in Clause 11(b). So if the intention of the Acting General Manager was to summarily dismiss the appellant under Clause 11(b), his action was wrongful and in breach of the appellant's Contract of employment. In my opinion, whichever way one approaches the problem, whether considering only Clause 11(a), or considering Clauses 11(a) and (b) separately or considering the whole Clause together, the end result is the same, and that is that the appellant was wrongfully dismissed by the Company.

Both counsel referred us to the case of McClelland v \ !QE!hern Ireland General Health Services Board (1957)1 w.L.R.594 •.

In that case the appellant was appointed in 1948 to a "permanent and pensionable" post as a Senior Clerk by the Respondent Board,

~ld was shown the terms and conditions of service. These contained a Clause providing for the dismissal of officers for

"gross misconduct" or if they proved "inefficient and unfit to merit continued employment." There was also a provision for dismissal on failures to, take or to honour the oath of allegiance and another related to termination of employment by reason of permanent ill-health or infirmity~(There was no provision for dismissal in other circumstances. It was, however, provided that "permanent officers,ll who wished to terminate their employment with the Board, must give one month's notice. In 1953 the Board purported to terminate the appellantls employment on six months notice on the ground of redundancy of staff and without any suggestion of misconduct or inefficiency on her part. It was held by the House of Lords that on the true construction of the terms and conditions of service the express powers of the Board to dismiss an officer were comprehensive and exhaustive and no:

further power could be implied. Accordingly, her service had not been validly terminated. In my opinion the relevant lesson that that case teaches us is that an employer must comply with the' terms stipulated in the Contract of Service for the termination or dismissal of the employee; otherwise he terminates the employment at his peril. He will then be held, to be in breach and the dismissal will be wrongful. This is in support of the view that I have expressed above that the Company did not comply with the stipulated terms for termination of the employment of the appellant and therefore they were in breach and the dismissal wrongful.

It is also pertinent to recall the words of Lord Maugham in Jupiter Ge~ral Insurance Co.Ltd. v. Shroff (193')') 3 All E.R.67.P.C.

He said inter alia at PP.73 ~ 74:—

/16.000000

"Their Lordships recognise immediate dismissal of an employee is a strong measure,

.....

On the one hand, it can be in exceptional circumstances only that an employer is acting properly in ~ummarily dismissing an employee on his committing a single act of negligence; on the other, their Lordships would be very loath to assent to the view:that a single outbreak of bad temper, accompanied, it may be, with regrettable language, is a sufficient ground fo~ dismissal.1I

I think that this is a convenient stage to deal with the issues raised by the Respondent Company in their Notice of Cross

Appeal. In their first ground of cross appeal the Company contend that the Court of Appeal erred in law in equating the term ":unlawful dismissal" with "termination" within a Contract in interpreting the Contra~t of employment between the appellant and the Company. In the course of his judgment Navo J.A. said inter alia:—

III termination of Service is wrongful it gives rise to an action for wrongful dismissalll

. l'1r. J3erthan :Macauley Jr. ±-&ar.Q.e,d. ~11n9~ for the ~ submitted that there is a very important distinction b~e.n

termination arld dismissal. That may be so, but such a di.stin.~n is not relevant to the solution of the issue in this case. The problem with which we are faced is whether the cessation of the appellant's employment with the Company was lawful or unlawful. 1,fu.ether such cessation is called "termination" or ff dismissalll is of no importance in this context. If the "termination" is unlawful it gives rise to an action for "wrongful dismissal.1I Similarly if the dismissal is unlawful, it gives rise to an ai:tto.n. .for "laongful dismissal." So the cause of action is the

'""1 same whether the term. used in the Contract of Service or the notice is "termination" or "dismissal." This statement can be illustrated by reference to the Service Agreement (Ex. "B") and particularly the now famous Clause 11~ the full text of which has been set out above.' It will be noted that it commences as follows:—

liThe Company may terminate the employment of the Employee—

(a) (b)

II /Emphasis mine

Nowhere in that all important Clause is the word "dismissal" used. But if the Company unlawfully "terminates" an employee's employment under that Clause, the employee's cause of action will be for "\'lrongful dismissal" and not for "1'-Trongful termination." So although there may be an important distinction between "termination" and "dismissal," yet the nomenclature which we have inherited from the common ~aw for such causes of action is "wrongful dismissal," and we continue to use it in this jurisdiction. In my opinion therefore Navo J.A. stated the orrect legal position in the passage quoted above.

Another contention in the Cross-appeal is that the Court of Appeal erred in law in holding that the burden of proof of unlawful dismissal is not upon the party alleging unlawful dismissal. What the Court of Appeal held in effect was that the Company having alleged negligence, insubordination and misconduct for the summary termination of the appellant, it was not for the appellant to prove that he had not been negligent etc. but for the Company to prove the negligence, insubordination and misconduct which justified the appellant's dismissal. In my opinion that is the correct legal position.

Having held that the appellant's employment was wrongfully terminated, I shall now proceed to consider his entitlement to damages (if any). I think that it is well settled that a successful plaintiff in an action for wrongful dismissal is entitled to general damages for breach of his Contract of Employment and to special damages if properly claimed and proved. As regards general damages, the measure of damages to be awarded varies according to the circumstances of the particular case. An important distinction is made between cases where a definite period of notice of termination is provided under the contract and cases where there is no such provision. In the former type of cases, the normal measure of damages is the amount the employee would have earned under the Contract for the period of notice. So if the service Agreement provided for 3 months notice of termination, the measure of general damages will ordinarily be 3 months salary and other entitlements if applicable. See Addis V. Gramophone Company Ltd" (supra) "in the letter type of cases, the measure of damages is the salary of wages for the period that the Court considered would constitute reasonable notice of termination of the employment in all the circumstances of the" case.

In this case, as was rightly held by Williams J. and the Court of Appeal the measure of general damages to which the appellant is entitled having regard to the terms of the Contract of Service is two months' salary and allowances to which he was entitled for that period. That he has already received. And as , the Court of Appeal rightly held he is therefore not entitled to any more compensation by way of General Damages. But in my opinion that is not the end of the matter as regards damages. The appellant claimed special damages for loss of income. The question then arises: is he entitled to special damages, and if so for what.

The Court of Appeal did not dispute the appellant's entitlement to special damages, but they seemed to have been of the view that there was not sufficient material before them for the assessment of special damages. In my considered opinion a plaintiff in an action for wrongful dismissal can claim as special damages loss of salary or wages for a reasonable period that he would take to obtain another employment. I derive support for this view from the speech of Lord Atkinson in Addis v. Gramophone Company Ltd. (supra). He said inter alia at p. 49:—

"The damages plaintiffs sustained by this illegal dismissal were (1) the wages for the period of six months during which his formal notice would have been current;

(2) the profits or commission which would, in all reasonable probability, have been earned by him during the six months had he continued in the employment; and possibly (3) damages in respect of the time which might reasonably elapse before he could obtain other employment."

In my opinion such special damages are damages flowing from the breach which having regard to the particular circumstances of the case, the parties should have reasonably foreseen as the probable result of the breach of the Contract of Service. The circumstances may vary from case to case, and whether this principle is applicable would depend on the circumstances of each particular case. Relevant circumstances may be the nature of the employment, the availability of similar or alternative employment in the locality or in the country as a whole, the special skill or training of the employee. Obviously, if a clerk, a typist or a domestic servant is dismissed it is most unlikely that any circumstances would warrant or justify a claim for special damages under this head.

But if an employer wrongfully terminates an employee trained in specialised skills and it is only in the employer is establishment that that skill could be used in a whole country, in my opinion, the employer ought to have foreseen as a probable consequence of his action that it will take some time for the dismissed employee to find alternative employment. This view cannot be said to be an extension of the rule in Hadley v Baxendale (1854) 9 Exch.341 (1843-1860) All E.R Rep. 461. On the contrary it is, in my humble opinion, an application of it. The rule as laid down by the Court of Exchequer in that case states inter alia:—

"Where two parties have made a Contract which one of them has broken the damages which the other party ought to receive in respect of such breach of contract should be such as may fairly and reasonably be considered as either arising naturally i.e. according to the usual course of things, from such breach of contract itself, or such as may reasonably be supposed to have been in the, contemplation of both parties at the time they made the contract as a probable result of the breach of it."

In this connection it is pertinent to recall the words of Lord Du Parcq in Monarch Steamship Company Ltd. v. A/B Karlshamns: Oljefabriker AB. (1949) 1 All E.R.1 H.L He said inter alia at p.19:—

"I do not doubt the wisdom of the judges who, in Hedley v. Baxendale and the many later cases which interpreted or explained that classic decision, have laid down rules or principles for the guidance of those whose duty it is, as judges or jurymen, to assess damages. When those rules or principles are applied, however, it is essential to remember ……. that in the end, what has to be decided is a question of fact, and, therefore a question proper for a jury. Circumstances are so infinitely various that, however carefully general rules are framed, they must be constructed with some liberality and not too rigidly applied. It was necessary to lay down principles lest juries should be persuaded to do injustice by imposing an undue, or, perhaps, an inadequate, liability on a defendant. The Court must be careful, however, to see that the principles laid down are never so narrowly interpreted as to prevent a jury, or judge of fact, from doing justice between the parties. So to use them would be to misuse them."

I think that it should be made abundantly clear that the special damages which I have said are recoverable under this head are not for the manner of the dismissal or injured feelings, or humiliation embarrassment or loss of reputation. It is well settled that damages cannot be recovered under any of those heads in an action for breach of Contract of employment: See Addis v. Gramophone Company Ltd. (1909) H.L. and British Guiana Credit Corporation v. De Silva (1965) 1 W.L.R. 248.

On the meaning of special damages, I cannot do better than recall the words of Bowen L.J in delivering the Judgment of the Court (consisting of Lord Esher M.R., Bowen and Fry LL.J) Ratcliffe v. Evans (1892) 2 Q.B. 524 at 528:—

"Lest we should be led astray in such a matter by mere words, it is desirable to recollect that the term "special damage of which is found for centuries in the books, is not always used with reference to similar subject-matter, nor in the same context."

[p.80]

At times (both in the law of tort and of Contract) it is employed to denote that damage arising out of the special circumstances of the case which, if properly pleaded, may be superadded to the general damage which the law implies in every breach of contract and every infringement of an absolute right: See Ashby v. White. In all such cases the law presumes that some damage will flow in the ordinary course of things from the mere invasion of the plaintiff's rights, and calls it general damages. Special damage in such a context means the particular damage (beyond the general damage) which results from the particular circumstances of the case, and of the plaintiff's claim to be compensated, for which he ought to give warning in his pleadings in order that there may be no surprise at the trial."

There is no dispute that the rule of practice is that particulars must be given of special damages claimed. See Monk v. Redwing Aircraft Company Ltd. (1941) 1 K.B.182 where Lord Greene M.R. said inter alia at p. 185:—

"In his statement of claim the plaintiff claims 'under Para. 8 damages.' It is to be observed that the damage suffered under that head is in its nature special damage, and, in accordance with the ordinary rule, where a plaintiff is alleging special damage he must give sufficient particulars of it" and he continued at p.186:—

"What, then, is the position of a plaintiff who claims damages in a case such as this? It seems to me that he must specify that it is that he claims, arid in every statement of what he claims by way of special damages there is necessarily [p.82] implicit one of two allegations, either that he has not earned any remuneration in other employment during the relevant period, or that he has done so, and any form of pleading or any particulars given which do not bring to the clear knowledge of the defendant which of those two implicit statements he is going to rely on is, in my judgment, embarrassing. The function of particulars in such a case is to bring out clearly by express language which of those allegations is relied on, and if it be the latter, sufficient details showing how the figure is arrived at should be given in the particulars."

It should be noted that the rule prescribes no particular form for the particulars. The important requirement is that the particulars should be given in the body of the pleadings. All the relevant particulars need not be contained in one paragraph. They may be stated in two or more paragraphs. And the particulars should be limited to what is really reasonably necessary to enable the party seeking them to know what case he has to meet. See Phipps v. Orthodox Unit Trusts Ltd. (1958) 1 Q.B. 314 per Jenkins L.J. at p. 321. The question then arises; did the appellant in the instant case give sufficient particulars of his claim for special damages for loss of income? For an answer to this question, reference should be made to the Statement of Claim. It should be said at the outset that the Statement of Claim was inelegantly drafted. But on a proper reading of paras. 3 and 4 thereof the following particulars are given:—

(i) That his employment was terminated on 5th October, 1976;

(ii) That his salary at the time of termination was Le6, 630 per annum;

(iii) That he received housing allowance of Le700 per annum;

[p.83]

(iv) That he received a fixed car allowance of Le360 per annum;

(v) That on 12th January, 1977 (the date of the Statement of Claim) he was still unemployed.

In my opinion the above constitute sufficient particulars to bring to the clear knowledge of the Company what case they had to meet. No surprise could possibly have arisen at the trial. So

I do not think that there can be any valid complaint on that score. On the question of evidence, the appellant gave uncontroverted evidence that since the day of his termination up to the day he was giving evidence at the trial on 10th October, 1977, he was unemployed. He also gave uncontroverted evidence of the efforts that he had made to obtain other employment without success and went as far as to produce copies of applications for employment sent to various establishments. In this connection it is pertinent to quote the learned author of Chitty on Contracts (Specific Contracts) 23rd Edition. He states at Para. 745 p. 387:—

"The onus of proof is on the defendant employer to produce evidence to show that the dismissed employee ought reasonably to have obtained alternative employment."

In my opinion there was abundant evidence on which the Special damages claimed could be assessed. The evidence shows that the appellant was unemployed for over a year. I do not think that it would be reasonable to compensate him for the whole period of his unemployment. He is under a duty to mitigate his loss. The Special damages awarded to him under this head should be for what the Court considers a reasonable period having regard to all the circumstances of the case. The circumstances which I consider relevant and important in this case are that the appellant was [p.84] trained as a brewer and it is common knowledge that the Respondent Companies are the only brewers in Sierra Leone. In the circumstances I think that six months is a reasonable period for which to compensate the appellant under this head of Special damages. I would therefore award the appellant Le3315 for loss of salary, Le350 for loss of housing allowance and Le180 for loss of car allowance, totaling Le3845.

Learned Counsel for the appellant contended that the appellant was entitled to be paid for the whole of October, 1976.

Mr. Berthan Macaulay Jr. Learned Counsel for the Company submitted that the appellant was entitled to salary only for the days worked i.e. 5 days for which he had been paid. He relied for his submission on the Apportionment Act, 1870 which is an English Act of general application applicable in Sierra Leone by virtue of Section 74 of the Courts Act, 1965. Section 2 of the Apportionment Act 1870 provides inter alia that:

"all annuities …… and other periodical payments in the nature of income ……. shall, …….. be considered as accruing from day to day, and shall be apportionable in respect of time accordingly." And Section 5 of the Act expressly includes "salaries" within the meaning of "annuities"

I agree with Mr. Berthan Macaulay's submission and the appellant's claim in this regard therefore fails.

There was some argument on the Court of Appeals failure to award costs to the appellant. Having regard to the result of this appeal and the order we propose making, I don't think that any useful purpose would be served by discussing this subject in any detail in this judgment. Suffice it to say that the well established rule of this Court and of all Courts inferior to it is that the successful party is entitled to his costs unless the [p.85] Court in exercise of its discretion comes to the conclusion that for some special reasons connected with the case he should be deprived of it: See Ritter v. Godfrey (1920) 2 K.B. 47 C.A. Donald Campbell & Co v. Pollak (1927) A.C. 732 H.L. Administrator General v. Biakieu (1972-73) A.L.R. (S.L.) 310 S.C and A.J. Thomas v. J. Val Doherty & Anor. Civ. App. 28/72 C.A. (unreported) judgment delivered on 28th January, 1976.

In my opinion this case has highlighted certain imperfections in our law relating to Employment. The defence of the Company was that they acted in accordance with the Service Agreement by paying two months' salary in lieu of notice into the account of the appellant. If they had made the payment at the time due, that plea would have succeeded and the appellant's would have failed. That is the strict common law Position. According to the common law if an employer gives notice for the prescribed period under the Contract of Employment or pays the equivalent salary in lieu of such notice, the termination is lawful and the employee has no remedy in law. Similarly in a case where no period of notice is prescribed in the Contract of Employment, if the employer gives what the Court considers to, be reasonable notice in the circumstances or pays salary in lieu thereof, the termination is lawful and the employee has no remedy in law. It does not matter how unfair or high-handed the termination was, or for how long the employee had served the employer. If the employer acts in accordance with the terms of the Contract of Employment he is protected. The common law rule is illustrated by innumerable cases in the Law Reports. A Few random examples are Addis vs. Gramophone Company

The resulting position according to our present law is that an employee is at the mercy of his employer. An employee who may have rendered many years, may be ten or twenty years, of loyal, faithful and meritorious service, could be dismissed for no just cause, without assigning any reason, by the employer giving him the prescribed notice or salary in lieu thereof in accordance with the terms of the Contract of Employment. The employer may have acted out of spite, malice or other unworthy motives. But according to the common law so long as he complies with the terms of the Contract of Employment he is protected and the employee has no remedy in law. In such a situation no employee feels secure in his employment. There is no security of tenure. A man who has done twenty years of faithful and exemplary service may at the stroke of the pen appended to a valid notice of termination be thrown into the unemployment pool. The seniority of the employee does not matter, so long as the employer complies with the terms of the Contract. And if an employer can act in that way to a senior employee one can only pray "May the Good Lord save the junior employees."

In my opinion the present position reveals a most undesirable state of affairs that should be remedied as soon as possible. Unfortunately, the hands of the Courts are tied. We cannot intervene to remedy the situation by extending the common law to confer new rights or remedies on dismissed employees. The situation calls for statutory intervention. Parliament should enact laws for the protection of employees against arbitrary, high-handed and unfair dismissals. This has been done in other countries. See (U.K) Industrial Relations Act, 1971, (U.K) Trade Union and Labour Relations Act, 1974, (U.K) Employment Protection Act, 1975, [p.87] and (Ghana) Industrial Relations Act, 1965. And there is no reason why it should not be done in Sierra Leone. Such an enactment could confer a right of action on an employee for unfair, as distinct from wrongful, dismissal; prescribe the minimum notice of termination to be given having regard to the nature of the job, the seniority of the employee, the length of his service; specify that the reasons for the termination must be stated in writing and communicated to the employee; limit the causes for which an employee may be terminated after a stated number of years service; and confer on the Courts or other appropriate tribunal power to order the reinstatement of the employee or order compensation or both. Such or allied legislation could also make provision for compulsory minimum pension and gratuity rights of all employees in prescribed establishments e.g. Companies or bodies employing more than 50 persons or with a prescribed share capital or engaged in certain enterprises. Having said all this, it must be obvious that the need and urgency for reform in the field of the law relating to Master and Servant cannot be over-emphasized. It must be recognized that invariably employees are in a less advantageous bargaining position vis-a-vis employers. Most of the time they have no alternative but to accept the terms and conditions presented to them by their employer. It is an attitude of "Take it or Leave it." So if an employer presents a Service Contract to an employee he proposes to engage as a Manager providing for one month's notice of termination, the employee does not have much choice but to accept the terms or return to the employment market. Employees need to be protected by the State from unscrupulous, unreasonable, unsympathetic or oppressive employers. That is one sure way to guarantee the existence of a contented and secure body of workers in the realm.

It only remains for me to express my gratitude to learned Counsel who appeared in this appeal for their assistance and to say that I would allow the appeal and award the appellant Le3845 as Special damages with costs to the appellant in the Courts below and in this Court. I would dismiss the Cross-appeal with costs.

THE STATE v. I. M. ISCANDRI

[SC. CR.APP. 3/79] [p.1-5]

DIVISION: SUPREME COURT, SIERRA LEONE

DATE: 18 FEBRUARY 1980

CORAM: MR. JUSTICE E. LIVESEY LUKE, C.J.

MR. JUSTICE C. A. HARDING, J.S.C.

MR. JUSTICE O. B. R. TEJAN, J.S.C.

MRS. JUSTICE A. AWUNOR-RENNER, J.S.C.

BETWEEN

THE STATE — APPLICANT

AND

I. M. ISCANDRI — RESPONDENT

Dr. W. S. Marcus Jones for The State

Mrs. H. Ahmed for the Respondent

AWUNOR-RENNER, J.S.C.

This is an application for leave to amend the official record of the above appeal by the addition to it of the transcript of a tape recording made of the arguments before the Sierra Leone Court of Appeal on Thursday 1st March. 1979.

The application is supported by an affidavit sworn to by Dr. Marcus Jones, Counsel for the applicant on the 8th day of January 1980

The circumstances leading to this application are as follows. “The hearing of the appeal in this matter was fixed for the 25th day of January, 1979. The appeal was dismissed without any hearing on that date because of the non-appearance of counsel for the applicant.

On the same date Counsel for the applicant took out a motion for the appeal to be relisted. The application was granted and the appeal was fixed for hearing on the 20th February, 1979. On the 17th day of February 1979, Counsel for the applicant failed to appear in Court.

After this, the Court ordered his personal appearance on the 23rd February, 1979. Counsel eventually appeared in court on the 1st March 1979. He then stated before us that on account of the nature of the Court's order he took a tape recorder machine to Court that day and made a recording of what transpired in Court. He was now making this application he said because of the scanty nature of the record of the proceedings of 1st March, 1979. That he verily believed that they did not adequately reflect the nature of what happened in Court.

He also stated that he had the tape in his possession and that he had personally checked the transcript with the tape recording and that he believed it to be a true and correct transcript of the proceedings of the 1st March, 1979.

In his argument before the Court, Counsel for the applicant after referring the Court to the various exhibits annexed to his affidavit said that he was making this application because of the scanty notes on page 15 of the record of the Court of Appeal and because of the nature and particularly ground (b) of his appeal which states as follows:—

"That the Court of Appeal failed to allow the appellant herein to put forward its arguments clearly and interrupted the arguments so excessively that it became impossible for the said arguments to be fairly put".

Counsel submitted that it was for this Court to control its proceedings and admit the transcript of the tape recording.

Mrs. Hannah Ahmed for respondent said that she was not objecting in principle to the application but submitted that the proper foundation had not been laid. Certain requirements she said must be fulfilled.

(i) That the applicant must first prove the authenticity of the tape recording transcribed into a transcript.

(ii) Such transcript must be proved from the original tape. She referred the Court to two cases in support to her submission. R. v. Ali reported in (1965) 2 A.E.R. at page 464 and also to the case of R. v. Robson (1972) 1 W.L.R. at page 651.

Let me at this stage say that during the hearing of this application the Court adjourned for sometime to give Counsel for the respondent an opportunity of listening to the original tape recording.

When the Court reconvened after the adjournment she said that although she had listened to the tape recording she could not even recognise her own voice [p.4] although some of the contents of the recording sounded familiar. I must add also that she did not file any affidavit in opposition to the affidavit filed in support of this application.

In the case of R. V. Robson referred to supra evidence of a tape recording was admitted in evidence.

It was held that in admitting the evidence of a tape recording the method of making the recording cannot effect its acceptance by this Court as Counsel for the applicant has told this Court why he did it This Court saw and read the transcript of the tape recording and Counsel for the respondent also listened to the tape recording. One cannot say that any grave injustice would be done in accepting the transcript as the material contained in it is relevant and is the only record of what transpired in Court on that day as the judge's notes were most inadequate.

The justice of the case demands that if ground (b) should be properly argued then the transcript of the recording must be accepted to form part of the record. It must however be emphasized (sic) that each case must be decided on its merits.

In the present case there is no doubt that the record of the proceedings taken on the 1st day of March, 1979 was most inadequate. I have also considered the cases which have been referred to and listened to the arguments of both Counsel for the applicant and respondent and also had the opportunity of reading the transcript of the tape recording and feel that this is fit and proper case for this Court to exercise its discretion and allow the application [p.5] now made before him.

Having said that the application for leave to amend the official record by the addition to it of the transcript of a tape recording made of the proceedings before the Court of Appeal in this case ought to be allowed. I would like to add that this should not be regarded as a general practice as otherwise it would definitely lead to a situation where the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeal in every case would be called upon not only to admit transcripts to tape recordings but also to allow amendment of their records in this way. It is only in exceptional cases and, for cogent reasons that this Court would entertain such applications.

It is for the above reasons that I concurred in granting the application on the 15th January, 1980.

AWUNOR-RENNER J.S.C.

This an appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal made on the 11th day of July, 1979.

The events leading to this appeal started on the 10th September, 1973 when the respondent who was standing trial before the High Court in Freetown was acquitted and discharged after counsel representing him had invoked the provisions of Section 131 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Act number 32 of 1965. In consequence of this the appellant appealed to the Court of Appeal on the 29th day of March, 1974. when the matter eventually came up before the Court of Appeal, the appeal was dismissed for nonappearance by the Appellant. After the dismissal of the Appeal, Counsel for the appellant applied to have the matter restored to the list.

The application was granted and the appeal listed for hearing on the 20th day of February, 1979.

On the 17th day of February, 1979, counsel for the appellant filed a Notice of Abandonment under the provisions of Rule 45(1) of the Court of Appeal Rules 1973. Thereafter counsel for the Appellant did not appear in Court until he was requested to do so. On the 1st March, 1979 he appeared and submitted that he had already filed a Notice of Abandonment. The Court proceeded to hear arguments on the question of costs not-withstanding the filing of the Notice of Abandonment.

I need not go into all the details of what transpired in Court as this is contained in the transcript of a tape recording of the proceedings on that day which now forms part of the record of proceedings. On the 11th day of July, 1979 Judgment was delivered.

[p.6]

The Appeal was dismissed with costs against the State with such costs assessed at Le100.00.

These are the facts in outline.

Counsel for the Appellant has now appealed to, this Court against the said decision on the following grounds.

(a) The Court of Appeal was wrong in awarding Costs against the State of Le.l00.00

(b) The Court of Appeal failed to allow the appellant to put forward its argument clearly and interrupted the arguments so excessively that it became impossible for the said arguments to be fairly put

(c) That the Court of Appeal failed to give any or sufficient consideration to arguments against the award of costs in the circumstances of this case

(d) That the Court of Appeal erred in law in adverting an issue which did not affect the merits of the Appeal namely what is described as the dubious legal representation of the State.

Let me at this stage say that this last ground was abandoned by Counsel for the Appellant.

I now briefly turn to the points of arguments raised by both Counsel for the appellant and for the respondent before this Court.

Counsel for the Appellant argued that as far as the State was concerned there was no time limit within which it should appeal.

[p.8]

He referred the Court to Section 64 of the Court's Act 1965 and also to the amendment of the Courts Act Section 57 by Section 6 of the Courts Amendment Act number 21 of 1966.

In support of his arguments he further said that time does not run against the State unless it is so prescribed.

A statute does not bind the State unless it says so he said, he claimed that the Court was wrong in law in awarding costs against the State.

There has been an abandonment he said as prescribed by rule 45 (1) of the Court of Appeal Rules 1973 and that the appeal was therefore not before the Court. In support of his submission he referred the Court to the case of R.V. Medway (1976) 2 W.L.R. at page 528.

Finally as regards ground (b) Counsel for the appellant merely referred the Court to the case of. Jones V National Coal Board (1957) 2 A.E.R, at page 155 at page 159 claiming that the interruptions were excessive and that he was not given a fair hearing. He further added that the record spoke for itself.

Mrs. Hannah Ahmed counsel for the respondent replying to Counsel for the appellant referred the Court to Section 57(1) of the Courts Act 1965 as amended by Section 6 of the Court’s Amendment Act 1966. This Section she speaks about an aggrieved person which also includes the State.

As regards the more important issue of abandonment under rule 45 (1) of the Court of Appeal Rules 1973. Counsel for the respondent had this to say and I quote:

[p.9]

"The words deemed to be dismissed does not mean that it is the end of the matter or that Once a Notice of Abandonment has been filed that is the end."

With regards, to the question of Costs which has been awarded by the Court of Appeal Rules 1973 which reads as follows:

"On the hearing and determination of an appeal or any proceedings preliminary or incidental thereto the Costs if any shall be at the discretion of the Court."

On the question of the excessive interruptions by the Court of Appeal, Mrs. Ahmed stressed that the interruptions were not excessive and that Counsel was giving an opportunity to be heard and referred to the last two lines at page 13 of the transcript of the tape recording for confirmation on this point.

The only question to be answered in my view as regards the appeal now before this Court is what would be the effect on an application or an appeal pending before the Court of Appeal when once the provisions of Rule 45 (1) of the Court of appeal rules 1973 have been invoked. I think that it is convenient at this stage to recite the provisions of this Rule.

It reads as follows and I quote:

"An appellant at any time after he has duly served Notice of Appeal or of application for leave to appeal or of application for extension of time within [p.10] which such notice shall be given, may abandon his appeal by giving Notice of Abandonment thereof in Form 9 in Appendix C to the Registrar and upon such notice being given, the appeal shall be deemed to have been dismissed by the Court.

As stated earlier Counsel for the appellant had referred the Court to the Case of R.V. Medway Supra. In that case the applicant had applied to a single judge to discharge a detention order made against him under Section 60 of the Mental Health Act 1959. The single Judge had dismissed his application. The applicant then applied to the full Court for leave to withdraw his Notice of Abandonment. Lawson J. in delivering the judgment of the Court at page 533 referred to rule 23 of the English Criminal Appeal Rules 1908 which reads as follows:—

"An appellant at any time after he has duly served notice of appeal or of application for leave to appeal may abandon his appeal by giving Notice of Abandonment thereof in Form 111 in the schedule of these rules to the Registrar and upon such notice being given the appeal shall be deemed to have been dismissed by the Court of Appeal."

This rule is more or less couched in the same terms as our Court of Appeal rules 45(1) of the court of appeal Rules 1973.

In continuing his judgment further down at the same page 533 he had this to say.

"The situation under the rules, whether, of 1908 or 1968 is that when a Notice of Abandonment has been given the application or appeal of which it is the subject matter is disposed of whichever formula is applied either that from the rules of 1908 "deemed to have been dismissed" or that from the rules of 1968 "treated as having been dismissed or refused". It follows that after abandonment the Court is functus officio. That being so there is no longer any proceedings extant before the Court in relation to which its jurisdiction can be exercised".

Also in the case of R.V. Essex Quarter Sessions, Ex Parte Larkin (1961) 3 A.E.R. at page 930 and at page 932

Lord Parker C.J. had this to say

"The jurisdiction of any Appellate Court is statutory and in the absence of being seised of an appeal they have no discretion at all. All that an Appellate Court can do in circumstances such as these is to look at the position to see whether there is an abandonment. Once they find that there has been abandonment they can nothing further in the matter."

[p.12]

I now turn to the present case before us. The Notice I now turn to the present case before us. The notice of the Abandonment of the appeal before the Court of Appeal was filed on the 17th day of February, 1979. On the 1st March, 1979 counsel for the appellant informed the Court of this but the Court ignored this information and proceeded to continue with the matter and to award costs. In my opinion I feel it is the intention of the Rule Making Body to put an end to all proceedings when once a Notice of Abandonment has been filed under Rule 45 (1) of the Court of Appeal Rules 1973. I find support for this in the cases mentioned above and in my construction of the said rule. I hold therefore that the Court of Appeal disregarded the provisions of rule 45 (1) and that in effect after rule 45(1) had been invoked that there was nothing before the Court of Appeal.

Having said that there was no proceeding before the Court of Appeal whatever followed was a nullity and therefore they should not have awarded costs against the appellant under the circumstances. I would however wish to add that rule 62 of the Court of Appeal Rules 1973 lays down the following provision as regards the award of costs in that Court.

The rule reads;

"On the hearing and determination of an appeal or any proceedings preliminary or incidental thereto the costs if any shall be at the discretion of the Court. The award of costs is entirely in the discretion of the Court so long as that discretion is not exercised on wrong principles of law."

[p.13]

I know of no provision in our laws which states that costs cannot be awarded against the State.

I would finally like to say, something in passing about the complaint of Counsel for the appellant as regards the excessive interventions of one of the judges in the Court of Appeal which resulted in his not been able to put his arguments fairly.

Let me borrow the words of Lord Justice Denning in the case of Jones v National Coal Board (1957) 2. A.E.R. at page 155 at page l59. Lord Bacon spoke right when he said:

"Patience and gravity of hearing is an essential part of justice, and an over speaking judge is no well tuned cymbal".

Such are our standards. They are set so high that we cannot hope to attain them all the time. In the very pursuit of justice our keenness may outrun our sureness and we may trip and fall. A judge of acute perception, acknowledge learning and actuated by the best of motive, has nevertheless intervened so much in the conduct of the case that one of the parties has come away complaining that he was not able to put his case properly."

All judges must bear these words in mind as everyone is entitled to a fair hearing in which he or she can put his or her case properly before the Court.

[p.14]

For the reason given above I would allow the appeal accordingly and set aside the order for costs.

Mr. A.F. Seray Kamal for Appellant

Judgment Delivered This 13th day of July, 1981

TEJAN J.S.C.

On the 22nd day of May 1972 the Yoni Local Court delivered judgment in the ease between Amadu Gboyo

Hereinafter referred to as the Plaintiff) and Abu Kamara (hereinafter referred to as the Defendant), The Plaintiff's claim against the defendant was for unlawfully brushing their land, The Yoni Local Court, after having heard the parties and their witnesses gave judgment in favour of the defendant. The judgment was in the following terms:—

“Verdict of the Court after consulting with members. The Court President (now Chairman) informed the Court that according to the case between Amadu Gboyo of Mayobo and Abu Kamara of Mabilla, the Court had found out that the defendant Abu Kamara of Mabilla has right in the ease, because the Court has found out that the boundry of Pa Sheka Maila which the witnesses described from the river…… [p.110] and Konta and confirmed that this was the boundary which the Mabilla and Masiray people swore for. The reason why I accepted this boundary is because it has taken over ten years. There was no objection that some people were having the land. According to the evidence or the witnesses, Pa Alimamy Koroma was the section chief and he was the one who asked the section people to take the bush after the swearing. Since they had sworn, I did not get any report that somebody had gone in this bush to judge them. The witnesses have told me that the defendants have sworn for this bush but he did not go there…… Being that the witness have told me that Fulamassa came and was present when the boundary was laid and he even sent Pa Kapri Sanka to Represent him while the defendants' people were Sworn for the boundary between them and the Mecca people. All these made me go give Abu Kamara of Mabilla right. If anybody jumps this boundary the said person will pay fine of Le.100 to the Court, he will be punished by the law.

H.R.T.P. _ Abdulai Turay

Court's President”

It is against this judgment of the Yoni Local Court that the plaintiff appealed to the District Appeal Court. The record does not contain the notice and grounds of appeal, but however, the learned Magistrate re-beard the whole ease and heard witnesses called by the parties in pursuance of Section 1 of the Local Courts (Amendment) Act 1966 which enacts that—

[p.111]

“In any such appeal the District Appeal Court shall re-hear the whale case and hear any additional witnesses called by the parties even though they did not give evidence in the Court below.”

The jurisdiction conferred on the Magistrate to hear the appeal is to be found in Section 29(1) of the Local Courts Act 196) which provides that:

“As from the commencement of this Act, there shall be constituted a District Appeal Court which consist of the Police Magistrate for each district sitting with two Assessors selected by him form a list of experts in customary law drawn up by the District Officer:

Provided that in any ease where it appears that no question of customary law will arise the Magistrate may sit without Assessors.”

Section 29(2) of the same Act states that “the Assessors shall advise Magistrate on questions of customary law but the decision shall be vested exclusively in the Magistrate who shall record the reasons for his decisions.”

After having heard the parties and their witness and after careful survey of the evidence the learned Magistrate allowed the appeal set aside the decision of the Yoni Local Court and substituted therefore a declaration of title in favour of the plaintiff.

The defendant gave an oral notice of appeal to appeal against the decision of the learned Magistrate to the Local Appeals Division of the High Court on the following grounds:—

[p.112]

(1) Pa Alimamy Koroma is a relative of the appellant.

(2) It was Pa Alimamy Koroma who forced us to swear on oath.

(3) The appellant's father was a member of the local Court that gave decision in the case between Sheka Maila . and Pa Alimamy Koroma.

At the Local Appeals Division of the High Court, the parties were represented by Counsel. It does not appear from the records that the grounds of appeal were amended but the records show the following grounds of appeal:

(a) That the decision of the Tonkolili District Appeal Court was unreasonable and could not be supported having regard to the evidence.

(b) That the learned Principal Magistrate erred in holding that "it was wrong therefore for the lower Court to conclude that because the respondents (now appellants) succeeded in an action against Pa Alimamy Koroma therefore the land is theirs".

(c) at the learned Principal Magistrate failed to consider the appellant's (then respondent's) defence.

The appeal was heard by Duogu J. sitting with two Assessors. Judgment was delivered on 15th January 1976 setting aside the judgment of the District Appeal Court and restoring the judgment of the Yoni Local Court.

The plaintiff appealed against the judgment of the Local Appeals Division of the High Court. The grounds of appeal are:—

[p.113]

(1) That the learned Appellate Judge was wrong in law in holding that the learned Presiding Magistrate in the Tonkolili District Appeal Court was wrong in holding a re-hearing.

(2) That the learned Appellate Judge was wrong in law in basing his decision on question of Res Judicate and Estoppel even though such principles did not form any part of grounds of appeal before this Court.

(3) That the decision of the Court is unreasonable having regard to all the circumstances of the case.

When hearing started before the Court of Appeal, the third ground of appeal was amended to read: "That the decision was against the weight of evidence".

The Court of Appeal consisting of S.B. Davies (J.A. as he then was) Warne and Navo JJ.A heard the appeal. The judgment of the Court was delivered by Warne J.A. on 23rd April 1980. The Court of Appeal set aside the judgment of the Local Appeals Division of the High Court and restored the judgment of the District Appeal Court.

The defendant has now appealed against the judgment of the Court of Appeal to this Court. Mr. Serry Kamal for the defendant appealed on four grounds. These grounds are: (1) The Court of Appeal was wrong in holding that the trial Judge based his decision on the grounds that appellant should have justified the grounds of appeal before the re-hearing before the District Appeal Court; (2) The Court of Appeal was wrong in law in law in holding that nothing in Section 50 (1) (b) of the Act empowered the district Appeal Court to enquire if proceedings before it had been completed and it was being re-opened;

[p.114]

(3) That the Court Of Appeal was wrong in law in holding that there was no evidence on which the High Court found that Res Judicata applied; (4) That the Court of Appeal was wrong in law in failing to appreciate the effect of the judgment of the Yoni Local] Court 1957.

Mr. Serry Kamal Counsel for the defendant argued grounds 2, 3 and 4.

With regard to ground 2, Section 50(')(b) of the Local Courts Act, 1963 enacts that "no proceedings before any such Court which were finally terminated before the commencement of this Act shall be re-opened but any judgment, order or sentence made or passed in any such proceedings may be enforced in the same way as if this ct; had not come into operation."

Mr. Serry Kamal placed prime reliance on the above provisions to support his submission that on his notice of motion dated the 6th day of December, 1974, praying for an order to call additional evidence and on the granting of his application by the 1earned judge of the Loca1 Appea1s Division of the High Court, he was alloyed to tender in evidence a record of proceedings before the Yoni Native Court in 1957.

Looking at the record of proceedings before the Yoni Native Court 1957, there is nothing to show that any proceedings between the plaintiff and the defendant were finally terminated. The Yoni Native Court in 1957 decided an action between one Sheka Maiia of Maseray and Sanitigie Bangura of Romaka. The learned Principal Magistrate did pot re-open any matter which had been finally terminated by the Yoni Native Court. What the learned principal Magistrate did was to re-hear the whole case between. The plaintiff's and the defendant in accordance with Section 1 of the Local Courts (Amendment) Act 1966 which has already been quoted.

The Learned Principal Magistrate sitting with two Assessors who were experts in customary law heard the parties and their witnesses and arrived at his finding of fact when he said:

“On the totality of the evidence, there is no doubt in my mind, that the claim o£ the appellant (plaintiff) is clear and straightforward. It was satisfactorily proved. The evidence of the appellant's (plaintiff’s) witnesses are consistent and co-herent and very convincing too. This findings of fact of the Learned principal Magistrate who sat with expert assessors ought not to have been lightly interfered with by the learned Judge.

Ground jury raises the question o£ res judicata. Mr. Serry-Kamal used the record of proceeding in the Yoni Native Court in 1957 as a basis for his submission.

The doctrine of res judicata is based on two theories; first, the general interest of the community in the termination of evidence and in the finality and conclusion of judicial decisions; and, secondly, the right of the individual to be protected from vexatious multiplication of suits and prosecutions at the instance of an opponent whose superior wealth, resources and power may unless curbed by the estoppel, weighed down judicially declared right and innocence. The former is public policy, and latter is private justice. (See Spencer-Bower And Turner on Res Judicata 2nd Ed. At page 10) for res judicata to succeed, there must be identity of the issues involved. Lord Reid in his speech in the case of Carl Zeiss Swiftung v. Rayner & keeler Ltd. No. 2 (1967) 1 A.C. 853 at pp. 910 and 913 said:

[p.116]

“Let me take first the identity of the parties. In this preliminary or interlocutory matter the issue is whether the nominal plaintiff is before the Court at all. If it is decided in favour of the defendant, that establishes that the nominal plaintiff was never before the Court…… Again there is no doubt that the requirement of identity of parties is satisfied if there is privity between a party to the former litigation and a party to the present litigation……..the estoppel requirement for res judicata is identity of the subject matter. As to this, it has become acome to distinguish between case of motion estoppels and issue estoppels.”

In the same case Lori Guest said at page 933:

“The doctrine of estoppels per rem judicatam is relected in two latin maxims (1) interest rei publicae sit finis litium, and (2) nemo debet bis vexari pro una et eadem cause. The former is public policy and the latter is private justice. The rule of estoppel res judicata, which is a rule of evidence, is that where a final decision has been pronounced by a judicial tribunal of competent jurisdiction over the parties to and the subject-matter of the litigation, “any party or privy is estopped in any subsequent litigation from disputing or questioning such decision on the merits (Spencer Bower on Res Judicata p.3)

And he continued at p.935:

“The requirements of issue estoppel still remain (1) that the same question has been decided; (2) that the judicial decision which is said to create the estoppel was final; and, (3) that the parties to the judicial decision or their privies were the same persons as the parties to the proceedings in which the estoppel is raised or their privies……

And at page 946 of the same Report Lord Upjohn said:

“The broader principle of' res judieata is founded upon the twin principles so frequently expressed in Latin that there should be an end to litigation and justice demands that the same party shall not be harassed twice for the same cause. It goes beyond the mere record; it is part of the law of evidence for, to see whether it applies, the facts established and reasons given by the Judge, his judgment, the pleadings, the evidence and even the history of the matter may be taken into account (See Margirson v. Blackburn Borough Council (1939) 2 K.B. 426.”

Where res judicata is pleaded by way of estoppel to an entire cause of action, rather than to a single matter in issue, it amounts to an allegation that the whole legal rights and obligations of' the parties are concluded by the earlier judgment, [p.118] which may have involved the determination of questions of law as well as findings of fact. Even though the judgment was pleadable by way of estoppel it is perhaps not strictly correct to regard its determination of legal rights as a question of estoppel. The parties are estopped by the findings of fact involved in the judgment. See Halsbury Laws of England 4th Ed. Vol. 16 at para. 1527.

In order that a defence of res judicata may succeed it is necessary to show not only that the cause of action was the same but also that the plaintiff has had an opportunity of recovering, and but for his own fault might have recovered in the first action that which he seeks to recover in the second. A plea of pes judieata must show either an actual merger, or that the same point has been actually decided between the same parties. See Halsbury Laws of England 4th Ed. Vol. 16 at para 1528.

It is quite clear in the appeal before us that the action which was before the Yoni Native Court in 1957 was between Sheka Maila v. Santigie Bangura, and that the cause of action was for jumping the boundary laid by Pa Reke Kenke. The case before the Yoni Local Court in 1972 and the District Appeal Court in 1972 was between Amadu Gboyo (the plaintiff) v. Abu Kamara (the defendant) and the cause of action was for unlawfully brushing his bush,

There is no evidence that the parties in the 1957 proceedings were the same as those in the 1972 proceedings or that the action was instituted in a representative capacity to qualify the parties as privies. The 1957 action was instituted by Pa Alimamy Koroma against Santigie Bangura. None of the essential ingredients to raise a plea of res judicata was in evidence in the 1957 proceedings. I therefore agree with the Court of Appeal that there was no evidence upon which the Local Appeals Division of the High Court could find that the plea of res judicata applied.

[p.119]

With regard to ground 4, Mr. Serry-Kamal complained that the Court or Appeal failed to appreciate the effect or the judgment or the Yoni Local Court in 1957. But Counsel did not elaborate on this ground or appeal, and I cannot find any substance or merit it.

I would therefore dismiss the appeal.

ALIMMY TURAY AND CECILIA KOROMA

[Civ. App. No. 3/80][p.182-231]

DIVISION: THE SUPREME COURT OF SIERRA LEONE

DATE: 17 DECEMBER 1981

Coram: R. JUSTICE E. LIVESEY LUKE, C.J.; MR. JUSTICE C.A. HARDING, J.S.C.; MR. JUSTICE O.B.R. TEJAN, J.S.C.; MRS. JUSTICE AWUNOR-RENNER, J.S.C.; MR. JUSTICE K.E.O. DURING

Alimamy Turay - Appellant

and

Cecilia Koroma - Respondent

E.A. Thomas, Esq. for the Appellant

E.L. Michael, Esq. for the Respondent

JUDGMENT

LIVESEY LUKE C. J.

The respondent was injured in a motor accident on the Freetown/Bo Road on 17th July, 1975. As a result, action was taken against the appellant for damages for negligence. The respondent was a 13 year old school girl at the time of the accident. She suffered from a fractured pelvis as a result of the accident. She was admitted in hospital from 17th July, 1975 to 8th September, 1975 and continued physiotherapy treatment thereafter as an out-patient. When the Specialist Gynaecologist and Obstetrician examined her on 31st March, 1977 his findings were; the fracture had healed but there was gross deformity of the pelvis canal i.e. the birth canal. The injuries were permanent. As a result of the deformity of the pelvis, future full term pregnancies will have to be delivered by caesarean section operation. This will limit her child bearing to three children. The carriage of a pregnancy will be painful as a result of the bone injuries to the pelvis. She would probably always [p.183] suffer a certain amount of pain and discomfort during sexual intercourse. She will have terrible back-aches and there is a possibility that her menstrual periods will be more painful than before. She will not be able to take part in active sports. She was in Form 2 at the date of the trial. She said that after the accident she has not been able to study well, although she has not failed her exams.

The appellant did not file a defence to the action and so the respondent proceeded in default. The assessment of damages was by Kutubu J. He awarded the respondent Le25,000 as General Damages and Le1J5.50c as Special Damages. The appellant appealed to the Court of Appeal against the award of General Damages. The complaint was that the judge misdirected himself on the question of general damages and that in any case the award was excessive. The appeal was dismissed by the Court of Appeal. The appellant has now appealed to this Court on substantially the same grounds as those before the Court of Appeal.

The judge did not give a breakdown of his award of general damages under headings. As stated by this Court in Idrissa Conteh v. Abdul J. Kamara S/C Civ. App. No.2/79, judgment delivered on 1st April, 1980 (as yet unreported) the accepted hearings under which general damages for personal injuries may be awarded are: pain and suffering i.e. the bodily injury sustained, the pain and suffering endured, past, present and future, and injury to health loss of amenities; loss of expectation of life; and the present and future financial loss. On the evidence in this case, awards could properly have been made for pain and suffering and loss of amenities. The evidence before the judge did not warrant any award for loss of expectation of life or for present and future financial loss. So the judge took those factors into consideration in making his assessment he was wrong. There has been some argument as to whether the judge made an award in respect of “future or prospective loss of earnings.” To resolve this issue,

[p.184] it is necessary to refer to the judgment. After the learned judge had considered and decided on the claim for special damages he proceeded thus:

“I have now to consider plaintiff's future or prospective loss of earnings. I realise that Plaintiff is an infant still attending school and has not yet embarked on any career, and so there is no figure for net annual loss at the date of trial. There is no scale on which I can weigh the injuries of this girl for compensation. I am therefore reduced to a pure guess-work for the circumstances of this kind of case defy anything like a precise arithmetical calculation. I therefore have to take everything into consideration in granting the plaintiff a lump sum, which I consider commensurate enough in the circumstances of her case.”

The learned judge then highlighted certain “salient points” in the medical evidence and then continued:

“I realise in the circumstances, I have to award a lump sum once and for all, which will be considered reasonable and in doing so I have to take into account all the above considerations.”

It should be noted that in the in first passage the learned judge said that he had to consider “the plaintiff’s future or prospective loss of earning.” He also, said that he had to take-everything into consideration in granting the plaintiff a lump sum. “In the second passage the learned judge said that in making a once for all lump sum award he had to take into account all the above considerations.” It seems quite clear to me that one of the “above considerations” the judge was referring to in [p.185] the second passage was the very first “consideration” he mentioned at the beginning of the first passage i.e. “future or prospective loss of earnings.” Therefore, when the two passages are read together, I am left in no doubt that the learned judge took “future or prospective loss of earnings” into consideration in assessing general damages.

I don't think that there is any dispute that the evidence in this case does not warrant the award of any damages in respect of “future or prospective loss of earnings.” Since the judge, in my view, took that head of damages into consideration in making his awards, in my judgment, he thereby erred.

The principles governing an appellate court in appeals against award of damages are well-settled. In Idrissa Conteh v. Abdul J. Kamara (supra) this court said inter alia:—

“But a well established rule has bean accepted over the years as governing an Appellate Court in the exercise of its power to review an award of damages by a judge sitting alone. The rule is that an Appellate Court will not interfere with an award of damages unless it is satisfied that the judge acted on a wrong principle of law or has misapprehended the facts or has made a wholly erroneous estimate of the damages to which the claimant is entitled.”

See also Flint v. Lovell (1935) 1 K.B. 354 C.A. per Greer L.J. at p. 360; and Owen v. Sykes (1936) 1 X.B. 192 C.A. per Greer L.J. at P. 198.

In my judgment the learned judge gave weight to matters that ought not to have affected his mind. He thereby misapprehended the 'facts, resulting in his making an erroneous estimate of the damages to which the respondent is entitled. In those circumstances, this court has the power and the duty to correct the error by interfering with the award o£ damages.

It is therefore necessary to consider the quantum or general damages to which the respondent is entitled. As stated earlier, the learned judge did not give a breakdown or his award. It is therefore impossible to know the amount that he awarded under the various heads. So this court is left to speculate. As I said in the course of my judgment in Idrissa Conteh v. Abdul J. Kamara (supra) a judge in this jurisdiction is not obliged to state the amount awarded under each head. There is no rule of court requiring him to do so. But as a matter of practice some judges in this jurisdiction have done so in the past. And that practice is common in other Commonwealth jurisdictions. It would be desirable if judges in this jurisdiction endeavour to apportion their awards of general damages for personal injuries between the various accepted heads. Such a practice would have immense advantages, Firstly, it would contribute to the desirable objective of attaining some measure of standardization the assessment of general damages for personal injuries. It is eminently desirable that as far as possible comparable injuries should be compensated by comparable awards. Sea H. West & Sons Ltd. v. Shepherd (1964) A.C. 326 per Lord Morris at p. 346. Secondly, it would certainly assist other judges engaged in the same task (Of assessing general damages) if judges apportioned their awards between the various heads. Thirdly, it would assist the appellate courts to know how the judge arrived at the overall figure. Thereby the Appellate Court would be spared the bother of speculating as to what amount the judge awarded in respect of each head of damages.

The principles applicable in making assessment of general damages in personal injury cases were stated by this Court in Idrissa Conteh v. Abdul J. Kamara (supra). Put briefly, they are that the damages awarded should be a fair and reasonable compensation for the damage suffered and that perfect compensation is not possible or permissible. In this connection it is relevant to recall the words of Lord Pearce in H. West & Sons Ltd. v. Shepherd (supra). He said inter alia at pp. 368 369:—

“It would be lamentable if the trial of a personal injury claim put a premium on protestations of misery and if a long face was the only safe passport to a large award.”

On the question of quantum of damages, learned counsel on both sides cited a number of English decisions on what they considered to be comparable cases. I do not consider those decisions helpful. It became obvious during argument before us that there is a dearth of comparable local cases - reported and unreported. That may have accounted for the learned judge's difficulties in arriving at a fair and reasonable figure.

Applying the above stated principles, and taking all the circumstances into consideration, I would assess general damages for pain and suffering and loss of amenities at Le15,000. I consider that overall figure a' fair and reasonable compensation and indeed a generous estimate. I would therefore reduce the general damages to Le15,000.

I would allow the appeal and reduce the general damages to Le15,000.

HARDING. J.S.C.

This appeal is against the Judgment of the Court of Appeal dated 23rd April, 1980, dismissing an Appeal from the judgment of Kutubu J. (as he then was) sitting in the Bo High Court, dated 27th February, 1978 on the quantum of general damages awarded to the Respondent/Plaintiff for personal injuries sustained as a result of the negligent driving by the Appellant's servant or agent of a motor vehicle owned by the Appellant.

[p.188]

The Respondent is a school girl, and at the time of the accident, 17th July, 1975, was aged about 13 years. On 11th May, 1977, through her next friend Samuel Koroma, she instituted proceedings claiming damages for negligence. The Appellant did not file a defence to the action and so an Interlocutory Judgment in default was entered on 21st July, 1977. As a result of application being made the damages were ordered to be assessed by the taking of oral evidence. After hearing evidence from Samuel Koroma who tendered two Medical Reports and from Dr. Frazer Specialist Gynaecologist and Obstetrician, and from the Respondent herself, the trial Judge awarded Le135.50 special damages and Le.25,000/00 general damages.

An appeal against this award of general damages having been rejected by the Court of Appeal, the Appellant has now come before this Court.

It was contended by Counsel (for the Appellant) that the amount awarded was “not assessed with moderation, is excessive and punitive, and should have been reduced by the Court of Appeal so as to make it a fair and reasonable compensation for the injuries suffered in the light of previous awards in comparable cases, and to secure some measure of' uniformity thereby”.

Counsel for the Respondent on the other hand submitted that there were only two issues for determination before this Court, firstly whether the trial Judge acted on a wrong principle of law or misapprehended the facts or made a wholly erroneous estimate of the damages to which the Respondent was entitled, and secondly whether the Court of Appeal was wrong in refusing to reduce the award of the trial Judge who sat without a Jury.

The rule is that an appeal against the decision of a Judge upon the quantum of damages will not be allowed unless either (i) the Judge has applied a wrong principle of law; or (ii) that amount awarded is either so inordinately low or so inordinately high that it must be a wholly erroneous estimate of the damage.

[p.189]

The principles on which an appellate Court will so interfere have been laid down in a long line of cases both English as well as local and if I may here mention a few - FLINT v LOVELL (1935) 1 K.B. 354, OWEN vs. SYKES (19:36) 1 K.B. 192; DAVIS vs POWELL DUFFRYN ASSOCIATED COLLIERIES LTD. (1942) A.C. 601; LASAWARRACK vs RAFFA BROTHERS & THE NORTHERN ASSURANCE ,CO. LTD. (1962) S.L.L.R. 196 and IDRISSA CONTEH vs ABDUL J. KAMARA S.C. Civ, App. No.2 of 79.

In the case of LASAWARRACK vs RAFFA BROTHERS (supra) it was stated, at p. 197, by Bankole Jones (Ag. C.J. as he then was):—

“An appellate court is not justified in substituting a figure of its own for that awarded below simply because it would have awarded a different figure if it had tried the case at first instance. It can only properly interfere if it is satisfied that the Judge applied a wrong principle of law or that the amount awarded is either so inordinately high or so inordinately low that it must be a wholly erroneous estimate of the damages.”

It is well established that the courts when making awards of damages should have regard to awards made by other courts comparable cases. In BIRD vs COCKING & SONS LTD. (1951) 2 T.L.R., Birkett, L.J., said:—

“Although there is no fixed and unalterable standard, the Courts have been making these assessments for many years, and I think that they do form some guide to the kind of figure which is appropriate …….. when, therefore, a particular matter comes for review, one of the questions is, how does this accord with the general. run of assessments made over the years in comparable cases.”

[p.190]

Again" in RUSHTON VB NATIONAL COAL BOARD (1953) 1 Q.B. 495. Romer L.J., stated, at p. 502:-

“The only way …… in which one can achieve anything approaching a uniform standard is by considering cases which have come before the Courts in the past and seeing what amounts were awarded in circumstances so far as may be comparable with the case which the court has to decide.”

It was however pointed out in WALDON vs WAR OFFICE (1956) 1 A.E.R. 108, that reference to other cases is entirely at the Judge's discretion; it should not be looked upon and treated as a precedent out merely to seek guidance, each case must be considered upon its own merits.

In SINGH vs TOONG FONG OMNIBUS CO, Ltd. (1964) 3 A.E.R. 925 (an appeal to the Privy Council from Singapore) it was said that comparison should be made with cases “in the same jurisdiction or in a, neighboring locality were Similar social economic and industrial conditions exist.”

Having said all this I now have to consider, what evidence the trial Judge had before him when he made his award. There was no dispute as to liability for negligence and also no dispute as, to the amount of Le.135.50 awarded as special damages. The dispute is against the lump sum of Le.25,000/00 awarded as general damages.

There were two Medical Reports admitted, one from Mr. Forde the Surgeon Specialist who saw and treated the Respondent when she was brought to the Bo Hospital. It was dated 17th October, 1975 and reads as follows:—

MEDICAL REPORT

RE CECILIA KOROMA

HISTORY:

This school girl was brought to the Bo Hospital on the 17.7.75 after allegedly being involved in a road traffic accident. On Examination, she could not stand due to pain in the right hip joint and she had a number of minor abrasions. There was bony tenderness over the right pubic ramus and all movements of the right hip joint were restricted due to severe pain.

X-rayed confirmed the presence of a fractured pelvis extending through the right pubic ramus at the front, and the sacro-iliac joint at the back.

TREATMENT: consisted of G.V. paint to the abrasions, analgesics, and bilaterial skin traction to the legs. On this treatment, the patient made satisfactory progress with intermittent X-ray monitoring and she was discharged from the ward on the 8.9.75 to continue treatment in the Physiotherapy Department as an out-patient.

After two weeks of physiotherapy she was reviewed in the surgical out-patient's department and found to be walking satisfactorily and without pain.

X-rays showed the fractures to be satisfactorily healed, and the patient was therefore discharged from my care.

CONCLUSION: Cecilia Koroma was treated at the Bo hospital on the 17.7.75 following a road traffic accident in which she sustained a fractured pelvis. She received seven weeks of in-patient and a further two weeks of out-patient treatment at the end of which period she had made a satisfactory recovery from the injury. However, the contour of her pelvis has become altered as a result of her injury, and this likely to cause obstetric problems of a serious nature when she comes to child-bearing.

The other one was from Dr. G.B. Frazer Senior Specialist Obstetrician and Gynaecologist who examined the Respondent on 31st March, 1977 for reassessment of residual permanent disability.

It was dated 7th April, 1977 and reasons as follows:—

HEDICAL REPORT

RE: CECILIA KOROMA

Age 15 years Occupation: School Girl Involved in a road traffic accident on 17.7.75 and treated at the Bo Government Hospital where she was hospitalised for a period of 7 weeks.

[p.193]

X-ray on admission to hospital confirmed fracture of the pelvis involving the right pubic ramus and the saco-iliac joint. Patient was re-examined by me on 31.3.77 for reassessment of residual permanent disability.

Clinical and Radiological examination confirmed the presence of healed fractures of the pelvis with gross deformity of the pelvis canal i.e. the birth canal.

Movement of the right hip was painful.

These injuries are permanent and as a result of the deformity of the birth canal, future full term pregnancies will have to be delivered by caesarean operation. Also, the carriage of a pregnancy will be painful to the patient as a direct result of these bony injuries to the pelvis.

There is no place for corrective surgery for these injuries either here in Sierra Leone or abroad."

F.W.A.C.S

Senior Specialist

Obstetrician and Gynaecologists,

Bo Government Hospital."

Apart from receiving these two Medical Reports Dr. Frazer also gave oral evidence; so did the Respondent and her uncle and next friend.

The trial Judge after reviewing the medical evidence and after making an award for special damages went on to say as follows:—

[p.194]

"I have now to consider Plaintiff's future or prospective loss of earnings. I realise that plaintiff is an infant still attending school and has not yet embarked on any career, and so there is no figure for net annual loss at the date of the trial. There is no scale on which I can weigh the injuries of this girl for compensation. I am therefore reduced to a pure guess work for the circumstances of this kind of case deny anything like a precise arithmetical calculation. I therefore have to take everything into consideration in granting the plaintiff a lump sum, what I consider commensurate enough in the circumstances or her case."

He then went on to highlight a few salient point on the medical evidence"—

"The plaintiffs is a girl, 15 years of age who all things being equal has 40 years ahead of her living with pa1n as a result of the injuries sustained from the accident. I am satisfied that the plaintiff sustained serious personal injuries as a direct result of the accident. Plaintiff is not going to have the normal life of a woman any longer. She cannot have a normal birth; only through a caesarean operation. She said in evidence that this prospect worries her a great deal, so psychologically she has already developed an aversion to this normal method of child delivery."

[p.195]

Plaintiff stated in her evidence that she would like to have many children when she gets married if at all. But in the opinion the medical profession it is not good for any woman to undergo caesarean section more than three times in her life at the most. This consideration is therefore bound to limit the potential size of plaintiff's family to two or three permitted by this method. Plaintiff has therefore lost the joyful expectation of having a large family~ What is more, even the limited number of children that may be permitted in the circumstances of her case, will not be delivered in the normal way. The doctor in his evidence said that in the case of a full time pregnancy plaintiff will have to be in pain for nine months, in addition to the prospect of oestro-arthritts setting in with its attendant pain and suffering. Plaintiff will in future have painful-sexual intercourse and this to a great extent will affect her marriage prospects. She will have to live with this unpleasant feeling for the rest of her life. There will be much to be desired in her married life since both husband and wife will not have the fullest and uninhibited joy of normal sexual-intercourse due to the attendant pain caused by the injury to her pelvis. Her chances of furthering her education are to some extent hampered by these injuries. It has been said that her back-ache will interfere with her studies due to pain.

Plaintiff can no longer take part in sports; the door is shut to her forever. According to plaintiff those glooming prospects in her young age cause her great displeasure. Dr. Frazer categorically stated in his evidence and I believe him, that there is no place for corrective surgery for this girl anywhere either in Sierra Leone or abroad. Consequently, she will have to live with pain, and not as a normal woman for the rest of her life. In the light of the serious nature of plaintiff's injuries and prospective loss of a predominantly happy life, I am to consider how best money can compensate her. There is nothing which medical science can do to bring this girl back to her former position. I agree both with Dr. Frazer's prognosis and his evidence relating to the normal span of life in this part of the world. According to Dr. Frazer, all things being equal, plaintiff has 40 years more ahead of her living with pain.

I realise in the circumstances, I have to award a lump sum once for all, which will be considered reasonable and in doing so I have to take into account all the above considerations. In this regard I must also bear in mind the fall in the value of money, for our purpose the leone.

x x x x x

Taking all these contingencies into consideration my duty is to award plaintiff what I consider adequate and reasonable."

[p.197]

It was contended by Mr. Thomas, counsel for the Appellant that the trial Judge misapprehended the facts in in assessing damages by placing undue emphasis that the Respondent could only have children by caesarean section. He referred to the case of CULLO vs ANGELL (1969) A.C. 242 where an award of £10,000 general damages was upheld notwithstanding the fact that the Court considered that it was on the high side, but in that ease the plaintiff was a girl aged 5 at the date of the accident and the injures were of a multiple nature and of greater severity than the Respondent's.

It was also argued on behalf of the Appellant that in making the award the trial Judge took into consideration loss of future or prospective earnings. For an award to be made under this head it must be based upon solid facts; there must be some evidence before the Judge to enable him arrive at firm conclusions upon (i) what would the Respondent probably have been able to earn in future, if she had not been injured and (ii) how much (if at all) has her earning capacity been reduced. There is no evidence of loss of earning capacity or of what factors and contingencies have been allowed for. In short there has been no evidence of any academic or sporting achievement or of any special feature of her pre accident activities. The trial Judge himself stated that he was "therefore reduced to pure guess work". He concluded in this regard by saying "I therefore have to take everything into consideration in granting the plaintiff a lump sum, what I consider commensurate enough in the circumstances". He did not however state what were the facts he took into consideration. whatever, therefore, he must have awarded under this head, must be presumed to be of not very great value taking the lump sum of Le.25,000/00 as a whole.

The Respondent stated in evidence that she "would like to get married when she Leaves school …….. would like to have many children say up to ten and above." Again, this is mere speculation depending on several factors and contingencies. On this aspect of her evidence the trial Judge stated that Plaintiff has therefore lost the joyful expectation of having a large family."

The learned trial Judge in his review of the evidence did not take cognizance of the Report of Mr. Forde, the Surgeon, who examined and treated the Respondent. The Report in brief. stated that following a road accident in which she sustained a fractured pelvis she received seven weeks of in-patient and a further two weeks of out-patient treatment at the end of which period she had made a satisfactory recovery from the injury; she was found to be walking satisfactorily and without pain.

This is to be contrasted with the learned trial Judge's findings:

"…..consequently, she will have to live with pain, and not as a normal woman for the rest of her life. In the light of the serious nature of plaintiff's injuries and prospective loss of a predominantly happy life, I am to consider how best money can compensate her. There is nothing which medical science can do to bring this girl back to her former position. I agree both with Dr. Frazer's prognosis and his evidence relating to the normal span of' life in this part of the world.

According to Dr. Frazer, all things being equal, Plaintiff has 40 years more ahead of her living with pain."

[p.199]

Although we were referred to a few cases dealing with awards of general damages none of them was of local origin except one, IDRISSA CONTEH vs ABDUL J. KAMARA (Supra) which I must say is not a comparable one with the present case. I myself have not been able to come across any comparable local case to look for guidance as to the current levels of assessment but Mere are a few English cases (taken from MUNKMAN ON DAMAGES 5th Edition and KEMP AND KEMP Vol. 24th Edition) which I shall

now mention but I hasten to say that in doing so I am not unmindful of the caveat in the SINGH vs

TOONG FONG ONIBUS CO, LTD. case (supra) that "such cases should as a rule be those which have been determined in the same jurisdiction or in a neighbouring locality where similar social, economic and industrial conditions exist."

(i) HIZETT vs B.T.C. (Sheffield Assizes, Pearson J. Nov. 30, 1956) Girl 18. Shop Assistant. serious distortion of pelvis, would necessitate major operation in case of child birth. Also injuries to chest and leg, scarring of thigh (6 in by 4 in). skin grafting and risk of osteo-arthritis in spine - general damages £4,500.

(ii) HARRIS vs FOWLER, (Q.B.D., Hilbery. J. Nov. 25, 1959. The Times, Nov. 27). Girl 18, Multiple fracture of pelvis; might affect prospect of marriage and child bearing, slight continuing injury of urinatory system, also backache and depression. General Damages £2,100.

(iii) BOSTOCK vs BROWN (Newcastle Assizes, Wrangham J., July 20, 1970) Girl 21. Fracture of left frontal bone with concussion, general bruises and abrassions, cuts to her face and neck requiring 6o stitches, loss of two teeth and damage to four others, fractured pelvis, injury to left heel leaving permanent and disfiguring scar. General Damages £3,250.

[p.200]

In the light of all what I have stated and bearing in mind that there was no evidence of loss of expectation of life or of future are prospective earnings I would say, with respect to the learned trial Judge, that after much consideration, bearing in mind that this Court will only interfere on a pure question of quantum only if satisfied that the trial Judge's award constitutes a wholly erroneous estimate of the plaintiff's loss, that I am satisfied that the award is sufficiently excessive to justify this Court in interfering to reduce it. For my part I would reduce it to Le,15,000. To that extent I would allow the appeal.

Hon. Mr. Justice C.A. Harding

Justice of the Supreme Court

17/12/81.

TEJAN, J.S. C.

The appellant is the owner of vehicle WH. 7116. On the 17th day of July, 1975, the respondent while travelling as a passenger in the vehicle owned by the appellant sustained personal injuries as a result of the negligent driving of the appellant's servant or agent. At the time the respondent who was a school girl, was fifteen years of age.

On the 11 the day of May, 1977, the respondent through her next friend Samuel Morana Koroma instituted proceedings by the issue of a writ of summons. The writ of summons contained a statement of claim. Appearance was entered by Smythe and Co. but no defence was filed and delivered within the time prescribed by law, and on the 21st day of July, 1977 an interloeutory judgment in default of defence was signed against the appellant. On the 3rd of October, 1977, the respondent moved the Court for an order to assess damages. The motion was heard by Kutubu J. as he then was, on the 7th day of October, 1977 made the following order:—

[p.201]

(a) That instead of a writ of Inquiry the value and amount of damages for which interlocutory judgment was entered on the 21st day of July, 1977 be assessed by this Honourable Court by the taking of oral evidence.

(b) That the said assessment of the damages do take effect next session on a date to be communicated to the parties.

(c) That the costs of this application be the plaintiff's (now respondent),

The issue of assessment of damages came before Kutubu J, as he then was, on the 29th day of November, at the Bo High Court, and after having heard evidence from the next friend, Dr. Fraser a Specialist Gynaecologist and Obstretittian and the respondent herself, the learned Judge awarded a global sum of Le.25,000 as damages.

The appellant, on the 14th day of July, 1978 filed a notice of appeal to the Court of Appeal on the following grounds:—

(1) That the learned trial Judge misdirected himself in law and in fact on the question of general damages.

(2) That having regard to his findings of fact the learned trial Judge erred in law in awarding general damages which were excessive in all the circumstances.

(3) That the decision is against the weight of evidence

The appeal was heard by S.B. Davies J.A. as he then was Warne and Turay JJ,A. The Court of Appeal delivered its judgment on the 23rd day of April, 1980 and dismissed the appeal.

[p.202]

The appellant has tabled before this Court the following grounds of appeal:—

(a) That the Court of Appeal was wrong in law in refusing to reduce the trial Judge's award of general damages which amounted to an attempt to give a perfect compensation and not a fair and reasonable assessment of general damages for the injuries suffered by the Respondent.

(b) That the award of general damages is exclusive in all the circumstances,

(e) That the decision is against the weight of evidence.

In arguing grounds (a) and (b). Mr. Thomas, Counsel for the appellant contended that the trial Judge misapprehended the facts and that the Court of Appeal did not advert its mind to its appellants function and that the learned judge took into consideration loss of earning in assessing the award of damages.

Mr. Michael, Counsel for the respondent, on the other hand, submitted that the issues to be determined are (1) whether the trial Judge acted on a wrong principle of law, (2) whether the trial Judge misapprehended the facts and (3) whether the amount awarded was a wholly erroneous estimate of the damages to which the respondent was entitled.

I have now to consider the principles of law which would entitle a Court of Appeal to interfere with quantum of damages. The award of damages, being question of fact, is the function of the jury and the assessment is Primarily a factual enquiry which leaves very little room for interference by the Court of Appeal, but on an appeal from a Judge trying a case without a jury is a rehearing by the Court of Appeal with regard to all question involved in the action, including quantum of damages. But the Court of Appeal will not reverse the finding of a trial Judge as to the amount of damages simply because it thinks that if it had tried the case, it would have awarded a different amount, To justify reversing the award of amount of damages, the Court of Appeal should convinced either that the trial [p.203] Judge acted upon some wrong principle of law, or that the amount awarded was so extremely high or so very small as to make it an entirely erroneous estimate of the damage to which the plaintiff is entitled. This principle of law is clearly demonstrated in Flint v. Lovel (1934) All. E.R. Rep. 200 at 202 where Greer L.J. said:—

“But though the established rules with regard to appeals in cases tried with juries do not apply to appeals from the decisions of Judges trying cases without the assistance of a jury, I think it is right to say that this Court will be disinclined to reverse the finding of a trial Judge as to the amount of the damages merely because they think that if they had tried the case in the first instance, they would have given a lesser sum. In order to justify reversing the trial Judge on the question of the amount of damages damages it will generally be necessary that this Court should be convinced either that the Judge acted upon some wrong principle of law or that the amount awarded was so extremely high or so very small as to make it, in the judgment of the Court, an entirely erroneous estimate of the damage to which the plaintiff is entitled.”

In the case of Owen v. Sykes (1936) 1 K.B. 192, where a trial Judge awarded a doctor the sum of Lel0,000 as damages, and the Court of Appeal held that although if they had tried the case in the first instance they would probably have awarded a smaller sum as damages, but yet they would not review the finding of the trial Judge as to the amount of damages as they were not satisfied that the trial Judge acted upon a wrong principle of [p.204] law or that the amount awarded as damages was so high as to make it an entirely erroneous estimate of the damage to which the plaintiff was entitled.

The question of quantum of damages came before the Sierra Leone Court of Appeal in Lasawarrack v. Raffa Bros and Northern Assurance Co. Ltd. (1962) 2 S.L.L.R. 196, and Bankole-Jones Ag. P. said:—

“An appellate Court is not justified in substituting a figure of its own for that awarded below simply because it would have awarded a different figure if it had tried the case at first instance. It can only properly interfere if it is satisfied that the Judge applied a wrong principle of law or that the amount awarded is so inordinately high or so inordinately low that it must be a wholly erroneous estimate of the damage."

In Owens v Sykes (supra) Greer L.J. said at page 197:—

"……An assessment of damages is necessarily an estimate, and an estimate is necessarily a matter of degree, and it seems to me that, unless we come to the conclusion that the learned judge took an erroneous view of the evidence as to the damage suffered by the plaintiff, or made some mistake in giving weight to evidence that ought not to have affected his mind, or in leaving out of consideration something that ought to have affected his mind, we ought not to interfere"

The case of the African Press Ltd. v. Dr. Okechuku Ikejiari (1952 to 1955) Selected Judgments of W.A.C.A. at 186, Verity C.J. said at page 389:—

[p.205]

"Whether the members of the Court would, had anyone of us sitting at first instance, have assessed the damages at the figure reached by the trial judge, or more or less, is beside the point. The grounds upon which a Court of Appeal will vary the damages assessed by a judge sitting without a jury have recently been discussed in Nkoku v. Zik Press Ltd. (Selected Judgments January to May 1951 at page 15) and I do not propose to discuss them here. It will suffice to say that I am unable to hold that in the present case the learned Judge applied any wrong principle or proceeded on a wrong basis in assessing the damages or that the sum found by him is so excessive as to disclose an entirely erroneous estimate of the injury suffered by the respondent."

The case of Crawford v. Erection and Engineering Services Ltd. (1953) C.A.. No. 254 at page 684 Kemp and Kemp (2nd. Ed. Vol. 1). Evershed M. R. said:

"……It is, however, well established that this Court does not interfere on that grounds alone, and for obvious reasons, with the award of damages of a judge of first instance. In order to justify interference by the Court, it must be shown that the damages are as excessive or so low as to indicate that some matter of fact has been wrongly included from their computations or putting it generally, that they are so low or so excessive as to [p.206] altogether unreasonable in other words that they are either inordinately high or inordinately low; and as a general rule it may, I think, safely be stated that unless the damages are going to be halved or doubled, as the case may be, the Court would not, as a general rule at any rate interfere"

In the case of Kamara v. Umarco (1970-1971) A.L.R. (S.L.) at 141, Bankole-Jones P. interfered with the award of damages, after having found that the trial Judge adverted his mind to matters which he ought not to have adverted his mind, and then came to the view "that the amount awarded was founded on a wholly erroneous estimate of the damage suffered and therefore inordinately low."

In the case of Sillah Sabally and Others v. Bojan (Civ. App. G.C.A. 15/77 and G.C.A. 2/78 (unreported) Livesey Luke C.J. said:

“There are also matters which the learned trial judge should, in my opinion, have taken into consideration in assessing general damages but which he ignored” and he continued

“In my opinion, having regard to what I have just said, the learned Judge erred not only in giving weight to the evidence that ought not to have affected his mind but in not considering matters that ought to have affected his mind.”

It is necessary to consider the principles upon which the assessment of damages are based. Lord Blackburn laid down the test as to measure of damage in Livingston v. Rawyards Coal Company (1880) App. Case 25 when he said:—

[p.207]

“I do not think there is any difference of opinion as to its being a general rule that, where an injury is to be compensated for by damages, in settling the sum of money to be given for reparation of damages you should as nearly as possible get at that sum of money which will put the party who has been injured, or who has suffered, in the same position as he would have been in if he had not sustained the wrong for which he is now getting his compensation or reparation.”

This passage of Lord Blackharn has been cited with approval by Viscount Sankey L.C. in Banco de Portugal v. Waterloo and Sons, Ltd. (1932) A.C. 452 at.475 and by Earl Jowith in B.T.C. v. Gourley (1956) A.C. 185 at 197.

It seems to me from the authorities, that among other aspects, an award is measured (1) by the extent of the injury; (2) by the extent of the loss of happiness and (3) by the extent to which money can provide the person who has Suffered, reasonable solace. But it is also clear that the Court cannot order the defendant to provide the leg or eye which the Plaintiff has lost. Mental pain and anguish which the plaintiff has suffered cannot be obliterated. For these reasons, Judges, are in general, hesitant to venture beyond the principle that the task of the Court is to award fair and reasonable compensation. Salmon L.J. in Gardner v. Dyson (1967) 1 W.L.R.

1497 at 150 stated that “damages must be real and amount to what the ordinary reasonable man would regard as fair and sensible compensation for the injuries suffered.”

In H. West and Sons. Ltd. v. Shepherd (1936) 2 W.L.R. 1359 at 1368 Lord Morris or Borth - Y - Gest said:—

[p.208]

“The damages which are to be awarded for a test are those which so far as money can compensate will give the injured party reparation for the wrongful act and for all the natural and direct consequence of the act. The word “so far as money can compensate” point to the impossibility of equating money with human suffering or personal deprivations……. But money cannot renew a physical frame that has been battered and shattered. All that judges and Courts can do is to award sums which must be regarded as giving reasonable compensation. In the process there must be the endeavour to secure some uniformity in the general method of approach. By common assent awards must be reasonable and must be assessed with moderation."

It is apparent from the authorities that no real criterion for measurement of award of damages exists, and the Court must derive guidance solely from the standard level of awards in comparable cases, and the Court of Appeal may interfere if it considers that an ward is totally inconsistent with the general level of awards. But although it is necessary to look for guidance in comparable cases, the decline the real value of money must be taken into account. The authority for this proposition can be found in Rose v. Willey (1951) C.A. No, 221 at page 484 Kemp and Kemp (Vol. 1, 2nd. Ed.) when Cohen L.J. said:—

"…….the value of money (which it is agreed we are entitled to take into account) has changed enormously since 1937 which was the date of the decision in Heaps v. Perrite Ltd,(1937) 2 ALL E.R. 60"

Lord Norman in Glasgow Corporation v. Kelly (1951) 1 T.L.R . 345 said at page 347:—

"……the claim is a claim for lacerated feelings and for the loss of natural support which the deceased afforded or might in future have afforded. Their Lordships in the First Division were unanimously of the opinion that the Lord Ordinary's awards were in keeping with awards which use to be made twenty or thirty years ago when the value of money was considerably higher than it is now and that the change in the value of money ought to have been taken into account. It is not necessary to repeat what was said in Sands v. Devon 145 S.C. 380. I adhere to the opinion that permanent changes in the value of' money must be considered in making awards for solatium."

In Sands v. Devon (supra) Lord Norman said at page 381:—

Since we must perforce measure the damage in money, we must, I think, take account of large and reteative1y variations in the value of money"

Another case in which the value of money became one of the factors in considering assessment of damages is Walker v. McLean and Sons Ltd. (1979) 2 All E.R. 965. In this ease, as a result of the defendants negligence, the plaintiff was injured while riding his motorcycle along an unfinished road. The trial Judge, after having taken into consideration the evidence before him, awarded the plaintiff the sum of £35,000 in respect of pain, suffering and loss of amenity of life, including loss of expectation of life. The defendant appealed against the award, contending that it was too high and out of scale with the current level [p.210] of awards for similar cases of paraplegia……..

