The first point which I now have to consider is the question of whether either party proved that they had a better title to the land in question. I do not intend to lose sight of the fact that this was an action for trespass. However the respondents in their statement of claim had pleaded that at all material times before and during the action they had been the fee simple owners of the land in dispute by virtue of a Deed of Gift Ex. "A" dated the 9th day of April 1970 and registered as number 31 at page 11 in volume 48 in the Book of Conveyance kept in the office of the Registrar-General in Freetown. The Deed of Gift was also relied on at the trial and tendered in evidence. In fact at the trial and under cross-examination 1st respondent had this to say:

"I did not buy the said land. It was my uncle who gave it to me. He is Pa Aliau Fofanah. He himself gave me the land. Pa Alieu Fofanah is now dead. Died long ago. Remember when. I am not literate in English. Fofanah gave me the land by means of Ex. "A". I cannot remember when Pa Fofanah died. My uncle did not die in 1970 he died after 1970. Before my uncle died he made a small document which was a Deed of Gift. He died and we found a surveyor. He surveyed the whole compound. He then prepared a plan and gave us a copy. We then prepared the documents for registration. The document was then registered. It was after the death of Pa Alieu that we made Ex. "A". It contains Fatu Kargbo, Beareh Conteh and my name."

He continued further in his evidence by stating as follows:—

"I know Salifu Koroma. I would know him. Ex. "A" does not say that Salifu Koroma [p.121] gave us the land. I would agree with you that Salifu Koroma did not give any land at Goderich."

The trial judge in his judgment had this to say about these pieces of evidence given by the 1st respondent herein—

"The case for the plaintiff is a most curious one and to say the least a calamity. They have not attempted to prove this case against the defendant indeed they have proved and achieved nothing. Ex. "A" is to my mind a spurious document and an affront to the integrity of this court. The plaintiffs have dismally failed to prove their case and their claim against the defendant fails."

The appellant on the other hand did not give any evidence, neither did he tender in evidence any document in support of the allegation in his statement of Defence that he had acquired a fee simple title of a portion of the said land. In fact no reason was given for the non production of any document to support his allegations.

I take it therefore to be clear that since the respondents in this case were Claiming that they were the fee simple owners of the land in question that they had to prove that they had title in themselves or through some person from whom they were claiming and the question was whether they had in fact done so That would of course depend on the evidence actually adduced.

It is now necessary to examine the Deed of Gift Ex. "A" on which the respondents are relying and which purports to convey the land in question to them. The 1st respondent who testified before the High Court and produced it claimed inter alia —

[p.122]

"I know Salifu Koroma. He sold the land in question to my uncle Pa Alieu Fofanah. Land is at Goderich. My uncle made a will leaving the said land to us in the event of his death."

In continuing his evidence he said —

"Did speak of a will. See this document it is a Deed of Gift, wish to produce. Marked "A".

On these pieces of evidence quoted above I cannot see how any-one could attach much credence to Ex. "A". What is contained in it is in direct variance with the oral evidence of 1st respondent. The deed of gift was supposed to have been executed by one Salifu Koroma on the 9th day of April 1970 when in fact in his evidence the 1st respondent had testified that the land in question had been sold to his uncle Pa Alieu Fofanah by Salifu Koroma and that his uncle had made a will leaving the property in question to them. Later on he had alleged that his uncle had died after 1970 but that before he died he had given them the property by means of a small document which was a deed of gift. After his uncle died they engaged a surveyor to survey the land and prepare a plan. A deed of gift was then prepared to which the plan was attached. That deed of gift was tendered in evidence by the 1st respondent and marked Ex.

"A". On this sort of evidence I fail to see how the respondents could claim the land as fee simple owners. In my view the document is a useless one and cannot be relied upon to prove ownership of the said land.

Let me at this stage point out that it is not necessary to prove ownership of land which is the subject matter of dispute in an action for trespass as in this case.

[p.123]

This is an action for damages for trespass to land.

Trespass, to land is an entry upon or any direct and immediate act of interference with the possession of land.

Trespass to land is defined in Halsbury's Laws of England 3rd Edition volume 38 at page 739 paragraph 1205 as follows—

"Every unlawful entry by one person on land in the possession of another is a trespass for which an action lies although no actual damage is done. A person trespasses on land if he wrongfully sets foot on it, or rides or drives over it or takes possession of it or expels the person in possession or place or fixes anything on it."

Also in the same volume of Halsbury's Laws of England supra at page 744 paragraph 1214 it is also stated as follows—

"Trespass is an injury to a possessory right and therefore the proper plaintiff in an action for trespass to land is the person who was or who is deemed to have been in possession either actual or constructive of the said land at the time of the trespass. The type of conduct necessary to evidence possession varies with the type of land; and to maintain an action against a person who never had any title to the land, the slightest amount of possession is sufficient."

In the case of WUTA OFFEI v DANQUAH reported in (1961) 2 W.L.R. at page 1238, the matter concerned land at Christian Borg, Accra, which the respondent in that case alleged was native custom and was included in land which pursuant to granted to her by the Stool of Osu in 1939 in accordance with Sec. 2(1) of the Accra Town (Lands) Ordinance, 1940, vested in the Chief Secretary in trust for his Majesty. In 1956 a divesting order was made releasing the suit land. Notwithstanding the ordinance of 1940 the respondent had had her [p.124] original gift confirmed in 1945 by an indenture which was duly registered. In 1948 the appellant (who pleaded a grant of the land to him by the Osu Stool prior to that of the respondent) having erected a building on the land, the respondent claimed against him inter alia, damages for trespass. Until 1948 the said land was vacant and unenclosed but the respondent deputised her mother to look after this plot and keep watch on it to see that no one intruded. The appellant contended that there was no evidence to establish that the respondent was in possession at the date of his entry on the land in 1948 and that assuming that she was in possession before the date of the Ordinance in 1940 her possession was determined thereunder and she had taken no active steps thereafter to reassert her possession.

It was held (1) that while section 2(1) of the Ordinance determined her possession it did not affect the factual aspect of possession if she was in actual possession at the date of the Ordinance, the section did not change that state of facts.

(2) That to establish possession it is not necessary for a claimant to take some active step in relation to the land such as enclosing or cultivating it. In the case of vacant unenclosed land which is not being cultivated little can be done on the land to indicate possession. The type of conduct which indicates possession must vary with the type of land. Here the type of possession which the respondent sought to maintain was against the appellant who never had any title to the land and the slightest amount of possession would be sufficient to entertain a claim for trespass. In BRISTOW v CORMICAN (1878) 3 A.C. page 641 at page 657. H.L. Lord

Hatherly said —

"There can be no doubt whatsoever that mere possession is sufficient, against a person invading that possession without [p.125] himself having any title whatsoever, as against a mere stranger; that is to say that is sufficient as against a wrong doer. The slightest amount of possession would be sufficient to entitle the person who is in possession or claims under those who have been or are in such possession to recover as against a mere trespasser."

The principles in both these two cases BRISTOW v CORMICAN and WUTA OFFEI v DANQUAH supra were also illustrated in the decision and reasoning in the House of Lords in the case of OCEAN ESTATES v NORMAN PINDER reported in (1969) 2 W.L.R. H.L. at page 1359 at page 1364.

Actual possession is a question of fact which consists an intention to possess the land in question and exercise of control over the land. The type of control which should be exercised over the land would vary with the nature of the land and the use made of the land in question. See the case of OCEAN ESTATE v PINDER supra. As indicated earlier counsel for the appellant had maintained that there was not sufficient evidence to establish that the respondents were ever in possession of the land at the critical period and that they had never pleaded that they were ever in possession of the disputed land. No authority was cited by counsel for the appellant in support of the contention that the respondents must plead that they were actually in possession of the land in question. In fact I myself have been unable to find any.

This to my mind I would therefore say is unnecessary in view of the principles contained in the case of DR. C.J. SEYMOUR-WILSON v MUSA ABESS Civ. App. 5/79 (Supreme Court) unreported and in the cases mentioned supra as to who was in fact in possession of the said land and bearing in mind the principle that the slightest amount of possession is enough to maintain an action for trespass.

At this stage it now becomes necessary for me to consider on the evidence before the court which of the two, the appellant or the respondents, had a better right to possession of the land in question. As I have already stated above that the appellant did not give any evidence and neither was any evidence adduced on his behalf. The only witness who gave evidence was the 1st respondent. He testified that the land was given to him and the other two respondents by his uncle one Salifu Koroma who died after 1970 but that after the death of his uncle they had procured the services of a surveyor to survey the whole compound and prepared the plan of the land. He then gave us a copy. The plan which was attached to Ex. "A". The surveyor signed and dated the plan on the 20th March 1969. From this it can be inferred that the respondents exercised acts of possession over the land in March 1969 through their agent and the surveyor. That sometime in 1972 he found the appellant building on the land and that he told him that they owned the land in question.

Let me at this stage quote the relevant portion of his evidence.

"I recall 28.4.74 also remember what happened in 1972. Sometime that year I found Momoh Sesay in Goderich. He built a house on the land. He built the house in 1972. I told him that he had no right to be on the land and that we owned it. He said that he bought it from one Pa Abdulai Fofanah. I told him that Pa Abdulai Fofanah does not own the land. I went to the C.I.D. and reported him as he refused to quit the land. One Pa Momoh Bangura my brother went with us. The defendant was called to the C.I.D. and questioned. He said that he had bought the land from Pa Abdulai Fofanah."

Apart from this there is evidence also that although the appellant was warned to get off the land he nevertheless continued to build on the land until the building was completed and that thereafter the 1st respondent instructed his solicitor to write to the appellant about the matter. When he still continued to occupy the land action was then instituted against him.

In my view having considered the whole of the evidence adduced in this case and especially those referred to above together with the authorities cited by me I am satisfied that the respondents had entered into possession of the land before the appellant did. They did not have to take active steps to show that they were in possession WUTA OFFEI v M. DANQUAH supra. The principle that mere possession is sufficient to maintain an action for trespass has been approved in BRISTOW v CORMICAN supra and in several other cases. The actions taken by the respondents in surveying the land and in warning the appellant off the land in question is I think adequate to show that they were in possession before the appellant entered upon the land in dispute and that they were merely trying to assert their claim to possession of the said land. For these reasons I hold that the respondents had a better right to possession and were therefore entitled to succeed in an action against the appellant for trespass.

By way of summing I would pose the following questions which are as follows:

Have the respondents proved their claim as contained in the Writ of Summons? I would certainly not hesitate to say that on the evidence adduced at the trial that they have failed dismally to prove that they were the owners in fee simple of the land in question. As regards the question of whether they were in fact in possession of the said land at [p.128] the time of the alleged trespass? I have carefully considered the principles of law involved, the arguments adduced by both counsel together with the evidence and have come to the conclusion that the respondents were in fact in possession of the land at the material time.

The second question which I have to answer is whether the trial judge was right in dismissing the action? It follows from what I have already stated above that the trial judge was right as far as ownership of the land based on the Deed of Gift is concerned but that he was wrong as far as the question of possession of the land is concerned.

Having come to this conclusion my last and final question is — was the Court of Appeal right in reversing the decision of the learned trial judge? As regards the question of trespass I would say yes. As regards the question of whether the Court of Appeal was right in reversing the decision of the trial judge I would also say yes.

It was stated in the head note of the case of WATT or THOMAS v THOMAS reported in (1947) A.C. at page 484 that —

"When a question of fact has been tried by a judge without a jury and it is not suggested that he has misdirected himself in law, an appellate court in reviewing the record of the evidence should attach the greatest weight to his opinion, because he saw and heard the witnesses, and should not disturb his judgment unless it is plainly unsound. The appellate court is, however, free to reverse his conclusions if the grounds given by him therefore are unsatisfactory by reason of material inconsistencies or inaccuracies or if it appears unmistakably from the evidence that in reaching them he has not taken proper advantages of having seen and [p.129] heard the witnesses or has failed to appreciate the weight and bearing of circumstances admitted or proved."

As I have already stated there is no doubt that a case of trespass has been made out by the respondents against the appellants. In my opinion the respondents have proved that they were in possession of the land in question at the material time. The Court of Appeal also came to his same conclusion. In fact this is what During J. A. had to say in his judgment.

"In our view" the learned trial judge was wrong in holding that the appellant had failed to make a case of trespass. The appellants in fact proved their case."

The Court of Appeal having come to the conclusion that the learned trial judge was wrong in his findings as regards the question of trespass were clearly entitled to reverse the learned trial judge's findings of fact on the question of what has been proved or not proved.

As regards the question of granting an injunction I do not think that it is appropriate for me to grant it because of the respondents' conduct in this matter. The court must look at the particular circumstances in each case. The evidence reveals that although the respondents had seen the appellant constructing a building on the land and even warned him off in 1972, their solicitor did not write to him until the 16th day of July, 1976 before a writ was against issued him. In those circumstances it will be inequitable to order an injunction. I must under the circumstances disagree with the Court of Appeal in this regard and refuse to grant the injunction claimed.

[p.130]

For the reasons which I have already given above, I have come to the conclusion that this appeal should be dismissed subject to an order setting aside the injunction granted.

Costs to the respondents.

Introduction

This is an application for (1) "an enlargement of time of appeal (SIC) to this Honourable Court for special leave to appeal against the judgment and order of the Court of Appeal dated the 13th day of July, 1983. (2) special leave to appeal against the said order and (3) an interim stay of execution of the said judgment; (4) any further or other relief equitable in the opinion of this Honourable Court.

Facts

On 13th September, 1983 the Court of Appeal dismissed the applicant's interlocutory appeal. The applicant thereafter applied for leave to appeal to this Court. That application was refused by the Court of Appeal- An application dated 13th July, 1983 for special leave to appeal was heard by this Court and struck out on 2nd November, 1983. The present application was filed on 12th November, 1983 seeking the orders I have quoted above.

[p.74]

The right to appeal to the Supreme Court

The right of appeal to the Supreme Court from any judgment, order or decree of the Court of Appeal is to be found in section 103 of The Constitution of Sierra Leone 1978. (Hereinafter referred to as "the Constitution") Section 103 provides —

"103.(1) An appeal shall lie from a judgment, decree or order of the Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court—

(a) as of right, in any civil cause or matter where the amount or value of the subject matter of the dispute is not less than such an amount as may be determined by Parliament; or

(b) as of right, in any criminal cause or matter in respect of which an appeal has been brought to the Court of Appeal from a judgment, decree or order of the High Court of Justice in the exercise of its original jurisdiction; or

(c) with leave of the Court of Appeal, in any cause or matter, civil or criminal, where the Court of Appeal is satisfied that the case involves a substantial question of law or is of public importance.

(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of the preceding sub-section, the Supreme Court shall have power to entertain any application for special leave in any cause or matter, civil or criminal, to the Supreme Court, and to grant such leave accordingly."

I find the provisions of Section 103(1) and (2) repeated in Rule 6(1)(a), (b) and (c), and Rule 6(2) of The Supreme Court Rule, 1982 (P.N.1 of 1982) to which I shall hereafter refer as "the Rules".

[p.75]

Rule (6)(1)(a) of the Rules deals with 'appeals as of right' in civil cases; Rule 6(1)(b) refers to appeals as of right in criminal matters and Rule 6(1)(c) provides for appeals with leave of the Court of Appeal in civil or criminal matters. Rule 6(2) enables an intending appellant to apply to this Court for 'special leave' to appeal.

Rule 7 of The Rules

In order to give due regard to the hierarchy of Courts set up by sections 101, 107 and 110 of The Constitution, Rule 7 of 'the Rules' provides that an application for leave to appeal must be made in the first instance to the Court of Appeal and if that Court refuses to grant the leave sought, and then application could be made to this Court for 'special leave' to appeal.

Time for applying for 'special leave'

The period stipulated within which an application for special leave is to be made is set out in Rule 10 of the Rules. It state

"10. An application for special leave shall be filed within one month of the date of the judgment from which leave to appeal is sought or of the date on which leave to appeal to the Supreme Court is refused by the Court of Appeal

The rather complicated phraseology of this rule seems to have been simplified by Rule 26 sub-rule 3 which simply requires the application to be filed within one month from the date of the decision of the Court of Appeal.

'Rule 26'

Rule 26 of the Rules deals with time for appealing and time within which application for extension of time is to be made.

I will set out Rule 26. It stipulates—

"26(1) Where an appeal lies as of right the appellant shall lodge his notice of appeal within three months from the date of the judgment appealed against unless the Supreme Court shall enlarge the time.

[p.76]

(2) Where there is no appeal as of right the appellant shall lodge his notice of appeal within three months from the date on which leave to appeal or special leave is granted.

(3) An application for special leave shall be filed within one month from the date of the decision of the Court of Appeal.

(4) No application for enlargement of time in which to appeal shall be made after the expiration of one month from the expiration of the time prescribed within which an appeal may be brought ……." (Emphasis mine).

Generally speaking, Rule 26 deals with the times within which civil appeals as of right, appeals with leave, and appeals with special leave are to be lodged. Finally it deals with applications for enlargement of time within which to appeal.

Sub-rule (1) requires that an appeal as of right shall be lodged within three months of the judgment appealed from, unless the time for lodging such an appeal has been extended under sub-rule (4). It provides for time in respect of those matters referred to in Sec. 103(1)(a) of The Constitution, and Rule 6(1)(a) of The Rules.

Sub-rule (2) stipulates that appeal with leave as well as those with special leave shall be filed within three months from the date on which leave or special leave was granted. Consideration is thereby given to matters in Sec.103(1)(c) and 103(2) of The Constitution, and Rule 6(1)(c) and 6(2) of The Rules.

By sub-rule (3) an application for special leave to appeal should be made within one month from the decision of the Court of Appeal. The sub-rule simplifies the provision of Rule 10. Applications for special leave under Sec. 103(2) of The Constitution and 6(2) of The Rules have a time limit prescribed for them.

Sub-rule (4) allows an intending appellant one month within which to apply for enlargement of time in which to appeal after the time within which an appeal may be brought. I have highlighted the phrases "enlargement of time within which to appeal" and “after the time within which an appeal may be brought" to indicate that there is no mention in this sub-rule or for that matter anywhere in Rule 26 in which provision is made for enlargement of time within which 'special leave' may be made and granted. The sub-rule speaks of enlargement of time within which an appeal may be applied for after the time within which an appeal may be brought. Counsel for the applicant during his argument relied on this sub-rule. The sub-rule is not useful to his present application.

Sub-rule (4) as I apprehend it, refers to appeals as of right where the period is three months, and appeals in which leave or special leave has been granted and this Court is satisfied that there were 'good and substantial reasons for the intended appellant's failure to lodge his appeal within the prescribed period of three months. It does not avail someone who has had his application for special leave struck out. Such an application for special leave cannot be renewed after the expiration of one month of the refusal of the Court of Appeal to grant leave to appeal to this Court.

By way of contrast I will draw attention to the provisions of Rules 74(1) and (2) of the Rules.

Let me at once state that they relate to criminal appeals. They are however germane to the issue I am demonstrating Rule 74 sub-rule (1) provides—

"Where the State or any person desires to appeal to the Supreme Court in a criminal cause or matter he shall give.....

…….. notice of an application for special leave to appeal within one month of the decision of the Court of Appeal or within ten days of refusal of leave by the Court of Appeal as the case may be ……

[p.78]

(2) The period within which …….. notice of an application for special leave may be given may be extended by the …… Supreme Court on an application by notice of motion."

This sub-rule provides for the enlargement of time within which an application for special leave may be made in criminal matters.

Can this Court extend time for special leave?

I have contrasted the position in civil matters with that regarding criminal matters. There is no power under the present Rules of this Court to grant such an extension of time within which to apply for special leave to appeal in civil matters. The answer to the question I have posed above is No.

GATTI v SHOOSMITH

The decision in GATTI v SHOOSMITH (1939) 3 All E.R. 916 was cited to us by Counsel for the applicant while urging us to grant him an extension of time within which to apply for special leave. That was a case in which the English Court of Appeal granted an extension of time within which to appeal. The omission to appeal in due time in that case was due to a mistake on the part of the applicant's legal adviser. It is alleged in the instant case that as a result of lithe error or mistake of Counsel" in making his application to this Court on 2nd November 1983 the application was struck out; and that "in the interest of justice and all the circumstances of this case the applicant ought not to suffer because of the error or mistake or negligence of his Counsel or his Solicitor".

I will now consider the appropriateness of Gatti's case to the instant application. It is based on the combined effect of two rules of the English Annual Practice — Order 58 Rule 13 sub-rule and Order 64 rule 7. Order 58 Rule 13 sub-rule 2 provides —

"Any application to the Court of Appeal for leave to appeal (other than an application made after the expiration of the time for appealing) shall be made ex parte in the first instance ……"

Order 64 Rule 7 then provides

"A Court or a Judge shall have power to enlarge …….. the time appointed by these Rules or fixed by an Order enlarging time, for doing any act or taking any proceeding upon such terms (if any) as the justice of the case may require and any such enlargement may be ordered although the application for the same is not made until after expiration of the time appointed or allowed ……."

The effect to these two rules is to give the Court an unfettered discretion to extend the time stipulated by the Rules contained in the Annual Practice. To be able to exercise a discretion, the Court must be empowered by some rule of law or practice which then becomes the basis on which the discretion could be exercised one way or the other. There is no similar provision in the Rules of this Court giving it a blank cheque as it were to exercise its discretion to extend the time within which special leave could be applied for.

Conclusion

No power having been conferred on this Court to extend time within which an application for special leave could be made in civil cases this Court cannot grant the application. It is accordingly dismissed.

JUDGMENT

LIVESEY LUKE, C.J.

Thomas O. Vincent (hereafter called the appellant) qualified in England as an Engineer in the early 1960's. In 1964 while he was in the employment of British Railways as a graduate Engineer, he applied to B.P. (West Africa) Ltd. for an appointment. In November, 1964 he attended an interview in London following that interview the Group Manager (Administration) of B.P. (West Africa) Ltd. based in Lagos Nigeria, a Mr. N. Campbell wrote to him a letter dated 7th December, 1964 (Ex. 'B') forwarding a formal letter of offer of appointment (Ex. 'A'). The formal letter of appointment was also dated 7th December, 1964 and was signed by Mr. N. Campbell. The formal letter of appointment offered him an engagement as an engineer with B.P. (West Africa) ltd. in Sierra Leone to commence before 1st March, 1965. He was requested to signify his acceptance of the offer by signing below the formal letter of appointment and returning it. He duly signified his acceptance by a signing and returning the letter. In due course he travelled to Freetown, Sierra Leone and took up appointment with B.P. (West African) Limited on 2nd February, 1965.

He was then aged 35 years. After serving a six months probationary period, as provided for under the terms of his engagement, he was confirmed in the employment. At the end of his first year he was granted a salary increase and was designated Operations Sales Engineer. Thereafter he was granted salary increases annually. During his first year with B.P. (West Africa) Ltd., he was sent to Nigeria where he was attached to its branch there. In October, 1973 on the recommendation and sponsorship of his employers he attended the Group Development Stage I Course in the United Kingdom which was designed for senior executives of the B.P. Group. Later that same year he was appointed Operations Manager.

In 1976 a new company named B.P. (Sierra Leone) Limited was incorporated in Sierra Leone to take over the total business operations of B.P. (West Africa) Limited. The services of the employees of B.P. (West Africa) Limited including those of the appellant were transferred to B.P. (Sierra Leone) Limited with effect: from 1st January, 1976. By letter dated 31st March, 1976, the General Manager of B.P. (West Africa) Ltd. Sierra Leone Branch informed the appellant of the new development and stated inter alia that "your full service benefit and existing terms and conditions of employment will be transferred to B.P. (Sierra Leone) Limited with effect from 1st January, 1976", and intimated that his employment with B.P. (West Africa) Ltd., Sierra Leone Branch would be transferred to B.P. (Sierra Leone) Limited. He was asked to signify his acceptance of the transfer to B.P. (Sierra Leone) Limited on his "full service benefits and existing terms of conditions of employment," by signing and returning a duplicate of the letter. The appellant duly accepted the transfer by signing and returning the duplicate letter on or about 14th April, 1976.