"……. It was he Id that damages for non-pecuniary loss, like damages for pecuniary loss, were to be assessed .by reference to the value of money at the date of trial …….. Accordingly, the amount of £35,000 awarded by the trial Judge, though higher than, previous awards for similar injuries, was in all the circumstances an appropriate award, Cumming-Bruce L.J. reading the judgment of the Court said at page 970:

“We content ourselves with the observation that his award of £35,000 under this head the judge restores a consistency with awards made before 1973 which cannot be found in many awards made since that year. This award of £35,000 should be regarding as a safe guide to the damages appropriate to such a case than the £27,500 which O'Connor J. said as appropriate in 1978.

Mr. Thomas contention was that the learned trial judge laid too much emphasis on the evidence of Dr. Frazer, and that when one considered the injuries suffered by the respondent, the amount awarded as damages was inordinately high. His next attack on the judgment was that the learned trial judge took into account loss of earnings of the respondent when there was no evidence to that effect.

The witnesses who gave evidence before the learned trial judge were the next friend Samuel Murana Koroma, Dr. Frazer and the respondent herself. The respondent who was a school girl at the time of the accident was fifteen years of age. Before the accident, she took active part in games and sports in the school. She played Volley ball, netball and participated in the general athletics of the school. After the accident, she could no longer participate in these games in which she enjoyed taking part.

[p.211]

She was first examined by Dr. Forde, and the record or Dr. Forde revealed that she sustained fractures of the pelvis involving the right pebic ramus and sacro-illiac joint apart from minor abrasions. She was later examined by Dr. Bernard Frazer, a Specialist Gynaecologist and Obstretitian on the 31st day of March, 1977. Dr. Frazer examined her clinically and radio-logically, and he found the presence of healed fractures of the pelvis with gross deformity of the pelvis canal, that is, the birth canal. Clinically, the movement of the right foot was painful. Dr. Frazer's Progmosis are:—

“1. Future full terms pregnancies will have to be delivered by caesarean section operation. This will be necessitated as a result of the deformity to the pelvis caused by the fractures.

2. The carriage of the pregnancy will be painful as a direct result of the bone injuries in the pelvic. It will mean a very painful experience for a person with such injuries to carry a pregnancy for nine months. These are permanent injuries.”

According to the doctor, there is nothing that can be done for the respondent anywhere in this world to correct her injuries the injuries which the respondent has sustained would probably always be attended with a certain amount of pain and discomfort during sexual intercourse; there has been some disturbances in the sacro-illiac joint, and as a result there would probably result osteoarthritis in the future; when osteoarthritis occurs there will be roughing of the joint surface which will cause restricted movements of the joints, which invariably causes pain of various degrees, and that will disable her to a certain [p.212] extent; she will have terrible headaches and it is possible that her menstrual periods will be more painful than before. In the opinion of Dr, Frazer, these injuries might affect her prospects of marriage, and psychologically, might cause depression to her, Dr. Frazer went on to say that medically, it is accepted that a woman who, has to be delivered by a caesarean section successively can only bear three children, It is the view of the doctor that assuming it is a full time child, the respondent cannot deliver naturally but by caesarean section. If the respondent was desirous of having many children, she had now been deprived of the pleasure of having many children; if the respondent wants to deliver a child she will be given a general anaesthetics; she will naturally need the attention of a Gynaecologist, and in this regard it will be more expensive for someone who has to deliver a child by ceaesarean operation than by normal delivery; when one is put under general anesthetics there is a certain amount of risk involved of life; the respondent has begun menstruation and she is now capable of child bearing} she will not be able to take part in active sports; she cannot play tennis, basket ball or run 100 yards, her studies will to a certain extent be affected when she starts getting pain from the backache and osteo-arthritis; that all things being equal her average span life is 35 years and that she has 40 years ahead of her living in pain.

This is the evidence together with the evidence of Koroma the next friend and the evidence of the respondent that was before the trial judge.

The trial judge having considered carefully the evidence and having taken into account the principles of law applicable to the award of damages, awarded the respondent a global sum of Le25,000. The Court of Appeal agreed with the findings and award of damages.

[p.213]

It has been canvassed before this Court that the learned judge was guilty of error of principle, and I certainly do not take the view that the judgment of the learned trial judge reveals any misapprehension of the effect of the evidence which was before him. It was also contended that the learned trial judge, in making the award, took into the consideration future or prospective loss of earnings. Counsel for the appellant contended that the learned trial judge took into consideration in making the award, future and prospective loss of earning. The sentence in the judgment which Mr. Thomas attached is this “I have to consider the plaintiff future or prospective loss of earnings.” Mr. Thomas vigorously argued that the learned trial judge, in making the award, must have had in his mind, the future and prospective earnings of the respondent, But his argument overlooked several considerations. Immediately after the learned trial judge said he had to consider the future or prospective earnings, he said that he realised that the respondent was an infant attending school and had not yet embarked on any career and there was no figure for net annual loss at the date of trial. This alone is clearly indicative that the learned trial judge had no intention of making provisions for future or prospective loss of earnings. With all respect to the persuasive way in which that argument was presented, I do not think that the judgment viewed as a whole will bear the interpretation put upon the sentence by Mr. Thomas. Indeed the learned trial judge said there was no scale on which he can weigh the injuries and that he was reduced to pure guesswork in the circumstances. What the learned judge was saying was, to use the words of Strentfield J. in Hawkins v. Mendip Engineering Ltd. (1966) lW.L.R. 1341 at 1348. “whatever figure I decide upon will on any view be guesswork, and my guess is as good or bad as anybody else's.”

[p.214]

It is clear that the learned trial judge correctly summarised the effect of the medical evidence that was before him. He also heard the evidence of the next friend and the respondent. He accepted their evidence. He said that he realised in the circumstances that he had to award a lump sum once and for all, which will be considered reasonable and in doing so he had to take into account all the above considerations.

It is of course, a well established principle that an appellate tribunal will not interfere on the question of mere quantum unless it is satisfied that the sum awarded constituted a wholly erroneous estimate. In this particular case, it is merely a matter of estimate since it has not been shown that the learned trial judge applied any wrong principle of law, that he misapprehended the facts, that he adverted his mind to matters which ought not to have affected his mind and that he left out of consideration something that ought to have affected his mind. The learned trial judge himself said that the circumstances of the case defied anything like a precise arithmetical calculation I agree with the Court of Appeal that the learned trial judge took all the matters necessary into consideration before making the award of damages, and that there was no justifiable reason to disturb the award of damages which the learned trial judge awarded in the light of those considerations. To borrow the words of Scarman J. in Hawkins case (supra) “I would respectfully have thought that the trial judge's guess, so far from being as bad as anyone else's is certainly as good as, if not better than that of an appellate tribunal.”

[p.215]

In my opinion, the award is not only reasonable but moderate in the circumstances, and there is no justification for disturbing the award. Even if the assessment has been made upon a wrong principle of law, the appellate Court may not interfere with the amount of award if it thinks that the amount itself is correct. I would therefore dismiss the appeal.

(Sgd.) Hon. Mr. Justice O.B.R. Tejan.

Justice of the Supreme Court

17/12/81.

AWUNOR-RENNER, J.S.C.

This is an appeal by the Defendant (hereinafter known as the Appellant) against the judgment of the Court of Appeal dated 23rd April, 1980 dismissing an appeal against the judgment of Justice Kutubu dated the 28th day of February, 1978 by which he awarded the Plaintiff (hereinafter known as the respondent) the sum of Le.25,000 by way of general damages for personal injuries caused by the negligence of the appellant, Negligence is not now in issue and this appeal in a nut shell relates only to the damages which the appellant contends are so excessive as to warrant interference by this Court. At this stage however I think that I could not be amiss to state the grounds of appeal as set out by Court for the Appellant which are as follows:—

(a) That the Court of Appeal was wrong in law in refusing to reduce the trial Judge’s award of general damages which amounted to an attempt to give a perfect compensation and not a fair and reasonable assessment of general damages for the injuries suffered by the respondent.

[p.216]

(b) That the award of general damages is excessive in all the circumstances.

(c) The decision is against the weight of evidence .

The facts of the case briefly are as follows:

The respondent was a school girl aged 15 at the material time. The accident happened on the 17th July 1975 when she was travelling as a paying passenger on board the Appellant's, vehicle No, WR 7116 from Freetown to Bo. As a result of the negligent driving of the appellant's servant or agent the vehicle was involved in an accident and she sustained severe personal injuries. She was first seen by a Dr. Forde, a Surgeon Specialist and admitted at the Bo Government Hospital for seven weeks. Later on in March 1977 she was seen and examined by another Doctor, George Bernard Frazer, a Specialist Gynaecologist and Obstretitian who gave evidence as follows:—

"I examined her clinically and also radiologically by that I mean X-ray examination. I found the presence of healed fractures of the pelvis with gross deformity of the pelvis canal, that is, the birth canal. Clinically the movement of the right foot was painful. My findings and those of the record I received were consistent with the plaintiff having been involved in a road accident,

My prognosis are:—

(1) Future full term pregnancies will have to be delivered by caesarean section operation. This will be necessitated as a result of the deformity to the pelvis caused by the fractures,

(2) The carriage of the pregnancy will be painful as a direct result of the bone injuries to the pelvis.

[p.217]

It will mean a very painful experience for a person with such injuries to carry a pregnancy for nine months. These are permanent injuries.

There is nothing that can be done for this girl anywhere in the world to correct her injuries. These injuries which this girl has sustained would probably always be attended with a certain amount of pain and discomfort during sexual intercourse. There has peen some disturbances in the sacroilliac joint. As a result of this there would probably result osteoarthritis in the future. When osteoarthritis occurs there will be roughing of the joint surface which will cause restricted movements of the joint, which inevitably causes pain of varying degrees. That will disable her to a certain extent. She will have terrible backaches and perhaps it is possible that her menstrual periods will be more painful than before. In my opinion these injuries might affect her prospects of marriage."

The Doctor went on to say that the respondent will not be able to have more than three children as she cannot deliver naturally it will all have to be by caesarean section which will involve a certain amount of risk to life when put under general anesthetic. She will not be able to take part in active sports and that her studies too will be affected when she starts getting pain from backache. The sum total of it all was that since the life span of a male or female in this part of the world was 55 years all things being equal the respondent had 40 years ahead of her living with pain.

As stated earlier judgment was given by the trial judge on the 28th day of February, 1978 awarding the respondent the sum of Le.25,000 as general damages. The appellant appealed to the Court of Appeal and judgment was delivered on 23d April, 1980 disallowing the appeal and it is against that judgment that the appellant has now appealed to this Court oh the grounds stated above.

During the arguments various authorities were referred to by Counsel on both sides. For the appellant. Counsel contended that the amount awarded by the trial judge was inordinately high so as to be an erroneous estimate and that the Court of Appeal should have interfered by reducing it where the trial judge has acted on a wrong principle of law, or has misapprehended the facts or has made a wholly erroneous estimate of the damage suffered. The amount he said was not fair and reasonable in the light of previous awards in comparable cases. Some measure of uniformity must be secured.

The misapprehension of facts complained of was that the learned trial judge placed undue emphasis on the fact that the respondent would only give birth by caesarean operation. Finally Counsel argued that in granting the award of general damages, the trial judge took into account the respondent's prospective loss of future earnings and placed reliance for this on a passage in the judgment which reads as

“I have now to consider Plaintiff's future or prospective loss of earnings. I realise that Plaintiff is an infant stilt attending school and has not yet embarked on any career, and so there is no figure for net annual loss at the date of the trial. There is no scale [p.219] on which I can weigh the injuries of this girl for compensation. I am therefore reduced to a pure guess work for the circumstances of this kind of case defy anything like a precise arithmetical calculation. I therefore have to take everything into consideration in granting the Plaintiff a lump sun, which I consider commensurate enough in the circumstances of her case.”

I will deal with this complaint later on,

Counsel for the respondent argued that there were only two issues before this Court, firstly whether the trial judge acted on a wrong principle of law or misapprehended the facts or made a wholly principle of the damages to which the plaintiff was entitled to. Secondly whether the Court of Appeal was wrong in refusing to reduce the award of the trial judge who sat without a jury.

He finally ended up by saying that he thought the award to the plaintiff was fair and reasonable.

The principles upon which an Appellate Court would take into consideration and interfere with an award of damages made by a judge is stated in the well known case of FLINT .v LOVEL (1935) 1 K.B. at page 354 where Greer L.J. in his judgment had this to say.

"I think it right to say that this Court will be disinclined to reverse the finding of the trial Judge as to the amount of damages merely because they think that if tried had tried the case in the first instance they would have given a lesser sum. In order to justify reversing the [p.220] trial judge on the question of the amount of damages it will generally be necessary that this Court should be convinced either that the judge acted upon some wrong principle of law or that the amount awarded was so extremely high or so very small as to make it, in the judgment of the Court, an entirely erroneous estimate of the damage to which the plaintiff is entitled.

This statement was also approved and adopted in the House of Lords in the case of DAVIES v POWELL DUFFRYN ASSOCIATED COLLIERIES LTD. reported in (1942) A.C. at page 601 at page 616 and 617, where Lord Wright said:—

"Where however the award is that of a judge alone, the appeal is by way of a re-hearing on damages as on all other issues, but as there is generally so much room for individual choice so that the assessment of damages is more like an exercise of discretion than an ordinary act of decision, the Appellate Court is particularly slow to reverse the trial judge on a question of the amount of damages. It is difficult to lay down any precise rule which will cover all cases, but a good general guide is given by Greer L.J. in FLINT v LOVELL. In effect the Court before it interferes with an ward of damages should be satisfied that the judge has acted on wrong principles of law, or has misapprehended the facts or has for other reasons made a wholly erroneous estimate of the damage suffered. It's not enough that there is a balance of opinion or preference.

[p.221]

The scale must go down heavily against the figure attacked if the Appellate Court is to interfere, whether on the grounds of excess or insufficiency."

Other eases often relied on are the cases of OWEN v SYKES reported in (1936) 1 K.B. at page 192 where the principle as laid down in FLINT v LOVELL(supra) was applied. In GREENFIELD v LONDON & NORTH EASTERN RAILWAY CO. reported in 1944 2 A. E. R. at page 438. Mackinnon L.J. said at page 440:—

"The principles upon which this Court reviews the assessment of damages both when they are said to be too high or too low are well known. We do not interfere because we might ourselves have given rather more or rather less, but only

(a) If it appears that the judge below has omitted some relevant consideration or admitted some irrelevant consideration or

(b) if we think that the amount fixed is so excessive or insufficient, as to be plainly unreasonable."

A phrase used by Viscount Simon in the case of NANCE v BRITISH COLOMBIA ELECTRIC RLY. (1951) 2 A.E.R. at page 448 was that an Appellate Court would interfere if "the amount awarded is either inordinately low or so inordinately high that it must be an wholly erroneous estimate of the damage." Let me point out that in this case the trial was by a jury and its award was rejected as excessive by Lord Simon who said inter alia:—

"Taking all these considerations into account and basing on that the best estimate they can form their Lordships in satisfied that a jury [p.222] could not reasonably have computed the total recoverable damage at a figure exceeding 22,500 dollars. This figure in their view falls short of the Le35,000 dollars award by a margin wide enough to justify the British Colombia Court of Appeal in rejecting the jury's figure."

At this stage a case worthy of mention which was referred to by Counsel for the Appellant is the case of RUSHTON v NATIONAL COAL BOARD reported in 1953 1 A .E.R. at page 314 in that case Counsel for the respondent had contended that an award of £10.000 was too high in all the circumstances of the ease. The amount was reduced to £7,000. It was however held in that case that in awarding damages for personal injuries that although it is impossible to standardize the amounts awarded for individual cases that the Courts must bear in mind the special facts of the case under consideration, to accord with the general run of assessments made over a period of time in comparable cases. In the case of WALDON v WAR OFFICE (1956) 1 W.L.R. at page 31 Rushton's case (supra) was applied. It was held by the Court of Appeal that while a judge was entitled to hear references to Previous decisions to show amounts which had been awarded by other judges in comparable case it was entirely within the judge's discretion whether he would permit such reference or not. In fact Parker L.J. had this to say:—

"So far as the ruling of the judge is concerned as to whether other cases ought to be looked at, I would only like to say this. In my view it would be calamitous if anything that this Court should impose an additional burden on [p.223] judges of the first instance, and particularly on judges of Assize. It has been suggested that Counsel on either side will come armed in every case of personal injuries with reports or transcripts of other cases. I myself do not think that there is any fear of that, I think that Counsel can be trusted only to refer to other cases sparingly, hearing in mind that each case depends upon its own facts and only rarely can other cases be of real assistance to the judge. And secondly, that the discretion must always be in the judge himself to decide whether in his view the reference to such other cases would or would not assist him.

In view of the above cases referred to it seems to me therefore that before an Appellate Court would interfere with an award of damages made by the trial judge the Court must be satisfied that the award was made upon a wrong principle of law as contained in the judgment or that the trial judge made al entirely erroneous estimate or that the amount awarded was so excessively high or too low. An Appellate Court would not interfere merely for the sake of interfering. An award of damages must in all the circumstances of the case be fair and reasonable. Certain things ought to be taken into account, First the pecuniary loss if any sustained or finally the physical capacity of enjoying life. In short restitution intergrum in it ordinary sense is impossible. In the case of GARDNER v DYSON (1967) 1 W.L.R. at page 1497 and at page 1501, Salmon L.J. said

“Damages must be real and amount to what the ordinary, reasonable man would regard as fair and sensible compensation for the injuries suffered.”

[p.224]

In the case of FLETCHER v AUTOCAR & TRANSPORTERS LTD. reported in (1968) 2 W.L.R. at page 743, the Plaintiff a charted Surveyor had sustained severe injuries in an accident. The judge assessed damages under four heads: special damages £10,477.9.6, Loss of future earnings at £32,000, additional expenses caused by the injuries at £14,000 and damages for pain: suffering and loss of amenities of life at £10000. He rejected the defendant's contention that if the total of the four assessments was an exceptionally high or daunting figure then the total figure should be revised, and he awarded the total figure in damages of £66,447.9.6.

On appeal Lord Denning M.R. had this to say at page 749:—

“In the second place, I think that the judge was wrong to take each of the items separately and then just add them up at the end. The items are not separate heads of compensation. They are only aids to arriving at a fair and reasonable compensation.”

At this stage I think it will be convenient for me to deal with one more issue raised by Counsel for the Appellant He had argued that the learned trial judge had taken into account the prospective loss of future earnings when there was no evidence to support this. The paragraph complained of has been stated supra in full by me.

I do not think that it can be construed as stated by Counsel for the Appellant. In my view I think that the trial judge considered the question of loss of future earnings and then rejected it. My own construction of the paragraph is that he was saying that the appellant was not entitled to any award as regards prospective loss future earnings because the [p.225] appellate was still attending school and had not yet embarked on a career and so there was no figure for net annual loss at the date of trial. He continued by saying that “there is no scale on which I can weigh the injuries of this girl for compensation” emphasis mine. ……”I am therefore reduced to pure guess work for the circumstances of this kind of case defy anything like a precise arithmetical calculation. I therefore have to take everything into consideration in granting the plaintiff a lump sum which I consider commensurate in all the circumstances of her case.”

After commenting on all the injuries sustained by her, he continued to say:—

“In the light of the serious nature of the plaintiff's injuries and prospective loss of a predominantly happy life, I am to consider how best money can compensate her …. I realise in the circumstances, I have to award a lump sum once and for all, which will be considered reasonable.”

As a result of this the judge awarded the plaintiff a lump sum of Le.25,000.

Let me say here and now that the judge was perfectly right in awarding a lump sum. He was entirely within his rights to do so. He need not award separate sums for each head. Since only if he has broken down his global award and specified the amount given for each item for pecuniary and non pecuniary losses will the appellant entertain some hope of success. See the case of FLETCHER v AUTOCAR & TRANSPORTERS (supra) and also the case of BILLINGHAM v HUGHES & ANOTHER reported in 1949 1 A.E.R. at page 684.

[p.226]

Having specified above the various principles upon which an appellate Court would interfere, I now turn to the present case. I do not think that the trial judge misapprehended the facts of misapplied any wrong principles of law or considerer irrelevant matters. I have already stated above my own construction of Counsel for the appellant's complaint that the judge in awarding a lump sum took into consideration the loss prospective future earnings. In fact in this case the judge never stated how much he was awarding for the various heads of general damage. I do not also think that the trial judge put more emphasis on the fact that the Respondent would only give birth by caesarean operation. I think all he did was to narrate the medical evidence in relation to the injuries sustained, As regard the submission put forward by Counsel for the appellant that the trial judge had made an entirely erroneous estimate of the damage suffered and that the damages awarded was so extremely high. One must look at what the judge said regards the injuries sustained by the respondent, her loss of amenities and the prospective loss of a predominantly happy life and come to the conclusion that the amount awarded was fair and reasonable in all the circumstances of the case.

There is no doubt that the injuries on the whole as state above are serious. It affects the respondent's whole future and her womanhood, starting from painful periods, painful intercourse, painful pregnancy, child, birth and other injuries apart for the rest of her life. The appellant was only fifteen years old at the time the accident took place. Her future as regards all the all the injuries sustained appears to me to be quite bleak. I therefore feel that the amount of Le. 25,000 awarded her was not excessive.

[p.227]

As a result of the views which I have expressed I am of the opinion that the appeal should be dismissed and the judgment of the Court of Appeal affirmed. Appeal dismissed. Costs to be taxed in favour of the respondent.

Hon. Mrs. Justice A.V.A. Awunor-Renner

Justice of the Supreme Court

17/12/81.

DURING. J .A.

The Appellant has appealed to this Court on the ground that the award of Le25,000 made to the Respondent by way of general damage is excessive.

It is well established on what principles an Appellate Court will interfere with an award of general damages where that award is made by a Judge sitting alone in a long line of cases both local and English. I need not refer to the long line of oases some of which have been referred to in the respective Judgment of my learned brothers.

My learned brothers have stated in their Judgments the injuries which on the evidence in the Court of first instance the Respondent suffered, reviewed the evidence of the Specialist Gynaecologist who gave evidence and his prognosis. The learned Trial Judge found that the Respondent's injuries were serious and he accepted both the evidence of the Respondent and the Specialist and stated that he had to "take everything into Consideration when awarding a lump sum". The learned Trial Judge considered the loss of amenities of life, what is sometimes called a diminution in the pleasure of living. In my view the learned Trial Judge made a proper review of the evidence before him and did not take into consideration any unwarranted fact in coming to a conclusion as to what amount he would award.

In the case COOKSON v KNOWLES (H.L.) 1978 2 W.L.R. 978 at 988 Lord Salmon said inter alia:—

"There is one matter that I should like to emphasis, namely that in my view it is impossible to lay down any principles of law which will govern the assessment of damages for all time. We can only lay down broad guidelines for assessing damages in cases where the facts are similar to those of the instant cases and when economic factors remain similar to those now prevailing."

In my view in assessing general damages regard has to be had as to the socio-economic factors prevailing at the time of assessment for example fall in value of money and as Sellers L.J. said in WARD vs JAMES [1965] 1 All E.R. 563 at p. 576:—

"We have come in recent years to realise that the award of damages in personal injury cases is basically a conventional figure derived from experience and from awards in comparable cases."

Our Courts in considering comparable cases should consider those in our Society in my opinion.

In the case ALIMU JALLOH v. WONDE SAMURA an Infant suing by father and next friend Foday Samura Civ. App. 30/73 Court of Appeal, Judgment delivered 8th March, 1974 unreported, the Appellant appealed against an award of Le.15,000 made by the High Court as general damages for personal injuries. Counsel for the Appellant in the Court of Appeal argued that the trial Judge ought not to have awarded a global sum of general damages and that the award was excessive. The Court Tejan, Agnes Macaulay then JJ.A. and During J.A. said inter alia:—

"In our view though it may be desirable for a trial Judge sitting alone to itemise the damages in certain personal injury cases it is not absolutely necessary and failure by the trial Judge to do so as in this case will not necessarily justify reversing the assessment of damages by the trial Judge.

In the case THE SIERRA LEONE SYNDICATE LTD vs. AMADU CONTEH referred to in the judgment of Ames P. in ARTHUR MASSALAY Vs. THERESA BECKLEY 1960-61 Sierra Leone Law Reports Vol. 1, the Court of Appeal for Sierra Leone and the Gambia said that in assessing general damages in cases of personal injury the Court should do so as if "Sierra Leone was the only country in the world" and then proceeded on "a matter of assessing damages in that case by a search for a comparable injury in England to see how much the English Court has awarded and then it was varied because the facts were not exactly like those in Conteh's ease and then it was considered how much, if at all, the judgment should be reduced owing to different circumstances prevailing in Sierra Leone."

In the case ARTHUR MASSALY vs. THERSA BECKLEY referred to above Ames P. in dealing with what he described as a "misunderstanding" as to what was meant in Conteh's case when the [p.230] existing Court of Appeal said that the matter should be considered as though Sierra Leone were the only country in the world said:—

"It seems to me to be common sense. It only referred to General Damages."

In that case Ames p. is reported to have said obiter:—

"The method adopted in that case adds to the admitted difficulty of assessing the amount to be awarded. If it is followed, it means looking for a "comparable ease" reported in England. Well oases usually are not exactly alike, so the English ease which has been found has to be adjusted, up or down, to guess what a Court or jury in England would have awarded had the case been exactly alike. Then it is necessary to consider if that figure should be varied, owing to the "special condition" existing here. One is then supposed to have arrived at the proper figure. Is it not much better to start and end in Sierra Leone? In England Courts do not find out what would have been awarded in comparable cases in the United States of America, Australia, India or anywhere else and then translates it into terms in England. They start and end in England.

In this country, there are very few eases of this kind, and it may be necessary to create a precedent in any particular case."

[p.231]

We hold the view that the method suggested by Ames P. in the case Arthur Massalay vs. Theresa Beckley mentioned supra, to wit "to start and end in Sierra Leone" is the proper method the Court below should adopt in assessing the amount to be awarded as General Damages for personal injuries. Our Courts should not in such matter take an excursion to England, United States of America, Australia, India any Commonwealth country or any where else to find out what would have been awarded in comparable cases.

In our view the Damages awarded could not in any way be regarded as excessive,"

Learned Counsel for the Appellant argued that the learned Trial Judge in making the lump sum awarded wrongly made an award for loss of future earnings. My learned brother, Awunor-Renner. JSC. has in a very lucid and succinct manner dealt with the submission which in my opinion is untenable, There is nothing in the Judgment of the learned Trial Judge direct or from which it could be inferred that he made a guess as to what the loss of future earnings would be or what figure he would fix any loss of future earnings or that he made such an award. I would dismiss this Appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT

LIVESEY LUKE C.J.

This appeal concerns the ownership of land at Wilberforce in the Western Area of Sierra Leone. By Writ of Summons dated 30th April, 1974 and issued and the High Court by the respondent herein (hereinafter called the Plaintiff) against the appellant herein (hereinafter called the Defendant) the Plaintiff claimed (i) declaration of title to land situated at Signal Hill, Wilberforce in the Western Area of Sierra Leone and bounded on the North by private property 210 feet on the South by a private property then or previously in the possession or occupation of J.B.S. King 210 feet, on the West by an access road to Aberdeen 66 feet and on the East by Signal Hill Road 80 feet; (ii) an injunction restraining the defendant his servant or agent from erecting a building on the land and (iii) Damages for Trespass. Pleadings were filed in due course. It is not necessary to set them out. A summary of the salient issues raised therein should suffice. In the Statement of Claim the plaintiff pleaded inter alia that the land was conveyed in fee simple to one Assad Joseph Yazbeck by one Gershon Theophilus Cole by Deed of Conveyance dated 28th June, 1951 and duly registered in the Books of Conveyances in the office of the Registrar General; that by Deed of Conveyance dated the 12th March, 1952 and duly registered in the office of the Registrar General the said Assad Joseph Yazbeck conveyed the land to him in fee simple; that since the 12th March, 1952 he had been in open and unchallenged possession of the land; that in March 1974 he discovered that the defendant was trespassing on the land by erecting a building thereon and that notwithstanding several requests and demands the defendant persisted in trespassing on the land. The defendant filed a Defence and Counterclaim.

[p.64]

In his Defence the defendant inter alia denied that he had trespassed on any land belonging to the plaintiff; averred that he was the fee simple owner of the land in dispute by virtue of a Deed of Conveyance dated 23rd March, 1968 and expressed to be made between one Ellis Leslie England as vendor and himself as purchaser and duly registered in the office of the Registrar General; pleaded the Limitation Act, 1961 and alleged that the plaintiff had interfered with his possession of the land and had obstructed his building operations thereon. In his Counterclaim the defendant claimed special damages for loss a result of the plaintiff's obstruction of his building operation and general damages. The plaintiff filed a Reply and Defence to the Counterclaim. In the Reply the plaintiff denied the several allegations in the Defence and joined issue with the defendant. In the Defence to the Counterclaim the plaintiff inter alia alleged that the defendant did not acquire any valid title from Ellis Leslie England and also pleaded the Limitation Act, 1961.

The trial was by Short J. (as he then was). The trial lasted several days and both parties were represented by learned Counsel. Each party gave evidence on oath, called witnesses including surveyors and tendered documents including maps and their respective documents of title. The learned judge delivered judgment on 8th March, 1977 dismissing the plaintiff's claim and awarding the defendant Le1000 as general damages. In dismissing the plaintiff's claim the learned judge after reviewing the evidence found "as a fact that the Plaintiff has failed to identify with any degree of certainty the land that he bought from Assad Joseph Yazbeck as being the land claimed by the defendant and also held that the plaintiff had "failed to prove that Gershon Theophilus Cole had a good title to pass to Assad Joseph Yazbeck" and that therefore Assad Joseph Yazbeck could not have passed a good title to the plaintiff.

In deciding in favour of the defendant the learned judge said inter alia "It is manifestly clear that two completely different parcels of land are involved..... I find as a fact that the defendant is, and was at all times material to this action, the fee simple owner and in possession" of the land in dispute.

The plaintiff, being dissatisfied with the decision of Short J., appealed to the Court of Appeal. The appeal was heard by the Court of Appeal (consisting of S.B. Davies, During and C.S. Davies JJ.A) on 9th, 10th and 11th May 1978. Both parties were represented by learned counsel. The Court of Appeal delivered judgment on 25th May, 1979 allowing the appeal, setting aside the judgment of the High Court and remitting the case to the High Court for a retrial before another judge. In their judgment the Court of Appeal said inter alia—

"We have experienced considerable difficulty owing to the absence of any clear evidence as to whether the contention between the parties relate to one and the same land. That is the first point on which a Court has to satisfy itself before it can consider other matters. We would have thought that in a situation as the present one evidence from an independent source like the Director of Surveys and Lands was desirable. It was absent."

It is against that decision that the defendant has appealed to this Court. The plaintiff has also filed a notice of cross-appeal. The issues raised in this appeal and cross-appeal may be summarized as follows:—

(i) Do the plaintiff's title deeds relate to the land in dispute?

(ii) Did the plaintiff prove title to the land, and is he entitled to a declaration of title to the land?

[p.66]

(iii) Who is entitled to damages for trespassers to the land - the plaintiff or the defendant?

(iv) Assuming that trespass to found in favour of the plaintiff, what amount should be awarded by way of General damages?

(v) Was the Court of Appeal right in ordering a retrial?

As indicated earlier, issue was made in the High Court as to whether the plaintiff's title deeds related to the land in dispute. The defendant contended and called evidence to establish that the land conveyed to the plaintiff in 1952 was not the land in distant was in fact situated some distance from the land in dispute. The learned trial Judge found that the land Conveyed to the plaintiff in 1952 and the land in dispute were completely different parcels of land. The Court of Appeal stated that they had experienced considerable difficulty in determining whether the land conveyed to the plaintiff in 1952 and the land in dispute were one and the same land. The Court of Appeal could have evaluated the evidence before them to determine the issue one way or the other. But this they declined to do and instead remitted the case to the High Court for a retrial. Learned counsel for the plaintiff strenuously argued before us that on the evidence the land in dispute is the same land as that conveyed to the plaintiff in 1952. Learned counsel for the defendant, on the other hand, argued with equal force that on the evidence the two lands were not the same. So while learned counsel for the plaintiff would have us reverse the finding of fact of the trial judge, learned counsel for the defendant urged that we should uphold the finding of fact of the trial Judge. There is no doubt that an appellate court has power to evaluate the evidence led in the court below,[p.67] reach its own conclusions and in a suitable case to reverse the finding of fact of a trial judge. But those powers are exercisable on well-settled principles, and an appellate court will not disturb the findings of fact of a trial judge unless those principles are applicable. The principles have been frequently stated both locally and in other commonwealth jurisdictions. They were authoritatively stated by the House of Lords in Watt or Thomas v. Thomas (1947) A.C. 484. It will be sufficient to, quote the headnote of that report, which succinctly states the principles. It reads:—

“When a question of fact has been tried by a judge without a jury and it is not suggested that he has misdirected himself in law, an appellate court in reviewing the record of the evidence should attach the greatest weight to his opinion, because he saw and heard the witnesses, and should not disturb his judgment unless it is plainly unsound. The appellate court is, however, free to reverse his conclusions if the grounds given by him there for are unsatisfactory by reason of material inconsistencies or inaccuracies or if it appears unmistakably from the evidence that in reaching them he has not taken proper advantage of having seen and heard the witnesses or has failed to appreciate the weight and bearing of circumstances admitted or proved.”

See also Benmax v. Austin Motor Co. Ltd. (1955) 1 All E.R. 326 H.L. where Lord Reid said inter alia at p. 329:—

“But in cases where there is no question of the credibility or reliability of any witness, and in Cases where the point in dispute is the proper inference to be drawn from proved facts, [p.68] an appeal court is generally in as good a position to evaluate the evidence as the trial judge, and ought not to shrink from that task, though it ought, of course, to give weight to his opinion.”

See also EL Nasr Export and Import Co. Ltd. v. Mobie E1 Deen Mansour S.L. Sup. Ct. Civ. App. 3/72, Judgment delivered on 25/4/74 (unreported).

In view of what follows hereafter, I am of the opinion that in the instant appeal it is unnecessary to evaluate to evidence with a view to determining whether or not the trial judge's finding of fact that the plaintiff's title deeds did not relate to the land in dispute was right. I shall assume for the purpose of this or this judgment (unless otherwise stated) that the dispute is the same as the land conveyed to the plaintiff in (1952).

On the basis of that assumption, the first issue calling is whether the plaintiff proved title to the land dispute. This issue is relative to the plaintiff's claim for a declaration of a fee simple title. I think that it is trite law that in an action for a declaration of title the plaintiff must, be used on the strength of his title and not on the weakness of the defendant's title. See Kodilinye v. adu (1935) W .A. C .A. 336 where Webber C.J. (Sierra Leone) in delivering the judgment of the West African Court of Appeal said inter alia at pp. 337-338:—

"The onus lies on the plaintiff to satisfy the Court that he is entitled on the evidence brought by him to a declaration of title. The plaintiff in this case must rely on the strength of his own case and not on the weakness or the defendant's case. If this onus is not discharged, the weakness of the defendant's case will not help him and the proper judgment is for the defendant. Such a judgment decrees no title to the defendant, he not having sought the declaration."

See also Mansaray v. Williams (1968-69) A.L.R. (S.L.) 326; and John & Macauley v. Stafford & others S,L. Sup. Ct. Civ.App. 1/75 judgment delivered 13/7/76 (unreported). Quite apart from the rule just stated, it is relevant to mention that the defendant pleaded in his Defence that he was in possession of the disputed land, That plea is in accordance with Order XVIII rule 20 of the High Court Rules. The effect of such a plea is a denial of the allegations of fact in the Statement of Claim. In interpreting Order XIX rule 15 of the Rules of Court, 1875 (with which our Order XVIII Rule 20 is identical) the House of Lords held in Dunford v. McAnulty (1883) 8 App, Case, 456 that in an action for recovery of land a statement of defence alleging that the defendant is in possession operates as a denial of the allegations in the plaintiff's Statement of Claim, and requires the plaintiff to prove them. So in this case, the plaintiff having averred that he is the fee simple owner of the land in dispute the onus is on him to prove that averment.

So the question that arises is whether the plaintiff discharged the burden cast on him to prove that he was the fee simple owner of the land in dispute. The plaintiff based his claim to a declaration of a fee simple title on the Conveyances of 1951 and 1952. The evidence relied on by the plaintiff was purely documentary. His case was that Gershon Theophilus Cole (hereinafter called Gershon Cole) was the fee simple owner of the and which he conveyed to Assad Joseph Yazbeck (hereinafter called Assad Yazbeck) in 1951 and that on the strength of that Conveyance Assad Yazbeck had a fee simple title in the land which he conveyed to him in 1952. In my opinion to succeed the plaintiff had to prove that Gershon Cole was the fee simple owner of' the land at the time (in 1951) when he conveyed it to Assad Yazbeck. A Statutory Declaration was produced as a proof of Gershon Cole's title. The Statutory Declaration was sworn to by Gershon Cole, one Geoffrey Vidal Smart King and one Charles Bell in June, 1951.

But none or the declarants was called at the trial nor was any attempt made to account for their absence. Section 3 or the Evidence (Documentary) Act Cap. 26 makes provision for the admission in evidence of any statement made by a person in a document tending to establish a fact if direct oral evidence of that fact would be admissible. But the Section stipulates certain conditions for the admissibility or such documentary evidence. Among the conditions are that the maker of the statement has personal knowledge of the matters dealt with by the statement and that he is called as a witness unless he is dead, or unfit to attend as a witness or he is out or the jurisdiction or if all reasonable efforts to rind him have been made without success or if the court having regard to all the circumstances and being satisfied that undue delay or expense would otherwise be caused orders that the statement shall be admissible in evidence. No attempt was made to fulfill any or the conditions laid down in the Section. In my opinion there could be no doubt that a statutory declaration is “a statement made by a person in a document” and is therefore governed by the provisions or the Act (Cap. 26). In my judgment the plaintiff having failed to fulfill any of the conditions stipulated in Section, 3 or the Act, the Statutory Declaration and consequently the statements made therein were inadmissible in evidence. See Bright v. Roberts (1964-66) A.L.R. (S.L.) 156. So the plaintiff was left with only his title deeds. No other evidence was led to prove Gershon Cole's title.

Before departing from this aspect of the appeal, it is necessary to deal with one or two matters raised by learned counsel during argument before us. Mr. Davies, learned counsel for the plaintiff, placed much reliance on Section 4 or the Registration of Instruments Act (Cap. 256). He argued that since the plaintiff's title deeds were respectively registered in [p.71] 1951 and 1952 and the Defendant's in 1968, the fact of prior registration ipso facto conferred a better title on the plaintiff than on the defendant. He submitted that that was the legal position by virtue of the provisions of Section 4 of Cap. 256. He claimed to derive support for this submission from Davies v. Bickersteth (1964-66) A.L.R. (S.L.) 403 a decision of the Court of Appeal. Mr. Garvas Betts, learned counsel for the defendant, submitted in reply that Section 4 of Cap. 256 does not deal with title. He added that Cap. 256 was a statute regulating the registration of instruments and not the registration of title, and that therefore the fact of the registration of a conveyance does not thereby confer an indefeasible title on the purchaser.

In view of the contending submissions of learned counsel, I think that it is necessary to set out Section 4 of Cat. 256. The section, so far as relevant, reads:—

“4(1) Every deed, contract, or conveyance, executed after the ninth day of February, eighteen hundred and fifty seven, so far as regards any land to be thereby affected, shall take effect, as against other deeds affecting the same land, from the date of its registration…… Provided that every such instrument shall take effect from the date of its execution, if registered within any of the periods limited for registration, as follows, that is to say:—

(a) if such instrument be executed in Freetown if registered within ten days from its date;

[p.72]

(b) if such instrument be executed elsewhere in the Colony [now Western Area] or Protectorate [now Provinces], if registered within sixty days from its date

(c) if such instrument be executed elsewhere than in the Colony or Protectorate, if registered within one year from its date."

It will be convenient at this stage to refer to the case of Davies v. Bickerstgth (supra) relied on by counsel for the plaintiff. The relevant part of the judgment in that ease is at pp,405-406 of the report. It reads:—

"From this it seems quite clear that each party alleged ownership of the land in dispute and they both based their respective claims on deeds of conveyance. The simple issue therefore before the court was which of them had a better title…….. The position therefore was this, namely, that the appellant had traced his title back to a deed of conveyance which was registered on December 12th 1944, whereas the respondent had traced his own title back to a deed of conveyance which was registered on November, 27th 1945. Of the two therefore, it would appear that the appellant had a better title: See S. 4 of the Registration of Instruments Act (Cap.256), which reads [Section 4(1) was then set out] Judgment should therefore have been given in favour of the appellant."

[p.73]

The question then arises: Was that a correct application of Section 4 of Cap. 256? The long title of Cap. 256 states clearly the intention of the legislature in enacting that Statute i.e. to amend and consolidate the law relating to the registration of instruments. Nowhere in the Act is any mention made of registration of title. There is a world of difference between registration of instrument and registration of title. The difference can be illustrated by reference to the position in England. In England the first attempt to introduce registration of title, as opposed to registration of deeds, was made by the Land Registry Act, 1862. Prior to the passing of that Act, a few counties had a system of registration of deeds. The registration of deeds and other instruments was designed to give publicity to dealings with land and to prevent frauds upon purchasers and mortgagees. The Middlesex Deed Registry was established in 1708 by The Middlesex Registry Act 1708. It was in 1891 transferred to the Land Registry, and it has since then formed part of that office. Under the 1708 Act all deeds and conveyances, whereby any lands or hereditaments in Middlesex could be affected at law or in equity were registrable. The omission to register an instrument under the Act did not invalidate it, but by reason of such omission, it will be adjudged "fraudulent and void" against a subsequent purchaser or mortgagee for valuable consideration. Instruments rank in order of date of registration and not of date of execution. But this was only a prima facie rule, and it was held to be subject to certain exceptions. Deed registries were established in Yorkshire by Statutes passed in the Eighteenth Century. The system of registration under those Statutes was substantially the same as that of the Middlesex Registry. The Yorkshire Registries Act, 1884 repealed and replaced the earlier Statutes

[p.74]

Under the 1884 Act all assurances including conveyances, and Wills, by which any lands within the three Riddings of North, East and West Yorkshire are affected were made registrable.

All assurances entitled to be registered hare priority according to the date of registration and not according to the date of the assurance or of their execution. Thus a subsequent purchaser or mortgagee who registers first has priority over an earlier unregistered assurance, notwithstanding that he took with actual notice of it.

I shall now turn my attention to the registration of title. The object of registration of title to land is to simplify the means of transferring the ownership of land, by avoiding the necessity of investigation of title to it on every successive purchase, and by provision of simplified forms of assurance. The object of the land Registry Act 1862 (referred to above) is spelt out in the long title and the preamble thereof. The long title reads:—

"An Act to facilitate the proof of title to, and the conveyance of Real Property."

And the preamble recites:—

"Whereas it is expedient to give certainty to the title of real estate and to facilitate the proof thereof also to render the dealing with land more simple and economical."

The 1862 Act made elaborate provisions for the registration of title including the examination of title by the registrar and examiners of title, reference by the registrar of questions as to title to a Chancery judge, the establishment of the identity of the land, the holding of preliminary inquiries by the registrar, the public advertisement of notice of intention to register, the showing of cause against registration by any interested person before the registrar with a right of appeal [p.75] by either party, the completion of registration, and the effect of registration. What is registered under the Act is not the Conveyance or other instrument, but a memorial of it giving particulars and providing other data and material specified in the Act. The Act was on a voluntary basis, and provided that before registering (i) a marketable title must be shown; (ii) the boundaries must be officially determined and defined as against adjoining owners; and (iii) partial interests had to be disclosed and registered. With regard to the effect of registration of title, Section 20 of the Act is both relevant and instructive. The Section provides:—

"20. Subject to any exception, qualification, or condition mentioned in such record of title, and to any registered charges or incumbrances, and to such charges and interests (if any) as are therein declared not to be incumbrances, the person originally and from time to time namded and described in such record of title as aforesaid shall, for the purposes of any sale, mortgage, or contract of valuable consideration by such persons respectively, be and be deemed to be as from the date of registering such record by the registrar, or from such time as shall be fixed by him therein, absolutely and indefeasibly possessed of and entitled to such estates, rights, powers, and interests as shall be defined and expressed in such record, against all persons, and free from all rights, interests, claims and demands whatsoever, including any estate, claim or interest of Her Majesty……."

This Section quite clearly shows that it is the registration of an absolute title - after all the formalities of registration have been gone through - and not the registration of title deed that entitles the person concerned to an indefeasible title to the land affected.

Subsequent Acts dealing with registration of title were passed by the U.K. Parliament i.e. the Land Transfer Act, 1875, the Land Transfer Act, 1897, the Law of Property Act, 1922 and the Land Registration Act, 1925. But it is not necessary to refer to refer of them in detail. Suffice it to say that they all provided fir a system of registration of title as distinct from registration of instruments.

From the foregoing, it should be abundantly clear that there is a fundamental and important difference between registration of instrument, and registration of title. Cap. 256 does not provide for, nor does it pretend to contemplate, the registration of title. It states quite clearly in its long title that it was passed to provide for the registration of instruments.

What interpretation then is to be put on Section 4 of Cap. 2567 In my opinion registration of an instrument under the Act confers priority over other instruments affecting the same land which are registered later. Registration of an instrument under the Act does not confer title on the purchaser, Lessee or mortgagee etc., nor does it render the title of the purchaser indefeasible. What confers title (if at all) in such a situation is the instrument itself and not the registration thereof. So the fact that a conveyance is registered does not ipso facto mean that the purchaser thereby has a good title to the land conveyed. In fact the Conveyance my confer no title at all e.g. where the vendor had no title to pass. The effect of the Section may be illustrated thus:—

If A conveys Blackacre to B on 1st January, and then to C on 2nd January, (of the same year) both Conveyances being executed in Freetown and C registers his Conveyance on 14th January, and B registers his on 15th January, C's Conveyance will take effect as against B's Conveyance by virtue of prior registration. But if A conveys Blackacre to B on 1st January and the Conveyance is duly registered on 15th January, and if Y (who has no title to the land) conveys Blackacre (the same land) to Z on 1st January, and it was duly registered on 14th January," according to the Section, Z's Conveyance would take effect before B's Conveyance. But that does not mean that it would take effect to confer title on Z, for the simple reason that Y had no title to pass to Z or to anyone for that matter, the maxim being nemo dat quod non habet. B's title to Blackacre would remain intact unaffected and undisturbed by the conveyance to Z, notwithstanding the prior registration of Z's Conveyance. In such a situation Z would be left with a valueless document on his hands and his remedy would be against the fraudulent vendor Y, and not against B the true owner of the land. (This illustration is subject to the provisions of Section 4(2) of the Act enacted by Section 2 of the Registration of Instruments (Amendment) Act, 1964 providing that instruments not registered within the Prescribed time shall be void and also making provision for registration out of time.)

From the above illustration, it must be evident that the mere registration of an instrument does not confer title to the land affected on the purchaser etc. unless the vendor had title to pass or had authority to execute on behalf of the true owner, nor does it thereby render the title of the purchaser indefeasible. In other words, if two deeds Are registered in respect of the same land, one may take effect before the other under Section 4, [p.78] but that does not mean that the prior registered deed confers a better title. The prior registered deed may confer an imperfect title or no title at all. But its prior registration would not ipso facto perfect an imperfect or invalid title.

I think that it is necessary to point out that until 1964, registration of instruments was not compulsory in Sierra Leone. It was the Registration of Instruments (Amendment) Act, 1964 that made registration of instruments compulsory. So there are possibly hundreds of unregistered pre-1964 Conveyances. If the construction put upon, Section 4 by the Court of Appeal in Davies v. Bickersteth (supra) is upheld, it would mean that any person taking a Conveyance of a piece of land after 1964 from a person having no title to the land and duly registering the Conveyance would automatically have title to the land as against the true owner holding an unregistered pre-1964 conveyance. The legislature could not have intended such absurd consequences. Quite apart from this, it is a matter of common knowledge that most of the lands in the Western Area outside the City of Freetown are based on possessory title and most of them are not covered by title deeds. That situation is the result of the history of land holding established in the Western Area about two centuries ago. The system which has been in operation in the Western Area since the founding of the Colony (now the Western Area) is that land passes within the same family from one generation to another in many cases without the existence of any document of title. The question then arises; does the mere registration of a Deed conveying any such land confer title on the purchaser as against the true owner who may have an indefeasible possessory title but no document of title? In my pinion such a result could not have been intended by the legislature in enacting Cap.256 and in particular Section 4 thereof.

Indeed the courts in Sierra Leone have on innumerable occasions decided in favour of owners of a possessory title without documents of title as against the holders of registered Conveyances. See for example Cole v. Cummings (No.2) (1964-66) A.L.R.(S.L.)164. For examples of cases where the rival titles were based on possessory non-documentary titles, See Mansaray v. Williams (supra) and John & Macauley v. Stafford & Ors. (supra).

In my judgment therefore the fact that the plaintiff's conveyance was executed and registered before the Defendant's conveyance does not ipso facto confer a better title on the plaintiff. In view or the foregoing, it follows that Davies v. Bickersteth (supra) was wrongly decided and should be over-ruled. And it is hereby over-ruled.

In view of the present trends and practices in dealings relating to land in the Western Area it-may be desirable to introduce a system of compulsory land registration in the Western Area. Such a measure may have the effect of putting an end to or of discouraging undesirable speculation and fraudulent dealings in land. It would protect innocent purchasers against fraudulent and unscrupulous dealers in land. It would also simplify conveying, and create certainty and security in the ownership of land. And it would relieve potential pur9hasers from the risk of buying law-suits.

To return to the facts of this case, the important question that arises is whether the plaintiff discharged the burden on him to prove that he had a fee simple estate in the land. To succeed he had to prove that he acquired a fee simple title from his predecessors in title, namely Assad Yazbeck and Gershon Cole. In other words did Assad Yazbeck acquire a good title from Gershon Cole in 1951 which he in turn passed to the plaintiff in 1952. No evidence was led to prove that Gershon Cole had any title to the land which he purported to convey to Assad Yazbeck in 1951.

Any possessory title that may have been acquired by the plaintiff after he purchased the land from Assad Yazbeck must be ruled out, because that was not the case put up by him. His case for a declaration of title stands or falls on his documentary title. In my opinion in view of the fact that no evidence was led to prove that Gershon Cole was the fee simple owner of the land in 1951 when he conveyed it to Assad Yazbeck, the plaintiff's claim for a declaration of a fee simple title must fail.

In an endeavour to prove that the defendant had no title to the land the plaintiff tendered in evidence a certified copy of a registered Conveyance dated 27th November, 1963 and expressed to be made between Vivian Victor Thomas and Vidal George Solomon Tsukuma Bickersteth whereby Vivian Victor Thomas (hereinafter called Vivian Thomas) conveyed the land in dispute to Vidal George Solomon Tsukuma Bickersteth (hereinafter called Vidal Bickersteth) (Ex. K) According to the evidence led by the Defence, Vivian Thomas conveyed the same land to Ellis Leslie England by Conveyance dated 6th January, 1967. (Ex. N). Ellis Leslie England, (hereinafter called Ellis England) in turn conveyed the land to the Defendant by Conveyance dated 23rd March, 1968 (Ex.M). Learned counsel for the plaintiff contended that Exhibit K proved that when Vivian Thomas conveyed the land to Ellis England in January, 1967, he had no title to pass because he had already divested himself of the title to the land when he conveyed it to Vidal Bickersteth in November, 1963. Therefore, according to Mr. Davies' argument, the Vivian Thomas title now vests in Vidal Bickersteth or his successors in title. That argument conceded, it means that there is soma other person, not before the court, who has a rival claim to the title of the land and whose title may be superior to that of the plaintiff. In my opinion, that evidence (Ex.K) having been introduced by the plaintiff, it was incumbent upon him to take steps to join Vidal Bickersteth or his [p.81] successor in title, if he was to succeed in his claim for a declaration of fee simple title in himself. In the face of that evidence (Ex. K) and in the absence of Vidal Bickersteth or his successor in title, I am of the opinion that it would be futile to make a declaration of title in favour of the plaintiff. In the circumstances, the proper course is to dismiss the plaintiff’s claim for a declaration of title.

Although not cited by counsel, I am of course aware of the dicta of Lord Diplock in delivering the opinion of the Privy Council in Ocean Estates Ltd. v. Pinder (1969) 2 A.C.19 at pp, 24-25 to the following effect:

“At common law as applied in the Bahamas, which has not adopted the English Land Registration Act, 1925, there is no such Concept as an “absolute” title. Where questions of title to land arise in litigation the court is concerned only with the relative strength of the title proved by the rival claimants. If party A can prove a better title than party B he is entitled to succeed notwithstanding that C may have a better title than A, if C is neither a party to the action nor a person by whose authority B is in possession or occupation of the land. It follows that as against a defendant whose entry upon the land was made as a trespasser a plaintiff who can prove any documentary title to the land is entitled to recover possession of the land unless debarred under the Real Property Limitation Act."

[p.82]

It must be pointed out that that case was a case of trespass, and there was no claim for a declaration of title. So the above quoted dicta must be taken to be relative to a case of Trespass. Indeed it states the correct principles relative to a claim for trespass. In a case of trespass, what the plaintiff has to prove is a better right of possession than the defendant. One of the ways that he may do this is to prove that he has a better title to the land than the defendant. But "better" title in the context of an action for trespass is not necessarily a "valid" title. In a case of trespass the court is concerned only with the relative strengths of the titles or possession proved by the rival claimants. The party who proves a better title or a better right to possession, succeeds, even though there may be another person, not a party, who has a better title than him. But in a case for a declaration of title, the plaintiff must succeed by the strength of his title. He must prove a valid title to the land. So if he claims a fee simple title he must prove it, to entitle him to a declaration of title. The mere production in evidence of a Conveyance in fee simple is not proof of a fee simple title. The document may be worthless. As a general rule the plaintiff must go further and prove that his predecessor in title had title to pass to him. And of course if there is evidence that the title to the same land vests in some person other than the vendor or the plaintiff, the plaintiff would have failed to discharge the burden upon him.

I have not lost sight of Order XII rule 11 of the High Court Rules Which provides that no action shall be defeated by reason of the misjoinder or - non-joinder of any party. But as pointed out by Viscount Cave L.C. in Performing Right Society Limited v. London Theater of Varieties Limited (1924) A.C.1 H.L. at p. 14, this does not mean that judgment can be obtained in the absence of a necessary party to the action.

I shall now turn to the issue of trespass - that is, the third issue formulated above. For this part of my judgment, I shall not assume that the plaintiff's title deeds relate to the land in dispute. In an action for trespass the important consideration is possession. The important issue who has proved a better right to possession. A mere possession is sufficient to maintain trespass against anyone who cannot show a better title. See England v. Mope Palmer 14 W.A.C.A. 659. See also Portland Managements Ltd. v. Harte (1976) 2 W.L.R. 174 C.A. where Scarman L.J. said inter alia at p. 180:—

"Possession is, of course, a very important matter to be considered in an action of ejectment, or the action for trespass."

In Bristow v. Carmican (1878) 3 App. Cas. 641 H.L. Lord Hetherly said inter alia at p. 652:

"There can be no doubt whatever that mere possession is sufficient against a person invading that possession without himself having any title whatever, as a mere stranger; that is to say, it is sufficient as against a wrong doer. The slightest amount of possession would be sufficient to entitle the person who is so in possession, or claims under those who have been or are in such possession, to recover as against a mere trespasser."

So the question for determination is whether the plaintiff or the defendant proved a better possession of the land in dispute. Taking first the evidence for the plaintiff, and assuming that his title deeds do not relate to the land, then there is evidence that at some stage he exercised acts of possession over the land.

Even if the evidence of his visit to the land in 1952 is ignored, there is evidence that in 1961 or 1965 he exercised rights of possession over the land by warning off a Mr. Lewalley whom he considered a trespasser, therefrom. In the case of the defendant he relies on his title deeds and other acts of possession. The Conveyance from Vivian Thomas to Ellis England was in 1967 and the Conveyance from Ellis England to the defendant was in 1968. But as stated earlier evidence was led that in 1963 Vivian Thomas had conveyed that same piece of land to Vidal Bickersteth. That evidence went uncontroverted and unrebutted. Learned counsel for the defendant suggested in argument before us that the land may have been re-conveyed to Vivian Thomas or he may have re-entered. But there is no evidence on which such a suggestion can be founded. In my opinion the only evidence of possession that the, defendant can rely on is his possession and the prior possession of Ellis England commencing in January 1967. So the relative position of the parties as to proof of possession is that the plaintiff has proved possession from about 1964 or 1965 and the defendant has proved possession from January 1967. In those circumstances, the plaintiff has, in my judgment, proves better possession which has been invaded by the defendant. In my judgment therefore the defendant is liable to the plaintiff in trespass.

I shall now consider what general damages are to be awarded to the plaintiff for the trespass found against the defendant. According to the evidence the plaintiff has not made any use of the land and he has certainly not developed it. In all the circumstances, I think that Le500 would be reasonable and adequate compensation to the plaintiff by way of general damages for the trespass by the defendant. This disposes of the fourth issue formulated above.

[p.85]

I now come to the last issue formulated above, and that is whether the Court of Appeal was right in ordering a re-trial. As state earlier the Court of Appeal said in their judgment that they had experienced considerable difficulty "owing to the absence of any clear evidence as to whether the contention between the parties related to one and the same land." With respect, if the Court found itself in such a difficulty it meant that the plaintiff had failed to discharge the onus upon him. In those circumstances they should have dismissed the appeal. As was pointed out by Webber C.J. in Kodilinye v. Odu (supra) if the plaintiff in an action for a declaration of title has failed to discharge the burden cast upon him the proper judgment should be for the defendant. In other words the plaintiff's claim for declaration of title should be dismissed. It is certainly not the proper course in such a situation to order a re-trial and thereby give the plaintiff a second opportunity to discharge the onus which he had failed to discharge in the first place.

The Court of Appeal went further and added that:

"We would have thought that in a situation as the present one evidence from an independent source like the Director of Surveys and Lands was desirable."

Assuming that evidence was desirable, who should have called it? Quite clearly the plaintiff, on whom the onus rested. And if he failed to c all that evidence, I would have thought that that was further proof that he had failed to discharge the onus on him. And if he failed to discharge that onus the proper course open to the Court in such circumstances the dismissal of his claim and not an order for a re-trial. It is of interest to note that a Surveyor and senior member of the staff of Surveys and Lands Department in the person of Mr. R.E. Boston-Mammah was called by the plaintiff as P.W.5. And yet no questions were put to him to assist in solving the problem of the identity of the land.

Indeed judging from his recorded evidence, it is surprising that he was called as a witness at all. One would have thought that Mr. Boston-Mammah was competent to give the "evidence from an independent source" which the Court of Appeal thought was desirable. If the plaintiff who called him failed to elicit that "desirable" evidence from him I would have thought that that was further reason why the appeal against the dismissal of the claim f or a declaration of title should have been dismissed.

As indicated above, the Court of Appeal having decided to order a re-trial proceeded to express an opinion as to what evidence it was desirable to call. That means that the Court of Appeal was advising the plaintiff what evidence to call at the re-trial. I think that it is necessary to state that it is not the business of the court, especially in a civil case, to give the parties gratuitous advice as to how they should conduct their cases or what witnesses to call. Otherwise the impression might be created that the court is taking sides in the dispute instead of holding the scales evenly which is its proper role.

In my opinion there was sufficient material before the Court of Appeal to determine the issues raised in the appeal one way or the other. In my judgment therefore the Court of Appeal was wrong in ordering a re-trial.

[p.87]

In view of the foregoing, I would allow the Appeal to the extent of setting aside the order for a re-trial and restoring the trial Judge's order dismissing the plaintiff's claim for a declaration of title. I would also allow the cross-appeal to the of setting aside the trial Judge's order of general damages for trespass against the plaintiff and substituting therefore an order of' Le 500 in favour of the plaintiff by way of general damages for trespass by the defendant.

JUDGMENT

LIVESEY LUKE C.J.

On 25th Ocotber, 1973 Rowland Eugene Alexander Harding (hereafter called the applicant) took out an Originating Summons in the High Court applying for the following orders:—

(i) An extension of time during which to register Deed of Conveyance dated the 30th day of March, 1967 and executed by Grace Omorlake Johnston (described as vendor) of the one part and Rowland Eugene Alexander Harding (therein described as the purchaser) of the other part in the Books of Conveyances kept in the office of the Administrator and Registrar-General for Sierra Leone and [p.121]

(ii) That the registration of the said Deed of Conveyance to take effect as from the date of execution thereof to wit 30th March, 1967.

The application was supported by an affidavit sworn by the applicant on 23rd October, 1973 to which he exhibited a copy of the Deed of Conveyance referred to in the Summons. The application was made under the proviso to Section 4(2)(a) of the Registration of Instruments Act, Cap. 256 (as amended). The Section so far as relevant reads—

"4(1) Every Deed, contract, or Conveyance, executed after the ninth day of February, eighteen hundred and fifty seven, so far as regards any land to be thereby affected, shall take effect, as against other Deeds affecting the same land from the date of its registration.

Provided that every such instrument shall take effect from the date of its execution, if registered within any of the periods limited for registration as follows, that is to say—

(a) if such instrument be executed in Freetown, if registered within ten days from its date ……

(b) ……

(c) …….

(2)(a) Every Deed, contract or Conveyance executed after the 1st day of June 1964, shall be void, so far as regards any land to be thereby effected, unless it is registered within the appropriate period limited for such registration under the proviso to sub-section (1).

[p.122]

Provided that any person prejudiced by the avoidance of any transaction under the provisions of this sub-section may apply by originating summons to a judge of the High Court for permission to register after the expiration of the period limited for registration, and if the Judge is satisfied that either

(i) The failure to register was not due to any fault of the applicant, or

(ii) the applicant, failure to secure registration in time was, in all the circumstances of the case excusable.

He may permit the applicant to register out of time and the transaction in question shall be deemed never to have been avoided and shall take effect as against other transaction affecting the same land from such date as shall be just."

Grace O. Johnson and the Administrator and Registrar-General were joined as Respondents to the application and both were duly served, Grace O. Johnston (hereafter called the Appellant) entered an appearance to the Summons and filed an affidavit in opposition Sworn on 5th November, 1973. She later filed another affidavit sworn by her on 21st November, 1973. The Administrator and Registrar-General did not enter an appearance and took no part the precedings.

The Summons was heard by Short J. (as he then was). During the course of the hearings the leaned Judge on the Application of learned counsel on 28th November, 1973 made the following orders—

[p.123]

(1) Both the applicant and the respondent may file and serve further evidence by affidavits within seven days from today and any affidavits in reply to be filed and served within another seven days;

(2) The deponents should be available for cross-examination by the opposite side.

Thereafter the following affidavits were filed in order of sequence:—

(i) Affidavit of Habert Bankole Bright sworn on the 5th day of December, 1973 and filed on behalf of the appellant.

(ii) Affidavit of Roderick Ewart Boston-Mammah sworn on the 5th day of December, 1973 and filed on behalf of the appellant.

(iii) Affidavit of Rowland Eugene Alexander Harding sworn on the 15th day of December, 1973 and filed on his own (i.e. applicant's behalf)

(iv) Affidavit of Grace Omolake Johnston sworn 18th day of December, 1973 and filed her own (i.e. appellant's) behalf.

By order made on 18th December, 1973 the learned judge designated the applicant as “plaintiff” and the appellant as “Defendant.”

The affidavits, to which I shall return presently contained allegations and counter-allegations of a very serious nature. Both parties were uncompromising in their attitude and were prepared for a bitter contest. It was in that charged atmosphere that the applicant entered the witness box on 18th December, 1973.

He was subjected to the most rigorous cross-examination by learned counsel for the appellant on that day and on three other days when the Summons came up for hearing. The printed records indicate that at the close or cross-examination, learned counsel considered it necessary to re-examine the applicant at length. At the end of the applicant's evidence, the appellant entered the witness box on 30th January, 1974. She too was subjected to a very rigorous cross-examination which lasted two days.

The affidavit were lengthy and the evidence copious. They have been set out in great detail in the judgments of the High Court and of the court of Appeal. I do not consider it necessary to set them out in any detail in this judgment. It will be sufficient for present purposes to give a brief summary of the affidavit and viva voce evidence. The applicant was a Barrister and Solicitor. The appellant is and was at all material times an Auctioneer and Estate Agent. They were intimate friends. The applicant acted as Solicitor for United Africa Company Limited (U.A.C. for short) in an action in the then Supreme Court (now High Court) against one B.L. Macfoy. Judgment was given in favour of U.A.C. In execution of that judgment a writ of fieri facias was issued by the applicant as Solicitor for U.A.C. to levy execution against the real property of B.L. Macfoy, the judgment debtor. Pursuant to the writ of fieri facias, the Sheriff or Sierra Leone sold, by public auction, the real property of B.L. Macfoy situated at Africanus Road Kissy Village in June 1966. Both the applicant and the appellant attended the auction. The applicant took part in the bidding as agent for the appellant. He deposed inter alia in his affidavit sworn on 15th December. 1973 as follows:—

“1. That sometime in 1966 I requested the first Respondent as a personal Friend and as an estate agent whether she would agree to have the property in question bought in her name to be held in trust at my discretion (or upon my instructions) and that she would be paid fees for so doing.

2. That having arranged for the purchase price of Le2,250 (Two Thousand Two Hundred and Fifty Leones) I attended the auction and made the final accepted bid on behalf of the first Respondent (as previously agreed upon)”

In reply to the above quoted paragraphs of the applicant's affidavit, the appellant deposed in her affidavit sworn on 18th December, 1973 as follows:—

"1. That there was never any agreement between the applicant and myself to have the property which is the subject of the action bought in my name to be held in trust for him at his discretion (or upon his instructions) nor did he pay me fees for doing so as alleged in paragraphs l and 9 of the second affidavit herein.

2. That the applicant attended the auction as Solicitor for U.A.C. who caused the property to be sold did not make the final bid on my behalf nor any bid at all.

3. That there was no arrangement for the purchase price of Le2,250 between us as alleged in paragraph 2 of his affidavit.

[p.126]

4. That the sale was by Public Auction to the highest bidder."

In his evidence under cross-examination the applicant said inter alia

"I was present when the property was being auctioned. I was there as Agent and Solicitor when the property was being auctioned. I did so as Agent and Solicitor of Grace Omorlake Johnston. At the time, I was also acting as Agent and Solicitor for Messrs. U.A.C. who had issued a Fi.Fa. in respect of the same properties. I I recall that at the auction the owner Mr. B.L. Macfoy threatened to kill any prospective purchaser of the properties. I thereupon took over the bidding for the properties from Grace Omorlake Johnston at her request. I signed the Auctioneer's certificate on behalf of Grace Omorlake Johnston……. I paid the purchase price on behalf of Grace Omorlake Johnston with monies that I got from Messrs. U.A.C ……I got the money from Messrs U.A.C. as their Solicitor because they were tenants and wanted the freehold. I invited Grace Omorlake Johnston to the Auction in her capacity as an Estate Agent so that she could buy the property and get it conveyed to me in my private capacity as Rowland Harding."

Under cross-examination the appellant agreed that that applicant had indeed made the final bid at the auction. She said inter alia:—

[p.127]

"The property was bought from the Sheriff of Sierra Leone …… I did not personally pay any money for this property. The plaintiff (i.e. the applicant) arranged this cash advance with Messrs. U.A.C. I had no dealing with U.A.C. about this. The plaintiff did all the arrangement ……When I went to the Sale and having made the highest bid through my agent the plaintiff, I asked Mr. Talabi Coker who was the representative at the Sale if he could arrange a cash advance from Messrs. U.A.C. to pay for the property. He then advised me to make that request through the Solicitor for Messrs. U.A.C. who was the plaintiff ……. After Talabi Coker gave me the reply to my request I then asked the plaintiff to negotiate the arrangement. At that time the plaintiff was the person who did the final bidding."

The Sheriff's Sale Certificate was signed by the applicant as "Agent for Grace Omorlake Johnston, Purchaser."

In pursuance of the Sale the property was conveyed to the appellant by the Sheriff by Deed dated 13th June, 1966 (Ex. C). The next stage in the story is the Sale or alleged Sale of the property by the appellant to the applicant. And this is where the controversy between the parties centred. According to the applicant, the appellant sold and conveyed the property to him. But according to the appellant she at no time sold or conveyed the property to the applicant. In paragraphs 2 & 3 of the affidavit in support of the Summons, which was sworn on 23rd October, 1973 the applicant deposed inter alia:—

[p.128]

"2. That on the 30th day of March, 1967 a Deed of Conveyance was executed by Grace Omorlake Johnston (therein described as the Vendor) and myself (therein described as the Purchaser) in respect of properties at Kissy Bye-Pass and Africanus Roads, Kissy Village aforesaid

3. That the witness to the execution of the said Deed of Conveyance was Mr. J.B. Jenkins-Johnston the brother of the said Grace Omorlske Johnston, now deceased"

In reply to the allegations made in the two paragraphs just quoted the appellant deposed inter alia in her affidavit sworn on 5th November, 1973:—

"2. That on the 30th day of March, 1967 the date of Conveyance copy of which is attached to Originating Summons I was out of Sierra Leone on board the M.V. Aureol sailing from Liverpool to Freetown having left Freetown since 20th August 1966 as evidenced by my passport.

3. That I did not execute the said Deed of Conveyance herein, nor did I knowingly execute any Deed of Conveyance to the said Applicant for my properties at Africanus Road and Bye Pass Road, Kissy Village, Sierra Leone.

4. That at no time did I intend to or agree to sell the said properties to the applicant here-in nor did he pay me the sum of two thousand two hundred and seventy five Leones or any sum at all for the said properties.

[p.129]

5. That the very first time I saw this Conveyance was on Thursday 25th October, 1973 when the Originating Summons was served on me.……

9. That on the 19th day of August 1966 the eve of my departure to the United Kingdom…… the applicant phoned to invite me to his Chambers to sign an agreement between U.A.C. and myself to confirm the cash advance given to me by U.A.C. through him, to pay for the said properties bought by me" …….

11. That on my arrival at his Chambers the applicant laid a document before me and told me that this was the agreement between U.A.C. and myself confirming that they will withhold the Lease rents for the petrol station on the said property until the cash advance made to me by them through the applicant as my agent was fully paid and asked me to sign it which I did because he was my intimate friend and solicitor of the High Court.

12. That applicant at the time was a special friend of mine in whom I reposed a lot of confidence to act as my agent in this matter.

[p.130]

13. …….. I signed the document without reading it. ……..

15. That there was no witness to my signature when I signed that document on 19th August, 1966 and the applicant did not sign in my presence.

16. That on my return from the United Kingdom I asked the applicant to show me the document I had hurriedly signed on the eve of my departure but he said he had handed it to U.A.C. (S.L.) Ltd. who had sent it to their principals in London. I requested to see a copy of it which copy he could not produce and up to date has not produced to me.

17. That since 1966 the applicant has acted as my agent for the collection of rents for the said properties and was my so1icitor in court actions against the former owner of the property Hr. Macfoy and against the tenants occupying the freehold premises of the said properties."

In his reply to the allegations contained in the above quoted paragraphs of the appellant's affidavit, the applicant deposed inter alia in his affidavit sworn on 15th December, 1973:—

"3. that in August, 1966 I requested the First Respondent to convey the Property to me as previously agreed upon and she agreed to do so.

[p.131]

4. That on the 19th August, 1966 in the presence of the late Mr. J.B. Jenkins-Johnston, the first Respondent signed the said Deed of Conveyance to me at my Chambers, 9, Walpole Street, Freetown but I did not sign on that day."

Both parties maintained the positions taken in their respective affidavits with regard to the execution or non-execution of the Deed of Conveyance when they were cross-examinated

The fact is that the Deed of Conveyance which was the subject-matter of the application was not registered up to October, 1973. The applicant gave reasons for the failure to register. I shall return to this later. The next stage in the story is that the appellant terminated the agency of the applicant. She deposed inter alia in her affidavit sworn on 5th November, 1973:—

"23. That by letter dated 9th October, 1973 I demanded the said rents and my Conveyance for the property i.e. my title deeds from the applicant and by the same letter I gave him notice of my withdrawal of the agency from him."

According to the applicant, he applied during that same month to the Registrar-General to register the Deed of Conveyance, but the Registrar-General understandably and properly refused the application. Just over a fortnight after the termination of his agency, the applicant took out the Originating Summons.

The reason given by the applicant in his affidavit in support of the Originating Summons for his failure to register the Deed of Conveyance in time is contained in paragraph 4 thereof which reads:—

[p.132]

"4. That the said Deed of Conveyance has not been registered within the prescribed period of time owing to the fact that my clerk had mislaid the file containing the document and continuous but fruitless searches had been going on for the same until a few days ago when it was discovered amongst old Gazettes which had hitherto been packed and which I had been perusing recently."

But in his affidavit sworn on 15th December, 1973 the applicant deposed inter alia:

"5. That I failed to sign the said Deed of Conveyance within ten days after the departure from Sierra Leone of the first Respondent i.e. the 20th day of August, 1966 and decided to do so on her return to Sierra Leone.

6. That I then wrote to the first Respondent in England asking her estimated date of her return to Sierra Leone and that she informed me that she could do so in the month of March, 1967 where upon caused my clerk to insert the month of March in the said Deed of Conveyance. My clerk erased the year 1966 and replaced it by the year 1967.

7. That I myself thereafter signed the said Deed of conveyance and handed it to my clerk for completion before registration.

[p.133]

8. That from that time onwards I mislaid the said Deed of Conveyance until I found it recently."

Under cross-examination the applicant said inter alia:

"The plan was in the Conveyance. I thereafter forgot all about it and when I asked for it about three days later my clerk told me that it was on my table, I told her it was not there."

This concludes the summary of the evidence.

I shall now turn my attention to the Ruling of the trial judge, The Ruling was delivered on 22nd March, 1974. After reviewing the evidence the learned judge formulated the issue for determination thus:—

"I have got to be satisfied that either:

(i) The failure to register was not due to any fault of the applicant, or

(ii) The applicants failure to register in time was, in all the circumstances of the case excusable."

He also itemized certain pieces of evidence which he considered important and relevant in assisting him in the exercise of his discretion. He then commented on the pieces of evidence high-lightedand in some cases made specific findings of fact,

The learned judge concluded his Ruling thus:—

"I have given careful consideration to the evidence in this case - both by the plaintiff/applicant and the defendant/respondent in so far as they are relevant to the issue before me. I shall be extremely remise in my duty if I found otherwise than that:—

[p.134]

1. The Plaintiff/Applicant's failure to register the Conveyance Ex. "A" was due wholly to his own fault, and

2. Such failure to ensure registration was inexcusable, and I so find after taking all the circumstance of the case into consideration. The permission sought is refused. The application is dismissed."

The applicant appealed to the Court of Appeal. The appeal was heard by a panel consisting of C.A. Harding, Awunor-Renner and Beccles Davies JJ.A. - (as they then were). Judgment was delivered on the 20th day of January, 1980 allowing the appeal (Mr. Justice C.A. Harding dissenting). The judgment of the majority was delivered by Beccles Davies J.A. He held that failure to register the Deed of Conveyance was due to the applicant's fault and then concluded thus:—

"Taking the entire circumstances of this Case including the then existing relationship between the applicant and the respondent I would give unequivocal answers in the affirmative to the questions: is it more probable than not that the applicant had mislaid the Conveyance by inadvertently putting it away among old Gazettes and what it had been eventually discovered by the applicant? And was this failure to register the Deed excusable in the circumstances of this particular case?"

He set aside the Ruling of Short J. and then proceeded to make the following findings of fact;

[p.135]

"1. That the Deed of Conveyance was mislaid by the applicant and subsequently discovered by him.

2. That the circumstances of this particular case are such as to render the applicant's failure to register the said Conveyance within the statutory period of ten days excusable.

3. That the Respondent on the 19th August, 1966 knowingly executed a Deed of Conveyance Ex. "A" conveying the property described therein to the applicant for an estate in fee simple according to the arrangement between them. I have not made this finding as a condition precedent to the granting of the application. I have made it because it has been raised as one of the issues in the matter.

4. That the said Conveyance had been witnessed by the respondent's brother the late Mr. J.B. Jenkins-Johnston.

5. That the true date of the execution of the Deed of Conveyance was 19th August, 1966."

He ended by making the following orders:—

'i. The appeal is allowed

ii. Leave is granted to the applicant to register Ex. "A" the Deed of Conveyance executed by the respondent as Vendor to the applicant as Purchaser, on the 19th August, 1966.

[p.136]

iii. The said Conveyance is to incorporate Plan L.S.514/66 as well as the new Plan in the Applicant's name and dated 15th October, 1973 signed by Mr. L.V. McEwen a licensed Surveyor and counter-signed by Hr. H.E. Boston-Mammah on behalf of the Director of' Surveys and Lands.

iv. the Conveyance is to take effect regarding the said land as from 19th August, 1966."

The appellant has appealed to this Court on the following grounds:—

"1. That the learned Appeal Court was wrong in Law and in fact in holding that failure on the respondent's part to register the document was excusable in the circumstances in accordance with S.2(a)(1) of the Registration of Instruments Act (Cap. 256) as amended.

2. That the learned Justices of Appeal exceeded the jurisdiction under S.2(1)(a) of the Registration of Instruments Act (Cap. 256) as amended by ordering date to be inserted in the Conveyance and a Plan dated 15th October, 1973 to be used for the purpose of such registration.

3. That the learned Appeal Court erred in Law in interfering with the exercise of discretion or the trial Judge in disallowing the Application of the respondent."

[p.137]

The applicant had died by the time judgment was delivered by the Court of Appeal. By order dated the 10th day of April, 1981 this Court ordered that the present respondents be substituted in place of the applicant (the original respondent in this appeal).

There is no dispute that on the evidence failure to register the Deed of Conveyance was due to the fault of the applicant. The learned trial Judge came to that conclusion, and all the Justices of the Court of Appeal came to the same conclusion. The dispute in this appeal is whether the learned trial judge was right in holding that failure to register the Deed of Conveyance in time was "in all the circumstances" inexcusable and whether he properly exercised his discretion in refusing the application, This is how the learned judge approached the matter in his Ruling: first he referred to the reliefs applied for in the Originating Summons; Secondly he referred to the relevant Statutory provision under which the application was made; thirdly he gave an exhaustive narrative of both the affidavit and viva voce evidence; fourthly he formulated the issues for decision; fifthly he emphasized the fact that the application was for the exercise of his discretion and that the discretion must be exercised judicially; sixthly he high-lighted certain pieces of evidence which he considered important and of assistance in arriving at a decision; and finally he came to a conclusion and made the order refusing the application. No serious complaints were made against the said first five parts of the Ruling. The criticisms and complaints were directed at the sixth and final parts of the Ruling. It is therefore necessary to analyse and consider them in some detail. In the sixth part –

(1) He referred to the evidence contained in para. 4 of the first affidavit of the applicant to the effect that failure to register the Conveyance was due to the fact that his clerk had mislaid it and that it was discovered only a few days previously after continuous but fruitless search. He then commented that the clerk neither swore to an affidavit nor gave oral evidence. He also quoted the applicant's oral evidence to the effect that he told his clerk to substitute April for March in the Conveyance because he (the applicant) had signed it in April; that hereafter he forgot all about it until three days later when he asked his clerk about it and that his clerk told him that it was on the table and he replied that it was not there. The judge made no further comment. The evidence was certainly relevant. I fail to see what criticism can be levied against this part of the Ruling.

(2) He said inter alia "If the evidence of the plaintiff/ applicant is true the defendant/1st Respondent executed the Conveyance Ex. "A" which he backed as Solicitor on the 19th August, 1966. Then he had ten days thereafter within which to register it for the registration to be in compliance with Section 4 of the Registration of Instruments Act……He did not register it as a prudent solicitor should have done. He kept it, according to his evidence, until about eight months later……. He is therefore caught by the Act and his explanation for not registering the Conveyance Ex. "A" within 10 days after its execution because it was mislaid soon after he (the plaintiff/applicant signed it i.e. 30th of April, 1967) does not avail and is untenable. His explanation therefore fails." In my opinion no valid criticism can be made of this statement. If in fact the Conveyance was executed by [p.139] the Vendor on 19th August, 1966 then it should have been registered within 10 days thereafter. The explanation about the loss of the Conveyance relate to the execution by the applicant in March or April, 1967 and not to the execution by the Vendor. Therefore the learned judge was perfectly right in saying that that explanation did not avail and was untenable. There is also no doubt that the evidence was relevant.