The appellant continued performing his normal duties as Operations Manager under the new company. However, in December, 1976 there was a new and far-reaching development. It arose thus:—

On 29th December, 1976 Mr. Callander, the General Manager of B.P. (Sierra Leone) Ltd. invited the appellant into his office and told him that he was restructuring the company and that he (the appellant) would not fit into the new structure. The appellant asked Mr. Callander what he meant and the latter replied that the appellant would either be made redundant or he could resign, as there was no other alternative. He then asked the appellant to go away and think about what he had told him and communicate his decision to him later. Later that day, the appellant wrote a letter to the General Manager, as a result of which the General-Manager invited the appellant to his office. They held a discussion in the course of which Mr. Callander said that because of his high qualification and seniority the appellant would not fit into the new structure. Mr. Callander also told him of the amounts he would be paid as benefits if he was made redundant or retired by the company or if he was to resign. The appellant suggested that he should be allowed to proceed on vacation leave but Mr. Callander refused, insisting that he required to know the appellant's decision by the following day. On 31st December, 1976, the appellant did not report for duty. He sent a sick report to the company's office reporting his illness. Mr. Callander telephoned him at home sympathising with him on his illness and enquired about the letter he was expecting from him. The appellant then went to the company's office and handed a letter dated 30th December, 1976 (Ex. 'D') to Mr. Callander. In that letter the appellant referred to the interview of 29th December, recapitulating the gist of the conversation including the benefits that were said to be payable to him on redundancy or resignation. He requested the General Manager to confirm that the benefits payable to him were as stated in the letter so as to "enable me to come to a decision" He posted a copy of that letter on the same day to the Managing Director of B.P. (West Africa) Ltd. based in Ghana.

Later that day the appellant received a letter from the General Manager dated 31st December, 1976 (Ex. 'E'). The letter was in the following terms:—

31st December, 1976

Dear Mr. Vincent,

We would refer to our various conversations (Vincent/Callander) on the 29th and 30th December, 1976. We would formally advise you of the company's decision to exercise its discretion to retire you effective 31st December, 1976 in accordance with paragraph 2.13 of the Executive Staff Handbook. The following entitlements are due to you and we would be obliged if you could call on the undersigned as soon as possible to finalise the matter:

(1) One month's salary in lieu of notice	976.73
(2) Outstanding leave balance/leave allowance	1,327.00
(3) Provident Fund	14,023.06
(4) End of Service Benefit	3,136.00
(5) Ex Gratia Retiral Gratuity	3,000.00
	22,462.79

Note: Income tax to be 'deducted at source where applicable.

Finally we would like to thank you for your service over the years and wish you every success in the future.

Yours sincerely,

M. Callander

General Manager."

There then followed a series of correspondence between solicitors acting for the appellant and solicitors on behalf of B.P. (Sierra Leone) Limited. Eventually" on 21st February, 1977 the appellant issued a writ of summons in the High Court against B.P. (Sierra Leone) Limited claiming:

"1. Breach of the Plaintiff's contract of employment.

2. Damages for wrongful dismissal of the Plaintiff from the Defendant's employment.

3. Damages for wrongly inducing the Plaintiff by false representation any by the unconscientious use of power and authority, to yield to Defendant's [p.4] discriminatory and unlawful design to deny the plaintiff his right of participation in the Defendant's Executive Staff non-contributory Pension Scheme preparatory to the Defendant's secret plan to dismiss him unlawfully from its employment".

The Writ was accompanied by a Statement of Claim. It is not necessary to set out the Statement of claim in full. Most of the allegations contained therein have been narrated above. It will be sufficient to set out a few material paragraphs, namely:

"1. The Plaintiff is a highly qualified Engineer, and at all times relevant to this action, a top executive of the Defendant's Company in Sierra Leone, and holding very successfully the office of Operations

Engineer in Sierra Leone, and having the distinction of being the only Sierra Leonean executive to have completed with flying colours the Defendant's Management Stage 1 Course in 1973, designed for General Managers and run by the Defendant.

3. By letter dated 7th December, 1964, addressed to the Plaintiff at his address in England where he carried on his profession as an Engineer, the defendant offered the Plaintiff employment as executive engineer at a commencing salary of Le.3,200 (three thousand two hundred leones) per annum basic, for a probationary period of six months and subject to termination at any time by one calendar month's prior notice in writing on either side.

4. It was an essential condition of the offer of employment referred to above, that the Defendant's Executive Staff Pension Scheme — hitherto reserved for expatriates — which is non-contributory, shall apply to the Plaintiff on confirmation, and that on [p.5] reaching the age of 55 years with a minimum of 15 years company service, his annual pension would be calculated at one eightieth of his earning over his last year of employment multiplied by his years of service.

6. The plaintiff accepted the said offer of employment in accordance, inter alia, with the conditions as stated in paragraphs 3 and 4 above. He was then 35 years old, and commenced work on 2nd February, 1965.

8. In November 1975, the Defendant's new General Manager in Sierra Leone informed the Plaintiff that a Sierra Leonean executive of the company was opting out of the Defendant's Executive Staff non-contributory Pension Scheme and that he was required to do likewise.

9. Falsely representing to the Plaintiff that the Defendant could not and would not operate the said Scheme for a lone African Executive, by the unconscientious use of his power and authority to make or mar the Plaintiff's excellent record, by the application of daily pressure which he brought to bear on the Plaintiff, the said General Manager unlawfully induced the Plaintiff to yield to his request that the Defendant terminates the Plaintiff's participation in the Executive Staff non-contributory Pension Scheme.

10. By 1st July, 1976, the Plaintiff's basic salary was Le10,192.00 (Ten thousand one hundred and ninety-two leones) per annum, and but for his wrongful dismissal, would have amounted to Le10,840 per annum by 1st July,1977.

11. On the 29th day of December, 1976, the Defendant's General Manager - the Plaintiff's immediate superior, called the Plaintiff into his office and quietly informed him that the Defendant was restructuring itself. And that because of his high qualifications and high position attained with the defendant, he could not fit him in the new structure.

[p.7]

12. On 30th December, 1976, the following day the said General Manager begged the Plaintiff to resign his then appointment, promising that if he did the defendant would top any monies due him by Lel0,000.00 (Ten thousand leones). This amount was Le2,000.00 (Two thousand leones) more than he had offered earlier in the day.

13. By letter dated the said 30th day of December, 1976, from the plaintiff to the General Manager, copied to the defendant's Managing Director resident in Ghana, delivered on the 31st December, 1976, the plaintiff, inter alia, requested of the General Manager confirmation of the inducements being held out to him.

14. Thereafter, on the said 31st December, 1976, the defendant forthwith and without notice retired the plaintiff from the defendant's employ with immediate effect, and did so in circumstances amounting to a wrongful dismissal and before he had attained the pensionable age of 55 years, The defendant has since refused to allow the plaintiff to remain in its service.

15. The said arbitrary and unilateral retirement of the plaintiff was:

(i) unlawful in that it constitutes a flagrant breach of the plaintiff's contract of employment

(ii) scandalous in that it was designed to get rid of the plaintiff and to rob him of his just reward after 12 years of employment with the defendant and,

(iii) a denial of the plaintiff's right to complete 15 years at least of pensionable service as per his contract of employment.

16. By reason of the above, the plaintiff has been greatly injured.

[p.8]

Particulars of damage:

Loss of Eight years salary to retirement at the pensionable age of 55 years (calculated to take into account reasonable expectation of appointment to the office of General Manager) Le.114,980.00

Lump sum compensation in lieu of pensionable emoluments (Twenty years @ Le.3,000 per annum) Le. 60,000.00

Total Le.174,980,00

Plus 15% of Le.114,980 i.e. rent allowance 17,247.00

Wherefore the plaintiff claims as damages the sum of Le.192,227.00

B.P. (Sierra Leone) Limited (hereafter called the Company) duly filed a Defence which was in the following terms:—

“1. The defendant admits that the plaintiff was his employee up to and including the 31st day of December 1976.

2. Said that the plaintiff attended a basic Information Course for members of the BP Group in the middle management cadre the defendant does not admit the allegations contained in paragraph 1 of the Statement of Claim.

3. The defendant says that the plaintiff voluntarily opted out of its non-contributory Pension Scheme and denies that any pressure was put on him to do so or that the plaintiff was the only African Executive in the Scheme.

4. The defendant states that as a result of a reconstruction within the Company, the plaintiff's position became redundant. Instead of terminating the plaintiff's services as the Company could have done, the defendant opted to retire the plaintiff with his full entitlements including an ex-gratia gratuity, made as follows:

[p.9]

One month's salary in lieu of notice (less income tax)	—	591 .46
Outstanding leave balance/leave allowance (less income tax)	—	1110.83
Provident Fund	—	14023.06
End of Service benefit*	—	3136.00
Ex Gratia Retiral Gratuity*	—	3000.00
21861.35

*These items are paid without deduction of Income Tax, the responsibility for which will now rest with the plaintiff.

5. The plaintiff owes the defendant Company the sum of Le49.90 in respect of petroleum products supplied to him in December, 1976. The defendant therefore sets this sum off the total of Le166.81 being expenses due to and claimed by the plaintiff and authorised by the General Manager.

6. By letter dated 12th January, 1977, the plaintiff, through his Solicitor, accepted the above payments save and except the End-of-Service benefit, The Defendant says that the End-of-Service benefit was calculated in accordance with the terms of its End-of-Service Benefit Scheme and now brings into Court the sum of Twenty one thousand eight hundred and sixty one leones thirty five cents (Le21,861.35) plus the balance of one hundred and sixteen leones ninety one cents (Le116.91) due and payable to the plaintiff, totaling twenty one thousand nine hundred and seventy eight leones twenty six cents (Le21,978.26).

7. Save as is herein expressly admitted the defendant denies each and every allegation of fact contained in the Statement of Claim as if the same had been herein set out and traversed seriatim."

[p.10]

A reply was filed joining issue on the Defence and making a number of averments which are not necessary to be set out.

In due course the action went to trial. The trial commenced on 25th November, 1977 before Williams J. Both parties were represented by Counsel, The appellant was the only witness called in proof of his claim. Two witnesses were called on behalf of the Company, namely Norman Callander the Managing Director of the Company and Donald Charles Oguntola Smythe-Macauley, the Marketing Manager of the Company, Counsel for both parties addressed the trial Judge on 24th November, 1978 at the end of which the learned Judge reserved judgment. Judgment was delivered on 25th September, 1979. The judgment was in favour of the appellant. The learned Judge awarded the appellant damages assessed at eight years salary "less an amount for contingencies of life". He calculated the salary at Le.976.73 per month totaling Le.93,766.08 less a reduction at the rate of 3 per cent "for contingencies of life" amounting to Le.2,812.98. He therefore awarded the net figure of Le.90,955.10 and costs to be taxed.

The Company appealed to the Court of Appeal on the following grounds of appeal:—

(a) That the learned Trial Judge was wrong in law

(i) In holding that the Managing Director of the Appellant Company acted without the authority of the Board of Directors.

(ii) In finding that evidence of a decision of the Board with respect to the retirement of the Plaintiff, was essential for proving the fact of his retirement.

(b) That the learned Trial Judge was wrong in law in awarding damages to the plaintiff and in the event acted on wrong principles of law.

(c) That the decision is against the weight of the evidence."

[p.11]

A Notice of Cross-Appeal was filed on behalf of the appellant. The grounds of cross-appeal urged in the Notice were as follows:—

"(1) There being no evidence of any mutuality between the parties and the defendant with regard to Exhibit 'F' — the Defendant's Executive Handbook — the learned Trial Judge erred in law in holding that the defendant without the consent of the plaintiff, had a discretion to retire the plaintiff prematurely in accordance with the said Exhibit 'F' and in breach of his contract of employment.

(2) The learned Trial Judge erred in law in disallowing the plaintiff's claim of Le.60,000.00, being lump sum compensation claimed in lieu of pensionable emoluments lost arising out of the defendant's proven breach of the plaintiff's contract of employment."

The hearing of the appeal commenced before During. Cole and Turay JJ.A on 4th March, 1981 and ended on 12th March, 1981 when judgment was reserved. Judgment was delivered on 16th April, 1981 allowing the appeal, disallowing the cross-appeal and ordering that the Judgment and orders of the High Court be set aside with costs to the Company to be taxed.

It is against that judgment that the appellant has appealed to this Court. Several grounds of appeal were filed on behalf of the appellant and argued before us by his counsel. It is not necessary to set them out. Suffice it to say that the material issues raised in this appeal may be formulated thus:—

(1) What were the terms of the appellant's Contract of Service?

(2) Was the Company's Executive Handbook (Ex. 'F') applicable to the appellant?

[p.12]

(3) Are "Termination" and "Retirement one and the same thing under the appellant's Contract of Employment?

(4) If "Termination" and "Retirement" are not one and the same thing, was the appellant properly retired in accordance with his Contract of Employment?

(5) Assuming that the Company acted wrongly in retiring the appellant, is the appellant entitled to any damages and if so what amount of damages?

(6) Was the appellant entitled to be employed by the Company until he attained the age of 55 years?

(7) Was the appellant entitled to be paid any amount by way of pension?

I shall now proceed to consider these several issues.

It will be convenient to consider the first and second issues together. In this connection, it will be recalled that when the appellant was first appointed in 1964, he received two letters from B.P. (West Africa) Limited (Ex. 'A' & Ex. 'B'). In the formal letter of Appointment (Ex. 'A') it was stipulated that the appellants engagement was subject to the following conditions inter alia:—

"1. That the company will, so long as you are able to perform and actually do perform the duties required under engagement, pay your salary at the rate of Le.3,200 (three thousand two hundred leones) per annum, payable monthly in arrears.

2. That variation in salary which may latter at any time be made shall not constitute a new agreement but that the terms and conditions of your employment as set out here, except as to such variation, shall continue in force.

3. That your engagement is subject to termination.

3. That your engagement is subject to termination at any time by one calendar month's prior notice in writing on either side, and that the Company's liability for salary will cease on the date your engagement terminates.

4. That you are regarded as undertaking a probationary period of six months.

5. .....

6. That you will not be eligible for membership of a Pension Scheme or Provident Fund Scheme until you have satisfactorily completed the probationary period stipulated."

The forwarding letter (Ex. 'B') so far as relevant stated inter alia —

"As our engagement letter states, you are required to serve a period of probation of 6 months usually before being confirmed. You may then apply to join the Provident and Pension Funds.
……

The company Staff Provident Fund into which the employee, if he wishes to join the Scheme, contributes a sum equal to 5%; is open to executive staff. The monies in the Fund accumulate at interest and cannot be withdraw until such time as the employee leaves the Company. The Pension Fund is non-contributory and applies to executive staff only. If a member reaches pensionable age (55) and has completed 15 years company service his annual pension will be calculated at 1/80th of his earnings over his last year of employment multiplied by his years of service." The appellant accepted the offer of appointment on the basis of the terms and conditions spelt out in the two letters. There could be no doubt therefore that the appellant as well as the company were bound by those terms and conditions.

In January, 1972, management of B.P. (West Africa) Limited branch in Sierra Leone issued a Hand Book entitled "the Executive Staff Handbook". It contained inter alia an Introduction followed by ten clauses each dealing with a specific subject matter and two appendices. Each clause (except two) was sub-divided into sub-clauses. The Introduction was in the following terms:—

"This Handbook has been compiled for the information and guidance of Executive staff, particularly newly joined staff, of BP (West Africa) Limited in Sierra Leone. It describes the conditions of service for staff, giving a brief outline of what the company expects from you and what you can expect from the company.

The company's policy, as reflected in this Handbook, is subject to revision from time to time and you will be advised of such changes by means of amendments to and/or re-issue of the Handbook.

Suggestions which you feel would improve the usefulness of this Handbook will be welcomed and would be sent to the Manager."

Turning to the main body of the Handbook, Clause 1 dealt with Departmental Management. Clause 2 dealt with Terms of Employment including hours of work, leave, career development, transfers, annual assessment, company transport, Retirement/Termination, Provident Fund, and Long Service Recognition. Clause 3 dealt with Training including Educational assistance. Clause 4 dealt with Job Grading/Title. Clause 5 dealt with salary including salary reviews. Clause 6 dealt with Loans and Advances including car loan scheme and Housing Loan scheme. Clause 7 dealt without of Pocket Expenses including expenditure on entertainment. Clause 8 dealt with Medical including medical facilities. Clause 9 dealt with Welfare including discount to staff purchasing BP, products.

Clause 10 dealt with General including communications to Press/Radio — TV and speeches and BP New Bulletin. The first Appendix, numbered 11 dealt with Rent subsidy, Duty Mileage allowance, Touring Allowances, Transfer allowances, leave allowance and Company Accommodation Rental. The second Appendix contained four tables showing the Organograms of the General Management, Account Department, Sales Department and Operations Department.

Copies of the Executive Staff Handbook were handed to all senior staff members of B.P. (West Africa) Limited, Sierra Leone Branch in January, 1972. The appellant was handed a copy. He raised no objections to the terms contained therein. On the contrary, on his own admission he received the allowances as provided far therein and enjoyed all the admittedly better condition contained therein. It will be recalled that in March, 1976 the services of the employees of B.P. (West Africa) Limited were transferred to a new company, B.P. (Sierra Leone) Limited.

On 14th April. 1976 the appellant accepted the offer of transfer and signed the following acceptance:—

"I accept your offer to transfer to BP (Sierra Leone) Limited my full service benefit and existing terms and conditions of employment".

When he signed that acceptance he had been in possession of a copy of the Executive Staff Handbook far over four Years and had been enjoying the benefits provided for therein for the same period.

So when he accepted to transfer his existing terms and condition of employment he was well aware of the terms and conditions laid down in the Handbook and was infact enjoying the benefits conferred. In those circumstances, the appellant could not seriously or honestly say that the terms and conditions laid down in the Handbook were not applicable to him. It is therefore not surprising that both the trial Judge and the Court of appeal rejected the contention that the terms and conditions contained in the Handbook were not applicable to the appellant. In my judgment therefore the terms of the appellant's contract of employment were [p.16] contained in the formal letter of Appointment (Ex. 'A'), the forwarding letter (Ex. 'B') as well as the Executive Staff Handbook (Ex. 'F').

The next important issue is whether "Termination" and "Resignation" are one and the same thing under the appellant's contract of employment. In its letter dated 31st December, 1976 (Ex. 'E'), the company informed the appellant that the company had decided "to exercise its discretion to retire you effective 31st December, 1976 in accordance with paragraph 2.13 of the Executive Staff Handbook." And in the course of his evidence Mr. Callander confirmed that the appellant had been "retired". It is necessary to set out para. 2.13 of the Executive Staff Handbook It reads:—

"2.13 Retirement/Termination

The normal retirement age is fifty-five years of age; by mutual consent, or at the discretion of the company, this may be extended or fore-shortened.

The length of notice required to be given by either side, in the event of termination or resignation, is clearly laid down in your letter of engagement."

In my opinion this clause makes a clear distinction between "retirement" and "termination". The heading itself makes that distinction. Also whilst the first part of the clause clearly deals with "retirement" at the normal age, or at an extended age or a foreshortened age by mutual consent or at the discretion of the company, the second part of the clause clearly deals with length of notice for "termination" or "resignation" which is laid down in the letter of engagement. In this connection it will be recalled that the appellant's letter of engagement (Ex. 'A') provided in para. 3 there of:—

"3. That your engagement is subject to termination at any time by one calendar month's prior notice in writing on either side……."

[p.17]

In my opinion therefore the clause provides firstly for retirement at the normal age of fifty-five years or at an earlier or later age by mutual consent or at the discretion of the company, and secondly for termination or resignation at any time before retirement by either party giving one month's prior notice. In my (s.i.c) judgment therefore "retirement and termination" do not mean one.

and the same thing under Clause 2.13 of the Executive Staff Handbook I shall now proceed to consider the next issue, which is whether the appellant was properly retired in accordance with his contract of employment. As stated earlier the company exercised its discretion under Clause 2.13 of the Executive Staff Handbook to retire the appellant before attaining the normal retiring age of 55 years. So the question that arises is whether the company properly exercised its undoubted discretion conferred on it by Clause 2.13. I think that it is necessary to point out at the outset that no period of notice of retirement is expressly provided for in the Clause. The second part of the Clause refers to the length of notice required for termination or resignation which according to the appellant's letter of engagement (Ex. 'A') is one calendar month's notice. That length of notice (i.e. one month's is applicable to termination or resignation. There is no indication in the Clause or in any other part of the Contract of Employment that it is applicable to retirement. What then is the position? Is the company entitled to exercise its discretion to foreshorten the normal retiring age of an employee to whom Clause 2.13 is applicable by giving no notice at all, or by giving a day's or a week's or a month's notice? The answer to these questions is provided by the common law. It is well established at common law that where a contract makes no provision as to the time at which an act under the contract has to be performed, the court will in the absence of custom, imply a reasonable time with the object of giving business efficacy to the contract. The position was stated with much clarity by McNair J. in Martin-Baker Aircraft Co. Ltd & Anor. v. Canadian Flight Equipment LD. (1955) 2 Q.B. 556, and I cannot do better than recall his words. He said inter alia at pp. 577-578:

"The common law, in applying the law merchant to commercial transactions, has always proceeded more on the basis of reasonableness in filling up the gap in a contract which the parties have made on the basis of what is reasonable, so far as that does not conflict with the express terms of the contract, rather than on the basis of rigidity. There are abundant illustrations throughout the common law authorities which has subsequently found their place in the great codifying statutes of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, the Marine Insurance Act, 1906, and the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, where this view of the law merchant has been adopted and provision has been inserted to the effect that where the contract makes no provision for either fixing price or premium or time at which an act has to be performed, then the law is that a reasonable price and reasonable premium or reasonable time will be imported. It is, of course true that this kind of consideration can in many cases be excluded by express provision, but where the contract leave the matter open, I think that the common Law approach would be to provide a solution which is reasonable. At the same time, of course, I hope I bear in mind that it is not the function of the court to make a reasonable contract between the parties; and in so far as the matter is one of implying terms one can only imply terms which are necessary to give business efficacy to the contract."

And he continued at p.582:—

"But if an agreement of this nature has to be looked at as a whole, and the whole of its contents considered …….

It seems to me that it is a form of agreement which falls much more closely within the analogy of the strict master and servant cases where admittedly the agreement is terminable not summarily — except in the event of misconduct but by reasonable notice."

[p.19]

Similar principles of reasonableness apply to various types of contracts where no express provision is made in the contract and where no custom is applicable. Examples of such contracts are Sale of Goods, Landlord and Tenant, Licensor and Licensee and Master and Servant. Thus in the absence of express stipulation or custom, a tenancy from year to year is determinable by reasonable notice, which has been established by a long line of authorities to be half a year's notice. Also a contract between a Licensor and Licensee is, in the absence of express stipulation determinable by reasonable notice. See Winter Garden Theatre (London) Ltd. v. Millennium Productions Ltd. (1948) A.C. 173 H.L. Similarly in a contract of Employment where there is no express stipulation as to determination, and no custom is applicable and where no question of summary dismissal arises, the contract can only be determined by reasonable notice. The principle, as it applies to Contracts of Employment, is stated thus in "The Modern Law of Employment" by Fridman at pp.468-469:—

"where no express term has been agreed upon for the duration of the contract, and where no implication can be made of a yearly hiring, either by inference from the circumstances or by applying the presumption as to yearly hiring; the contract will be one for an indefinite hiring. In the absence of any express terms as to termination, and apart from misconduct, the general principle applicable to such contracts of employment is that the engagement can only be terminated after reasonable notice. It is in fact an implied term of such a contract that reasonable notice will be given; and to exclude this term, clear, express Language must be used by the parties. Thus a statement that the contract is terminable "at the option" of the employer will not exclude the implied term as to reasonable notice."