(3) He referred to the testimonium clause of the Conveyance which states that it was executed and witnessed on the 30th of March, 1967. He continued: "I find as a fact that the Conveyance was neither executed nor witnessed on the 30th of March, 1967. Nor indeed was it signed by the plaintiff/applicant on that date. The evidence of the defendant/respondent which is supported by her passport shows that on the 30th of March, 1967, she was on the high seas on her home-ward voyage……. of course, he had to change his evidence on this issue in a subsequent affidavit after receiving the second affidavit by the defendant/respondent that she was out of Sierra Leone at the time." I think that it is conceded on all sides that the Conveyance was not executed by the appellant on 30th March, 1967. Indeed the Court of Appeal supported that finding. There is no doubt, in my view, that there was overwhelming evidence before the judge (including the evidence the applicant himself) to support the conclusion that he did not sign the Conveyance on 30th March, 1967. There could also be no controversy that in his first affidavit the applicant had positively sworn in para. 2 thereof that the appellant had executed the Conveyance on 30th March, 1967; and that it was after the appellant had [p.140] filed and served her affidavit sworn on 5th November, 1973 stating in para. 2 thereof that she was on the high seas on 30th March, 1967, that the applicant changed his evidence by stating in his affidavit sworn on 15th December, 1973 that the appellant executed the Conveyance on 19th August, 1966. In my opinion therefore the comment of the judge was legitimate, justified and the evidence was relevant.

(4) He dealt with the evidence relating to the Plan attached to the Conveyance. He considered the contradictions in the evidence that the Plan was prepared for him by a Mr. Lemon Thomas, a Surveyor. He pointed out that Mr. Thomas signed the Plan on 15th May, 1966. He continued: “It follows therefore that, if the evidence is true, the Plan was prepared before the property was even bought [i.e. by the applicant]. This is an unfortunate piece of evidence.” It is of interest to quote the applicant's oral evidence on this issue. He said inter alia “Ex. “B” is the Plan I intended to use for the Registration of Ex. “A”…….. Ex. “B” was prepared by Mr. Lemon Thomas for me to register Ex. “A”. The date the Surveyor signed Ex. “B” was 15th May, 1966……” It If that evidence is to be believed, it means that the Plan was prepared for the applicant even before the appellant bought the property at the public auction. It was in that light that the judge made his comment about the evidence being unfortunate. In my opinion the comment was justified and the evidence relevant.

(5) He mentioned the fact that the first and only time a property Plan was prepared describing the property - as the property of the applicant - was only on 15th October, 1973, a few days before the Originating Summons was filed.

[p.141]

He continued: “Why this inordinate delay if all was well with the soul of the Conveyance by Grace Omorlake Johnston to Roland E.A. Harding.” The uncontroverted evidence was that the applicant took no steps to have a proper Plan prepared for the registration of the Conveyance from the time he is alleged to have bought the property up to a few days before filing the Originating Summons - a period of over seven years. The delay in taking steps to prepare a Plan was certainly inordinate. It could not be said that failure to prepare the Plan was related to the loss of the Conveyance. In the first place the Conveyance was not alleged to be lost until March or April 1967. Secondly I do not; think that it can be claimed that the Surveyor required to see the Conveyance for the purpose of preparing a Plan. The applicant offered no explanation for the delay in preparing the Plan. It was in those circumstances that the learned judge made his comment, clothed, as it was, in metaphor. In my opinion his comment may have been uncharitable, but it was certainly not improper or unjustified. He did not pass judgment on the validity of the Conveyance and the evidence was relevant.

(6) He referred to the oral evidence of the applicant that he did “not tell the appellant of the loss of the Conveyance nor did he prepare another Conveyance for the appellant to execute. He continued "One would have thought that the immediate re-action of any reasonable person in a straightforward and untainted transaction involving someone who, during the period, was not only a friend but a special friend would have been to inform the defendant/respondent of the loss or misplacement of the Conveyance and to prepare another Conveyance for execution by her. After all the [p.142] plaintiff/applicant was acting also as Solicitor and Agent of the Defendant/Respondent. One who allegedly was a free voluntary vendor of the properties involved." The applicant did not offer any explanation for his failure to inform the applicant of the loss of the Conveyance or why he did not request her to execute another Conveyance for over seven years. His behavior was certainly curious and inexplicable. In my opinion the judge did not make a pronouncement on the validity of the Conveyance. His comment was, in the circumstances, legitimate and justified and the evidence relevant.

(7) He concluded thus: "I have given very careful consideration to the evidence in this case - both by the plaintiff/ applicant and the Defendant/Respondent in so far as they are relevant to the issue before me," and then made the findings and orders previously referred to.

I don't think that any exception was or can be taken to this passage. It show quite clearly that the judge was conscious of his duty, although he may have been wrong in his findings and/or orders.

The majority of the Court of Appeal held that the learned trial judge had exercised his discretion under mistakes of Law, misapprehension of facts as well as on irrelevant matters. The Court then proceeded to set aside the judge's order and then exercised its discretion in favour of the applicant. It is well-settled that an Appellate Court can in certain circumstances interfere with the exercise of discretion of a judge. The circumstances are: if the Appellate Court is satisfied that the judge was wrong, either in principle or by giving no weight (or no sufficient weight) to those considerations which ought to have weighed with him or by being influenced by other considerations which ought not to have weighed with him, or not weighed so much with him. The principle on which an Appellate Court acts [p.143] was stated with much clarity by Viscount Simon L.C. in Charles Osenton & Co. v. Johnston (1942) A.C. 130 H.L. He said inter alia at p. 138:—

"The law as to the reversal by a Court of Appeal of an order made by the judge below in the exercise of his discretion is well-established, and any difficulty that arises is due only to the application of well-settled principles in an individual case. The appellate tribunal is not at liberty merely to substitute its own exercise of discretion for the discretion already exercised by the judge. In other words, appellate authorities ought not to reverse the order merely because they would themselves have exercised the original discretion, had it attached to them, in a different way. But if the appellate tribunal reaches the clear conclusion that there has been a wrongful exercise of discretion in that no weight, or no sufficient weight, has been given to relevant considerations such as those urged before us by the appellant, then the reversal of the order on appeal may be justified. "See also WARD v. JAMES (1965) 2 W.L.R. 455 C.A.

The question then arises: Did the Court of Appeal properly interfere with the exercise of the judge's discretion? The majority of that Court criticized the judge for saying in the early stages of the proceedings that he had to be satisfied as to the validity of the document sought to be registered. This was inspite of the fact that in his final Ruling the judge stated [p.144] quite clearly that the issue before him was one of registration, that validity of the Deed was not relevant to the issue and that he made no findings on the validity of the Deed. Notwithstanding this criticism the majority of the Court of Appeal proceeded to commit the same offence of which they had accused the judge by making findings as to the validity of the Deed. In their findings of fact numbered 3 & 4, they said inter alia:

"3. That the Respondent on the 19th August, 1966 knowingly executed a Deed of Conveyance Ex. "A"……..."

4. That the said Conveyance had been witnessed by the respondent's brother the late Mr. J.B. Jenkins-Johnston."

With respect, by saying that the appellant had knowingly executed the Deed of Conveyance (which the appellant had persistently and strenuously denied) the Court was passing judgment on the validity of the Deed, which they themselves had said was irrelevant. Again by saying that the Deed was witness by Nr. J.B. Jenkins-Johnston (which had been denied by the appellant) they were pronouncing judgment on the validity of the Deed, The majority or the Court of Appeal also criticized the judge for not making a finding as to the exact date of execution. The judge found as a fact that the Deed "was neither executed nor witnessed on the 30th of March, 1967. Nor indeed was it signed by the plaintiff/applicant on that date." They said that that was not the and of the matter. They said that had the judge adverted his mind to the law on the point, he would not have concluded that, point as he did. They then stated what they considered to be the relevant law on the point and then concluded that "the execution of the Conveyance had taken place on 19th August, 1966 when the respondent signed it…… The conveyance should have been considered in that light".

[p.145]

There is no doubt that the Conveyance was not executed by the appellant on 30th March, 1967, as alleged by the applicant in his first affidavit. The applicant admitted in his second affidavit and under cross-examination that the appellant did not execute the Conveyance on that date. He also said under cross-examination that he did not execute the Conveyance on that date. So the judge was right in making the finding quoted above, albeit a negative finding. The majority of the Court of Appeal, having found that the date of execution by the appellant was 19th August, 1966, proceeded to hold that the reason for the failure to register the Conveyance in time was that "the applicant had mislaid the Conveyance by inadvertently putting it away among old Gazettes and that it had been eventually discovered by the applicant." With respect, the Evidence about the loss of the Conveyance was the reason advanced by the applicant in respect of the alleged execution on 30th March, 1967. That reason did not relate to the execution on 19th August, 1966. With respect, the court of Appeal (majority) having found that the execution was on 19th August, 1966 should have proceeded to consider whether any reasons were advanced by the applicant for failure to register after that date and then decide whether the reasons were excusable. In my judgment the Court of Appeal was clearly wrong to consider the reasons advanced in respect of the 30th March, 1967 alleged execution then considering whether to exercise their discretion in respect of the 19th August, 1966 execution. In my judgment therefore even assuming that the Court of Appeal could have interfered with the exercise of the discretion of the judge, they exercised the discretion wrongly.

The question therefore still remains: Did the judge exercise his discretion properly? I think that it is important to state that there is nothing in the proviso to Section 4(2)(a) [p.146] of the Registration of Instruments Act Cap. 256 to indicate that the granting permission to register an instrument out of time should be granted as of course. As was stated by the judge and the Justices of Appeal the application is normally made ex parte. In my judgment even where the application is made ex parte the burden is on the applicant to satisfy the judge with evidence that failure to register in time was not due to his fault or was in all the circumstances excusable, as the case may be. If there is no evidence, or no satisfactory evidence, before the judge explaining the circumstances of the failure to register in time and giving reasons fur the delay, which may be considered excusable, then there is no basis on which the judge can exercise his discretion. It is only when there is satisfactory evidence before the judge that he can apply his mind thereto and exercise his discretion one way or the other. In this connection I think that it is necessary to say that it is not the business of this court, or indeed of any other court, to lean over backwards to ferret for excuses for an applicant's failure to register in time, or to surmise the reasons for such failure, it also important to emphasise that in applications such as this, whether made exparte or inter parties, it is incumbent on the applicant to make a full and fair disclosure in presenting the evidence to the Court. The applicant must make sufficient and candid disclosure. In other words the utmost good faith must be observed. The applicant must observe uberrima fides. See Republic of Pery v. Dreyfus & Co. (1886) 55 L.T. 802 and Lazard Brothers & Co. v. Midland Bank Ltd. (1932) A.C. 289 H.L. at p.307. If the order is made ex parte, a failure to make such disclosure would justify the Court in discharging it, So if the evidence in support contains material mis-statements of fact, the application will not be granted or if already granted it will be discharged.

The dicta of Farwell L.J. in The Hagen (1908) p.189 are both relevant and applicable. He said inter alia at p.201:—

“[A]nd the third is that, inasmuch as the application is made ex parte, full and fair disclosure is necessary, as in all ex parte applications, and a failure to make such full and fair disclosure would justify the Court in discharging the order, even although the party might afterwards be in a position to make another application.” [emphasis mine].

In my judgment the fact that an applicant chooses to make the application inter partes, instead of ex parte, does not absolve him of the obligation to observe utmost good faith.

What was the explanation offered by the applicant in this case, and was he full, fair and candid? It will be recalled that in para. 4 of his affidavit sworn on 15th December, 1973 the applicant deposed that the appellant executed the Conveyance on 19th August, 1966. He then proceeded in the next paragraph to depose as follows:—

“5. That I failed to sign the said Deed of Conveyance within ten days after the departure from Sierra Leone of the first Respondent i.e. the 20th day of August, 1966 and decided to do so on her return to Sierra Leone.”

Even if the applicant had to sign the Conveyance, it is difficult to understand why he had to wait until the return to Sierra Leone of the appellant before doing so. And he offered no explanation for this. He also did not explain why no attempt was made to register a Conveyance allegedly duly executed by the [p.148] Vendor and allegedly properly witnessed for over seven months before its alleged loss. In my opinion therefore there was no satisfactory evidence before the judge of the reasons for the failure to register the Conveyance after it was allegedly executed by the appellant on 19th August, 1966. There was therefore no basis, or insufficient basis, on which the judge could exercise his discretion. However much one wishes to be charitable to the applicant, it is difficult to run away from the conclusion that he was not full, fair and candid in presenting his evidence to the Court. His evidence is replete with mis-statements of material facts. This can be demonstrated by a reference to a few random pieces of evidence. On the question of the execution of the Conveyance by the appellant he deposed as follows:—

In his first affidavit (sworn on 23rd October, 1973):

"2. That on the 30th day of March, 1967 a Deed of Conveyance was executed by Grace Omorlake Johnston (therein described as the Vendor) and myself."

In his affidavit (sworn on 15th December,1973):

"4. That on the 19th August, 1966 in the presence of the late Mr. J.B. Jenkins Johnston, the first Respondent signed the said Deed of Conveyance to me at my Chambers 9, Walpole Street but that I did not sign on that day."

In his oral evidence on 23rd January, 1974:

"I still stand by paragraph 2 of my affidavit of the 23rd October, 1973, especially in connection with the date of execution by the defendant on the 30th March, 1967."

On the question of execution of the Conveyance by himself he deposed as follows:—

[p.149]

In his first affidavit: "2. that on the 30th day of March, 1967 a Deed of Conveyance was executed by ..... and myself."

In his oral evidence on 23rd January, 1974:

"It was on the 30th of April, 1967 that I signed Ex. "A" the Conveyance……. I did sign the Conveyance on the 30th of April, 1967"…… After I signed Ex. "A" I told my clerk to put the date in and to substitute April for March because it was signed in April.

In his oral evidence on 25th January, 1974:

“The Deed was lost only once; that after I had signed it on the 30th of March, 1967 (I did say that I signed it on the 30th April, 1967 but that was a mistake). If I signed it on the 30th of March, 1967, it could not have been in her presence because she was on the high seas returning home.”

On the question of the witnessing of the Conveyance, although Ex. “A” shows quite clearly that the document was witnessed only once, yet he deposed as follows:—

In his affidavit sworn on 15th December, 1973:

“4. That on the 19th August, 1966 in the presence of the late Mr. J.B. Jenkins Johnston, the first Respondent signed the said Deed of Conveyance at my Chambers 9, Walpole Street, Freetown but that I did not sign on that day.”

In his oral evidence on 23rd January, 1974:

“The witness J.B. Jenkins Johnston was called to my Chambers after the return of the defendant in connection with the execution of Ex. “A”. I sent for him to witness my signature. It was on the 30th of April, 1967 that I signed Ex. “A” the Conveyance.”

[p.150]

In his oral evidence on 25th January, 1974:

“I am not sure whether the defendant was present when Mr. J.B. Jenkins-Johnston signed as a witness to my signature in Ex. “A”.”

In my judgment the lack of candour to the Court on the part of the applicant deprived him of any assistance the Court is empowered to give him, including exercising a judicial discretion in his favour.

In view of the foregoing, the applicant's application could not possibly succeed. In my judgment therefore the learned judge was right in holding that the failure to register the Conveyance was not excusable in all the circumstances and in dismissing the application.

Since writing this judgment I have had the advantage of reading the draft of a separate judgment written by my learned brother Tejan J.S.C. In that judgment my learned brother found that the failure of the applicant to register the Conveyance within the prescribed time was due to a “misapprehension of the law.” Relying on a dictum of Lord Atkin in Evans v. Bartlam (1937) 2 All E.R. 646 at p. 649, he expressed the view that there is no presumption that everyone knows the law, and therefore held that the failure to register was excusable. With respect, my learned brother misapplied the dictum of Lord Atkin. The general rule is expressed in the time - honoured maxim: “Ignorantia facti excusat; ignorantia juris non excusat” meaning, “Ignorance” of fact excuses; ignorance of the law does not excuse.” Therefore a mistake of law is not per se excusable. It is only where there are equitable grounds for doing so, having regard to the particular facts of the case, that the Court will grant relief against a mistake of law: See Rogers v. Ingham 3 Ch.D.351 per Mellish L.J. at 357.

In the result, I would set aside the orders of the Court of Appeal and restore the orders of the High Court

…….

Hon. Mr. Justice E. Livesey Luke

Chief Justice

16/12/81.

TEJAN. J.S.C.

In this appeal, I shall refer to the appellant herein as the "Appellant" and to the Respondents herein as the "Applicants".

By an originating summons dated 25th day of October, 1973 the applicants sought permission to register a deed of conveyance dated 30th March, 1967 and executed by the appellant. The applicants also applied for an order that the registration of the deed of conveyance should take effect as from the date of execution to wit 30th March, 1967.

The summons was supported by an affidavit to which was exhibited the deed of conveyance Exhibit "A". The summons was served on the appellant and the Administrator-General. The Appellant entered an appearance and filed an affidavit in opposition. An affidavit in reply was filed by the applicants. The Summons came before Short J. as he then was, and who after having heard the submissions and arguments on both sides, gave a ruling on 28th November, 1973. In the ruling the learned Judge said:—

"…… Learned Counsel for the Respondent quite properly made certain applications, I hereby give the following directions as to the further conduct of these proceedings in Court.

1. Both the applicant and the respondent may file and serve further evidence by affidavits within seven days from today and any affidavit in reply to be filed and served within another seven days.

[p.152]

2. The deponents should be available for cross-examination by the opposite party.

3. Further hearing is fixed in Court for the 18th of December, 1973."

When on the 18th December, 1973, the Summons came before the learned Judge, Mr. Donald Macauley one of the Counsel representing the applicant made certain submissions which Miss Taylor, representing the appellant opposed. The learned Judge gave a ruling, and the relevant portion reads:—

"To enable me to properly exercise my discretion for an extension of time, the applicant must satisfy me, amongst other things, that the deed of Conveyance dated 30th March 1967, was in fact a valid document executed as such by Grace Omorlake Johnston, as alleged in the originating summons. I therefore rule that the applicant should discharge that onus and be designated as "defendant". The plaintiff should therefore submit himself to cross-examination by Counsel for the defendant."

Further affidavits were sworn by the appellant and applicants and filed. The applicant and the appellant were cross-examined on their affidavits. In the end, the Judge found that "(1) The Plaintiff/Applicant's failure to register the Conveyance Ex. "A" was due wholly to his own fault, and (2) such failure to secure registration was inexcusable, and I so find after taking all the circumstances of the case into consideration. The permission sought is refused. The application is dismissed with costs to the Defendant/Respondent Costs to be taxed".

It is against this decision that the applicant appealed to the Court of Appeal on the following grounds:—

[p.153]

(i) That the learned trial Judge was wrong in law in that in adjudicating upon the question raised by the appellant's originating summons which was solely whether the appellant should be permitted to register his Conveyance out of time, he conducted a full scale trial, without pleadings, and thereby not only misconceived the purpose of the said summons, but also confused himself as to the sole issue before him by admitting irrelevant evidence as to whether the respondent had any claims to the property described in the conveyance which the respondent herself had executed.

(ii) By admitting irrelevant evidence as aforesaid the learned trial Judge erronously refused permission to the appellant to register the conveyance out of time.

(iii) The appellant having led reasonable evidence that failure to register the conveyance wit in time was due to the fact that the said conveyance was misplaced, the learned trial Judge was wrong in law in holding that the appellant's failure to register was inexcusable.

(iv) That having regard to the mischief which section 2 of the Registration of Instruments (Amendment) Act No. 6 of 1964, seeks to avoid, the learned trial Judge was in the circumstances wrong in law in refusing permission to register a validly executed conveyance.

[p.154]

At the Court of Appeal, Mr. N. D. Tejan-Cole for the applicants elected to abandon grounds 2 and 3 and argued grounds 1 and 4. After having heard the arguments of both Counsel for the appellants and applicants, the Court consisting of Harding J.S.C. (dissenting) S.B. Davies and Awunor-Renner J.J.S.C. upheld the appeal and made the following orders:

(i) The appeal is allowed.

(ii) Leave granted to the applicant to register Exhibit "A" the Deed of Conveyance executed by the respondent as Vendor to the applicant as purchaser on the 19th August 1966.

(iii) The said Conveyance is to incorporate Plan L.S. 514/66 as well as the new plan in the applicant's name and dated 15th October, 1973 signed by Mr. L.V. McEwen a licensed surveyor and counter-signed by Mr. R.E. Boston-Mammah on behalf of the Director of Surveys and Lands.

(iv) The Conveyance is to take effect regarding the said land as from 19th August, 1966. The applicant is to have the cost this appeal and of hearing before the High Court.

Costs to be taxed.

The appellant have now appealed to this Court against the decision of the majority of the Court of Appeal. Three grounds of appeal have been set out and these are:—

(i) That the learned Appeal Court was wrong in law and in fact in holding that failure on the respondent's part to register the document was excusable in the circumstances in accordance S.F. (a) (1) of the Registration of Instruments Act (Cap. 256) as amended.

(ii) That the learned Institutes of Appeal exceeded their jurisdiction under S. 2(l)(a) of the Registration of Instruments Act Cap. 256) as amended by ordering date to be inserted in the Conveyance and plan dated 15th October, 1973 to be used for the purposes of such registration.

(iii) The learned Appeal Court erred in law in interfering with the exercise of the discretion of discretion of the trial judge in disallowing the application of the respondent.

Before dealing with the grounds of appeal presented to this Court, I think, it is necessary to cast my mind back to the proceedings at the High Court. The summons before the High Court was made under Section 4 of Cap. 256 which enacts that “Every deed, contract, or conveyance, executed after the 9th day of February, 1857, so far as regards any land to be thereby affected, shall take effect, as against other deeds affecting the same land, from the date of its registration, and every power of attorney, unless for the institution or defence of judicial proceedings only, and executed in the Colony or Protectorate, shall take effect from the date of execution.

Provided that every such instrument shall take effect from the date of its execution, if registered within any of the periods limited for registration, as follows, that is to say:—

(a) if such instrument be executed in Freetown, if registered in Freetown within ten days from its date,

(b) ……..

(c) ……

Section 4 of Cap. 256 was amended by Act No. 6 of 1964. Section 2 subsection 2 of Act No. 6 of 1964 reads thus:—

[p.156]

“Every deed, contract or conveyance executed after the 1st day of June 1964, shall be void, so far as regards any land to be hereby affected, unless it is registered within the appropriate period limited for such registration under the proviso to subsection (1).

Provided that any person prejudiced by the avoidance of any transaction under the provisions of this subsection may apply by originating summons to a judge of the Supreme Court for permission to register after the expiration of the period limited for registration, and if the judge is satisfied that either— (i) The failure to register was not due to any fault of the applicant, or (ii) the applicant's failure to secure registration in time was, in all the circumstances of the case, excusable, he may permit the applicant to register out of time and the transaction in question shall be deemed never to have been avoided and shall take effect as against other transaction affecting the same land and from such date as shall seem to the judge to be just".

The summons in this case was supported by an affidavit sworn by the applicant. A copy of the conveyance Exhibit "A" was annexed to the affidavit. The appellant, after having entered an appearance to the summons, filed an affidavit in opposition. A further affidavit was then sworn by the applicant. When the summons came to be heard, an application was made on behalf of the appellant that the parties were to be cross-examined on their affidavits. The application was opposed, but the judge gave his ruling in the following terms:—

"…….Learned Counsel for the Respondent quite properly made certain applications as to the further conduct of these proceedings in Court.

1. Both the applicant and the respondent may file and serve further evidence by affidavits within seven days from today and any affidavits in reply to be filed and served within another seven days.

2. The deponent should be available for cross-examination by the opposite party.

3. Further hearing is fixed in Court for 18th of December 1973……."

The effect of this ruling transferred the hearing in Chambers into Court and in my view, it was a proper ruling made by the Judge.

On the 18th December 1973, when the matter came before the Court, further submissions and arguments were presented by both sides, and the ruling given by the judge on these submissions and arguments was so remarkable to the matter in issue that I must confess that I am bound to record it.

In short, the ruling reads thus:—

"To enable me to properly exercise my discretion for an extension of time, the applicant must satisfy me, amongst other things, that the Deed of Conveyance dated 30th March, 1967, was in fact a valid document executed as such by Grace Omorlake Johnston, as alleged in the originating summons. I therefore rule that the applicant should discharge that onus and be designated "The Plaintiff" and that Grace Omorlake Johnston be designated as defendant".

[p.158]

The applicant was then cross-examined on his affidavits, and it emerged from the cross-examination and the affidavits sworn by the applicant that the appellant executed the deed of conveyance on 19th August 1966 and that the signature of the appellant was witnessed by J.B. Jenkins Johnston, the brother of the appellant. The appellant himself did not sign the deed on that day because when the deed of conveyance was being executed, he was attending to another client in another part of his chambers and that on his return, the appellant and her brother had left. The next day, the appellant left for the United Kingdom. The applicant then decided to wait on her return to Sierra Leone before signing the deed of conveyance. While the appellant was in England, the applicant and the appellant corresponded with each other and in one of the letters of the appellant written to the applicant, she mentioned that she was exacting to arrive in Sierra Leone on 1st April, 1967. The appellant, according to his affidavit, unfortunately thought the appellant was to arrive in March, 1967. The result of this inadverence on the part of the applicant, caused him to get his clerk to alter the date of the deed of conveyance to 30th March, 1967. Since that time, the convenience was mislaid, and was eventually discovered beneath some old gazettes a few days before the application to register out of time as made.

The effect of this piece of evidence is that the applicant gave two reasons for his failure to register the deed of conveyance within the statutory prescribed period. The first reason was that he was waiting for the appellant to return to Sierra Leone in March, 1967, and the second reason that since he (the appellant) signed the deed of conveyance, the deed was mislead.

The appellant was also cross-examined on her affidavits. The cross-examination revealed that she was not in Sierra Leone on the 30th March. 1967. She did not dispute her signature on the deed of Conveyance. She also preferred not to say whether the signature on the deed was that of her brother or not.

She however, admitted that she signed a document on the 19th August, 1966 in the chambers of the applicant but she thought that the document concerned certain transactions with U.A.C.

But in one of her letters (Exhibit “F”) to the applicant she said “Suppose I had refused to convey to you until U.A.C. pays me my fees.” There are other unsatisfactory features about the judgment of trial judge which I do not consider necessary to narrate.

However, the affidavit on both sides and their evidence contained innumerable irrelevant matters, and because of these irrelevant matters, and principally as a result of the prolonged cross-examination of the deponents to the affidavits filed, I am certain that the hearing of the application before the learned judge might in the normal case would have been expected to take a few minutes. Moreover, the record reveals that the atmosphere of the Court was not congenial.

In considering whether permission was to be granted to the applicant to register the deed of conveyance, the trial judge took into account any irrelevant matters. At one stage in the judgment, the judge said:—

“I have to consider not only the applicant's affidavit in support but also the several affidavits and Exhibits filed in opposition together with the evidence given at the hearing which was concluded on 31st day of January, 1974, with a view to ascertaining whether failure to register the conveyance already referred to was not due to any fault of the applicant, or whether his failure to secure registration in time was in all the circumstances of the case excusable bearing in mind that there has been a lapse of time of about seven years from the alleged date of execution of the conveyance to the date of this application.”

[p.160]

Another passage in the judgment which I think, is of some significance is:—

“But Counsel urged that the paragraphs in her affidavit already referred to should be ignored as irrelevant and that the issue was not one of validity. Be that as it may. In other words of the proviso, I have got to be satisfied that either:

(1) The failure to register was not due to any fault of the applicant, or

(2) The applicant's failure to secure registration in time was, in all the circumstances of the case excusable.

Further in the judgment the judge said he was guided in the exercise of his discretion by the diction of Lord Sterndale, M.R. in the case of Donald Campbell and Co. v. Pollak (1927) A.C. at page 809 and he then cited the following passage:

“The discretion must be judicially exercised, and therefore there must be some grounds for it's exercise, for a discretion exercised on no grounds cannot be judicial. If, however, there be any grounds, the question of whether they are sufficient is entirely for the judge at the trial and this court (i.e. Court of Appeal) cannot interfere with his discretion.”

The learned trial judge then went on to recapitulate and chronicle what he termed the salient pieces of evidence which would assist him in the exercise of his discretion. He referred to paragraph 4 of the affidavit of the applicant dated 23rd day of March, 1973 in which the applicant deposed “That his failure to register the conveyance was because his clerk had mislaid it and that continuous but fruitless searches had been going on for some time until a few days ago when it was discovered amongst gazettes.

Learned Counsel for the Defendant/1st Respondent quite properly commented on the fact that the applicant's clerk neither swore to an affidavit nor did she give evidence to that effect. In his evidence, however, the Plaintiff/Applicant stated:—

“After I signed Exhibit “A” I told my clerk to put the date in and to substitute April for March because it was signed in April x x x x x” I therefore forgot all about it and when I asked about it three days later, my clerk told me that it was on my table. I told her it was not there.”

If the evidence of the plaintiff/applicant is true that the defendant/1st Respondent executed the conveyance Exhibit "A" which he backed as Solicitor on the 19th of August 1966. Then he had ten days thereafter within which to register it for the registration to be in compliance with Section 4 of the Registration of Instruments Act, Cap. 256 of the laws of Sierra Leone. He did not register it as any prudent Solicitor should have done. He kept if, according to his evidence about eight months later. His evidence is "I signed Exhibit "A" the conveyance on the 30th April, 1967." He is therefore caught by the Act and his explanation for not registering the conveyance Exhibit "A" within 10 days after its execution because it was mislaid soon after he (the plaintiff/applicant signed it (i.e. on the 30th of April, 1967) does not avail and is untenable. His explanation therefore fails. In the attestation clause of the conveyance Exhibit "A" it is stated that the conveyance was executed and witnessed on the 30th March, 1967. I find as a fact that the conveyance was neither executed nor witnessed on the 30th March, 1967. Nor indeed was it signed by the Plaintiff/Applicant on that date…… At all times material to the registration of the conveyance Exhibit "A" the Plaintiff/Applicant was practicing Solicitor ……. He is presumed to have known the requirements of the law and yet he did not have a plan of the property intended [p.162] to be conveyed by the conveyance Exhibit "A" prepared in his name for the purpose of registration under Section 12 of the Registration of Instruments Act Cap. 256 provides that:—

"Each instrument other than a will and each memorial before any certificate of Registry is placed thereon shall have on the margin or book, or annexed thereto, a plan of the land signed by the person who made it, and shall describe the land to which the same shall relate, and if possible, shall refer to the allotment of the land as numbered or described in the instrument of conveyance from the crown, if any."

Another passage in the judgment of the learned trial Judge is this:—

"Further, the first and only time that a property plan was prepared describing the property in issue as "property of Justice Rowland E.A. Harding" (Vide Ex. "F") was only on the 15th day of October, 1973 and countersigned by the Director of Surveys and Lands on the 19th day of October, 1973, that is to say, about five days before the originating summons herein filed. Why this inordinate delay if all was well with the soul of the conveyance by Grace Omorlake Johnston to Rowland E.A. Harding…… One would have thought that the immediate reaction of any reasonable person in a straight-forward and untained transaction ……."

[p.163]

I have endeavoured to the best of my capacity to refer in this my judgment to some of the passages which to my mind, greatly influenced the trial judge to exercise his discretion in the manner he did. I have refrained from mentioning the judgment of Harding J.S.C. since Counsel for the appellant, apart from briefly mentioning in his case filed that there was also a dissenting judgment read by Cornelius Harding J.S.C. upholding the decision of the High Court, perhaps for reasons known only to himself, concentrated his argument in the defence of the judgment of the High Court.

It is at this stage necessary to examine the well-established principles which entitle an appellate tribunal to interfere with the exercise of discretion of a trial judge.

Mr. Metzger submitted that a Court of Appeal had no power to interfere with the discretion of a judge but conceded that the court can do so if it is satisfied that the exercise of such a discretion was based on a mistake of law or misapprehension of facts. To this, I may also add that an appellate tribunal has the power to review a judge's exercise of his discretion and set it aside if it is satisfied that in the exercise of such a discretion, the judge took into account irrelevant matters or where such an exercise of discretion would lead to an injustice. An appeal is by way of re-hearing and a Court of Appeal has to consider the materials which were before the judge, and the additional materials, if any, before the court itself, and then makes up its own mind, carefully weighing and considering the judgment appealed against, and overruling it if, on full consideration, it comes to the conclusion that such judgment was wrong. Where the question is as to the inferences to be drawn from evidence admitted to be truthful, the Court of Appeal is in as good a position to decide as the court below. Lord Wright in Evans v. Batham (1937) 2 All E.R. stated the law clearly at page 654 when he said:

[p.164]

“It is clear that the Court of Appeal should not interfere with the discretion of a judge acting within his jurisdiction, unless the court is clearly satisfied that he was wrong. But the court is not entitled simply to say that, if the judge had jurisdiction, and had all the facts before him, the Court of Appeal cannot review his order, unless he is shown to have applied a wrong principle. The court must, if necessary, examine anew the relevant fact and circumstances, in order to exercise by way of review a discretion which may reverse or vary the order”.

In the same case at page 650 Lord Atkin said:—

“Appellate jurisdiction is always statutory, there is in the statute no restriction upon the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal, and the appellate court, in the exercise of its appellate power, is no doubt entirely justified in saying that normally it will not interfere with the exercise of the judge's discretion except on grounds of law, yet, if it sees that, on other grounds the decision will result in injustice being done, it has, both the power and duty to remedy it. The decision in Donald Campbell Co. v. Pollak (1927) A.C. 732 was based upon the fact that an appeal in the matter of costs was expressly excluded from the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal by the Act and rules.”

At page 649 of the same case, Lord Atkin said:—

[p.165]

“For my part; I am not prepared to accept the view that there is in law any presumption that anyone, even a judge, knows all the rules and orders of the Supreme Court. The fact is that there is not, and never has been, a presumption that everyone knows the law. There is a rule that ignorance of the law does not excuse, a maximum of very different scoops and application.”

With regards to questions of fact, the rule is that where the trial judge's estimate of the witness as a man and his assessment of his credit enter substantially into the process of arriving at his finding of fact, the appellate court ought not as a rule to disturb such a finding. But once findings of fact pens beyond simple facts testimony and becomes inferential in character, the Court of Appeal is at no particular disadvantage compared with the trial judge, and may reverse has conclusions, though it will give due weight to his views. In short, distinction must be drawn between the perception and evaluation of facts. See S.S. Hortestroon v. S.S. Sagaporack; S.S. Horhestroom v. S.S. Durham Castle (1927) A.C. 37 at 47; See Beemax v. Austin Motor Co Ltd. (1955) 1 A.E.R. 326.

In the case of Egerten v. Jones (1939) 3 All E.R. 889 at 891, Sir Wilfred Greene M.R. said:—

"It has been contended that this is a case where the judge has exercised his discretion and that this Court should not interfere with that exercise except according to well know principles. Which, it is said, do not operate on the present case. It is quite certain, on the other hand, that the discretion of the Court is not to fettered by rules. The discretion [p.166] is given by statutes, and must be exercised according to the circumstances of each particular case. On the other hand, it is equally true that, when a matter involving discretion comes before a judge, there must be in every case a number or considerations which he ought to have in mind for the purpose of enabling him to exercise his discretion. If it appears that he has taken into consideration something which he ought not to have taken into consideration, or has omitted to take into consideration something which he ought to have taken into consideration, or if on all the facts this Court is satisfied and convinced that the discretion has been wrongly exercised, it is the duty of this Court to interfere."

In the case of Maxwell v. Keun (1927) All E.R. Rep. at page 338, Arkin L.J. said:—

"The other point made by the defendants was that this was a discretionary order and that the Court of Appeal ought not to interfere with the discretion of the learned Judge. I quite agree that the Court ought to be very slow, indeed, to interfere with the discretion of the learned Judge on such a question as an adjournment of a trial, and it very seldom does do so; so on the other hand, if it appears that the result of the order made below is to defeat the rights of the parties altogether and to do that which the Court of Appeal is satisfied would be an injustice to one or other of the parties, then the Court has the power to review such an order, and it is, to my mind, its duty to do so."

[p.167]

Now, the application was made under Cap. 256 as amended by Act No. 6 of 1964. It was a simple application normally made ex parte. The applicant made the application inter partes bona fide with the sole intention that the application was not tainted or made males fides. He gave two reasons for his failure to register the conveyance within the prescribed statutory period. The first reason was no doubt that the applicant was under a misapprehension that he was to sign Exhibit "A" in the presence of the appellant. He was not able to do so because when he returned to his chambers on the 19th August, 1966. The appellant and the witness had already signed and gone away. At the time the applicant was engaged with another of his clients in another room in his chambers. The next day the appellant left for the United Kingdom, Still under the misapprehension that he was to sign Exhibit "A" in the presence of the appellant, he wrote to the appellant to find out when she was returning to Sierra Leone. The appellant wrote to say that she would arrive in Sierra Leone on the 1st day of April, 1967. The applicant changed the date of execution of Exhibit "A" to the 30th March, 1967. This was due obviously to the fact that he misunderstood the appellant or that he had forgotten the date which the appellant said she would arrive in Sierra Leone. It therefore follows that the failure of the applicant to register Exhibit "A" within the prescribed time was due to a mistake of the law, since execution of Ex. "A" had been completed when the appellant signed. It had been suggested that the applicant ought to have known the law, being a solicitor. In Evans v. Bartham (Supra) Lord Arkin made it plain that there was no presumption in law, that anyone, even a judge knew all the rules and orders of the Supreme Court, and that the fact was, that there was not, and never had been a presumption that, everyone knows the law. Obviously this was what happened in this matter.

Since the facts in this case are mainly inferential, and nowhere in the judgment of the learned trial judge that a positive finding of fact was made, the applicant explained that after he had signed Exhibit "A" on the 30th March, 1967, the Conveyance was mislaid, and that it was fund beneath some old gazettes shortly before the application to register was made. Surely, one can only say that the applicant was inadvertent or careless. One can even go so far as to say that he was negligent. But is inadvertence, carelessness or negligence not excusable? My answer is that they are excusable. The case of In ReHeathstar Properties Ltd. (1966) 1 W.L.R. 933 encourages me to the right approach to the present case, even though, it does not in terms, perhaps, absolute cover this case but it is quite plain that the reason upon which it is based does. This case concerns the Company Act, 1948, and the provisions of the Act are almost similar to the provisions of Cap 256 (as amended by Act No. 6 of 1964).

Section 95 of the Companies Act, 1948 stipulates that:

"(1) Subject to the provisions of this Part of this Act, every charge created after the fixed date by a Company registered in England and being a charge to which this section applies shall, so far as any security on the Company's property or undertaking is conferred thereby, be void against the liquidator and any creditor of the Company, unless the prescribed particulars of the charge together with the instruments, if any, by which the charge is created or evidenced, are delivered to or received by the registrar of companies for registration in manner required by this Act within 21 days after the date of its creation but without prejudice to any contract [p.169] or obligation for repayment of the money thereby secured, and when a charge becomes void under this section the money secured thereby shall immediately becomes payable……."

"Section 101 enacts that "The Court, on being satisfied the omission to register the charge within the time required by this Act or that the omission or mis-statement or any particular with respect to any such charge or in a memorandum of satisfaction was accidental, or due to inadvertence or to some other sufficient cause, or is not of a nature to prejudice the position of creditors or shareholders of the company, or that on any other grounds it is just and equitable to grant relief, may, on the application of the Company or any person interested, and on such terms and conditions as seem to the Court just and expedient, order that the time for registration shall be extended, or, as the case may be, that the omission or mis-statement shall be rectified."

In Re Heathstar Properties Ltd. (Supra) an application was made by summons for an order for extension of time to register. Several affidavits were sworn by the parties, and an application to cross-examine the deponents on their respective affidavits, was granted. The applicant say that the failure to register particulars of the charge within the prescribed 21 days of its creation was due to inadvertence. It was suggested that the Court could not properly perform its function under section 101 where the validity of the charge was in issue. Plowman J. said that he agreed that this was not the occasion for deciding the validity of the charge but did not accept the argument that he ought not to adjudicate upon the summons. He further said that the validity of the charge did not enter into the statutory pattern discernible in Part III of the Act of 1948. He said the protection of registration under section 95 of the Act of 1948 was conferred by delivering to the Registrar of Companies certain prescribed particulars of the charge together with the instrument, if any, by which it was created or evidenced.

With regard to section 101, Plowman J. said:—

"There is no reference there to the Court being satisfied as to the validity of the charge, and it would have been very simple to insert such a reference if it had been intended. What section 101 does is to give the Court power in certain circumstances to substitute its own time-limit for the time-limit in section 95, but apart from that it leaves section 95 to operate as is the application to register had been made in time."

Some support for the above proposition can be found in IN ReCunard Steamship Co. Ltd. (1908) W.N. 160.

In Heathstar Properties Ltd. case, it was submitted that the question there was not whether there was a charge, but whether there was a registrable charge, and Plowman J. said that it made no difference in law to the power of the Court to entertain an application for extension of time whether the issue was the existence of the charge or its registrability. He then said:—

"The question then arises whether the applicants have satisfied me that the omission to register it within 21 days was due to inadvertence. On the assumption, that it was a charge, the omission to register it appears to have been inadvertent so far as the respondents were concerned, because Mr. Greenman, their Solicitor, took the view that it did not require registration but I take the relevant inadvertence to be the inadvertence of Veitch and, possibly, also of Armstrong ……. The question then arises whether I should now exercise my discretion by extending the time for registration, or by refusing to do so. It seems to me that any risk of injustice to the respondents by allowing registration is far less than the risk of injustice to the applicants by refusing to do so, and propose, therefore, to extend the time for 10 days from the date of the order."

In the present case, the relevant period within which Exh. "A"should have been registered, is ten days from the date of execution which was on the 19th August, 1966. I say that the execution of the Conveyance was on the 19th August, 1966 because there was evidence that a conveyance was produced and that the appellant signed a document which she thought was an agreement between herself and Messrs. U.A.C. Ltd. I am not in the least concerned about what she thought she signed. The trial Judge found as a fact that the conveyance was not executed on the 30th day of March, 1967, but he said nothing about the document which the appellant signed on the 19th August, 1966. The applicant's reason for not registering the conveyance within the prescribed time was merely a misapprehension of the law, in my view, was excusable, It was argued that because of the status of the applicant, he ought to have known the law, but Lord Atkin said in Evans v. Bartham (1937) (Supra) that there is no presumption in law that anyone, even a judge, knows all the rules and orders of the Supreme Court, and the fact is that there is not, and has never been a presumption that everyone knows the law.

This Court was taken in some detail through the evidence of the applicant and his affidavit, The Court's attention was drawn to various inconsistencies. I have carefully considered the discrepancies brought to the notice of this Court but have no reason to disagree with regard to the majority decision of the Court of Appeal with regard to the inconsistencies. Any inconsistency in the evidence of the applicant was due to mere forgetfulness and was not deliberate.

With regard to the evidence of the appellant and her affidavits, there are many unsatisfactory features about them. This Court is not a court of morals. Unfortunately, when domestic relations begin to deteriorate, there are basis conflicts which develop. The woman feels that the man is inconsiderate, crude and that his tact and finesse have entirely vanished, and that the day [p.172] of courtship have ruthlessly thrust on one side. The man feels that the woman is selfish, cold blooded, and interested primaril in financial matters. It is an unfortunate situation but this Court is not called upon to adjudicate upon this unfortunate situation.

Throughout the judgment of the learned trial Judge, it was apparent that he was solely concerned with the “soul” of the conveyance and the immediate re-action of any reasonable person in a straight-forward and untained transaction, a matter to which he had no business to be concerned with. In his dissenting Judgment, Harding, J.S.C. also fell into error. He said:—

“In my view the issues before the learned trial judge were (1) execution of the Deed of Conveyance sought to be registered and (2) the reason for the delay in registering it.”

He then referrers to the evidence and said:—

“It is clear from the foregoing that the respondent did not sign the purported Deed of Conveyance on 30th day of March, 1967. Whatever deed or document she signed must have been on 19th August, 1966. The appellant cannot say that it was on the 30th day of March, 1967 that the Deed of Conveyance was executed as he was not the party conveying; indeed it was not necessary for him to have signed the Deed of Conveyance at all. The trial Judge found “as a fact that the Conveyance was neither executed or witnessed on the 30th March 1967” and I am in agreement with him on this.”

There was the evidence that the appellant signed a document on the 30th day of March, 1967. There was also evidence that the appellant, through her Solicitor the appellant made an arrangement with Messrs. U.A.C. for a loan. The appellant never met any of [p.173] the official of Messrs U.A.C. until when at the last stage of the transaction she spoke to Mr. Talabi Coker an official of Messrs. U.A.C. The question whether the applicant collected rent on behalf of the appellant or whether he gave evidence on behalf of the appellant before the Master and Registrar, to my mind has nothing to do with the application before the Court. According to the evidence, the appellant who was an estate agent was asked to bid at an auction on behalf of the applicant. Having found herself in a quandry, she deposed to a fantastic story that she, being a literate woman, that she did not read what she signed. My view is that she said this to surmount the difficulties with which she was entangled. The statute under which the application was made, does not stipulate property rights and the manner in which the learned trial judge approached the matter, is in my opinion, to frustrate the intention of the Legislature.

Lord Denning M.R. in Ward v. James (1965) 1 A.E.R. 563 said:

"This Court can, and will interfere if it is satisfied that the Judge was wrong. Thus it will interfere if it can see that the Judge has given no weight (or no sufficient weight) to those considerations which ought to have weighed with him…….. It sometimes happen that the Judge has given reasons which enable this Court to know the considerations which have weigh with him; but even if he has given no reasons, the Court may inter from the way has decided, that the judge must have gone wrong in one respect or the other, and will thereupon reverse the decision."

It is now necessary to examine what actually influenced the mind of the learned trial judge in this case. The judge said that he must be satisfied of the validity of the Conveyance; that the applicant being a Solicitor ought to know the law, that the [p.174] appellant could not have executed the conveyance of the 30th March, 1967 even though there was impeccable evidence that she signed a document on the 19th day of August, 1966. Moreover the learned judge failed to give a positive finding of fact. He also failed to come to a conclusion with regard to inferential facts.

The learned judge; as it is apparent from the record, had in mind the validity of the conveyance even though the application was …… missing permission to register a conveyance. Of course, the validity of a conveyance can be contested but the forum under which it can be contested is another matter, and surely not under Cap. 256. These are irrelevant matters which the learned Judge ought not to have taken into consideration. Even when Counsel for the applicant called the Judge's attention to the irrelevant matters the learned Judge dismissed him out of hand by the words "Be that as it may" which in my view, demonstrated the attitude of the learned Judge that he did not care one way or the other whether the evidence and affidavits sworn by the appellant were irrelevant or not. The dissenting judgment of Harding J.S.C. compromised the judgment of the trial Judge. After having considered all the irrelevant matters which ought not to have been considered, he said that "the respondent cannot be expected to sit idly by and allow the application to register an instrument which purports to convey property which she alleges belongs to her after having been made a respondent to such an application."

If the appellant alleged that the property in question belonged to her she had every right to challenge ownership but not under Cap. 256. There are many avenues open to her to contest the ownership of the property, and I am certain, after having re……..missing carefully the statute under which the application was made, no contest of ownership can be made under it.

I now turn to the date of conveyance. It was alleged that the appellant could not have executed the conveyance on the 30th March, 1967. I entirely agree with this allegation. But there [p.175] was evidence that the execution of the conveyance was on the 19 August, 1966. Under a misapprehension of law which is excusable in the circumstances of the case, the applicant gave not only a reasonable explanation but also an excusable explanation having regard to the law pertaining to matters of this kind.

As far back as 1584 in Goddard's case (1584) 76 E.R. 396 it was well established that “a date is not of the substance of a deed; for though it want a date, or have a false or impossible date, yet the deed is good.

As was pointed out in the majority judgment of the Court of Appeal, it is stated in Halsbury's Laws of England 4th Edition Volume 12 at paragraph 1356 that:—

“A deed takes effect from the time of its delivery, and not from the day it is therein stated to have been made or executed, and a party to a deed is not estopped by any statement in the deed as to the day or time of its execution from proving that it was delivered at some other time……. A deed may be good although it has no date or bears false or an “impossible date.

At paragraph 1486 of the same Volume is to be found that:

"Extrinsic evidence is admissible to prove the date of delivering of a deed, or of the execution of any other written instrument. A deed takes effect from delivery, and any other instrument from the date of the execution, although the date expressed in the instrument is prima facie to be taken as the date of delivery or execution, this does not include extrinsic evidence of the actual date, and the actual date when proved prevails in case of variance, over the apparent date……"

[p.176]

The above profound enunciation of the law found support in Clayton's case (1585) 77 E.R. at 48 and in Browne v. Burton (1847) 5 Dow & L at page 289, and my researches on the matter have led me to believe that the law has never been changed.

In the present appeal, there was evidence before the learned trial Judge that the conveyance sought to be registered, was executed by the appellant on the 19th day of August, 1966. The appellant said that she did not execute any conveyance on that date but she signed a document which she thought was a transaction concerning Messrs. U.A.C. Ltd. Yet in one of her letters to the applicant she said “Suppose I had refused to convey to you until U.A.C. pays me my fees.” This letter which is Exhibit “F” was dated 28th October, 1966. The applicant gave a reasonable explanation for his failure to register within ten days and thereafter. He was under a misapprehension of the law. He even said that the appellant was due in Sierra Leone in March, 1967 when the appellant's letter clearly stated in her letter that it was in April, 1967 she was expected to arrive in Sierra Leone,

The applicant changed the date of the conveyance to 30th March, 1967 in the light of his misapprehension of law and facts. These to my mind, are excusable reason. Even Lord Atkin in Evans v. Bertham (Supra) said:

"That there is in any presumption that anyone, even a judge, knows all the rules and orders of the Supreme Court. The fact is, there is not, and never has been a presumption that everyone knows the law……"

A person entrusted with a discretion must, so to speak, direct himself properly in law. He must call his own attention to the matters which he is bound to consider. He must exclude from his consideration matters which are irrelevant to what he has to consider. It appears to me this was exactly what the learned trial judge failed to do in the present case.

[p.177]

I agree with the findings of fact of the majority decision of the Court of Appeal "that the circumstances of this particular case are such as to render the applicant's failure to register the said conveyance within the statutory period of ten days was excusable and "that the true date of the execution of the Deed of Conveyance was 19th August, 1966.

For reasons I have stated, the appeal should be dismissed and that the applicant be granted leave to register the Deed of Conveyance Exhibit "A" and that the Conveyance is to take effect as from the 19th day of August, 1966.

Costs to the applicant.

(Sgd.) Hon. Mr. Justice O.B.R. Tejan

Justice of the Supreme Court

DURING. J.A.

I have had the opportunity of reading in Draft the Judgment of my learned brother The Chief Justice and also that of my teamed brother Tejan, J.S.C.

In this Appeal I shall refer to the Appellant herein as the "Appellant" and the Respondents herein as "the Applicant".

The Applicant applied in the High Court for leave to register out of time a Deed of Conveyance dated 30th day or March. 1967, which was admitted in evidence and marked "A".

My Lords have already referred to the section under which the Application was made and I need not write out in my Judgment the text.

The Applicant failed to register the Deed within 10 days from the execution of the same. My learned brothers have referred to the Affidavits filed by the Applicant and the Appellants.

[p.178]

The Applicant had to satisfy the Judge that either

(i) that the failure to register was not due to any fault of the applicant or

(ii) failure to secure registration in time was in all the circumstances of the case excusable.

The learned Judge in the High Court found that the failure to register was due to the fault of the applicant and that failure to secure registration in time was in all the circumstances of the case inexcusable.

The learned Judge made a finding that the Conveyance was not executed on the date in the Conveyance, that is 30th of March, 1967 but failed to make a finding as to the date the Deed was executed when there was evidence before him by both the Applicant and the Appellant that the Deed was executed on the 19th of August, 1966.

In my opinion the learned Trial Judge ought not to have considered the pieces of evidence in the Affidavits filed by the Appellant and her evidence viva voce in support of her contention that when she signed Exhibit "A" she did not know the nature o£ the document she was signing - the plea of non est factum. As my learned brother Tejan J.S.O. has stated in his Judgment such a plea should be raised in another form. It was not for the learned Judge in considering whether or not he should grant leave to register out of time for him to find out the circumstances under which the document was signed by the Appellant.

In my view the learned Judge was wrong in treating the matter before him as an Action. Indeed an Action could be brought by originating summons or a Writ of Summons. What was before the Judge was not an action but an application to register the document out of time. An action presuppose a claim. The Applicant did not bring a claim against the Appeal.

Although the learned trial Judge said that the question of validity of the document was not to be considered by him, the whole tenor of his Judgment shows that he thought the document was not genuine. Reading the Judgment of Harding J.A. as he then was it could also clearly be seen that why he would refuse leave to register the document was because he thought the purported execution was not genuine.

The Applicant gave his reason why he did not register within the prescribed period which was that he was of the opinion that he could not register it until he and the Vendor had executed the document.

The evidence before the Court disclose that the reason why the Applicant failed to register within time was because of misapprehension of the law and this in my view is excusable in all the circumstances of the case.

No one is presumed to know the law not even Judges. The maxim ignorance of the law is no excuse does not mean that everyone is presumed to know the law.

In my view the order of the Court of Appeal that the Conveyance is to incorporate plan L,S.514/66 as well as the plan in the Applicant's name now dated 15th October. 1975 signed by Mr. L.V. McEwen a licensed Surveyor and countersigned by Mr. R.E. Boston-Mammah on behalf of the Director of Surveys and Lands ought not to have been made.

I am in entire agreement with the well considered reasoning and conclusion of my learned brother Tejan J.S.C. I will dismiss the appeal and grant leave to the Applicant to register the Deed of Conveyance Exhibit “A”, the Deed of Conveyance to take effect as from 19th day of August, 1966 and award costs to the Applicant,

WARNE J.A.

I have had the opportunity of reading the Judgments of the learned Chief Justice and my learned brother Tejan, J.S.C. I am satisfied that that of the learned Chief Justice is all embracing and there is nothing more I can add to it. I entirely agree with the Judgment and would also allow the appeal. I accordingly allow it and restore the orders of the High Court.

CONSTANT S. DAVIES J.A.

I have had the pleasure and privilege of reading the erudite judgments of the learned Chief Justice and my learned brother O.B.R. Tejan J.S.C. and would like briefly to state my views on this matter.

Both judgments have admirably traced the course of this case from the High Court to this Court and therefore I do not find it necessary to do so again.

As I see it the duty of the learned trial judge on the application before him was to establish (1) the date of execution of the Conveyance; (2) the reason for the failure to register within 10 days of that date and (3) to decide whether the failure to register was or was not due to the fault of the applicant or whether in all the circumstances the failure to register was excusable or not. This done he could then exercise his discretion Consequently I view the introduction of the proceedings designed to establish the validity of the deed as unfortunate in that in spite of the fact that the learned trial judge did say in his final ruling that the validity of the deed was not relevant to the issue and that he had made no specific finding on the validity of the deed he not only allowed himself to be influenced by irrelevant evidence introduced during those proceedings but also ignored such as would have assisted him in discharging his duty as already outlined.

Although the reason for the proceedings was irrelevant yet pertinent and useful evidence did emerge from them.

It was from those proceeding that the learned trial judge could have, instead of making a negative finding as he did, found the 19th August, 1966 as the Court of Appeal, the learned C.J. and O.B.R. Tejan J .S.C. found as the date of execution of the deed.

It was from the evidence in those proceedings that the reason for non-registration within 10 days of the 6th August, 1966 emerged.

I agree with the learned Chief Justice that the Court of Appeal, having established the date of execution. considered a reason for the failure to register that· was not in relation to that date.

The reason for failure to register within 10 days from 6th August, 1966 as disclosed by the evidence was that the applicant in the High Court felt that the deed was not yet ripe for registration as both parties had not by then signed the document. This misapprehension in my opinion must have been induced by the testimunium clause in the deed. Considering all the circumstances and the dictum of Lord Aitkin at p.649 of the report in Evans & Bartham cited by my brother Tejan J.S.C I would say the reason was excusable.

I would therefore dismiss the appeal and grant leave to the Respondents to register the deed Ex. “A” to take effect as from 19th August, 1966.

C.F. Margai for the Appellant

A K Barber for the State

JUDGMENT DELIVERED THIS 31ST DAY OF MARCH, 1981

A. AWUNOR-RENNER, J.S.C.

The Appellant was convicted at the Bo High Court on the 8th December, 1979, before Williams J. and a jury for the murder of one Marie Karimu on the 30th day of June 1979 at Jahadama Village in the Bo District and sentenced to death. It is against his conviction that he has now appealed to this Court after first appealing to the Court of Appeal on the following grounds:—

(a) That the presiding judges of the Court of Appeal or Sierra Leone in the above ease Erred in law by holding that the charge of murder was proven as required by law and Hence up-held the conviction and sentence.

(b) The Presiding judges of the Court of" Appeal in the said case erred in law by holding that the learned trial judge in his summing-up to the jury adequately directed them as to the ingredients required by law to constitute the offence of murder thus justifying the conviction and sentence.

(c) The presiding judges of the Court of Appeal erred in law by holding that the learned trial judge adequately or at all put forward to the jury the case for the defense.

(d) That judgment is unreasonable.

The material facts of this case are as follows: On the day of the alleged incident the deceased with some other people including one Moilona Sandi were lying on hammocks in Moilena Sandi's verandah when the appellant appeared and the deceased complained to him that his ., sheep had on several occasions eaten vegetables which she had planted. As soon as the deceased said this the appellant hissed at her, took off her headtie and flung it on the ground accompanied by the following remarks “All this will finish today”. Soon thereafter one Foday Ansumana said in evidence that he saw the deceased walk past the house towards the back of the kitchen in the compound and that when he eventually went to investigate, he saw the deceased lying on the ground. The deceased then said "Mansaray you have killed me". "Mansaray you killed me". As words were being uttered by the deceased he saw the appellant running into the bush with a gun.

The Appellant made statements to the Police upon which he relied. I think it desirable at this stage to reproduce the statements in full. In his first statement to the Police the appellant had this to say—

“On Saturday 30th June 1979 at about 2.00 p.m. I was returning to the village from my mining acre. On arrival at the Coffee/Banana Farm by Jahadam. New Town I say a monkey sitting on the coffee tree towards the village. I shot the monkey with my gun. As I fired at the monkey, [p.3] I heard the deceased Mari Karimu shouting “Pa Mansaray you have killed me”. I rushed there and met the deceased lying down under a kola Nut tree just at the back of a toilet. I saw a bullet wound on the left side of the deceased with blood flowing out of there. I fell on her and tried to wipe the blood from her side. I beard the villagers say that they were killing me if they saw me. I became afraid and ran through the Coffee farm to the old town where I live. I went to the house of Pa Morlai Koroma. I hid the gun underneath his bed and Fled into the bush. Pa Morlai was not at the At that time only Fatu Samura was in the house. I have known Marie Karimu the deceased for over twenty-years. I have never had a misunderstanding with her. I know the husband of the deceased. I have not had any misunderstanding with him. I own the single barrel shot gun I used to shoot the deceased. The said gun is licensed for the current year. This is the gun it is a single barrel shot gun No. YB 10101 B.S.A. This is the license for the said gun. It is No. 6641 dated 2nd February, 1970. The monkey I shot fell dead. I saw the monkey not too far from Marie the deceased. This is the third time I am shooting at monkeys in that coffee farm. I used to sell the said monkeys at Le.3 in the village. This is all.”

[p.4]

The Second statement from the appellant reads as follows:—

“Today Tuesday 3rd July 1979, I led the C.I.D. men to the Scene at Jahadama Village. At Johadamn Village I led the Police to the place. I stood under a Kola nut tree behind a kitchen when I fired at the money I saw. I also led the police where I saw the monkey and fired at it. Observations were made on all the trees and the leaves around where I fired -at the monkey for bullet marks and scratches but none was seen. The area was brushed in search of monkeys but it was not see Search was also made for the empty cartridge shell but it was not found where I dropped It. Measurements of the various points were taken by the police from the Scene. I led the police to Jahadama Old town and showed the police where I hid the gun underneath the bed of Mr. Morlai Koroma. There was no blood at the spot I shot the monkey except human excrete. I have killed about three monkeys in the same coffee farm by the village One of these monkeys I gave to one Sahr Kono of Jahadama Old Town. The second monkey I killed was sold by one Alpha whose surname I do not know formerly of Jahadama Village but now of an unknown address in Bo. The third I gave to Alpha and Sahr Kono to brush my swamp. I had no intention to shoot the deceased because I had no dispute with her or any of per relatives. I lived on friendly terms with every body in the village. This is all.”

[p.5]

Finally the medical evidence established that the deceased died from gun shot wounds.

I must say at this stage that although several grounds of appeal were argued by Counsel for the appellant I only propose to deal with those contentions which in my view raise points of substance and the first of such points deals with the 1earned trial judge's direction on the question of “malice aforethought”. Counsel for the appellant referred this Court to several passages in the summing up and also complained that the learned trial judge interpreted the supposed quarre1 to mean malice aforethought It. One of such passages complained of in the summing up is in these terms:—

“The killing must have been done with “malice aforethought”, Malice which can be expressed or implied is an intention to kill a human being which is express malice or to do grievous bodily harm to him or to do an act which the accused knows or must as reasonable person to taken to know that such and act is likely to kill or cause grievous bodily harm to a human being under the President’s peace. From such acts malice can be implied.”

The learned trial judge having explained “malice aforethought” to the jury in the above terms continued in various portions of his summing up to deal with the question of “malice” and “malice aforethought”.

Let me just quote a few of such references from his summing-up.

[p.6]

(1) I want to say to you that firstly, if on the evidence you are not convinced that there was any malice either expressed or implied then you cannot return a verdict of murder, it must be a verdict of not guilty of murder it is only if on the evidence you are satisfied that there is some form of malice either expressed or implied that you can possibly return a verdict of guilty of murder as I have said if you are not convinced that the to is any malice then the verdict of manslaughter is open to you depending on how you see the rest of the evidence.

(2) "One of them is P.W.1 who told you about the quarrel between the accused And the deceased. It is for you to say whether such a quarrel can amount to and can import malice on the part of the accused. The quarrel was that the woman told the accused that his sheep had eaten up the vegetables in her garden three times. By his reaction the accused hissed to her, snatched her head-tie from he head threw it away and said to her “All this will finish today”. Does malice, in your opinion members of the jury? If it does then that is evidence for murder. But if in your opinion that quarrel cannot amount to “malice aforethought” either expressed or implied then your verdict on the charge of murder must be not guilty.”

[p.7]

(3) “Therefore you must be perfectly satisfied that it was the accused who killed the unfortunate woman and at the time of the killing the accused had malice expressed or implied. If you so find on the evidence for the prosecution then have no hesitation in coming back with a verdict of guilty of murder.”

(4) “He could be guilty of murder if the quarrel between the accused and the deceased can amount to malice. If you are not satisfied that such a quarrel can amount to malice then he could be guilty of manslaughter.”

Let me now give the definition of malice as contained in ARCHIBOLD 35th Edition at page 916 at paragraphs 2484, and 2487.

“To amount to murder the killing must be committed with "malice aforethought". Aforethought does not necessarily mean premeditation, but it implies foresight that death would or might be caused. It "Express malice may be said to mean either of the following states of mind preceding or co-existing with the act or omission by which death is caused and it may exist where the act is unpremeditated:—

(a) An intention to cause the death of or grievous bodily harm to, any person whether such person is the person killed or not:

(b) Knowledge that the act which causes death, will probably cause the death of, or grievous bodily harm to some person, whether such person is the person killed or not, although such knowledge is accompanied by indifference [p.8] whether death or grievous bodily harm is caused or, not, or by a wish that it may or by a wish that it may be caused.”

“Implied Malice in many cases where no Malice is expressed or openly indicated the law will imply it from a deliberate cruel act committed by one person against another. It may be implied where death occurs as a result of a voluntary act of the prison which was (1) intentional and (2) unprovoked.”

This general principle as regards “Malice aforethought” either express or implied referred to supra are to be found in various decisions. I propose at this stage to refer to a few. In the Case of R. V. DOHERTY 16 Cox at page 306 and 307 Stephen J. had this to say - J. had this to say—

“Murder is unlawful homicide with malice aforethought”. Manslaughter is unlawful homicide without malice aforethought”' “first as to the term, “aforethought it’s” meaning has been laid down clearly by Holt C.J. who in REG. v MAWGRIDGE says “He that doth a cruel act voluntary doth it of malice “prepensed” which is the same as “aforethought”. “Therefore does not necessarily imply premeditation but it implies intention which must necessarily precede the act intended. What then is the intention necessary to constitute murder. Several intentions must necessarily have this effect; but I need mention only two in this ease, namely, an intention to kill and an intention to do grievous bodily harm.”

Also in the case of REGINA v VICKERS reported in (1957) 2 Q.B,D, at page 664 at para. 670 Lord Goddard O.J. had this to say—

[p.9]

“Murder is of course killing with “malice aforethought” but “malice aforethought” is a term of art. It has always been defined in English Law as either an express intention to kill or implied where by a voluntary act the accused intended to cause grievous bodily harm to the victim and the victim died as a result.”

See also the case of YEBEMA v REGINA reported in 1957-1960 African Law Reports Sierra Leone Series at page 235.

In the case of WOOLMINGTON v D.P.P. reported in 25 Cr. App., R. at page 95 The Lord Chancellor had this to say

“When dealing with. a murder case the Crown must prove:—

(a) Death as a result of a voluntary act of accused and,

(b) Malice of the accused,

It may prove malice either expressly or by implication. For malice may be implied where death occurs as a result of a voluntary act of the accused which is either (1) intentional, and (2) unprovoked.”

In the case of SMITH v D.P.P. 1961 A.C. at page 290 it was held that —

“Grievous bodily harm should be given its ordinary and natural meaning of real serious bodily harm and that it was immaterial what the accused in fact contemplated as the probable result of his actions provided he was in law responsible for his actions; that the sole question was whether the unlawful and voluntary act was of such a kind that grievous [p.10] bodily harm was the natural and probable result; and that the only test of this was what the Ordinary reasonable man would, in all the circumstances have contemplated as the natural and probable result.”

Finally in the unreported case of SAHR M'BAMBAY & OTHERS v THE STATE Court of Appeal 31/74 Livesey Luke J.S.C. in dealing with the question of “malice aforethought” which was one of the grounds of appeal raised in that case and after reviewing a number of authorities had this to say—

“It is significant that the position in England since 1967 is that the test of an accused's intention is the subjective one introduced by the Criminal Justices Act 1967 Sec. 8. Of course this statute has no application in this country. In our experience and on the basis of decided cases available to us the Courts in Sierra Leone have always applied the objective test and that in our opinion is the test applicable in Sierra Leone.”

He further went on to say that—

“Applying the authorities cited above “malice aforethought involves the following states of mind:—

(1) Death caused in resisting lawful arrest by an officer of justice.

(2) Death caused by an act of violence in the course of or in furtherance of a felony involving violence.”

[p.11]

Looking at the learned trial judge's summing up on the question of “Malice aforethought” and the languages used by his direction to the Jury, I must say that he failed to explain it adequately to them. He further confused them with his definition of the words express and implied malice and made no attempt to explain the difference between them to the jury. Having done so, it seems to me, that he was under the impression, on several occasions that the alleged quarrel amounted to malice and emphasized this.

It only remains for me to say now that as far as this ground of appeal is concerned that I derive support from the above authorities referred to by me for the meaning of the doctrine of “malice aforethought”.

Another complaint of Counsel for the appellant was that the ease for the defense was not adequately put to the jury:

Counsel referred this Court to a passage in the summing up which reads as follows:—

“But if Voluntarily he offers a defense you are in duty bound to consider that defense alongside the prosecution's case. In this case the accused has offered a defense. His defense is contained in his statements and I dare say the defense is one of death by misadventure based on the monkey episode. I therefore invite you to consider the defence and ask yourself whether it can be satisfactorily accepted. If it is a defence which you can satisfactorily accept then you must find him not guilty of the offence. But if having considered the whole situation as disclosed to you by the evidence in this case you find yourselves unable to believe the story of this monkey episode then your verdict must be either guilty of murder or manslaughter.”

Another passage in the summing up also reads as follows—

“Go on to consider the defence of the accused which as I said hinges on the monkey story if you believe it and that by some accident pellets from the accused’s gun found their way into the woman's abdomen then this is death by misadventure in which case the verdict, should be not guilty. On the other hand if you do not believe the defence but rather believe the prosecution’s cease your verdict in this case should be guilty of manslaughter.”

The judge yet again had this to say –

“The only point which to my mind remains' for you to consider is the explanation about the monkey. Very carefully consider it to find out whether his story is consistent with events as they took place but if you as reasonable men and women think that such a story cannot be true and once you come to that conclusion that the story is untrue you are left with two alternatives so far as your verdict is concerned having regard to the evidence as a whole. It is either guilty of murder or guilty of manslaughter.”

Earlier on in this judgment I have quoted verbatim the two statements of the appellant upon which he relied during the trial and his defence in a nut-shell was that at that time he fired the fatal shot he thought that he was firing at a monkey which he had seen on a coffee tree. The learned trial judge told the jury that he appellant had offered a defence should he dared say was one of death by misadventure and that if they did not believe the appellant’s story of if they could not satisfactorily accept it then they must either find him guilty of murder or guilty of manslaughter. He also told them that if they did not believe the defence but rather believed the prosecution their verdict this case should be guilty of manslaughter. He failed to tell them of [p.13] the other alternative courses open to them as for instance that even if they disbelieved his story but that any reasonable doubt as to his guilt that he was entitled to an acquittal. The jury should be so directed. In the case of R. v. MURGTAGH & KENNEDY reported in volume 39 Criminal Appeal Report at page 72, convictions for murder and manslaughter were quashed on the ground of a defect in the summing up, the jury not having been specifically directed to acquit if the explanation of the defendant left them in any doubt. The defence had been that of accident.

See also the case of SAHR M'BAMBAY & OTHERS v STATE Cr. App. 31/766 referred to supra. In the case of SEISAY & SIAFFA v R. reported in 1967-68 African Law Reports Sierra Leone Series at page 323 it was held that even if an accused person is lying, that does not necessarily mean that he is guilty or that he may be convicted without more-ado. The burden remains on the prosecution to prove his guilt and it is the judge's duty to make this clear to the judge" It also appears to me that in his summing up he was shifting the burden of proof on to the shoulders of the defence, the burden of proof is always on the prosecution to prove the accuser's guilty. See WOOLMINGTON v D.P.P. 25 Criminal Appeal Report at page 72, R. v. HEPWORTH 39 Criminal Appeal Report at page 152. KARGBO v R 1968-69 A.L.R. S.L. at page 542. I must also add that the learned trial judge in dealing with the defence of the appellant did not direct the jury on the principles of law involved which would reduce the killing from the offence of murder to one of manslaughter provided the prosecution failed to prove "malice Aforethought".

In view of the above misdirection, I have come to the conclusion that the defence of the appellant was not adequately put to the jury. The Court of Appeal came to the conclusion that [p.14] the Learned Judge misquoted the evidence but that the jury were not misled, they therefore held that there was no miscarriage of Justice and dismissed the appeal. The question now arises whether the Court of Appeal was right in applying the provisions of Sec. 58(2) of the Courts Act of 1965.

Sec. 58(2) reads as follows:—

"On an appeal against conviction the Court of Appeal may, not withstanding that they are of opinion that the point raised in the appeal may be decided in favour of the appellant dismiss the appeal if they consider that no substantial miscarriage of justice has occurred."

The above section I must say is almost in identical terms with See. 4(1) of the Criminal Appeal Act 1907. See ARCHIBOLD Thirty Fifth Edition paragraphs 939 at page 343 under the rubic "no substantial miscarriage of justice" for an explanation of' the said term. After the amendment to Sec. 58(2) of the Courts Act 1965, in 1976 the Court of: Appeal now has power to order a new trial as an alternative to dismissing the appeal if they feel that no substantial miscarriage of justice has occurred. In short the position now is that the Court of Appeal may either order a new trial or dismiss the appeal if they are satisfied that no substantial miscarriage of justice has occurred.

The meaning attributed to the words "no substantial miscarriage of justice" has actually occurred in relation to the Courts power to dismiss an appeal under the provisions of Sec.4(1) of the Criminal Appeal Act 1907 was dealt with by Channel J. in the ease of COHEN v BATEMAN 2 Cr. App. R. at 197 at page 208 were He said—

[p.15]

"If, however the Court in such a case comes to the conclusion that on the whole of the facts and on a correct direction the only reasonable and proper verdict would be one of guilty, there is no miscarriage of justice, or at all events no substantial miscarriage of justice, within the meaning of the proviso, notwithstanding that the verdict actually given by the jury may have been due to some extent to such an error of the judge not being a wrong decision of a point of law."

See also R v HAROLD JONES reported in Volume 16 Cr. App. R, at page 128, Finally let me also refer to a case which though unreported deals explicitly and exhaustively on this point that is the case of THE STATE v BRIMA DABOH S.C. Cr. App, 1/79.

In the instant case I have no doubt in saying that had the jury been properly directed the only reasonable verdict they would have brought in would not be one of murder and as such I do not think that this a proper case in which to apply Sec. 58(2) of the Courts Act 1965. The jury properly directed may have found him guilty of manslaughter on the ground that he was negligent to the point of recklessness or that he conducted himself in such a careless manner and shoved such utter disregard for the life and safety of others as to be guilty of culpable negligence.

In the case of R v SALMON & OTHERS reported in 6 Q.B.D. at page 79 three people went into a field in proximity to certain roads and houses taking with them a rifle which would be deadly at a mile, for the purpose of practicing firing with it. One of them place a board, which was handed over to him by another one, on a tree as a target. All three fired shots directed at the [p.16] board so placed, from a distance o£ about 100 yards. No precautions of any kind were taken to prevent danger from such firing. One of the shots fired by one of them, though it was not proved which one o£ them, killed a boy in a tree in a garden near the field at a distance of 393 yards from the firing point. They were all found guilty by a jury of manslaughter. In a case stated it was held that all three had been guilty of a breach of duty in firing at the spot in question, without taking proper precautions to prevent injury to others and were rightly Convicted of manslaughter. Field, J. had this to say:—

"I am of the same opinion. I had some doubt a. to whether there was any duty owed by the prisoners to the particular boy, but it seems to me that there is a general duty to the public, of which the prisoners committed a breach. They had a duty not to use a weapon likely to cause death or injury in an improper place and without taking proper precautions to avoid injury. The evidence shows that was not observed. The character of the place and the probability of persons being about was such that I am satisfied the conviction was right."

Stephen J. also had this to say.

"I am of the same opinion. Manslaughter is unlawful homicide not amounting to murder. It is unlawfu1 where caused by the culpable permission to discharge a duty tending to the preservation of life. There is a duty tending to the preservation of life to take proper precautions in the use of dangerous weapons or [p.17] things. It is the legal duty of everyone who does an act, which without ordinary precautions is or may be dangerous to human life to employ those precautions in doing it. Firing a rifle under circumstances such as in the present case, was a highly dangerous act, and all are responsible, and they unite to fire at thee spot in question, for they all omit to take any precautions whatever to prevent danger."

Even from the appellant's statements which have been reproduced above there is evidence to show that he was grossly negligent. He himself admitted that the shooting took place behind a kitchen. Is that a safe place to hunt for monkeys? I would say no. The area surrounding a kitchen is an area especially in Sierra Leone which would constantly be used by people. Having stated above that the learned trial judge had misdirected the jury, and come to the conclusion that the defence of the appellant was not adequately put the conviction for murder could not stand. It only remains for me to consider whether this is a proper case in which to apply the provisions of 8ec.59(2) of the Courts Act 1965 which provides as follows:—

"Where an appellant has been convicted of an offence and the Court which tried him or the jury (as the case may be) could have found him guilty of some other offence, and on the finding of such Court or the jury it appears to the Court of Appeal that such Court or the jury must have been satisfied of such facts which found him guilty of that other offence, the Court may instead of allowing or dismissing the appeal substitute for the verdict found by such Court or the verdict or guilty of that other offence, and pass such sentence in substitution for the sentence passed at the trial as may be warranted by law for that other offence not been a sentence of greater severity."

In considering whether the Court of Appeal should exercise the powers under this sub-section, the test to be applied is not whether the judge has in fact directed the jury on the alternative verdict but whether the jury must have been satisfied of facts which proved the defendant guilty of the other offence. See R. v LARGE 27 Cr. App. R. at page 213. There are several instances when a verdict or manslaughter could be substituted in place of a verdict of murder e.g. where the accused's line of defence which if successful would have absolved him completely from responsibility for the act which caused the death for example, self defence, accident etc. Also where the accused's defence which though it might not absolutely absolve him from responsibility but might be a mitigating factor, reduce the guilt to manslaughter e.g. provocation. See R. v. McPHERSON

41 Cr. App. R. at page 213, or that the killing was merely unlawful as being the result of the degree of recklessness sufficient for a verdict of manslaughter, but not with the necessary malice aforethought required for the offence of murder. Invoking the powers conferred by that section I think that this Court ought to substitute a verdict of manslaughter in place of the verdict of murder as there is evidence to warrant such a course.

Under the circumstances I would allow the appeal, set aside the conviction for murder and substitute a verdict of manslaughter and impose a sentence of 5 years imprisonment. Appeal allowed.

(Sgd.) Hon. Mrs. Justice A.V.A. Awunor-Renner

Justice Supreme Court

[p.19]

LIVESEY LUKE C.J.

I agree, in the main, with the judgment of my learned Sister, Awunor-Renner J.S.C., but in fairness to the learned trial judge and out of deference to the arguments addressed to us by learned Counsel, I would like to add a few words of my own. The material complaints in this appeal concern the learned trial Judge's direction on the subject of malice aforethought and on the defence of the appellant,

In my opinion the learned judge correctly directed the jury that malice aforethought means an intention to kill or to cause grievous bodily harm. That, generally speaking; that is the meaning of malice aforethought is established by a long line of cases both in our local jurisdiction and in other Commonwealth jurisdictions. See Reg. v. Doherty (1887) 16 Cox 306, Reg. v. Vickers (1957) 3 W.L.R. 326, Sahr M'bambay & Ors, v. The State Cr. App. 31/74 (S.L.C.A. unreported). In my view the use of the words “express” or implied” by the judge in relation to malice aforethought did not detract from or affect his direction on the meaning of malice aforethought. If the jury found express malice the requisite mental ingredient was satisfied. Also if they found implied malice the requisite mental ingredient was satisfied. In my opinion therefore the fact that the judge directed the jury as he did on express and implied malice could not be said to amount to a misdirection.

I think that where the learned judge went wrong on the subject of malice aforethought was when he came to direct the jury on the evidence. He quite properly, in my view, directed their attention to the evidence relating to the incident which took place on the veranda of the house of Moilana Sandi, at Jaingama Village shortly before the shooting. It was during that incident that the appellant is alleged to have said “All this will finish today.”

[p.20]

The learned judge referred to the incident as a quarrel. In my view it matters not whether he was right or wrong in referring to the incident as a quarrel. What is of importance and concern is that the judge told the jury that the quarrel could amount to “malice.” Such a statement was liable to give the jury the impression that the incident could amount to “malice aforethought,” and therefore if they believed the evidence relating to the incident, that was evidence of "malice “aforethought” In my opinion such a statement was a misdirection liable to confuse the jury on the all-important ingredient of mens rea. In my judgment the proper direction that the judge should have given is that the evidence of the incident (by whatever name called) was evidence, if believed, from which “malice aforethought” can be inferred.

The other complaint deserving consideration is that in directing the jury on the defence of the appellant the learned judge told them that it was only if they accepted or believed the explanation of the accused that they should return a verdict of Not Guilty. That was clearly a misdirection.

It is relevant to state that the accused relied on his statement to the Police. But, without going into the question of weight, the direction is the same, whether the accused gives evidence on oath or not. It is well established that the proper direction on this aspect of a summing up is as follows:—

(1) if the jury accept or believe the explanation of the accused they must acquit

(2) Even if they do not accept or believe the explanation but if it nevertheless leaves them in doubt, they must acquit and

[p.21]

(3) on a consideration of the whole of the evidence they must be satisfied of the guilt of the accused.