In my opinion the same principle is applicable whether the determination of the employment is by termination, resignation, dismissal or retirement. In all such cases, the determination must, in the absence of express stipulation. Custom or misconduct be by giving reasonable notice.

The next question is whether the fact that clause 2.13 conferred a discretion on the company makes any difference. The clause must be construed in order to determine the limits of the company's discretion. According to the wording of the clause, retirement may take effect either firstly by attaining the normal retiring age of 55 years, or secondly the normal retiring age may be extended or foreshortened or thirdly at the discretion of the company the normal retiring age may be extended or foreshortened. So the parties may by mutual consent agree to foreshorten the retiring age at any time before the employee attains the age of 55 years. Similarly in the Case of retirement at the discretion of the company, the company may decide to foreshorten the retiring age at any time before the employee attains the age of 55 years. In my opinion therefore the discretion conferred on the company by the clause relates to and is limited to the timing of the exercise of the discretion to retire; it has nothing to do, with the company's obligation to give notice of retirement or with the length of notice to be given. Therefore at whatever time the company decides to exercise its discretion before the employee attains the normal retiring age, the company is obliged to give reasonable notice to the employee. I derive support for this view[sic] from the opinion of the English Court of King Bench Division consisting of Lord Alverstone C.J., Bucknill and Bray JJ. given in a special case stated by arbitrators in African Association (Limited) v. Allen (1910) 1 K.B. 396; 26 T.L.R. 234. The facts of that case were that by an agreement between a trading firm and Allen the latter was to serve the former on the West Coast of Africa as a clerk and trade assistant. Clause 2 of the agreement [p.21] provided as follows:— "The said [assistant] shall, as and from the date of leaving Liverpool for Africa become and, subject as hereinafter provided, continue for two years, or until the date of his leaving Africa, in the service and employment of the said employers as clerk and trade assistant for them …… provide always, however, that the employers may at their absolute discretion, terminate this engagement at any earlier date than specified if they may desire to do so" [Emphasis mine]. Clause was as follows:— "Should the assistant fail to give satisfaction to the employers, or to their agent or other representative …… and of such failure the said agent or other representative of the employers shall be the sole judge; or should the assistant absent himself from any duties, or barter or trade in any manner whatever except on the employer's account, and in any such case, the said agent or other representative may summarily dismiss" the employee. It was held that in the absence of misconduct on the part of A1 the employers were not entitled under the proviso to Clause 2 of the agreement to terminate his engagement without giving him reasonable notice.

The report of the case in the Times Law Reports is brief, a[sic] it will be useful to quote from the opinions reported to have been expressed by the Lord Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Bray. The Learned Chief Justice is reported to have said inter alia at 26 T.L.R. p. 235:—

"The only general principle applicable was that, in the absence of misconduct or grounds mentioned in the agreement, dismissal must be subject to notice. As to the particular case, it appeared that Allen, a few months after going to Africa, for some cause not explained, received instructions to go home and that when he came home he was summarily dismissed. Had the employers that right under the agreement? ……. but the question was whether the words at the end of Clause 2, "The employers may at any time hereafter, at their absolute discretion, [p.22] terminate this engagement at any earlier date than specified if they may desire to do so," gave the employers the right to dismiss Allen summarily. Under that Clause, his lordship considered that the employers had an absolute discretion to fix an earlier date fore the termination of the agreement than the two years; but the Clause did not say, nor in his opinion did it imply, that the employers had an absolute discretion to dismiss Allen at any time without giving him reasonable notice. The proviso to Clause 2 was not inconsistent with Allen's having reasonable notice before the termination of his employment."

The brief report of Mr. Justice Bray's opinion is at pp.235-236.

It reads inter alia:—

"In the absence of misconduct, prima facie there was no right to terminate the employment except by giving of reasonable notice, unless there were words in the agreement showing a contrary intention. The proviso to Clause 2, as it seemed to him gave the employers a right to terminate the agreement, before the expiration of two years, in the ordinary way, viz. by giving reasonable notice. In the view there was nothing in the agreement to negative the usual implied rule that the service could not be terminated in the absence of misconduct, except by notice."

What then is reasonable notice? In determining that question, regard must be had to the circumstances of the case. What then are the circumstances of this case? The appellant was at the time of his retirement aged 47 years. He was a highly qualified engineer being a member of the Institute of Mechanical Engineers, member of the Institute of Marine Engineers, follow of the Institute of Petroleum, graduate member of the Institute of Civil Engineers and graduate member of the Institute of Production Engineers, all the Institutes being professional bodies or Great Britain. At the material time he was the Operations Manager earning a basic salary of Le10,192 per annum. According to the company's hierarahy the posts of Accountant, Marketing Manager and [p.23] Operations Manager were on the same level and ranked immediately below the General Manager. The General Manager himself admitted in evidence that it was because of the appellant's seniority that he could not fit into the new structure. In my opinion, having regard to all the circumstances, a period of six months would constitute reasonable notice. In my judgment therefore the appellant was entitled to six months notice and the Company was in breach of contract in failing to give him reasonable notice of retirement. It follows that in my judgment the Court of Appeal was wrong in holding that there was no difference between termination and retirement under the Contract and that one month's notice of retirement was sufficient.

Learned counsel for the appellant submitted before us that the breach of the contract of employment by the Company entitled the appellant to be paid, by way of damages, salary up to the normal retiring age of 55 years. That argument found favour with the learned trial judge and as indicated earlier he awarded damages on that basis. The question then arises: was the appellant entitled under his Contract of Employment to be employed by the Company until he attained the age of 55 years? It is necessary to revert to the terms of the contract. According to the terms of the Contract, the contract was determinable at any time before the appellant attained the age of 55, by one calendar month's notice of termination or resignation, or by mutual consent to retire or by the Company exercising its discretion to retire the appellant by giving him reasonable notice. It is quite clear therefore that the appellant was not entitled to be employed by the Company until he attained the normal retiring age of 55. The Company was entitled to determine the contract at any time by notice of termination, or by foreshortening the normal retiring age by mutual consent or by the exercise of its discretion under the contract. And the fact that the employment was referred to as pensionable and that he was a confirmed officer does not affect the position. This view is supported by Ward v. Barclay Perkins Co, Ltd. (1939) 1 All E.R. 287. In that case the plaintiff was [p.24] employed by the defendant company, who had established a staff endowment and pension scheme, to which the plaintiff had contributed for several years on the footing that he was a staff employee. The rules of the scheme indicated a distinction between employees in temporary or other employment and employees on the staff. "Staff employee" was defined as meaning every male employee on the permanent staff.” The defendants gave the plaintiff 3 months notice to leave, as it appeared that there was no scope for advancement for him. No reflection of any sort was made upon his character — like in the instant case. The plaintiff contended that there was an implied contract that, if he came into the pension scheme, he became a member of the permanent staff, and that he thereby became, subject to such considerations as health, good conduct and the continuance of the company's business, entitled to permanent employment and could not be given ordinary notice until he attained the age of 65, and obtained the full benefit of his contributions. It was held that such a stipulation could not be implied in a contract unless, on the evidence, it was shown to have been mutually intended, and necessary to give business efficacy to the document and the plaintiff's action accordingly failed. In this connection, it is also pertinent to recall the words of Lord Goddard in McClelland v. Northern Ireland General Health Services Board (1957) 1 V.L.R. 594 H.L. He said inter alia at p.601:—

"That an advertisement offers permanent employment does not, in my opinion, mean thereby that employment for life is offered. It is an offer, I think, of general as distinct from merely temporary employment, that is, that a person employed would be on the general staff with an expectation that apart from misconduct or inability to perform the general duties of his office the employment would continue for an indefinite period. But apart from a special condition, in my opinion, a general employment is always liable to be determined by reasonable notice. [p.25] Nor do I think that because a person is offered pensionable employment the employer thereby necessarily engages to retain the employee in his service long enough to enable him to earn a pension."

Learned counsel for the appellant also argued that the appellant was also entitled to be paid his pensionable emoluments under the Pension Scheme. But Learned counsel himself conceded before us that according to the evidence the appellant had agreed to opt out of the Pension Scheme in December, 1975 and that he had been paid all his entitlements under that scheme between December, 1975 and April, 1976. There is therefore no merit in the claim for pensionable emoluments. With regard to the third relief indorsed on the Writ, claiming damages for wrongly inducing the plaintiff by false representation etc. etc., quite apart from the objectionable and scandalous language in which that claim is couched; it lacks any merit in law or substance.

In my judgment all that the appellant is entitled to is damages for breach of contract in that the Company failed to give him reasonable notice of retirement. It is well established that the measure of general damages in cases of this nature is the wages or salary for the period of the notice. I have already held that the length of reasonable notice in the circumstances of this case is six months. Therefore I would award the appellant six months salary as general damages. According to the evidence the appellant's basic annual salary in December, 1976 was Le10,192. I would therefore award him Le5,096 as general damages.

The appellant also claimed 15 per cent of his basic salary as rent allowance. He would have been entitled to be paid his rent allowance during the period of the notice of retirement. Therefore he is entitled to rent allowance for six months as special damages. That is, 15 per cent of 6 months salary (i.e: Le5,096) which amounts to Le764.40.

In the result I would allow the appeal, set aside the judgment and orders of the High Court and those of the Court of Appeal and award the appellant Le5,096 as General Damages and Le764.40 as Special Damages for breach of contract. I would award the costs in this Court as well as the costs in the Courts below to the appellant.

The Appellant is a Chartered Engineer. He has a first degree in Engineering (B.Sc.) London; he is a member of the Institute of Mechanical Engineers and also a member of the Institute of Marine Engineers. He is a Fellow of the Institute of Petroleum, graduate member of the Institute of Production

Engineers from Universities and Professional Bodies of Great Britain. While he was in Britain, he worked for the British Rails as a graduate engineer when he accepted an appointment in London to work for British Petroleum.

His letter of appointment dated the 7th day of December, 1964 and which is Exhibit "A" contains his conditions of service which conditions the appellant accepted. Paragraph:3 of Exhibit “A” states "that your engagement is subject to termination at any time by one calendar month's notice in writing on either side, and that the Company's liability for salary will cease on the date your engagement terminates", Exhibit "B" a letter also dated 7th December, 1964 spells out, among other things, the benefits to which the appellant would be entitled. Paragraph 3 of Ex. "B" states that "The Pension Fund is non-contributory and applies to Executive staff only. If a member reaches pensionable age (55) and has completed 15 years Company. Service his annual [p.27] pension will be calculated out at 1/80th of his earnings over his last year of employment multiplied by his years of service."

After various conversations and correspondents between the appellant and the General Manager the appellant was retired from service with effect from the 31st day of December, 1976 by letter which is exhibit "E" and reads as followings:—

"Dear Mr. Vincent,

We would refer to our various conversation (Vincent/Callander) on the 29th and 30th December, 1976. We would now formally advise you of the company's decision to exercise its discretion to retire you effective 31st December, 1976 in accordance with paragraph 2.13 of the Executive Staff Handbook. The following entitlements are due to you and we would be obliged if you could call on the undersigned as soon as possible to finalise the matter:—

(1) One month’s salary in lieu of notice Le 976.73

(2) Outstanding leave balance/ 1,327.00

(3) Provident Fund 14,023.06

(4) End of Service Benefit 3,136.00

(5) Ex Gratia Retiral Gratuity 3,000.00

Le.22,462.00

Note:— Income Tax to be deducted at source where applicable.

Finally we would like to thank you for your service on the years and wish you every success in the future.

Yours sincerely,

N. Callander

General Manager."