See Reg. v. Murtagh & Kennedy 39 Cr. App.: R. 72, Reg, v. Head & Warrener 45 Cr. App. R. 225 and Sahr M'Bambay & Ors. v. The State Cr. App. 31/74 (S.L.C.A. unreported).

Having held that the learned trial judge misdirected the jury on material issues, what then should be the result? Should the appeal be allowed and the conviction and sentence set aside? The Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal on the ground that there was no substantial miscarriage of justice. Although the Justices of Appeal d1d not say so, it is obvious that their intention to apply the provisions of Section 58(2) of the Courts Act, 1965 Which has been set out by my learned sister Awunor-Renner J.S.C Learned Counsel for the appellant submitted that the Court of Appeal erred by holding that no substantial miscarriage of justice was Occasioned by the dismissal of the appeal. The principles by which an appellate court is guided in deciding whether or not to apply provisions identical with or similar to Section 58(2) of the Courts Act, 1965 are well-settled. They are authoritatively stated in an impressive line of English Cases. See Cohen and Bateman [1909] 2 Cr. App. R. 197, Brown v. R [1971] 55 Cr. App. R. 478. In the recent case of The State v. Brima Daboh Cr. App. 1/79 (S.L.S.C. unreported) this court stated the principles thus:

“If the Court is satisfied that the evidence is overwhelming and that on a proper direction the only proper and reasonable verdict would be one of guilty, then no substantial miscarriage of justice has actually occurred.”

See also Solomon Gbewa & Others v. The State Cr. App. 33/74 (S.L.C.A. unreported).

The evidence in the instant case was certainly overwhelming. But was “Guilty of Murder” the only proper and reasonable verdict that the jury could have returned? In my opinion, based on the evidence, to which I shall return presently, a proper and reasonable alternative verdict which the jury could have returned if they had been properly directed is Manslaughter. In those circumstances it would be wrong to hold that the only proper and reasonable verdict the jury could have returned as one of' guilty of Murder.

I therefore agree with Awunor-Renner J.S.C. that the Court of Appeal was wrong to have applied Section 58(2) and dismissed the appeal.

I shall now proceed to give reasons for saying that Manslaughter was a proper and reasonable alternative verdict. On his own admission, the appellant fired a shot gun at a monkey which he saw sitting on a coffee tree. This took place behind the kitchen of Moilana Sandi's house. Immediately thereafter he heard the deceased shouting “Pa Mansaray you have killed me. It He rushed to where he had heard the voice of the deceased and found her lying on the ground near a toilet. She had bullet wounds on her left side and was bleeding profusely. He said he saw the dead monkey near where the deceased was lying. He said that he had no intention to shoot at the deceased and that it was by accident that she was hit by the pellets. According to the evidence led by the prosecution, the place where the deceased was found lying after she had been shot at was at the back of the kitchen of Moilona Sandi's house and that the kitchen is about 15, feet away from the house. So it is quite clear from the evidence that the shooting did not take place in some remote and deserted place in [p.23] the bush. It took place in the village near a dwelling house where any reasonable man would expect persons to be. The appellant had a duty not to use a dangerous weapon, which a shot gun is, to endanger the life or limb of people in the village without taking proper precautions. This is a duty imposed by the common law applicable in this country. In my opinion that duty is based on and has the support of common sense. Indeed, I think that public policy and public safety also dictate such a rule in any organized society. The common law duty, which has as its object the preservation of human life, and which is a general duty owed to the public, is that persons who handle dangerous weapons and things likely to cause death or injury should not handle them or commit an act or omission in a place or in a manner likely to cause injury to life or limb without taking proper precautions.

It is well-established that if death result from a breach of such a duty, such death would amount to Manslaughter. The application of this rule is well illustrated by the case of The Queen v. Salmon Hancock & Salmon (1880) 6 Q.B,D. 79 which went to the Court of Crown Cases Reserved consisting of Lord Coleridge C.J. and four other Judges. The brief facts of that case are that the three appellant's went into a field in proximity to certain roads and houses, taking with them a rifle which would be deadly at a mile, for the purpose of practicing firing with it. A board was placed in a tree as a target and all three fired shots at the target 100 yards away. No precautions of any kind were taken to prevent danger from such firing. One of the shots thus fired by one of them killed a boy in a tree in a garden near the field at a spot some 400 years away from the firing point. It was held that all three appellants had been guilt of a breach of duty in firing at the spot in question, without taking proper precautions to prevent injury to others and were rightly convicted of Manslaughter.

The judgments are instructive and I consider it useful to quote from two of them. Field J. said inter alia at pp. 82-83:—

"I had some doubt as to whether there was any duty owed by the prisoners to the particular boy, but it seems to me that there is a general duty to the public, of which the prisoners committed a breach. They had a duty not to use a weapon likely to cause death or injury in an improper place and without taking proper precautions to avoid injury. The evidence shows that that duty was not observed. The character of the place and the probability of persons being about was such that I am satisfied the conviction was right."

And Stephen J. said inter alia at p. 83:—

“Manslaughter is unlawful homicide not amounting to murder. It is unlawful where caused by the culpable omission to discharge a duty tending to the preservation of life. There is a duty tending to the preservation of life to take proper precautions in the use of dangerous weapons or things. It is the legal duty of every one who does any act. Which without ordinary precaution is or may be dangerous to human life to employ those precautions in doing it.”

See also R. v. Burton (1759) 1 Str.481, R. v. John Jones 12 Cox c.c. 628. In the instant case the appellant clearly had a duty not to fire the shot gun in a place where persons were likely to be, without taking proper precautions to avoid injury to persons. The question is whether he breached that duty. The evidence is that he fired the gun near a dwelling house and it out-houses including a kitchen and toilet and that he knew that persons were in and around that vicinity. In my opinion firing a gun in such a location was a dangerous act and a reckless [p.25] disregard of the lives of persons in the vicinity. That was a breach of duty amounting to culpable negligence. Death resulting from such a breach of duty would amount to Manslaughter. In my judgment therefore a reasonable jury properly directed would have returned a verdict of Manslaughter at least. It means that, in my judgment, having regard to the facts of this case, there were only two reasonable and proper verdicts open to the Jury, namely, Murder or Manslaughter.

In view of the misdireetions on malice aforethought and on the defence of the appellant and of the inapplicability of Section 58(2) of the Courts Act, 1965. The conviction for Murder cannot stand. But in my opinion such misdirections do not affect the position as regards Manslaughter. In the first place malice aforethought is not a necessary ingredient of manslaughter. Therefore any misdirection on malice aforethought cannot affect a conviction or possible conviction for Manslaughter. Secondly, the misdirection on the defence of the appellant cannot affect the position. The reason is that the appellant's defence was that he deliberately fired the gun aimed at an object in a place where persons normally live and that by accident the deceased was hit by pellets, as a result of which she died, Of course it is because the victim was hit by accident that death in such circumstance would amount of Manslaughter. For if a person aims a loaded gun at another, knowing it to be loaded and pulls the trigger and the other person dies as a result, such a killing would be by design and therefore Murder of the victim. See Re. v. Campbell 11 Cox C.C. 323 the headnote of which reads:

“Where a person fires at another a fire-arm knowing it to be loaded, and therefore, intending either to kill or to do grievous bodily harm, if death ensues the c rime is Murder; and if in such a case the person who fires the weapon, though he does not know that it is loaded, has taken no care to ascertain, it is Manslaughter.”

On the facts of the instant case, the reasonable interpretation to be put on the defence put forward by the appellant is that he did not intentionally shoot at the deceased as claimed by the prosecution but that the shot fired by him accidentally killed her. So the issue raised by the defence of the appellant is not whether he deliberately fired at the deceased but whether the appellant firing a gun, as he admittedly did, was in breach of his common law duty. As I said earlier, on the appellant's own admission and on the evidence as a whole, the appe1lant undoubtedly breached his common law duty and therefore committed culpable negligence amounting to Manslaughter. In those circumstances the only proper course open to this Court is to apply the provisions of Section 59(2) of the Court's Act, 1965 and substitute a verdict of Manslaughter for the verdict of Murder.

For the foregoing reasons, I agree with the orders proposed by Awunor-Renner J.S.C.

Justice of the Supreme Court

TEJAN J.S.C.

The appellant was charged at the High Court of Bo in the Southern Province of the Republic of Sierra Leone before William, J. with the offence of murder of a woman named Marie Karimu and sentenced him to death.

The facts of the case fall within a narrow compass, but for the authorities and the law involved, my judgment would have been correspondingly short.

On the 30th day of June, 1976, the appellant who was carrying a shot gun, passed in front of the veranda of Malona Sand. Sandi together with the deceased and two others were at the time lounging on hammocks in the veranda. The deceased told the appellant that after having complained on three occasions, the appellant’s sheep still ate the vegetables she had planted.

[p.28]

The Appellant hissed at the deceased, took her headtie and flung it on the ground. The appellant remarked that “all this will finish today” and then went away. It is necessary to state at this stage that Malona Sandi who was P.W.1 at the trial was the only witness who testified to the remark made by the appellant. Among the people who were in the veranda was P.W.2 Foday Ansumana alias Jainda Ansumana. Shortly after, the appellant went away; the deceased left the veranda and went behind the kitchen in the compound. Foday Ansumana heard the sound of a gun shot. The sound came from the direction the deceased had gone. When Foday Ansumana and one Karimu who was with him heard the sound of the gun shot, they left the veranda and ran into the house. After having summoned sufficient courage, Foday Ansumana left the house and went to the direction where the sound of the gun shot came. Near a kola tree at the back of the kitchen, Ansumana saw the deceased lying on the ground. The deceased said "Mansaray you have killed "Mansaray you have killed me." While the deceased was uttering those words, Ansuma saw the appellant about fifteen feet away, run into the bush. Ansumana hurried back into the house and told Karimu what had happened. Eventually the matter was reported to the Section Chief who instructed some of the villagers to organise a search party to go in search of the appellant. One Sam king caught the appellant under a tree in the Bandajuma area. The Appellant was taken to the Section Chief who ordered that the appellant to be taken to the Police Station.

Detective Corporal 2144 Caulker investigated the case, and during the course of his investigation, he collected the gun which had been identified to him. He interviewed the appellant, and after the necessary caution had been administered, he obtained from the appellant a voluntary statement. Detective Corporal Caulker found the deceased underneath a coffee tree [p.29] where there were also kola nut trees. The coffee plantation was fairly mature and the trees were more than eight feet tall.

When the appellant was in the custody of the police who interviewed him, his explanation tallied with his statement which was part of his defence. In the statement, the appellant said that what he shot at was monkey, but after he had shot at the monkey, he heard the deceased say "Pa Mansaray you nave killed me." The appellant rushed to the place where the deceased was lying, and he saw bullet wound on the left side of the deceased, and that blood was oozing from the wound. The appellant tried to staunch the flow of blood, and while he was doing so, he heard the people in the village say that they would kill him if they saw him. Because of the threat to kill him, he ran away and hid his gun. The appellant had known the deceased for over twenty years and during this period there had been no misunderstanding between them. He had also known the deceased's husband.

Upon this evidence, and after the summing up by the trial judge, the jury retired. On their return they brought in a verdict of murder of ten against two. The trial judge not being satisfied with the verdict, summed up a second time to the jury who retired again, and when they return, they brought a unanimous verdict of guilty of murder.

The appellant appealed to the Court of Appeal against his conviction. The following are his ground of appeal:

(1) The learned trial judge did not define and/or explain the jury the law relating to the charge of "Murder" and therefore failed to assist them in considering their verdict so as to arrive at a fair and just verdict.

[p.30]

(2) The said judge did not define and/or explain for the benefit of the jury what “Manslaughter” is and the ingredients thereof, hence failed to assist the jury in their deliberations with a view to arriving at a fair and just verdict.

(3) The trial judge failed adequately or at all to put forward to the jury the case of the defence and by so doing denied the accused “Justice”.

(4) The learned trial judge misdirected the jury on the question of malice aforethought on the charge of murder.

(5) The verdict is unreasonable and cannot be supported having regard to the evidence.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by Warne, J.A. who said inter alia:—

“Mr. C.F. Margai who appears for the appellant has made very attractive submissions in support of these grounds, but in my opinion, they are not tenable in respect of grounds 1-4. These grounds have no merit. However ground 5 has some merit, in view of the defects in the summing-up, but has there been a substantial miscarriage of justice in order to warrant the appeal being allowed? This is what I will now proceed to consider.”

The learned Justice then gave a brief history of the ease and then said:

[p.31]

“In the summing-up the learned judge explained the law to the jury but when he came to deal with the facts he used very strong language and expressed strong views on the facts and introduced irrelevant elements, such as physics, and finally he misquoted the evidence. This is regrettable, however, I do not think the jury was misled in my view. The appeal being by way of rehearing, I have viewed the evidence and I find that the verdict therefore, is not unreasonable. In my view, the jury properly properly directed could have returned the same verdict. In spite of the shortcomings of the summing-up, there has not been a substantial miscarriage of justice to justify the verdict being set aside. The appeal is therefore dismissed.”

It is against this judgment of the Court of Appeal, the appellant has now appealed to this Court on the grounds that:

(a) The Presiding judges of the Court of Appeal for Sierra Leone in the above case erred in law by holding that the charge of murder was proven as required by law and hence upheld the conviction and sentence

(b) The Presiding judges of the Court of Appeal in the said case erred in law by holding that the learned Trial Judge in his summing up to the jury adequately directed. Them as the ingredients required by law to constitute the of murder. thus justify the conviction and sentence.

[p.32]

(c) The Presiding judges of the Court of Appeal erred in law by holding that the learned Trial Judge adequately or at all put forward to the jury the ease for the defence.

(d) The judgment is unreasonable.

In his argument in support of grounds (a) and (b) Mr. Margai Counsel for the appellant contended that the trial judge failed to explain the legal definition of murder to the jury. To strengthen his argument he referred to the following passage in the summing up:—

“Having said so, let me remind you that the charge of murder is the unlawful killing of a human being within Sierra Leone and under the President's peace. The killing must have been done by someone of sound memory and this he must have done within a year and a day. The killing must have be done with malice aforethought. Malice which can be expressed or implied is an intention to kill a human being which is expressed malice or to do grievous bodily harm to him or to do an act which the accused knows or must as a reasonable person be taken to know that such an act is likely to kill or course grievous bodily harm to human being under the President's peace from such acts malice can be implied.”

Mr. Margai justly criticised the above passage because it does not only fall very far short of the definition of murder, but also tends to confuse any reasonable jury. To give more life to his argument, it is necessary to start with the beginning of the summing-up itself which is far from encouraging:

“I am sure that your patience is now at an ebb. Therefore I will endeavour to sum-up to you as briefly as possible and as briefly as I think necessary in the case. You have heard lengthy addresses so that by now your minds I am sure, are confused. I will therefore attempt to put your minds in a proper perspective by narrowing the issues for you so that your duty and exercises when you are considering your verdict will be much lighter."

Now I agree that there is no formula. For a summing-up. Every judge has his method of summing-up in a case, but I am greatly worried when a summing-up begins with the method the trial judge adopted. The learned trial judge fully realised that their minds were in a confused state. I would have thought that in the circumstances, and for a fair justice in the trial. The trial judge ought to have adjourned the summing-up to a convenient date when he would have become certain that the minds of the jury were clear and active enough to understand the proceedings. The jury should be directed as to the law applicable to the particular ease and to discuss the evidence in relation to the law. After making it clear to the jury that the burden of proof lies on the prosecution and the standard of proof that is required, the jury be told that if the prosecution failed in this regard, they must as a fight acquit the accused. They jury must also be told that if there is any reasonable doubt in either the prosecution’s case or that of the defence, they are bound to acquit the accused.

In dealing with the burden and standard of proof, the trial judge said:—

“As you see him in the dock our laws presume the accused to be innocent until the prosecution prove to your entire satisfaction that he is guilty of the offence as charged, I have also reminded you that such duty is squarely fixed on the prosecution - to prove that the prisoner at the bar is guilty of the offence as charged, This the prosecution must do beyond the slightest doubt. So that if you find any doubt which exercises your minds, you should give the accused the benefit of the doubt doubt return a verdict of not guilty against him. If however you are perfectly satisfied with any shadow of doubt that the evidence for the prosecution points to one fact that the accused is guilty of the offence s charged, the have no hesitation to return a verdict of guilty against him, In this case your verdict can be either one of guilty of murder or one of guilty of manslaughter; thirdly it can be a verdict of not guilty,”

Throughout the summing-up, the trial judge made lavished use of the word “satisfied”. The jury ought to have been told that the prosecution have the burden of proving the case against the accused and that such proof should be beyond reasonable doubts so that they must feel sure that the accused is guilty of the offence. They must also be told that if there is any doubt in defence, they were bound to acquit. It is stated in Archbold (39th Ed. at page 598) that it is better for a summing-up should avoid the use of the term “reasonable doubt and direct the jury that before they convict, they must be satisfied by the evidence [p.35] so that they can feel sure that the prosecution have established the guilt of the prisoner. See R.v. SUMMERS (1953) 36 Cr. App. R. 14. Although there is no set formula for explanation to the jury that the burden of' proof lies on the prosecution, but merely to tell them that they must be satisfied with the guilt of the accused is insufficient. The case on this point is REG. v. HEPWORTH AND FEARNLEY (1955) 2 Q.B. 600; 39 Cr. App, R. 152. Lord Goddard, delivering the judgment of the Court in this case said at page 603:—

“Another thing that is said in this ease is that the Recorder only used the word “satisfied”. It may be, especially considering the number of cases recently in which this question has risen, that I misled the Court because I said in REG. v SUMMERS (Supra) - and I still adhere to it - that I thought that it was very unfortunate to talk to juries about “reasonable doubt” because the explanation given as to what is and what not a reasonable doubt are so very often extra-ordinarily difficult to follow that it is very difficult to tell. To tell a jury it must not be fanciful doubt is something that is without any real guidance. To tell them that a reasonable doubt such a doubt as to cause them to hesitate in their own affairs never seems to me to convey any particular standard; one member of the jury might say that that would not cause him to hesitate at all. I therefore suggest that it would be better to use some other expression, by which I meant to convey to the [p.36] jury that they should only convict if they felt sure of the guilt of the accused. It may be that in some cases the word it satisfied is enough. Then it is said that the jury in a civil case has to be satisfied and, therefore, one is only laying down the same standard of proof as in a civil case. I confess that I have had some difficulty in understanding how there is or there can be two standards; therefore one would be on safe ground if one said in El. criminal case before a jury; "You' must be satisfied beyond reasonable doubt…….”

It is stated in ARCHBOLD (39th Ed.) para. 598 that notwithstanding the strictures in SUMNERS upon the “reasonable doubt” direction it nonetheless remains the fact that the House of Lords (in WOOLMINGTON v D.P P (1935) 57 Cr. App. R. 72) and more recently the House of Lords (in McGREEVY v. D.P.P. (1972) 57 Cr. App. R. 424) have consistently approved the form of direction and a substancial body of opinion remains of the view that that form of direction is preferable to the other. The direction is based upon the following passage in WOOLMINGTON:

“Throughout the web of the English Criminal Law one of the golden thread is always to be seen, that it is the duty of the prosecution to prove the prisoner's guilt, subject (to the qualification involving defence of insanity and to any statutory exception). If at the end of and on the whole of the case, there is a reasonable doubt, created by the evidence given either by the prosecution or the prisoner as to whether (the offence was committed by him), the prosecution has [p.37] not made out the case and the prisoner is entitled to an acquittal. No matter what the charge or where the trial, the principle that the prosecution must prove the guilt of the prisoner is part of the common law of England and no attempt to whittle it down can be entertained.”

In the case of WALTERS v. R. (1962) 2 A.C. 26, the Judicial Committee upheld a description of as “that quality and kind of doubt which when you are dealing with matters of importance in your affairs, you allow to influence you in one way or another.

In R. v. GRAY (1974) 58 Cr. App. R. 177, the Court held it erroneous to explain a “reasonable doubt” as the sort which might affect you in the conduct of your everyday affairs.” The Court expressed the view that there could be no proper criticism made if the direction had been the sort of doubt which may affect the mind of a person in the conduct of important affairs.”

Now, looking at the summing-up in this case, it cannot be said that the trial judge fully directed the jury, properly on the onus and standard of proof in the light of the authorities already cited.

I shall now deal with other misdirections or omissions to direct in the summing-up. In fact the learned trial judge not. only misquoted evidence, he even introduced evidence which was never given at the trial by any of the witnesses. Moreover in dealing with the defence, the trial judge failed to consider the evidence, that the shooting took place in a bush where cocoa plantation was eight feet in height. The trial judge did not appreciate that there were matters disclosed by the evidence, beside those considered by him, which could amount to accident [p.38] or misadventure; and since these matters were not brought to the notice of the jury, they might not necessarily bring in either a verdict of murder or manslaughter. See TEI S/O KABAYA v. R. (11961) E.A.L.R. 580.

In order to appreciate the matter, it will be well to set out certain passages in the summing-up:—

“The aspect is the height of the coffee trees. You will remember that the accused in his statement said that he saw a monkey on top of a coffee tree…….

The conclusion therefore that while the alleged monkey was eight feet up the tree the woman was 5’ 2” below. However when according to the accused, he shot at the monkey, pellets found their way into the woman's left side some 3 ft. or so below. Counsel for the accused highlighted the point that in this regard there is some doubt as to how the pellets left up there and came down to the woman’s left side. It is my duty to inform you that that cannot create a doubt in the prosecution's case; what it creates is the truthfulness or otherwise of the accused's story. According& to the accused he saw the monkey eight feet above when he fired etc. etc ……..”

The above passage is classic example of misdirection, misquotation of evidence and a direct investigation to the jury to convict.

[p.39]

I now refer to the case of REGINA v. ABISA GRUNSHIE Vol.1 W.A.L.R. at page 36. It was held in that case that it is the duty of a judge in giving his directions to a jury (or in directing himself, as the case may be) particularly in cases where the account advanced by the prosecution differs from the defence's account by only a narrow issue of' fact, to make clear to the jury the effect of the three views which may be induced in them on weighing the evidence;

(a) If the explanation of the accused is accepted they must acquit;

(b) If the explanation of the accused falls short of acceptance but nevertheless creates doubt they must acquit.

(c) Quit apart from the explanation of the accused, they must on consideration of the whole evidence, be satisfied of the guilt of the accused before they may convict.

(ii) Where Police takes a voluntary statement from a prisoner it is desirable for them, particularly for a confession statement in a murder case, to require the presence of an independent civilian witness who understands what is being said and who is present throughout the time the statement is being taken. The civilian witness should sign the statement, as a witness, on its completion.

I may add that R. v MURTAGH AND KENNEDY, 39 Cr. App. R .. 72; (19.55) Crim. L.R. 506 was followed in this case.

The case of REX v KWABENA BIO (1945) 11 WACA at page 46 states that in a case of murder, and where there is a misdirection by no-direction, the Assessors should be correctly and fully instructed in the judge's summing-up, and referring to REX v. DINNICK, a judge is bound to put the defence however weak to the jury.

In the case of KEITH KEBBA BADJAN, Vol. 50 (1966) Cr. App. R, at page 141, it is clearly stated that where a cardinal line of e.g. self-defence) has been placed before the jury, but has not been referred to at all in the summing-up, it is in general impossible for the Court of Criminal Appeal to apply the proviso to Section 4(1) of the Criminal Appeal Act 1907 and refrain from quashing the conviction.

Convictions have been quashed for the omission by a trial judge to warn a jury to acquit if they are left in a reasonable doubt: See REV. v. AGNES SAWYER Vols. 3-5 Selected Judgments of WACA at page 155; See LAWRENCE v. THE KING (1933) A.C. page 69 where it is said at page 707:—

“But speaking generally, it has to be remembered that it is an essential principle of our criminal law that a criminal charge has to be established by the prosecution beyond reasonable doubt, and it is essential that tribunal fact should understand this. Unless the judge makes sure that the jury appreciate their duty in this respect his omission is as grave an error as active misdirection on the elements of the offence, and a verdict of guilty given by a jury who have not taken not taken this fundamental principle into account is give in a case where the essential forms of justice have been disregarded. In such a case, unless it can be predicated that properly directed the jury muse have return the same verdict, a substantial miscarriage of justice appears to be established”

With regard to Manslaughter, the trial judge not even attempted to explain manslaughter to the jury. His only explanation in this regard is that the offence of manslaughter is committed if there is no evidence of malice. The judge went further to tell he jury that a mere altercation between the appellant and the deceased was a quarrel. The deceased told the appellant that his cattle had destroyed her vegetables. The appellant simply said “This will finish today”. It was wrong for the judge to have told the jury that if they believed the evidence of P.W.1who was the only witness to give that piece of evidence, (although there were other witnesses in the veranda) that they could infer malice, for what in my view, he wrongly interpreted as “quarrel”.

Manslaughter can be of two kinds, voluntary or involuntary manslaughter. Throughout the summing-up I not even the slightest attempt was made to mention the two kinds of manslaughter or the various modes by which the offence of manslaughter could be committed. Here the defence of the appellant is accident or misadventure. The jury were never given any assistance in this aspect of the defence. No effort was made to explain to the jury the degree of negligence that would amount to criminal negligence. The only evidence was that the shooting was done in the bush where there was thick undergrowth and cola trees to the height of eight feet. There was no evidence either from P.W.l or from any of the other prosecution witnesses that the area was frequently used by other persons. In fact there was evidence that monkeys had been previously shot at the area. To test whether an act amounts to criminal negligence so as to render is recklessness to amount to manslaughter, it is necessary to consider the background of the accused, the locality in which he lives, and the general conditions surrounding the village.

[p.42]

The fact of the appellant in this case did not take place in a headquarter town. There was no evidence as to local conditions Indeed, there was evidence that the appellant was illiterate. Therefore to apply strictly the general common law of negligence to the appellant who lives in a village, particularly, when the evidence against him is so weak, is in my view an erroneous approach.

I think it is necessary to quote a certain passage in 1962 Cambridge Law Journal at page 200 with regard to mensrea in oases of manslaughter. The passage reads thus:

“That there can be no exact measurement of degrees of negligence, and that the ascertainment of gross negligence depends on the response of ordinary people, are not good reasons for rejecting a concept so readily resorted to in everyday human judgments about conduct, and so firmly established in judicial precedent. What is required is that the consequence should have foreseen (adverted) as possible, and further that a reasonable man would not have taken the risk of the undesirable consequence ensuing by doing what the actor has done. The question whether reasonable man would have chosen to incur the risk of the undesirable consequence will depend upon the likelihood of such consequence ensuing, and upon the utility of the object which is sought to be achieved. Apart, therefore, from the element of foresight of consequence, the measure of reckless conduct is the sane as that for negligent conduct: it is the standard of the reasonable man. It may be [p.43] that in manslaughter mens rea expresses the element of moral blameworthiness which distinguishes the crime from accidental or justifiable homicide. ANDREWS v. D.P.P. (1937) A.C.S. 78 & 583 The imposition of the reck1ess actor of 1iabi1ity for an unforeseen consequence is justifiable only if the consequence was foreseeable. In this event, liability is based not upon recklessness mere1y, but upon recklessness and foreseability. Gross negligence, like that of simple negligence is a matter for the exercise of' the good judgment of ordinary people.”

Therefore, it is my opinion that it is absolutely necessary not to strictly apply the test of the common 1aw of negligence in every case. In some cases, the common law test of negligence may be applied depending upon the character of the accused. Many cases of this kind have happened in Sierra Leone. Some of them have been convicted, and others have been acquitted, each ease depending upon the factors surrounding the act of the aooused. My candid opinion is that if the trial judge had elicited the relevant evidence from the witnesses, and had he given the proper directions, the appellant would have been acquitted of' both murder and manslaughter.

In KOROMA v REG. (1964 to 1966) 542 at page 547, Bankole-Jones p. said:—

“In the prepared statement of his recollection of his summing-up, the learned tria1 judge appeared to have directed the jury to rule out self-defence, and rightly so in our view.

[p.44]

He then left to them the issue of determining whether on the facts there was provocation sufficient in law to reduce the crime to that of manslaughter. But nowhere do we find that the real defence of accident or misadventure was ever left to the jury. There is a long line that such an omission will be fatal. In R. v. MILLS (1935) 25 Cr. App. R.138, a conviction for murder was quashed in the ease of one of the two appellants jointly charged, on the ground. That his defence had not been adequately put to the jury in the summing-up. In the case of MURTAGH (1935) 39 Cr. App. R. 72 (1955) Crim. L.R. 506, convictions for murder and manslaughter were quashed in a case where the defence had been that of accident, on the ground of the defect in the summing-up, the jury not having been specifically directed to acquit if the explanation of the defendants left them in doubt.

In the case of YEBEMA v. REG. (1957) to (1960) (ALR) S.L, 237, Bairmian C.J. allowed an appeal because it could not be said with certainty that the appellant intended to cause the deceased grievous bodily harm.

When it comes to proper direction to be given by a trial judge, there is a long line of cases in this aspect, and some of these cases have been referred to in KARGBO v. REG.(1968 to 1969) A.L.R. (S.L.) at page 354 by Tambiah J.A. I need not take another reference to them. But in SEISAY AND SIAFFA v REG. (1967 to 1968) A.L.R. 323 (S.L.) Marcus-Jones J.A. said at page 327:—

[p.45]

“Looking at the summing-up, it does not appear that the learned trial judge was saying that when an unlawful act is committed in relation o human being, resulting in the death of that human being, the jury would be justified in convicting of manslaughter. If the act in which a person is engaged is unlawful and at the same time dangerous, and is likely to injure another person, and quite inadvertently the doer of the act causes the death of that other person by his unlawful act, then he is guilty of manslaughter.”

After reviewing the evidence, the learned Justice went on: "The learned trial judge did not direct the jury as to whether these acts amounted to criminal negligence…….”

“It has been laid down in BROADHURST v R, (1964) A.C. 441, (1964) 1 All E.R. 111 that it is very important that a jury should be carefully directed upon the effect of a conclusion, if they reach it, that the accused is lying, for there is a natural tendency to think that if he is lying it must be because he is guilty, and accordingly to convict him without more ado. It is the duty of the judge to make it clear to the jury that this is not so. The burden remains on the prosecution to prove the guilt of the accused.”

“Looking at the summing-up, the learned trial judge failed to direct the jury on this aspect of the law, and this Court cannot say that the jury would reach the same conclusion had they been so directed.”

[p.46]

Reading the summing-up in this case, the ballistic expert gave evidence. This witness was in the Military Forces where he Handled small types of ammunition, including shot guns, rifles, machine guns and pistols grenades. His evidence was that he was conversant with the operations of these arms and that he could tell with ocular examination whether a particular ammunition had been fired and extinguished from a particular gun in dealing with the monkey episode, the learned judge said:—

“Do you believe that the story of the monkey is true? It is for you to say so. That is the crux of this case. If you believe that the story of the accused is a fabricated one then you must come to the conclusion that for some reason ns known to himself he shot at the woman, because it is impossible for one to aim an object eight feet high above with a gun an explosive instrument, yet instead of the shots going further up they came down with such force as to pierce through a woman's left side fatally. Pellets, if in truth are fired upwards, must travel upwards with force; and if when they descend they would do so without any lethal force. This is pure physics. If you send a stone into the air, depending on the velocity at which the stone travels, it does not move downwards but upwards much more pellets from a gun. The accused fired a gun pointing upwards according to him; how then did the pellets 'not travel upwards? Rather they hit a woman below, fatally.”

Apart from the grave and fatal misdirections in the above passage sufficient to quash any conviction based on the passage, I am really at a loss as to how the learned judge or from where he obtained the evidence. The ballistic expert never said anything about physics, and the learned trial judge repeated his direction to the jury on numerous occasions as to the height of the tree. Another passage in the summing-up for which no evidence was adduced, is the following:—

"The sequence of events was that the accused went out shooting; according to him he saw and shot a monkey but it turned out that it was a woman he had shot; she fell down he ran to the spot, met her and according to him, he noticed that it was she whom he had shot, and discovered that she had died. He wanted to remove the body. Ask yourselves, members of the jury, where did the accused want to take the body to? However, the accused did not tell us. As far as his behaviour is concerned immediately after the gun shot, the question as to whether he wanted to take the body to the village and show it to the villagers is one possibility or whether he wanted to take it away so as to dispose of it, is another possibility.

"I have read the statements of the appellant. I understand from his statement that when he discovered that it was a human being he had shot, he made attempt to staunch or to use his words "to wipe the blood that was oozing from the wound. I must confess that if I want to quote passages in the summing-up, Which are fatal misdirections, non-directions, misquotations, and evidence not offered by any of the witnesses, I will be faced with the arduous task of quoting, the entire summing-up.

When the summing-up ended, the jury retired and returned. They brought in a split verdict. The jury, without any request for further directives, the learned judge summed up to them a second time, and on the return, they brought in a unanimous verdict of guilty.

A conviction was quashed in the case of R. v. OWEN (1953) 36 Cr, App. R. 16 when after a summing-up, the jury retired and on their return, further evidence was introduced. The head note reads:—

"After the conclusion of the summing-up if the jury either before or after retirement, ask the judge a question on any matter on which evidence has been given, it is proper for the judge to remind the jury of such evidence and to instruct them accordingly, but it should be regarded as an established rule that, once the summing-up is concluded, no further evidence ought to be introduced to the jury."

Again in R. v. JOSEPH WILSON (151) Vol. 41 Cr. App. R. 226 a conviction was quashed even when the jury asked for further evidence after the summing-up had been concluded. The headnote in this case reads:—

"If the jury after retirement put a question to the Court with regard to the evidence, it is the duty of the judge to tell them if it is the fact, that no evidence on the point has been given and that they must take it that there is no evidence on the point, but if the question relates to a point on which evidence has been given, the judge should remind them of the evidence.

[p.49]

The principle that, once the summing-up is concluded, no further evidence ought to be given, must, be maintained in every case, and if further evidence is allowed at that stage even on a mater which appears to the Court of Criminal Appeal irrelevant, the conviction will be quashed."

With these irregularities which go to the root of criminal law, when the appeal went before the Court of Appeal, that Court said that ground 1 to 4 had no merits. The Court of Appeal however, conceded that ground 5 had merits and that the learned judge "used very strong language and expressed strong views on the facts and introduced irrelevant elements such as physics, and finally he misquoted the evidence. It is unfortunate the Court of Appeal did not carefully read the evidence, and it did not take into account the judg1gment of Channel J. in the case of COHEN AND BATEMEN (1909) 11 Cr. App. R. 197 at page 207. Had the Court of Appeal averted its mind to the many misdirections in this case, it would never have invoked the proviso under Section 58, I am also certain that that Court would never invoke Section 59 of the Courts Act, 1965. Of course the Courts (Amendment) R. 1976 would never be seriously taken into consideration. In conclusion, taken into account the summing-up as a whole the trial is very unsatisfactory with the result that I cannot seriously consider Sections 58 and 59 of the Courts Act 1965 or its amendment in 1976. I therefore would quash the conviction of the appellant and set aside the sentence imposed upon him.

DR. W.S. MARCUS-JONES for appellant

No representation by or on behalf of the Respondent

JUDGMENT DELIVERED THIS 27TH DAY OF APRIL, 1981

HARDING, C.A. J.S.C

This appeal arose as a result of the dismissal by the Sierra Leone Court of Appeal of the Appeal by the Appellant against an Order of the High Court made on 29th June, 1976.

The proceedings were commenced in the High Court by means of Writ of Summons dated 3rd May, 1976, issued on behalf of the Appellant by Dr. Marcus-Jones, and the Statement of Claim indorsed thereon reads as follows:—

"The Plaintiff's Claim against the defendant is for

(a) The partition or sale of land and premises No. 9 Albion Street, Kissy.

[p.51]

(b) An account of the rents and profits therefore from the date of death of Sally J. Thompson, to date.

(c) Payment of one-half of such amount as found due to the Plaintiff by the Defendant.

PARTICULARS

1. By paragraph 4 of his Will dated 27th October 193. William Thompson, deceased, gave and devised his land premises No.5 (Now No.9) Albion Street, Kissy to his wife Sally J. Thompson for life and after her death to the Plaintiff and the defendant in equal shares as tenants in common.

2. "The said Sally J. Thompson died sometime Died sometime in the forties.

3. The Plaintiff was unaware of his interest in and entitlement to the said property until August 1975, when he paid a visit to his father, for the first time, in Liberia.

4. The Defendant has, since the death of Sally J. Thompson, been collecting rents from the said property and has paid nothing to the Plaintiff.

5. Since returning to Sierra Leone the Plaintiff has asked the Defendant for his share and interest in the said property and for an account profits thereof but the Defendant has ignored the Plaintiff's requests.

[p.52]

Wherefore the Plaintiff claims:—

(a) An account of all moneys collected by the Defendant as rents from the said property from the date of death of Sally J. Thompson to date.

(b) Payment over to the Plaintiff of one-half share thereof.

(c) An order for the partition or sale of the premises and payment to the Plaintiff of one-half of the net proceeds thereof."

The Writ was duly served on the Defendant (the Respondent herein) on 7th May, 1976, but no appearance was entered by or on his behalf. Subsequently, Dr. Marcus -Jones, counsel for the Appellant moved the Court under Order 23 Rule 11 of the Rules of the High Court for Judgment. The Notice of Motion requested:—

"An Order under 0.23 Rule 11 that Judgment may be entered for the Plaintiff as on the Writ of Summons and that the Plaintiff may be at liberty to sell the land and premises No.10 Albion Street, Kissy by Private Treaty or by Public Auction; that the Plaintiff do have conduct of the sale, that the Master and Registrar do hold an inquiry as to what sums are due and payable to the Plaintiff in respect of his one-half share and interest therein; that such share be paid over to the Plaintiff by the Defendant or deducted from the Defendant's share of the proceeds of the, said sale and that the costs of the action be paid by the Defendant to the Plaintiff and that the costs of and incidental to the sale of the property be deducted from the purchase price."

On the hearing of the Motion, counsel applied for leave to sign "final judgment" for the Plaintiff as on the Writ of Summons for the Plaintiff to be at liberty to sell land and premises at 10 Albion Street, Kissy etc., etc. The learned trial Judge received evidence from the Plaintiff; how this came about is not quit clear - whether on application by counsel or at request of the trial Judge. At the conclusion of the hearing the learned trial Judge found inter alia, that the gift had not been described with sufficient particularity, that there was no evidence that the state of the deceased had been completely administered by the rectors all of whom had died, that it was not known how the defendant came into possession of the property, that there was a discrepancy in the application - the endorsement on the Writ was partition or sale of land and premises No.9 Albion Street, Kissy, while the particulars of claim on the Writ referred to 5 (now NO.10) Albion Street, Kissy and the Notice of Motion referred to No.10 Albion Street, Kissy. He accordingly ordered that the matter be referred to the Administrator and Registrar- General for further investigation and appropriate action in accordance with the Administration of Estate Act, Cap, 45 of the Laws of Sierra Leone, costs of the proceedings so far to be borne and paid out of the estate.

The appellant being aggrieved with the Order of the High Court appealed there from to the Sierra Leone Court of Appeal which Court on 12th July, 1979, dismissed the said appeal and also ordered that the learned trial Judge's Order referring the matter to the Administrator and Registrar-General and awarding costs be amended by deleting it and an Order dismissing the application be substituted therefore That decision was based finally on the fact that it was wrong for the learned trial Judge have received oral evidence from the Plaintiff and on the listing discrepancy in the Statement of Claim as to which property, [p.54] whether No.9 Albion Street, Kissy, or No.5 (Now No.) Albion Street, Kissy, an Order or sale was being sought.

It is against this decision that the Appellant has appealed to this Court on the following grounds, viz,—

"(l) That the Court of Appeal ought to have found that the High Court of Sierra Leone was wrong in law in dismissing the Ptaintiff1a claim.

(2) That the Court of Appeal was wrong in law in refusing to uphold the appeal and in failing to accept the uncontested evidence given before the High Court by the Appellant.

(3) That the decision is against the weight of the evidence adduced.

(4) That there was no or no justifiable reason in law for the Court of Appeal to dismiss the Appeal."

Dr. Marus-Jones, learned counsel for the Appellant Submitted that it would appear that the sole ground for the Court o Appeal dismissing the appeal was the apparent error or Inconsistency in the Statement of Claim relating to the premises the subject matter of the claim. He argued that the "Particulars" in the Statement of Claim cured the discrepancy in the Indorsements.

On the question of a "defective indorsement", learned counsel referred to the case of HILL vs LUTON CORPORATION (1951) 1 T.L.R. 853, (1951) 2 K.B. 387, where Devlin J. (as he then was) held that the delivery of the Statement of' Claim cured any defect in the writ; this decision was Followed by Ormerod, J. in GROUHDSELL vs CUTHELL AND ANOTHER (1952) 1 T.L.R. 1558; (1952) 2 Q.B. 673.

[p.55]

Counsel also contented that the Court of Appeal had the power to amend the indorsement and could have done so, rather than dismissing the application which has resulted in injustice being done to a part owner of property whose rights have not been questioned. He referred to Rule 31 of the Court of Appeal Rules 1973 which confers general powers to that Court to make any such order as may be necessary for determining the real question in controversy between the parties, and to have as full a jurisdiction over the whole proceedings as if they had been instituted and prosecuted in that Court as a Court of first instance. He furthermore referred to Order 28 Rule 12 of the English Rules of the Supreme Court (1959 White Book) which is the same as Order 24 Rule 11 or the High Court Rules whereby general power is conferred on the Court or a Judge at any time. On such terms as to costs or otherwise as may be just, to amend any defect or error in any proceedings necessary for the purpose of determining the real question or issue raised by or depending on the proceedings. However, when it was pointed out to him that it was the duty of counsel to apply for leave to amend and to state exactly the amendment he seeks, he thereupon applied to the Court for an amendment of the Statement of Claim to read "No. 10 Albion Street, Kissy", instead of "No. 9 Albion Street, Kissy". To buttress his application he cited the cases of FRASER vs BALFOUR, (1918), 87 L.J. K.B. 1116. H.L., and HARNETT vs FISHER, (1927) A. C. 573, H.L., where the House of Lords gave leave to amend during the hearing of an appeal.

Finally he submitted that it was a very serious thing for the Court of Appeal to have dismissed the claim because of the error or inconsistency in the indorsement on the Statement of Claim and that on the totality of the Statement of Claim it was clear that the premises referred to were No.10 Albion Street Kissy.

[p.56]

He concluded by requesting the Court to make the amendment necessary and to grant the relief' which was asked for.

It is perhaps noteworthy to observe at the outset that the action instituted in the High Court was for a partition or sale of land and premises-commonly referred to as a "Partition Action". The relevant statutes governing such actions are the Partition Acts, 1868, (31 & 32 Vict. C. 40) and 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. C. 17) which are applicable in Sierra Leone by virtue of Section 74 of the Courts Act 196.5. Under these Acts the Court has wide powers to order a sale in lieu of partition where the nature of the property or the interest of' the parties makes that more convenient.

Before the passing of these Acts partition was a matter of right and the Court had no discretion to refuse partition or to order sale in lieu thereof. This often times resulted in many awkward and absurd situations and it was to remedy the position hence the Partition Acts were passed. By Section 4 of the Partition Act, 1868, in any action in which the Court has jurisdiction to order partition, if the party or parties individually or collectively interested to the extent of a moiety or upwards in the property to which the action relates request a sale, a sale and distribution of the proceeds must be ordered in lieu of partition, unless the Court sees good reason to the contrary. All actions for sale or partition were by Section 34(3) of the Judicature Act, 1873 assigned to the Chancery Division of the High Court, and the practice and procedure applicable generally to actions in that Court govern such actions.

The Plaintiff must allege his own title to the property in question with precision, and where there is default of appearance or of defence and he wishes to proceed to judgment he must follow [p.57] the procedure laid down by Order 10, rule 2 of the High Court Rules, i.e., file an affidavit of service, and then set down the action on motion for judgment under Order 23, rule 11 of the High Court Rules which states as follows:—

"In all other actions than those in the preceding rules of this Order mentioned, if the defendant make default in delivering a defence, the plaintiff may set down the action on motion for judgment, and such judgment shall be given as upon the statement of claim the court shall consider the plaintiff to be entitled to."

The corresponding English rule is Order 27 Rule 11 and in interpreting the rule the better view has been that the Court cannot receive oral evidence but must give judgment according to the pleadings alone. I am therefore in agreement with the view expressed by the Court of Appeal that when the learned trial

Judge received oral evidence from the Plaintiff on two occasions, “that exercise was an absolute waste of time.”

The procedure to be followed is succinctly set out in Halsbury Law of England 1st Edition Vo1ume 21 dealing with the & subject of “Partition And Sale in lieu of Partition by Order of Court” at page 847 paragraph 1585 under the rubric General Practice. The paragraph reads:—

“In default of appearance or defence, the action in the Chancery Division may be set down on a motion for judgment as a short cause. If then the defendants are sui juris, the usual judgment is pronounced without further proof of title, the allegations in the statement of claim being taken as admitted.

If, however, the defendants or any of them are under disability, the plaintiff's title must be proved; such proof is given by means of an affidavit concisely verifying the statement of claim, and the guardian ad litem of an infant, or person of unsound mind, may consent to proof being given by affidavit. Where the material allegations in the statement of claim are admitted, the usual order will be made on motion for judgment without proof of title.”

The paragraph following - 1586 - then goes on to explain that “the usual judgment for partition, or sale in lieu of partition, directs the accounts and inquiries to be taken and made which are necessary to ascertain the rights of the parties interested. The accounts and inquiries usually directed are:— (1) Who are the persons interested in the property, and for what estates and interest and in what shares and proportions, and whether they are parties to the action; and also the following inquiries if and so far as any of them are applicable, that is to say: (2) an inquiry what encumbrances affect the entirety, or any and what parts thereof, and (if sale is ordered) whether such incumbrancers consent to a sale, and other inquiries as to title; (3) an account of the moneys (if any) expended by any and which to the parties interested in permanent improvements; (4) an inquiry to what extent the present value of the property has been increased by such expenditure; (5) an inquiry what would be a proper occupation rent in respect of any part of the property to be dealt with which is occupied by any of' the parties; and (6) an inquiry as to any waste committed, and the value of any timber felled or minerals gathered by any of the parties.”

[p.59]

In short there can be no unconditional order for partition or sale by the Court until the inquiry has been answered as to the persons interested and the nature of their interests, and whether they are parties to the action. It is only in exceptional cases that this inquiry can be dispensed with, e.g., where the title is simple, or the property is of small value, and all parties interested are before the Court; in such cases the Court may direct an immediate partition, or sale in lieu thereof, on proof of these acts by affidavit.

The Court of Appeal in its Judgment dated 12th July, 1979. Stated:—

“The statement of claim on the Writ was not amended. It claimed two properties - Nos. 9 and 10 Albion Street as one property. It remained as such until the motion for judgment was filed and continues to remain so until now. How counsel could have expected the Judge to make an Order for the sale of real property on such a glaring discrepancy in the claim, passes my comprehension. The proper thing for the Judge to have done was to dismiss the application."

It would appear from the foregoing that the Court of Appeal took the view that when application was made under Order 23 rule 11 for Judgment to be entered for the Plaintiff "as on the Writ of Summons", the High Court was being requested to make an unconditional Order for sale of the property, i.e., to pronounce final Judgment. As has been pointed out certain statutory provisions govern these proceedings, viz; the Partition Acts of 1868 and 1876. The procedure governing the operation of these Acts has already been outlined above: What the High Court should have done was to have made a conditional order in the first instance directing the "usual inquiries"; these would have [p.60] ascertained the rights (if any) of the parties referred to in paragraph 4 of the Will dated 27th October, 1931 of William Thompson, deceased, and over what property, as is mentioned in paragraph 1 of the Particulars of the statement of claim indorsed on the Writ of Summons.

In POWELL vs POWELL (1874), 10 Ch. App. 130, it was held that where a sale had taken place before the registrar had issued his certificate as to the result of the inquiries, the purchaser was discharged from his purchase.

Learned counsel has urged on us that dismissing the Plaintiffs application for judgment to be entered on his behalf will operate as an injustice to him as he would thereby lose his rights over property to which he is entitled and which rights have not been questioned at all by the defendant. He also directed our attention to Rule 31 of the Sierra Leone Court of Appeal Rules which empowers that Court to make any order necessary for determining the real question in controversy in the appeal. Moreover, he has formally applied to us for an amendment of the indorsement in the Statement of Claim to read "No. 10 Albion Street, Kissy", instead of "No. 9 Albion Street, Kissy".

The Defendant will not in any way be prejudiced, and taking all the circumstances of this case into consideration justice demands that the application for the amendment be granted and I would hereby grant it. Accordingly, the appeal succeeds, and the Judgments of the Court of Appeal and the High Court are hereby set aside and I would direct that:—

(i) An Inquiry be held by the Master and Registrar o£ the High Court as to who are the persons interested in and entitled to the property known as NO.5 (now No.10) Albion Street, Kissy and in what shares.

[p.61]

(ii) An account be taken of all rents and profits collected and received by the Defendant from the said property from the date of death of Sally J. Thompson, deceased, to date, and of all moneys expended by the Defendant in respect thereof.

(iii) A Certificate of the findings thereof in respect of (i) and (ii) above be delivered to the High Court within three months hereof for further consideration.

(iv) Liberty to apply.

ZOUZOUKO DEGUI v. THE STATE

[p.88-108]

DIVISION: SUPREME COURT OF SIERRA LEONE

DATE: 23 JUNE 1981

CORAM: THE HON. MR. JUSTICE E. LIVESEY LUKE, CHIEF JUSTICE; MR. JUSTICE C.A. HARDING, J.S.C.; MR. JUSTICE O.B.R TEJAN, J.S.C; MRS. JUSTICE A. AWUNOR-RENNER J.S.C.; MR. JUSTICE S. BECCLES DAVIES J.S.C.

ZouZouko Degui Appellant (In the Court below)

And

The State Respondent (In the Court below)

Mr. Terry for Zouzouko Degui.

Mr. Tejan-Cole for The State

Judgment delivered on the 23rd day of June 1981

DAVIES, J.S.C.

Monsieur Zozouko Degui is the master of the Ivorian fishing vessel 'SAINT JEAN NO. 695'. He was found fishing within the territorial waters of Sierra Leone. He was arrested and charged for contravening Section 3(2)(b) of the Fisheries Act Cap. 195 as repealed and replaced by Section 1 of the Fisheries (Amendment) Act 1977. He was arraigned before the High Court. He pleaded guilty to the offence. The trial judge imposed a fine of Le 300.000.00 with an alternative of three years imprisonment.

He pleaded against his conviction and sentence. Ground 2 of the grounds of appeal argued before the Court of Appeal was couched in the following:

[p.89]

"2 The learned trial judge lacked jurisdiction to try the appellant on the indictment before him in that the offence charged in that indictment was instituted without the consent of and without the certificate of the Attorney General as required by law."

The Court of Appeal having heard the arguments by Counsel for the appellant and the Director of Public Prosecutions, who appeared for the respondent, ordered that further hearing of the appeal be stayed and that the points raised on the issue be referred to this Court for determination. The Court of Appeal had acted under Section 104 sub-sections (l)(a) and (2) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1978(to which I shall hereafter refer as the Constitution"). The provisions state—

104. (1) The Supreme Court shall save as otherwise provided in Sections 18 and 101 of this Constitution have original jurisdiction, to the exclusion of all other Courts

(a) in all matters relating to the enforcement or interpretation of any provision of this Constitution

(b).....

(2) Where any question relating to any matter or question as is referred to in the preceding sub-section arises in any proceedings in any Court, other than the Supreme Court, that court shall stay the proceedings and refer the question of law involved to the supreme Court for determination; and the Court in which the question arose shall dispose of the case in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court."

[p.90]

Each party submitted questions on which the reference to this Court was based.

The questions submitted on behalf of M. Degui were

"1. Whether or not the powers to be exercised by the Attorney-General by virtue of Section 53(1) of the Criminal Procedure Act, Act No.32 of 1965 can in law and in fact be exercised by the holder of the office of Director of' Public Prosecutions having regard to the fact that the Law Officers Act, Act No.6 of 1965 and the Laws Adaptation Act, Act No.29 of 1972 remained unaltered either expressly OR impliedly by the Constitution Act No.12 of 19781

2. Whether or not there is under the Laws of Sierra Leone the office of Attorney General? If so are the powers vested in him by virtue of Section 53(1) of the Criminal Procedure Act 1965 Act No.32 of 1965 exercisable by him to the exclusion of the Director of Public Prosecutions to enable him to exercise the powers vested in the Attorney-General under Section 53(1) of the Criminal Procedure Act No.32 of 1965?

3 Whether or not Section 144(2) of the Criminal Procedure Act No.32 of 1965 requires an application and an order granting a trial by a Judge alone before commencement of a trial under this Section? If so, can such an application for trial by judge alone be properly and legally made by the Director of Public Prosecutions having regard to the wording of Section 144(2) and the director of Public Prosecution's powers under the 1978 Constitution Act No.12 of 1978?

4. Whether or not in the light of Section 7 of the 1978 Constitution and the appointment of a Director of Public Prosecutions, there is a necessary implication that the powers of the Attorney-General under the Criminal Procedure Act, Act No.32 of 1965 or any other enactment relating to the conduct of criminal cases are exercisable by the Director of Public Prosecutions without a special or general direction from the Attorney-General and Ministry of Justice? In other words whether or not in the enactments referred" to the word "Attorney-General" is interchangeable with the words "Director of Public Prosecutions"?

5. Whether or not the questions raised in 1, 2 and J supra go to jurisdiction? If so, what is the effect at law having regard to the powers of the Attorney- General and the Minister of Justice and the Director of Public Prosecutions under the 1978 Constitution Act No. 12 of 1978 .

The following questions were posed by the Director of Public Prosecutions—

"1. Having regard to the constitutional development of responsibility for public prosecutions in Sierra Leone resulting in the enactment of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.12 of 1978 and particularly Section 97(4) therefore (sic) and in the absence of any general or special direction as required by Section 97(7) thereof,

(a) Must the Director of Public Prosecutions obtain the consent of the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice for the institution of criminal proceedings against a non-citizen for the offence committed within the territorial sea under the Criminal Procedure Act No.32 of 1965;

(b) Is the Director of Public prosecutions included in the proviso to sub-section 7 of Section 97 of the Constitution thus requiring him to obtain the consent of the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice under Section 53 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1965;

[p.93]

(c) Can consent under Section 53 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1965m be given now by the Attorney - General and Minister of Justice"

Mr. Terry argued questions 1, 2 and 4. He abandoned questions 3 and 5.

Mr. Tejan-Cole submitted during the course of his arguments that the questions posed before this Court could not be considered as raising constitutional issues. I do not agree. The questions raised relate to the interpretation of the Constitution is so far as it relates to the powers conferred on the Director of Public Prosecutions. A determination of the powers of the Director vis-avis the powers of the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice must necessarily involve or entail an interpretation of the Constitution. The office of Director of Public Prosecutions was created by the Constitution and his powers are spelt out therein. This Court can properly consider the questions referred to it by that Court of Appeal since they touch and concern the interpretation of the constitution.

Section 53(1) and (2) of the Criminal Procedure Act 1963 provide—

"53(1) Subject to sub-section (2), proceedings for the trial of any person, who is not a citizen of Sierra Leone for an offence committed within the territorial sea of Sierra Leone, shall not be instituted in any court except with the consent of the Attorney-General and upon his certificate that it is expedient that such proceedings should be instituted,

(2) (a)Proceedings before a Magistrate previous to the committal of an offender for trial or to the determination of the magistrate that the offender is to be put on trial, shall not be deemed proceedings for the trial of the offence committed by such offender for the purposes of the said consent and certificate under this section.

(b) It shall not be necessary to aver in any information or indictment that the certificate of the Attorney-General required by this section has been given; and the fact of the same having been given shall be presumed unless disputed by the defendant at the trial; and the production of a document purporting to be signed by the Attorney-General and containing such consent and certificate shall be sufficient evidence of the consent and certificate required by this section

The Director of Public Prosecutions and not the Attorney-General issued the consent and certificate. It was in the following terms—

"IN THE HIGH COURT OF SIERRA LEONE

[p.96]

I now proceed to answer the question – does the office of the Attorney-General exist under the Laws of Sierra Leone? A convenient starting point for present purposes is the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1971 (Act No. 6.of 1971). It came into operation on 19th April 1971. (I shall refer to it as the 1971 Constitution)

Sections 51 and 54 of the 1971 Constitution provided —

“51. There shall be an Attorney General for Sierra Leone who shall be appointed by The President acting in accordance with The advice of the Prime Minister from among persons qualified to hold office As justice of Appeal and shall be Deemed to be a Minster under this Constitution.”

“54. The President acting in accordance with the evidence of the Prime Minster, may, By directions in writing, assign to the Prime Minister or any other Minister responsibility for any business of the Government of Sierra Leone, including the administration of any department of government; (Emphasis mine).

Provided that the responsibility for judicial affairs shall not be assigned to the Attorney-General.”

The combined effect of the above quoted sections was that there was the office of Attorney-General. He was deemed to be a Minister. He could be assigned ‘responsibility for any business of government including the administration of any department of government save that for judicial affairs. There could than have been fro example an Attorney-General and Minister for Social Welfare.

[p.97]

Section 51 of the 1971 Constitution was repealed and replaced by the Constitution (Amendment) (No.2) Act 1971 which came into existence on 19th April 1971. Section 51 as replaced was in these terms –

51(1) There shall be an Attorney-General for Sierra Leone who shall be appointed by the President from among persons qualified to hold office as a Justice of Appeal and who shall be a Minister under this Constitution.

(2) Where no such qualified person is a Member of Parliament the president may appoint as Attorney-General for Sierra Leone a Member of Parliament who is otherwise qualified to practice as a Barrister and Solicitor in the Superior Courts of judicature.”

Section 54 was consecutively repealed and replaced by The Constitution (Amendment) (No. 2) Act 1971 and Section 4 of The Constitution (Amendment) (No.2) Act, 1975. Section 54 as it stood after its repeal and replacement stated—

“54. The president may, by directions in writing, assign to the Vice president, the prime Minister or any other Minister government, including the administration of any department of Government:

Provided that the responsibility for judicial affairs shall not be assigned to the Attorney-General.”

[p.98]

The above proviso containing the restriction of the assignment of responsibility of judicial affairs, to the Attorney-General was removed on 13th April 1978. That was the date of the commencement of The Constitution (Amendment) Act, 1978 (Act No. 5 of 1978). Section 1 of that Act provided.—

“1. Section 54 of the Constitution is hereby amended by repealing the proviso thereto.”

The proviso to Section 54 of the 1971 Constitution was thereby removed. The president therefore had the right to assign responsibility for judicial affairs to the Attorney General, if be wished to do so.

On that same day – 13th April, 1978, the President assigned to the Honourabe F.M. Minah the portfolio of Attorney General and Minister of Justice. A notice from the Cabinets Secretariat to that effect was published in the Sierra Leone Gazette Vol. C.X of Thursday 11th May 1978 No. 27. The notice stated—

"Govt. Notice No. 445 M.P.CO/11

In exercise of the powers vested in the President by Section 54 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, 1971, the President has assigned the portfolio of Attorney-General and Minster of Justice to the Honourable F.M. Minah, with effect from 13th April, 1973.

THE CABINET SECRETARIAT

TOWER HILL

8TH MAY 1978.

I have since discovered that the date of Mr. Mina's appointment was 13th April 1978 and not 13th April 1973. The discrepancy was due to a typographical error.

[p.99]

Parliament was aware of the existence of the office of Attorney-General arid Minister of Justice (under the 1971 Constitution) when it passed the Constitution. It provided for the holder for those portfolios immediately before the coming into effect of the Constitution, to continue in office as if he had been appointed under the Constitution. The provision is contained in Section 163(1). That section provides—

"163(1) Where any office has been established by or under the existing Constitution or any existing law, and this Constitution establishes or provides for the establishment of a similar or an equivalent office including the office of President, First Vice president, Second Vice president. Minister, Attorney-General and Minister of Justice. Member of the Cabinet, Deputy Minister or Parliamentary Special Assistant Any person who, immediately before the commencement of this Constitution, holds or is acting in the former office shall, so far as is consistent with the provisions of this Constitution, be deemed as from the commencement of this Constitution to have been appointed, elected or otherwise selected to or to act in the latter office in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution". (Emphasis mine). There is a proviso to the above section which is not relevant for present purposes.

[p.100]

The Ministerial portfolios of Attorney-General and Minister of Justice had been assigned to a single Minister. The combination of those two portfolios was given statutory recognition when the Constitution became effective on 14th June 1978. Quit unlike the 1971 Constitution which provided for the office of Attorney-General (who was deemed to be a Minister) (S.51) and the assignment of additional Ministerial responsibility (S.54), Section 88(1) of the Constitution provided for the establishment of one office to be known as that of Attorney-General and minister of Justice'. Section 88(1) of the Constitution provides

"88(1). There shall be an Attorney-General And minister of justice who shall be a Minister of State and the principal legal adviser to the Government.

The Attorney-General and Minster of Justice is the principal legal adviser to the Government (S.88(1)). The prosecution of all criminal offences in the name of the Republic prosecution of all criminal offences in the name of the Republic shall flow from him (S.88(3)). He is exempted from the doctrine of the collective responsibility of Cabinet as regards advice given by him in criminal matters. (S87(2)(d)). He is not subject to the control of Parliament or the executive as to arriving at a decision, on whether or not to prosecute a particular case (S.97(8)). The ultimate authority over criminal prosecutions is his (S.97(7)). He is ex officio head of the Bar. The Solicitor-General is his principal assistant (S.96(4)). Those are some of the powers, rights and privileges which traditionally characterized the office of Attorney-General.

There is no longer in existence the office of Attorney-General, simpliciter, as it was known prior to 13th April, 1978. But there is now, an Attorney-General functioning under the new nomenclature of Attorney-General and Minister of Justice.

[p.101]

As I had said earlier, in this ruling, the single office of Attorney-General and Minister of Justice was established as such under the Constitution. The Constitution contains Certain transitional provisions. Among those provisions are Sections 161 and 162(1). They state—

"161. For the purposes of this Chapter, the expression 'existing law' means any Act, Law, Rule, regulation, order or other instrument made in pursuance of (or continuing in operation under) the existing Constitution and having effect as part of the law of Sierra Leone or of any part thereof immediately before the commencement of this Constitution or any Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom or Order of Her Majesty in Council so having effect may be construed with such modifications adaptations qualifications and exceptions as may be necessary to bring it into conformity with this Constitution as if it had been made under this Constitution.

162(1) The existing law and enactments shall, notwithstanding the repeal of the Constitution of' Sierra Leone Act 1971, have effect after the entry into force of this Constitution as if they had been made in pursuance of this Constitution and shall be read and construed with such modifications, adaptations, qualification and exceptions as may be necessary to bring them into conformity with this Constitution."

[p.102]

This existing Constitution referred to above is the 1971 Constitution. The Criminal Procedure Act 1965 has beep preserved by the transitional provision of Section 95(1) of the 1971 Constitution and Section 162(1) of the Constitution respectively.

Section 53(1) of the Criminal Procedure Act (read and construed in the light of the Constitution with such adaptation as is necessary for present purposes,) should now be read by the deletion of the expression “Attorney-General” and the substitution of the words “Attorney-General and Minister of Justice” in its stead.

Can the Director of Public Prosecutions give the consent and certificate required by Section 53(1) of The Criminal Procedure Act?

The office of Director of Public Prosecutions was established by Section 97(1) of the Constitution. His powers are contained in Section 97(4), Sub-section (4) provides—

"(4). Subject to sub-section (3) of Section 88 the Director of' Public Prosecutions shall have power in any case in which he considers desirable so to do—

(a) to institute and undertake criminal proceedings against any offence against the law of Sierra Leone;

(b) to take over and continue any such criminal proceedings that may have been instituted by any other person or authority; and

[p.103]

(c) to discontinue at any stage before judgment is delivered any such criminal proceedingsinstituted or undertaken by himself or any other person or authority.”

In order to present a complete picture of the powers of the Director of Public Prosecutions and the restrictions imposed on the exercise of those powers, I will also set out the provisions of Section 88(3) and 97(6) respectively.

“88(3) All offences prosecuted in the name of the Republic of Sierra Leone shall be at the suit of the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice or some other person authorized by him n accordance with any law governing the same

91(6) The director of Public Prosecutions shall in all matters including his powers under this Constitution or any other law be subject to the general or special direction of the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice.”

The Director operates under the superintendence of the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice. Dr. Edwards in his book ‘The Law Officers of the Crown' puts the position thus at page 10—

“No one any longer doubts the exclusive subservience of the holder of the office of Director of Prosecutions to the State's Chief prosecutor the Attorney-General.”

The position is the same under the Constitution as in England.

[p.104]

The offices of Attorney-General and Minister of Justice and Director of Public Prosecutions respectively, are neither synonymous nor interchangeable. Admittedly, the Director has power to initiate, take over, or discontinue criminal proceedings. The right to initiate criminal proceeding' does not ipso facto confer a corresponding right to give consent for the institution of those proceedings otherwise than in accordance" with the statutory provision requiring such consent.

The offices of Attorney-General, Solicitor-General and Director of Public Prosecutions are derived from the English legal system. There is much to be derived from the English experience on the functioning of those offices. There is the following useful note from Halsbury's Laws of England 4th Edition Volume 11, paragraph 97 at page 68.

"97. Right to initiate criminal proceedings: In the absence of statutory provision to the contrary any person may of his own initiative, and without any preliminary consent, institute criminal proceedings with a view to an indictment; but there are some statutes which-require that certain criminal proceedings should be undertaken only by order of a judge or by the direction or with the consent of the Attorney-General, the Director of Public Prosecutions, or some other official person or body."

Dr. Edwards says at page 238 of his book—

"In all, some eighty offences exist at the present time in which no proceedings may be instituted without· the consent of the Attorney-General, either acting alone or, [p.105] alternatively with the consent of the Solicitor-General (under the Act creating the offence of the Law or the Law officers Act (1944)), the Director of Public Prosecutions, or some other person or persons."

Section 6 of the Law Officers Act 1965 confers on the Solicitor-General, the power to exercise all or some ooh h functions of the Attorney-General and Minister of justice.

Sub-sections (1) and (2) of Section 6 read pursuant to Section 162(1) of the Constitution should now be read as follows –

"6(1) The Solicitor-General may exercise and perform all or any of the powers, functions and Duties of the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice and shall, subject to the general or specific instructions of the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice, discharge such portion thereof as may from time to time assigned to him by the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice

(2) Whenever the expression "Attorney- and Minister of Justice" occurs in any existing or future enactment except Section 59 of the Constitution it shall unless the contrary is explicitly stated be deemed to include a reference o the Solicitor-General (or an acting Solicitor-General) acting under the provisions of this Section."

[p.106]

The Solicitor-General or an acting Solicitor-General, by virtue of the above provisions, could have given the consent and certificate required by Section 53(1) of the Criminal Procedure Act.

Mr. Tejan-Cole had submitted that any 'Law officer' could have given the consent and certificate having regard to the provision of Section 6(3) of the Law Officers Act 1972. This is a rather doubtful interpretation of Section 6(3). The definition of the expression 'Law officer' as set out in Section 2 of The Criminal procedure Act and Section 4 of The Interpretation Act 1971 respectively (read pursuant to Section 162(1) of the Constitution) is in these terms -

"Law officer" means the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice, the Solicitor-General, The First Parliamentary Counsel, and every State Counsel and parliamentary Counsel."

It would serve no useful purpose to make an pronouncement on that issue, in this ruling. Even if Mr. Tejan-Cole's submission was correct, the Director was not entitled to give the consent and certificate. The office of Director of Public Prosecutions does not come within the definition of 'Law Officer' which has been set out above.

Finally the Director sought to know whether he was included in the proviso to Section 97(7) thereby requiring him to obtain the consent of the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice before initiating proceedings under Section 53(1) of the Criminal Procedure Act. Section 97(7) reads—

"The powers conferred upon the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice by this Section shall be vested in him to the exclusion of any other person or authority:

[p.107]

Provided that where any other person or authority has instituted criminal proceedings, nothing in this Section shall prevent the withdrawal of those proceedings by or at the instance of that person or authority at any stage before the person against whom the proceedings have been instituted has been charged before the Court."

I do not with respect see the relevance of this question to the problems, before this Court. Firstly, the proviso contemplates the withdrawal of proceedings by some person or authority the right to do so before the accused of defendant has been charged before the Court secondly, it does not contemplate a situation where the defendant has been charged., tried and convicted. Thirdly, the Director is not "any other person or authority" referred to in Section 97. Section 97(4) throws light on the matter. Section 97(4)(b) gives the Director the power to "take over and continue any such criminal proceedings that may have been instituted y any other person or authority". Sub section (c) then empowers the Director "to discontinue at any stage before judgment is delivered any such criminal proceedings instituted or undertaken by himself or any other person or authority". The distinction is made between proceedings instituted by himself (The Director) and those initiated by some person or body or persons or a corporation.

M. Degui is not a citizen of the Republic of Sierra Leone. The offence for which he was charged, tried, and convicted, was alleged to have been committed within the territorial sea of [p.108] this Republic. The consent and certificate of the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice or the Solicitor-General should have been obtained before the commencement of the proceedings. In my judgment the Director of Public Prosecutions was not competent to give the consent and certificate required by Section 53(1) of The Criminal Procedure Act.

I would answer questions 1 and 4 posed by Mr. Terry in the negative. I would answer his question 2 in the affirmative.

As regards those posed by Mr. Tejan-Cole, I would answer questions (a) and (c) in the affirmative. The answer to question (b) is that the Director is not included in the proviso to Section 97(7). He has to obtain the consent of the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice before initiating proceedings in the instant case.

DUMBUYA KOROMA - APPELLANT

Vs.

THE STATE - RESPONDENT

SOLICITORS: E.A. Halloway, Esq. for Appellant

A.K.A. Barber, Esq. for Respondent

JUDGMENT

Awunor-Renner. J.S.C.

The appellant was convicted at the High Court Moyamba on the 7th day of November 1979 and was sentenced by Williams J. to death. He appealed to the Court of Appeal and judgment was delivered on the 21st day of January 1982 dismissing the appeal and affirming the conviction and sentence of the 'High Court. It is against that decision that the appellant has now appealed to this Court on the following grounds, viz:-

(1) That the Court of Appeal erred and/or misdirected itself in holding that “In any event upon a careful review of the evidence in this case, there is no evidence to support the issue of provocation being left to the jury".

(2) That the trial judge usurped the functions of the jury as judges of facts in assessing the weight of the evidence in this case substantially in the summing up.

[p.64]

(3) That having regard to the grounds or appeal above and their cumulative effect upon this case the trial judge caused or occasioned a substantial miscarriage of justice in the trial of the appellant.

(4) That the decision of the Court of Appeal is unreasonable or cannot be supported, having regard to the evidence.

Let me say here in passing that although there were other additional grounds of Appeal this Court refused Counsel leave for the appellant to argue them as they did not relate to matters raised before the Court of Appeal. He was also asked to give further and better particulars of grounds 2 and 3 above which he did. I propose to deal with the grounds of appeal later. I have no intention of going through all the evidence that was adduced but only to state the relevant facts as briefly as I can. The appellant Dumbuya Koroma was the husband of one Fatu Gbla, who had been having an affair with the deceased Joseph Minah. Fatu Gbla and the appellant had a son Tamu Koroma who was also a prosecution witness in this case. It appears that the appellant became suspicious of the relationship between the deceased and the appellant and so when Fatu became ill he refused to help her and instead carried out a swearing ceremony and threatened that unless she confessed the illness would grow worse. She then confessed and begged the appellant to forgive her. Whether he did so or not is another matter, but on the day or the alleged incident the appellant and his wife were sitting on the verandah when the deceased went past the house and walked down to the wharf where he met some children including Tamu who was the son of [p.65] the appellant and his wife. At that point the appellant left the house and said that he was going to a village called Bandabama to buy kerosene. He returned late in the night without having bought any kerosene and told Fatu that he had met up with her boyfriend the man she had been boasting about. His shorts were wet and he had his matchet with him. On the following day the corpse of the deceased was found floating at the wharf by Tamu and one Biareh Bangura another prosecution witness. The Town Headman who was the second accused in this case was informed about it. He came down to the wharf and after he was shown the corpse of the deceased he instructed one Pa Allie to tie a rope round 1t and throw it into the river again. Three months later when the police came to investigate Henry Gbemoh a Detective Police Sergeant claimed that he took the appellant to Mano Wharf and that the appellant showed, him a place along the river bank where he said that he had attacked and stabbed the deceased to death and that as they walked along the edge of the river some bones were discovered which looked like human bones.

One William Roberts a pathologist attached to the Bo Government Hospital also gave evidence before the trial judge and stated as follows. I quote

" I recall the 16th January 1979 I was on duty on that day I had cause to perform a postmortem examination on the skeleton remains of one Joseph Minah alleged, to have died on the 12th October 1978. The remains were identified to me by one Ansumana Kpaka uncle of the deceased of Moyamba Village. My examination was carried out at the Moyamba Police Station on examination the skeleton remains were:

[p.66]

The skull

Parts of lower and upper limbs

Few ribs

There were few soft tissues on the base of the skull. There were few soft tissues left in the pelvic area. There were few pieces of rags which were alleged to be the clothes which the deceased was wearing when he died.

Cause of death: Fracture base of skull, consistent with either the victim falling on a hard surface from a height or a blunt object administered with force on the skull."

At this stage I would not be amis if I were to mention that the appellant made two statements which were tendered in evidence the High Court. No objection as to the voluntariness of the statements were 'made in that Court. The only point raised, was that the statements offended against the Hearsay Rule as they had been taken through an interpreter who had not been called to give evidence of this. However both statements were eventually admitted in evidence. In the first statement which was tendered in evidence the appellant had this to say.

"It is true that I am the one who killed the deceased Joseph Minah on the road leading to Baoma Village on a certain day sometime in the month of October 1978.

The reason why I killed the deceased was that my wife Fatu Gbla had earlier confessed him to me. I had all the time been after the deceased for my woman palava but in vain. The deceased Joseph Minah did not make any settlement to me. This caused me to attack him and kill him on his way to Baoma Village, from my village Mano Wharf.

[p.67]

Town Chief Alusine Sesay is well aware of the woman palava between myself and the deceased Joseph Minah. This dispute had been between myself and the deceased for about a year now as he did not pay no heed to it this made me to have attacked and kill him on his way to Baoma Village where he was going to pass the night."

The statement continues as follows:

"It is true that I am the one who stabbed the deceased Joseph Minah to death with my cutlass by giving him four stabs on his neck and shoulder blades before he finally died. After he had died I then pushed or dragged the deceased's body to the river where I threw it before I returned to the village. It is true that I am the one who killed the deceased Joseph Minah sometime in the month of October, 1978 on his way to Baoma Village. It was jealously which tempted me to do so. I am only asking for mercy. That is all"

In the second statement appellant. said and I quote.

"It is true that I am. the one Who killed the deceased, Joseph Minah on the road between Mano Wharf and Baoma Village sometime in October 1978 about three months ago. I am only asking for mercy. That is all."

The appellant, during the course of his trial, when asked if he had anything to say or whether he wished to give evidence elected to make an unsworn statement from the dock which conflicted with the two previous statements, He stated as follows:

[p.68]

"My wife confessed the name of the deceased and in all six persons names. My wife afterwards fell ill and I refused to give her treatment because we wee many after her. She sent to the Town Chief to beg me to give her treatment. After the Town Chief had begged me I forgave her. This was after three years. Later on the deceased used to come to my house and play with my wife. When the deceased passed I was not there I went to Bandabama to buy kerosene. Bandabama and Bumpetoke are in opposite direction. As I came and passed people said they suspected me and I don't know anything. People suspected me of the murder of the deceased. If I had wanted to I would have issued a summons against the deceased. I was arrested by the Police and brought here that is all."

I must say at this stage that counsel for the appellant has put forward everything that he could to induce this court to say that the verdict was unreasonable. Several grounds of appeal were argued by him but I only propose to deal with the main issue involved which in my view raises the points of substance. The first point taken deals with the learned trail judge's direction on the question of provocation. Counsel contended that it was the duty of the trail judge where there is some evidence of provocation to put the issue of provocation to the jury. If there is none he said then he should not do so. He however stated that there was evidence to support the issue of provocation and referred to the evidence of Musu Gbla where she said:

"Towards dusk on that day Joseph Minah travelled from Shenge to our village. I was sitting in front of our house when I saw Joseph Minah walking past the house. He went down to the wharf where he met some children. First accused the appellant was sitting on the verandah of our house when Joseph Minah walked past. After Joseph Minah walked past 1st accused left to go and buy kerosene from a village called Bandabama travelling via the wharf."

He also referred to the portion of' Fatu Gbla's statement where she said that her relationship with the deceased continued until the time of' his death and also to the statement of the appellant from the dock when he said that the deceased used to come to his house and play with his wife. All these pieces of evidence he claimed were ignored by the Court of Appeal when Short J.A. said in his judgment and I quote.

"In any event upon a careful review of the evidence in this case, there is no evidence to support the issue of provocation being left to the jury."

Counsel for the appellant submitted further that Provocation could only be a defence in such situations if-the adulterers were caught red-handed and that we should not ignore our own environment but should remember that adultery with a wife and a third party can so infuriate the husband as to provoke him to do harm. Now let me examine what the trial judge had to say about provocation in certain portions of his summing-up and I quote:

“Turning back to the 1st accused I am to remind you that after trying to impress on you that there would appear to be some doubts in the evidence as far as the 1st accused is concerned his counsel went one stage further by saying that [p.70] if you are convinced that the killing was done by 1st accused it was done by what in law is described as provocation and that if you are satisfied that he was sufficiently provoked to kill Joseph Minah then the verdict against 1st accused cannot be one of guilty of murder: it would be one of guilty of something else, namely manslaughter; but if you are convinced that there was not sufficient provocation before killing Joseph Minah then your verdict must be one of murder. Firstly provocation is no defence in a charge of murder. All that provocation does if satisfactorily proved is to reduce a charge of murder to that of mans1aughter. That is why counsel for 1st accused told you quite clearly that if you are convinced that it was the first accused who killed Joseph Minah then 1st accused might have done so because he was provoked and that if you are satisfied that he was sufficiently provoked then you should reduce the charge from murder to manslaughter which means that you should return a verdict of not guilty of murder but guilty of manslaughter --------

Provocation must be such that it is enough for a reasonable man to lose control of his temper.”

He continued further by saying

"If you are able to say on the evidence that it was the 1st accused who killed Joseph Minah, then ask yourself whether the love affair which lasted for three years was provocation enough to have excited a man like the 1st accused to [p.71] the extent of killing the paramount of his wife bearing in mind that the 1st accused had other remedies to which he could have had recourse if he wanted to get his own back from Joseph Minah. So members o£ the jury if you are convinced that it was the first accused who killed Joseph Minah then ask yourselves in the light of the evidence. Whether the provocation pleaded is of a kind which is sufficient to let 1st accused lose his temper and kill Joseph Minah the way the evidence has pointed out.

---------The question of provocation is one for you to consider. It is my duty as judge to point out to you aspects of provocation. It is your duty of consider whether such provocation is sufficient to let 1st accused lose the balance of his mind and of his mind and kill Joseph Minah.”

In my view the law on the question of provocation is quite clear. In Archibold thirty-sixth edition at paragraph 2499.

“Provocation is defined as an act or a series of acts done by the deceased to the accused which would cause in any reasonable person and actually causes in the accused a sudden and temporary loss of self control rendering the accused so subject to passion as to make him for the moment not master of his mind. No provocation whatsoever can render homicide justifiable, or even excusable, but provocation may reduce the offence from murder to manslaughter.”

In the case of Mancini V.D.P.P. reported in 1942 A.C. at page 9 Viscount Simon had this to say:

“It is not all provocation that will reduce the crime of murder to manslaughter. Provocation to have that result must be such as to temporarily deprive the person provoked of the power of self control, as a result of which he commits the unlawful act which causes death.”