The appellant then consulted a solicitor Mr. Hodson Harding. Various letters were written by Mr. Hodson Harding and Dr. W.S. Marcus-Jones who was the solicitor for the Respondents.

[p.28]

Both solicitors kept in constant touch with their respective clients, and on the 17th February, 1977, Mr. Hodson Harding wrote a letter which is Exhibit "L" to the appellant requesting him, among other things to collect all his documents and to consult another solicitor.

A writ of summons dated 21st day of February, 1977 was issued by Mr. T.S. Johnson, Solicitor and Counsel for the appellant claiming damages for the following:—

(1) Breach of the Plaintiff's contract of employment.

(2) Damages for wrongful dismissal of the Plaintiff from the defendants employment.

(3) Damages for wrongly inducing the Plaintiff by false representation and by the unconscientious use of power and authority, to yield to the Defendant's discriminatory and unlawful design to, deny the Plaintiff his right of participation in the Defendant's Executive Staff non-contributory Pension scheme preparatory to the Defendant's secret plan to dismiss him unlawfully from its employment."

From the lengthy statement of claim accompanying the writ of summons, para. 16 states:—

"By reason of the above, the Plaintiff has been greatly injured. Particulars of damage:—

Loss of eight years salary to retirement at the pensionable age of 55 years (calculated to take into account reasonable expectation of appointment to the office of General Manager) Le.114,980.00 — lump sum compensation in lieu of pensionable emoluments (Twenty years at Le.3,000.00 per annum) 60,000.00

The appellant who was 35 year of age when he joined the respondents Company testified as to his periodic rise in salaries up to the time he was designated operations Sales Engineer and also as to the other benefits he was receiving. Sometime in November, 1975, the appellant had been approached by the Accountant who was at the time acting as General Manager about the appellant's employment with the Respondent, and in respect of the non-contributory staff pension scheme. The Accountant told the appellant to go and think about it. There were two Sierra Leoneans in the scheme, when the Company was been B.P. (West Africa) Ltd. During the same month in November, 1975, the substantive, general Manager returned. He also spoke to the appellant about the scheme and asked whether he had thought about it. The Manager said that he would not operate the scheme for the appellant alone. Various conversations took place between the appellant and the General Manager about the scheme. The appellant felt that he was pressurized to such an extent that he might run into difficulty. He then asked the General Manager what was meant by the scheme. The General Manager explained that the scheme was worth Le.18,000.0. This discussion took place in December, l975. The appellant agreed to opt out and to accept payment by instalments. In December, 1975, the General Manager paid the appellant the first installment of the sum of Le.5,000.00.

On 31st March, 1976 the appellant was informed that a local Company known as B.P. (Sierra Leone) Ltd. had been incorporated in Sierra Leone. He tendered a letter which is Exhibit "C" to this effect. The letter informed the appellant about the change of name of the Company.

The appellant received another sum of Le.5,000.00 during the early part of April 1976 in connection with the non-contributory staff pension scheme, and he was then requested to sign a document. The appellant enquired about the balance of Le.8,000.00 and he was told that the amount would go towards income tax on the transaction. The appellant made enquiry at the Income Tax [p.30] Department when he was no longer in the employ of the respondents and he was told that no amount had been paid. This was in January, 1976.

On the 29th December, 1976 the appellant was called into the office of the General Manager he told him that the Company was being restructured and as a result he would not fit into the new structure. When the appellant asked the General Manager what he meant, he was told that he could either be made redundant or he could resign, there being no alternative. He was told to go and think about it and to let the General Manager know what he had decided. According to his testimony, the appellant said that the General Manager later told him that because of the appellant's high qualification and seniority, he would not fit into the new structure. The appellant then wrote a letter to the General Manager on the 29th December, 1976. He did not receive a reply to the letter but he and the General Manager discussed the contents of the letter. It was during the discussion, the General Manager told him that the fact that he would not fit into the new structure had nothing to do with his efficiency but it was because of his high qualification and seniority. The General Manager told him that if he was made redundant or retired by the Company he would receive Le.15,000.00 as benefits but if he resigned, he would receive the sum of Le.8,000.00 in addition to the sum of Le.17,000.00. At this stage, the appellant suggested going on leave so as to give him time to consider the matter but the General Manager refused to grant him leave, and gave the appellant up to the next day to have his decision as the matter was urgent. On 30th day of December, 1976 the appellant wrote another letter the General Manager for a confirmation of the monetary discussion they had had the previous day. This Letter was handed to the General Manager on the 31st day of December, 1976. On the morning of the same day, the General Manager telephoned the appellant and assured him that he was a man of his word but the amount was increased to Le.10,000.00. The letter the appellant wrote to the General Manager is Exhibit "D" and reads thus:—

"Dear Mr. Callander.

1. I refer to my interview with you yesterday Wednesday the 29th instant.

2. You will recall you told me that in view of the proposed re-organisation of the Company, I might not easily fit in the new setup, because of my high qualification. You advised me that there are two choices open to me. One is for the Company to make me redundant, in which case my benefits will be about Le.17,000.00. The other cause is for me to resign, in which case you told me that in addition to the Le.17,000.00, I will further be paid the sum of Le.8,000.00.

3. I should be grateful if you kindly confirm that the benefits to be paid me in the case of redundancy or resignation as stated by you at our interview. This will enable me to come to a decision.

4. I look forward to hearing from you soon.

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) T.O. Vincent.

c.c. J.C. Eastwood, Esq.,

Managing Director,

B.P. Ghana Limited,

P.O. Box 553

Three hours later, the appellant received a letter dated 31st 1976, which was a retirement letter. This letter is Exhibit "E" and is in the following terms:—

"Dear Mr. Vincent,

We would refer to our various conversation (Vincent/Callander) on 29th and 30th December, 1976. We would now formally advise you of the Company's decision to exercise its discretion to retire you effective 31st December, 1976 in accordance with Paragraph 2.13 of the executive Staff Handbook. The following entitlements are due to you and we would be obliged if you could call on the undersigned as soon as possible to finalise the matter:

(5) Ex Gratia Retiral Gratuity	3000.00

Note:— Income Tax to be deducted at source where applicable.

Finally we would like to thank you for your service over the years and wish you every success in the future.

Yours sincerely,

N. Callander

General Manager.

The appellant testified that since he left the respondents Company he had not been able to obtain alternative employment although he had been making efforts to get one.

The appellant was familiar with Exhibit "F" and he agreed that the respondents' Company had all rights to retire employees before they attained the age of 55 years as embodied in clause 2 sub clause 13 of Exhibit "F", but he did not regard Exhibit "F" to include him as he joined the Company in February, 1965 and that Exhibit "F" pertained to people who joined the service after January, 1972, although he received allowances as stated in Exhibit "F" because they were better conditions. He said — "it is correct the Company has tendered to me one month's salary in lieu of notice in accordance with my conditions of service but I have not collected it."

There were several meetings between Hr. Callander, the General Manager and the appellant over the pension scheme, and according to Mr. Callander the appellant agreed for the purchase of his pension without any duress or pressure when he signified his signature on Exhibit "M" after a letter dated 25th November, 1975 had been addressed to him. Mr. Callander told the appellant, [p.33] that Mr. Eastwood and himself had decided that the Company's organisation must be changed as it was not proving completely effective or cost conscious enough, and much that he regretted that there was no position for a person like the appellant because of his seniority in the new organization, the Company was faced with the choice of either declaring him redundant requesting his resignation or his retirement. Mr. Callander even explained to the appellant the financial implications that would be evolved. The appellant expressed surprise and regret and asked for some time over the matter. He was then asked to give his decision on the 30th December, 1976 which he failed to do.

At lunch time on the 29th December, 1976 the appellant went to see Mr. Callander and expressed his surprise that he should be retired after eleven years service when he had not faulted on his job performance. Further explanations were given to the appellant and he undertook to give his decision on the 30th day of December, 1976. The next day, the appellant did return to work although the General Manager had recovered a medical certificate giving him four days excuse duty. On the afternoon of the 30th December 1976, the General Manager telephoned the appellant who asked the General Manager to write to him on the financial details being offered. The General Manager offered to give him the details over the telephone which he did. Matters of Tax position were also discussed over the telephone. The appellant then promised to let the General Manager have his answer by 4.30 p.m. on 30th December, 1976. When no answer was received, a letter of retirement was issued to him on 31st day of December, 1976.

Counsel then addressed the Court and made submission in support of their respective clients, backed by authorities.

On the 25th day of September, 1979, Williams J. delivered judgment in the case. The learned Judge considered carefully the arguments presented by both counsel and went over the evidence of the appellants and respondents.

[p.34]

The learned Judge said that—

"…… it behoved the Defendant/Company then to show to this Court that it acted lawfully in the exercise of its discretion as contained in paragraph 2.13 of the Handbook.

The only way to do so was to adduce evidence that a decision to exercise the discretion was taken by the Board of Directors at a Board Meeting duly convened for that purpose. It must be emphasized that the Defendant/Company is a corporate body, which by law must be controlled by a Board of Directors. Without doubt such a major decision must, of necessity come from the Board. There is no evidence that such was taken and approved of by the Board of Directors of the Defendant/Company, to exercise its discretion under regulation 2.13 of the Handbook to retire prematurely a very high rated Executive like the Plaintiff.

…… in justifying their action, the Defendant/Company must show firstly, that a decision was taken according to law. Secondly, the Defendant/Company must show that acting on their behalf, there was proper delegation of power to Callander to implement such decision. As a Company law, they can only do so by producing evidence that such a decision was taken at a Board meeting. There is no such evidence and I dare say that the swiftness with which the whole matter was mentioned, left no room to bring any Board decision ……. Rather, Mr. Callander acting on behalf of the Defendant/Company frantically telephoned the plaintiff on the 30th December, 1976 even though the plaintiff was to his knowledge, ill and in bed. He was there and then pressing for the resignation of the plaintiff. When that was not forth-coming, Mr. Callander acting on behalf of the Defendant/Company issued a letter of premature retirement to the plaintiff ……. why did Mr. Callander act with such indecent haste? …….. There is no evidence that the Defendant/Company ever rectified the apparently unilateral action of their Managing Director or General Manager ……"

The learned trial Judge then highlighted the various unique and remarkable qualifications of the appellant and said—

"With the employment situation in Sierra Leone it is not surprising that the plaintiff has found it difficult to obtain employment according to his qualifications and status."

The learned Judge made references to several authorities to justify his conclusion of the case.

At the end the learned Judge gave judgment for the appellant in the sum of Le.90,955.10 and costs to be taxed. In the course of delivering the judgment, the learned Judge said:—

"The Plaintiff has remained unemployed since 31st December, 1976 the date on which he was wrongfully retired prematurely. In spite of his efforts he has been unable to secure alternative employment.

Having regard to the scope of employment for the plaintiff which is very narrow in Sierra Leone, the imbalanced probability that he would be able to obtain alternative employment within the next five years or so and up to the time when he would have been due for normal retirement cannot be emphasized. I think therefore that having regard to all the circumstances of this case and the scarce possibility of the plaintiff obtaining employment in Sierra Leone in the near future, I will award him damages assessed at eight years salary less an amount for contingencies of life. Calculated on the basis of Le.976.73 per month, the amount of damages would total Le93,766.08. I allow reduction by Le.2,812.98 leaving a net balance of Le.90,955.10. The other claims of the plaintiff are disallowed.

The Plaintiff will have judgment in this case in the sum of Le.90,955.10 and the cost of those proceedings, such costs to be taxed."

It is against that judgment, the respondents appealed to the Court of Appeal on the following grounds:—

[p.36]

(a) That the learned trial Judge was wrong in law

(i) In holding that the Managing Director of the Appellant/Company acted without authority of the Board of Directors.

(ii) In finding that evidence of a decision of the Board with respect to the retirement of the Plaintiff, was essential for proving the fact of his retirement.

(b) That the learned trial Judge was wrong in law in awarding damages to the Plaintiff and in the event acted on wrong principles of law.