[p.72]

In the case of Helmes V D.P.P" reported in 31 Criminal Appeal Reports at page 123. It was held that a confession of adultery without move can never constitute a provocation sufficient to reduce murder to manslaughter. It is however different where a man actually discovers his wife in the act of adultery and there-upon kills her or him directly on the spot. It is well established that in a case where the evidence does not support the defence of provocation, it is the duty of the judge to direct the jury that the evidence does not support a verdict of manslaughter see Mancini V D.P.P. supra. Where however there is evidence to support this it is the duty of the judge to put the issue of provocation to the jury and for the jury to decide whether the accused killed the deceased as a result of provocation.

In the present case after having reviewed all the evidence including the statements of the appellant which I have narrated above and his statement from the dock, together with the evidence of Fatu Gbla and after considering all the authorities referred to supra I find myself in agreement with the Court of Appeal that there was no evidence to support the defence of provocation. Here was a man who knew that the deceased had been having an affair with his wife for three years and yet did nothing about it. In fact the wife admitted that she had been forced to confess to the appellant that she had been having an affair with the deceased. The appellant himself admitted that he could have issued a summons against the deceased but did not do so. I think that the trial judge went out of his way to direct the jury on provocation when there was no evidence to support that defence. I find no merit in this ground of appeal. The next point taken by counsel for the prosecution was that the trial judge substantially usurped the functions of the jury as judges of facts in assessing the weight of the evidence in this [p.73] case in his summing-up. He made particular reference to corroboration and referred this Court to certain portions in the summing up and I quote.

“Can you say that the boy was lying or that you are convinced that all he said was the truth, having regard to the fact that what he said was corroborated by PWJ another boy. PW3 from the witness box narrated to you almost exactly what he said, except the piece of evidence about the 1st accused remarks. It could be that the reason why PW3’s evidence did not corroborate that of PW2 on this piece of evidence is because PW2 resided with his father and mother. But apart from this but of PW2’s evidence PW2’s evidence was corroborated by the evidence of PW3 in every particular……..

If you believe him (PW2) then his evidence is sufficient corroboration about the utterances of the 1st accused and such utterances ought to assist you to make up your minds as to the guilt or otherwise of the 1st accused so far as the killing of Joseph Minah is concerned.”

In this case PW2 Tamu Korcma the son of the appellant and Fatu Gbla have given evidence on oath. PW3 Biareh Bangura had affirmed. There is nothing wrong with a witness affirming. Any person who objects to taking an oath because of his religious beliefs or because he has none is allowed to affirm, provided reasons are given for this. No evidence was given of the age of Tamu Koroma or Biareh Bangura and neither was any objection raised to their giving evidence on oath or in affirming in the instant case. As a general rule the Courts may act on the testimony of a single witness though uncorroborated if satisfied with such evidence. Corroboration is required by law and in practice in certain cases. In law however corroboration is [p.74] required when a child of tender years gives unsworn evidence. The jury should be warned of the danger of accepting the uncorroborated evidence of a child of tender years; See the case of R V Pitts reported in 8 Criminal Appeal Reports at page 126. There is no evidence to show that both PW2 and PW3 were children of tender years" and as such that their evidence needed corroboration. Even in cases where corroboration is necessary this need not be by another witness it may even be by an admission of the accused and it is the duty of the judge to point out instances of corroborative evidence as I think the trial judge was doing in the passages referred to supra. On this same ground Counsel fertile appellant complained about the identification of the body of Joseph Minah and how the learned trial judge dealt with it in his summing up and I quote.

“There can be no doubt that he is dead, and indeed we have portions of his remains in this Court; they were identified positively as belonging to the body; there were no attempts to query the identification, they are the factual remains of Joseph Minah”.

I must however disagree with the learned trial judge's direction in the above passage. I have come to this conclusion because of the evidence of the following people one Stanley Kaillie who said as follows:

“I had first visited 1st accused's house where I found a black juju bag hanging on the wall of his room. From there I took him to Mano Wharf by the river. Reaching a certain point 1st accused told me that it was at that point, that he attacked and stabbed Joseph Minah to death. We walked along the river edge where I found bones which looked liked human bones. I collected the bones and brought them to the Moyamba Police Post.”

[p.75]

Dr. Roberts also give evidence for the prosecution and said and I quote:

“I had cause to perform a post mortem examination on the skeleton remains of one Joseph Minah. The remains were identified to me by one Ansumana Kpaka. On examination the skeleton remains were:

The skull

Parts of lower and upper limb

Few ribs.

Soft tissues at the base of the skull. There were soft tissues left in the pelvic area. There were few pieces of rags which were alleged to be the clothes which the deceased was wearing when he died."

I entirely agree with Counsel for the appellant's submission about the identification of the body of Joseph Minah in the passages referred to supra. In my opinion all that was seen were the skull and some bones. I cannot understand how the identification was carried out and how they came to the conclusion that the bones and skull were those of Joseph Minah. There was however another passage in the summing-up in which the trial judge referred to the identification of the deceased. In this passage he said and I quote:

“Again after confirming the evidence of' PW2 the third witness for the prosecution said that when he and PW2 saw the floating corpse in the river they went and reported the matter to his father the second accused. The second accused went with them and some other people also. Second accused saw the corpse and [p.76] identified it to be that of Joseph Minah and instead of ordering the corpse to be brought ashore he gave instructions that the corpse should be pushed further up the river.”

I do not see how it can be said in this instance that the judge usurped the function of the jury. All the learned trial judge was doing in my view was to narrate and confirm the evidence of the prosecution witnesses. In any case there is ample evidence to show that the deceased Joseph Minah was dead. The statements of the appellant confirm this and so does the evidence of Tamu Koroma and Biareh Bangura both of whom actually testified to seeing the dead body of Minah floating on the river Even in cases where neither the body nor any trace of it has been found and the prisoner has not made any confession of any participation in the crime, the death is provable by strong circumstantial evidence which renders the commission of the crime certain and leaves no ground or reasonable doubt: See the case of R V Michel Onufrejizyk reported in volume 39 Cr. App. Report at page 1. In the present case the body was actually seen floating in the river by several persons who identified it and the appellant himself has confessed to the killing of Joseph Minah. As stated earlier the point that the statement was not made voluntarily was never raised. The statements as quoted above speak for themselves. In my view Counsel for the Respondent adequately and succinctly dealt with all the criticisms put forward by Counsel for the appellant.

Finally in my opinion I have come to the conclusion that the facts as proved at the trial were fairly and accurately put by the judge to the jury in his summing up. I therefore do not agree with Counsel for the appellant that the decision of the Court of Appeal was unreasonable or could not be supported having regard to the evidence. There was no misdirection and [p.77] I am therefore unable to allow the appeal.

[Sc. Civ. App. No. 5/80][p.78-93]

DIVISION: SUPREME COURT OF SIERRA LEONE

DATE: 14 JULY 1982

CORAM: MR. JUSTICE E. LIVESEY LUKE.C.J. PRESIDING; MR. JUSTICE C.A. HARDING J.S.C; MR. JUSTICE O.B.R. TEJAN J.S.C.; MRS. JUSTICE A.V. AWUNOR-RENNER J.S.C; MR. JUSTICE S. BECCLES DAVIES, J.S.C

FREETOWN COLD STORAGE CO. LTD, - APPELLANTS

AND

IGNATIUS GUILDFORD REFFELL - RESPONDENT

Smythe & Co. for the Appellants

J.E. Bankole-Jones, Esq for the Respondent

JUDGMENT DELIVERED THIS 14TH DAY OF JULY. 1982

LIVESEY LUKE C.J.

I have had the advantage of reading the judgment of my learned brother Beccles Davies, J.S.C. He has fully set out the facts. Therefore it is not necessary to recount them. I think that the two important issues in this appeal are:— firstly, whether the respondent resigned his appointment with the appellant company in February, 1976, and secondly, and in the alternative, whether the summary dismissal of the respondent by the appellant company was wrongful. I have said that the second issue is in the alternative, because if the first issue is decided in favour of the appellant company, then the second issue does not arise.

With regard to the first issue, the letter of resignation Ex. D and the resultant correspondence between the respondent and the appellant company have already been set out by my learned brother. Mr. Smythe, learned counsel for the appellant company, submitted that once the letter of resignation had been given, the contract of employment was at an end on the ground that resignation is a unilateral act, not requiring acceptance by the appellant company. He relied for this submission on [p79] Riordan v. The War Office (1959) 3 All E.R. 552.

In my opinion for a notice of termination of a contract to be effective it must be a valid notice. So if a contract is determinable by three months notice and a party to the contract gives only 1 week's notice, such a notice, admittedly a unilateral act, is not valid and therefore it is not effective to determine the contract. Similarly if according to the terms of a contract, written notice of termination should be given and one party gives oral notice, such notice is not valid and therefore it is not effective to determine the contract. Such action by the party giving the notice will clearly be a repudiation of the contract. So although the action of the party giving the notice is clearly a unilateral act, yet it is not valid and therefore not effective unless the innocent party accepts it. These general principles of the Law of contract were stated by Buckley L.J. in Decro-Wall International S.A. v. Practitioners in Marketing Ltd (1971) 1 W.L.R. 361 C.A. at P. 382 in these words:—

"Where a party to a contract gives notice to determine it pursuant to an expressed or implied term in that behalf, he is exercising a contractual right arising under that term of the contract. Where, on the other hand, the party who asserts that the contract has been determined has not in form given any notice determining the contract and has done nothing which can rationally be treated as an exercise of a contractual right to determine the contract unilaterally. I find it hard to see how he can properly be treated as having exercised his contractual right or termination

Since, as we have held, there had been no [p.80] earlier repudiation of the agreement by the defendant company, the latter was ineffective as an acceptance of repudiation. It constituted in fact a repudiation on the part of the plaintiff company.A repudiation and a notice of determination are clearly different things. A repudiation may be withdrawn at any time before acceptance a notice of determination validly given cannot thereafter be withdrawn without agreement."

These general principles are applicable to all types of contracts including contracts of Employment; See Harris & Russell Ltd,v. Slingsby (1973) 3 All E.R. 31 at p. 32. In a contract of employment therefore, for a notice of termination, whether given by the or the employee, to be effective it must be a valid notice. So if a contract of employment is determinable by one month's notice and a week's notice is given, the notice is invalid and therefore ineffective, unless the other party accepts it. The action of the party giving the invalid notice would be a repudiation and not a termination of the contract of' employment. That would clearly be a unilateral act but that does not mean that it is effective to determine the contract of employment. So if an employee gives an invalid notice of termination, the employer can ignore it and treat the contract of service as being in force. And if the employee persists in his action and leaves the employment at the end of the invalid notice, the employer pan sue him for breach of contract. Similarly, if the employer gives the employee an invalid notice or termination, the employee can ignore it. And if the employer persists in carrying into effect his invalid notice then the employee can sue him for damages for breach of contract i.e. wrongful dismissal.

Mr. Smythe relied on the following passage in the judgement of Diploock J. (as he then was) in Riordan V. The War Office (supra) at pp. 557-558—

"For the reasons, that I have indicated, I think that the regulations relating to the termination of employment must be regarded if not as the terms of a contract of employment at least as unalogous to the terms of such a contract and that the giving of a notice terminating the employment, whether by employee or employer, is the exercise of the right under the contract of employment to bring the contract to an end, either immediately, or in the future. It is a unilateral act, requiring no acceptance by the other party, and, like a notice to quit a tenancy, once given it cannot in my view be withdrawn save by mutual consent."

It is important to note that the notice of resignation in that case was held to be a valid notice. So in my opinion, what the learned Judge had in mind when he referred to "a notice terminating the employment" was a valid notice. And when he said that "once given it cannot…….be withdrawn" he was referring to a valid notice. It seems to me that he did not say, and did not intend to be understood to be saying, that an invalid notice of termination of a contract of employment or of a tenancy or of any other contract cannot be withdrawn. In my view what the learned judge said is that a valid notice of termination of contract is a unilateral act that does not need to be accepted by the other party to render it effective.

So the important question arises: Was the notice of resignation given by the respondent valid and effective? I think that it is common ground that the length of the notice required [p.82] to terminate the respondent's employment was one month. I think that it is trite law that a party wishing to terminate a contract of employment may instead of giving notice for the requisite period pay in lieu thereof the salary for the exquisite period. See Fawcett v. Cash 5 B & Ad. 904. So in the case of a contract of Employment where one month's notice of termination is required, either party may pay one month's salary in lieu of notice. In the instant case, the respondent stated inter alia in his notice of termination dated 4th February, 1976 (Ex. D)

"Re Letter of Resignation

1. Due to circumstances beyond my control, I beg to tender my resignation from this company forthwith.

2. In this respect I would like to ask you to please deduct one month pay from my dues in lieu of notice."

So what the respondent proposed to do was to terminate his employment without giving the requisite notice and offering one month's salary in lieu thereof. The reaction of the appellant company is contained in a series of letters that followed the appellant's letter of resignation. The first of such letters was dated 10th February, 1976 and signed by the Personnel Manager (Ex. "E"). It stated inter alia:

“In the circumstances Management has therefore not accepted your resignation and would only be in a position to do so after those pendings have been carefully gone through and sorted out. Until then you still remain a member of the Managerial staff of F.C.S.C Ltd. In charge of Cold Storage Branch, Kenema.”

The second letter was signed by the Personnel Manager and dated 16th February, 1976 (Ex."F"). It inter alia informed the [p.83] respondent that;

“Management requests that you make yourself available at any time during his next visit to Kenema from the 18th-24th February, 1976, to assist in sorting out all outstanding matters in that Branch....."

The next letter was dated 26th February, 1976 and was signed by the General Manager (Ex. "G"). It inter alia stated:

“In view of the foregoing you are therefore suspended from duty as from today, 26th February, 1976 until all aspects pertaining to this deficiency have been clarified.”

The final letter was dated 5th March, 1976 and signed by the Personnel Manager (Ex. "H"). It inter alia stated:

“We note with regret that you have failed to carry out our instructions and as such, you are today summarily dismissed from this Company.”

It is not disputed by the appellant company that up to the date of the dismissal and even up to the date the trial ended, the appellant company did not deduct the one month's pay in lieu of notice as requested by the respondent in paragraph 2 of his letter dated 4th February, 1976 (Ex. “D"). So in the instant case, the resignation was not an entirely unilateral act. The other party to the contract i.e. the appellant company, had to do something to complete the act of the respondent. They had to deduct the one month's salary, as salary in lieu of notice. But they failed to do that. Instead they insisted that the respondent was still in their employment. In keeping with that insistance, they requested the respondent to report for duty at their Kenema Branch. The respondent complied with that request, and worked at the Kenema Branch for two days, although he was then on leave. A few days later, the letter of suspension was [p.84] sent suspending the respondent from 26th February 1976, About a week later, the letter of Summary Dismissal was issued informing the respondent that “you are today summarily dismissed from this company.”

Having regard to the facts and circumstances stated above, the position, in my view, is as follows The respondent did not pay a month's salary in lieu of notice, nor has it ever been deducted from his salary, as requested by him. And up to today, no salary in lieu of notice has been paid or deducted. Therefore the respondent's letter of resignation stood, and still stands, naked, without any salary in lieu of notice to cloth it with validity. In my judgment therefore the notice of termination of his employment contained in the respondents letter of resignation was invalid and the resignation was therefore ineffective. Both parties, by their conduct, treated the contract of employment as being in existence until it was terminated by the appellant company on 5th March, 1976. In my opinion, the appellant company, having admitted their failure to deduct the month's salary in lieu of notice, cannot at the same time claim that the resignation was effective. They cannot take advantage of their own failure to render the resignation effective.

Before proceeding to consider the second issue, it is necessary to dispose of a preliminary issue relating to the pleadings. In their Defence the appellant company pleaded inter alia:—

"5. That on the 26th February 1976 the defendants by letter informed the plaintiff of all the discrepancies discovered and not having received a reply from the plaintiff suspended him from service and warned him that should he failed to present himself to Management to discuss and clear the [p.85] discrepancies further action will be taken. The plaintiff did not present himself as requested.

6. That the nature of the discrepancies was that the plaintiff phoned the Trading Firms of J.T . Chanrai and T. Choithram and ordered goods allegedly on behalf of the defendants. The goods were received into store and never accounted for in the books of the defendants as a result of which the defendants had to pay J.T. Chanrai Le1,182.00 and T. Choithram Ltd. Le1,684.05 thus incurring a total loss of Le 2,866.05.

7. That on the February, 1976 whilst the plaintiff was Manager of the defendants Store in Kenema a chit for Le50.00 for air Ticket was found signed by the plaintiff. There was no authority by Management for this and on the 16th February the plaintiff was queried by letter about this serious breach of the financial rules of the Company. He did not reply.

8. That as a result of all these enquiries the discrepancies were reported to the Police who after investigation arrested and charged both the plaintiff and his Storekeeper.

9. That after the preliminary Investigation the plaintiff and his storekeeper were committed to the High Court for trial where the plaintiff acquitted and the Storekeeper convicted for fraudulent conversion.

[p.86]

10. The plaintiff was dismissed by virtue of the provisions of section 9 of Chapter 212 of the laws of Sierra Leone the Employers and Employed Act."

Mr. Smythe submitted that paragraph 10 of the Defence entitled the appellant Company to rely on evidence of any matter not specifically pleaded to justify the dismissal of the respondent. It will be convenient to set out the section mentioned in para. 10 of the Defence. It reads:—

"10. Every contract of service wherein no agreement is expressed respecting its duration. not being a contract to perform some special work without reference to time, shall be determinable by either party —

(a) When the servant is engaged at a monthly wage, at the expiration of one month's notice which may be given at any time;

(b) When the servant is engaged at a weekly wage, at the expiration of one week's notice which my be given at any time; and

(c) When the servant is engaged at a daily wage, whether paid daily or not, at the close of any day without notice:

Provided that nothing in this section shall degorate from an employer's common law right to dismiss an employed for —

(i) willful disobedient of a lawful order;

(ii) gross moral misconduct, whether pecuniary or otherwise;

[p.87]

(iii) negligence in business, or conduct calculated seriously to injure the Employer's business;

(iv) incompetence, or permanent disability from illness:

Provided also that an employed shall not be entitled to determine a contract of service without notice to his employer whilst the employed is engaged in any journey or voyage."

Mr. Smythe's submission was that the appellant company could use the first proviso to the section as a basis to rely on evidence that was extracted from the respondent, under cross-examination, to the effect that post-dated cheques had been accepted at the Kenema Branch of the company, against instructions, while the respondent was the Manager of the Branch. Learned counsel further submitted that if the respondent wanted particulars of para. 10 of the Defence, he should have applied for them. What the submission amounts to is, that by that pleading, the appellant company had been presented with a carte blanche to go on a fishing expedition, during the trial in search of evidence in support of an unspecified allegation. I do not agree with learned counsel's submission. In the first place, my understanding of the Defence is that in paragraphs 5 to 9 thereof, the facts justifying the dismissal of the respondent were pleaded and that paragraph 10 merely stated the legal authority for the action taken by the appellant company on the basis of the facts previously pleaded. I do not understand para. 10 as pleading facts or circumstances justifying the dismissal. In those circumstances, no question of applying for or furnishing of particulars arose. The fact justifying the dismissal and particulars thereof had already been given in the previous paragraphs 5-9.

Secondly, it is important to emphasise that section 9 of the employers and employed Act (Cap. 212) makes provision for the determination of contracts of employment, where there is no express provision in the contract relating to its duration. Subsections (a) (b) & (c) provide for termination with notice, and the first proviso relates to termination without notice. By pleading as they did in their paragraph 10, the appellant company were in effect saying that they acted under the section, because there was in the contract of service between them and the respondent "no agreement is express respecting its duration"

In my opinion, the first proviso to the section does not confer any rights on any employer. It merely saves rights which employers already had at common law. The rights are conferred by the common law and not by the section or its provision. So by pleading the section the appellant company were not thereby pleading rights itemized in the provision thereto, because those rights were not conferred by the section or its provision, If an employer wants to plead his common law right of summary dismissal he should plead the common law, Similarly, if for example, a section of a statute provided as follows:

"Provided that nothing in this section shall derogate from a person's fundamental right of freedom of speech and freedom of movement under the Constitution of Sierra Leone."

It cannot be seriously contended that the fundamental rights of freedom of speech and freedom of movement were conferred by that section or by the proviso, Those rights are conferred by the Constitution, and if a person wants to plead those rights it is the Constitution that he should plead and not the above quoted proviso. So, strictly, speaking, what the appellant company pleaded is that they had dismissed the respondent under the provisions of sub-section (a) or,(b) or (c) of' the Section.

[p.89]

I think that it is well-settled that to entitle A defendant in an action for wrongful dismissal to rely on any ground as justification for the dismissal, the ground of dismissal must be specifically pleaded. In Tomlinson v. L.M.S. Railway Co. (1944) 1 All E.R. 537 Goddard L.J. (as he then was) said inter alia at p. 541:—

"Therefore to make it a good and proper pleading they ought to have alleged, by way of showing that they were not bound to have obeyed the provisions of the memorandum alleged in the Statement of Claim, that the plaintiff had been guilty of exceptionally grave misconduct in which summary action by the management was justifiable …….

I still think that the defence, in order properly to raise this, ought to have alleged exceptionally grave misconduct, and that summary action was justifiable."

In my judgment therefore the pleading in paragraph 10 of the Defence did not entitle the appellant company to rely on any allegation not specifically pleaded in the other paragraphs of the Defence.

There is an added reason why this court should not allow that piece of evidence referred to above to be used by the appellant company in justification of the dismissal. And that is that from the records, it would appear that both at the trial and in the Court of Appeal the appellant company did not rely on it to justify the dismissal. This is how that piece of evidence was elicited. In his evidence-in-chief, the respondent had referred to the various items listed in Ex.J (relating to dishonoured post dated cheques etc.) and had said that he did not accept the amounts stated therein as justifiable deductions from his entitlements due [p.90] from the company. That evidence was in support of his from the Company. That evidence was in support of his claim for special damages particularized in paragraph 4 of his statement of claim. Counsel for the appellant Company cross-examined him on the various items in the course of which the dishonoured cheques and other documents were tendered and admitted in evidence. In my opinion that piece of evidence was relevant and relative to the issue of whether or not the appellant company were justified in making deductions from the respondent's entitlement in respect of the dishonoured cheques. According to the trial Judge's notes, in the address of Counsel for the appellant company, apart from conceding that no evidence was led in respect of one of the items listed in Ex. J. as having been deducted from the respondent's entitlement, no reference was made to Ex. J. or the piece of evidence elicited under cross-examination as stated above. Learned Counsel concentrated his attention on the submission that the respondent had resigned his employment and that therefore no question of wrongful dismissal arose. The notes end as follows:

"I ask Court to believe the evidence of D.W.2 and D.W.l. I would ask Court to dismiss the plaintiff's case for wrongful dismissal and allow one item of the claim." Presumably the one item he said should be allowed was the one in respect of which he had previously made a concession. So what he was saying in effect was that it had been shown that the other claims itemized in the particulars had been justifiably deducted from the respondent's entitlement and therefore the respondent's claim in respect of them should be dismissed. As regards his reference to the evidence of D. W. 1 and D.W.2 it is important to state that their evidence related entirely to the allegations made in paragraphs 6 and 7 of the Defence. Neither of them made any mention of any dishonoured cheques. According to the notes of the Presiding Justice in the Court of Appeal, learned counsel for the appellant company argued only two issues, namely whether the respondent had resigned his employment and whether the trial Judge had wrongly considered the evidence [p.91] that the respondent had been acquitted by Criminal Court. No mention was made of the evidence relating to dishonoured cheques. It is not surprising therefore that neither of the two judgments delivered by the Justices of the Court of Appeal made any mention of that evidence. It is therefore obvious that the whole basis on which the case was fought both in the High Court and in the Court of Appeal was whether the respondent had resigned his employment or whether his dismissal had been justified on the ground of the allegations stated in paragraphs 5 to 9 of the Defence, particularly paragraphs 6 and 7 thereof. In those circumstances I think that it is too late in the day for the appellant company to change front by presenting their case before this court on an entirely different basis.

I shall now turn my attention to the second issue. The two allegations relevant to this issue are (i) That in February, 1976 while the respondent was Manager of the appellant company's store at Kenema he took Le50 from the cashier of the Supermarket to pay for an air ticket and that he issued a chit for the amount (para.7 of Defence); and (ii) That he ordered and received goods into the store from T. Choithram Ltd. totaling Le1,684.05 and never accounted for them in the books of the company. The respondent admitted taking Le50 and issuing the chit. He said that he used the Le50 to pay for a return air ticket to Freetown on official business as had been happening before. He denied placing any orders with T. Choithram Ltd. for goods to be supplied or receiving any goods supplied by T. Choithram Ltd. The learned trial judge found that the allegations were not proved.

With regard to the Le50 taken from the cashier, the evidence is that the respondent was on, leave and wished to travel to Freetown. The respondent was recruited in Freetown in January, 1966. He was first appointed Assistant Sales Manager on probation on 13th January, 1966. His probationary period ended on 30th April, 1966. He was transferred to Kenema in October, 1966 by [p.92] letter dated 20th October, 1966 (Ex. “C”). In that letter he was instructed to fly to Kenema on that same day. He was promoted Manager in November, 1967. It is common practice in this country for employers in both the public and private sectors to pay the transport expenses of their employees to their towns and villages within the country while they are on leave. The respondent was a Manager, yet in this day and age the appellant company penalized him for taking a mere Le50 from the cashier to delay his transport expenses to his place of recruitment. In my opinion if the respondent's action was a breach of the company's regulations, it was such a minor infraction that it did not warrant the extreme sanction of summary dismissal.

With regard to the goods alleged to have been ordered from T. Choithram Ltd., the trial Judge said that he did not accept the evidence of the only witness on that allegation' (D.W.2). That witness (D.W.2) had said that the respondent had made the order by telephone, that he knew the respondent's voice, that subsequent to the supply of the goods he saw the respondent in his (D.W.2) office, that he asked the respondent about the goods supplied and that he replied that the appellant company would pay for them. According to the evidence the goods were received and signed for by the Storekeeper. The learned Judge accepted that evidence. It was the storekeeper's responsibility to enter the receipt of the goods in the Company's books, but he failed to do so. We are invited to reverse the findings of fact of the learned trial Judge on the ground that he overlooked the evidence of D.W.2 relating to the discussion held in D.W.2's office about the supply of the goods. In this connection it is relevant to state that when the respondent was being cross-examined by counsel for the appellant company no' questions relating to the alleged discussion were put to him. And when D.W.2 was being crossed-examined by counsel for the respondent, it was suggested to him that no such discussion ever took place. If we were to act on D.W.'s evidence about the [p.93] discussion, we shall be assuming that he was a credible witness and that his evidence was true. We shall be making a finding of fact on the assumption that the witness was a credible witness. In these circumstances, I do not think that we would be justified to reverse the findings of fact of the trial Judge, concurred in by the Justices of the Court of Appeal merely because the learned trial Judge did not take that piece of evidence into consideration.

In conclusion, I find myself in agreement with the trial Judge and with the three Justices of the Court of Appeal that the dismissal of the respondent by the appellant company was wrongful.

In the result I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

[P.94]

BECCLES DAVIES. J.S.C.

The Respondent was employed by the Appellants at their branch in Kenema from 1966 to 1976 when, to use a neutral expression his services terminated.

The Respondent had sued the appellants claiming damages for wrongful dismissal. The Appellants resisted the claim.

The substance of the Respondent's claim is to be found in paragraph J and 4 of his Statement of Claim. They are in these terms—

"3. By letter dated February 1976, the Plaintiff was suspended from duty on that date and by letter dated the 5th of March 1976, the plaintiff was wrongfully and summarily dismissed from the service of the Defendant Company with effect from the date of the letter, that is to say, 5th March,1976.

[p.95]

4. By reason of the said dismissal plaintiff has incurred loss and suffered damage."

Quite apart from paragraph 11 of Appellants. Defence which contains a general denial of the allegations in the Respondent's claim, the defence rested on three assertions. Those assertions were—

(i) the respondent's resignation from the appellants service;

(ii) discovery of "very serious discrepancies" in his store and

(iii) the dismissal of the respondent by virtue of Section 9 of the Employers and Employed Act. These assertions are to be found on paragraphs 2, 3 and 10 of the defence. They state—

"2. The Descendants will contend that by 1etter dated 4th February 1976 the plaintiff resigned from his employment and never in fact worked after that date for the Defendants

3.. The Defendants will contend that it was after the discovery of very serious discrepancies in the store over which the plaintiff was Manager that the plaintiff sought to resign.

10. The plaintiff was dismissed by virtue of the provisions of Section 9 of chapter 212 of the Laws of Sierra Leone, the Employers and Employed Act.

A reply was filed by the Respondent. It was that the plaintiff joins issue with the defendants upon their defence."

[p.96]

No mention was made in the respondent's statement of claim that he had submitted a letter of resignation to the appellants by which he had sought to withdraw from the service of the latter. It came to light from the Appellant defences. Even though such resignation had been raised by the appellants the respondent did not plead of waiver by both parties of such resignation. Waiver of the letter of resignation was however raised in the respondent evidence at the trial. Such a plea requires a special reply and merely "joining issue" on the defence would be inadequate pleading.

As the learned authors of the Eleventh Edition of BULLEN AND LEAKE'S PRECEDENTS OF PLEADINGS explain at page 694—

“But frequently the plaintiff must do something more than merely traverse the Defence. For a joiner of issue merely contradicts the facts alleged by the defendant; and the plaintiff may often require to set up, some affirmative case of his own in answer to those facts."

The effect therefore of the respondent's reply as regards the letter of resignation was to contradict the appellants' assertion that he (the respondent) had tendered a letter of resignation. In the circumstances of this case, the respondent should have filed a special reply setting forth his claim to a waiver of the resignation (See precedent No. 801 at page 890 of BULLEN AND LEAKE'S PRECEDENTS referred to above).

The defence had pleaded the matters I have already referred to earlier in this judgment. The matters alleged were in the alternative - the respondent's resignation, his discharge of duties and the claim by virtue of the provisions of Section 9 of the Employers and Employed Act. Section 9 as regards the dismissal of an employee states—

[p.97]

“Provided that nothing in-this Section--shall derogate from an employers common law right to dismiss an employed for—

(i) Wilful disobedience of a lawful order;

(ii) gross moral misconduct, whether pecuniary or otherwise;

(iii) negligence in business, or conduct calculated seriously to injure the employer's business;

(iv) incompetence, or permanent disability from illness …….”

Sub-paragraph (i)-(iv) above contain those grounds on which an employer could dismiss his employee. The respondent should have applied for further and better particulars of the acts justifying dismissal under Section 9. He did not make such a request. The plea contained in paragraph 10 of the appellants' defence was couched in rather vague terms. The purpose of a request for further and better particulars is to tie down the opposite party and so prevent him from adducing evidence at the trial which might support his vague allegation. The case of WELLS V WEEKS 1965 1 W.L.R. 45 comes to mind. In a Statement of Claim in an action for negligence, the plaintiff had set out particulars of negligence alleged in a paragraph which concluded with the words “The plaintiff will also rely on Section 74 “of the Road Traffic Act, 1960 and on all the provisions of the Highway Code applicable to the drivers of motor vehicles in so far as the same are applicable in the circumstances”. The 'action went to trial without further and better particulars of the statement of claim being requested by the defendant. Lawton J. stated that pleading in such an imprecise manner was, virtually inviting a request for further and better particulars of the Statement of Claim, he was surprised that no such request had been made. He however refrained from further commenting on the matter.

[p.98]

The portion in this case is similar to that in WELLS V WEEKS above. The respondent in his own interest should have applied for further and better particulars.

I have highlighted the above matters to demonstrate that neither party seemed to have paid attention to a strict observance of the rules of pleading.

I now come to consider the case as a whole.

The respondent gave evidence at the trial. He called no witness. He narrated how he had been appointed by the appellants and transferred from Freetown to their Kenema Branch. He had been appointed as Assistant to the Manager of that branch. His duties included the checking of stock is receiving cash from the different departments of the branch posting of debtors accounts and watching the day to day running of the supermarket and pharmacy respectively He said he was appointed to the substantive post of Manager to the branch with consequential increase in his duties. He had in addition to his duties prior to his appointment, the responsibility for the accounts and correspondent. He was dissatisfied with the situation in which he had found himself after his promotion, because despite his promotion to the post of Manager, the appellants kept him on his old salary as Assistant to the Manager. He had expressed his dissatisfaction with the salary paid to him and had made verbal requests for an increase. The appellants had done nothing about it. He submitted a written petition which suffered the same fate as the verbal request preceding it. In disgust, he tendered his resignation from the appellants service on 4th February 1976. He claimed that the appellants had refused to accept the resignation. He was at the branch on 17th and 18th February to clear outstanding matters.

The appellants had alleged in a letter to him that he had ordered goods from Messrs. T. Choithram which were not accounted for in his books. He was summarily dismissed on 5th March 1976.

[p.99]

That was in broad outline the respondent is evidence in Chief at the trial in the High Court

The respondent was duly cross-examined. The cross-examination dealt with the respondent is resignation, acceptance of' post-dated cheques from customers, unpaid cheques, goods unaccounted for in the appellants' books which had been ordered from T. Choithram and Sons Limited. The respondent was re-examined by his Counsel. His case was then closed.

Two witnesses were called on behalf of the appellants Messrs Joseph Menjoh and Gordon Balwani (or Malirani).

Mr. Menjoh's evidence related to (a) the appellants prohibition against the acceptance of post dated cheques in payment for goods bought (b) the procedure to be adopted in accepting goods supplied into the appellants' stock (c) goods ordered from T. Choithram and Sons which were un-accounted for in the appellant books kept by the respondent (d) which transferred to Freetown for repairs and (e)the unauthorised withdrawal of Le50 from the appellants' funds by the respondent for the payment of his air passage to Freetown.

Mr. Balwani's evidence concerned the goods which had been ordered on behalf of the appellants from T. Choithram and Sons which were unpaid for.

I ought at this stage to consider the respondent's letter of resignation. It was in these terms—

“ Box 184

The General Manager

Messrs F.C.S.C. Ltd.

Freetown.

Dear Sir,

RE: LETTER OF RESIGNATION

1. Due to circumstances beyond my control, I beg to tender my resignation from this Company forthwith.

[p.100]

2. In this respect I would like to ask you to please deduct one month pay from my dues in lieu of notice.

3. Kindly use your good offices to arrange all my affairs in that I am just in Freetown for a couple of days before returning to Kenema where I intend to stay permanently.

4. Thanking you for interest over the years.

Yours truly,

Ignatius G. Reffell.”

The appellants reply to the above letter is Exhibit E. It states –

" Mr. I.G. Reffell

Box 184

Kenema

Date: 10.2.76

Dear Sir,

RE: LETTER OF RESIGNATION

We acknowledge receipt of your letter of 4th inst. resigning your post as Manager of our Kenema Cold Storage Branch.

On the 5th inst. you called on Management and had a brief discussion with him on the matter in the presence of the Personnel Manager and Mr. Quinter; as there are several matters that are still pending which are to be clarified by you as Manager in charge of that department, Management instructed you to spare the time and sort out these pendings which could have been done then as you had your documents with you. You then informed him that you would let him know the same afternoon if you would find the time to do so; but strangely enough you didn't.

In the circumstances Management has therefore not accepted your resignation and would only be in a position to do so after those pendings have been carefully gone through and sorted out. Until then you still remain a member of the Management staff of F.C.S.C. Ltd in charge of Cold Store Branch, Kenema.

[p.101]

You are however given another chance to communicate with Management and arrange with him a day and time convenient to both parties for you to meet and amicably sort out all outstanding matters.

We trust you will this time appreciate the advisability of co-operating with Management.

Yours faithfully

Freetown Cold Storage Company Limited

Personnel Manager."

The appellants claimed that they had no response to the above letter from the respondent. They addressed another letter to him dated 16th February 1976. They said —

Dear Mr. Reffell,

RE: OUTSTANDING HATTERS - KENEMA COLD STORE BRANCH

Further to our letter of 10 inst. regarding the above Management requests that you make yourself available at any time during his next visit to Kenema from the 18th - 24th February 1976, to assist in sorting out all outstanding matters in that Branch, give full explanation to all queries arising there from and settling same. Should you fail to do so, Management will feel free to do it alone and if any financial discrepancies are found during the investigations, the total amount involved will be debited to your account with us.

UNAUTHORISED WITHDRAWAL OF LE50.00

To the horror and dismay of Management, a cash chit dated 3rd February 1976 for Le50.00 was found signed by you for an air ticket. As Management has not authorised any air ticket we should like to know on whose authority this was done, and if it was meant to be an advance, who authorised it as staff advances in this [p.102] Company can only be authorized by the Branch Manager of the area of management in Freetown.

Yours faithfully

Freetown Cold Storage Company Ltd.

Personnel Manager."

The General Manager of the appellants' Company visited Kenema to discuss matters connected with the Cold Store Branch at Kenema which had been under the respondent's Management. The visit was either on the 18th or 20th February 1976. On the return of their General Manager to Freetown, the appellants addressed a letter to the respondent dated 26th February 1976. They wrote—

"Dear Mr. Reffel,

References made to our letter of the 10th February 1976. Please be informed that our investigations have revealed that you appeared to have ordered by telephone from Messrs. T. Choithram and Sons Kenema, goods to the total value of Le1,684.05 as per invoices Nos. 3681, 3682, 3683, 3684 and 3695 on various dates during the month of January 1976. Our investigations showed further that these goods were received into stock but were never debited into the daily stock-movement sheet. They were therefore never officially accounted for in the Company's records. According to a statement from Storekeeper which we have in our possession, the instructions not to account for these goods were given by you.

In view of the foregoing you are therefore suspended from duty as from today 26th February 1976 until all aspects pertaining to this deficiency have been c1arified. You are also requested to present yourself to this office immediately and to furnish whatever explanations you may have pertaining to the above. Should you fail to do so until 3rd March 1976, Management will feel free to take whatever action is deemed necessary.

Yours faithfully

Freetown Cold Storage Company Ltd.

(Sgd.) General Manager."

[p.103]

The respondent did not reply to the above letter. He had told the trial judge that he had received it together with the subsequent letter summarily dismissing him from the appellants' service. The letter of dismissal is dated 5th March 1976.

It stated —

"Dear Sir,

SUMMARY DISMISSAL

We refer to our letter of suspension to you dated 26th February 1976 when you were also instructed to call and see us and furnish us with explanations pertaining to the discrepancies mentioned in that letter not later than the 3rd of March 1976.

We note with regret that you have failed to carry out our instructions and as such, you are today summarily dismissed from this Company.

Your entitlements will be paid to you as soon as we are able to complete our investigations on the discrepancies which occurred in our Kenema Cold Store Branch during the term of your office.

Yours faithfully

Freetown Cold Storage Company Ltd.

Personnel Manager."

The correspondence reveal the following:—

(a) The respondent's resignation from the service of the appellants with effect from 4th February 1976.

(b) The appellants postponement of the respondent is resignation until certain outstanding matters between them prior to the resignation had been disposed of.

(c) the appellants' dismissal of the respondent for non-compliance with the former's request to settle the outstanding matters between them.

[p.104]

The respondent was entitled to certain financial benefits from the appellants. Instead of submitting a month's salary in lieu of a month's prior notice to determine his employment he had requested the appellants to deduct a month's salary from his entitlements. In my opinion, that would be sufficient set off; if an action were brought by the appellants claiming the equivalent of a month's salary in lieu of notice the respondent would have had a valid defence under a plea of payment. The respondent need not go through the ceremony of handing in a month's salary when he could have received his benefits less a month's salary, which would have amounted to paying a month's salary in lieu of notice.

There is evidence that the appellants were claiming certain amounts of money from the respondent against the latter's entitlements. A month's salary could have been deducted by the appellants before paying him the balance and that would have been equally as good as if he had handed in a months notice; and the whole of his entitlements had been paid to him without, deduction.

"The allowance of cross demands on an account stated between the plaintiff and the defendant and payment of the balance by the latter, is a good payment of the entire claim". (See CALLANDER V HOWARD 1850 10 C.B. 290).

It does not appear from the Statement of Account - Exhibit J. that the appellants had deducted an amount equivalent to a month's salary, from the respondent's entitlements. The appellants had by their letter attempted to suspend the operation of the respondent's resignation. Indeed they paid him for the month of February (the month for which he had requested them to deduct a month's salary from his benefits) on the 5th March when they "terminated" his services. The appellants were undoubtedly in error to have thought that they could suspend-the" operation of the respondent's letter of resignation.

[p.105]

The month's salary which was paid by the appellants to the respondent was clearly paid to him under a mistake of law. It would be irrecoverable from the respondent by the appellants since it had been paid in consequence of such a mistake. The respondent could still keep the month's salary in lieu of notice which should have been in the appellants coffers.

The rule of law is that when once notice of determination of a contract of employment is given it cannot be withdrawn unilaterally. It can only be done with the mutual consent of the employer and the employed. In dealing with a notice of determination of his contract by an employee and the withdrawal of the notice before its expiration the court in HARRIS & RUSSEL LTD. V SLINGSBY 1973 3 All E.R. 31 at page 32 had said:—

"……. the court is satisfied that where one party to a contract gives a notice determining that contract he cannot thereafter unilaterally withdrawn the notice. It will of course be open to the party to agree to his withdrawing the notice, but in the absence of agreement the notice must stand and the contract will be terminated on the effluxion of the period of notice…… Once notice is given by either side it cannot be withdrawn, save by agreement." (See also RIODAN V WAR OFFICE 1959 3 All E.R. 552).

The respondent's resignation was without notice and should have taken effect immediately it was received by the appellants. Its operation could not have been suspended.

The respondent had sought to raise an issue of waiver of his resignation. He claimed that he had decided to continue working for the appellants after the latter had "refused" to accept his resignation. The appellants did not refuse to accept his resignation as he claimed. They merely purported to suspend the resignation until certain matters were disposed of and considered him to be in their service until such matters ere settled.

[p.106]

In the relevant potions of his evidence dealing with his resignation, the respondent had said—

"……From the date of my resignation I did not work for the defendants except the two days I have mentioned when I went to the office at Kenema to settle discrepancies. ……. I was asked to reconsider my resignation and I replied no. As far as I was concerned I was not working anymore for the defendants until I received their letter refusing to accept my resignation.

"……They told me that they could not accept my resignation until I cleared the discrepancies on the radio Section in Kenema. I told them I would let them know in the afternoon …… I said to them I had resigned and so I never returned to them."

There is no evidence whatsoever of any mutual agreement between the appellants and the respondent to waive the latter's letter of resignation, and that being so, the resignation was effective as from 4th February 1976.

The appellants did not deduct a month's salary from the respondent's entitlements because they were under the belief that they had a right to keep him in their service until the alleged discrepancies were examined before honouring his resignation. Having kept him in their service after his resignation they paid him until his purported dismissal. Suppose there were no discrepancies and the respondent had resigned making the same request to the appellants to deduct a month's salary from his entitlements in lieu of notice and the appellants did not choose to deduct it from his entitlements, would that have rendered the resignation invalid? I do not think so.

Assuming for a moment that the respondent was in the service of the appellants at the time of his purported dismissal by the appellants, were they justified in so dismissing him? The evidence adduced at the trial fell into the following categories—

(a) goods alleged to have been ordered from to Choithram and Sons by the respondent which were unaccounted for in the appellants books and for which they subsequently paid (b) the unauthorised use chit for Le50.00 for an air ticket and (c) the acceptance of post dated cheques which were dishonoured and kept by him until the time of his purported dismissal. The matters complained of could be categorized as alleged acts of misconduct and disobedience what then is misconduct within the context of the law of Master and Servant? I find the following statement of the law in the 21st Edition of CHITTY ON CONTRACTS at page 549—

"Misconduct. If a servant be guilty of misconduct, he may be discharged without no notice before the expiration of the period for which he was hired, and he is not entitled to any wages preceding his discharge if they had not then accrued due. There is no fixed rule of law defining the degree of misconduct which will justify dismissal. The general rule is that if the servant does anything which is incompatible with the due and faithful discharge of his duty to his master the latter has a right to dismiss him, even though the incompatible thing be done outside the service……"

Lord James of therefore in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council in CLOUSTON CO. V CORRY 1904 - 1907 All E.R. Reprint said at page 687 -

"The sufficiency of the justification depended upon the extent .of the misconduct. There is no fixed rule of law defining the degree of misconduct which will justify dismissal.

[p.108]

Of course there may be misconduct in a servant which will not justify the determination of the contract of service by one of the parties to it against the will of the other. On the other hand misconduct inconsistent with the express or implied conditions of service will justify dismissal……"

At page 5.50

"Disobedience: A servant may be dismissed if he willfully disobey any lawful order of his master."

The ground of dismissal must be specifically pleaded. The ease cited for this proposition in BULLEN AND LEAKE'S PRECEDENTS OF PLEADINGS is Tomlinson V. L.M.S. Railway 1944 1 All E.R. 537. Like in Tomlinson's case misconduct and disobedience were not specifically pleaded by the appellants. As I had indicated earlier on, misconduct and disobedience are grounds for summary dismissal of a servant by his master under the proviso to Section 9 of the Employers and Employed Act. No request for further and better particulars of what was relied on in Section 9 by the appellants as justifying the respondent's alleged dismissed, was made on the latter's behalf. Goddard L.J. who dealt with the issue in Tomlinson's case had said at page 541 of the report—

"……..Unfortunately nowadays enough attention is not given to pleadings……. to make it a good and proper pleading they ought to have alleged …… that the plaintiff had been guilty of exceptionally grave misconduct in which summary action by the management was justifiable.

[p.109]

However for the reasons pointed out by Lord Greene M.R. that becomes immaterial, because it was made clear at the outset that the Company were relying on the conduct as being exceptionally grave misconduct. No objection was taken at the trial on that ……..I still think the defence in order properly to raise this, ought to have alleged exceptionally grave misconduct and that summary action was justifiable."

Where a matter is required by the rules of pleading to be specially pleaded would failure on the part of the party who is expected to plead it fatal to the action? The rule governing such special pleas is Order 19 rule 15 of the English Practice with a corresponding provision in Order XVI rule 11 of the Rules of' the High Court of' Sierra Leone. In dealing with the question I have posed above, Buckley L.J. in Re Robinson's Settlement GANT V HOBBS 1912 1 Ch 717 explained the position thus—

"……..Order XIX rule 15 provides that the defendant must by his pleading do various things but it names no consequence if he does not do those things …… it applies to all cases' of grounds of defence or reply which if not raised would be likely to take the opposite party by surprise or raise issues of fact not arising from the pleadings. Where the defendant ought to plead things of that sort the rule does not say that if he does not the court shall adjudicate upon the matter as if a ground valid in law did not exist ……. The effect of the rule is, I think, for reasons of practice and justice and convenience to require the party [p.110] to tell his opponent what he is coming to the court to prove; If he does not do that the court will deal with it in one of two ways. It may say that it is, not open to him, that he has not raise it and will not be allowed to rely on it; or it may give him leave to amend by raising it, and protect the other party if necessary by letting the case stand over. The rule is not one that excludes from the consideration of the court the relevant subject matter for decision simply on the ground that it is not pleaded. It leaves the part in mercy and the court will deal with him as is just……."

No objection was taken in this case that misconduct had not been specially pleaded. The evidence which each party wished to adduce was presented to the court. It is in that light that the matter has to be considered.

The appellants adduced evidence that the respondent had ordered goods from Messrs. T. Choithrams and Sons by telephone. The goods were supplied to the appellants but never passed through their books. The respondent's defence was that he had not ordered the goods from the Manager of Choithram. Mr. Balwani the Manager gave evidence of how the respondent had ordered the goods by telephone. He (the respondent) had reminded Mr. Balwani on the following day about the order he had put in on the previous day. Mr. Balwani said he knew the respondent's voice over the telephone. When the goods were not paid for, Mr. Balwani on the respondent's visit to his (Balwani's) office took the opportunity of requesting payment for them. The respondent assured him that the appellants would pay for them. The trial judge in dealing with the evidence on this issue had thought that the telephone conversation could have been made by someone else and not the respondent.

[p.111]

He overlooked the evidence relating to the discussion between the respondent and Mr. Balwani in the letter's office.

The next issue related to the unauthorized use of Le50 by the respondent in meeting the cost of his air passage to Freetown to tender his resignation.

The appellants had given the respondent written instructions regarding sales. The instructions are contained in a letter dated 2nd June 1973. The relevant portions state—

"…….we therefore draw your attention to the fact that no goods should be issued out on credit or suspense basis, payment upon delivery.

We wish to remind you as well, that no post dated cheques should be accepted without prior reference to the management and any bounced cheque have to be reported on the same date to the Manager Kenema Mineral Water Factory."

Contrary to the above instructions, the respondent received post dated cheque which had been paid in by customers and handed to him. Some of which were not honoured by the bank.

There was the case of Mr. Hedjazi. He had issued a cheque of Le578.GO for goods bought from the appellant's store. It was issued on 23rd January 1975. It was not honoured by the bank. The respondent kept it for six months. Hedjazi presumably had no funds to meet it. A fresh cheque was then issued by HedJazi for the same amount on 1st July 1975 and remained unpaid until the respondent's dismissal. Despite the dishonour of those cheques, the respondent received more post dated cheques from Hedjazi which he paid into the Bank on 15th October, 14th December and 16th December 1975 respectively. It appears that those cheques were honoured. Two of those cheques were for Le100 and the third was for Le300.

[p.112]

The appellants conduct regarding the goods ordered from Choithram was such that no employer would have confidence in such an employee. His conduct was incompatible with the due and faithful discharge of his duties to his employer. Lord James in CLOUSTON'S CASE had spoken of an employee's terms of his contract of service as entitling his employer to dismiss hi. One of the implied terms of an employee's contact is that he shall act towards his employer with the fidelity and good faith.

As regards the ultimate acceptance of post dated cheques and the holding back of dishonoured cheques, the respondent was clearly disobedient to lawful orders issued by his employer, which I have already set out.

The acceptance of post dated cheques, and the holding back of dishonoured cheques would naturally impair the appellants' business especially o when goods have been given out on them. That would be injurious to the appellants, business. An employee who conducts himself in such a way as to injure his employer's business is liable to summary dismissal. (See Diamond on Master and Servant 2nd Edition at page 192). On this issue the appellants were justified in dismissing the respondent both for misconduct and disobedience.

I would hold that the respondent had no case against the appellants and his action ought to have been dismissed. I would uphold the appeal and enter an order of dismissal of the respondent's case in the High Court. I would also set aside the decision of the Court of Appeal.

Costs to the appellants.

DIVISION: SUPREME COURT OF SIERRA LEONE

DATE: 24 FEBRUARY 1982

CORAM: MR. JUSTICE E. LIVESEY LUKE.C.J. PRESIDING; MR. JUSTICE C.A. HARDING J.S.C; MR. JUSTICE O.B.R. TEJAN J.S.C.; MRS. JUSTICE A.V. AWUNOR-RENNER J.S.C; MR. JUSTICE S. BECCLES DAVIES; J.S.C

James Allie and Others v. The State

(Constitutional Reference)

Berthan Macauley Jr. for the 2nd Appellant

Tejan-Cole. D.P.P. for the State

Delivered on 24th day of February, 1982.

JUDGMENT

LIVESEY LUKE C.J.

This is a reference by the Court of Appeal under the provisions of Section 104(2) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1978. The questions of law referred by that Court to the Supreme Court for determination are in the following terms:—

"1. Should Section 103(1)(b) be read together with Section 108(2) of the Constitution of' Sierra Leone. 1978? If so, what effect would that have on the right or appellants who must have leave from the Court of Appeal to prosecute their appeals against sentence and conviction on the grounds of mixed law and, fact?

[p.11]

2. Do the provisions of Section 57 of the Courts Act No. 31 of 1965, conflict with the provisions of Section 108(2) of the Constitution? If so, are criminal forms 1, 2 and 3 of Appendix C of the Rules of the Court of Appeal, P.N. 28 of 1973 obsolete?

3. What extent does section 108 (2) of the constitution affect sections 56 and 57 of the courts Act 1965 and the Court of Appeal Rules?

4. Are all appeals from the High Court to the court of Appeal as of right having regard to section 108 (2) of the Constitution and Sections 56 and 57 of the courts act 1965?"

The court of Appeal considered it necessary to refer these questions to the Supreme Court as a result of certain submissions made by learned counsel for one of the appellants during the hearing by the Court of Appeal of appeal titled Cr. App. 15/80 James Allie and others v. The State. Learned Counsels submission was to the effect that in view of the provisions of section 103 (1) (b) and Section 108 (2) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1978 which he submitted should be read together, and Section 162 of the same Constitution, leave to appeal was no longer necessary to appeal from the High Court to the Court of Appeal against conviction (whatever the grounds of appeal) or sentence. Learned counsel later informed the court that he had reconsidered his submission and conceded that he had misconstrued Section 108 (2) of the [p.12] constitution. But the Court o£ Appeal insisted that the questions raised should be referred to the Supreme Court for determination as they were o£ the opinion that important points of law on the interpretation of the Constitution had arisen.

It would appear therefore that notwithstanding the concession of learned Counsel, the members of the Court were of the view that questions relating to the interpretation of the Constitution had arisen. In those circumstances they felt obliged, having regard to the provisions of Section 104(2) of the Constitution, to refer the above quoted questions to the Supreme Court for determination.

The Section of the Constitution empowering lower Courts to refer matters or questions to the Supreme Court for determination reads as follows:—

"104(1) The Supreme Court shall, save as otherwise provided in Sections 18 and 101 of this Constitution, have original jurisdiction, to the exclusion of all other Courts—

(a) in all matters relating to the enforcement or interpretation of any provision of this Constitution; and

(b) where any question arises whether an enactment was made in excess of the power conferred upon Parliament or any other authority or person by law or under this Constitution.

[p.13]

(2) Where any question relating to any matter or question as is referred to in the preceding subsection arises in any proceedings in any Court, other than the Supreme Court, that Court, shall stay the proceedings and refer the question of law involved to the Supreme Court for determination, and the Court in which the question arose shall dispose of the case in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court."

It is not necessary for present purposes to discuss all the circumstances in which a Court is obliged to refer a matter or question to the Supreme Court. But on a proper reading of sub-section (2) of Section 104, one thing is certain. And that is, that a Court, of its own motion, may refer a question to the Supreme Court for determination if it comes to the conclusion that a matter or question as is referred to in Section 104(1)(a) or (b) has arisen. It follows that the reference need not be made on the application, or with the concurrence of the parties or their Counsel. The Court may act of its own motion, notwithstanding the objection of the parties or their Counsel.

Having said this, I shall now proceed to consider the questions raised seriatim.

Question 1

Two sections of the Constitution are referred to in this question, and it is necessary to set them out. Section 103, so far as relevant, reads:

[p.14]

"103(1) An appeal shall lie from a judgment, decree or order of the Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court—

(a) .....

(b) as of right in any criminal cause or matter in respect of which an appeal has been brought to the Court of Appeal from a judgment, decree or order of the High Court of Justice in the exercise of its original jurisdiction; or

(c) with the leave of the Court of appeal, in any other cause or matter, civil or criminal, where the Court of Appeal is satisfied that the case involves a substantial question of law or is of pub1ic importance"

Section 108, so far as relevant, reads:—

"108(2) Save as otherwise provided in this Constitution or any other law, an appeal shall lie as of right from a judgment, decree or order of the High Court of Justice to the Court of Appeal in any cause or matter determined by the High Court of Justice"

Quite clearly, Section 103 confers rights of appeal from the Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court, whilst Section 108 confers rights of appeal from the High Court to the Court of [p.15] Appeal. But whereas the right of appeal conferred by Section 10)(l)(b) is very wide in its scope, that conferred by Section 108(2) is more limited in its scope. It is relevant to recall what this Court said in its Ruling in The State v. Brima Daboh Misc. App. 1/79 delivered on 27th February, 1979 (as yet unreported). In the course of that ruling, I said inter alia—

"There is no doubt that Section 103(1)(b) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, 1978 introduced far-reaching and indeed radical changes in the law relating to appeals from the Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court in criminal matters. Prior to the coming into operation of the 1978 Constitution, on the 14th June, 1978, there was no right of appeal as of right from the Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court in criminal matters tried in the High Court in its original jurisdiction except where the decision complained of involved questions as to the interpretation of the Constitution (see Section 70(1)(d) of the Courts Act, 1965) ……..

Without doubt, on the coming into operation of the 1978 Constitution, by virtue of Section 103(1)(b) thereof, there was an automatic right of appeal from the Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court in all criminal matters tried in the High Court in its original jurisdiction and no leave of the [p.16] court of Appeal or special leave of the Supreme Court is necessary. In all criminal cases decided in the High Court in the exercise or its original jurisdiction appeal lies as of right irrespective of whether the ease involves the interpretation of the Constitution or whether any question of general or public importance is involved. An appeal based solely on questions of act is now permissible as of right".

The Court of Appeal may have referred to Section 103 in formulating this question, because they considered it curious that the right of appeal to the intermediate appellate court should be more restricted than the right of appeal to the final appellate court. Parliament in its wisdom has countered a more restricted right of appeal in respect of appeals to the Court of Appeal than in respect of appeals to the Supreme Court. Ours is not to question why. Our duty is to interpret the Constitution and to apply it to any relevant situation that come before us as a Court. It may be said that the unrestricted right of appeal conferred by Section 103(1)(b) will leave the flood gates wide open to frivolous appeals to the Supreme Court. But the Justices constituting the Supreme Court should have sufficient sense and experience to know how to dispose of such appeals.

The fact that Section 103 confers a wider right of appeal should not be a factor to be taken into consideration in interpreting Section 108. The two sections (i.e. Sections 103 and 108) are separate and independent sections. There is no reason why they should be read together. The answer to the first question is therefore "No", and consequently the second part of the question does not arise.

Question 2

This question raises the issue of the effect of rights of appeal conferred by Section 108(2) of the Constitution on the rights of appeal conferred by Section 57 of the Courts Act, 1965. Section 57 of the Court. Act, 1965 (as amended) provides:

"57(1) A person convicted by or in the High Court may appeal to the Court of Appeal—

(a) against his conviction on any ground of appeal which involves a question of law alone; and

(b) with the leave of the Court of Appeal or upon the certificate of the Judge who tried him that it is a fit case for appeal against his conviction on any ground of appeal which involves a question of fact alone, or a question of mixed law and fact, or any other ground which appears to the Court to be a sufficient ground of appeal; and

(c) with the leave of the Court of Appeal against the sentence passed on his conviction; unless the sentence is one fixed by law; and

(d) against a finding of insanity where the Court has made a special finding under Section 73 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1965.

[p.18]

(2) Any person aggrieved by the acquittal or discharge of an accused or defendant before the High Court may appeal to the Court of' Appeal against such acquittal or discharge:

Provided that no such appeal shall lie except on a question of law."

The question is whether the above-quoted provisions conflict 11th the provisions of Section 108(2) of the Constitution. That sub-section of the Constitution has been set out above. Admittedly, it states inter alia that "an appeal shall lie as of right from a judgment, decree or order of the High Court of Justice to the Court of Appeal in any cause or matter determined by the High Court of Justice." But that apparently unrestricted right of appeal is subject to a very important qualification which is embodied in the opening words of the sub-section, to wit "save as otherwise provided in this Constitution or any other law." It is not necessary to discuss the provision of the Constitution contemplated by the words "otherwise provided in this Constitution." I shall confine myself to the words "otherwise provided in ..... any other law." "Any other law in that context means any laws of Sierra Leone other than the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1978. The Constitution itself helpfully spells out what comprises the laws of Sierra Leone. Section 125of the Constitution provides inter alia:

"125(1) The laws of Sierra Leone shall comprise

(a) this Constitution

(b) enactments made by or under the authority of the Parliament established by this Constitution;

[p.19]

(c) any orders, Rules and Regulations made by any person or authority pursuant to a power conferred in that behalf by this Constitution or any other law;

(d) the existing law; and

(e) the common law

(2) The common law of Sierra Leone shall comprise the rules of law generally known as the common law, the rules of law generally known as the doctrines of equity, and the rules of customary law including those determined by the Superior Court of Judicature

(3) For the purpose of this Section, the expression "customary law" means the rules of law which by custom are applicable to particular communities in Sierra Leone.

(4) The existing law shall, save as otherwise provided in subsection (1) of this section, comprise the written and unwritten laws of Sierra Leone as they existed immediately before the date of the coming into force of this Constitution and any statutory instrument issued or made before that date which is to come into force on or after that date."

The Court. Act, 1965, having come into force on 6th October, 1965, was a written law of Sierra Leone existing immediately before the coming into force of the Constitution on 14th June, 1978.

Therefore section 57 of that Act is an existing law, and is consequently expressly saved by section 125(1)(d) of the Constitution, And since section 57 otherwise provides as regards rights of appeal from the High Court to the Court of Appeal, Section 108(2) of the Constitution must be read subject to section 57 of the Courts Act, 1965. In other words the right of appeal as of right apparently conferred by Section 108(2) of the Constitution is subject to the rights conferred by Section 57 of the Courts Act, 1965. So the present position is that a convicted person has a right of appeal to the Court of Appeal as of right only in cases where (1) the appeal i8 against conviction on any ground of appeal which involves a question of law alone (see S,7(1)(a) of the Courts Act, 1965) (ii) against a finding of insanity where the Court has made a special finding under Section 73 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1965 (see S.57(1)(d) of the Courts Act, 1965). In the case of an appeal against conviction on any ground of appeal which involves a question or fact alone or a question of mixed law and fact or any other grounds which appears to the Court to be a sufficient ground of appeal, the convicted person can appeal only with the leave of the Court of Appeal or upon the certificate of the trial judge (see S.57(1)(b) of the Courts Act, 1965). And in the ease of appeals against sentence, the convicted person must obtain the leave of the Court of Appeal (see S.57(1)(c) of the Courts Act, 1965).

To sum up the position: The provisions of Section 57 of the Courts Act, 1965 do not conflict with the provisions of Section 108(2) of the Constitution. Section 125 of the Constitution expressly saved all existing laws including the Court. Act, 1965 and Section 57 thereof. The opening clause [p.21] of Section 108(2) of the Constitution expressly makes the provisions of that Section subject to the provisions of any other law. Therefore Section 108(2) of the Constitution must be read subject to Section 7 of the Courts Act, 1965 which 15 an existing law.

Having regard to the foregoing, the answer to the second question is an unequivocal “No”.

Having answered the question in the negative, the second part of the question does not really arise. But for the avoidance of doubt, I shall answer it briefly. The Rules referred to are the Sierra Leone Court of Appeal Rules, 1973 which came into force on 3rd May, 1973. Those Rules were made by the Rules of Court Committee by virtue of powers conferred on that Committee by Section 40 of the Courts Act, 1965. Annexed to those Rules three appendices i.e. A, B & C. Appendix A sets the forms to be used in Civil matters. Appendix B sets out the fees to be paid in Civil matters. Appendix C sets out the forms to be used in Criminal matters. There is no doubt that the appendices form part of the Rules. Quite clearly those Rules were “Rules made by an authority pursuant to a power conferred in that behalf ..... by any other law.” Therefore Section 125(1) (c) of the Constitution recognizes them as comprising part o£ the laws of Sierra Leone. It follows that the Rules were saved by the 1978 Constitution and Section 108(2) of the Constitution should be read subject to them. In the circumstances the Rules including their appendices are very much alive and in force. They are not obsolete.

Question 3

Section 56 of the Court. Act, 1965 mentioned in this question relates to appeals to the Court of Appeal in Civil matter. This Reference arose in a Criminal matter. It seems to me therefore that the reference to Section 56 of the Courts Act, 1965 is irrelevant. Having disposed of the reference to Section 56, it is sufficient to say that the question, so far as it relates to Section 108 (2) of the Constitution and Section 57 of the Court Act, 1965 has already been answered in dealing with Question 2 above.

Question 4

Again the reference to Section 56 of the Courts Act, 1965 is irrelevant. For the reasons given above in answering Question 2, the answer to this question is “No”.

Decision accordingly.

DIVISION: SUPREME COURT OF SIERRA LEONE

DATE: 24 FEBRUARY 1982

CORAM: MR. JUSTICE E. LIVESEY LUKE.C.J. PRESIDING; MR. JUSTICE C.A. HARDING J.S.C; MR. JUSTICE O.B.R. TEJAN J.S.C.; MRS. JUSTICE A.V. AWUNOR-RENNER J.S.C; MR. JUSTICE S. BECCLES DAVIES - J.S.C

BETWEEN:

SAMUEL LOMBA - APPELLANT

AND

THE STATE - RESPONDENT

CHARLES MARGAI, ESQ., for Appellant

N.D. TEJAN-COLE, ESQ., D.P.P. for Respondent

Delivered on 24th day of February, 1982.

JUDGMENT

BECCLES DAVIES, J,S.C.

The Appellant was first arraigned before the High Court in Bo on 5th February, 1979. He had been arraigned for the offence of murder. A jury had been empanelled and sworn to try him on 21st February, 1979. He was given in charge of the jury. Prosecuting Counsel called six witnesses, after which he applied to the trial judge on 2nd March, 1979 for an adjournment to the following sessions as he had encountered some difficulty in locating a vital witness for the prosecution. The trial judge granted the application with considerable reluctance.

The case was not tried at the immediately succeeding sessions. It was on 29th May, 1979, again adjourned to the succeeding sessions which were to commence on 18th September, 1979.

On 2nd October, 1979, during the currency of the September 1979 sessions, the appellant was again arraigned.

A fresh jury were empanelled, and he was given in their charge. Eight witnesses testified for the prosecution. Prosecuting Counsel then applied for an adjournment of the trial to the following sessions as his last witness was still in available. The trial judge granted the adjournment with the same reluctance he had expressed on the first occasion.

Then came the November sessions. The end of the road was in sight. The appellant was arraigned for the third time. The third jury were empanelled on 26th November 1979. The trial of' the appellant was gone through without any Impediment. The jury found the appellant not guilty of murder. He was however found guilty of manslaughter and sentenced to imprisonment for life.

The appellant presented appeals against his conviction and sentence respectively, to the Court of Appeal. Five grounds of appeal were before the Court of Appeal. The fifth ground emerged as a result of the Director of Public Prosecutions' intimation to the Court of his view that the third arraignment, trial and conviction of the appellant were a nullity. Counsel for the appellant in consequence of the Director of' Public Prosecutions' intimation to the Court formulated a ground of appeal in these terms—

“That the trial in the Court below was a nullity as the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain trial."

That was the only ground of appeal argued before that Court. Counsel for the appellant abandoned the other grounds and accepted before us that he had done so. The Court of Appeal [p.3] (Warne, Davies and Short JJ.A.) delivered a written judgment on the issue. Warne, J.A. in delivering the judgment of the Court had said—

"The jury sworn on the 21st February, 1979 was never discharged and as such the trial which commenced on that date was still pending.

In my view the Court had no jurisdiction to start a new trial with a fresh jury on the 18th September, 1979. This trial in law is a nullity.

The appeal therefore must needs succeed and the appeal is allowed.

However, the provision of 8.59(5) of Act No.31 of 1965 in my opinion is applicable. 5.59(5) states 'Where the Court of Appeal is of opinion that the proceedings in the trial court were a nullity, either through want of Jurisdiction or otherwise, the Court may order the appellant to be tried by a Court of competent jurisdiction.'

The Court will not order the appellant to be tried by a Court of competent jurisdiction because the trial which started on 21st February, 1979 is incomplete.

The appellant is remanded in 'custody." The appellant was dissatisfied with the last two paragraphs quoted above by which the Court of Appeal had ordered him to be remanded in custody, while declining to order his trial before a court of competent jurisdiction, because in their view, the trial of 21st February was still pending.

[p.4]

At the two trials preceding that at which the appellant was convicted, prosecuting counsel had experienced difficulty in securing the attendance of a vital witness for the prosecution. The presiding judge at those trials upon granting the application to an adjournment had ordered that the trial was "adjourned to next sessions". There was no order discharging the jury. It is an established rule that when an accused is put in charge of the jury, they must return a verdict unless they are discharged from giving a verdict by the trial. judge. (See R. v HEYES 1950 2 All E.R. 587).

The Court of Appeal had placed reliance on Section 181 of The Criminal Procedure Act 1965 in support of its view that the trial which commenced with a jury on 5th February, 1979 and was adjourned was still pending. Section 181 Provides—

"If a trial is adjourned, the jurors shall be required to attend at the adjourned sitting and at every subsequent sitting until the conclusion of the trial.

Reading that section in isolation would give the impression that when once a jury are empanelled and the accused is put in their charge, the trial can be adjourned from session to session for further hearing with the same jury until their delivery of a verdict. That however, is not correct, the statute has to be read as a whole in order to get the true intention of Parliament. There is a restriction imposed by the provisions of Section 162 and 165 of the same Act. They provide—

"162. Whenever it shall be necessary to form a panel of Jurors to serve at any session, the Sheriff in conjunction with an officer nominated by the Judge, shall cause the names [p.5] of the jurors in the list, resident at and near the district, to be written on separate cards or pieces of paper of equal size and placed in ballot boxes to be kept for that purpose, and shall draw from the said boxes such number of' names, as the Court may direct, of special jurors and common jurors to form a panel, and the cards or slips so drawn shall thereupon be locked up in separate boxes until the whole of the names of' the jurors, except those who may have served at the last preceding session, shall be returned to the ballot boxes, and, when required the names shall be re-drawn in manner aforesaid." (Emphasis mine).

"165. The Sheriff before the sitting of any Court whereat a jury shall be necessary, shall on receiving from the Court a precept issue summonses requiring the attendance thereat of the persons so drawn as aforesaid from the ballot box, and every such summons shall be personally served upon, or left at the usual or last known place of residence of the person so summoned, two clear days, or such other time as the Court may direct, before the day appointed for the sitting of the Court." (Emphasis mine).

A Juror therefore cannot serve at any session immediately succeeding that at which he had previously served. His name would not appear at the formation of the panel for such subsequent sessions (S.162). No summons would consequently be issued to him under S. 165 summoning him to attend such sessions. Where it is desired to adjourn a trial in which they are summoned for service. By fiction of law the duration of a session (like an Assize) is one legal day divided into several natural days (See DOE V HERSEY 3 Wills. 274). The adjournments permissible under section 181 are intended to occur within a single session and not from session to session. If the trial cannot be concluded within a session, then, the jury should be discharged by the trial judge or any other judge sitting in his stead.

I have used the expression 'or any other judge sitting in his stead because of a reference which was made by counsel during the course of argument to a decision of the Court of Appeal. The decision was DAUDA KAMARA V THE STATE Cr. App. 5/76 (unreported) delivered on 22nd October, 1976. The point raised in that case was the same as in this appeal. The court had held that the jury had to be discharged by the judge before whom they had been empanelled before adjourning the hearing to the subsequent sessions and not the judge who presided over the subsequent sessions. The court had said—

"When Kutubu J. adjourned the case against the appellant to the next sessions of the court and ordered the appellant to be kept in custody he should there and then have discharged the jury as they had not given a verdict.

[p.7]

It was Kutubu J. who put the accused in charge of the jury and who should have in the circumstances discharged the jury and not the Judge before whom the Appellant was subsequently arraigned. This was an unfortunate mistake and in our view the trial was void ab initio. The Appellant ought not to have been arraigned a second time before Okoro-Idogu J. in the absence of a discharge of the Jury by Kutubu J. In our view there was no trial of the Appellant. There was certainly a mistrial. The proceedings before Okoro-Idogu were void ab initio."

It is not the judge who formally puts an accused in the charge of' the jury. It is the Registrar of the Court. The Registrar addresses them thus—

“Ladies and Gentleman of' the Jury, the accused is charged with the following offence(s) (here Indictment is read) Upon this Indictment, the Prisoner has been arraigned; And upon his arraignment, he has pleaded not guilty to the charge. Your duty therefore, is to listen carefully to the evidence that shall be adduced and enquire whether he be guilty or not guilty and give your true verdict thereon.”

The right to discharge the jury is not personal to a trial judge. Any judge of the High Court sitting in his stead could do it. To hold otherwise would cause untold inconvenience in the administration of' justice. Suppose a trial judge before whom an accused had been given in charge took ill. [p.8] Suddenly or died during the trial? If such a restricted view is taken on the subject, the only course open to the prosecution would be to enter a nolle prosequi against the accused, before a recommencement of the trial could be achieved .

Okoro-Idogu J. was right in discharging the jury at the sessions immediately following those at which they had served. The provisions of S. 162 had operated to relieve them of further service immediately the sessions at which they had served had ended. What the judge did in effect was to place on record that they had been discharged by reason of the operation of the provisions of S.162. In view of the foregoing, in my judgment, DAUDA KAMARA v THE STATE supra was wrongly decided and ought not to be followed. I would therefore overrule it.

Returning to the present appeal, I would hold that the trial judge should have discharged the jury on 2nd March, 1979 before adjourning the indictment to the following sessions. Trial judges would be well advised when they find that they cannot against the end of a session, complete cases (in which juries had been empanel led and accused persons put in their charge) to discharge the jury before adjourning to the following sessions. A note of such discharge being entered on the record. Now comes the crucial question. Does the failure or the judge to formally discharge the jury in those circumstances render the trial a nullity? I do not think so. I have referred to the provisions of Sections 162 and 165 of The Criminal Procedure Act 1965. The jury in consequence of those provisions were relieved of continuing with the trial at the immediately following sessions even if the vital witness had been traced. The point taken in this appeal is therefore untenable, because Section 162 by necessary implication had [p.9] operated to discharge the jury. Those persons who had formed the panel of that jury could not have been selected and summoned for service at the immediately succeeding sessions.

A fresh jury would have had to be empanelled as was eventually done in this case. The appellant's eventual trial and subsequent conviction on 3rd December, 1979 were not a nullity.

I would set aside the judgment of the Court of Appeal and substitute therefore an order dismissing the appeal in the Court of Appeal and in this Court.

Tejan Cole Esq., D.P.P. for the State

T.S. Johnson, Esq., for Respondents

JUDGMENT DELIVERED THIS 13TH DAY OF JULY, 1982

Livesey Luke, C. J.

On 29th March, 1978 the three respondents and two others were convicted by Mr. Justice C.S. Davies sitting as a Judge alone at the Freetown High Court on an Indictment containing eleven counts. It is not necessary to set out the counts in full. It will be sufficient to state their substance.

In Count 1, the 1st respondent (Ahmend Sankey Dian Turay), the 2nd respondent (Joseph Ngebeh Squire) and one Amadu Mohamed Conteh were charged with Larceny by a servant contrary to Section 17(2)a of the Larceny Act, 1916; and the particulars of offence alleged that on a day unknown between 21st August, 1975 and 20th September, 1975 at Newton Agricultural Station in the Ministry of Agriculture and Natural Resources they stole Le2159.19 belonging to the Republic of Sierra Leone.

In Count 2, the same person named in Count 1 were charged with the same offence as in Count 1, the only difference being that in the Particulars of Offence it was alleged that the offence was committed between 21st September, 1975 and 20th October, 1975 and that the amount stolen was Le4214.43.

[p.32]

In Count 3, the same person named in count 1 were charged with the same offence as in Count 1, the only difference being that in the Particulars of Offence it was alleged that the offence was committed between 21st October, 1975 and 20th November, 1975 and that the amount stolen was Le3966,93.

In Count 4, the same persons named in Count 1 were charged with the same offence as in Count l, the only difference being that in the Particulars of Offence it was alleged that the offence was committed between 21st November, 1975 and 20th December, 1975 and that the amount stolen was Le4117.41.

In Count 5, the 1st respondent and one Evans Rashid Jobo Sama were charged with the same offence as in Count 1, the only difference being that in the Particulars of Offence it was alleged that the offence was committed between 21st May, 1975 and 20th June, 1975 and that the amount stolen was Le4563.90.

In Count 6, the same persons named in Count 5 were again charged with the same offence as in Count 1, the only difference being that in the Particulars of Offence it was alleged that the offence was committed between 21st June, 1975 and 20th July, 1975 and that the amount stolen was Le853.38.

In Count 7, the 1st respondent, the 2nd respondent and the 3rd respondent (Josephus Justice Davies) and Amadu Mohamed Conteh were charged with the same offence as in Count 1, the only difference being that in the Particulars of Offence it was alleged that the offence was committed between 21st May, 1976 and 20th June 1976 and that the amount stolen was Le5463.81.

In Count 8, the same persons named in Count 7 were again charged with the same offence as in Count 1, the only difference being that in the Particulars of Offence it was alleged that the offence was committed between 21st Ju1y, 1976 and 20th August, 1976 and that the amount stolen was Le5116.31.

[p.33]

In Count 9, the 1st respondent, the 2nd respondent, the 3rd respondent and Amadu Mohamed Conteh were charged with Falsification of Accounts contrary to Section 1 of the Falsification of Accounts Act, 1875; and the particulars alleged that on 8th June, 1976 at the Newton Agricultural Station they made or concurred in making a false Pay Sheet No.WR443/6/76 purporting to show that the sum of Le399.96 was due and payable as wages for the period 21st May, 1976 to 20th June, 1976 to certain named persons as employees of the Ministry of Agriculture and Natural Resources.

In Count 10, the 1st respondent and Evans Rashid Jobo Sarna were charged with the same offence as in Count 9, the only difference being that in the particulars of offence it was alleged that the offence was committed on or about 18th March, 1975, that the pay sheet alleged to have been falsified was given as No.WR425/J/75, that the amount involved was stated as Le665.28, that the period for which the wages were due and payable was stated as 21st February, 1975 to 20th March, 1975 and that the persons named as employees of the Ministry were different from those named in Count 9.

In Count 11, the 1st respondent and Evan Rashid Jobo Sama were charged with Conspiracy to Defraud and in the Particulars of Offence it was alleged that on divers days between 1st July, 1974 and 31st January, 1975 at Newton Agricultural Station they together with others unknown conspired with intent to defraud the Republic by the preparation of monthly Pay Sheets for fictitious employees.

The learned trial Judge found the 1st respondent Not Guilty as charged but Guilty of Obtaining Money by False Pretences in respect of Counts 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8; and Guilty as charged in respect of Counts 9, 10 and 11. He found the 2nd respondent Not Guilty as charged but Guilty of Obtaining Money [p.34] by False Pretences in respect of Counts 1, 2,3,4,7 , and 8 and Guilty as charged in respect of Count 9. He found the 3rd respondent Not Guilty as Charge but Guilty of Obtaining Money by False Pretences in respect of Counts 7 and 8; and Guilty as charged in respect of Count 9. In respect of each conviction the learned judge imposed a punishment of a fine or imprisonment in default thereof. The three respondents appealed to the Court of Appeal against conviction In addition the 1st and the 3rd respondents appealed against sentence. The appeals were heard by the Court of Appeal (Tejan J.S.C., Warne and Short JJ.A.) in September, 1980. Judgment was delivered on 27th January, 1981. Three separate judgment were delivered. The main judgment was delivered by Tejan .J.S.C. and Warne J. A. concurred with him adding a few observations of his own. All three Justices were in agreement in allowing the appeal of the 1st respondent against conviction. Tejan J.S.C. and Warne J.A. allowed the appeals of the 2nd and the 3rd respondents against conviction, whilst Short J.A. dismissed their appeals. In the result the appeals of all the three respondents were allowed and their convictions were quashed. It is against that decision that the State has appealed to this Court. Seven grounds of appeal were filed by the Director of Public Prosecutions on behalf of the State. The main issue raised in this appeal may be summarized thus:

(i) Whether there is any obligation on a trial judge sitting without a jury to warn himself that the oral or written statement of one accused person is not evidence against a co-accused.

[p.35]

(ii) In what circumstances are a challenged oral or written confession by an accused person admissible in evidence at a trial?

(iii)What is the standard of proof to be applied in deciding on the admissibility of a confession statement?

(iv) If the confession of the 1st respondent was not properly admitted in evidence at the trial, what is the effect?

(v) Was there any circumstance that rendered the trial unfair or unsatisfactory?

The question whether the proper verdicts on Counts 1 to 8 should have been Larceny as charged was not raised before us. So it is not necessary to deal with it.

With regard to the first issue formulated above, Tejan J.S.C. stated in several parts of his judgment that there was an obligation on the trial judge to warn himself that the statement of an accused person not on oath was not evidence against a co-accused. He went further to state that where a judge had failed to give himself such a warning, a conviction will be quashed. Mr. Tejan-Cole submitted that there is no rule of law or practice that imposed such an obligation on a trial judge sitting alone. I am myself at a complete loss to find any authority to support the propositions of the learned Justice. He relied on four cases, namely R v. Gunewardene(1951) 35 Cr. App. R.80, R v Rhodes(1959) 44 Cr. App. R.23, R v. Bowen (1972) Crim. L.R. 312 and R v. Rogers and Tarran (1971) Crim. L.R. 413.