(c) That the decision is against the weight of the evidence. There is also a cross-appeal by the appellant. His grounds of appeal are:—

(1) There being no evidence of any mutuality between the plaintiff and the defendant with regard to Exhibit "F" the defendant's executive Handbook — the learned trial Judge erred in law in holding that the defendant without the consent of the plaintiff, had a discretion to retire the plaintiff prematurely in accordance with the said Exhibit "F" and in breach of his contract of employment.

(2) The learned trial Judge reed in law in disallowing the plaintiff's claim of Le.60,000.00 being lump sum compensation claimed in lieu of pensionable emoluments lost arising out of the defendant's proven breach of the plaintiff's contract of employment.

The appeal and cross-appeal were heard before During, Cole and Turay JJA. on the 5th day of March 1981 and subsequent days.

In the Court of Appeal, During J A. who delivered the judgment of the Court agreed, with the learned trial Judge that paragraph 3 of the statement of claim failed having regard to the evidence"

[p.37]

The learned Justice then said:—

"What this Court has to consider is was there a breach of Contract of Employment which would amount in law to wrongful dismissal? The Court must bear in mind that a claim for wrongful dismissal is a claim for breach of contract and not a claim in tort and that it ought not to apply on the question of damages the same principles it would apply in a claim in tort in a claim for breach of contract.

After fully reviewing the evidence and discussing arguments presented by both Counsel, both Counsel agreed with the learned trial Judge that the respondents by virtue of Exhibit "F" had the right to retire the appellant at their discretion, and that Exhibit "F" was binding on the appellant. The learned Justice went on to deal with the facts of the case and the laws pertaining to those facts, and, in the end said:—

"We set aside the judgment in the Court below and order that all amounts paid by the appellants to the respondent be repaid under the judgment. We order that the respondent pay the costs of the appellants in the Court below such costs to be taxed. We allow the appeal of the appellants with costs such costs to be taxed and disallow the cross appeal of the respondents with costs to the appellants to be taxed."

Being aggrieved with the judgment of the Court of Appeal, the appellant has now appealed to this Court His grounds of appeal are:—

“(1) The appellant herein having cross-appealed to the Court of Appeal on the following ground, to wit — There being no evidence of mutuality between the plaintiff and the defendant with regard to Exhibit “F” — the defendants Executive Handbook — the learned Judge erred in law in holding that the defendant, without the consent of the plaintiff, had a discretion to retire the plaintiff prematurely in accordance with [p.38] the said Exhibit "F", the Court of Appeal erred in law in holding that the said Exhibit "F" was binding on the parties on the ground of mutuality, formed part of the contract of employment, and in dismissing the cross appeal despite the defendant's evidence to the contrary.

(2) The Court of Appeal erred in law in failing to distinguish between and in equating, Termination under the plaintiff's contract of employment — Exhibits A and B with premature retirement under Exhibit "F", and in doing so wrongly ignored the evidence of the Defendant — the author of the said Exhibits A and B and F — admitting such a clear distinction between the said terms.

(3) The Court of Appeal erred in law in holding that the appellant's employment was terminated under the contract of employment and erred in law in discountenancing both the Respondent's is pleading on the point and its evidence in support thereof.

(4) The Respondent not having appealed to the Court of Appeal against the damages awarded by the High Court, or against its quantum, and the question of damages not having been canvassed during the hearing of the said appeal, the Court of Appeal erred in law in adjudicating on the question of damages and in holding that one month's salary was the proper measure of damages under the contract of employment."

It has been argued before this court that the Appellant was not retired in accordance with his terms of contract which is Exhibit A and B but was retired by virtue of Exhibit "F" which the appellant said was not applicable to him because when he was employed Exhibit "F" was not in existence.

I am unable to follow such argument. The appellant was employed in 1965, and while he was still in the employment of the respondent's company, Exhibit "F" came into existence and he even derived benefit under Exhibit "F" a Handbook dealing with the [p.39] general conditions and instructions of the respondent. Exhibit "F" specifically states that an employee could be prematurely retired

It does not stop at this but it also states that an employee who wanted any provision to be fully explained, was at liberty to apply for such explanations. It is important to note that Exhibit "F" came in existence in 1972, and since that time, the appellant had no quarrel with any of its provisions until when, one of the provisions was invoked to his detriment. However, there has been a concurrent finding that Exhibit "F" binds the appellant, and reading carefully the case of SRIMATI BIBHABATI DEVI v KUMA RAMANDRANARAYAN ROY (1946) A.C. 508 relating to concurrent findings of fact many prepositions were laid down, and in the present case, there are no special circumstances to warrant a departure from them. In the case of AGIP (SIERRA LEONE) LTD. V ABASS ALI EDMASK (By His Attorney Adnan Nayef Abess Allie and the Paramount Chief of Kakua Chiefdom Council of the Kakua Chiefdom Bo District) S.C. Civ. App. No.2/71, Cole, C.J. dealt adequately and exhaustively with the propositions laid down in Devi's case (supra) when he listed the eight propositions which described as containing good sense. He then said:—

"In the present appeal I find no special circumstances, namely, any miscarriage of justice or any violation of some principle of law or procedure nor do I consider it a Case of an unusual nature on this particular question to justify a departure from this well established practice."

The principles laid down in Devi's case were adopted in the case," of YACHUK AND ANOTHER v OLIVER BLAIS CO. LTD. (1949) A.C.386 and in the STOOL OF ABINABINA v CHIEF KOJO ENYIMADU (1953) A.C. 207

I have carefully read the evidence with regard to Exhibit “F” and my opinion it would be hopeless to contend that there are not sufficient evidence to support and fully substantiate the conclusion of both the learned trail judge and court of Appeal to arrive at the findings.

Having concluded that the appellant was bound by Exhibit “F” what was his position with regard to the Handbook which states that the normal retirement age is thirty-five years of age; by mutual consent or at the discretion of the Company this may be extended or fore-shortened. Since it appears from the discussions between the appellant and the Manager of the respondent's Company that it seemed impossible to obtain mutuality owing to the appellant's frequent delay in his replies and his sudden illness, the respondents invoked the alternative solution of retiring the appellant at their discretion.

It has been suggested that compensation should be paid to the appellant or at least reasonable notice should have' been given to him. It is a pity that this regard the appellant must have obtained legal Advice, which at best, was nebulous.

The parties in this case have contracted that either by mutual consent or at the discretion of the respondent, the appellant could be premature1y retired.

In the absence of mutual consent, the appellant was retired in accordance with the terms of the contract, at the discretion of the respondent.

The matter is well illustrated in Batt, Law of Master and Servant (5th Edition) Chapter v at page 117. It states that "…….. the parties to a contract of service have complete liberty to make what ever terms they choose; they may make elaborate provisions about every person the contract, or example, as to wages, then and where payable, what duties are to be performed by the parties, and when and where such duties are to be performed what length of notice is to be required to terminate the contract, what are to be the rights of the parties on the illness of the employee, what are to be the rights of their representatives on the death of either of them, and so on.

The only general limitation on this freedom of contract is the general rule that the Courts will not enforce or recognise any agreement the purpose of which is deemed by law to be illegal."

[p.41]

In other words, the courts cannot imply terms in contract between parties so as to make a new contract for them. To emphasize this most important function of contractual parties:

cite REIGATE v UNION MANUFACTURING CO. (1918) q K.B.D. 592 at 60

Sorutton L.J. said:—

"The firs thing is to see what the parties have expressed in the contract and then an implied term is not to be added because the Court thinks it would have been reasonable to have inserted it in the contract. A term can only be implied if it is necessary in the business sense to give efficacy to the contract that is, if it is such a term that it can confidently be said that if at the time the contract was being negotiated someone had said to the parties, “what will happen in such a case", they would both have replied, "of course so and so will happen, we did not trouble to say that, it is too clear". Unless the Court comes to some such conclusion as that, it ought not to imply a term which the parties themselves have not expressed."

Makinson, L.J. said in the case of SHIRLAW v SOUTHERN FOUNDERI

"I recognise that the right or duty of a Court to find the existence of an implied term or implied terms in a written Contract as a matter to be exercised with care, and a Court is too often invited to do so upon vague and uncertain grounds. Too often, also, such an invitation is backed by the citation of a sentence or two from the judgment of Bowen, L.J. in The Moorcock (1889) 14 P.D. 64.

They are sentences from an extempore judgment as sound and sensible as are all the utterances of that great judge but I fancy that he would have been rather surprised if he could have foreseen that these general remarks of his would come to be a favorite citation of a supposed principle of law, and I even think he might sympathise with the occasional impatience of his successors when The Moorcock (1889) (Supra) is so often flashed before them [p.42] in that guise. For my part, I think there is a test that may be at least as useful as such generalities. If I may quote from an essay, which I wrote some years ago, I then said:

"Prima facie that which is any contract is left to be implied and need not be expressed is something so obvious that it goes without saying.'"

It is stated in Chitty on contract (22nd Ed.) paragraph 599 that

" ……. in the construction of all instruments it is the duty of the Court not to confine itself to the force of the particular expressions, but to collect the intention of the parties from the whale instrument taken together, but where by the use of general words such intention is clearly and unequivocally expressed, every court is bound by it, however capricious it may be, unless it is plainly controlled by other. parts of the instrument.”

In WARDS v BARCLAY PERKINS, & CO. LTD. (1939) 1 All E.R. at page 287, the plaintiff was employed by the defendant/Company, who has established a state of endowment and pension scheme, to which the plaintiff has contributed far several years on the footing that he was a staff employee. The rules of the scheme indicated a distinction between employees in temporary or other employment and employees on the staff …… The defendants gave the plaintiff 3 months notice to leave, as it appears there was no scope for advancement for him. No reflection of any sort was made upon his character. The plaintiff contended that there was an implied contract that, if he came into the pension Scheme, he became a member of the permanent staff, and that he thereby became, subject to such consideration as health, good conduct and the continuance of the company's business, entitled to permanent employment, and could not be given ordinary notice until he attained the age of 65, and obtain the full benefit of his contribution. It was held that "such stipulation could not be implied in a contract unless, on the evidence, it was shown to have been mutually intended, and [p.43] necessary to give business efficacy to the document" — This could not be said the present case, and the plaintiff, therefore, failed in his action. Oliver J. at page 289 said:—

"In my judgment, one has to read a great many of these rules in order to see whether or not the stipulation is to be implied — in other words, whether or not it is consistent with other passage in the rules. It must be borne in mind, indeed, it is conceded that no stipulation ought to be implied in a contract unless upon the evidence it must be taken to have been mutually intended, and necessary to give business efficacy to the document, which I think, is the expression as quoted in the Moorcock (1889) 14 P.D. 64, and is the one usually adopted …… "

McNair J. in the case of MARTIN BAKER CO. LTD. v CANADIAN FLIGHT EQUIPMENT LTD: SAME v MURBISON (1955) 2 Q.B. 577 at page 733 said:—

"The common law, in applying the law merchant to commercial transactions has always proceeded, when filling up the gaps in a contract which the parties have made, on the basis of what is reasonable, so far as that does not conflict with the express terms of the contract, rather than on the basis of rigidity. There are abundant illustrations throughout the common law authorities which have subsequently found their way in the great codyfying statutes of the Sales of Goods Act, 1873, The Marine Insurance Act; 1906, and the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, where this view of the law merchant has been adopted and a provision has been inserted to the effect that where the contract makes no provision for fixing either the price, premium or time, at which an act has to be performed, then the law is that a reasonable price or reasonable premium, or reasonable time, will be implied …….. but, where the contract leaves the matter open, I think that the common law approach could be to provide a solution [p.44] which is reasonable. At the same time I bear in mind that it is not the function of the Court to make a reasonable contract between the parties, and, in so far as the matter is one of implying terms, one can only imply terms which are reasonable to give business efficacy to the contract …….. "

"I start with this proposition, that prima facie every contract is permanent and irrevocable, and that it lies upon the person who says that it is revocable or determinable to show either some expression in the contract itself, or something in the nature of contract, from which it is reasonably to be implied that it was not intended to be permanent and perpetual, but to be in some way or other subject to determination. No doubt there are great many contracts of that kind: a contract of partnership, a contract of master and servant, a contract of principal and agent, a contract of employer and employed in various modes all these are instances of contracts in which, from the nature of the case, we are obliged to consider that they were intended determinable……."