There is no doubt that it is a fundamental rule of evidence that statements made by one accused person either to the police or to others (other than statements, whether in the presence or absence of a co-accused, made in the course and [p.36] pursuance of a joint criminal enterprise to which the co-accused was a party) are not evidence against a co-accused unless the co-accused either expressly or by implication adopts the statements and thereby makes them his own: See R v. Rudd (1948) 32 Cr App. 138. And it has repeatedly been said by the Courts not only in England but also in this and other Commonwealth jurisdictions that it is the duty of the judge to impress on the jury that the statement of one accused person not made on oath in the course of the trial (and not falling within any other recognised exception) is not evidence against a co-accused and must be entirely disregarded: See R v. Gunewardene (1951) 35 Cr. App. R.80, a decision of the English Court of Criminal Appea1, where Lord Goddard L.C.J. said inter alia at P.91. "If no separate trial is ordered, it is the duty of the Judge to impress on the jury that the statement of the one prisoner not made on oath in the course of the trial is not evidence against the other and must be entirely disregarded."

I shall now refer briefly to the other cases relied on by the Learned Justice. In R v. Rhodes (1959) 44 Cr. App. R. 23 the appellant was indicted and tried together with a man named named Mills of Burglary and Larceny. It was not disputed that they were together during the whole of the material time. A substantial part of the case against Mills consisted of a statement implicating the appellant which Mills was alleged to have made and which Mills denied having made. The Chairman, after warning the jury that the statement could not be evidence against the appellant invited the jury first to consider the case against Mills in the light of his alleged admission and then, if they convicted Mills to consider the case against the appellant on the footing that the two men were together at the material time. It was held by the English Court of Criminal [p.37] Appeal that by the way in which he invited the jury to consider the case against the appellant, the Chairman Was, for all practical purposes, negativing and nullifying his previous warning that Mill's alleged admission was not evidence against the appellant.

R v. Bowen (1972) Crim. L.R. 312 was a case where one of the accused persons changed his plea to Guilty at the end of the prosecution's case. The judge did not ask the jury to return a verdict on him at that stage. The accused who changed his plea had made a number o£ statements admitting his guilt and implicating his co-defendants and copies had gone to the jury during the prosecution case. In his summing up the judge used the Statements of the accused who had changed his plea extensively to fill in the background of the case, and also to fix the date of the offence which according to the statement's had taken place on a Saturday, though he repeatedly warned the jury that they were not evidence against the other accused persons. The main point of the appellant's defence was that there was no admissible evidence as to the time of the offence. It was held by the English Court of Appeal (Criminal Division) that it was not open to use the statements as he did. So although the Judge gave the jury the requisite warning he was at the same time directing them to use the statement o£ one accused person against another, thereby nullifying his previous warning.

R v. Rogers and Tarran (1971) Crim. L.R. 413 was a case on which Crichton J. sitting at the Mold Assizes ruled against the admissibility o£ a confession statement of one accused person in a joint trial on the ground that its prejudicial effect against the co-accused outweighed its probative value against its maker. In the course of his ruling the learned Judge acknowledged that the statement was not evidence against [p.38] the other accused person. But otherwise the case is irrelevant to the issue under consideration.

Admittedly, all the cases relied on by the learned justice acknowledged the fundamental rule stated above to the effect that the statement of one accused person is not evidence against a co-accused. The first three cases also acknowledge the duty of a trial judge to explain and impress that rule upon the jury. But with respect to the learned justice, none of the cases lays down any rule that a judge sitting alone should impress that rule upon himself. It is perhaps relevant to note that all the cases relied on by the learned justice were cases of trial by jury. There are many good reasons why it is necessary to impress the rule upon juries. Apart from being laymen, jurors do not give reasons for their verdicts. So it is not possible to know whether the jury has taken into consideration the statement of one accused person to convict a co-accused. But in the case of a judge sitting alone, the position is different. He gives reasons for his decision. And it could be ascertained by a perusal of his judgment whether he relied on the stamen of one accused person in convicting a co-accused. And if it is ascertained that a judge sitting alone so relied on a statement of an accused person, that irregularity can be remedied by an appellate court. But in the case of a jury, if inspite of a proper direction against relying on the statement of the accused against a co-accused, they still relied on such a statement in convicting a co-accused, an appellate court would be in the dark. In my judgment, the learned justice’s proposition of law on this issue is not supported by any authority and in any case is wrong in principle.

It is relevant to state that the learned Justice mentioned briefly in his lengthy judgment that the learned Judge “in effect made use of the unsworn statement of each appellant against the others." Unfortunately the learned Justice did not substantiate that accusation. I have carefully read the judgment of' the trial Judge and I have not been able to find any material to support that accusation. In my judgment therefore, the judgment of the learned trial Judge cannot be faulted on the ground that he relied on the statement of one of the accused persons tried by him in convicting any of the co-accused, including any of the respondents.

I shall now proceed to consider the issues relating to the admissibility of a confession statement. It has long been an established rule of English Law that to render a confession by an accused person admissible at his trial the confession must be proved by the prosecution to be voluntary in the sense that it has not been obtained from him either by fear of prejudice or hope of advantage exercised or held out by a person in authority. The rule was stated by Cave J. in Reg. v. Thompson (1893) 2 Q.B. 12 at p.15 in these terms:—

"By that law [i.e the Law of England], to be admissible, a confession must be free and Voluntary……. If it flows from hope or fear, excited by a person in authority, it is inadmissible.”

That rule has been stated and restated over the years by the English Courts and has been transported from English soil and transplanted in many Commonwealth countries allover the globe, where, in most cases, it has taken firm root. In this connection, it is not surprising that the most classic statement of the rule was made by the Privy Council in an appeal from a British Colony. That appeal, Ibrahim v. R(1914) A.C.599, was from the judgment of the Supreme Court of the Colony of Hong Kong.

[p.40]

In the celebrated judgment of the Board, delivered by Lord. Sumner he said inter alia at pp. 609-610:—

“It has long been established as a positive rule of English Criminal Law, that no statement by an accused is admissible in evidence against him unless it is shewn by the prosecution to have been a voluntary statement, in the sense that it has not been obtained from him either by fear of prejudice or hope of advantage exercised or held out by a person in authority. The principle is as old as Lord Hale.”

That statement of the Law has been approved and applied by the House of Lords and other English Courts in innumerable cases since 1914: some commissoner of Customs and Excise v. Harz & anor (1967) 1 A.C. 760 C.C.A & H.L D.P.P v. Ping Lin (1975)3 W. L. R. 410 C.A H.L and Reg. v. Rennie (1982) 1. W.L.R. 64. C.A. The Privy Council also has repeated and applied that statement in many appeals from all over the Commonwealth: see Sparks v. The Queen (1964) A.C. 964 P.C an appeal from Berumuda; Chan Wei Keung v. The Queen (1967) 2. W. L.R. 552 P.C. an appeal from Hong kong; Ragho Prasad v. The Queen (1981) W.L.R. 469 P.C, an appeal from Fiji; and Ajodha v. The State (1981) 3 W.L.R. 1 P.C., an appeal from Trinidad and Tobago. I think that the judgment of the Board in the last case cited is very instructive and I commend it to trial judges in this jurisdiction.

Where the admissibility of a statement is challenged on the ground that it was not made voluntarily, it is the duty of the judge to determine that issue. The proper course is for the judge to hold a trial within a trial (or voir dire) to try the issue. The burden is on the prosecution to prove that the [p.41] statement was voluntary. The prosecution should normally call all the material witnesses relevant to the making of the statement. The accused may give evidence if he so desire and call witnesses. The trial within a trial is normally held in the absence of the jury. After the conclusion of the evidence, the judge should rule on the admissibility of the statement in the absence of the jury, if they had been previously excluded. It should be emphasised that it is the duty of the judge to decide on the admissibility of an impugned statement.

He cannot abdicate that duty to the jury: See R v. Francis Murphy (1959) 43 Cr. App. R. 174, Sharp v. The Queen (supra) and N'Doinje v. Reg (1967-68) A.L.R. (S.L.) 202. Once the statement has been admitted in evidence then the question of its probative value is for the jury: See Chan wei Keung v. The Queen (1967) 2 W.L.R. 552. Therefore after the statement has been admitted, the defence is entitled to cross-examine who had already given evidence on the voir dire as to the circumstances in which the statement was made: R v. Murray (1951) 1 K.B 391.

I shall now turn to the question of the standard of proof required to prove a confession statement at the voir dire. In R v. Thoropson (supra) Cave J. said inter alia:

"If these principles and the reasons for them are, as it seems impossible to doubt, well founded, they afford the Magistrate a simple test by which the admissibility of a confession may be decided. They have to ask: Is it proved affirmatively that the confession was free and voluntary……..……..? …… it was incumbent on the prosecution to prove whether any …… before the Magistrate could properly be satisfied that the confession was free and voluntary."

[p.42]

In recent years the English Courts have held that standard of proof on the prosecution is beyond reasonable doubt: See R v. Satori (1961) Crim. L.R. 397, R v. McLintock (1962) Crim. L.R. 549 C.C.A. And more recently certain dicta of some of their Lordships in the House of Lords have lent support to that view. In D.P.P. v Ping Lin (supra) Lord Hailsham said inter alia at p. 436:—

"The question raised was as to the admissibility of a significant part of it, and this in turn depends upon the application of the well known rule, peculiar to English Law and its derivative systems, that to be admissible, confessions, however convincing must be voluntary in the sense that the prosecution must prove, and prove beyond reasonable doubt, in the classical words of Lord Sumner in Ibrahim v. The King." [Emphasis mine]

And Lord Kilbradon said inter alia at p. 442:—

“On the second part, if what was said may have been regarded (and acted upon) by the accused as an inducement to confess, the Crown have failed to discharge the burden of showing beyond reasonable doubt that the confession was not induced by what was said.” [Emphasis mine].

But the Australian Courts have rejected that view. They have advanced very attractive arguments to the effect that the proper standard of proof required to prove a confession statement is proof on the balance of probabilities: See Wendo v. R (1964) 109 C.L.R. 559, a decision of the High Court of Australia.

This Court is of course not bound by the decision of the English or Australian Courts. They are only of persuasive authority. We shall have to make up our minds as to what standard of proof is required in our own jurisdiction. The Court of Appeal said that the standard was proof beyond reasonable doubt. Counsel on both sides before us argued the assumption that that was the right standard. Not having had the benefit of argument of Counsel on the issue, I do not consider it advisable for us to express any concluded views on such an important matter. I think that for the purposes of is appeal, we should assume that the proper test is proof beyond reasonable doubt. So the question is whether the learned trial Judge applied the standard of proof beyond reasonable doubt in deciding to admit the confession statement of the 1st respondent (Ex. R). It was held by the Court of Appeal that the trial judge did not apply that standard of proof. Admittedly the learned judge did not use the words “beyond reasonable doubt” throughout his ruling. After reviewing the evidence, he concluded his Ruling thus:—

“For many reasons which I don’t find necessary to spell out I could not believe the evidence of the accused. As stated earlier I believe the prosecution witness and find that they have proved to my satisfaction their allegation that the statement was voluntarily made. The objection is over-ruled and the statement will be admitted in evidence.”

In my opinion merely because the learned Judge failed to use the words “beyond reasonable doubt” does not mean that he did not apply that standard. There is no magic in those words. [p.44] The important thing is that on a consideration of the Ruling as a whole an appellate court must come to the conclusion that the judge applied the right standard. In R v. Summer (1953) 36 Cr. App. R. 14 Lord Goddard L.C.J. said inter alia at p.15

“It is far better, instead of using the words "reasonable doubt", and then trying to explain what is a reasonable doubt, to direct a jury: “You must not convict unless you are satisfied by the evidence that the offence has been committed. “…… I always tell a jury that, before they convict, they must feel sure and must be satisfied that the prosecution have established the guilt of the prisoner.”

See also R v. Hepworth and Fearnley (1955) 39 Cr. App. R. 152. In Sparks v. Tl1e Queen (supra) Lord Morris said inter alia at p.982:—

“Unless it was shown to the satisfaction of the judge that the statements were voluntary (in the sense referred to by Lord Summer) he could not admit them.” [Emphasis mine].

As I said earlier the English Courts have accepted the beyond reasonable doubt standard on this issue. It will be useful to quote from some of the speeches in D.P.P. v. Ping Lin (supra), a decision of the house of Lords. Lord Morris said inter alia at p. 433:—

"In the circumstances posed a judge must decide whether the prosecution have shown that a statement was voluntary. His decision will generally be one of fact."

And Lord Salmon :said inter alia at p. 444:[p.45]

"It follows that a judge may allow evidence of an alleged confession or statement by an accused to go before the jury only if he is satisfied that the confession or statement has not been obtained in contravention of the principle laid down in the authorities to which I have referred
.....

He has to weigh up the evidence and decide whether he is satisfied that no person in authority has obtained the confession or Statement …….. If the judge is so satisfied, he may admit evidence of the confession or statement. If he is not so satisfied he must exclude it."

[Emphasis mine]

In my opinion therefore the fact that the judge said that the voluntariness of the statement had been proved to his satisfaction, does not mean that the proof was not "beyond reasonable doubt or that he was not sure. The Ruling has to be looked at as a whole. The objection of the 1st respondent to the admissibility of the statement was that hope was held out to him by a C.I.D. Officer that he would be used as a witness for the prosecution in a case against one Roach, the 1st respondent's Head of Department then under investigation. In his evidence during the trial within a trial the 1st respondent deposed in effect that he was threatened that if he did not make a statement, he would not be allowed to go home. In his Ruling, after narrating the evidence led by the prosecution and the 1st respondent, the learned Judge said inter alia:—

[p.46]

"It is from all the evidence that I have to decide whether the prosecution have demonstrated that their allegation that the statement was voluntarily made is true ……..

……..

I feel I am bound to look at the entire evidence and if I see any evidence which if believed would render the statement involuntary I am so bound to declare. The point really is, has the prosecution demonstrated by their evidence that their allegation is true?"

He then commented adversely on the demeanour of the 1st respondent as a witness and added that his evidence was demonstrably untrue. Finally he came to the conclusion previously quoted, that he did not believe the evidence of the accused, that he believed the evidence of the prosecution witnesses and that he was satisfied that the statement was voluntary. In my opinion the learned Judge left no room for doubt about his belief that the 1st respondent was lying when he said that hope was held out to him and that he was threatened, or about his belief that the statement was voluntary. On the simple and straightforward issue before him he was saying in effect that he was sure that the prosecution witnesses spoke the truth about the voluntariness of the statement, that the 1st respondent lied when he said that hope was held out to him and that he was threatened and that the statement was not voluntary. It follows that in my opinion, and 6peaking for myself, that the learned Judge properly and rightly ruled that the confession statement of the 1st respondent (Ex "R") was admissible in evidence. In conclusion I respectfully quote the words of Lord Lane O.J. in Regina v. Rennie (supra) at P. 70:—

“The person best able to get the flavour and effect of the circumstances in which the confession was made is the trial judge, and his findings of fact and reasoning are entitled to as much respect as those of any judge of first instance.”

But let us assume that the confession statement of the 1st respondent was wrongly admitted in evidence and therefore is not evidence against him. The question then arises: Was there other admissible evidence against the 1st respondent to warrant his conviction? The Court of Appeal said there was none except in the words of Tejan J.S.C. "simply a repetition of his statement [to the police Ex. “R”] by P.W.l and P.W.2 [The police witnesses].” But is that so? Nr. Tejan-Cole has submitted that there was overwhelming evidence against the 1st respondent even if his confession statement Ex. R is ignored. I shall now examine the evidence to determine whether Mr. Tejan-Cole's submission has any substance.

The case for the prosecution was that at the material time the respondents were all civil servants attached to the Newton Agricultural Station of the Ministry of Agriculture and Natural Resources. The 1st respondent was Principal Agricultural Officer and Assistant Chief Agriculturist, the 2nd respondent was Chief, Clerk and the 3rd respondent was an Acting Agricultural Officer. A large number of daily waged workers was employed by the Ministry of Agriculture and Natural, Resources and attached to various sections (five in all) under the Newton Agricultural Station. The workers were paid monthly. The names of the workers were entered in a Roll Call book in respect of each section (Exs. J1-5). Time Sheets were kept for each section to record the attendance of the workers for the relevant period of each working month. The name of each [p.48] worker, his designation, his attendance, the total number of days worked, his rate of pay and date of engagement were entered on the Time Sheet. At the bottom of each Time Sheet there was the following certificate “I certify that each of the employees listed above has been employed in the capacity stated for the dates shown against his name” and signed by the Time Keeper and the Officer in Charge of the Station. It would appear that the working month at each section for payment of wages purposes commenced on 21st of each calendar month and ended on the 20th of the next calendar month.

On the basis of the entries on the Time Sheet a Pay Sheet (or Payment Voucher) was prepared in respect of each section under the Station, The following particulars were entered on the Pay Sheets: The name of the worker: his designation, his daily rate of pay, number of days worked~ normal wages, gross wages (including overtime), net wages payable and the total of the wages payable to all the workers listed. At the bottom of each Pay Sheet there were two certificates headed "A" and "B". Certificate “A” reads as follows:—

“I certify that the above-named employees (with the exception of those shown as unclaimed) were this day paid by me and that all deductions and unclaimed wages have been brought to account under Receipt Voucher.”

This certificate should be dated, signed by the Paying Officer and witnessed after the wages have been paid. Certificate "B" reads as follows:—

“The gross expenditure of Le ..... was incurred against the authority of D.W. No ..... and will not cause any excess expenditure.”

[p.49]

This certificate should be dated and signed by officer in Charge of the station.

After the preparation of the Pay Sheet and after the Officer in Charge had signed it, it was forwarded together with the relevant Time Sheet and other relevant documents to the Headquarters of the Ministry in Freetown and presented to the Accounts Section for processing. The officers at the Accounts Section checked the various entry on the documents presented to them and if satisfied passed the Pay Sheet for payment. A cheque was then prepared for the total of the various amounts on all the Pay Sheets presented for the month. The cheque was made payable to the Principal Agricultural Officer, drawn on the Bank or Sierra Leone and signed by the Accountant and other responsible officer in the Ministry. The cheque was then taken to the Bank of Sierra Leone and cashed after it had been endorsed for payment. The cash was then taken to the Station where the workers employed in the various sections were paid. Each worker on receiving his wages signed or affixed his thumb print at the back of the Pay Sheet to acknowledge receipt of his wages. After completion of payment. the Paying Officer completed and signed Certificate "A" on the Pay Sheet.

Between July 1974 and August 1976 fake Time Sheets were prepared in respect of fictitious workers who were not employed in any of the Sections under the Station and whose names did not appear on the Roll Call Book for any Section. The entries on the fake Time Sheets were then entered on fake Pay Sheets claiming payment in respect of the fictitious workers. The requisite Certificates "B" were duly signed by the Officer in Charge of the Station. The fake Pay Sheets and the fake Time Sheets were then presented to the Ministry in Freetown together with genuine Pay Sheets and Time Sheets. A cheque [p.50] for the total amount stated in all the Pay Sheets (genuine and fake) was prepared signed and made payable to Principal Agricultural Officer. The cheque was cashed at the Bank of Sierra Leone. Part of the cash received from the Bank of Sierra Leone was used to pay the genuine workers and the surpluses (consisting of the amounts claimed in respect of the fictitious workers) were not paid back to the Ministry but were misappropriated.

This in brief, according to the admissible evidence led by the prosecution, was the racket that operated at the Newton Station during the period relevant to the Indictment.

What then was the evidence (if any) against the 1st respondent? I shall answer this question in respect of each Count in turn.

Count 1 - The Pay Sheets for the working month 21st August 1975 to 20th September 1975 called for Le11,084.55. Among them were three Pay Sheets namely Ex. A1 for Le708.84, Ex. A2 for Le701.91 and A5 for Le748.44 totaling Le2159.19. Certificate "B" on each of those three Pay Sheets was signed by the 1st respondent, in his capacity as Officer in Charge of the Station. The relevant supporting Time Sheets were certified by the 1st respondent and the Time Keeper in the following terms:—

"I certify that each of the employees listed above has been employed in the capacity stated for the dates shown against his name."

But in fact the names of the workers entered on the three Pay Sheets and their supporting Time Sheets did not appear on any of the relevant Roll Call Books. Mr. Harleston (P.W.6), a Principal Auditor, said in evidence that the 1st respondent was the Vote Controller of the Station, and as such he was in charge of the Vote Service Ledger (Exs. K1 & K2). He said that [p.51] the amounts on the Pay Sheets should be entered on the. Vote Service Ledger. He said that the amounts in respect or the three Pay Sheets were not entered on the Vote Service Ledger. All the Pay Sheets for that month (including the three referred to above i.e. Exs. A1, A2 & A5) together with the supporting Time Sheets and other relevant documents were presented to the Accounts Section of the Ministry in Freetown. In due course a cheque was prepared and signed by the responsible officers.

The cheque was dated 23rd September, 1975, drawn on the Bank of Sierra Leone for Le11.084.55 and made payable to the "Principal Agricultural Officer Newton." The cheque was endorsed for payment by Mrs. Webber, (P.W.5) the Sub-Accountant at the Ministry on behalf of the Principal Agricultural officer, Newton. She said that she made that and other endorsements at the request of the 1st respondent and the learned trial Judge accepted her evidence. The cheque was cashed at the Bank of Sierra Leone Payment or the workers was effected on 24th September? 1975. According to Certificate "A" on the three Pay Sheets (Exs A1, A2 & A5) the workers listed therein were alleged to have been paid a total of Le2159.19 on 24th September, 1975. As stated earlier the workers listed in the three Pay Sheets were fictitious. The clear inference therefore is that the monies claimed and received in respect of those fictitious workers were misappropriated. The irresistible conclusion therefore is that the 1st respondent signed a certificate falsely certifying that the workers listed on the three Time Sheets were employed during the relevant period, falsely signed Certificate "B" on the three Pay Sheets and concurred in presenting those documents to the Ministry falsely representing that the workers listed in the three Pay Sheets and the supporting Time Sheets were employed in one of the Sections under the Station.

Acting on that false representation, the responsible officers issued a cheque for a total of Le11,084.55 which included the sum of Le2159.19 claimed in respect of the three Pay Sheets. Thereby the sum of Le11,084.55 was paid by the Bank of Sierra Leone for and on behalf of the Ministry, and the sum of Le2159.19 misappropriated. Clearly on the evidence the 1st respondent actively participated in making the false representation and concurred in fraudulently appropriating the sum of Le2159.19c.

The evidence in support of Counts 2 to 8 was to the same effect. So it is not necessary to discuss it in any detail. It will be sufficient to highlight certain pieces of evidence in respect of each Count.

Count 2 - The fake Time Sheets were certified by the 1st respondent. The fake Pay Sheets (Exs. B1, B2, B3 & B4) were also certified by him. The total amount claimed on those four Pay Sheets was Le4214.43. The cheque dated 23rd October, 1975 was made payable to the Assistant Chief Agriculturist III and was for Le11,056.35 (Ex. AA2). The cheque was endorsed by the 1st respondent and cashed at the Bank of Sierra Leone. Payment of workers was certified on the four Pay Sheets as having been effected on 24th October, 1975.

Count 3 - The fake Time Sheets were certified by the 1st respondont. The fake Pay Sheets (Exs. C1, C2, C3, C4) were also certified by him. The total amount claimed on those four Pay Sheets was Le3966.93. The cheque dated 26th November, 1975 was made payable to the Principal Agricultural Officer, Newton and was for Le12,206.05 (Ex. AA3). The cheque was endorsed by Mrs. Webber “for the Principal Agricultural Officer Newton.” It was cashed at the Bank of Sierra Leone. Payment of workers was certified on the four Pay Sheets to have been effected on 26th November, 1975.

Count 4 – The fake Time Sheets were certified by the 1st respondent. The fake Pay Sheets (Exs. Dl, D2, DJ & D4) were also certified by him. The total amount claimed on those four Pay Sheets was Le4117.41. The cheque was dated 24th December, 1975, made payable to the "P.A.O. Newton" and was for Le14,150.86 (Ex. AA4). The cheque was endorsed by the 1st respondent and it was cashed at the Bank of Sierra Leone. Payment of workers was certified on the four Pay Sheets as having been effected on 24th December, 1975.

Count 5 - The fake Time Sheets were certified by the 1st respondent. The fake Pay Sheets (Exs. El, E2, E3 & E4) were also certified by him. The total amount claimed on the four Pay Sheets was L4563.90. The cheque was dated 24th June, 1975, made payable to the Principal Officer Newton" and was for Le14,742.18 (Ex& AA5). The cheque was endorsed by the 1st respondent and it was cashed at the Bank of Sierra Leone. Payment of the workers was certified on the four Pay Sheets by the 1st respondent himself as having been effected, but no date is stated.

Count 6 - Only one fake Time Sheet and one fake Pay Sheet are involved. The Time Sheet is Certified by the 1st respondent. The amount claimed in the Pay Sheet (Ex. F1) is Le853.38. The cheque was dated 25th July, 1975, made payable to the “Principal Agricultural Officer Newton” and was for Le13,164.14. It was endorsed by Mrs. Webber on 25th July, 1975 for principal Agriculture Officer Newton.” The date payment of workers was effected is not stated on the Pay Sheet. The paying officer did not sign the certificate, but a witness to the payment signed.

Count 7 - The fake Time Sheets were not certified by the 1st respondent. But the fake Pay Sheets (Exs. G1, G2, G3, G4 & G5) were certified by him. The total amount claimed on those five [p.54] Pay Sheets was Le5463.81. The cheque was dated 22nd June, 1976 made payable to the Principal Agriculture Officer Newton" and was for Le15,390.83 (Ex. AA7). The cheque was endorsed by the 1st respondent and it was cashed at the Bank of Sierra Leone. Payment of the workers was certified on the five Pay Sheets as having been effected. But the date of payment is stated on only two Pay Sheets (i.e. Exs. G4 & G5) as 24th June, 1976.

Count 8 The fake Time Sheets were not certified by the 1st respondent. But the fake Pay Sheets (Exs. H1, H2, H) & H4) were certified by him. The total amount claimed on those four Pay Sheets was Le5116.37. The cheque was dated 23rd August, 1976, made payable to the "Principal Agriculture Officer Newton" and was for Le·13,809.69 (Ex. AA9). The cheque was endorsed by the 1st respondent and it was cashed at the Bank of Sierra Leone. Payment of the workers was certified on the four Pay Sheets as having been effected on 27th August, 1976.

Count 9 - This count relates to Pay Sheet WR.44/6/76 (Ex.G1). According to the evidence already referred to, the entries thereon, including the amounts entered as wages due workers who were alleged to have worked at the Newton Poultry Station, were clearly false. The Pay Sheet was certified by the 1st respondent. On this evidence the reasonable inference could be drawn that he made or concurred in making the false entries on the Pay Sheet with intent to defraud the Republic of the sum of Le399.96 (i.e. the total amount entered on the Pay Sheet).

Count 10 - This count relates to Pay Sheet No. WR.425/3/75 (Ex. F2). The total amount claimed therein in respect of fictitious workers listed therein is Le665.28. It was certified by the 1st respondent on 18th March, 1975. A cheque dated 21st March, 1975 for Le12,823.87 was made payable to “P.A.O. Newton.” The cheque was endorsed by the 1st respondent and it was cashed at the Bank of Sierra Leone. From this [p.55] evidence it could reasonably be inferred that the 1st respondent made or concurred in making the false entries and with intent to defraud the Republic of the sum of Le665.28.

Count 11 - According to the judgment of the trial Judge the evidence relied on by the prosecution to prove this count is the confession statements of the two accused persons i.e. Ex. R in the case of the 1st respondent and Ex. S in the case of the other accused. And that was the evidence relied on by the trial Judge in convicting the 1st respondent. But since I am assuming in this part of my judgment that Ex. R was wrongfully admitted in evidence, it means that there is no other evidence to warrant the conviction on this count. In the circumstances I would dismiss the appeal on this count.

It is of interest to note that the 1st respondent made a cautioned statement on the 12th January, 1977 after he had been charged. The statement was tendered and admitted in evidence without any objection by or on behalf' of the 1st respondent (Ex.T). And no suggestion was made at the trial or since then that that statement was not a voluntary statement. The statement reads:—

“I rely on my previous statement made to the police on Monday 10th January, 1977 at 1606 hours.”

The previous statement mentioned in Ex. T was EX. “R” the impugned statement.

I propose to base my conclusion on the evidence against the 1st respondent as analysed above, excluding the contents of the two statements (Ex. R & Ex. T) from my consideration.

On that basis, the evidence against the 1st respondent on each of Counts 1 to 10 was, in my judgment, clear and overwhelming and that the only reasonable verdict that a jury properly directed, or a judge properly directing himself would have arrived at one of' Guilty on each of those counts.

[p.56]

I shall now turn to the appeals against the 2nd and the 3rd respondents. In their Notices of Appeal to the Court of Appeal the 2nd respondent filed three grounds of appeal against conviction, and the 3rd respondent filed two grounds of appeal against conviction. At the hearing of the appeal before the Court or Appeal, the 3rd respondent was given leave to file an additional ground of appeal. After dealing exhaustively with the appeal of the 1st respondent, the Court of Appeal (majority)proceeded to summarily dispose of the appeals of the 2nd and 3rd respondents by allowing their appeals. They failed to consider the merits or otherwise of their appeals. With respect, it would appear that the majority of the Court of Appeal were so obsessed with the appeal of the 1st respondent especially on the issue of admissibility of his statement to the police, that they allowed their views to be clouded in dealing with the appeals of the 2nd and the 3rd respondents. I shall now deal with the appeals against the 2nd and 3rd respondents seriatim.

The 2nd Respondent

The 2nd respondent was charged and convicted on Counts 1, 2, 3, 4, 7. 8 & 9. The Grounds of Appeal of the 2nd respondent to the Court of Appeal were as follows:—

(1) That the verdict is unreasonable or cannot be supported having regard to the evidence.

(2) That the learned Judge did not sufficiently consider the case for the appellant.

(3) That the learned trial Judge erred in the law relating to Larceny and Falsification of Accounts.

[p.57]

None of these grounds of appeal was dealt with by either Tejan J.S.C. or Warne J.A. in their respective judgment. The 2nd respondent made three statements to the Police. The first was a cautioned statement made on 7th January, 1977. It was objected to but the trial Judge after holding a trial within a trial held that it was made voluntarily and admitted it in evidence (Ex. H). The second was a cautioned statement made on 11th January 1977. Counsel for the 2nd respondent objected to it, but he immediately thereafter withdrew his objection. Whereupon the learned trial judge admitted it in evidence (Ex. "N"). The third was a cautioned statement made on 12th January, 1977 after he had been charged, and was admitted in evidence without any objection (Ex. V). In the first statement (Ex. M) the 2nd appellant gave a detailed catalogue of his involvement in preparing fake Time Sheets and fake Pay Sheets from August, 1975 to November, 1976. He admitted preparing fake Time Sheets and fake Pay Sheets and then benefiting from the distribution of the loot thereof in respect of (1) period 21st Augu'st-

20th September, 1975 (Count 1); (2) period 21st September, 1975 to 20th October, 1975 (Count 2); (3) period 21st October, 1975 to 20th November, 1975 (Count 3); and (4) period 21st November, 1975 to 20th December, 1975 (Count 4). In the second statement (Ex. N) the 2nd respondent again gave a detailed catalogue of his involvement and participation in various corrupt transactions relating to reparation of Time Sheets and Pay Sheets from January, 1976 to November, 1976. He admitted preparing fake Time Sheets and fake Pay Sheets and then benefiting from the loot thereof in respect of (5) period 21st May, 1976 to 20th June, 1976 (Count 7) and (6) period 21st July, 1976 to 20th August, 1976 (Count 8). In the third statement (Ex. V) the 2nd respondent stated that he relied on his two previous statements i.e. Ex. M & Ex. N.

[p.58]

There was no appeal to the Court of Appeal against the admission in evidence of the first statement (Ex.M) or against the admissibility of' the second (Ex.N) or the third (Ex.V) statement. In addition to these three uncontested confession statements before the Court of Appeal, there was also overwhelming and uncontroverted oral and other documentary evidence against the 2nd respondent. There was evidence that he signed the requisite certificates on the relevant Time Sheets and Pay Sheets in respect of the (7) period 21st August 1975 to 20th September, 1975 (Exs. Al, A2 & A5 Count 1); (8) period 21st September, 1975 to 20th October 1975 (Exs.Bl-4 and Count 2); (9) period 21st October, 1975 to 20th November, 1975 (Exs. C1-4 and Count 3), (10) period 21st November, 1975 to 20th December, 1975 (Exs. D1-4 and Count 4); (11) period 21st May, 1976 to 20th June 1976 (Exs. G1-5 and Count 7); (12) period 21st July to 20th August, 1976 (Exs. H1-4 and Count 8); (13) Pay Sheet WR.443/6/76 (Ex. G1 and Count 9).

Evidence was also led that the 2nd respondent's thumb print was a fixed to the back of the Pay Sheets relevant to the charges against him, thereby creating the impression that those thumb prints were the thumb prints of genuine workers who had received their wages.

Having regard to the Grounds of Appeal filed by the 2nd respondent and the overwhelming evidence against him, there was clearly no merit in his appeal to the Court of Appeal. Therefore the Court of Appeal should have dismissed his appeal as being unmeritorious. It follows that in my judgment the Court of Appeal (majority) erred in allowing the appeal of 2nd respondent against his conviction in respect of each of the the Counts on which the learned Judge convicted him.

[p.59]

The 3rd Respondent

The 3rd respondent was charged and convicted on Counts 7, 8 & 9. His Grounds of Appeal to the Court of Appeal were as follows:—

(1) That the learned trial Judge erred in the law relating to obtaining by False Pretences and Falsification of Accounts.

(2) That the verdict is unreasonable and cannot be supported having regard to the evidence.

His additional Ground of Appeal was in the following terms:—

"The 3rd appellant having been found not guilty of Count 7 and 8 of stealing monies alleged to belong to the Republic the learned trial judge erred in law in convicting him of obtaining the said monies which were never proved by the prosecution to have belonged to the Republic of Sierra Leone, by false pretences and with intent to defraud."

The Court of Appeal (majority) failed to deal with any of these grounds of appeal. The 3rd respondent made three statements to the police. The first was made on 8th January, 1977 (Ex. "O")and the second on 11th January, 1977 (Ex."P"). The third was made on 11th January, 1977 when the 3rd respondent was charged (Ex. "W"). All three statements were tendered and admitted in evidence without any objection. In the first statement he admitted that he started signing fake Time Sheets and fake Pay Sheets in February or March, 1976 and continued doing so until December, 1976 "When there was no funds again to cover payments for the fake workers." He also admitted [p.60] sharing in the loot. It is relevant to not that the period covered in the Counts against him is May 1976 to August, 1976. In the second statement he repeated his previous admission additional evidence that he signed the certificates on the supporting Time Sheets of Exs. G1-5 as Officer in Charge and also countersigned the Pay Sheets (Count 7). He also certified the supporting Time Sheets of Exs. H1-4 as Officer in Charge and countersigned the Pay Sheets (Count 8). He certified also the supporting Time Sheet of Ex. G1 as Officer in Charge and countersigned the Pay Sheet (Count 9). It is abundantly clear therefore that there was overwhelming evidence against the 3rd respondent on all the three Counts in respect of which he was charged. The points of law raised in his Grounds of Appeal were imprecise and lacked any substance. In the circumstances the Court of Appeal should have dismissed his appeal against conviction as being without any merit.

I shall now deal with the final issue. Tejan J.S.C. concluded his judgment by saying that he was "unable to say that the appellants had a fair trial. My view is that the entire trial was unsatisfactory." Mr. Tejan-Cole has submitted that that statement was totally unjustified. The learned Justice did not specify in what respect the trial was unfair or unsatisfactory. I entirely agree with Mr. Tajan-Cole's submission. Rather than the trial being unfair or unsatisfactory, the printed records show that the learned trial Judge bent over backwards on too many occasions during the trial in an apparent effort to be fair to the accused resulting in the trial being unnecessarily protracted.

[p.61]

In the result I would allow the appeal against the 1st respondent in respect of count 1 to 10. I would set aside the orders or the Court of Appeal with respect to these Counts and restore his conviction on those counts (Counts 1 to 10). I would dismiss the appeal against him in respect of Count 11 and confirm the order of the Court of Appeal acquitting him on that Count. I would allow the appeal against the 2nd respondent in respect of Counts 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, 8 & 9. I would set aside the orders of the Court of Appeal and restore his conviction on those Counts. I would allow the appeal against the 3rd respondent in respect of Counts 7, 8 & 9. I would set aside the orders of the Court of appeal and restore his conviction on those Counts.

[p.62]

The 1st respondent appealed against sentence to the Court of Appeal. This court, exercising the powers of the Court of Appeal under Section 58(4) of the Courts Act 1965, may pass such other sentence warranted in law (whether more or less severe) in substitution for the sentence passed by the trial judge. In my opinion the sentence imposed on a convicted person must meet the crime and the case. The prevalence of this type of offences and the magnitude of the fraud perpetrated by the 1st respondent are some of the factors that the learned trial judge should have taken into consideration in passing sentence

In my opinion the circumstances of this case warranted a custodial sentence. To impose a fine in such circumstances would give the impression that criminals may profit from their crime. Speaking for myself, I would have substituted a custodial sentence for the sentence imposed by the trial judge.

But in all the circumstances this court has decided not to interfere with the sentence imposed.

WELLINGTON DISTILLERIES - APPELLANTS

AND

ELECTRODIA P. CLARKSON - RESPONDENT

(CONSTITUTIONAL REFERENCE)

C. DOE-SMITH ESQ., for Appellant

DESMOND LUKE, ESQ., with him G. OKEKE, ESQ., for respondent

DELIVERED ON THE 8TH DAY OF APRIL 1982

JUDGMENT

TEJAN J.S.C.

A writ of summons was issued on behalf of the appellants by the Hon. Attorney-General and Minister of Justice on the 25th day of January, 1978 claiming the sum of Le.1884.16 being cost of goods and products sold by the appellants to the respondent. The Statement of Claim states that the appellants is and was at all material times a limited liability company registered under Cap. 249 of the Laws of Sierra Leone, and that the respondent was at all material times agent and or distributor of the appellants' goods and products. The Statement of Claim then shows the circumstances under which the debt was incurred by the respondent. An appearance was entered and a statement of defence filed and delivered. In the statement of defence, the respondent counter-claimed against the appellant. A reply and defence to the counter-claim were also filed and issues were joined.

[p.24]

On 1st day of February, 1979 the respondent moved the High Court challenging the status of a Law Officer in issuing of the writ and asked that the writ be set aside on a number of grounds. There was an affidavit sworn on the 29th day of February, 1978 in support of the notice of motion.

The application was heard by Thompson-Davis J. on the 1st and 5th February, 1978 when Ruling was reserved

In giving his ruling on the 5th day of November, 1979, the learned Judge said!

"The real question relevant to this notice of motion is whether the writ of Summons in this action can be properly brought by a State Counsel that is a member of the Law Officers Department."

He then proceeded to refer to the relevant portions of the pleadings, and then said:

“Now the office of the Attorney-General and the organisation of the Law Officers' Department are regulated by the Principal Act the Law Officers Act, 1965.

Section 2 of this Act reads—

“2(1) The Attorney-General shall in addition to the function conferred upon him by sections 73 and 74 of the Constitution.

(a) be the principal legal adviser of the government and

(b) represent the government, ministries, Parliamentary Secretaries, and Public Officers in all civil proceedings arising in the course of the discharge of their duties

[p.25]

2(2) The Attorney General shall be the Principal Legal Adviser to the Minister referred to in any legislation establishing a statutory corporation as being responsible for the discharge of the functions conferred on a Minister by the said legislation.”

In his carefully considered judgment, and having taken into account the relevant Acts and Legislations pertaining to the issues before him, the learned Judge allowed the application and set aside the writ of summons together with all subsequent proceedings.

It is against that decision that the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice appealed to the Court of Appeal on the following grounds

(1) The learned trial Judge failed in law to advert his mind to section 3 of the law officers Act No. 6 of 1965 before reaching his decision.

(2) The learned trial Judge misdirected himself in holding that the real question relevant to this notice of Motion is whether the Writ of Summons in this action can be properly brought by a State Counsel that is a member of the Law Officer's Department.

(3) The learned trial Judge failed to consider Section 38{4) of the Constitution which give6 right of audience to the Attorney-General in all courts except Local Courts.

(4) the learned trial judge wrongfully reached his decision as if the Attorney-General was the plaintiff in the action.”

[p.26]

On the 29th September 1901, who hearing of the appeal came before During, Cole and Navo (JJ,A.). The proceeding before the Court of Appeal was brief and unsatisfactory. What was recorded in the record of the Court of Appeal can be shortly stated. It reads:—

“Court indicates to Mr. Doe-Smith that the question to be decided on appeal might be of Constitutional importance which should be gone into by the Supreme Court to wit whether or not the Attorney General or anyone acting on his behalf, e.g. State Counsel could institute the proceedings in this matter. Doe-Smith Agrees that the judgment raises point which touches on Constitutional question but in his view, having regard to Section 3 of the Law Officer's Act No.6 of 1965, the Attorney-General acting on the request of the President can himself and by someone acting on his behalf represent any other person in any proceedings before any Court, civil or otherwise.”

DECISION

“We hold that this is a matter which we should refer to the Supreme Court to determine whether or not the Attorney-General or any person or a State Counsel acting on his behalf is competent to institute a Civil Action on behalf of a Corporation which is not a Statutory Corporation for example a Private Company in which the Sierra Leone Government has shares or controlling shares on a claim as that endorsed in the Writ of Summons in this matter.

[p.27]

We order stay of proceedings and refer this matter for consideration of the question referred to above by the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone.”

Section 104(1) of the Constitution enacts that the Supreme Court shall, save as otherwise provided in sections 18 and 101 of this Constitution, have original jurisdiction, to the exclusion of all other Courts

(a) in all matters relating to the enforcement or interpretation of any of the provision of this Constitution, and

(b) where any Question arises whether an .enactment was made in excess of the power conferred upon Parliament or any other authority or person by law or under this Constitution.

In my opinion the question posed by the Court of Appeal is vague and imprecise. The lower Courts in referring matters to the Supreme Court should endeavour to formulate questions in precise terms. They must refer to the specific section of the constitution which requires interpretation.

The question as posed is a Constitutional question. But it should be noted that not all Constitutional questions may necessarily involve or entail the interpretation of' the Constitution. The question that should be referred to the Supreme Court must relate to the interpretation of any of the provision of the Constitution.

The question posed, in my view, does not relate to the interpretation of the Constitution. Therefore it should not have been referred to this Court. In the circumstances, we are not empowered to deal with it as a reference under section 104 of the Constitution.

Mr. Doe Smith relied on the right of audience conferred on the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice by section 88(4) of the Constitution, Indeed that section is referred to in ground (3) of the grounds of appeal to the Court of Appeal. He used this right as the basis for his submission that the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice had an unrestricted right to represent any person in any proceedings before any Court ... (except Local Courts). This argument is so novel, and if accepted, will have such far reaching effect, that for the avoidance of a multiplicity of references, it is considered expedient to deal with it.

What then does the right of audience conferred on the Attorney General and Minister of Justice Section 88(4) of the Constitution mean and-what is its scope? In my opinion the section is simple. What it confers, is a right to be heard. It says that the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice has the right to be heard in all Courts. This is one of the rights conferred on all duly enrolled Barristers and Solicitors in Sierra Leone. This is one of' the rights enjoyed by all Barristers in England for centuries. The position in England was stated in Collier V. Hicks (1831) 2 B & A.D. 663, Lord Tenterden C.J. said at page 668:—

“The Superior Courts do not allow every person to interfere in their proceedings as an advocate, but confine their privilege to gentlemen admitted to the bar by the members of one of the Inns of Courts. They do not allow attorneys to act as advocates, and in one of them (the Court of Common Pleas), even all gentlemen of the bar are not allowed to exercise all the duties of advocates, but the full privilege of so doing is confined to those who are of the degree of the coif. So doctors of the civil law are not [p.29] Entitled to act as advocates in the courts at Westminster, although they may do so by special permission by those Courts. So at the quarter sessions, the justices usually require that gentlemen of the bar only should appear as advocates; but, in remote places where they do not attend, members of the other branch of the profession are permitted to act as advocates. Persons not in the legal profession are not allowed to practice as advocates in any of these courts.”

Parke J. in the same case said at page 672:—

“No person has a right to act as an advocate without the leave of the Court, which must of necessity have the power of regulating its own proceedings in all cases where they are not already regulated by ancient usage. In the Superior Courts, by ancient usage, persons of a particular class are allowed to practice as advocates, and they could not lawfully be prevented.”

In Rondel v. Worsley (1966) J W.L.R. 950, Lord Denning M.R. dealing with the right of audience of a Barrister in England said at page 962:—

“As an advocate he is a Minister of Justice equally with the judge. He has a monopoly of audience in the higher Courts. No one have he can address the judge, unless it be a litigant in person. This carries with it a corresponding responsibility.”

[p.30]

In view of what I have said above, I do not think that we should answer the question posed. The Court of Appeal should proceed with the hearing of the appeal and ultimately answer the question posed if they consider it necessary.

RULING DELIVERED ON MONDAY 4TH JULY, 1983

Livesey Luke . C.J.

The 2nd Appellant was convicted before the High Court sitting in Freetown on 8th May, 1981 of the offence of Robbery contrary to section 23(2) of the Larceny Act 1916 and sentenced to 7 years imprisonment. He appealed to the Court of Appeal against his conviction and sentence. On 9th June, 1982 the Court of Appeal delivered judgment inter alia substituting a verdict of Guilty of Receiving agains the 2nd Appellant in place of the verdict of Guilty of Robery and dismissed the appeal against sentence. Subsequently, Mr. C.V.M Campbell, Solicitor acting for the 2nd Appellant gave a notice of Appeal to the Supreme Court dated 31st july, 1982 against the judgment of the Court of Appeal.

When the appeal came up for hearing on 7th June, 1983, this Court called upon Mr. C.V. M. Campbell, Counse for the 2nd Appallant, to satisfy us that the appeal of the 2nd Appellant was within the prescribed time.

[p.41]

The Supreme Court Rules, 1982 prescribe that time for giving notice of Criminal appeal to the Supreme Court. Rule 74(1) provides as follows:—

"74 (1) Where the State or any person desires to appeal to the Supreme Court in a Criminal cause or matter he shall give notice of an application for special leave to appeal within one month of the decision of the Court of Appeal or within ten days of the refusal of leave by the Court of Appeal as the case may be."

(Emphasis Mine).

Mr. Campbell accepted in the course of his argument that "month" in rule 74 (1) means "calendar month." Indeed rule 1 of the Rules defines month as "calendar month." but Mr. Campbell submitted that one month in the context of rule 74(1) means one of the twelve unequal parts (months) into which a calendar year is divided, for example the months of January, February, April and so on. In other words, according to Mr. Campbell, a month means from the first tot he last day of the month. So according to him, if a decision is given on the 2nd of a month, time for appealing would not start to run until the first day of the following month. Mr. Barber on the other hand submitted that for the purpose of computing a "calandar month" the period expires on the date of the succeeding month immediately proceding the date on which the decision was given.

What Mr. Cambell's arguments amounts to is this: Whether a decision was given onthe first or the last day of a particular month, time for giving a Notice of Appeal would not start to run util the first day of the following month. So an aggrived party would have more or less time to give his Notice of Appeal

[p.42] depending on whether the decision was given early or late in the month. Such a result would give an agrived party whose decision was given early in the month an unwarranted advantage. In my opinion, the construction contended for by Mr. Campbell would result in inequality of treatment of appellants, would make the period for giving Notices of Appeal indefinate and would result in absurdity.

I think that the words of the sub-rules are quite plain and unambigeous. The rules says that the notice shall be given "within one month of the decision of the Court of Appeal." i interprete one month"of the decision" as meaning one month from the date of the decision. In other words it means one calendar month from the decision. There is nothing in the sub-rules to indicate or even suggest that "within one month of the decision" means within one calendar month form the first day of the succeeding month.

I think that it is well settled that when the period prescribed for doing an act or taking a precedural step is a calendar month running from any artibitrary date, the period expires with the day in the succeeding month immediately preceding the day corresponding to the date upon which the peirod starts. An arbitrary date in this context would mean the date on which a decision is given by a Court. So if a decision is given on the 2nd of the month, the one month within which to give Notice of Appeal would expire on the 1st of the succeeding mongth. Similarly, if a decision is given on the 15th of the month, the one month within which to give Notice of Appeal would expire on the 14th of the succeeding month; and so on and so forth. But the position is different if the period starts at the end of the calendar month which contains more days than the succeeding mongh. In that case the peirod would expire at the end of the succeeding month. So if for example the decision is given on the 31st of March, the period of one month [p.43] would expire on the 30 of April. Similarly, if the decision is given on the 31st of January, the period of one month would expire on 28th February,or in the case of a leap year on 29th February. See Halsbury's laws 3rd Ed. Vol. 37 para. 143 pp. 83-84

As a general rule, the computation of time is the same whether the matter is Civil or Criminal. See Redeliffe v. Bartholomew (1892) 1 Q.B. 161. Sos if a prisoner is sentenced to one month's imprisonment on the 17th of the month, his term would expire on the 16th of the succeeding month. Thus it was held in Migutti v. Colvill (1879) 4 C.P.D. 233 that a person sentenced to imprisonment for the space of one calendar month is entitled to be discharged on the day in succeeding month immediately preceding the day corresponding to that from which his sentence takes effect. Brett L.J. stated the position succinctly at p. 238 thus:

"I am of the opinion that the term a calendar month is legal and technical term, and what we are bound to interpretits legal and technical meaning. The meaning of the phrase is that, in computing time by calendar month, the time must be reckoned by loking at the calendar and not by counting days: and that one calendar month's imprisonment to the day numerically corresponding to that day in the following month less one."

And Cotton L.J. added inter alia at pp. 238-239:—

..... it is not a question of measurement of time, but of the technical meaning of the word "calendar month." Prisoners cannot always be imprisoned during one particular [p.44] calendar month, in the sense of a month the name of which is to the found in the calendar. What than is the meaning of the term when the sentence begins otherwise than on the first day of the calendar month

The imprionsment ends at 12 o'clock on the day immediately preceding the day in the following month corresponding to the day on which the imprisonment begins."

In the course of his reply Mr. Campbell reminded us, rightly, that this Court is not bound by decisions of the English Courts and urged us not to follow English decisions like Migotti v Colvill (supra). In my opinion the interpretation put by the English Courts over the years on the words "calendar month" in cases like Migotti v. Colvill and Radcliffe v Bartholomew is the only reasonable and common sense interpretation, and one not calculated to result in absurdity or uncertainty. I have no hesitation in adopting and applying these decisions.

In my judgment therefore "within one mongh of the decision of the Cort of Appeal" in the instant case means one calendar month from 9th June 1982. On the basis of the computation stated above, the one month expired on 8th July 1982. In the circumstance the Notice of Appeal was patently given out of time.

I would therefore strike out the appeal of the 2nd Appellant.

JUDGMENT DELIVERED THIS 29TH DAY OF DECEMBER, 1983

TEJAN J.S.C:

The events leading to this appeal can be stated briefly:—

The story according to the appellant started on the 7th day of February, 1976 when the appellant, a motor apprentice, boarded a Mazda Van WR. 8976 driven by the 2nd respondent and owned by the 1st respondent to convey him to Waterloo village. The appellant was to pay the sum of twenty cents as a fare for the journey. The second respondent, arrive at Tombo village stopped the Van and took some passengers. They second respondent then continued his journey, but because of the number of passengers when he arrived at Mama Beach, he asked the appellant to assist in loading the goods of the passengers on the carrier of the van. The appellant obligingly did so, and the second respondent told him to sit on the right side of the vehicle, the steering wheel being on the other side. The second respondent continued the journey and when he drove towards a lop in Jumu Town, the vehicle developed speed and got into a gallop. The result was that the appellant fell off the vehicle and was unable to get up. The attention of [p.104] the second defendant was called, and on reversing the vehicle, road over the leg of the appellant who fainted and gain consciousness at the Connaught Hospital where he was treated by the Senior Specialist Surgeon Mr. Ulric Jones and later by Senior Specialist Surgeon Mr. Abu Kargbo. When the appellant was discharged from the hospital he went to Waterloo police station to make a statement in respect of the accident, but to his dismay he was told that he had already made a statement and the matter had been disposed of in the Magistrate Court.

Being dissatisfied with the manner in which the matter was handled, the appellant on the 31st day of January 1977, instituted proceedings against the 1st and 2nd respondents, claimed damages for negligence and also special damages.

The respondents denied negligence on the part of the 2nd respondent, denied that the 2nd respondent reversed, and contended that if there was negligence on the part of the 2nd respondent (which was categorically denied) the appellant contributed to the negligence.

The case was heard by Williams J. and first witness for the appellant was Mr. Ulric Jones. This witness testified that on the 7th February 1976, he examined the appllant and he found the following injuries:—

1. He had sustained a crush injury to the right lower limb

2. Swelling on his left ankle

3. Multiple bruises and abrasions of the left leg.

4. Severe strain of his back

5. Shock

The appellant was admitted in hospital on the same day, and after the witness had removed a lot of dead tissues and cleaned the wound, he had grave doubt whether the limb would e saved and on the 14th day of February, 1976, he had to perform an electric amputation. Following this the appellant had general treatment and was later transferred to Murray Town Hospital on the 9th day of March, 1976 for measurement and assessment for an artificial limb.

[p.105]

Between the 7th day of February, 1976 and 14th day of February 1976, the appellant was ill, and witness had great doubts as to whether the appellant had full powers of memory, consciousness and awareness. The appellant had impaired consciousness up to the 24th day of February, 1976, indicating that, he had had a toxic illness. This necessitated the administration of pre-medication drugs on the 12th day of February, 1976. The witness was confidence that between the 12th day of February 1976 and 14th February 1967, and in particular on the 13th day of February 1967, the appellant was not in any condition to undergo any high task of memory. The witness put in evidence exhibit “A” for which he had received the sum of Le 20.00 and that he recommended the use of artificial limbs the cost of which ranged at the time from Le 800.00 to Le 2,00.00 for each limb. According to the witness, the amputation of the appellant's limb would affect his activities and he would continue to suffer pain on the knee from to time, and that even with an artificial limb, the appellant would not be able to drive a vehicle unless it is a specially adjusted vehicle.

Dr. Abu Kakarra Kargbo Senior Surgeon Specialist attached to the Connaught Hospital examined the appellant on the 7th day of September 1976 and found that the appellant had permanently lost his right leg due to amputation following a crushed injury. The appellant complained of intermittent pain in his lumbo-sacral spine and also restricted movement on that part of his spinal column. The appellant was tender on the medical aspect of his left ankle, and he complained of pain in his joint. His evidence corroborated to a large extent the evidence of Mr. Ulric Jones. He admitted that he was paid the sum of Le 100.00 and he than put the residual assessment f the appellant disabilities at 70%.

The appellant having told the Court how the accident happened, was cross-examined on behalf of the respondents. He denied that he was an apprentice working for the second respondent on the day in question. He said that he paid Mr. Kargbo the sum of Le 100.00 [p106] and Mr. Jones the sum of Le 40.00 but Mr. Jones said that the amount paid to him was the sum of Le 20.00 for which he produced a receipt. While he was in the hospital, he bought food to the total amount of Le 100.00, and that he spent more than Le 50.00 while he was attending hospital. He said that he did not know one Eku and one Mr. Jalloh.

He denied that while the van was in motion he climbed to its roof in order to steal fish.

The 1st respondent neither gave evidence nor called any witness, buth second respondent gave evidence and called witnesses. His evidence was tat on the 7th February, 1976 he drove van WR 8967 and that it was one James Bernie who hired him to drive the van. When the van was handed to him, one Eku and the appellant were the apprentices. He recalled that 7th February 1976 when the van was involved in an accident at Jumu Town while he was proceeding from Mama Beach. There were hills and pot holes on the road. He closed the an after his apprentices had entered it as this was his usual custom while he was driving Eku stopped him by shouting "one bell". He stopped after travelling a short distance and alighted. He then say the appellant lying on the road with one of the baskets. He did not know what had happened when he heard the call for "one bell" and he did not reverse the van. In answer to Mr. Betts, learned Counsel who appeared for appellant at the trial, he said that he made a statement to the police a day after the accident. He denied that he told the police that he loaded seven large baskets f fish on the carrier. He said that Eku wan not called Abu and he denied that he told the police that it was his apprentice named Abu who signaled to him that the appellant had fallen off the van. He denied that he was charged with the offence of carrying passengers at the entrance and also for carrying passengers without proper sitting accommodation.

Ekundayo Taylor gave evidence on behalf of the respondents. This witness deposed that he knew the 2nd respondent and the appellant. About two years previously, a Mazda van driven by the 2nd respondent was involved in an accident at Jumu Town. [p.107] That at the material time, he and the appellant were apprentices attached to the 2nd respondent an that both of them were on the van at the time of the accident. He said that he 2nd respondent was driving the van from Tombo village. At Tombo village, the 2nd respondent loaded the van, closed the door, went to the driver's seat and drove off. The witness and the appellant were on board the van when the 2nd respondent closed the door. When the van got at Jumu Town, the appellant claimed up to the carrier.

At Jumu Town, the appellant fell down with a basket. The witness shouted "one bell" indicating to the driver to stop. The 2nd respondent stopped the van d did not drive backwards after he had stopped. The witness and 2nd respondent put the appellant into the van but the passenger refused to board the van the witness and 2nd respondent took the appellant to the hospital at Waterloo and later brought him to the Connaught Hospital in Freetown. The 2nd respondent left the witness at the Connaught Hospital, saying that he was going to report the accident at he police station.

The next witness for respondent was Jaiah Kaikai, a police constable attached to the Traffic section at Masiaka police station. This witness recalled the 7th day of February, 1976 when a report of a road accident was made by the driver of Mazda ban WR 8967 Foday Bangura of Tombo Village. The scene of the accident had been visited by other police officers, but on eh 8th February, 1976 he took over the investigation of the accident. He visited the scene together with the 2nd respondent on the same day he took over the investigation. He obtained voluntary statements from both the 2nd respondent and appellant. He opened a police file containing all statements and other documents pertaining to the accident. He put the file in evidence and it is exhibit "D" folio 2 of exhibit "D" was the statement of the appellant and it was obtained on the 13th day of February, 1976 at the Connaught Hospital.

[p.108]

In answer to Mr. Betts, Counsel for the appellant, the witness said that he conducted the investigation and charged Foday Bangura with the offence of carrying one adult passenger at the near entrance door of the van while in motion and carrying passengers without proper sitting accommodation. The witness was shown Folio 1 page 2 of exhibit "D". He said that the name of Abu was there an apprentice and he did not have the name of Ekunday Taylor as an pprentice. According to the witness, the name of Ekundayo Taylor was not mentioned as one of the passengers on board the van and eh did not have the name of Ekindayo taylor as an apprentice.

In dealing with the evidence, the learned Judge referred to the Statement of Defense filed and delivered y the respondents admitting that the appellant was a passenger on board the van, and disbelieved the evidence of the 2nd respondent and Ekundayo Taylor that the appellant was an apprentice on board the van at the time of the accident. The Learned Judge refereed to Exhibit "D" the statement of the 2nd respondent made a day after the accident, and in that statement the 2nd respondent said that the name of Ekundayo Taylor was never mentioned to him. It is significant that Ekundayo Taylor said in his evidence that he continued as an apprentice to the 2nd respondent never mentioned the name of Ekundayo Taylor when he made the statement to the police. It is quite clear that the Learned Judge did not believe the defense. The Learned Judge's view on the matter is expressed thus: —

“On the whole I do not for one moment believe that he plaintiff climbed to the carrier of the vehicle whilst it was in motion and it was from there that he cut out and fell down. I believe that owing to the inadequacy of sitting accommodation in the van at the material time the plaintiff cut out from where he was sitting in the van and fell over. I believe also that after the alarm was given that the plaintiff had fallen off, the driver second defendants stopped the van and reversed it to where the plaintiff was lying down and rode over the latter’s right leg.

[p.109]

The description of the injury to the plaintiff’s right leg cannot by any stretch of imagination be consistent with mere falling down to the road from off the van. Since his right leg was crushed to the extend of having it amputated as being useless and unserviceable, some heavy force must have been applied on that right leg whilst it was lying on the road. Such crushing injury can only be consistent with the story that the vehicle reversed and rode over the plaintiff’s right leg."

The Learned Judge dealt with the evidence of Ekundayo Taylor in the following terms:—

"As regards to evidence of the said Ekindayo Taylor apart from his demeanour in the witness box which made his evidence very suspect, his narrative of the accident and the alleged behavior of the plaintiff to say the least, was so hazy that such a cam can only be described as inveterate liar.”

In the end the Learned Judge gave Judgment in favour of the appellant and awarded him the sum of Le 35,000.00 as General Damages and the sum of Le 250,000 as Special Damages

It is against that judgment that the respondent appealed to the Court of Appeal on four grounds:—

(1) That the Trial Judge erred in law in failing to give consideration the entire evidence of the Plaintiff/Respondent in that he accepted those portion of his statement which are favourable to him whilst completely ignoring in his judgment the portion of evidence which supported the case for the defense.

(2) That the Learned Trial Judge was biased in law in failing to consider the entire evidence of the Plaintiff/Respondent thus disenabling him from making a fair and accurate evaluation of the whole evidence before him.

[p.110]

(3 That the judgment is against the weight of evidence.

(4) That in all the circumstances the sum of Le 35,250.00 awarded as damages was excessive.

The appeal was heard on the 22nd day of January 1981 before During, Cole and Turay JJ.A. The Court of Appeal, after having heard arguments on both sides, delivered judgment on the 15th day of April 1981. Cole J.A. who delivered judgment on the 15th day after giving a summary of the contentions and submissions of both sides, concluded that he immediate issue which arose out of the subtle and enlightened arguments by both Counsel, was to determine whether Learned Trial judge in reviewing the evidence, drew proper inferences and evaluated the evidence correctly. The Learned Justice stated this aspect of the law as he understood it, and after making references to several authorities, which I do not consider necessary to deal with, set aside the judgment of the trial judge.

The appellant, being dissatisfied with the judgment of the Court of Appeal has now appealed to this Court. His grounds of appeal are:—

(1) That the Court of Appeal drew the wrong inference from the judge's primary finding of fact that since sitting accommodation had been provided for P.W.1 (the Appellant herein) with the Defendant's vehicle that the accommodation so provided was safe, adequate and satisfactory, and constituted a complete discharge of the defendant's duty of care to the plaintiff.

(2) That in determining the question of the 2nd defendant's manner of driving, the Court of Appeal failed to consider that the duty of care of a driver to his passenger was not fixed or absolute but was referable to all the circumstances of the case.

[p.111]

(3) That the Court of Appeal erred in law in impliedly excluding from its consideration the statement allegedly made by the 2nd defendant, on the basis that the statement had been withdrawn by Counsel for the second defendant, when the said statement was tendered by Counsel for the second Defendant in Exhibit "D"

(4) That in excluding from its purview the said statement of the second defendant, it disabled itself from evaluating accurately, the evidence of P.W.3 (Ekundayo Taylor) and appreciating and or agreeing with the Learned Judge's conclusions on the weight to be attached to his evidence.

(5) That the Court of Appeal's conclusion that the "Respondent was the author of his own misfortune, was based on a totally wrong evaluation on the evidence before it and the wrong premises.

(a) That since P.W. 1 was seated within the vehicle if in the course of the journey, he fell out of it, it could only have been through his own fault.

(b) Secondly, that the learned trial Judge ought not to have regarded the evidence of D.W.2 Ekundayo Taylor.

(6) That in failing to state positively, whether P.W. 1 fell off from the canopy of WR 9867, which was the contention of the Defendants in the Court below, the court of Appeal declined to indicated whether it believed the story of the plaintiff or the Defendants and thereby precluded itself in law from coming to the correct inferences from the learned trial judge's finding of fact

[p.112]

(7) That in observing that nowhere in the evidence, the 2nd defendant admitted that he pleaded guilty in the Magistrate's Court, the Court of Appeal erred in law, when it failed to have regard to the fact that there was evidence before the learned presiding Judge with could properly have led him to the conclusion that the 2nd Defendant had been charged and convicted of carrying passengers on the tail piece and failing to provide adequate sitting accommodation for his passengers.

Mr. Betts, Counsel for the appellant submitted that the Court of Appeal had acted as if it were a Court of first instance rather than an Appeal Court. There is some justification for the submission. The Court of Appeal, after stating that the finding of fact by a trial Judge should not be lightly interfered with, then referred to Section 9(1) OF THE Court of Appeal Rules which stipulates that all appeals shall be y way of rehearing and then cited Bennmax V Austin Motors Co. Ltd (1955) 1 All E.R. 366 where it was observed that "an Appellate Court, on an appeal from a case tried by a judge alone, should not lightly differ from a finding of a trial judge on a question of fact, but a distinction in this respect must be drawn between the perception of facts and evaluation of facts"

The learned Judge, after a careful and meticulous review of the evidence believed the appellant. He disbelieved the respondent and his witness Ekundayo Taylor n their credibility.

It should be noted that in rule 9(1) f the Court of Appeal Rules, the expression "by way of rehearing" is used. The expression does not mean that the parties and their witnesses are to appear before the court of Appeal and give their evidence. The words "by way of rehearing" expresses the practice of the old chancery appeal (which was not strictly and appeal so much as a rehearing before a higher court. See Quilter v Walpleson (1882) 9 Q.B.D. at page 676; See order 58 Rule 3 of the English Rules (1959) Edition. It is simply a rehearing on the printed records.

[p.113]

In this connection, it think it is necessary to refer to the case of Warren v Coombeg (1979-1980) 142 G.L.R. at page 531. In the course of the joint judgment of Gibba Ag. C.J. Jacobs and Murphy JJ. The question was posed as to what is the duty of an Appellate court when questions of credibility have been decided and the matter which remains for decision is what inferences should be drawn from the facts which have been found and are no longer in contest? Their Lordships then proceeded thus at p.537; "We are concerned of course with an Appellate tribunal to which there is an appeal by way of rehearing.. ……and which has the powers and duties of the Court from which the appeal is brought including those of drawing inferences and making findings fact……. The appeal, although by way of rehearing is conducted on the transcript of the evidence taken at the trial, and the witnesses are not called to give evidence afresh, but the appeal is a general appeal and is not limited, for example, to questions of law……." In the case of S.S. Hontestroom v S.S. Sagaporack (1927) A.C. 37 at page 47 Lord Sumner discussed what Lord Wright in Powell v Streathanm Manor Nursing Home (1935) A.C. 243 at page 264 called "the antimony which arises when the Court which is judge offacts has neither seen or heard the witnesses. In such a case, there is conflict between two principles, each of which has to be given effect. The first is that the appeal is a rehearing, and, and, as Lord Summer said, it is not " a mere matter of discretion to remember and take account of this fact: it is a matter of justice and of judicial obligations". Not to have seen the witnesses put the appellate judges in a permanent position of disadvantage against the trial judge, unless it can be shown that he has failed to use or has palpably misused his advantage. The higher court ought not to take the responsibility of reversing conclusions so arrived at, merely on the result of their own comparison and criticisms of the witnesses and of their own view of the probabilities of the case". The House of Lords [p.114] has held in Powell's case (supra) that "but the appeal, although a rehearing, is a rehearing on documents and not, as a rule, on oral evidence, and where the judge at the trial has come to a conclusion upon the question which the witnesses, whom he has seen and heard, are trustworthy and which are not, he is normally in a better position to judge of this matter than the appellate tribunal can be; and the appellate tribunal generally defer to the conclusion which the trial judge has formed." Again in Powell's case (supra) at vol. 152 L.T.R Lord Wright stated the principles succinctly in precise terms. He said the "two principles are, I think, clear that in an appeal of this character, that is from the decision of the trial judge based on his opinion of the trustworthiness of the witnesses whom he has seen, the Court of Appeal in order to reverse must not merely entertain doubts whether the decision below is right, but he convinced that it is wrong."

In the appeal before this court, the learned trial judge definitely and categorically rejected the evidence of the respondents and that of Ekundayo Taylor who was aptly described as an inveterate liar. The 2nd respondent visited the scene on the 8th day of February, 1976. A plan was drawn which showed skid marks and distances. There was evidence that ht e accident took place when the van entered slop, developed speed and galloped. Moreover, there were pot holes on the road, perusing the evidence carefully I am of a considered opinion that the trial judge in his capacity as judge and jury came to a reasonable conclusion that the 2nd respondent was negligent. Yet with such abundant and overwhelming evidence, I am at a loss how the Court of Appeal could have arrived at such a blatantly erroneous conclusion that the evidence of th4 appellant was romantic and that the appellant was the author of his own misfortune.

I think it is necessary to refer to the case of Elnasr Export and Import Co. Ltd, vs Mohi Eldeen Mansour S.C.Civ. App. No. 3/73 when this Court dealing with the function of an appellate Courtwith regard to finding of facts said:— "……. It is [p.115] true that Rule 21 of the Court of Appeal Rules (public Notice No. 28 of 1973) gives very wide and sweeping powers to the Court of Appeal even to the extent of rehearing the whole case. At the same time it is settled law and good sense that it should be in the rarest occasions and in circumstances where the Appellate Court is convinced by the plainest considerations, that it would be justified in finding that the trial judge had formed a wrong opinion."

The Court then considered Watt (or Thomas) v. Thomas (1947) A.C. at page 487 and Bermax v Austin Motor Co. Limited (1955) 1 All E.R. 236. In Watt (or Thomas v Thomas (supra), the following propositions were laid down:—

"1. Where a question of fact has been tried by a judge without a jury, and there is no question of misdirection of himself by the judge, an appellate court which is disposed to come to a deferent conclusion on the printed evidence, should not do so unless it is satisfied that any advantage enjoyed by the trial judge by reason of having seen and heard the witnesses, could not be sufficient to explain or justify the trial judge's conclusion.

2. The Appellate Court may take the view that, without having seen of heard the witnesses it is not in a position to come any satisfactory conclusion on the printed evidence.

3. The Appellate Court, either because the reasons given by the trial judge are not satisfactory, because it unmistakably so appears from the evidence, may be satisfied that he has not taken proper advantage of his having seen and heard the witnesses, and the matter will then become at large for the Appellate Court."

The above propositions make it abundantly clear that before an Appellate Court can properly reverse a finding of fact by a trial judge who has seen and heard the witnesses and can best judge not merely of their intention and desire to speak the truth but of their accuracy in fact, it must come to an affirmative conclusion that the finding is wrong. There is a presumption of its correctness which must be displaced.

[p.116]

A careful survey and analysis of the reasoning of the Court of Appeal in this case clearly show that this appeal does not come within any of the permissible exceptions, and it would not be said that this is "one of the rarest cases or circumstance in which the Appellate court have been convinced by the plainest consideration". See E1 Nasrs, case

Throughout the judgment of the Court of Appeal, there have been grave and serious errors. I only need to quote a few of the passages in the judgment:—

"From the respondents own account of how he became connected with the vehicle on the day in question, and what subsequently followed and leading to his unfortunate fate, a proper evaluation of the evidence should have disclosed that the respondent was not a passenger but one of the apprentices to the 2nd appellant on board the said vehicle."

The learned Judge dealt with the credibility of the respondents, and he did not believe their evidence. When then did the question of evaluation of evidence enter into the matter?

Another passage in the judgment which is startling is this:—

"I venture to ask what further ordinary duty of care did the 2nd appellant owe to the Respondent? Wheat also could the 2nd Defendant have done to discharge his ordinary duty of care owed to the respondent? To may mind, there is nothing more the 2nd defendant could have done to discharge that duty."

Surely, there could be not doubt that the duty of care owed by the 2nd respondent did not end by closing the door of the van.

Another offending passage in the judgment is this:—

"As a matter of fact, the plan of the scene of the accident which is a folio in Exhibit "D" and forms part of these proceedings and which binds the respondent reveals that he 2nd appellant was in no way driving unreasonably and without care in those circumstances."

[p.117]

I have seen the plan; no evidence was called to explain it. Skid marks and distances were indicated on it. In my view if at all it has any evidential value, it seems to me that it supports the case of the appellant rather than that of the respondent, and this was the plan which greatly influenced the judgment of the Court of Appeal.

I need not refer to the case of Simpson v Perr (1952) 1 All E.R. 447 at page 448 cited by the Court of Appeal because it is patently obvious that the Court of Appeal misconceived the judgment of Lord Goddardin that case.

No doubt the Court of Appeal considering itself free by virtue of Rule 9 (1) of the Appeal considering itself free by virtue of Rule 9 (1) of the Court of Appeal Rules, felt itself at liberty to go beyond the learned judge's findings of fact and in particular when the finding relates to credibility, but such an approach should absolutely be discouraged.

I have carefully read and re-read the judgment of the Court of Appeal with every legitimate and lawful desire to support its finding and conclusion in this appeal, if it can be reasonably supported, but I find myself quite unable to do so .in the circumstance, I would set aside the judgment of Court of Appeal and restore the judgment of the High Court as regards liability and award the special damages. On the question of damages, I am of the view, that having regard to all the circumstance, the award of the sum of Le 35.00.00 as General Damages was excessive I consider an award of the sum of Le 15,000.00 as General Damages reasonable in the circumstance. I would therefore award the sum of Le 15,000.00 as General Damages. I would award costs to the appellant in this Court and in the Courts below.

The respondent worked for the first appellants under the above conditins until some of those conditions were altered because of her family commitments. The altered conditions were contained in a letter dated 25th April. 1972. That letter states—

In 1978 the respondent said she was dissatisfied with the service of the first appellants. She tendered her resgination from their service by letter dated 5th December 1978. The respondent's letter of resignation reads—

[p.48]

5TH December 1978

The Managing Director

Falkenberg and Braun Ltd

P. Box 65

Freetown

Dear Sir,

It is with regret that i am tenderign my resignation to Falkenberg and Braun at the close of my 10th year in your service. However, the unpleasant incident this morning was proverbial final strawand, according to the terms of my contract, I hereby give the required one month's notice as from today's date.

It must be pointed out, however, that since Mr. Flakenberg himself together with Mr. Huebscher drew up my "new" conditions of service on 25th April 1972 those conditions have not been improved, with the exception of my car allowance being raised form Le 13.00 - Le 65.00 and medical expenses from Le 6.00 - Le 26.00 and this in 6½ years of rampant inflation: Requested increments or betterment of conditions were denied. In fact I am the Only person in the entire Falkenberg and Braun establishment to hold this record: Over four years ago, at your request, I used my top level contacts in Liberia to get Falkenberg and Braun established there with their first contract. It was very difficult and took two long arduous years of travelling to liberia regularly etc. You promised me 1% of the contract value if it succeeded and you deducted Le 10.000 off the cash of the works carried out at my house to date, however you have not closed this le 10.000 'debt' to my account even though you have promised to do so on many occasions. To safeguard myself I have taken the precaution of having a certain signed document held in a lawyer's safe covering this matter. I trust you will not amicably settle this and I hope pay me a long-service gratuity although I am fully aware that this is at your discretion.

I must again mention my deep regret that I have to depart on such a sour note but I hope that it will not finally and unpleasantly for I should hate to look back on my 10 years with Falkenberg and Braun with bitterness.

Thank you.

Yours faithfully

Florence J McGauran."

[p.49]

The first appellants, on the following day acknowledged receipt of the respondent's letter of resignation and promised to settle the matters raised in it vby the respondent, within a few weeks. The first appellante letter states.

6th December 1978

Dear Madam,

Re: YOUR RESIGNATION

We hereby acknowledge receipt of your letter dated 5th December 1978 and accept herewith your resignation of the service of our company as per January 4th 1978.

The outstanding matters in your letter shall be settled within the next few weeks.

We take this opportunity to thank you very much, for the sevices renderedto our Company and remain, dear madam,

Yours faithfully

For: FALKENBERS & BRAUN LTD

E. Schmidli

Managing Director."

The respondent was not paid a gratuity. On 4th April 1979 she issued a writ claiming "damages for breach of agreement partly in writing and partly oral amde between the plaintiff (that is the respondent) and the Defendants, (the appellants) in November 1968". I shall set out the relevant paragraphs of the particulars of the claim. They are—

"3. On or about the 26th November 1968, after various conversations the plaintiff entered into an agreement with the Defendants.

4. A letter dated 26th November 1968, and signed by the servant or agent of the Defendants contained some of the terms of the agreement of employment of the plaintiff.

[p.50]

8. All employes leaving the company are paid a gratuity by the Defendants this also being a policy of the Defendants.

9. That relying on the previous system or usage of the Defendants in their contracts of employment the plaintiff is entitled her contract to a gratuity.

11. By reson of the matters aforesaid the plaintiff has suffered loss and damage."

The respondent gave evidence at the trial of the ..... She told the Court that she had entered into her contract of employment with the appellants after various conversations and that the contract was partly oral and partly ..... the respondent claimed that during the conversations she ..... Mr. Eglin who was the appellants' secretary, the ..... expressed the hope that she would work for the ..... for at least five years, and that if she did she would receive a handsome graguity. On the basis of what Mr. Eglin had said, she proceeded to serve the appellants for ten years. Mr. Eglin had died before the trial of the action.

The trial judges reasons for finding in favour of the respondent that she was entitled to a gratuity.

The trial judge's reasons for finding in favour of the respondent are to be found in these words—

"Looking closely at the opening remarks of the letter of the 26th November 1968, i am bound to construe the words "Our various conversations and in particular our meeting of 22nd November 1968" are bound to suggest some 'collateral' arrangement..... Is this collateral arrangement warranty or condition?

[p.51]

This is certainly a warranty. It cannot be otherwish. Even if there was not a collateral agrement to that effect there certainly was an implied term of the Contract that the plaintiff would perform her duties dilligently and that when she left the Company she would be paid a handsome gratuity....There was clearly a warranty in my cnsidered view and it could not be understood otherwise..... Even if this were not so, where a man makes a promise that another will be paid a handsome gratuity if that other works for him for five years and that other acting on this promise not only works for that period but egged on and so induced, works for ten years could the promiser at the end of the day be heard to say 'I did not mean what I said? It is my considered view that handsome means what it says ....."

The appellants than appealed to the Court of Appeal. That Court upheld the decision of the trial judge. In disposing of the point whether the agreemnt was partly oraly and partly written, the Court of Appeal said—

"We have carefully read Ex. A. There is nothing therein which reles out that there was never an oral agreement for payment of ratuity prio to the initialling of the document by the respondent. Ex. a states and refers to "various conversations" [p.52] before the letter was written and refers pariticularly to a meeting betweent he parties on 22nd November 1968."

The appeliants have appealed to this Court of Appeal. The raised gy the appeal were (1) Was there an oral collaterl agreement to the written contrat entered into by the and the first appellants? (2) Was the trial judge right in refusing to award the appellants the cost of the action?

In considering the full issue formulated above, it is necessary to examine the statement of claim. The indorsement claims damages for breach of contract which was partly oral as partly written. Paragraphs 8 and 9 of the particulars ..... that it was a policy of the appellants to pay gratuities to employees leaving their (the first appellants') service: that the respondent relying on the 'previous custom or ..... in contracts of employment entered into by the first appellant their employees, was entitled to a gratuity.

In the respondent's attempt to prove usage or custom had said—

"All senior employees were paid gratuity - even juniors - labourers were paid gratuity. These gratuities are not on the same scale. Junior workmen received union rates i.e. 27 days salary or wages for year. Senior Members: The last Administrative Manager got Le 4,00 after 3 years as gratuity."

It is on the basis of this piece of evidence that the trial judge awarded the respondent Le 12.00 as gratuity.

Quite apart form the assertion of the respondent that gratuities were paid to all workers leaving the appellant service, there was no proof of the appelants having paidgratuities to their workers. In the first place workers [p.53] who are entitled only are paid gratuities under the Joint Industrial Council agreements and secondly in the case of the Administrative Manager referred to in her evidence, the respondent did not show that the alleged payment of gratuity to him, was not a written term of his Contract. However, Counsel for the respondent during the course of her argument before us stated that she was not relying on custom or usage but on the partly oral and partly written nature of the agreement between the parties. That bing the case, I shall proceed to examine the Contract and its implications.

The trial judge in his resoning had considered three situations, any one ofwhich entitled the respondent to succeed on her claim - namely (i) that the alleged oral part of the contract was warranty, (ii) that it was an implied term of the written Contract and (iii) promissory estoppel. The Court of Appeal however held that there was nothing in the written agreement which ruled out "that there was never an oral agreement for payment of gratuity." They failed to state whether or not there was in fact an oral agreement concerning the payment of gratuity to the respondent.

In order to be able to determine whether there was such an oral agreement or not, one has to consider this evidence before the trial judge in its entirety. The respondent's letter of employment (Exh. A) referred to various prelikinary discussions (or "conversations" as the appellants prefer to describe them) and confirmed the matters stated in it. on the respondent's resignation from the service of the appellants she had said inter alia e. Exh. B —

"To date, however, you have not closed this Le 10.000 'debt' to my account even though you have promised to do so on many occassions. To safeguard myself I have taken the precuation of having a signed document held in the Lawyer's safe covering [p.54] this matter. I trust you will now amicably settle this and I hope pay me a long service gratuity although I am fully aware tht this is at your discretion..... (Emphais mine)

The respondent's answers under cross-examination on the agreement between herself and the first appellants are of some assistance in determining this issue. The respondent had replied

"There was no provision for gratuity in my letter of appointment `Exh. 'A', Exh. B made no provision for gratuity..... it is not true thatI was clear in my mind that there was no provision for payment of gratuity..... I agree I said 'I hope pay me a long service gratuity although I am fully aware that this is , at your discretion..... I have continued to regard Exh. 'A' as containing the terms of employment with the defendant Company..... " (Emphasis supplied).

Putting the respondent's letter of imployment - Exh. 'A' side by side with her letter of resignation Ex. 'B' (with particular reference to that portion of Exh. B in which she expressed the hope of being paid a long service gratuity the knowledge that such a payment was within thefirst appellant's discretion) it is apparent that the language imployed by the respondent was that of a suppliant rather than that of someone who knew knew she had a legal entitlement the implementation of which was being demanded. The respondent's answers under cross-examination which I have highlighted demonstrate that she knew she was not entitled to a gratuity under any agrement, be it oral or in writing, and that all the terms of her employment [p.55] was contained in Exh. 'A' From the foregoing, I hold that there was no oral agreement between the parties to pay the respondent a gratuity int he event of her leaving the first appelants' service.

Assuming for a moment that Mr. Eglin, the first appellants agent had told the respondent during negotiations that she would receive a handsome gratuity is she worked satisfactorily for five years in the first appellants' service, and that promise was not luded in Exh. A - the letter of employment - does that make the promise a term of the agreement? The parties to a contract may make all kinds of statements whether in writing ororally leading up to the contract. Even in a case where it is established that certain statements were mad by the parties it does not necessarily follow that all those statement are terms of the contract. it is the duty of the judge trying the matter to decide which statements are contractual and which are non-contractual, merely including the formation fo the contract but not forming part of it. In other words the judge must determine which statements are mere representations and which are really terms of the contract. The law on the point is stated in the 4th Edition of Halsbury's Laws of England volume 9 at paragraph 346 thus —

"During the course of the formation of a contract, one of the persons who are to become parties to the contractmayh make representations to another such person. A representation is a statement made by one party (the representee) which relates by way of affirmation, denial, description or otherwise, to a matter of fact or present. intention.

[p.56]

A representation of fact may or may not be intende to have contractual force if it is so intende it will amount to a contractual term; if it is not so intended. it is termed a mere representation.

Except where a representation amounts to a representation of fact, it can normally have no effect on a contract between the reporesentor and representee unless it amounts to a contractual promise. Exceptionally, however, a representation of intention may have an effect on the contract, notwithstanding that it does not amount a contractual promise, by reason of the doctrines of waiver and equitable estoppel

In determining whether a statement is a contractual term or a mere representation the primary consideration is the ..... of the parties. The test of intention is objetive. The Court have have had regard to certain factors as aids so arriving at the intention of the parties. Thes aids are out in Halsbury's Law of England Vol. 9 at paragraph 347:

"those factors should be regarded as valuable though not decisive tasts:

The factors taken into account by the Courts are as follows:-

(1) If only a brief period of time elapses between the making of the statement and the formation of the contract, the Court may be disposed to hold that the statement is a term of the contract.

[p.57]

(2) Where the party to whom the statement is made makes it clear tht he regards the matter as so important that he would not contract without the assurance being given, that is evidence of an intention of the parties that the statement is to be a term of the contract.

(3) Where the party making the statement is stating a fact which is or should be within his own knowledge and of which the other party is ignorant, that is evidence that the statement is intended to be a term of the contract.

(4) Where, subsequent to negotiations, the parties enter into a written contract and that contract does not contain the statement in question, that may point towards the statement bding a mere representation. Though there have been cases where it has been found that such a preliminary statement constitute a collateral contract.

(5) Where the party making the statement suggests an indpendent survey or opinion that may show that on warranty was intended.

[p.58]

(6) It has ben said that maker of a statement can rebut an inference of warranty if he can show that he was innocent of fault in making it, and that it would not be resonable in the circumstance to hold him bound by it."

The above factors were crystalised into three questions by the learned authors of the Seventh Edition of Cheshire and Fifoot's law of Contract at pp. 107 and 108. They are:

(i) At What stage in the course of the transction was the crucial statement made?

If it was made only in the preliminary negotiation, it should not be regarded as contractual. See Routledge v Mckay 1954 1 ALL E.R. 855 (1954) 1 W.L.R. 615. If the time between the negotiations and the contract is well marked and sustaintial, the answer would be that the partiesdid not intend the statement to form part of the contract. On the other hand if only brief period of time elapses between the making of the statement and the formation of the contract the court may be disposed to hold that statement was a term of the contract.

[p.59]

There is no evidence as to when the alleged statement was made by Mr. Eglin. There appear to have been 'various conversations' preceding the final 'conversation' on 22nd November 1968 Test (i) therefore is not of assistance having regard to the lack of evidence as to when the alleged statement was made

(ii) 'Was the oral statement followed by a reduction of the terms into writing?

If the oral statement was followed by a reduction of the terms into writing, and the writing does not contain the statement in question. That may point to the statement being a mere representation; though there have been cases in which such preliminary statements have been held to constitute a collateral contract.

In the instant case, there were "various conversations" ending 'in paticular' with that on 22nd November, when all the terms of the contract were undoubtedly settled. The argument was reduced into writing and dated 26th November 1968, when all the terms of the contract were undoubtedly settled. The argument was reduced into writing and dated 26th November 1968. It stipulated the financial aspects of the responden's employment But significantly made no mention of her entitlement to a gratitiy. On 25th April 1972, the respondent's respondent's hours of work and salary were altered respectively to meeet her domestic commiments, yet again no montion was made of her entitlement to a gratuity. If M. Eglin had made the alleged statement, it would have been so vital to the repondent that it is resonable to expect that she would have drawn attention to its absence and insisted on an alteration of the terms of the contrat at the earliest possible opportunity or at the latest in April 1972 with financial provisions of her contract were altered in writing.

[p.60]

I hold that even if Mr. Eglin had made the alleged statement it would have been nothing more than a mere representation. It was not a term of the contract.

and (iii) Had the person who made the statement special knowledge or skill as compared with the other party?.

This test is inapplicable to the peculiar circumstance of this case.

Taking all the dircumstance of this case into consideration no reasonable man would expect that it was the intention of the parties that there should have been a term in the contract, whether oral or in writing, that the respondent would be entitle to a gratuity on the termination of her contract of service with the first appelants.

Counsel for the appellants submitted during his argument that negotiations prior to a matter agreement are not part of the contract. He referred us to Prenn v Simmonds 1971 3 All E.R. 237. 1971 1 W.L.R. 1381. The summary of tthat decision as it appears at page 238 of the reporrt states—

"Althogh in construing a written agreement the Court is entitled to take account of the surrounding circumstance with reference to which the words of the agreement were used and the object, appearign from those circumstance with reference to which the words of the agreement were used and the object, appearing from those circumstance, which which the person using them had in view, the Court ought not to look at the prior negotiatins of the parties as an aid to the construction fo the written contract resulting from those negtiations. Evidence should be restricted to evidence of the factual vackground known to the prties at or before the date of the contract, including evidence of the 'genesis' and objectively, the 'aim' of the transction."

The legal issues involved in Prenn v Simonds and those in this case are similar. In Prenn's case the issues turned on the interpretation of the terms of a written contract, and alternatively rectification. The issue in the instant case was whether or not there was an oral collateral contract to that in writing. if there was such an oral contract to that in wirting then evidence will be entertained to put the entire contract in its proper perspectiv. The position is thus stated in Cheshire and Fifoot an Contracts 6th Edirtion at page 104—

".....the exclusion of oral evidence is clearly imappropriate where the document is designed to contain only part of the terms - where, in other words, the parties have made their contract partly in writing and partly by ord of mouth. The situation is so comparatively frequent as in effect to deprive the ban on oral evidence of the strict character of a 'rule of law' which has been attriguted to it . It will be presumed in the words of learned author 'that a document which looks like a contract is to be treated as the whole contract. But this presumption though strong is not irrebutable. In each case the Court must decide whether the parties have or have not reduced their agreement to the precise terms of an all embracing written formula. If they have, oral evidence will not be admitted to vary or contradict it; if they have not, the writing is but part of the contract and must be set side with the complimentary oral terms..."

[p.62]

In my judgment counsel for the appellants contention is misconceived. The effect of the decision in Prnn,s case is that negotiations prior to the formation of a written contract are not admissible in evidence as an aid to the interpretation of a written agreement resulting from those negotiations. There is no authority to support the proposition that tems agreed upon durign prior negotiations can in no circustances form pa..... of a subsequent written contract. Indeed the law as postulate above is that the oral terms agreed upon during negotiations of form party of a written agreement. It is quite permisible to import oral terms into a subsequent written agreement.

Therefore it was quite proper for the trial judge and ind... the court of Apeal to consider evidence regarding the alleged oral term of the contract concerning the paymrnt of gratuity to the respondent

I now turn to consider the second issue raised in this appeal, namely, the failure of the trial judge to award costs of the action to the Second Appellant Mr. E. Schmidli who was Secretary to the Frist Appellants. The trial judge in disposing of the case against the second appellant said.—

" I find myself unable to find Mr. E.V. Schmidli liable as the second defendant to pay such damages and cost because he did not presonally appoint Mrs. McGauran. If he did sign any letters he did so for and on behalf of Messrs Falkengerg and Braun be it a firm or Company."

The second appellant was was ismissed from the suit by the trial judge after having found in his favour in the statement quoted above.

In dealing with the complaint of counsel for the second appellant, on the trial judge's failure to award costs to his client, the Court of Appeal resolved the matter in these terms.

[p.63]

"Mr. Syythe has contended that the learned trial judge did not award costs to to be paid by the respondent to the 2nd Appellant when the learned trial judge dismissed him from the suit. It appears that learned Counsel lost ocmplete focus of the fact that the 2nd Appellant was the ostensible agent of the 1st Appellant and that the action was not improperly brought. learned Counsel has also argued that he learned trial judge did not show good cause for not awarding the 2nd Appellant costs. In our view it was for learned Counsel to show on the evidence and the judgment that there was no good cause for him not to have awarded costs tothe Appellant. It must not be forgotten that costs are at the discretion of the Court and what there could only be complaint if in execising such discretion the Court did not do so judiciously. We find no substance on the gorund relating to costs."

The trial judge made no order as to costs. The Court of Appeal hawever, refused 2nd Appellant the costs of his defence saying that counsel for the Second Appellant had lost sight of the fact that the Second Appellant was the ostensible agent of the 1st Appellant and that the action had not been improperly brought. The Court of Appeal said further that it was for Counsel to demonstrate to that Court that there was an absence of good cause in refusing costs to the 2nd Appellant.

Order XLVI rule 1 of the High Copurt Rules provides —

[p.64]

"Subject to the provisions of any Act and these rules, the costs of and incident toall proceedings in the High Court.... shall be in the discretion of the Court..... provided also that the costs shall follow the event unless the Court shall for good cause, otherwise order."

The above rule undoubtedly gives tht rrial judge a discretion as to awarding costs. A discretion when confirmed mplies that it "must be exercised according to the rulesof reason and justice and not to private openion, according to law and not the humour. The ecercise of the discretion must not be arbitary, vague and fanciful, but legal and regular."See Sharpe v Wakefield & others 1886-1890 All E.R. Report: pep. (1891) AC 173.

The Respondent had presumably relied on the provisions of Order XII rule 4 of the high Court Rules in joining the 2nd Appelantas a party to the proceedings. Rule 4 provides—

"All persons may be joined as defendants against whom the right to relief is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative.....

The suposed right to relief against the Second Appellant is to be found in paragraph 7 of the respondent's particulars of claim

Paragraph 7 states—

"7. that in spite of repeated request increments by the plaintiff these were denied by the second defendant presonally as the servant/agent of the first defendant."

The respondents evidence connecting the Second Appellant with this case isto be found in the notes of evidence. she stated—

[p.65]

"..... 2nd Defendant is the Managing Director..... The Second Defendant refused to give any increase of salary. I approached him form time to tieme to increase my salary because of the soaring cost of living and he refused .....In December 1978 when I went to the 2nd Defendant for monies and could not pay me for the days I was away when my child was ill. The second defendant became Managing Director in 1973. It was in 1973 that increments was received by me. Prior to Mr. Schmidli joining Company in 1973 I did received inorements. I am claiming damages of breach of contractwitht he Company. I am also claiming damages against 2nd defendant as Managing Director of this company."

under cross-examination she shaid —

"The 2nd Defendant was not a party in any agreement with Falkenberg and Braun Ltd. and myself....."

The particulars of the respondents claim ahd declared that the 2nd Appellant was the servant/agent of the 1st Appellants. In her evidence, she said that she was claiming damages against the 2nd Appllant because, as the servant or agent of the 1st Appellants, he had refused her increments of salary. I fail to see how the claim against the 2nd Appellant was either 'join several or in the alternative' to that against the 1st Appelllants. I hold the vew that the Respondent's claim against the 2nd Appellant was frivolous.

[p.66]

The trial judge did not state any cause for refusing to award costs to the 2nd Appellant. The general rule is that costs follow the event. Taking the respondent's pleadings and evidence into consideration the respondent's claim against the 2nd Appellant was frivolous. in these circumstance the judge should have awarded coststo the 2nd Appellant. The judge did not exercise his discretion properly. I would allow the appeal of the 2nd Appellant on the issue of costs.

I would also allow the appeal of the 1st Appellants set aside the judgments of the Courts below, and enter judgment in their favour.

On the 8th DAY of May, 1981 at the Freetown High Court the appellant was convicted of the offence of Fraudulent Conversion contrary to Sec. 20(1) (iv) (a) of the Larcency Act 1916 and sentenced to 2 years imprisonment by Justice D.E.M. Williams sitting as Judge alone.

The particulars of the offence are:—

"That Franklyn Kenny on the 24th day of April, 1978 at Freetown in the Western Area of Sierra Leone Fraudulently converted to his own use and benefit, that is to say the sum of three hundred and fifty Leones entrusted to him by Christie Wallace Kargbo in order that he the said Franklyn Kenny might pay the same into the Judicial Sub-Treasury Freetown."

The Appellant however, appealed to the Court of Appeal on the 20th day of May, 1981 against his conviction and sentence. On the 26th January, 1982 the Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal against conviction and sentence. On the 26th January, 1982 the Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal against conviction and allowed that against sentence. it is against that decision that the Appellant has now appealed to this Court on the following grounds:-

(a) The Court of Appeal having found that the trial Judge did not advert his mind to the third point that the persecution had to prove that is to say, that the misuse of the money was "fraudulent and dishonest" and having found that, it is not enough to say that the accused has converted the said amount to his own use and benefit, such use and benefit must be "fraudulent and dishonest" and having held that "in that regard the appeal can succeed" erred in law in not allowing the appellant's appeal against conviction

(b) Leave of the Court of Appeal having been sought and granted to delete and substitute for the original grounds one and three; the following new grounds one and three.

"One: The appellant having challenged P.W.4 and P.W.5 respectively at the trial on their testimony as being totally [p.3] different on material points form that giving erred in law in ignoring their conflicting and contradictory evidence and in convicting him on the Court of Fraudulent Conversion."

"Three: The learned trial judge misdirected himself on the evidence by holding that the sum of Le350 was not paid into the Judicial Sub-Treasury having regard to the unsatisfactory and unreliable evidence of prosecution witnesses when compared with their testimony before the committal magistrate. The court of Appeal erred in law in not allowing Counsel for the appellant to argue the said new grounds (one and three) on the grounds that it could not and would not look at the depositions taken before the Committal Magistrate as they did not form part of the records before the Court.

The learned presiding Justice adding that the only reason Counsel for the appellant wanted the depositions looked at, was because he was concerned with the preliminary investigations."

The facts of the cawse as far as i need to refer to them are as follows: According tot he prosecution at the material time the appellant was working at the Registry of the Court of Appeal. One Mrs. christie Wallace Kargbo on the 24th day of April, 1978 handed the sum of Le. 350 to him in order that he should pay the amount into the Judicial Sub-Treasury on behalf of one Mr. Ajai Cole. Mrs. Kargbo was than issued with a temporay recipt by the appellant. On the following day she was also issued with a paying-in-slip which he the (appellant) claimed was the official receipt. This amount was never paid into the Judicial Sub-Treasury. The appellant however admitted receiving the sum of Le. 350 from Mrs. Wallace Kargbo ont he day in question and then issuing a temporary receipt to her. He claimed that Mrs. Kargbo had asked him to keep this amount for her as he had told her that it was insufficient for the purpose for which it was intended. he also stated that when Mrs. Kargbo called at his office on the following day he handed over the Le. 350 to her and he prepared and handed to her a payin-in-slip in triplicate for the sum of Le. 410 and asked her to pay this amount into the SubTreasury. she later returned with two copies of the paying-in-slip with the Sub-Treasury stamp on them. He then retained one copy as [p.5] usual which he kept in his file and then gave her the other copy. In arguing his fround (a) he submitted that there was nothing in the evidence from which the learned trial judge could have inferred a fraudulent intent on the part of the appeliant. he submitted further that in a case of Fraudulent Conversion the prosecution must prove certain ingredients. He also submitted that where a trial judge sat as a judge and jury the Court of Appeal should not have applied the provisions of Section 58 subsection 2 of the Courts Act No. 31 of 1965 as fraudulent intent could not be inferred from the evidence. Mr. N.D. Tejan-Cole Counsel for the respondent in reply to Counsel for the appellant submitted inter alia that the learned trial judge did advert his mind to the fact that the issue of the money was dishonest and fradulent and that he was not obliged to say so in as many words since on totality of the evidence there was ample material to infer that the appllant dishonestly and fraudulently converted the sum of Le. 350 entrusted to him. The ingredients of an offence under the section are conveniently summarised in the cas of R v BRYCE reported in Cr. App. Report Volume 40 at page 62, where Hallet J. said and I quote—

"Where a charge is for Fraudulent Conversion it is essential that three things should be proved to the satisfaction of the jury; Firstly that the money was entrusted to the accused person for a particular purpose, secondly that he used it for some other purpose and thirdly that such misuse of the money was fraudulent and dishonest".

See also Archbald Thrity Sixth Edition page 694 at paragraph 1909. Also in Archbold Thrity Sixth Edition page 695 at paragraph 1912 it is stated as follows:-

"In order that a prisoner charged with Fraudulent Conversion may be convicted he might be found to have had a fraudulent intent."

The intention of an accused person at the time he commits a crime is often a necessary ingredent of the crime and must be proved by the prosecution as any other fact or circumstance in the case. See the case of R. v STEANE C.C.A. (1947) K.B. at page 997 where Lord Goddard C.J. had this to say

"Now the first thing which this Court would observe is that where the essence of an offence or a necessary constituent of an offence is a particular intent that intent must be proved by the Croun just as much as any other fact necessary to constitute the offence."

Further down in the same judment he continued by saying —

"The important thing to note in this respect is that where an intent is charged in the indictment the burden of proving that throughout remains on the prosecution. No doubt if the prosecution proves an act the natural consequences of which would be a certain result and no evidence or explantion is given, then a jury may on a proper direction find that the [p.7] prisoner is guilty of doing the act with the intent alleged but if on the totality of the evidence there is room for more than one view as to the intent of the prisoner, the jury should be directed that it is for the prosecution to prove the intent to the jury's satisfaction and if on a review of the whole evidence they either think that the intent did not either think that the intent did not exist or they are left in doubt as to the intent the porisoner is entitled to be acquitted."

In the case of R v CRUBB reported in 11 Cr. App. Report at page 153 the appellant was convicted before the Recorder at the Central Criminal Court of fraudulent conversion of money and shares and was sentensed to nine months imprisoment Lord Reading C.J. said inter alia at page 157 —

"There cannot be a fraudulent conversion without an intent to defraud."

Sometimes an intention is incapable of direct proof and this can only be inferred from overt acts done by the prisoner and proved at the trial.

The defination of an "intent to defraud" has been stated in several cases. See the cases of R v WINES (1953) 2 A.E.R. 1497 C.C.A. and In Re LONDON AND GLOBE FINANCE CORPORATION (1903) 1 Ch, 728 at page 738.

Generally a man is taken to intend the natural and probable consequence of his own acts. Direct evidence of a man's state of mind is not always available.

[p.8]

However a man's act may afford abudants evidence of his intention to produce a particular result although evidence to the contrary is always admissible to rebut this. see the cases of R v STEANE Supra. R v RILEY (1967) Criminal Law Review 656. R v LYON Central Criminal Court Sept. 28, 1958.

Having briefly stated the facts supra and the law applicable, I must now proceed to examine the evidence to see how the principles enuciated above can be aopplied to the present case.

Mrs. Christie Kargbo on the 24th Day of April, 1978 handed the sum of Le. 350 to the appellant to be paid into the Judicial Sub-Treasury. This amount was to satisfy the conditions of Appeal in the case of ADJAI COLE v ALONGO COOKER. The appellant accepted this amount although he knew that is was not his duty to do so. He than issued a temporary receipt ot her in his own hand in the following words. :Temporary Receipt received form Mrs. C. Kargbo of Wilberforce Barracks the sum of Le 350 for Adjai Cole". When asked why he had issued a temporary recipt, he replied that there was no one in the office to issue an official receipt. On the following day when Mrs. Kargvo again called on him he issued her with another recipt. The contents of that receipt also read as follows:

"Payment into Judicial Sub-Treasury Cr. App. 25/77 Adjai Cole v Alongo Coker. Deposit Le. 350.00 25th April 1978 by whom paid Adjai Cole."

At this stage I think it will be necessary for me to refer to a few quotations from the statement of the appellant and from his evidence. In his statement he said and I quote -

[p.9]

"On the 24th day of April I received the sum of Le. 350. from Mrs. Christie Wallace Kargbo and then issued the temporary recipt now in question to her. The following day Mrs. C.W. Kargvo coame back to me. I then handed over the sum of Le 350.00 back to her to be filled up to Le. 410.00. Issued triplicate paying-in-slip for Le. 410.00 to her to enable her to pay the said amount to the cashier at the Judicial Sub-Treasury."

In his evidence the appellant also said and I quote —

"After returning the Le. 350.00 no other monies passed between us."

I have referred to the contents of the two receipts above because on the evidence, it is quite clear that it was the appellant who wrote out both of them. His own witness Horton admitted that it was the appellant who wrote out the latter receipt and that he was familiar with his handwriting. A witness for the prosecution John Alimamy Sandi also claimed that the appellant admitted preparing it. This is important because although he denied preparing it there is abudant evidence that he did and if this is the case he was surely lying when he said that he returned the Le. 350.00 to Mres. Kargbo on the 25th April, 1978. Apart from the quotations I have mentioned above there is a lot of discrepancies in the evidence of the appellant. Furthermore his answers as regards most of the exhibits tendered in Court were most evasive.

Finally there is evidence that the amount of Le. 350.00 was never paid into the Judicial Sub-Treasury and as [p.10] a result the appeal involving Adjai Cole was struck out for non-fulfilment of the conditions of appeal. Taking all the above facts into consideration, one cannot help but ask what was the appellant's ntention at the time he received the money? Right from the beginning one could discern from the acts done by him how his mind as working and that he intended fraudulently to convert the sum of Le. 350.00 to his own use and benefit, which he in fact did. I have lready stated above what is meant by an intent to defraud and how the intention may be proved.

In the present case i think that he evidence clearly shows that he appellant at the time he received the money when he knew he had no right to do so intended by decit to induce Mrs. Wallace Kargbo to act to her detriment and thus intended to defraud. A person is taken to intend the natural and probable consequences of his own act.

I now propose at this stage to refer to the passages complained of in the judgment of Warne J.A. by counsel for the appellant and I quote—

"It seems to me that the learned trial judge did not advert his mind to the thrid point that the prosecution had to prove that is to say that misuse of the money was fraundulent and dishonest.

In the judgement the learned trial judge had this to say—

"He has failed to pay the money into the Judicial Sub-Treasury; he has failed even to return the amount to Mrs. Christie Kargbo.

[p.11]

He has failed to account for the money, otherwise, therefore it is clear on the evidence that the accused has converted the said amount to his own use and benefit. With respect to the learned trial judge it is not enough to say that the accused "has converted the said amount to his own use and benefit, such use and benefit must be fraudulent and dishonest.

In this regard the appeal can succeed, however on the totality of the evidence it is in my opinion, conclusive in support of the indicitment. I do not think the verdict should be disturbed because if the judge had properly adverted his mind to the thrid essential point, the verdict would have been the same. In short the judge's failure to advert his mind to the third point is not tantamount to a substantial miscarriage of justice".

In my opinion in these circumstances, although it would have been preferable if the judge had made a specific finding of fraudulent intent, his failure to do so was not fatal. In view of the totality of the evidence the only resonable inference to have been drawn by the trial judge was that the appellant [p.12] fraudulently converted the sum of Le. 350 to his own use and benefit. In my judgment therefore the Court of Appeal was right in applying the provisions of Section 58 sub-section 2 of the Courts Act 1965. This in my view disposes of ground (a).

As regards ground (b), I think that all the contentions should be dealt with together. The facts relating to this particular ground of appeal are as follows: At the hearing of the Appeal in the Court of Appeal counsel for the appellant had applied for leave to amend the original grounds of appeal which application had been granted by that Court. He had claimed that although the appellant having challenged PW4 and PW5 respectively at the trial on their testimony as being totally different on material points from that given before the Committing Magistrate, yet the Court of Appeal had erred in law in not permitting him to argue this particular point as they claimed that they would not look at the depositions as they did not form part of the record.

The question one should now ask is this; was the Court of Appeal right in refusing to look at the depositions for the reason given and there-by depriving him of the right to argue this particular ground of appeal? Quite clearly the depositions did not form part of the record and therefore the Court of Appeal was quite right in refusing to allow Counsel for the appellant permission to refer to the depositions.

Indeed, learned Counsel applied to us to refer to the depositions. He conceded that they were not tendered in the High Court or Court of Appeal. We refused the application. In my opinion this ground of appeal also has no merit.

[p.13]

The appeal is dismissed.

J.S. BANGURA - APPELLANTS

Vs.

S.L. ELECTRICITY CORPORATION . - RESPONDENTS

M.J. Clinton, Esq., for Appellant

Miss P.S. Wellesley-Colefor Respondent

JUDGMENT DELIVERED THIS 5th DAY OF MAY, 1983

HARDING. J.S.C.

The appellant was employed as payments Cashier by the Sierra Leone Electricity Corporation (hereinafter referred to as " the respondents") and was earning a salary of Le 1,250.00 per annum when he was summarily dismissed from his employment on 1st October, 1973 by letter dated 28th September, 1973 alleging that the Corporation's Board of Directors had concluded that he was "culpable for serious misconduct in respect of his handing and management of the Corporation's funds". The appellant was aggrieved with his dismissal and so he consulted a solicitor who, after exchange of correspondence with the respondents, instituated proceedings agains them on behalf of the appellant for the recovery of arrears of salary and damages for wrongful dismissal by writ of summons dated 8th July, 1976. The respondents after entering appearance to the writ delivered and filed a [p.23] defense and counter-claim to which the appellant delivered and filed a defense and reply. The action went to trial and on 20th October, 1978, Williams, j. dismissed the respondent's counterclaim and gave judgment for the appellant in the sum of Le. 2,067.50 which award included an amount of Le. 1,365.00 assessed general damages.

The respondents appealed to the Court of Appeal against the judgment of Williams, J. on five grounds of appeal.

In their Judgment dated 14th July, 1981 the Court of Appeal (Ken E.O. During, Marcus E. A. Cole and M.S. Turay JJ.A.) allowed the appeal on three of the grounds and held that the other two were withou merit. The three grounds on which the appeal succeeded were:—

"2. That the learned trial judge misdirected himself on the case for the appellants on the evidence.

4. That the learned trial judge erred in law in finding that the plaintiff/Respondent had been wrongfully dismissed and in awarding damages to him.

5. That the decision is against the weight of evidence."

Marcus Cole, J.A. in delivering the unaimous judgment of the Court stated as follows:—

"The issue whether the appellants were justified in theinstant case in summarily determining the respondent's services was one of fact. There is no fixed fule fo law defining the degree of miscounduct which will justify dismissal.

[p.24]

Each case would depend on its facts and circumstances. The appllants in the instant case have stated in Exhibit "D" letter of dismissal:—

..... the Board of Directors has given careful attention to the facts pertaining to the pay roll fraunds in the Western Area and has reviewed the part you played for which you were suspended. The Board has concluded that you are culpable for serious miscounduct in respect of your handling and management of the corporation's funds.....

Cogent and credible evidence has been adduced by the appellants to justify that the respondent had been found culpable for serious miscounduct in respect of his handling of the appellant's funds. This decision was reached as a result of careful investigation by the appellants.

A proper evaluation of the evidence and correct inference thereforom indicate irresistibly that the appellants were justified in summarily dismissing the respondent from their employment and I so hold."

The appeal now before this Court is against that judgment. Twelve grounds of appeal were filed but in my view grounds 10, 17 and 12 emb odied the main complaint of the appellant, viz,

[p.25]

10. The Court of Appeal erred in law in failing to uphold the High Court decision which was based upon the question of truthfulness of the witnesses and not necessarily upon inferences to be drawn

11. The Court of Appeal erred in holding that the judg's finding in the present case is based on incosistencies in the evidence of the appellants' witnesses particularly that of D.W.2

12. The decision was against the weight of evidence."

Counsel for the appellant conceded the respondents' rights both at common law and under the "Rules, Regulations and Conditions of Employment" of the Respondent Coprporation to summarilly dismiss the appelant, if he was guilty of serious misconduct, but countended that miscounduct must be proved on the balance of probabilities and that the burden of proof throughout as to such misconduct was on the reaspendents; and that it was a question fo fact for the Court to decide whether or not there was such a misconduct. He submitted that on the basis of the evidence adduced no such misconduct had been proved and that the learned trial judge was righ in finding that the appellant had been wrongfully dismissed from his employment.

Counsel for the respondents on the other hand contended that he learned trial judge misdirected himself on the case for tghe respondents on the evidence tht he erred in law in finding that the appellant had been wrongfully dismissed and urged that there was abundant evidence to show that the appellant's conduct in his office disclosed miscounduct, disobedience of lawful orders, dishonesty and negligence.

The respondents case is stated in their Defence and Counterclaim as follows:—

"6. As direct result of the failure and neglligency of the plaintiff to conduct his business strictly in accordance with the directives of the defendant, his employers, the defendant sustained a loss ofLe. 1,952.60 which the plaintiff has neithe accounted for nor paid.

In breach of the express terms and conditions of his employment, the plaintiff:—

(a) Made out payments which were not supported by valid and authorised pay cards.

(b) kept each, form wages, in his custody for more than three days in flagrant viclation of the mandatory regulations which required him to rebank such monies within 48 hours after pay day

(c) On the 2nd January, 1973 repaid to the defendant's banking account Le. 1,045.47 from his own monie in part satisfaction of a general total deficit of Le. 4,164.31. When queried about this plantiff described the payment as "excess cash" accumulated in his safe from October to December 1972. This payment to the bank was made after [p.27] the defendant had pointed out to him that his reconciliation statements were erroneous

(d) Failed to provide a reconcilliation for january 1973/"

As stated earlier the trial judge found for the appellant, i.e., held that he was wrongfully dismissed, but this decision was reversed by the Court of Appeal on the fround that" a proper evaluation of the evidence and correct inference therefrom indicate irresistibly that the appellants (the respondents herein) were justified in summarily dismissing the respondent (the appellant herein) from their employ."

Thus the issue before this court is, whether on a review of the evidence as presented in this case, there is any, and if so sufficient material to warrant the Court of Appeal in holding that the appellant had been dismissed justifiably. However, before embarking on a review of the evidence it is necessary to state that whilst it is the duty oa an appelate court to form itrs own opinion upon the evidence adduced a distinction must be drawn between findings based on conflicting testimony and deduction to be made from the evidence as a whole. In the former case a finding on a question of fact should not lightly be disturbed, but in the latter an appellate court is in as good a position to evaluate the evidence as the trial judge and should form its own independent opion giving weight if possible to the opinion of the trial judge. Indeed the Court of 'Appeal in its judgment referred to various authorities on the subject, viz.

(iv) TEXACO (S.L.) LTD. vs E.B. SMITH Civ. Cpp. 15/77 (unreported).

In WATT or THOMAS vs THOMAS (1947) 484, H.L. Lord Thankerton stated (at pp. 487 & 488) the principles enuniciated in all the above mentioned cases thus:-

"1. Where a question of fact has been tried by a judge without a jury, and there is no question of misdirection of himself by the judge, an appeliate court which is disposed to dome to a different conclusion on the printed evidence, should not do so unless it is satisfied that any advantage enjoyed by the trial judge by reaosn of having seen and heard the witnesses, could not be sufficient to explain or justify the trial judge's conclusion.

"2. The appellat court may take the view that, without having sen or heard the witnesses, it is not in a position to come to any satisfactory conclusion on the printed evidence.

"3. The appellate court, either because the reasons given by the trial judge are satisfactory, or because it unmistakably so appears from the evidence, may be statsfied that he [p.29] has not taken proper advantage of his having seen and heard he witnesses, and the matter will than become at large for the appellate court."

According to the evidence adduced before the trial judge, the appellant was the payments cashier in the Finance Section of the respondent's business and his duties as stated in a memorandum dated 24th September, 1972 - Exhibit E - were:—

"1. Writing of cheques for all payables received form stores and finances section respectively.

2. Cashing of cheques for salaries and wages, leave payments of all staff.

3. Posting of payments and petty cash books.

4. Preparing of payment vouchers."

Other employees in the Finance Section were the Payroll Clerks. Accounts Clerks, Assistant Finance Officer, who at the material time was a Mr. P.E. Temple, and who was the first of two witnesses to testify on behalf of the respondents.

According to Exhibit E the duties of the Finance Officer includes:—

1. Supervising the staff in the Finance Section.

[p.30]

2. Reconcilliation with Tab. 32 of sixteen balance sheets accounts.

3. Reconciliation of Bank of Sierra Leone accounts and National Development Bank accounts.

4. Submitting payments vouchers and Petty Cash Journals with other Journals to Management Accounts Section for processing at Central Statisticas Office.

5. Checking the Payment and Petty Cashier at intervals and during re-imbursements.

6. Initialing cheques drawn by the Payments Cahier and forwarding to Chief Accountants.

7. General duties of Office Management."

The appllant's main duty was to pay wages monthly based on timed job cards prepared by the Time Keepers of the various section showing the name of the employee, his designation, rate per day, deductions, etc. The names on the Job Cards are taken from a Register which is kept by the Section Head and it is he who supplies the names to the Time Keeper. After the Time Keeper has prepared the Job Cards they are passed on to the Section Head for signature after which they are journalised to arrive at a total amount required for the payment of wages in respect of all the sections. A cheque for a little over the exact amount to make up for errors is then prepared by the appellant; the Finance Officer initials the cheque after which it is cashed at the bank by the appellant. On his return he packets the wages of each worker according to the Job Cards [p.31] in the presence of the Finance Officer and on pay day he could go to the various sites and make payment to the workers each of whom would be identified by the Time Keeper and Section Head. After payments of wages it was the appllant's duty to prepare a Reconciliation Statement each month showing the amount redceived from the bank, the amount paid out and the total amount of unclaimed wages.

It was also the appellant's duty to re-bank all unclaimed wages within two days after making payment of wages. It was also stated in evidence that it was the duty of the Finance Officer to check the Recociliation Statements and if found to be correct to sign them. it was whilst the Reconciliation Statements for the year 1972 were being checked that the Finance Officer discovered certain discrepancies, i.e., that there were differences between what the appellant paid out and what were recorded in the Job Cards and Journal Vouchers; this was on 29th December, 1972. The discrepancies were pointed out to the appellant by the Finance Officer who also instructed him to go with the Payroll Supervisor to the various stations where the differences arose. They left about 3.p.m. for Blackhall Road power Station but returned about an hour later only to report that the Time Keeper could not lay hands ont he Register as it was locked up in the Districtiion officer's room. On 2nd January, 1973, the Finance Officer ordered appellant and the payroll Supervisor to go again to Blackhall Road power Station but the appellant refused to go with the Supervisor and insisted on going alone.

Appellant, according to the Finance Officer, thereupon secured his safe and cashier's cage and went out alone. Later he returned with a Barclays Bank Paying-In-Slip for the sum of Le. 1,045.47 and at the same time he informed him that a Mr. Kamara the Time Keeper was unable to pay his own [p.32] protion of the differences and that he (Kamara) would prefer to repay by instalments. The Finance Officer thereupon told appellant tht the matter was a serious one which he could have to report. on the next day the matter was reported to the Acting Chief Accountant, mr. Salaam who subsequently ordered an investigation. The investigation was conducted by one Muektarr Raham of the Internal Audit Section (D.W.2) In evidence he stated thus:—

"I discovered that certain monies alleged paid out by the plaintiff were in fact paid out on forged cards and the sum of Le. 1,045.47 had not been properly accounted for.....

I made some findings about surplus cash and the plaintiff. Some bank paying-in-slips were showing a rebanking of the Le. 1,045.47. I discovered that the rebanking were not done at the correct time as they should have been rebanked within 48 hours were not so re-banked within 48 hours were not so re-banked for three months. The re-banking took place before my investigaitons started. I spoke with the plaintiff the question of his records relating to re-banking of unclaimed wages. The Le. 1,045.47 I have referred to was described by the plaintiff as excess cash in his safe. I discovered that there was no reason why he should have excess cash. I discovered that [p.33] the sum of Le 1,045.47 was made up of three seperate sums of money. He said that the first sum was in October, the second in Novemger and the third in December, 1972. I asked him why he had not re-banked them as he discovered them. He replied that he did not know how the excess came about and he had referred the matter mr. Temple (D.W.1) and that Mr. Temple had told him to investigate and find out. Mr. Temple denied any knowledge of this."

I should here state that in hs evidence before the Court the Finance Officer deniend giving the appellant any counter instruction to keep surplus cash.

The Witness than went on to state that all his findings were embodied in Exhibit M. which was a query dated 6th Julyu, 1973 addressed to the appellant by the respondents. he stated further that during his investigation he referred to Job Cards principally and the Journals and the Reconcilation Statements.

The appellant on His part stated that during the months of October, November and December 1972, he discovered excess cash, that he reported the matter to the Finance Officer who instructed him to keep same until the Journal Vouchers had been checked. In support of this allegation he produced two documents which were admitted in evidence without any objection, by counsel for the respondents and marked Exhibits P and Q respectively.

Exhibit Q dated 30th October 1972 was written bythe Finance Officer to the appellant and it reads as follows:—

Exhibit p was writen by the appellant to the Finance Officer and it rads thus:—

[p.35]

As previously mentioned the respondent's case embodied in paragraph 6 of the Statement of Defence and Counterclaim and counsel has urged on us to hold that contrary to the learned trial judge's finding the appelleant has been guilty of such a serious dereliction of duty athat the respondents were justified indismissing him as regards the first allegation that the appellant mad payments which were not supported by valid and authorised job cards the learned trial judge had theis to say:—

"The evidence produced points to the fact thatthe plaintiff did not prepare job cards. The evidence goes further to say that on pay day the job cards were handed over to the time keepers who were always present and it was they who used to call out the names on the job cards and then identify the worker to the plaintiff before he paid him. On the evidence therefore there is nothing to show that the plaintiff was connected in any woay with the allegedly forged job cards.

On this same allegation the defendants did not produce any of the allegedly forged job cards before this Court. There was also the allegation that there was some difference between the number of job cards handed over to the plaintiff for payment purposes and the number returned after pament. Again no record was produced by the defendants in support of this allegation."

As regards the second and third allegations that the appellant kept cash form wages in this custody for more than three days and that he refunded the sum of Le.1.045.47 from his own monies in part satisfaction of a general deficit of Le 4,164.31 on 2nd january 1973 after it had been pointied out to him that his reconciliation statements were erroneous, the trial judge found that the appellant was justified i not re-banking the excess cash he had discovered because of instructions he had received from the Finance Office to hold on to such cash until such time as he the Finance Officer should communicate with him. The appellant stated in evidence that it was the Finance Officer who asked him on 2nd january 1973 to go and pay the amount and that he thereupon took out the money form his safe and went and paid it. The Finance Officer was appellant's immediate boss and according to Exhibit E appellant was under his supervision. Indeed the appallant in his Defence to counterclaim and Reply" had pleaded that if at all there were any mandatory regulations which required him to re-bank any monies kept by him within 48 hours such regulations had been waived by he issuing of Exhibit Q to him by the Finance Officer. The Finance Officer did not deny receipt of Exhibit P or the issuing of Exhibit Q. The inference is that the appellant acted on the Finance Officer's instructions. It would be unreasonable to say that he was disobeying lawful instructions when in fact he was acting under the instructions of his immediate boss who up to the time of trial and still is the respondent's employer. If indeed it was in breach of regulations it was not so serious as to warrant summary dismissal especially as the Finance Officer was still in service. Assume that this was an unlawful order as stated by the Court of Appeal which the appllant was not justified in obeying, I do not think that this default constituted such an act of grave misconduct or a flagrant violation of laid down regulations as to warrant the summary dismissal of appellant.

As regards the fourth allegation that the appellant failed to provide a reconciliation statement of January 1973 the appellant stated in evidence that he could not have prepared such a statement as by then he had been relieved of his duties. This was never controverted by the respondents.

The Court of Appeal in its judgement referred to the case COULSTON & CO. LTD vs CORRY (1904-7) All. ER. Rep. 685 where it is stated in the Head Note that:—

"In an action for worngful dismissal, if the defendant pleads that the misconduct of the servant justified the determination of the contrat of service, the question whether the misconduct proved established the right to dismiss the servant is a question of fact for the jury."

Lord James in his Judgment, at p. 687 observed:—

"The sufficiency of the justification depended upon the extent of the misconduct. there is no fixed rule of law defining the degree of misconduct in a servant which will not justify the determination of the contract of service by one of the parties to it against the will of the other. On the other hand, misconduct incosistent with the fulfilment of the express or implied conditions of service will justify dismissal."

In LAWS vs LONDON CHRONICLE (INDICATOR NEWSPAPERS) LTD (1959) 2 all. e.r. 285 where an employee had been dismissed summarily for one act of misconduct, Lord Evershed M.R. observed:—

[p.38]

"I think that it is not right to say that one act of disobedience, to justify dismissal, must be of a grave and serious character. I do, however, think that one act of disobedience or misconduct can justify dismissal only if it is of a nature which goes to show (in effect) that the servant is repudiating the contract, or one of its essential conditions: and for that reason, therefore, I think..... that the disobedience must at least have the quality that it is "wilful": it does(in other words) connote a deliberate flouting of the essential contractual conditions."

Sellers, L.J. in SINCLAIR vs NEIGHBOUR (1966) 3 All. ER 988 expressed his own views on the question as to what kind of conduct by an employee would justify instant dismissal by the employer thus (at p. 989):—

"The whole question is whether that conduct was of such a type that it was inconsistent in a grave way - incompatible with the employment in which he had been engaged as a manger."

In the instant case the respondents had sough to justify the summary dismisal of the appellant. The grounds on which they had relied were found by the learned trial judge, after an exhustive review of the entire evidence, to be untenable. it was within his province to decide on the credibility of the witnesses and it has not been shown that his evaluation of the evidence orthe inferences he drew from fact were wrong.

[p.39]

As regards the award made by the High Court, I would allow the amount of Le 365.30 claimed as arrears of half salary from 14th March, 1973 to 30th Septemhber, 1973. On the claim for salary in lieu of notice, the appellant, according to the terms and conditins of service as laid in Section A of the Respondents' Rules Regulations and Conditions of Employment - Exhibit U - is entitled to only one month's notice or pay on termination of employment: I would also allow the amount awarded under this head viz, Le. 112.40.

As regards the claim for Le. 224 arising out of redundancy as a result of his wrongful dismissal i see no basis for the learned trial judge making such an award. There is no justification also for awarding Le. 1,356.00 general damages since the award of one month's salary in lieu of notice constitutes general damages. This award as well as the award of Le. 224.80 redundancy pay are set aside.

I would allow the appeal and set aside the judgment of the Court of Appeal and restore the judgment of the High Court to the extent stated above.

Costs in this Court and in the lower Courts to the appellant.

MADAM BALLU YILLAH V. MOHAMED HEDJAZI

[SC. CIV. APP. No. 3/8] [p.67-78]

DIVISION: SUPREME COURT, SIERRA LEONE

DATE: 12TH JULY 1983

CORAM: MR. JUSTICE E. LIVESEY LUKE, C.J.(PRESIDING); MR. JUSTICE C. A. HARDING, J.S.C.; MRS. JUSTICE A.V.A. AWUNOR-RENNER J.S.C; MR. JUSTICE S. BECCLES DAVIES J.S.C; MR. JUSTICE Constant S. DAVIES J.A.

Madam Ballu Yillah - Appellant

AND

Mohamed Hedjazi - Respondent

George Gelaga-King, Esq., - for the Appellants

Berthan Macauley, (Jr.), Esq., for the State

Beccles Davies . J.S.C

This appeal concerasn land at Sognal Hill Road Wilberforce in the Western Arean. The respondent was the plaintiff in the High Court claiming "possession of all that piece or parcelof land situate and being off Signal Hill Road, Wilberforce and for an injuction restraining the defendant or her servant or agents from trespassing on the said land." The land is described as being bounded ont he North-East byh property of Isaac John Bright 235 feet; on the South-East by preporty of Isaac John Bright 245 feet; on the Sout-East by property of Mrs. Renner Sharaff 225 feet; on the North-North-West by property of M.S. Mustapha 96.3 feet and 227.5 feet respectively.

The defence filed on behalf of the appellant had averred inter alia that the land described by the respondent in his statement of claim was "not the piece and parcel of land "Owned" and in her possession; and further that the land owned by her had been in her full free and undisturbed possession since 1963 on the death of her father one Saidu Yilla. The defence discribed the [p.68] land as bing at Pipe Line Road, Wilberforce and bounded on the North by private property 110.58 feet respectively on the South 242.5 feet, 96.5 feet and 83.3 reet respectively; on the East 184.15 feet and 115.02 feet respectively; and on the West 36.49 feet. That was the state of the pleadings when the matter went to trial.

The respondent gave evidence at the trial. He told the Court that he had bought the land at the public auctionin 1955. The land had been sold in consequence of an order of the then Supreme Court (now High Court) empowering the official Administrator (now Administrator and Registrar-general) to do so. He had been the highest didder and it was knooked down to him at the price of five hundred pounds. Adeed of conveyance of the land had been executed in his favour, by the official Administrator. The deed of conveyance was put in evidence by him. It revealed that the land had formed part of the estate of Willam J. powells. He explained how he had inspected the land in 1970 and had found some shacks on it which he had learn on enquiry, had been erected by the appellants.

The appllant also gave evidence. She stated that she was living at 7, Pipe Line, Wilberforce. She was the daughter of Saidu Yillah who died in 1963. She had been born at 7, Pipe Line and had lived there throughout her childhood. 7, Pipe Line stood in a compound which had belonged to her late father and presently to her. There were over ten houses in the compound, seven of which were built by her father, her late brother and herself; and the rest of her children. In 1968 she had engaged the services of a surveyor to survey the land. A plan was prepared which wasincorporated in the Statutory Declaration. The Statutory Declaration was registered.

At the conclusion of the appellant's evidence, her counsel applied for an amendment to her defence. The amendment was for the inclusion of an additinal paragraph to the defence.

[p.69]

The application was granted. The new paragraph reads—

"4. Alternatively, the Defendant says that the plintiff's claim is barred and his title, if any which is denied was extingushed prior to this action by virtue of the provisions of the Limitation Act 1961".

The appellant then called a witness Yayah Fofana who said he had been living at 7. Pipe Line, Lower Signal Hill since 1947. He was present when the land was handed over to the appellant by the tribal Headman after the death of the appellant's father - Saidu Yillah.

At close of the evidence at the trial, the appellant's defence was that (i) the land alleged by the respondent to be his was not the same land as that described by the appellant in her defence; and (ii) alternatively, the respondent's claim was statute barred.

The appellant did not adduce evidence at the trial in support of her contention tht the land referred to by the respondent in his statemnt of claim and that referred to by her in her defence were two different lands.

The matter however seemed at the end of the day to have rested on the Limitation Act 1961.

I shall now refer tot he provisions of the Limitation Act 1961 which are germane to the instant case. They are sections 5(3), 6(1), 11(1) and 16. Section 5(3) is in these terms:—

"5(3) No action shall be brought by any person to recover any land after the expiration of twelve years form the date on which the right of action acdrud to him, or if it first accrued to some person through whom he claims to that person....."

Section 6(1) then provides —

[p.70]

"where the person bringing an action to recover land, or some person throgh whom he claims, has been in possession thereof, and has whil entitled thereto been dispossessed or discontinued his possession, the right of action shall be deemed to have accured on the date of the dispossession or discontinuance."

Section 11(1) states—

"No right of action to recover land shall be deemed to accrue unless the land is in the possession of some person in whose favourthe period of likitation canrun (hereinafter in this section referree to as "adverse possession") and where under the provisions of this act anyright of action is deemed to accrue on a certain date and no person is in adverse possession on that date, the right of action shall not be deemed to accrue unless and until adverse possessionis taken of the land ."

Finally Section 16 enacts—

"Subject to the provisions of section 8 of this Act at the expiration of the period prescribged by this Act for any person to bring an action to recover land (including a redemption action) the title of that person to the land shall be extinquished."

Section 8 referred to above relates to settled land and land held on trust.

The appellant has therefore asserted that the respondent had been dispossessed of the land and that she and her father had been in adverse possession for a period of at least 12 years before [p.71] action was brought by the respondent and that his title to the land had been consequently extinquished.

I shall now state the law on the point. The following statement of the law appears in Halsbury's Laws of England 4th Edition at paragraph 769 —

"An owner of land may cease to be in possession of it by reason of dispossession or discontinunance of possession. Dispossession occurs where a person comes in and puts another out of possession; discontinuance of possession occurs where the person in possession goes out and another person takes possession, and that possession must be continuous and exclusive.

The true test whether a rightful owner has been dispossessed or not is whether an action for possession of the land will lie at his suit against some other person. The rightful owner is not dispossessed so long as he has all the enjoyment of the property that is possible, or leaves it unoccupied pending materialisation of some future use which he had in mind. Where land is not capable of and enjoyment, there can be no dispossession by mere absence of use and enjoyment, but where the owner has no future use for the land in mind and merely leaves it derelict, possession taken by a trespasser may be adverse even though the owner suffers no incovenience. To constitute dispossession, acts must have been done which were inconstistent with the enjoyment of the soil [p.72] by the person entitled for the purposes for which he had a right touse it, and with the intention of establishing dominion and not merely with the intention of using the land until prevented form doing so....."

The claimant to possession under the Statue of Limitations must prove (i) dispossession of the true owner or (ii) discontinuance of possession by the true owner.

the appellant tendered in evidence rate demand notes and receipts for the period 1942-72. They were in respect of 12 pipe Line, Wilberforce; 8 pipe Lie, Wilberforce; 7 pipe Line Smart Farm; 8 Pump Line, Murray /Town; and 8apump Line, Wilberforce respectively. In the instant case there was no evidence linking those demand notes and receipts with house on this disputed land. The mere production of a receipt or demand note is not enough. Evidence should be led to connect those demand notes and receipt with the property to which they relate. Such evidence was crucial to the success of the appellant's case since the respondent had said when he bough the land in 1955 there were no buildings on it. There was consequently no evidence as to when the appellant's father went on the land in dispute if at all he did so.

I now turn to ascertain whether the respondent was dispossessed by the appellant or went out of posession of the land. in the High Court, the appellant had told the trial judge—

"I know one Saidu Yilla. He is now dead. He died about 13 years ago. he was my Father..... When my father die and i remained the only surviving child I took possession of the property and claimed it to be mine.....

[p.73]

In 1968 after my father's death I got a survayor to survey the land and prepare plan. He called Baxter. After he had prepared the plan a Statutory Declaration was prepared in respect of the land....."

The appellant's only witness yayah Fofana had told the judge—

"I know one Saidu Yillah. He is now dead..... He died in 1963..... After his death the tribal headman in the area handed over his property to Ballu Yillah....."

When cross-examined he had replied.—

"I was present when the property was handed over to defendant in 1963. What I am saying is the truth."

Yayah Fofana was a declarant to the Statutory Declaration reffered to tby the respondent. He and one Brima fofana had declared in paragraph 9 thereof —

"That some years prior to hes death, the late Saidu yillah in our presence and in the presence of several othr inhabitants of the village gave the said piece or parcel of land by way of gift to the First Declarant (Ballu yillah) herein in consequence of valuable services rendered to him during his lifetime."

It is evident from the above quoted pieces of evidence that while the appellant deposed in one breath that she had been put in possession of the land by her father before his death in 1963, in the next breath she was saying that it was after her father's death that she took possession of the land and claimed itas hers, being the only surviving child. Her witness said that it was after her (the appellant's) father's death, that the tribal [p.74] headman in the area put her in possession of the land. previous to his evidence this same witness had declared on the Statutory Declaration - Exh. 'E' that the appellant's father had put her in possessin 'some years oprior to this death." On the other hand the appellant had declared in Exh. 'E' that it was "in or about the year 1963" that she was putin possession of the land. In my opinion therefore, the evidence of the appellant and her witness was flearly unreliable as to when she took possession of the land.

In order to succeed under the Statute of Limitations a claimant must prove either that he or someone through whom he claims has dispossed the tru owner or that the true owner has discontinued possession of the same for a continuous period of at least 12 years. The real test whether a rightful owner has been dispossed or not is whether he could institute an action for possessin against some other operson. There is no dispossion of the rightful owner as long as he has all the enjoyment of the land that he could possibly have or does not occupy it pending the fruition of some project for which he intends toutilise it. If land is not capable of use and enjoyment, mere absence of use and enjoyment of it by the rightful owner would not amount to dispossession. Where however an owner has no future use for his land and merely abandons it, if a trespasser takes possession of it such possessin may be adverse to the owner. In order that there might be dispossession therefore, the acts of the trespasser on the land must be inconsistent with the use of enjoyment of it that was available to or intended by the right of possessionove it.

The judgments in Leigh v Jack 49 L.J.Q.B. 220 indicate guidelines in determining the issue of dispossession —

Cockburn C.J. at page 222 of the report—

[p.75]

"I am of opinion tht a person does not necessarily discontinue possession ot land because he does not actually use it by himself or by his agent. The question is one of fact to be settled by the circumstances of each case"

Bramwell L.J. in dealing with the issue in his judgment said inter alia—

"This is, however a question of fact, and a fact which is difficult to establish against an owner of land..... I do not think he is wrong, for it is necessary that the defendant should show dispossessin or discontinuance of possession; acts of trespass by the defendant are not enough, he must go further....."

Cotton L.J. in agreeing with Cockburn C.J. and Bramwell L.J. said—

"As to the question of the Statue of Limitations. I am unable to discover any fact which can be said to amount to dispossessionof the plaintiff by the acts of the defendant: I do not think that the plaintiff can be said to have discontinued possession. It is not necessary that an owner should actually be in possession in person, for though absent he may still in the eye of the law be in possession. he does not discontinue possession because he does not actually use or personally enjoyed property, the nature of which [p.76] prevent there being such use or enjoyment in the absence of the owner. It is in every case necessary to look at the nature of the property..... the acts of the defendant did not oust the plaintiff, soalso the plintiff has not himself discontinued possession....."

More recently Lord Denning M.R. he stated the position in these words.. in Wallis Cayton Bay Holiday Camp Ltd. v Shell-Max and B.P. 1974 3 All E.R. 575 at 580; 1974 3W.L.R. 387 at 392 —

"Possession by itself is not enough to give a title. It must be adverse possession. The true owner must have discontinued possession or have been disposssed and another musthave taken it adversely to him. There maust be something in the nature of an ouster or the true owner by the wrongful possession.....

When the true owner of land intends to use it for a particular purpose int he future, but meanwhile has no immediate use for it, and so leaves it unoccupied, he does not lose his title toit simply because some other person enters on it and uses it for some temporary purpose, like stacking materials or for some seasonal purpose, like growing vegetable, not even if this temporary or seasonal purpose continues year after year for 12 years or more: see Leigh v Jack, Williams Brothers Direct Supply Stores Ltd. v Raftery. Techbild Ltd. v Chamberlain. The reason is not because the user does not amount [p.77] to actual possession. The line between acts of user and acts of possession is too fine for words. The reason behind the decision is because it does not lie in the trespasser's mouth to assert that he used the land of his own wrong as a trespasser, Rather his user is to be ..... to the licence or permission of the true owner. By using the land knowing that it not belong to him; he impliedly assumes that the owner will permit it; and the owner, by not turning him off, impliedly gives permission."

On thebasis of the principles set out above, let us assum for the purposes of this appeal that the appellant was in adver possession; the question then arises 'for what period was she adverse possession'?

There is no evidence that the appllant's father had dispossessed the respondent or that he was in advers possession of the land prior to 1963, if he went on the land at all since the evidence as to when the appellant's father went on the land is unreliable, and also since it is uncertain when the appellant actually went on the land, this Court cannot add the period of the father's alleged prior possession to here. According to the evidence, the earliest possible time when the appellant went on the land was "1963 and "in or about the year 1963." The plan showing the buildings on the land is dated 1967

[p.78]

The writ of summon commencingthe proceedings in this matte, was issued on 4th July 1974. Taking the earliest possible date in 1963 - 1st January 1963, then the appellant was in adverse possesion of the land for the prescribed statutory period o 12 years, whether seh went there in 1963 or 1967. I agree with the trial judge that the appelant was not in adverse possession of the land for 12 years to enable her to avail heself the limitatin Act. The appeal therefore fails.

J.B. JENKINS-JOHNSTON ESQ., FOR THE APPELLANTS

F.R. ANTHONY ESQ., FOR THE RESPONDENTS

JUDGMENT DELIVERED ON 28th DAY OF APRIL. 1983

LIVESY LUKE. C.J.

The respondents to this appeal (hereinafter called Baston) issued a specially indorsed writ of summons against the appellants to this appeal (hereinafter called Osman Thomas) on 7th September, 1977 claiming the sum of Le 78,77.66 as amount due and owing for goods sold and delivered. It will be useful to give a narrative in some detail of the various procedural steps taken up to the delivery of judgment in the High Court. Apperance was entered on behalf of Osman Thomas. On 6th October, 1977 pursuant to an application for summary judgment under order XI (1) of the High Court Rules, Williams J. after hearing counsel for Baston, granted leave to Bastone to enter final judgment for the sum of Le 78,493.58 with interest at 7 percent per annum from the data of the issue of the writ of summons plus cost to be taxed. Osman Thomas were not represented at the hearing of the application for summary judgment although their solicitor had been duly served with the summons and affidavit in support.

[p.15]

On 13th December, 1977 solicitor for Osman Thomas filed a Notice of Motion applying inter alia that the Order dated 6th October, 1977 granting Baston leave to enter final judgment be sed aside and that Osman Thomas be at liberty to defend the action. In the affidavit in support of the Notice of Motion, it was deposed inter alia that Osman Thomas had a good Defence to the action and a proposed Defence was exhibited to the affidavit. The motion was heard by Williams J. in the presence of counsel for both parties.The hearing took three days during which the deponent of the affidavit in support of the application was cross-examined and counsel made submissions. At the end of counsel's submissions on 17th February, 1978, the learned judge ordered inter alia that the judgment ordered on 6th October, 1977 be set aside, that leave be granted to Osman Thomas to defend the aftion as a short cause, that the action be set down for speedy hearing by him,.and that the date for trial be than fixed by consent of counsel having regard to the convenience of his court; that the costs thrown away be paid by Osman Thomas, and that the costs of the application, agreed at Le 200, be paid by Osman Thomas. The judge than added "Adjourned to 4.4.78." Presumably that was the date fixed by counsel having regard to the convenience of the court in accordance with the order previously mentioned.

The case was called before Williams J. on 4th April, 1978. Counsel for both parties were present. By consent an adjournment was taken to 17th April, 1978. The next time the case was called was not 17th April, 1978 but on 6th June, 1978 before Williams J. On that occassion counsel for Bastone was present but there was no apperance by or on behalf of Osman Thomas. "The learned judge adjourned to 19th June, 1978 and ordered that Notice be served on the [p.16] solicitor for Osman Thomas. When the case was called before Williams J. on 20th June, 1978 counsel for both parties were present. Counsel for Bastone than proceeded to open his case in the course of which he asked leave to abandon part of the claim and ended by saying that he revised claim amounted to Le 23,530.02. Counnsel for Osman Thomas then made certain submissions in the course of which he applied for an adjournment to the following day. The judge granted the application and adjourned to 21st June, 1978.

On 21st June, 1978 when the case was called before Williams J. counsel for Bastone proceeded to call two witnesses. The first witness was Terrence john Calcutt a Director of Bastone. In the course of his evidence in chief he deposed about the various transactions between his company and Osman Thomas and produced a number of invoices and other documents. The witness was crossed examined by counsel for Osman Thomas . The second witness was formal witness one Randu Deen a clerk of the Administrator & Registrar General's Department. At the end of the evidence-in-chief of that witness, counsel for Bastone closed the plaintiff's case. The case was then adjourned.

On 4th July, 1978 counsel for Osman Thomas called Abdul Lasite Thomas, the General Manager of Osman Thomas. He gave evidence on the transctions between the parties. He gave evidence on the transactions between the parties. he was cross-examined by counsel for Bastone, at the end of which counsel for Osman Thomas closed the case for the Defence. The judge then adjourned the case to 5th July. 1978. Counsel for both parties addressed the court in their turn on 5th july, 1978 at the end of which the learned judge reserved his judgment on 12th October, 1978 dismissing the plaintiffs' claim with cost. Bastone appealed to the Court of Appeal against that judment.

[p.17]

The appeal was heard by the Court of Appeal in March, 1981. Judgment was delivered on 16th April,1981 allowing the appeal and setting aside the judgment of Williams J. The court ordered inter alia that the Master & Registrar or his Deputy hold an inquiry into the transcation between the parties and into the accounts made by the plaintiff to determine what amount if any had been paid by the defendants to the oplaintiffs with liberty to both parties to surcharge or falsify.

Osman Thomas have appealed to this court against the decision of the Court of Appeal of the following grounds:-

1. That the learned justices of the Court of Appeal failed to considered adequately or at all the burden of proof which lay on the Respondent herein in the High Court especially having regard to the principle of law contained in the maxim "Ei incumbit probatio, qui dicit, non qui negat."

2. That the learned Justices of the Court of Appeal failed to consider adequately or at all the Defence of the Appellants herein in the High Court.

3. That the learned justice of the Court of Appeal were wrong in law to have ordered an inquiry between the parties having regard to the totality of the evidence led in the High Court.

4. That the learned Justices of the Court of Appeal were wrong in law to have set aside the Judgment of Williams J. in the High Court in the light of all the evidence which was before the Learned Trial Judge.

[p.18]

cases were filled by counsel for both parties, counsel for Osman Thomas contending inter alia that the judgment of Williams J. should be restored and counsel for B astone contending inter alia that the judgment of the Court of Appeal be upheld.

Mr. jenkins-Johnston, learned counsel for Osman Thomas argued the appellants' case with much eloquence, and Mr. Anthony learned counsel for Bastone was equally eloquent in arguing the Respondent' case. it was during Mr. Anthon's argument that the Court had cause to call for the original high Court records. Irt was then discovered that no Defence had been filled or delivered by or on behalf of Osman Thomas and tha the ation had not been entered for trial. Counsel on both sides agreed that was the state of affairs. The court thereupon called upon Counsel to address us on the legal effect of such lapeses ont he part of both parties.

Mr. Jenkins-Johnston while conceding that no Defence to the action had been filled or delivered, submitted that since a trial had taken place this court should overlook the non-compliance with the rules and uphold the judgment of the High Court. Mr. Anthony submitted that the defendants having failed to file a Defence, the trial was a nullity in view of the fact that the judge purported to act on a non-existent Defence. But learned counsel was not prepared to take his submission to its logical conclusion. He urged the court to rescure the self-same proceedings with he had submitted were a nullity.

It will be recalled that a proposed Defence was exhibited to the affidavit in support of the Notice of Motion dated 13th December, 1977. It was on the basis of that affidavit, including the proposed Defence, that the learned judge set aside the judment on 6th October, 1977 [p.19] and granted Oasman Thomas leave to defend the action. The proposed Defence was never delivered and filled. I am aware that under Order XIVB of the English Rules of the Supreme Court, 1960, as applied in our jurisdiction, in a case where a specially indorsed writ has been issued, a judge may in certain circumstances order trial without further pleadings. But the provisions of that order are not applicable to the instant case. No application was mad for trial without further pleadings and on order was made dispensing with further pleadings. In those circumstances Osman Thomas were obliged to deliver and file their Defence within the time limited for that purpose. This they failed to do, and that omission on their part still continues.

Our High court Rules (hereinafter referred to as the 'Rules") are quite clear as to the course of action to be taken in a case where a party fails to file and deliver and file a pleading. Order XXIII of theRules spells out the action to be taken where one party to an action has made default in delivering and filing within the time allowed for that purpose a pleading which he is obliged to deliver and file. There is no doubt that the claim in the instant case is for a debt or liquidated demand. In those circumstances the rule apoplicable is Order XXXIII r. 2 which reads as follows:—

"2. if the plaintiffs' claim be only fro a debt or liquidated demand and the defendant does not, within the time allowed for that purpose deliver a defence, the plaintiff may, at the expiration of such time, enter final judgment for the amount claimed costs."

[p.20]

So what should have happened in this case was that at the expiration of the time limited for delivering and filling a Defence after the order dated 17th February, 1978 (granting leave to defend), Bastone should have entered final judgment for the amount claimed with costs, Osman Thomas having defaulted in delivering and filling a Defence.

If final judgment had been entered, than when the case came up on 4th April, 1978 the judge should have been so informed and he would have then realised that there was nothing for him to try. The necessity of adjourning the case to a later date and of embarking on a full scale trial on 20th June, 1978 would then not have arisen.

The learned judge seems to have overlooked the fact that no Defence had been delivered and filed. If no Defence had been delivered and filed it meant that there was no issue to be tried. So even though final judgment in default indefault had not been entered, the plaintiffs' claim had not been put in issue in a Defence duly delivered and filed. It follows that there was no issue before the court to be tried and the learned judge should not have embarked on a trial. And even assuming that a Defence had been delivered and filed, it would have been necessary to enter the action for trial in accordance with Order XXV r. 9 of the Rules or on the Special List in accordance with Order XI r. 7 of the Rules, And it is only after such an action has been entered on the Cause List or the Special List, as the case may be, that is can come on for trial. So even if a Defence had been delivered and filed in this case, it was not ripe for hearing because the action was never entered for trial.

In those circumstances the judge should not have embarked on a trial of the action.

In my judgment therefore the trial was unnecessary and the whole proceedings commencing from 20th June, 1978 to 12th October, 1978 when judgment was delivered were invalid. In my opinion the determination of the issue raised by this court effectively disposes of this appeal. In the circumstances, I do not consider it necessay to deal with any of the grounds of appeal lodged by Osman Thomas.

It is regretable that a lot of time, effort and expense were wasted o an unnecessary and abortive trial before the High Court, and in the proceedings before the Court of Appeal. But unfortunately there is nothing that can be done to rectify the situation. In may opinion the purported trial was a nullity: See Macfoy v U.A.C. Ltd. (1961) 3 W.L.R. 1405. In the circumstances there is no alternative but to set aside the proceedings before Williams J. commencing on 20th June, 1978 including his judgment and orders. I would also set aside the judgement and orders of the Court of Appeal. In view of all the circumstances, I think that it is but fair anf just, that each party should bear their costs in this court and the courts below.

In conclusion I can only express the hope that the parties or their solicitor will now take the proper steps as provided int he Rules to ensure the speedy disposal of this long outstanding matter.

DATE: 21ST SEPTEMBER 1983

CORAM: MR. JUSTICE C. A. HARDING, PRESIDING; MR. JUSTICE O.B.R. TEJAN J.S.C; MR. JUSTICE S. BECCLES DAVIES J.S.C.

BETWEEN:

The Bank of Credit & Commerce - Appellant

AND

The Charge D'Affaires of the Rebublic of the Ivory Coast Embassy in Sierra Leone Acting for and on behalf of the Republic of Ivory Coast, Freetown - Respondent

Garvas J. Betts, Esq., (with him Miss Patrice Wellesley-Cole) for the Applicants

T.M.Terry, Esq., for the Respondent

C.A. HARDING . J.S.C.

The Applicants herein were the Respondents in Civil Appeal 60/81 before the Court of Appeal and the Respondent herein was the Appellant. The application before us is for special leave to appeal to this Honourable Court against the judgment and Order of the Court of Appeal dated 15th April, 1982 made therein and for a stay of execution and or proceedings on the judgment and Order aforsaid on terms pending the hearing of the proposed appeal.

The events leading up to this application may be catalogued as follows:—

The 29th June, 1981, the Respondent took out a specially indorsed writ claiming, inter alia, repayment of at the sum of [p.80] Le 18,000/00 plus interest from the Applicants. service of the Writs was effected on that same day on the Applicants who entered appreance thereto on 6th July, 1981.

On 5th October, 1981, the Respondent obtainedjudgment in default of Defence and caused a Writ of Fi-Fa to be issued agains the Applicants. On the following day in response to the Writ of Fi-Fa the Applicants issued a cheque made payable to the Master and Registrar for the sum of Le 21,606.10.

On 7th October, 1981 before clearance for payment of the said cheque was effected, on an Ex-parte application mad by the Applicatns inter ali (1) to set aside the Writ of Fi-Fa (2) alternatively for an interim stay of the Writ of Fi-fa pending an application to set aside the judgment in Default and all subsequent proceedings (3) that the Judgment in Default of Defence be set aside and (4) that leave be granted to file a defence to the Writ of Summons, Thompson-Davis, J. ordered (a) that the Default Judgment and all subsequent proceedings including the Writ of Fi-fa be stayed for the period of five days and (b) that the application by Motion be served on the other side i.e. on the Respondent, and the matter adjourned to 13th October, 1981.

On 9th October 1981, before ever the motion was heard counsels for the Respondent sought leave of the learned judge to appeal to the Court of Appeal against the interim order made of 7th october 1981; leave was granted on 21st October, 1981.

On 15th April, 1982, the Court of Appeal alowed the appeal, set aside the Orders of Thompson-Davis, J. and substituted therefor an interim order for a stay of proceedings, on the Applicants, on or before the 16th of [p.81] April, 1981, paying to the Respondent the sum of Le. 21,606.10, the Respondent to give a written undertaking to repay the said amount to the Applicants or any amount that may be ordered to be paid by any competent Court in Sierra Leone to the Applicants after the final determination of the action. it furthers ordered that on payment of the said amount the Master and Registar of the High Court was to place the original Motion brought by the Applicants to set aside the default judgment before Thompson-Davis J. or another Judge of the High Court for hearing inter parties.

On 16th April, 1982, the Applicants sought leave of the Court of Appeal to appeal against the Orde of 15th April, 1982, to this Court, but the applicaiton was refused and counsel has now applied to this Court for special leave to appeal against the aforsaid Order.

As stated above, before even the Applicants original Motion was heard by the High Court the Respondent on 9th october, 1981, appealed against the interim order made on 7th October, 1981 to the Court of Appeal. The grounds of appeal may be summarised as follows:—

(1) Bias on the part of the learned trial Judge, he being the lessor of the Respondent.

(2) That the learned trial Judge ought not on an Ex-parate application to have made an interim order staying the Default judgment and all subsequent proceedings including the writ of Fi-fa for a period of five days.

(3) That there was no longer in existence a Writ of Fi-fa as the said Writ had already been executed on 6th October, 1981 and in consequence the Order of 7th October, 1981 and in consequence the Order of 7th October, 1981 setting aside the Writ of fi-fa was one made in vain.

The Court of Appeal mcad no adjudication as regards (3) but as regards (1) and (2) held respectively that there was nothing to warrant their coming to the conclusion that therewas a likelihood of bais if the learned trial Judge sat as [p.82] he did at the hearing of the Ex-parate Motion and that the learned trial judge had power to grant interim stayh on terms. Nevertheless the Court proceeded to set aside the Orders fo the learned trial judge and to Order payment of the amount claimed to the Respondet by the Applicants' on the Respondent giving a written undertaking to repay if so ordered by any competent court in Sierra Leone as a condition for listing the original Motion before the High Court for hearing.

Both in the affidavit in support of the original Motion and in that in support of the present one, the solicitor for the Applicants had deposed that because of the Respondent's diplomatic status and money once paid may not be recoverable by legal process. Also, in the affidavit in support of the present application before us it was stated that the Applicants were prepared to pay into Court the amount claimed pending the hearing and determination of this application as well as the proposed appeal.

Counsel for the Applicants has urged that the matter is one of sufficient public importance to warrant this Court granting special leave to appeal against the judgement of the Court of Appeal dated 15th April, 1982. He referred to Sec. 3 of the Diplomatic Immunities and privileges act. No.35 of 1961 and to Halsbury's Laws of England 3rd Edition, volum 16 paragraph 19 and volume 7 paragraphs 7, 571 and 576 and also to the case of DUFF DEVELOPMENT CO. vs KELANTAN GOVERNMENT (1924) A.C. 797. He submitted that the issuing of Writ and a submission to the jurisdiction made by a foreign envoy does not amoutn to a waiver of execution. He submitted further that on analysis of the judgment and the Court of Appeal order they did not consider that the Motion before the high Court was ripe for hearing because by such an Order the High Court was precluded from making [p.83] any ordir which maigh havefelt disposed to make and thereby the Court of Appeal was usurping the functions of the High Court because by so doing they were determining the Motion which was before the High Court.

Counsel for the Respondent submitted that before leave to appeal is granted to the Applicants it must be shown by them that there is an arguable appeal or that there is a prima facie case or that the Court from whose decision leave to appeal is sought must have committed an error on a point of law or has failed to exercise its discretion lawfully or on wrong grounds. He contended that the proposed grounds of appeal prima faci do not disclose good grounds nor can it be said that the Court of Appeal committed an error of law or failed to exercise its discretion judicially or the the decision was based on wrong principles. he submitted that if leave to appeal granted this should not operate as a stay of execution, that the Applicants have not made out a case for depriving the "Respondent of the fruits of his judgment and that a stay will not accord with the justice the case.

I have presued the proposed grounds of Appeal (six in all) and i am satisfied that they raise important issues which should warrant this Court to exercise the power conferred on it by Rule 6(2) of the Rules of this Court. I will accordingly grant the Applicants special leave to appeal to the Supreme Court and I so order. I also make the following Orders:—

(a) That the grounds of appeal be as follows:—

"1. That the Court of Appeal was wrong in law ot have set aside the Order or orders of the High Court dated 7th October, 1981 in the judment dated 15th April, 1982 when the Appellant's first fround of Appeal had been rejected by the Court of [p.84] Appeal and there had been no finding by the Court, that the learned trial Judge in the High Court had exercised his discretion wrongly or non judicially, in granting the Defandants in that Court a stay of proceedings pending service of the ex-parte motion on the Plaintiff.

2. That by its decision in setting aside the order of Thompson-Davis, J. dated 15th April, 1981, the Court of Appeal impliedly held, and wrongly in law that the High Court may not properly grant an ex-parte order, or must necessarily do so only on the Appellant's undertaking.

3. That the order of the Court of Appeal that "the master of Registrar of the High Court do place the motion to set aside the judgment brought by the Respondent" only after payment of the said amount of Le. 21.606.10 cents was wrong in law in so far as the said order could notin law have properly been made by the said Court.

4. That in all the cicumstances of the case, the court of Appeal was wrong in law to grant a stay on condition which compelled the Appellants, the Respondents before the Court of Appeal to pay entire amount of the judgment award to the Respondents herein on the Respondents undertaking to refund the same, on the eventual determination of the action, when to the knowledge of that court, there was a motion ripe for hearing before the High Court, seeking to set aside the Respondents Writ of Fi-fa in the action on the grounds irregularity.

5. That the Court of Appeal was wrong in law to have made any order compelling payment of the judgment award to the Respondent, when the High Court had not adjudicated on the motion before it ot aside the Writ of Fi-fa in case as irregular as well as the judgment in default of defence.

6. That the Court of Appeal was wrong in law to order payment of the judgment monies to the Respondent because of the comity of nations when the Court of Appeal knew that there is in law no process to compel a foreign envoy to restore monies once paid and especially in view of the fact that the judgment relied on what a default judgment."

[p.85]

(b) That the Applicants lodge the Notice of Appeal within 10 days from date hereof.

(c) That the Applicants deposit the sum of Le. 5.000/00 or enter into recognisance for the payment of the said amount in one surety as security for cost

(d) That the Applicants deposit the sum of Le. 1,000/00 for the costs of the Record

(e) That the amount of Le. 21,606.10 already lodged by the Applicants do remainin court pending the determination of the proposed appeal.

(f) That a stay of execution and/or proceedings on the judgment and order of the Corut of Appeal made and dated the 15th day of April. 1981 is hereby granted pending the hearing and determination of the proposed appeal.

(g) Costs of this Application to the Respondent assessed at Le. 350.

[p.86]

TEJAN. J.S.C.

In order to appreciate the application before this Court, I think it is necessary to deal briefly with history of the events which necessiated the application, and these can be stated thus: On the 29th of une 1981 the respondent issued a Writ of Summons against the applicants claiming:

(a) Damages against he applicants for loss and damage caused by the applicants by reaosn of the fact that the applicants negligently and/or in breach of contract paid a cheque of Eighteen Thousand Leones (Le. 18,000.000) purporting to be drawn by the respondent payable to bearer and negligently debited the said amoutn of the respondent with the sum of le. 18.000.00

(b) A declaration that the applicants are not entitled to debit the respondent's account with the amount of Le. 18.000.00

(c) A declaration that the respondent is entitled to the repayment to him of the sum of Le.18,000/00 plus interest at the rate of 16%

(d) Such further or other relief as may be just.

(e) Costs

On the 6th day of July 1981, the applicants entered an unconditional appearance. The applicants, having failed to file a defence, the respondent obtained a judgment in default of defence on the 5th day of October, 1981. On the 6th day fo Ocotber 1981, the respondent levied execution by a writ officers facias against the applicants. The applicants issued a cheque for the sum of Le. 21,606.10 in the name of the Master and Registrar on the same day. The respondent presented the cheque for special clearance but the cheque was cancelled by the applicants on the ground of exparte motion was filled gy the applicants in the Higg Court praying as the folowing orders:—

[p.87]

"(1) That the writ of fieri facias be set aside ton the grounds of (a) non-compliance with the Form of Writ of fiere as prescribed in the schedule A of chapter 22 of the Laws of Sierra Leone, or alternatively form No. 1 in Appendix H of the Rules of the Supreme Court; (b) In so far as the writ is directed to the wrong legal person, that isto say, Bank of Credit and Commerce International rather than the Bank of Credit and Commerce (Overseas) International Limited, the proper Defendants in this action.

(2) In the alternative, an interim stay of the writ of Fieri Facias herein pending an application in this motion contained to set aside the judgment in default and subsequent proceedings, and that the defendants be allowed to defend this action.

(3) That the defendants be at liberty to move this court exparte, on such terms as to acts as the Court may think just

(4) That the judgment in default of defene herein be set aside.

(5) That the defendants be at liberty to file a defence to the writ of summons in this action

(6) Such further or other orders as to the Court may seem just."

To this motion, an affidavit was atached in support. This affidavit was sworn to by Mess Wellesley-Cole. The motion ..... before Thompson-Davis, J. who made the following orders:—

"(1) That the default judgment and all subsequent proceedings including the writ of fi-fa atayed for a period of five days.

(2) It is further ordered that this application by motion is ordered to be served on the other side and matter is adjourned to 13 october 1981.

It is to be noted that he esx-perte application was heard on the same day the notice of motion was filed. The respondent, being agrrieved by the orders made, appealed against the orders without delay to the court of Appeal. The appeal was heard by During, navo and Turay 33. of Appeal and on the 15th day of April 1982, the Court of Appeal [p.88] delivered judgment

In a passage of the judgment, the Court of Appeal said:—

"In the Court below, apparent in the affidavit of Miss Wellesly-Cole in suppport of the Ex-parte application and before us was argued it is clear to my mind that the Respondent only wants stay because they are of the opinion that they might not be able to recover any amount paid over the applicant should in case an order for repayment is made by our Courts. I must state that it seems to me to bevery odd that a reputable bank would makd out a cheque due for payment on demand and not in future and then attempt ot stop execution of a writ of fi-fa on the ground that it migh not recover any money paid to the judgment creditor on a regular judgment if Diplomatic previlege or immunity is claimed by the judgment Credi to who has submitted tothe Jurisdiction of our Courts. it appears to me that the Respondent when they made out the cheque to the Sheriff had no intention to honour the same on demand for payment. I think I am absolutely right in saying that our Courts must take judicial notice of the fact that the Ivory Coast is a friendly country. As far as Sierra Loene is concerned it is not a hostile country or an enemy of State in so far as the relationship between our country and the Ivory Coast is concerned and diplomatic relationship still exists between the two States. I see no reason why we should start with the presumption that the appellant would not behave in accordance with a simple matter like this before us. I am of the apinion that the Respondent the aplicant in the Court below should have been put in terms.

During J. 4 further said:

"I would set aside the orders of the learned judge and make an orde granting interim stay of proceedings on the Respondents on or before Friday the 16th of April 1982 paying to the Appellant to give an undertaking in writing to repay the said amount of Le. 12.606.10 to the Rrspondent or any amout that may be ordered to be paid by any compatent Court in Sierra Leone to the respondent after the final determination of the said action. On the payment of the said sum of Le. 21.606.10 on terms as stated above I would direct the Master and Registrar of the High Court ot put the motion to set aside the Default judgment brought by the Respondent before the same judg or another judge of the High Court."

It is against that decision of the Court of Appeal that the applicant having been refused leave to appeal to the Supreme Court that they now have applied of Special Leave to appeal to this court. In addition to the application for Special leave to appeal, the applicants prayed for anorder grating an interim stay of execution and on the proceedings on the consequential orders of the Court of Appeal pending the hearing of the application. The Applicants also prayed for an order granting "a stay of execution on the proceedings on the judgment and order of the Court of Appeal as aforesaid on terms that the applicants pay into court the entire amount of Le.21.606.10 as ordered by the Court of Appeal to be paid by said Applicants to the Respondent, or on such other terms and to the Court may seem just pending the hearing and determination of the proposed appeal".

I propose to deal firstly witht he applicaiton for a stay of execution. The general rule with regard to stay of proceedings is that an appeal shall not operate as a stay of execution or of proceedings under the decision appealed from, except so far as the Court of Appeal, may order, and no intermediate act or proceding shall be invalidated, except so far as the Court of Appealed from or the Court of Appeal may direct. But a Court will not make it a practice at the instance of a successfull litigant of depriving a successful one of the fruits of his litigation until a further appeal is determined except in special circumstance. See MONK v BARTRAM (1891) 1 Q.B. 346: and BARKEY v LAVERY (1885) 1 Q.B.D 769. But when it is the exercise of a Judg's discretion, the appellate tribunal will only in extrem case interfere with the discretion of the judge. See HANSORD v LETHBRIDGE (1891) 8 T.L.R. 179.

As a general rule an order staying proceedings is granted upon payment gy the appellant of the maoney in question, the plaintiff giving security for repayment, and on the undertaking of the solicitor to abide by any order which the Court may makd as to refundign if the appel proves sucdessful; and the cost of the aplication have to be paid by the applicant: See MORGAN v ELFORD (1876) 4 Ch. D. 388; COOPER v COOPER (1876) 2 Ch. D 429

In MONK v BARTRAM (supra) it was held that where a stay of execcution has been refused by the judge at the trial, an applicaiton made to the Corut of Appeal for a stay pending an appeal must be supported by special circumstance, and the allegaitons that there has been misdirection, that the verdict was against the weight of evidence or that there was no evidence ot support the verdict or judgment are not special circumstances on which the Court will grant the application.

The question of stay of execution arose in the cases of MORGAN v ELFORD (1876) 4 ch. D. 388 and in COOPER v COOPER (1875) - 1876) Ch.D. 492. it was held that as a general rule an order staying procedings is granted upon payment bg the appellant of the money in question, the plaintiff giving security for repayment, and on the undertaking of the Solicitor to abide by any order which the court may make as to refunding if the appeal proves successful if directed and cost of the applicaion have to be paid by the appellant.

In the case of BARDER v LAVERY (1885) 14 Q.B.D. 769, it was held that execution for cost pending appeal from the Court of Appeal to the House of Lords will not be stayed, unless evidence be adduced to show that the respondent to the appeal will be unable to repay the amount levied by execution, [p.91] if the appellant be successful before the House of Lords.

There arenumerous cases with stay of execution; but there is a different apporach when the matter relates to foreign nations. ambassadors and those who have diplomatic immunity. But in TENDERX CORPORATION v CENTRAL BANK (1977) 1 A.E.R. 889 Lord Denning M.R. said that—"I now believe that he doctrin of incorporation is correct. Otherwishe I do not see that our Courts could ever recognise a change in the rules of International Law. It is certain that international law does change and the Courts have applied the changes without the aid of Act of Parliament. The bounds of sovereign immunity have changd greatly in the last 30 years. The changes have bgeen recognised in many countries, and the courts in or country and theirs - having given effect to them without any legislation for the purpose, notably int he decision of the privy council in Philipine Admiral (owners) v Wallen Shipping (Hong Kong) Ltd. (1976) 1 All E.R. at page 78; (1976) 2 W.L.R. 214. Seeing that the rules of international law have changed - and do change - and the Courts have given effect to the changes without any Act of parliament, it follows to my mind inexorably that the rules of international law, as existing from time to time, do form part of our English Law. It follows too that a decision of this Court, as to what was the rulling of International Law 50 or 60 years ago is not binding on this court today. International law knows no rule of stare decisis. If this Court today is satisfied that the rule of international law on a subject has changed from what it was 50 or 60 years ago, it can give effect to that change, and apply the change in our English Law, without waiting for the house of Lords to do it.

A century ago, no sovereight state engaged in commercial activities. It kept to the traditional functions of a sovereign; to maintain law and order, to conduct foreign affairs, and to see to the defence of the country. It was in those days that England, with most othe countries adopted the rule of absolute immunity. It was adopted because it was considered to be the rule of international law of the time. In re Parliament Belge (1880) 5 P.D. 197 at 205, (1874-80) A.E.R. Rep. 104 at 109, Brett C.J said:

"the exemption of the person of evey sovereign from adverse suit is admitted to be a part of the law of nations (so also his property), The universal agreement which has made these propostions part of the law of nations has been an implied agreement."

This rule was stated by Dicy in his work on conflict of laws (5th Ed.) 1932 at page 194 and 9th Edition (1973) at page 138 and repeated religiously by the Judges thereafter. The classic restatement of it was made by Lord Atkin in COMPANIA NIVIERA VASCONGADA v CHRISTIANA (1938) 1 All E.R. 719 at 720, 721 (1938) A.C. 485 at 490 in these terms:—

"The courts of a country will notimplead a foreing sovereign, that is, they will not by their process make him against his will a party to legal procedings, whether the proceedings involve process against his peson or seek to recover from him specific property or damages."

Viscount Simons repeated this doctrin in the case of RAHIMTOOLA v NAZIM OF HYDERABAD (1957) 3 All E.R 441 at 446; (1938) A.C. 370 at page 394.

Mr Betts' contention was that if the proposed appeal is successful, it would not be possible to ge a refund rom the respondent. Mr. Terry on the other hand, argued that since the respondent had submitted to the jurisdiction by institution an action coupled with the affidavit sworn to by the Charge D' Affaires of the Ivory Cost Embassy, on a successful appeal, the respondent would refund the money.

It is to be noted that the transaction between the applicant and respondent, in my view, is a commercial transaction, and int he case of PHILIPPINE ADMIRAL (owners) v WLLAN SHIPPING (HONG KONG) LTD. (1976) 1 All E.R. at 95. 96 (1976) 2 W.L.R. 214 at 233 the Privy Council said:

"..... the trend of opinionin the world outside the Commonwealth since the last war has been increasingly against the application of the doctrine of sovereign immunity to ordinary trading transaction [p.93] ..... their Lordships themselfes think that it iswrong that it should be so applied. ..... Thinking as they do not the restrictive theory ismore consonant with justice, they do not think that they should be deterred form applying it....."

Lord Denning M.R. in the TENDREX TRAIDING CORP (supra) said at page 981:

"Such reason is of general applicaiton. It covers action in personam. In those actions, too, the restrictive theory is more consonant withjustice. so it should be applied to them. It should not be retained as an indefensible anolaly."

In his speech at pag 821 in the case of DUFF CO v GOVERNMENT OF KELANTAN (1924) A.C. 797 Lord Dunedin said that—

"the present action does not embrace the Chancery cost. It seeks to enforce the award as a judgment. The sultandoes not in this action waive the privilege of soverignty. He can therefore only be subjected to the jurisdiction if either he has done so by appearing as palintiff in the chancery suit or by his subscription of the contract. .... An arbitrator is not a court, and therefore by appearing before the arbitrator he did not submit himself to the jurisdiction of the Court."

Lord Sumner in his speech said at page 822:

"The principle is well settled that a foreign soverign is not liable to be impleaded in the municipal courts of this country, but is subject to their jurisdiction only when he submits to it, whether involving it as a plaintiff or by appearing as a defendant without objection."

The rule is, there is nothing to prevent a foreign soverign form appearing as plaintiff in the English Courts; and if he does so appear, he is treated just like another litigant in such matters as discover of documts and security for costs; see Dicey and Morris on Conflict of Laws (9th Ed.) at page 144

Referring to the DUFF DEVELOPMENT case (supra) Lord Carson said at page 832:

The main contention, however of the appllant in the present case is that where ever a Soverign State has submitted to the jurisidction of our courts, it waives his privileges, and must for the purpose of doing justice be treated in exactly the same way. The general proposition upon this subject is I think, acurately sated in Westlake's private International Law, 6th Ed. 259 S. 192. But a foreign state or person entitled to the privilege of exterritoriality. Bringing an action in England, will be bound as a private corporation or person would bound to do complete justice to the defendant with regard to the matters comprised in the action, and will be subject to all cross-actions, counter-claims, defences and steps of procedure with as between private parties would be ocmpetant to the defendant for the purpose either of obtaining such complete justice or of defending himself against the plaintiff's claim.

The Learned Lord further said:

"It is to be observed that the main principle underlying the cases referring to the exercise of jursdiction by our Municipal Courts is that it was necessary that a soverign power should be ocnsidered to have waived its privileges and be treated as otherlitigants for the purpose of enabing complet justic to be done between the parties: see Kinf of Spain v Hullet 1 Dow & Clerk 333, 335, and alsoin the judgment of James L.T. in Strousberg v Republic of Costa Rica 44 L.T. 199.....

It is in applying this principles of equal treatment that the soverign submitting to the jurisdiction has been ordered to give security for costs and also security for damages; See The Newbattle 10 P. D.33."

It was recongised at common law that a diplomatic agent or other member of the diplomatic staff might waive immunity form civil and criminal jursdiction of the local courts, either by expressly consenting through his solicitor to the proceedigns, or by entering an apperance to the writ or by commencing proceedings as plaintiff. Since, however, the privilege is the privilege of the sending State, not of the individual diplomat, it was essential that consent to tis waiver should have been given by the sending State in the [p.95] case of proceedings agains the head of the mission, and by the head of the misison where the proceedings were against a subordinate member of the staff.

But these rules have been interpreted in this way. In the first place, the authority of the sending State ot waive the privilege is retained, and it is enacted that a waiver by the mission shall be demed to be a vaiver by that State. The words of this last provison are wide enough to embrace the case where the head of the mission waives his own privileges, not merely that of a subordinate member of the staff. it is enacted that a waiver must always be express: See Chershire's private International Law (9th Ed. at page 114).

It is now settled that —

"the initiaiton of proceedings by person enjoying immunity from jursdiction..... shall preclude him from invoking immunity from jurisdiction in respect of any counterclaim directly connected with the principal claim."

I think it is necessary to mention the case of the Newbattle (1885) P.D. 33 at page 34 when Butt J, in a brief judgment said—

"on the assumption which I have already mentioned the Louise Marie cannot be arrested, so that the case falls within S.34 of the Admiralty Act, 1861. Mr. Aspirall contended that though this case wa within the words of that though this case was within the words of that section it was not within the intention of it, but I think it is within both the wording and the intention. It has however, been contended that even so, a foreign government being plaintiff, and the matter being in the discretion of the Court, it could not order security to be given. But ther is authority from the other Divisions of the High Court ot show that the pradctice has been to oblige foreign government to give security for costs. By parity of reasoning I see no reson why a foreign government should not be ordered to give security for damages. The motion must therefor be dismissed with costs.

The plaintiff appealed against the decision of Butt J. In the appeal, Brett M.R.

"The present case is clearly within the words of the 34th Section of the Admiralty Court Act, 1961. It was argued by counsel for the plaintiffs that this order should not be mad upon a sovereign prince. There are some cases indeed in which orders ought not to be made against a sovereign prince. In the parliament Belge (5 P.D. 197), where the king of the Belgians appeared under protest, and where the question was whether the ship could be arrested, it was decided that being a ship of a foreign presence it could not.

[p.96]

It has always, however, been held that if a sovereign prince invokes the jurisdiction of the court as a plaintiff, the court can make all proper orders against him. The court has never hesitated to exercise its powers against a foreign government to this extent."

Cotton L.J. agreed with Brett M.R. and said at page 35 —

"..... "But when a government comes in as a suitor, it submits to the jurisdiction of the court and to all orders which may properly be made. Regard must be had to the fact that in this case the king of the Belgians is a sovereign prince, but the order is nevertheless a proper one."

In the same case at page 36, Lindley L.J, said:

“I agree that the order appealed against is right; a counter-claim seems to me to be equivalent to the cross action mentioned in the Admiralty Act, 1861, and this case falls within both the letter and the spirit of that Act:”

IN BULLET v KING OS SPAIN 1 Dow & Clark, Lord Lynhurst (Chancellor) said at page 490:

"Suppose the king of Spain had sent jewels here to be set, and the jeweler refused to restore them, would the king of Spain have no remedy at law to recover them or their value?

Why should he not have his remedy here as well as any other foreigner? When he sues here as a plaintiff the Court has complete control over him, and may hold him to all proper terms."

Most of the earlier cases have been based on the Diplomatic privileges Act 1708, which has always been interpreted as a declaratory Act. In HAMELEERS-SHENLEY v THE AMAZONE, RE THE AMAZONE (140) 1 All E.R. at page 269, it was held that the immunity was affected by the Diplomatic Privileges Act, 17 o8, which is confirmatory of, and does not supersede, the common law. The Editorial note in this case reads:

"The question here discussed is of importance, since if the attached obtained here privilege only under the Act of 1708, it might be that he could prove his claim to it only after the fact that the goods were his had been established. The difficult, however, does not arise, since it is held that Act does not exhaustively define the nature of diplomatic common law."

Slesser, L.J. in his judgment in that case said at page 271:

"The question of substance has already been considered, and, I think, decided in Parkinson V Potter (1885) 16 Q.B.D. 152: 11 Digest 538, 409, 53 L.T. 818 in which it is assumed and earlier cases have said the same thing –that the diplomatic privileges Act. 1708, is by no means exhaustive of the common law dealing with diplomatic immunity……."

I shall now turn to the Laws of Sierra Leone relating to diplomatic immunity. The Diplomatic Immunity and Privileges Act, No. 35 of 1961 came into force on the 27th day of April, 1961. With regard to immunities to Foreign Envoys and Consular officers, Section 3 of the Act enacts that

"Subject to the provisions of this Act every foreign envoy and every foreign consular officer, the members of the families of those persons, the members of their official or domestic staff, and the members of the families and of their domestic staff or the members of their official staff shall be accorded immunity from suit and legal process and inviolability of residence, official premises, and the official archives to the extent to which they were respectively so entitled I force in Sierra Leone immediately before the passing of this Act."

Subsection 2 provides that:

"Any writ in process sued forth or prosecuted before or after the coming into operation of this Act, whereby any foreign envoy authorized and received as such foreign envoy is la able to arrest or imprisonment, or his or her goods or chattels are liable to distress, seizure or attachment, shall be void."

The provisions of this section of Act No. 35 of 1961 are similar to Section 3 of the Diplomatic privileges Act, 1708. Section 3 of Act No. 25 of 1969 does not stipulate any regulation with regard to a foreign envoy who voluntarily submits to the jurisdiction of our Courts. However, Section 74 of the Courts Act No. 31 of 1965 enacts that –

[p.98]

"Subject to the provisions of the Constitution and any other enactment, the common law, the doctrine of equity, and the statues of general application in England on the 1st day of January 1880, shall be in force in Sierra Leone.

It seems to me from the authorities already referred to that a foreign envoy can be ordered to give security for cost, security for damages, and when he sues in this county as a plaintiff, the court has complete control over him, and may hold him to all proper terms. A government who comes in as a suitor, submits to the jurisdiction of the Court and to all orders which may properly be made

In the application before us, the respondent sued in the name of The Charge D' Affairs of the Republic of the Ivory Cost Embassy in Sierra Leone acting for and on behalf of the Republic of Ivory Coast. The respondent, by suing as a plaintiff, has submitted to the jurisdiction of our municipal Courts. A number of affidavits has been sworn to and filed by both parties in this matter. One of the affidavits was sworn to on the 11th day of May 1982 at 11 a.m. by Mamadou Torue, the Charge D. Affairs of the Republic of Ivory Coast.

In paragraphs 2 and 3 of the affidavit, he said:

"That I have submitted myself to the jurisdiction of the Court of Sierra Leone by instituting proceedings in the matter C.C.481/81 (1981 C. No. 6 and that in the light of paragraph two (2) supra of my affidavit and the undertaking signed by me on the 16th April 1982 pursuant to the Court of Appeal Judgment dated 15th April 1982, I consider myself bound by any decision of any competent Court in Sierra Leone in respect of the above mentioned matter.

The said undertaking is exhibited by me and marked MT2".

In Exhibit MT2 the respondent undertook by himself, his heirs and executors administrators and assigns to repay the amount of Le. 21.606.10 in the event of the applicants being successful in an action intituled Civ. Appeal 60/81.

[p.99]

Mr. Betts argued forcefully that if the amount is paid directly to the appellant, and that if the applicants are granted the orders sought in the motion before the High Court, and that the applicants subsequently become successful, it would be impossible to get a refund of money by the process of execution.

On the other hand Mr. Terry contended that he respondent having given an undertaking to refund the amount coupled with his submission to the jurisdiction of our Courts, no difficulty would be encountered in recovering the money.

The application before us is a matter of discretion, and in the area of judicial discretion, there are no binding precedents properly so-called, as each case must be dealt with its own merits. The money in this matter, as I understand, has been deposited into the account of the Master and Registrar. And Mr. Betts has told this Court that the applicants would be willing to pay any interest in the respondent is successful upon the determination of the case. Any order for a stay of execution was granted by the High Court after execution had been levied. This is a question with which I am deeply concerned, because there was no writ of Fi-fa in existence the execution of which can be stayed. There is also an application before this court seeking an order for special leave to appeal to this Court, leave to appeal having been refused by the Court of Appeal.

A survey of the matters referred to in the affidavits coupled with the arguments on both sides forces me to the conclusion that he reasons given by applicants for an order to stay of execution are untenable.

It must be noted that there is no pending process of execution.

[p.100]

Execution has been levied and the money had been deposited in the account of the Master and Registrra. The main point is, is there any pending of process of execution to be stayed? To my mind since there has been execution of the fiery facias, there is nothing before this Court to make an order in vain, In the circumstances, the application for Stay of execution is belated.

The case with regard to the application for special leave to appeal, in my opinion, presents the necessary future which would make it fit for the granting of special leave to appeal.

I agree with During, J.A. when he said –

“I think I am absolutely right in saying that our Courts must take judicial notice of the fact that the Ivory Cost is a friendly country. As far as Sierra Leone is concerned, it is not a hostile country of an enemy state in so far as the relationship between our country and the Ivory Cost is concerned and diplomatic relationship still exist between the two States. I see no reason why we should start with a presumption that the appellant would not behave in accordance with the comity as exists between the two States in a simple matter like this before us.”

The argument of the applicants is mainly, that the respondent would refuse to make a refund if the money is paid to him, and that they could not levy execution on his person or property. The question is why must we start with the assumption that the respondent, having submitted to the jurisdiction of our Courts and having given an undertaking to abide by any order or decision of the court? In my opinion, the argument of the applicants has failed to satisfy me that the reasons given [p.101] for the application for stay of execution of the fiery facias (which has already been executed) are not tenable grounds for granting the application. In the circumstance, the application for stay of execution is refused. In refusing the application for stay, I have also taken into consideration Section 102 subsection 3 of the Constitution Act No.12 of 1978.

Costs of the application to be paid the Respondents.

RULING DELIVERED ON THE 29TH DAY OF DECEMBER, 1983

BECCLES DAVIES, J.S.C.

In this application, the applicant seek to set aside certain orders made by Harding, J.S.C. (sitting as a single Justice of the Supreme court) on 22nd April, 1982.

The orders sought from this Court are—

"That an order be made by the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone constituted by three justices thereof pursuant to Rule 2(2) (b) and (3) of the Supreme court Rules Public Notice No. 1 of 1982 discharging OR reversing the Order dated 22nd April, 1982 of the Honourable Me. Justice C.A. Harding, J.S.C. presiding Justice sitting as a single Justice of the Supreme Court on the ground of non-compliance with Rule 2 (6) of the said Supreme Court Rules Public Notice No. 1 of 1982 discharging OR reversing the order dated 22nd April, 1982 of the Honourable Mr. Justice C.A. Harding, J.S.C. Presiding Justice sitting as a single Justice of the Supreme Court on the ground of non-compliance with Rule 2(6) of the said Supreme Court Rules public Notice No. 1 of 1982.

and

"That an Ode be made by the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone constituted by three Justices thereof pursuant to Rule 2 (b) and 2(3) of the [p.119] Supreme Court Rules 1982 aforementioned discharging or reversing the Order dated the 22nd April, 1982 of the Honourable Mr. Justice Cornelius Harding, J.S.C Presiding justice sitting as a single Justice of the Supreme Court on the ground that he said application of the Applicant/Appellants herein could NOT in law be mad ex parte without motion papers and accompanied documents in support of the application on the Respondent and /OR his solicitor herein."

A single Justice of the Supreme court is empowered to here matters "not involving the decision of a cause or matter before the Supreme Court." Such power however may be subject to review by a court of three Justices of the Supreme Court. The pertinent rule on the subject is Rule 2(2) (b). It provides—

2(2) "As single Justice of the Supreme Court may exercise any power vested in the Supreme Court not involving the decision of a cause or matter before the Supreme Court, save that—

(a) ……

(b) in civil matters, any order, direction or decision made or given in pursuance of the powers of the powers conferred by this section may be varied, discharged or reversed by the Supreme Court constituted by there Justices thereof.

The ground on which application to reverse or discharge the orders of Harding J.S.C is non-compliance by the Respondents herein, with Rule 2(6) of the Rules of the Supreme Court public Notice No. 1 of 1982.

The orders made by Harding J.S.C on 22 April 1982 were—

[p.120]

"That the applicants (now respondents) herein are granted an interim stay of all execution and/or proceedings or further proceedings on the orders of the Court of Appeal (1) dated 13th April, 1982 and (ii) made the 21st day of April, 1982, respectively pending the hearing and determination of the motion dated 22 April, 1982 filed in the Supreme Court seeking special leave to appeal against the said orders of the Court and stay of execution which said motion is to be heard on the 27th day of April, 1982.

(2) That pending the hearing of the said motion on the 27th day of April, 1982, the applicants deposit with the Registrar of the Supreme Court a Bankers' cheque (Draft) in the sum of Le 21,606.10 by noon on Friday 23rd April, 1982, to abide the decision of the Supreme court.

(3) This order to be served on the Respondents by 4 p.m today 22nd April, 1982."

Rule 2(6) relied upon by the Applicants in support of their contention provides—

"The Registrar of the Supreme Court shall give or cause to be given to the parties or their solicitors reasonable notice of the hearing of…… any application under these rules."

How valid than is the contention that there should have been service of the "the necessary motion papers and accompanied documents in support of the application" in accordance with Rule 2(6) quoted above? I do not read Rule 2(6) as requiring the Registrar to serve the motion papers and accompanying documents in respect of the application on the applicants. It requires that notice of the hearing of the application should be given to he parties or their Solicitors. We are all familiar with the form of Notice given by [p.121] Registrar of the hearing of appeals and applications. There is no validity in the applicant's contention. It is based on a misapprehension of Rule 2(6).

Assuming for a moment that there was validity in the applicant's contention, the orders made by Harding J.S.C. were interim orders which have now been superseded by permanent orders made by a Court of three Justices of the Supreme Court, that being so the contention had become academic

The application fails.

THE STATE — RESPONDENT

Ade Renner-Thomas, Esq., for the Appellants

M. T. Ngobeh, Esq., for the State (Respondent)

LIVESEY LUKE, C.J.:

The appellants were in November, 1980 tried in the High Court sitting in Freetown in respect of offences alleged to have been committed at Koidu Town in the Kono District in October, 1979.

The trial was by Williams J. with a jury. The Indictment on which the appellants were tried contained six counts. In the first count both appellants were charged with Robbery with Aggravation contrary to section 23(1)(a) of The Larceny Act 1916 as repealed and replaced by Act No. 16 of 1971 In the second, third and fourth counts, they were charged with Wounding with intent to Murder contrary to section 11 of The Offences against the Person Act, 1861. In the fifth count they were charged with Shooting with intent to Murder contrary to section 14 of The Offences against the Person Act 1861. And in the sixth count they were charged with Wounding with Intent contrary to section 18 of The Offences against the Person Act, 1861.

[p.96]

The trial concluded on 12th November, 1980 when the jury returned unanimous verdicts of Guilty against the 1st appellant in respect of the six counts and unanimous verdicts of Guilty against the 2nd appellant in respect of all six counts except the fifth count on which they returned a unanimous verdict of Not Guilty against him.

The 1st appellant was accordingly convicted in respect of all the six counts and the 2nd appellant was convicted in respect of all the six counts except count 5. The trial Judge passed sentence on the 1st appellant as follows:— Count 1-50 years imprisonment, Count 2-25 years imprisonment, Court 3-25 years, Count 4–25 years, 5-40 years and Count 6 - 25 years; and ordered that the sentences in Counts 1 and 5 were to run consecutively and those counts were to run concurrently with the sentences in Count 1 and 5. He passed sentence on the 2nd appellant as follows:— 25 years imprisonment on each of the five counts on which he was convicted, and ordered that the sentences in counts 1 and 2 were to run consecutively and those in counts 3, 4 and 6 were to run concurrently with the sentences in counts 1 and 2. The result therefore was that the first appellant was sentenced to serve a total of 90 years in jail whilst the 2nd appellant was sentenced to serve a total of 50 years in jail.

Both appellants appealed to the Court of Appeal against their respective convictions and sentences. The appeals were heard by the Court of Appeal (During, Warne and Navo JJ.A) in September, 1982. Judgment was delivered on 15th November, 1982, dismissing the appeals against convictions, and setting aside the sentences of imprisonment imposed in respect of the convictions on count 1 and substituting therefore a sentence of death against both appellants.

It is against that decision that the appellants have appealed to this Court.

The facts of this case make gruesome reading and it is necessary to set them out briefly. Hassan Hussein Srour (Hassan for short), a Business man and diamond dealer, lived with his wife and two daughters [p.97] at No. 31 Yengema Road Koidu Town in the Kono District. On the night of 25th October, 1979 Hassan and his family retired to bed at about 11 p.m. Early on the following morning, they were all aroused from sleep by a loud noise. Hassan got out of bed to find out what was happening. He discovered that the front door of his house was being hit from outside and that the door had already been cracked. He tried to hold on to the door while raising an alarm. His children were also shouting "thief". He then heard a gun shot from outside. The shot penetrated one of the windows near where the children were standing.

The front door was then broken open and five men forced their way into the house. All the five men were masked and armed within a shot gun, a pistol, a wooden pestle and a crow bar. They rushed at Hassan and demanded the key to his safe. He told them that he did not have the key with him. Whereupon the intruder armed with the matchet hit him on the, head" as a result of which he sustained a wound on the head and he fell to the ground with blood oozing from the wound. He became dizzy, but the intruders continued to demand the key. The intruder armed with the matchet and the one armed with the pestle rushed at the wife who was about 4 months pregnant at the time. The intruder holding the matchet attempted to hit the wife with it, but one of daughters (Rima) went to the mother's rescue. The intruder then turned on Rima and hit her on the head with the matchet. As a result she fell to the floor and became unconscious. The wife begged the intruders not to hit her husband, but she also suffered the same fate. They demanded the key to the safe from her and then proceeded to beat her all over her body with the pestle and to strike her on the head with the matchet, as a result of which she collapsed, and fell to the floor. The intruders then turned their attention to Hassan. One of the intruders held a pistol to his (Hassan's) back, whilst the others pushed him around the house hitting him all over the body with the pestle and the crow bar. In the process the intruders broke open the doors of three rooms in search of the safe.

They then broke open the door of a fourth room. That room was the office and the safe was located therein. The intruder armed with the crow bar then hit Hassan on his right side which caused him to fall to the ground. In his semi-conscious state he heard one of the intruder saying to the others that they should "shoot and finish" the occupants of the house. He soon became unconscious. Hassan's brother, one Khalil, who lived next door, heard the cries for help of his brother's family. He attempted to go to their rescue. He heard shooting and noise outside. He heard his brother's children shouting that they were being killed. He went outside and almost immediately he was shot at, as a result of which he sustained injuries in both legs. Fortunately, two police constables who were on patrol duty that night heard the sound of gun shots coming from the direction of Yengema Road. They informed another constable on patrol duty. They then boarded a vehicle and went to Yengema Road. They heard the sound of gun shot coming from 31, Yengema Road. They ordered the driver to stop the vehicle. The driver stopped the vehicle but left the headlights on. The constables then saw armed masked men dressed in black coming from 31 Yengema Road. They gave chase and succeeded in apprehending one of them, the 1st appellant. He was holding a gun while running but he dropped it before he was caught. He was still masked when he was apprehended. The constables took off the mask. The constables took the 1st appellant to 31, Yengema Road. A doctor was summoned to the scene. He arrived there within a short time. On entering the house he found that several of the inmates were wounded and also saw blood all over the house. He examined Hassan, his wife, his daughter (Rima) and Khalil. He found that all four of them were bleeding profusely from wounds recently inflicted. In his opinion the wounds sustained by each of the victims were very serious. All the four victims were taken to a private hospital in Kono where they received emergency treatment.

[p.99]

Later that day the doctor took the victims to Freetown by plane, and had them admitted at the Military Hospital at Wilberforce. All the four victims later went abroad for further medical treatment.

The main issues raised in this appeal may be summarized thus:—

(1) Whether the trial Judge had misdirected the jury in his summing up.

(2) Whether the Statement to the Police of the 2nd appellant (i.e. Ex. "O") was properly admitted in evidence at the trial.

(3) Whether the verdicts of the Jury against the 1st and the 2nd appellants were unreasonable and could not be supported having regard to the evidence.

(4) Whether the Court of Appeal was right in law in holding that the sentence prescribed by section 23(1)(a) of the Larceny Act, 1916 as amended by section 2 of Act No.16 of 1971 was a mandatory death sentence.

With regard to the first issue stated above, I think that it is sufficient to say that I find no merit in any of the misdirection’s alleged.

With regard to the second issue, the statement complained of was tendered in evidence by Police Detective Sergeant Sonny Albert Macfoy (P.W.12). He testified that he obtained a voluntary statement from the 2nd appellant on 12th April 1980. When he attempted to produce the statement, the trial Judge made the following record of what transpired:—

"At this stage the 2nd accused states that he did not make any statement. The 2nd accused is shown the statement and he identifies his signature thereon. He states further that he was forced to sign the document but he did not say anything to the witness.

[p.100]

Court: The statement is admitted in evidence and marked Exhibit "O". Statement read."

Mr. Renner-Thomas submitted that in view of what was stated by the 2nd appellant, the Learned Judge should have held a trial-within-a trial to determine whether the statement was admissible in evidence or not; and that the Judge not having adopted that course, the statement was wrongly admitted in evidence. It is true that there no formal objection by the 2nd appellant to the admissibility of the statement. This is understandable since he was not represented by counsel. But the failure of an accused person or his counsel to take a formal objection to the admissibility of a statement does not absolve a trial judge of his duty of determining the issue of voluntariness of a statement if it is raised. In the instant case the 2nd appellant did not only state that he did not make the statement but he also added that he was forced to sign the statement. In my opinion, those assertions by the 2nd appellant clearly raised the issue of voluntariness of the statement and consequently challenged its admissibility.

It is pertinent to refer to the State vs. Ahmed S.D. Turay & ors. Sc. Cr. App. No. 2/81 (judgment delivered on 13th July, 1982 — as yet unreported) where I said inter alia:—

"It has long been an established rule of English law that to render a confession by an accused person admissible at his trial the confession must be proved by the prosecution to be voluntary in the sense that it has not been obtained from him either by fear of prejudice or hope of advantage exercised or held out by a person in authority …….. That rule has been stated and restated over the years by the English Courts and has been transported from English soil and transplanted in many Commonwealth countries all over the globe, where in most cases, it has taken firm root ……. Where the admissibility of a state merit is challenged on the ground that it was not made voluntarily, it is the duty of the Judge to determine that issue. The proper course is for the judge to hold a trial within a trial (or voir dire) to try the issue."

[p.101]

It is also relevant to refer to Searaj Ajodha v. The State (1981) 3 W.L.R. 1, where the question for determination was almost identical to the issue now under consideration. The question was stated by Lord Bride of who delivered the opinion of the Board, follows at p. 5:—

"The primary question for their Lordship's decision in these appeals can be stated in its simplest form as follows: When the prosecution proposes to tender in evidence a written statement of confession signed by the accused and the accused denies that he is the author of the statement but admits that the signature or signatures on the document are his and claims that they were obtained from him by threat or inducement, does this raise a question of Law for decision by the judge as to the admissibility of the statement?"

His Lordships answered the question posed at pp. l0-12 of the Report. After citing the famous dictum of Lord Sumner in Ibrahim v. The ----- (1914) A.C. 599 at 609, and referring to Director of Public Prosecutions v. Ping Lin he said at pp. 10-11:—

"Given this deeply entrenched principle it seems to their Lordships clear beyond argument that, if the prosecution tender in evidence a statement in writing signed in one or more places by the accused, they are relying on the signature as the acknowledgment and authenticator by the accused of the statement as his own, and that from this it must follow that, if the voluntary character of the signature is challenged, this inevitably puts in issue the voluntary character of the statement itself.

In all cases where the accused denies authorship of the contents of a written statement but complains that the signature or signatures on the document which he admits to be his own were improperly obtained from him by threat or inducement, he is challenging the prosecution's evidence on both grounds and there is nothing in the least illogical or inconsistent in his doing so."

"It may be helpful if their Lordships indicate their understanding of the principles applicable by considering how the question should be resolved in four typical situations most likely to be encountered in practice …….

(2) The accused, as in each of the instant appeals, denies authorship of the written statement but claims that he signed it involuntarily. Again, for the reasons explained, the judge must rule on admissibility, and, if he admits the statement, leave all issues of fact as to the circumstances of the making and signing of the statement for the jury to consider and evaluate."

In the instant case, according to the Judges record of proceedings (quoted above) the 2nd appellant first denied the authorship of the contents of the statement and secondly alleged that his signatory appearing on the statement was improperly obtained from him by forces.

In my opinion the 2nd appellant was in those circumstances challenging the prosecution's evidence on both grounds, namely, the authorship of the statement and the voluntariness of his signature. In those circumstances, the trial Judge was under a duty to hold a trial—within — a trial to determine the issue of voluntariness of the statement and to rule thereon. It is beyond argument that the trial Judge [p.103] failed to follow that course which as indicated earlier, is based on well established principles of fundamental importance. In my judgment therefore the Learned Judge wrongly admitted the statement complained of.

I shall now deal with the third issue which can be disposed of very briefly. The evidence led by the prosecution has been summarized above. The 1st appellant gave evidence on oath at the trial denying participation in the crime. The jury returned a unanimous verdict of Guilty against him in respect of all the counts of the Indictment. In the course of their judgment, the Court of Appeal said inter alia that the evidence against the 1st appellant was overwhelming. I wholeheartedly agree. The evidence against the 1st appellant was indeed overwhelming. I therefore find no justification for this court to interfere with the verdict of the jury on any of the counts and the resultant convictions thereon. With regard to the 2nd appellant, apart from the statement complained of (i.e Ex. '0') the prosecution led no other evidence against him. He gave evidence on oath denying participation in the crime. I have already ruled that the statement (Ex. 'O') was wrongly admitted in evidence. Therefore its contents should not have been left to the jury at all. If the statement had not been left to the jury, then, as indicated earlier, there would have been no other evidence against the 2nd appellant on which to found a conviction on any of the counts laid against him in the Indictment. In the circumstances, the irresistible conclusion which I come to is that the verdicts against the 2nd appellant in respect of all the counts against him were unreasonable and could not be supported having regard to the evidence. It follows that the convictions against the 2nd appellant must be quashed, and the sentences set aside.

I shall now turn my attention to the fourth and final issue. Under Count I of the Indictment both appellants were convicted of Robbery with Aggravation contrary to section 23(1)(a) of the Larceny Act, 1916, as repealed and replaced by Act. No. 16 of 1971. Section 23 [p.104] of the Larceny Act, 1916, as repealed and replaced by Section 2 of the Imperial Statutes (Criminal Law) Adoption (Amendment) Act, 1971 (Act No. 16 of 1971) reads as follows:—

"23(1) Every person who—

(a) being armed with any offensive weapon or instrument, or being together with one other person or more, robs, or assaults with intent to rob any person;

(b) robs any person and, at the time of or immediately before or immediately after such robbery, uses any personal violence to any person:

shall be guilty of felony and on conviction thereof liable to suffer death.

(2) Every person who robs any person shall be guilty o£ felony and on conviction thereof liable to imprisonment for life.

(3) Every person who assaults any person with intent to rob shall be guilty of felony and on conviction thereof liable to imprisonment £or a term not exceeding ten years..

As stated earlier the trial judge sentenced the appellants to terms bf imprisonment in respect of the convictions under Count 1 of the Indictment. But the Court of Appeal, as stated earlier, set aside the sentences of imprisonment imposed by the trial judge and passed sentences of' death on both appellants. The reason the Court of appeal gave for taking such an extreme course was that in the view, the sentence prescribed for offences against the amended section 23(1)(a) of' the Larceny Act, 1916 was a mandatory death sentence, and that there was no discretion to pass a sentence imprisonment.

[p.105]

It seems to me that the course adopted by the Court of Appeal raises questions of Constitutional law and of Interpretation of Statutes. The Constitutional question may be stated thus: Is the Court of Appeal bound by its own previous decisions. The answer to the question is provided by section 107(3) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, 1978. The sub-section is in the following terms:—

"Subject to the provisions of sub-sections (1) and (2) of section 101 of this Constitution, the Court of Appeal shall be bound by its own previous decisions and all courts inferior to the Court of Appeal shall be bound to follow the decision of the Court of Appeal on questions of law."

The provisions of subsections (1) and (2) of section 101 of the Constitution are not relevant for the purposes of this appeal.

Mr. Renner Thomas referred us to a previous decision of the Court of Appeal on the issue, namely Mohamed Sorie Fornah & 14 others vs. The State C.A. Cr. App. 31/74 judgment delivered on 30th April, 1975 (as yet unreported). He submitted that that decision was binding on the Court of Appeal. In that case the Court of Appeal construed section 3(1) of the Treason and State Offences Act, 1963.

The subsection, so far as relevant, reads:—

"3(1) A person is guilty of treason and shall on conviction be liable to suffer death who either within Sierra Leone or elsewhere ……"

The Court of Appeal in that case by a majority, held that the words "shall be liable" in the subsection import a discretion; and the sentence of death under section 3 of the Treason and State Offences Act, 1963 is discretionary and not mandatory; and that a judges as a discretion as to whether to pass the death sentence or not. The words construed by the Court of Appeal in Fornah's case were "shall on conviction be liable to suffer death." The words which the Court of Appeal had to construe in the instant case were "shall …….. on conviction thereof liable to suffer death." It is quite clear to me [p.106] that the words used in both statutes are identical and indistinguishable. In those circumstances, the previous decision of the Court of Appeal was binding on it in the instant appeal. And the fact that the previous decision was a majority decision does not in the least detract from its binding force. It is not clear whether the decision in the Fornah's case was brought to the attention of the Court of Appeal during the hearing of the appeal in the instant case. Be that as it may the decision in Fornah's case was still binding on it. It may be argued that in England from where we derive our system of jurisprudence, the Court of Appeal although normally bound by its previous decision, may in certain exceptional circumstances depart from it. The position has been authoritatively stated in Young v. Bristol Aeroplane Co. Ltd. (1944) K.B. 718 where the exceptions are spelt out and in Miliangos v. Geo Frank (Textiles) Ltd. (1975) 1 Q.B. 487 C.A. It is also well settled in England that in criminal appeals, the Court of Appeal is not limited to the exceptions specified in Young v. Bristol Aeroplane Co. Ltd. in departing from a previous decision. It is now accepted that if the Court of Appeal is of the opinion that the law has been either misapplied or misunderstood in a decision and that on the strength of the decision an accused person has been sentenced and imprisoned, it is that duty of the Court to reconsider its previous decision. Thus in Rex. v. Taylor (1950) 2 K.B. 368 C.A. Lord Goddard CJ, delivering the judgment of the Court of Criminal Appeal consisting of seven judges, said inter alia at p.371:—

"I desire to say a word bout the reconsideration of a case by this court. The Court of Appeal in civil matters usually considers itself bound by its own, previous decisions or by decisions of a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction …… The court however has to deal with questions involving the liberty of the subject, [p.107] and if it finds, on reconsideration, that in the opinion of a full court assembled for that purpose, the law has been either misapplied or misunderstood in a decision which it has previously given, and that, on the strength of that decision, an accused person has been sentenced and imprisoned, it is the bounden duty of the court to reconsider the earlier decision with a view to see whether that person had been properly convicted. The exceptions which apply in civil cases ought not to be the only ones applied in such a case as the present, ……."

This principle was restated in R v. Gould (1968) 1 All E.R. 849 C.A. where Diplock L.J. (as he then was) said inter alia at p.851:—

"In its criminal jurisdiction, which has been inherited from the Court Criminal Appeal, the Court of Appeal does not apply the doctrine of stare decisis with the same rigidity as in its civil jurisdiction. If on due consideration we were to be of opinion that the law had been either misapplied or misunderstood in an earlier decision of this Court or its predecessor the Court of Criminal Appeal, we should be entitled to depart from the view as to the law expressed in the earlier decision notwithstanding that the case could not be brought within any of the exceptions laid down in Young v. Bristol Aeroplane Co. Ltd. as justifying the Court of Appeal in refusing to follow one of its own decisions in a civil case."

Even if the exceptions to the general principle just stated are applicable in this jurisdiction, the Court of Appeal can only Over-rule a previous decision if satisfied that the case comes within one [p.108] of the recognised exceptions. In the instant case the Court did not even consider or even refer to the previous decision, nor did they give any consideration to the question whether the case came within one of the recognised exceptions. In my opinion the circumstances do not show that any of the recognised exceptions were present in this case to justify the Court departing from its previous decision.

But it is doubtful whether the exceptions are now applicable to our Court of Appeal.

In my opinion sub-section (3) of section 107 of the Constitution is quite clear and unambiguous in its terms. It says in simple language that the Court of Appeal shall be bound by its own previous decisions. It seems that that provision admits of no exception. And according to its terms it is applicable to all previous decisions, civil as well as criminal. I think that this view is further re-inforced when the subsection is contrasted with subsection (2) of section 102 of the Constitution. That subsection provides as follows:—

“(2) The Supreme Court may, while treating its own previous decision as normally binding, depart from a previous decision when it appears right so to do; and all other courts shall be bound to follow the decisions of the Supreme Court on questions of law."

It seems clear therefore that while the Supreme Court may in certain circumstances depart from its own previous decision, the Court of Appeal may not. In view of the position occupied by the Court of Appeal in our hierarchy of courts, it is of the utmost importance that its decisions on the same question of law be consistent. The Justices sit in panels and the panels change from time to time, and sometimes from case to case. If each panel is allowed to reach its own decision on the same point of law, in total disregard of a previous decision of the Court, then the result would be chaos. Conflicting decisions on the same point of law would be given by the same court resulting in uncertainty in the law. Such a state of [p.109] affairs would not be good for the development of the law or for the public that come before the courts for redress in both civil and criminal matters. I think that it is at the utmost importance, that the Judges of the Court of Appeal should loyally follow not only previous decisions of the Supreme Court but also previous decision, of the Court of Appeal; even if they disagree with the previous decisions, unless they can distinguish them from the case before them. In this connection it is pertinent to recall the words of Lord Simon of Glaisdale in Farrell v. Alexander (1977) A.C. 59 at P. 92:—

"The Court of Appeal occupies a crucial position in our judicial system. Most appeals stop there. It handles an immense volume of business. It sits in a number of divisions. Unless it follows its own decisions, as the law directs, litigation will be a gamble on which division of the court is to handle the appeal and what Law will be declared there. Most actions which are threatened or begun are settled by agreement — to the great advantage of the public generally and the litigants in particular. They are settled on the basis of a prognostication of the applicable law. If the law becomes unpredictable, changing from court to court and from case to case, it will be failing the public."

In my judgment therefore the Court of Appeal erred in failing to fallow the decision in Fornah's case which was binding on it. The court was therefore wrong in holding that the sentence prescribed by section 23(1)(a) of the Larceny Act, 1916 as amended by section 2 of Act No. 16 of 1971 was mandatory and in setting aside the sentences of imprisonment passed by the trial Judge and in imposing sentences of death.

The Supreme Court is of course not bound by the decision in Fornah’s case. And the 1st Appellant has appealed against sentence.

Therefore it is necessary to consider the question of interpretation of Statute raised by the course adopted by the Court of Appeal. The question may be formulated thus: Is the sentence prescribed by section 23(1)(a) of the Larceny Act, 1916 as amended by section 2 of Act No.16 of 1971 a mandatory death sentence or does a trial judge have a discretion in imposing the death sentence or not? In order to determine this question, it is necessary to construe the subsection. The subsection has been set out above. In my opinion, the important words as far as the penalty is concerned, are "shall be 'liable. It seems to me that the word "liable must have some meaning and significance in the context in which it appears. It could not have been used by the draftsman in vain. It must be read with the other words in the context.

In my opinion the plain and ordinary meaning of the word "liable" is "exposed to possibility or risk," "exposed or open to." Therefore when it is provided that a convicted person shall be liable to a specified punishment, it means that he runs the risk of that sentence being passed on him, or he exposes himself to or leaves himself open to that sentence. It does not mean that the sentence will be passed on him. He merely exposes himself to that sentence, and runs the risk of or opens himself to that sentence being passed on him. It will be useful to refer to two English Cases in which phrases the where word "liable" appeared were construed. In Jones v. Young (1884) 27 Ch. D.652, North J. said inter alia at p. 55:—

" …… but when the words are not 'shall be forfeited' but 'shall be liable to be forfeited' it seems to me that what was intended was not that there should be an absolute forfeiture, but a liability to forfeiture, which might or might not be enforced."

In Re Loftus-Otway (1895) 2 Ch. 235, Stirling J. said inter alia at p. 240:—

"The words are not merely 'be deprived' but 'be deprived or be liable to be deprived' and there is a contrast between being deprived and being liable to be deprived. The words "be liable to be deprived' are meant to add something to that which goes before …….. It seems to me that the latter words must be read as including acts which, so far as the person who committed them is concerned would put it out of his power to have any voice in the matter, and would leave it with a Court of Justice to say whether or not he is to be deprived"

In my opinion therefore the use of the word “liable" imports the element of discretion. It will be helpful to refer to a few statutory provisions in which he word "liable" is used. Section 24 of the Larceny Act, 1916 provides that a person convicted of the offence created by that section (i.e. Sacriledge) "shall be…..... liable to penal servitude for life" (emphasis supplied). Also section 25 of the same Act provides that a person convicted of the offence created by that section (i.e. Burglary) "shall be……. liable to penal servitude for life" (emphasis supplied). It should be noted that "panel servitude" has been abolished and in its place should be substituted "life imprisonment". I do not think that there as any dispute that the courts in England as well as in Sierra Leone have never considered the life imprisonment prescribed in those two section as mandatory. Trial Judges have always had a discretion as to whether a person convicted of those offences should be sentenced to life imprisonment or to a lesser term of imprisonment. Similarly of a statute provides that a person convicted "shall be liable" to ten years imprisonment, it is not mandatory that the person convicted should be sentenced to the ten years imprisonment prescribed by the statute. The trial judge will have a discretion as to [p.112] whether he imposes the maximum sentence or a lesser sentence. In my opinion therefore, when a statute provides that a convicted person be liable to suffer death", what it means is that the convicted runs the risk of the death sentence being passed on him. It does not mean that he must be sentenced to death. In my opinion the "liable" in that context confers a discretion on the trial Judge as to whether the death sentence should be imposed or not. This is in accordance with the policy of our system of law which has always allowed trial Judges a wide discretion in imposing sentence except in those cases where the sentence is fixed by law. In Halsbury's Laws of England 3rd Ed. Vol. 10 para. 888 pp.486-487, it is stated:—

"In all crimes except those for which the sentence of death must be pronounced a very wide discretion in the matter of fixing the degree of punishment is allowed to the judge who tries the case.

The policy of the law is, as regards most crimes, to fix a maximum penalty, which is intended only for the worst cases, and to leave to the discretion of the judge the determination of the extent to which in a particular case the punishment awarded should approach to or recede from the maximum limit.

The exercise of this discretion is a matter of prudence and not of law ……"

On the other hand where the Legislature intends to fix a mandatory punishment, it uses words which put it beyond doubt that that is the intention. For instance if it is provided that a convicted person "shall be sentenced to ten years imprisonment" or "shall be sentenced to death", there could be no doubt that a mandatory sentence of ten years imprisonment was intended in former case, and a mandatory sentence of death was intended in the latter case. A reference to a few statutes should illustrate this point.

[p.113]

Section 2 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 provides as follows—

"Upon every conviction for murder the court shall pronounce the sentence of death ……."

Section 2 of the Piracy Act, 1837 provides inter alia that a convicted person:

"shall suffer death as a felon"

And section 1 of the Dockyards etc. Protection Act, 1772 provides inter alia that a convicted person:

"shall suffer death, as in case of felony……."

In my considered opinion each of these three statutory provisions makes it abundantly clear that the punishment for the respective offences is death. In the one case, the court "shall pronounce the sentence of death", in the other two cases, the convicted person pass the death sentence in each of those cases. The punishment is mandatory and the judge does not have any discretion in the matter.

In my opinion therefore the words "shall suffer death" or "shall pronounce the sentence of death" provide for a mandatory death sentence, whilst the words "shall be liable to suffer death" provide for a discretionary death sentence. In the former case the trail Judge must pass the death sentence. But in the latter case, the Judge has a discretion whether to impose the death penalty or not. Two East African cases which support this view were cited in the majority judgment in the Fornah's case. I need refer to only one of them, namely Oboya v. Uganda (1967) E.A. 752 where the East African Court of Appeal held inter alia that the words "shall be liable on conviction to suffer death" provide a maximum sentence only and that the courts have a discretion to impose a sentence of death or of imprisonment. Sir Clement De Lestang V.P. who delivered the judgment of the Court said inter alia at p.754:—

[p.114]

"We consider such to be the correct approach to the construction of the words 'shall be liable on conviction to suffer death' especially when contrasted with the words of s.184 which are "shall be sentenced to death." Consequently construing s.273(2) in the ordinary meaning of the word used therein free from authority we would have no hesitation in holding that the sentence of death which it prescribes, is discretionary and not mandatory. To hold otherwise would be to give an unnatural meaning to the words of the section and we see no compelling reason to do so".

In my judgment therefore the proper construction to be put on section 23(1)(a) of the Larceny Act, 1916 as amended by section 2 of Act No.16 of 1971 is that it provides for a discretionary death sentence. It gives the judge a discretion as to whether to pass the death sentence or not. Of course, in exercising his discretion, the Judge would have to take into consideration all the relevant circumstances of the case. If the Judge decides not to impose the death penalty he will have to decide, in the exercise of his discretion, what other punishment, warranted in law, to pass and the extent of such punishment. So if he decides to impose a custodial sentence, he will have to decide the length of such sentence.

In the instant case, the trial Judge imposed a custodial sentence. It has not been suggested that he exercised his discretion wrongly in imposing a custodial sentence. Indeed, Mr. N'gobeh, learned counsel who appeared for the State, conceded that section 23(1)(a) of the Larceny Act 1916 as amended confers a discretion on a trial Judge as to whether to pass the death sentence or not. And he did not argue or even suggest that the trial\ Judge did not exercise his discretion properly in deciding not to pass the death, sentence. However, Mr. Renner-Thomas submitted that the custodial sentences imposed on the 1st Appellant were excessive. As stated earlier the trial Judge sentenced the 1st Appellant to serve a total of 90 years in jail.

I think that it is well-settled that an appellate court will generally not interfere with the sentence passed at the trial unless the sentence is one not warranted in law or unless it is manifestly excessive or wrong in principle. There is no suggestion that the sentence passed in this case was not warranted in law or was wrong sentence in principle. The complaint of the 1st Appellant is that the sentence passed by the trial Judge is manifestly excessive. The age of the 1st Appellant is not known, but there is no dispute that he is an adult. Taking into consideration the normal life expectancy and even allowing for remission of sentence, the 1st Appellant would in all probability die in jail before he completes the sentence passed on him. The sentence imposed would in these circumstances amount to more than life imprisonment. Taking all the circumstance into consideration, there could be no doubt that the sentence imposed is manifestly excessive. I therefore think that this is a proper case in which this court should interfere with the sentence.

In the result I would dismiss the appeal o£ the 1st Appellant against conviction, I would allow his appeal against sentence and would in all the circumstances reduce the sentence passed on Count to 30 years imprisonment, and on each of the other Counts to 21 years imprisonment, all the sentences to run concurrently from the date of conviction.

I would allow the appeal of the 2nd Appellant against conviction on all the Counts in respect of which he was convicted, quash the convictions, and set aside the sentences imposed on him.

RULING

BECCLES DAVIES, J.S.C.:

This is an application seeking special leave to appeal to this Court, a stay of execution of the ruling of the Court of Appeal dated 14th February 1984 and/or a stay of all proceedings in this matter in the High Court, and any further or other reliefs as may be deemed expedient by this Court.

The respondents Mr Abdul M. Iscandri had filed an election petition on 17th May 1982 in the High Court against the election of the applicant. Counsel for the applicant took steps to set aside the petition on several grounds.

His application was heard and dismissed by Mr. Justice Bankole Thompson. The applicant then obtained leave to appeal against the Order of the High Court. The appeal was heard by the Court of Appeal which dismissed it on 14th February 1984. An application for leave to appeal to this Court was made to the Court of Appeal and was refused on 2nd April 1984.

The applicant now applies for special leave to appeal. We have gone through the papers in this matter. We are grateful to Counsel for their able arguments. We are not satisfied that this is a proper case in which our discretion to grant special leave can be exercised. The application is refused.

RULING

HARDING. J.S.C.:

The respondents in proceedings instituted in the High Court obtained judgment, with costs to be taxed, on 3rd February, 1984 against the applicant for "the sum of U.S. Dollars 129,566.15 or Le323,915.38 plus interest thereon at the rate of 18% from the 8th day of September, 1980 until the date of judgment". On 10th February, 1984, the applicant through his solicitor, filed a Notice of Appeal against the said judgment in the Court of Appeal, and on the following day i.e., 11th February, he applied to the Court of Appeal for a stay of execution of the judgment of the High Court pending the hearing and determination of the appeal. On 27th February, 1984; the Court of Appeal refused the application for a stay; likewise it turned down a subsequent application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court against the order of refusal of stay.

The applicant has now applied to this Court for the following Orders:

[p.89]

"(i) An Order granting the applicant special leave to appeal against the order of the Court of Appeal contained in its Ruling of 27th February, 1984;

(ii) An Order granting a stay of execution and all further proceedings of the judgment and order of the High Court dated February 3, 1984 already appealed against by Notice of Appeal filed in the Registry of the Court of Appeal on 10th February, 1984, pending the hearing and determination of the said appeal;

(iii) An Order that the costs of and occasioned by this application may be costs in the intended appeal."

I have listened carefully to the arguments of counsel on both sides and read the various affidavits and exhibits thereto filed herein. As regards the first order applied for, I do not think that this is a proper case calling for the exercise of my discretion to grant special leave; accordingly, I would refuse special leave to appeal to this Court. Special leave to appeal to this Court having been refused it necessarily follows that no order for a stay of execution of the judgment can be ordered by this Court.

I would dismiss the application with costs to the respondents,

AWUNOR-RENNER. J.S.C.:

I have arrived at a different conclusion from that reached by my learned brothers on the question of granting special leave to appeal to this Court in this matter.

The applicant applied to this Court on the 24th day of March, 1984 for the following Orders on a Notice of Motion dated the 24th March, 1984.

(1) An Order granting the applicant special leave to appeal against the Order of the Court of Appeal contained in its ruling of the 27th February, 1984.

(2) An Order granting a stay of execution and all further proceedings of the judgment an order of the High Court dated February 3, 1984 already appealed against by Notice of Appeal on 10th February, 1984, pending the hearing and determination of the said appeal.

(3) An order that the costs of and occasioned by this application may be costs in the intended appeal.

The said Notice of Motion contains the grounds upon which special leave to appeal is sought.

A short history of this matter discloses that on the 3rd day of February, 1984, the High Court gave judgment and ordered the applicant herein to pay the sum of Le.323.915.38 plus interest thereupon at the rate of 18% from the 8th day of September, 1980 until the date of the said judgment to the Respondent herein.

On the 11th February, 1984 the applicant applied to the Court of Appeal for a stay of execution of the said judgment of the High Court dated 3rd February, 1984. In a ruling delivered on February 27th 1984 the Court of Appeal refused the application for a stay.

I think that it would be convenient for me at this stage to set out the ruling in question. I quote.

[p.91]

SHORT, J.A.

This is an application by T.S. Johnson Esq., of Counsel for the Appellant/Applicant herein for an order granting a stay of execution of the judgment and order of the High Court contained in the decision of Mr. Justice William A.O. Johnson Judge, dated the 3rd day of February, 1984. The judgment referred to amounts to the payment of the sum of U.S. dollars 129,566.15 or Le.323,915.38. Rule 28 of the Appeal

Court Rules is bare. Order 42 rule 19(1) of the White Book states inter alia "where a judgment is given or an order made for the payment of money by any person and the Court or judge is satisfied an application made at the time of the judgment or order or at any time thereafter by the judgment debtor or other party liable to execution that there are special circumstances which renders it inexpedient to enforce the judgment or order or that the judgment debtor is unable from any cause to pay the money, then the Court or judge may order stay of execution of the judgment or order by Writ of Fieri Facias etc."

It would appear that the only grounds on which under the above rule the Court can stay execution on a judgment debt or order for payment of money are either that there are special circumstances which render it inexpedient to enforce the judgment or order or that the judgment debtor is unable from any cause to repay the money. Neither the affidavit of Thomas Sigismund Johnson sworn to on the 11th day of February nor the affidavit of Donald Marius Alison Macaulay sworn to on the 21st day of February, 1984 discloses any special circumstances which might render it inexpedient to enforce the judgment or order or that the judgment debtor is unable from any cause to pay the money.

[p.92]

In our view there are no supporting grounds and the application for a stay of execution is refused with costs assessed at Le.l00 to be paid by the appellant/applicant to the Respondent On the 5th March, 1984 a notice of Motion was filed in the Court of Appeal for leave to appeal against the order contained in the ruling of the 27th February, 1984.

The application for leave to appeal was refused on the 19th March, 1984. It was against that refusal for leave to appeal that the applicant has now applied inter alia, to this Court for special leave to appeal.

The rules applicable to an application for special leave to appeal and which ought to be considered are contained in Rules 6(2) of the Supreme Court Rules 1982. Rules 7 and 8 also of the Supreme Court Rules 1982 and Sections 103 Sub-section (1)c and 103 sub-sec (2) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.12 of 1978.

Counsel for the applicant in his argument for special leave to appeal urged this Court to consider the question of granting special leave. He claimed that his reasons are contained in his notice of motion and further stated that apart from that the decisions of the Court of Appeal are binding on itself and that was one reason why he was asking that the ruling of the Court of Appeal of 27th February, 1984 should not be allowed to stand.

Mr. Gooding on the other hand contended that before special leave is granted there must be a substantial question of law which must be a serious question of law and cited several cases to support his preposition. He also referred us to the Supreme Court Rules and the Constitution as regards the powers of the Supreme Court to grant special leave to appeal.

Sec. 6(1)c of the Supreme Court Rules states as follows —

[p.93]

"An appeal shall lie from the judgment decree or order of the Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court with leave of the Court of Appeal in any other cause or matter, civil or criminal where the Court of Appeal is satisfied that the case involves a substantial question of law or is of public importance."

Section 6(2) of the Supreme Court Rules states as follows—

"Notwithstanding the provisions of the preceding sub rules (as contained in Rule 6 sub rule 1, a, b, c, d, e and g) the Supreme Court shall have power to entertain any application for special leave to appeal in any cause or matter civil or criminal to the Supreme Court and to grant such leave accordingly."

Apart from the fact that Rule 6(1)c states under what conditions leave can be granted to appeal to the Supreme Court. In no part of Rule 6(2) can I find what conditions should be satisfied before special leave to appeal can be granted by the Supreme Court. To me it appears as if the powers conferred by this section to the Supreme Court to grant special leave is quite an extensive one.

In my view I think that as regards the question or special leave to appeal to this Court the trouble arose from the ruling or the Court of Appeal on the 27th day of March 1984 when it refused to grant the stay of execution applied for, Counsel for the applicant is contending that it was made under the wrong rule, Order 42 rule 19 of the English Rules when it should have been made under Order 58 rule 12. He further stated that Order 42 rule 19 does not apply in this instance.

In my opinion it is a short point but one or importance and I think that in such bases it is extremely desirable for this Court to make some sort or pronouncement on the issue or granting special leave or the guidance of applicants, so as to inform them as to what the proper yardstick is.

[p.94]

The ruling of Short J. A. on the 27th March 1984, contains the refusal to grant a stay of execution and there is no doubt that he was influenced by the provisions of Order 42 rule 19 of the English Rules this in my opinion is a prima facie case that an error has been made on a question of law which is likely to affect other members of the public until it is either set aside or reversed. I would therefore hold that this is a proper case for which special leave to appeal ought to be granted.

In my opinion if I am wrong in the view I have expressed as regards the question of special leave to appeal then it is the way I see it and nothing more.

As regards the application for a Stay of Execution I express no opinion as to whether this order ought to be granted or otherwise.

I would allow the application for special leave to appeal and make no order as to costs.

JUDGMENT

HARDING, J.S.C:

The appellant was convicted by the High Court at Freetown on 25th February, 1979 by C.S. Davies, J.A. (sitting as Judge alone) on an Indictment which, inter alia, charged him and two others with the offence of Causing by False Pretences a Valuable Security to be delivered to Another Contrary to Section 32(1) of the Larceny Act, 1916. At the material time he was the Provincial Secretary, Northern Province and was stationed at Makeni. It was his responsibility to see that certain Government Quarters and Buildings, in respect of which notice to re-wire had been issued by the Senior District Manager Sierra Leone Electricity Corporation, be electrically wired and for this purpose he secured the services of one Sulaiman Jalloh who was called as a witness for the prosecution (hereinafter referred to as "P.W.28"). Jalloh, although he had demonstrated that he was a competent electrician was however not licensed, and in order to be able to undertake the exercise he was required to do, had to come down to Freetown and negotiate with one Francis Wonnie, a Licensed Electrical Contractor, to be appointed his representative in Makeni. Wonnie gave him letter-heads, electricity forms, letter of authorisation and a stamp all of which he showed to the appellant who then expressed [p.81] approval and informed him that when he was ready he would send for him. All this happened towards the end of 1975. Subsequently, the appellant sent for Jalloh and asked him if he could make estimates and Jalloh replied that he could not read or write. Appellant then informed him that he had received re-wiring notice for two Government Quarters at Teko and wanted to know how much he would charge for doing the job. Jalloh could not say until after he had seen what was to be done. He was duly shown the quarters and he enquired from the appellant if he was to provide the materials and when he was told no he then made his charges.

Eventually a bargain was struck for the sum of Le.200 for each quarter. On the following morning he collected the necessary materials from the appellant's quarters and proceeded to do the job, on the completion of which he reported to the appellant. Appellant then asked him for the electricity form (i.e. the completion form) and he handed him not only the forms but letter heads as well, whereupon appellant told him he was going to have the work inspected. Appellant later told him that he had received the inspection report and that the work had been done satisfactorily, Jalloh said that he "prepared a bill". Appellant later asked him to check from the chief clerk if the bill was ready and when he was told that it was not, he went and reported to the appellant and he was requested by him to come again. Subsequently the appellant's landrover driven by one Tejan Jalloh (since deceased) went for him and he was taken to the appellant's office whereupon appellant informed him that his bill was ready; he then produced the bill and he (Jalloh) signed and stamped it. A few days later appellant sent for him and informed him that the voucher had been prepared and that he should go to the Sub-Treasury and collect the cheque. The accountant, one J.A. Harding, after ascertaining his identity, asked him to sign the voucher and to stamp it with his stamp. The cheque was then handed over to him to take to the bank for encashment. After the cashing of the cheque Jalloh returned with the money to the appellant who after checking it asked him how much he had to pay him. He replied that it was Le.400 and appellant [p.82] counted out this amount and gave it to him plus Le.20 more in appreciation for the excellent performance of the job, He stated that the amount he collected from the bank on that occasion was over a thousand leones. It is worth mentioning that on each occasion that appellant sent for Jalloh it was his driver Tejan Jalloh that he would send and it was this same driver who went with him to the Sub-Treasury and the bank and returned with him to the appellant with the money.

Other re-wiring jobs were done by Jalloh on the instruction of the appellant not only in Makeni, but in Magburaka, Kabala, Port Loko and Kambia and in each case the same procedure was followed — that is, the bills would be prepared in the appellant1s office on the instructions of the appellant, he (Jalloh) would Sign and stamp them and leave them with the appellant who would later notify him when the vouchers were ready and he would be accompanied by a member of appellant's staff to the Sub-Treasury to collect the cheques and to take them to the bank and to return to the appellant with the money which was always in excess of what was due him. However, as far as he (Jalloh) was concerned appellant always paid him what was due him. Materials for the various jobs were provided by the appellant. Jalloh received final payment for all the jobs he undertook at the instance of the appellant at about the end of 1976 when appellant was due to go on leave.

The Particulars of the Offence for which the appellant was convicted alleged that he (and two others named)

"on or about the 9th day of April, 1976 at Makeni in the Northern Province of Sierra Leone, with intent to defraud, caused a valuable security, that is to say a Barclays Bank (Sierra Leone) Ltd. cheque No.011776 dated 9th day of April, 1976 for the sum of Le.5,332.45 to be delivered to Sulaiman Jalloh by John Abesodun Harding, Sub-Accountant attached to the Sub-Treasury Makeni aforesaid by falsely representing that the said sum was due and payable by the Republic to the said [p.83] Sulaiman Jalloh in respect of expenses incurred and services rendered to the said Republic."

Among the many witnesses called by the prosecution was one I.B.S. Kamara, Staff Superintendent D.O.'s Office, Makeni (hereinafter referred to as "P.W.32") who testified that from 1st July, 1975 to 1st July, 1976, he was Clerk/Confidential typist in the Provincial Secretary's Office, Makeni, and that he worked under the appellant. He stated that as confidential typist he was in charge of typing documents pertaining to confidential and secret matters and that he also typed other documents which were not confidential or secret that were handed to him by the Provincial Secretary. He stated that he prepared bills from manuscripts supplied to him by the appellant in appellant's own handwriting after which appellant would return the typed bills duly signed and stamped by P.W.28 as well as by appellant himself. Vouchers in respect of these bills were made out in the name of P.W.28 by the Finance Clerk. He further went on to say that on the instructions of the appellant he would destroy the manuscripts when the typed bills were received by him duly signed by the appellant.

It is the prosecution's case that the appellant acted fraudulently, thereby causing Government to incur our extra expenses by preparing false documents, to wit inflated bills, which he knew to be false and thereby inducing the accountant in the Sub-Treasury in Makeni to part with Government monies which were in his custody.

The appellant on his part denied that he ever prepared the bills in manuscript and got P.W.32 to type them before calling on P.W.28 to sign and stamp them. He suggested that P.W.32 assisted P.W. 28 by typing the bills during official working hours, that both of them were very friendly and that they were both lying.

As hereinbefore stated the appellant was convicted of the offence. He appealed to the Court of Appeal and, as far as this conviction is concerned, the relevant ground is as follows:—

"That the learned Trial Judge erred in law and in fact in that he failed to direct himself on the law relating to accomplices with particular reference to the evidence of P.W.28 and P.W.32."

The Court of Appeal in upholding the appellant's conviction held that P.W.28 was neither an accomplice nor a witness who had to serve or an interest of protect, and hence the trial was not obliged to warn himself about the danger of conviction the uncorroborated evidence of that witness; however, as regards p.w.32 it held that he was a witness who had a purpose of his own serve", but applied the provisions of Sec. 58(2) of the Courts Act, No. 31 of 1965 — on the ground that "the totality of the evidence is such that no substantial miscarriage of justice was done to the appellant by convictions.

The appellant has now appealed to this Court on the following grounds:—

"1(a) The learned trial Judges erred in law and in fact in holding that P.W.28 was not an accomplice and that consequent upon this, his evidence needed no corroboration.

(b) The learned trial Judges also erred in law and in fact in holding that P.W.28 had no purpose to serve or interest to protect.

(c) The learned trial Judges erred in law and in fact in holding that in spite of their finding that P.W.32 was a witness who had a purpose of his own to serve and that the Judges should have warned themselves, there was no substantial miscarriage of justice done to the 1st appellant by his conviction.

Counsel for the appellant in arguing the appeal referred to various portions of the evidence and submitted that from those bits of evidence P.W. 28 was in fact and in law an accomplice or in the [p.85] alternative a person who had a purpose of his own to serve or an interest to protect and contended that as such the Court of Appeal should have held that the trial judge should have warned himself of the danger of convicting on the uncorroborated evidence of such a witness and that since he failed to do so the conviction should be quashed. He contended also that the Court of Appeal having found that P.W.32 was a witness who had a purpose of his own to serve, there being no warning of the danger of convicting on the uncorroborated evidence of this witness, it erred in law and in fact in applying the provisions of Sec. 58(2) of the Courts Act No. 31 of 1965 since the burden of establishing that on the totality of evidence there was no miscarriage of justice had not been discharged by the prosecution.

The offence for which the appellant was convicted is made a misdemeanor by the statute i.e., Larceny Act, 1916, Sec. 32(1), and it is trite law that in cases of misdemeanor an accomplice includes all persons committing, procuring or aiding and abetting the commission of such offences.

In DAVIES vs D.P.P. (1954) A.C. 378, the rule was laid down that a conviction would be quashed where no warning has been given as to the danger of acting on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice.

In R. vs PRATER (1960) 44 Cr. App. R. 83 (1960) 2 Q.B.464 it was held that this was a rule or practice and it was there stated that "it is desirable ……. in cases where a person may be regarded as having some purpose of his own to serve the warning against uncorroborated evidence should be given."

In R. v STANNARD (1964) 48 Cr. App. R. 81, it was held that whether or not to give a warning depends on the facts of the case and that it was a matter within the Judges discretion.

See also R. v. ROBERTS & WITNEY (1967) Cr. Law Review 477 (C.A.); R. v RUSSELL (1968) 52 Cr. App. R. 147 and R. v PURNELL (1968) Cr. Law Review 449.

[p.86]

In the instant case the trial Judge reviewed the entire evidence against the appellant and arrived at the conclusion that P.W.28 and P.W.32 were speaking the truth when they said that the bills were prepared by the appellant and typed by P.W.32 and were subsequently signed and stamped by P.W.28. This is a finding of fact which the Court of Appeal accepted and which this Court sees no reason to disturb.

The trial Judge having so found, failed to state whether they were accomplices or whether they had some purpose to serve.

The question whether or not a witness is an accomplice is one of mixed fact and law depending on the circumstances of the particular case. Throughout his Judgment the trial Judge did not advert his mind as to whether P.W.28 could be regarded as an accomplice or a witness who had a purpose to serve.

In dealing with this issue the Court of Appeal said, inter alia, that "nowhere did the Judge make any findings that P.W.28 was an accomplice and "since he did not make such finding, it was not necessary for him to advert his mind to any evidence or corroboration". This is quite an erroneous proposition; the fact that the Judge did not make any finding that P.W.28 was an accomplice did not absolve him from considering whether he (P.W.28) should be regarded as such.

As stated earlier the Court of Appeal held that p.W.28 was neither an accomplice nor a witness who had a purpose to serve. We are in agreement with this. In these circumstances the trial Judge was under no obligation to warn himself of the danger of convicting on the uncorroborated evidence of that witness.

With regard to P.W.32, again the trial Judge did not make any finding as to whether he was an accomplice or a witness who had a purpose of his own to serve and he did not warn himself of the danger of convicting on his uncorroborated evidence. The Court of Appeal held that he was not an accomplice. We entirely agree.

[p.87]

However, the Court held that he was a witness who had a purpose to serve. It is not quite clear what purpose of his own this witness could have had to serve, but assuming — without deciding — that the witness had a purpose of his own to serve, the trial Judge merely had a discretion to warn himself of the danger of convicting on his uncorroborated evidence. The Judge was under no obligation to warn himself of this danger.

In those circumstances it cannot be said that he erred in law in failing to warn himself.

It was therefore not necessary to apply the provisions of Sec. 58(2) of the Courts Act, No. 31 of 1965.

In our view the evidence against the appellant was clear and overwhelming, and we find no justification to interfere with the conviction. Accordingly this Court upholds the conviction and the appeal is therefore dismissed and the conviction and sentence are confirmed.

AWUNOR RENNER J.S.C.:

This is an appeal from a judgment of the Court of Appeal dated the 4th day of March 1982 reversing a judgment of Thompson-Davis J. dated 27th November, 1980, dismissing the respondents' claims for damages for trespass to land, an injunction restraining the appellant from trespassing on the respondents' land and for means profits.

The relevant facts of this case are as follows:— The action was commenced by the respondents as plaintiffs by a writ of summons dated the 16th day of July, 1976. They claimed that at all material times before and during this action that they were the fee simple owners of the land in dispute situated at Boderich Village in the Western Area of Sierra Leone. They further alleged that they became the fee simple owners of the said land by virtue of a Deed of Gift dated 9th April, 1970 [p.117] and registered as number 31 at page 11 in Volume 48 in the Book of Voluntary Conveyances kept .in the Registrar General's Office in Freetown. The said Deed of Gift was duly produced at the trial in the High Court. I shall however deal with that later. It is also alleged by the respondents that when the appellant (defendant in the High Court) started to build on the said land they warned him that the land belonged to them and they even complained to the Police but despite all warnings he continued to build and eventually they had to instruct their solicitor to write to him telling him that they were the fee simple owners of the land in question and when he still persisted this action was then instituted against him.

The appellant did not give evidence but in his statement of defence he pleaded that he had acquired a fee simple title of the portion of the said land in 1974. He further stated that title to the piece of land had always belonged to the Fofanah family of which one Alieu Fofanah was head and that he will therefore strongly challenge the Deed of Gift dated 9th April 1970.

At the hearing of the action in the High Court only the first respondent gave evidence before the learned trial judge Thompson-Davis J. He as stated supra dismissed the respondents' claims. The respondents then appealed to the Court of Appeal and that Court on the 4th day of March 1982 set aside the judgment of the Court below, allowed the appeal, awarded the respondents the sum of Le.1,000 as damages for trespass, costs and an injunction restraining the appellant by himself or his servant or agent from trespassing on the said land.

The appellant has now appealed to this Court on several grounds asking for the following reliefs—

[p.118]

(1) That the judgment of the Court of Appeal dated 4th March 1982 be set aside.

(2) That the judgment of the High Court (Thompson-Davis J.) dated 27th November, 1980 be restored.

(3) Any further or other order as the Court may seem necessary and equitable.

Various arguments have been adduced in this Court on behalf of both the appellant and the respondents. Briefly on the one hand Mr. Jenkins-Johnston counsel for the appellant argued that the respondents had never claimed that they had been in possession of the land in question. In fact he said that this was the view held by the learned trial judge. He further submitted that in fact it was the appellant who had been in actual possession at the time of the alleged trespass. A further argument raised on the appellant's side is to the effect that the respondents had pleaded that they were the fee simple owners of the land in question by virtue of Ex. "A", the Deed of Gift. He contended that the evidence was not enough to support the alleged title to the land. The burden of proof he further submitted was on the person asserting title to prove such title in accordance with the pleadings and that the appellants having based their rights to possession on the document in question their case ought to stand or fall on the strength of the Deed of Gift. He further submitted inter alia that in a case of trespass possession alone is sufficient to maintain an action as against a wrong doer but that such possession must be clear and exclusive. Appellant's counsel' then endeavoured to show that the Court of Appeal was clearly wrong when they said that the respondents had made out a case and that there was no evidence on which that Court could have found that they were in clear and exclusive [p.119] possession of the land in question and that they were therefore wrong to have reversed the decision of the trial judge.

He also cited several authorities in support of his contentions to show the circumstances when an appellate court could reverse the findings of a lower court.

The main arguments put forward by Mr. L. Williams, counsel on behalf of the respondents were as follows—

Firstly what must the respondents prove to succeed in an action for trespass? Secondly he submitted the respondents had in fact proved their case since, he claimed that actual entry as such by the respondents was not necessary in law to maintain an action for trespass but as against a wrong doer the slightest acts of possession by the respondent is sufficient for them to maintain an action for trespass.

He further contended that even if the respondents' title is defective though he was not conceding this that the court should interpret the conducts of the respondents as to whether those acts amount to the assertion of a possessory title to the land in dispute. The main question he further submitted was who had a better right to possession, the appellant or the respondents.

He finally referred to circumstances when the Court of Appeal could interfere with the findings of fact of a trial judge and referred the Court to the case of WATT or THOMAS v THOMAS reported in 1947 A.C. page 484 and BENMAX v AUSTIN MOTOR, CO. LTD. reported in 19551 A.E.R. at page 326 at page 329.

Having narrated the arguments put forward by both counsels for the appellant and the respondents it now becomes necessary for me to consider the evidence adduced in this cage, together [p.102] with the law on the points raised and the authorities relied on by both counsels.