In the case of READ v ASTORIA GARAGE (STREATHAM) LTD. (1932) 2 All E.R. at page 292, a private company incorporated in 1932,adopted as its articles Table "A" of the Companies Act, 1929, art. 68 of which provides:

"The directors shall from time to time appoint one or more of their body to the office of Managing Director …… for such term and for such remuneration ……. as they may think fit, and a director so appointed shall not, while holding that office be subject to retirement by rotation, or taken into account in determining the rotation or retirement of directors; but his appointment shall be subject to determination ipso facto if cease from any cause to be a director; or if the Company in general meeting resolve that his tenure of office of managing director ……. be determined."

In January, 1932, at the first meeting of directors of the company it was resolved that the plaintiff "be and he is hereby appointed managing director of the Company at a salary of £7 pen week as from Monday February 1, 1932." At a later date the salary was increased. At a meeting of the directors on May 11, 1949, it was resolved that the plaintiff's "employment be terminated", and the secretary was instructed to send him a month's notice, but the Company paid his salary until, on September 28, 1949, an extraordinary meeting of the Company was held at which a resolution approving the action of the directors in removing him from his office was passed. In an action by the plaintiff claiming, inter alia, damages for wrongful dismissal and breach of contract on the ground that, he had not been given reasonable notice. It was held that:—

"……since the resolution of the directors appointing the plaintiff as managing director contained no special terms beyond the fixing of his remuneration and neither amplified nor was inconsistent with the provisions of art. 68, the plaintiff was appointed managing director on the terms of art 68, with such tenure of office as was provided for by that article; in the absence of any contract between the parties independent of art. 68 and the resolution there was no ground for implying a term as to reasonable notice; and therefore, the plaintiff had no special right to receive any particular notice of termination of his employment when the Company decided to determine it and did so by resolution in general meeting."

The above authorities cited, have the same common features and these are—

(1) that no stipulation or term Can be implied in a contract, unless, upon the evidence, it must be taken to have been mutually intended, and necessary to give business efficacy to the contract;

(2) that it is not the function of the Court to make a reasonable contract between parties, and in so far as the matter is one of implying terms, one can only imply terms which are reasonable to give business efficacy to the contract;

(3) that the party who says that the contract is revocable must show either some expression in the contract itself or something in the nature of contract, from which it is reasonably to be implied that it was not intended to be permanent and perpetual, but to be in some way or other subject to determination and

(4) where the contract contains no special terms beyond what the parties have agreed upon, and neither amplified nor was inconsistent with the provisions in the contract, there could be no ground for implying a term as to reasonable notice, the plaintiff would have no special right to receive any particular notice of termination of his employment.

In the present case before this Court, the parties have express in Exhibits A, B and F exactly what they wanted. They have agreed to give a month's notice by either side in case of termination or resignation. In Exhibit F which came into operation in 1972, the parties also agreed that the normal retiring age should be fifty five years of age but "by mutual consent or at the discretion of the Company this may be extended or foreshortened." The parties also agreed that any clarification in Exhibit “F” if necessary, [p.47] could be suggested or discussed with the General Manager. There was no evidence that any request for clarification was ever made by the appellant.

It is clear what "the parties have expressed in the contract, and in such a case, the court cannot imply a term because the court thinks it would have been reasonable to have inserted it in the contract. The appellant insisted that exhibit "F” which had been in existence since 1972 and from which he benefited — benefit which he did not refuse, that he was not bound by it. I do not agree with him. There is provision in Exhibit "A" for termination by one Calender month's notice on either side, but in the absence of notice, a month's salary in lieu will suffice. A month's salary was offered to the Appellant who refused to accept the off because he believed that he was wrongfully dismissed. All the entitlements were paid into Court including end of service benefit to which he was not legally entitled.

Mr. Johnson, Counsel for the appellant strenuously argued that Exhibit "F" was not binding on the appellant, but the contrary arguments derived its chief strength from the fact that the appellant knew of the existence of Exhibit "F", since 1972. The appellant received benefits under Exhibit "F". He knew of the rules and conditions contained in Exhibit "F". He knew that if a clarification of Exhibit "F" was necessary, he could have discussed the matter with the General Manager. Many discussions or conversations took place between the appellant and the General Manager in December, 1976, and these discussions apparently took place with[sic] the object of obtaining mutuality.

Failure to obtain mutuality, the General Manager invoked the alternative term of retirement at his discretion — discretion conferred upon him by the contractual terms to retire the appellant. Most of the authorities deal with termination of appointment but the long list of authorities which I have carefully scrutinized, some of them either by statute, bye-laws or licensing laws bears no place in the case before this court. It may be argued that the common law rules may be applied to this case by analogy, [p.48] but even the common law has its imitations when the matter relates to ordinary contracts devoid of any regulations.

There remains, as the one live issue in this case, the question of how a discretion van be exercised.

Stroud's Judicial Dictionary (4th Ed. at page 792) states that 'Discretion', is the herb of grace that l could wish every Commissioner of sewers well stored withal. But note that “(in 23 Hen. 8 C. 5)" the word 'wisdom' is coupled with it, and the word 'good' is annexed to them both, as best showing of what pure metal they should be made of — after good, wisdom and discretion. There are several degrees of discretion: Discretion generalis, Discretio legalis, Discretio specialis.

(a) Discretio generalis is required of everyone in everything that he is to do or attempt;

(b) Legalis discretio is that which Sir E. Coke meaneath and setteth forth in Rooks and Keighley's case, and this is merely to administer justice according to the prescribed rules of the law;

(c) The third discretion is where the laws have given no certain rule …….. and herein discretion is the absolute judge of the cause, and gives the rule. (Callis 112, 113).

I may add Francis Bacon Essays “of Judicature’ Judge ought of remember that their office is jusdicare and not jus dare — to interpret the law and not to law or give law. Bacon’s words have been widely accepted in England as a classic, description of the judicial function. Judges, even when they are in truth creating law, almost invariably profess to be declaring, interpreting and applying pre-existing norms in new situations.

I have made reference to Bacon's Essays because if this Court attempts to imply terms to an unambiguous contract before us, after reading carefully the entire evidence and perusing deligently [p.49] the exhibits in this case, the court would be acting contrary to the rules of law and creating injustice. There is no doubt that the case before the Court falls within discretion generalis.

It is trite law that there is no mode of forcing a person which has discretionary power to exercise his discretion in a particular manner, and the role of the courts is limited to ensuring that discretion has been exercised according to law, see: THE KING v BISHOP (1831-1832) Vol. 2 Barnwole & Adolphus Reports page 158 at page 163. In that case, Lord Tenterden C.J. gave a very short judgment. The learned C.J. said:—

"The authority given to the registrars by this patent is to exercise the office by themselves or one of them, or by a sufficient deputy or deputies to be appointed by them, and to be approved of and allowed by the bishop'. In this case he disapproves of the appointment, and he distinctly states that he has good and sufficient reasons for so doing. It is true, he says he has made no charge, reflection, or insinuation against any person's character: but he may have reasons sufficient to determine his judgment, without feeling called upon to throw out imputations. He has, by law, the power of approving or disapproving, and we cannot call upon him to exercise it in one particular way or another."

Applying this principle in the present case it is apparent that this Court (apart from laws and regulations) cannot inquire into the exercise of the discretion of the respondents not even by any far-fetched analogy.

In the construction of all instruments it is the duty of the Court not to confine itself to the force of the particular expressions, but to collect the intentions of the parties from the whole instrument taken together, but where by the use of general words such intention is clearly and unequivocally expressed, every Court is bound by it, however capricious it may be, unless it is plainly controlled by other parts of instrument: See Chitty on Contract (22nd Ed.) paragraph 599.

The relevant principles which emerge from the use of discretion (apart from statutory, by laws or other regulations) may be broadly summarised as follows:— The authority in which a discretion is vested can be compelled to exercise that discretion but not to exercise it in any particular manner. In general, discretion must be exercised only by the authority to which it is committed. That authority must genuinely address itself to be matter before it.

In the appeal before this Court, there is evidence that discussions took place in December, 1976 between the appellant ------ the General Manager of the Respondents/Company with view of arriving at mutuality. The appellant, whether by design or otherwise always requested further time. Eventually, when the last of his decision was expected, he forwarded a sick report excusive him four days off work. The respondents therefore invoked the alternative and retired him on the 31st December, 1966. The respondents was not obliged in law to give any notice. The retirement could take any form either summarily or otherwise.

At the same time I must admit that terms have been inserted in contracts governed by law statute, bye-law and other regulation and even in these cases have been implied to give business efficacy to the transaction. But the contract in this appeal has left no gap — nothing left open to entitle the interference of the Court. There is no gap to fulfill, and no inserted term can give business efficacy to the contract. This filling of the gap has been severely criticised by Lord Simonds when he said "it appeal to me to be a naked usurpation of the legislative function under the disguise of interpretation. And it is less justifiable when it is guesswork with what material the legislative would, if it had discovered the gap, have filled it in. If a gap is disclose the remedy lies in an Amending act."

As I have said earlier that there is no gap in an unambiguous contract between the appellant and the respondents with regard the contract, if there has been a gap or equivocal terms in the contract, the parties could have filled" up the gap or remedied equivocal terms since 1972.

Upon my understanding of the evidence and the arguments presented to this Court, I would act on the footing that the appeal and cross-appeal be dismissed I set aside the judgment of the High Court and accept the judgment of the Court of Appeal. I allow costs in this Court and the Court below to the Respondents.

(Sgd.) Hon. Mr. Justice O.B.R. Tejan, JSC

AWUNOR-RENNER. J.S.C.:

This is an appeal against the decision of the Court of Appeal dated the 16th day of April, 1981. On that date the Court of Appeal allowed the appeal of B.P. (Sierra Leone Ltd. (hereinafter referred to as the respondent) and dismissed the cross-appeal of Thomas O. Vincent (hereinafter referred to as the appellant).

I need not restate the grounds of appeal nor most of the facts. It is sufficient to say that this has already been done but however for the sake of clarity in my judgment let me just narrate a few of the facts which I think are relevant.

On the 7th December, 1964 a letter Ex. A couched in the following terms was addressed to the appellant by the Group Manager Administration B.P. (West Africa) Ltd.

"Dear Sir,

With reference to your recent interview we now write of offer you an engagement as an Engineer subject to the following conditions:—

(1) That the Company will, so long as you are able to perform the duties required under your engagement pay you salary at the rate of Le.3,200 (three thousand two hundred leones) per annum monthly in arrears.

(2) The variation in salary which may 1ater at any time be made shall not constitute a new agreement but that the terms and conditions of your employment as set out here, except as to such variation shall continue in force.

[p.52]

(3) that your engagement is subject to termination at any time by one calendar months prior notice in writing on either side, and that the Company's liability for salary will cease on the date your engagement terminates.

(4) that you are regarded as undertaking a probationary period for six months

(5) that you will be eligible for four weeks leave for each completed year of service with the Company and will be required at all times to carry out to the best of your ability all proper instructions and undertakings given to you by the Company.

(6) that you will not be eligible for membership of a pension scheme or Provident Fund Scheme until you have satisfactorily completed the probationary period stipulated.

(7) that you successfully pass medical and X-Ray examinations and that reference, taken up by us are satisfactory.

The date of your engagement is to be fixed by mutual agreement if you will let us know at what date you will be able to commence. If, however you are not able to commence employment with our Company before 1st March, 1965, this offer of employment will be considered as being withdrawn. If this offer is acceptable to you will you will please sign hereunder and return this letter. A signed copy is enclosed herewith for your retention.

Yours faithfully,

B.P. (West Africa) Ltd.

N. CAMPBELL

Group Manager Administration.

"To:

The Group Administration Manager.

B.P. (West Africa) Ltd.,

P.O. Box 512

I have read the foregoing offer of employment and now confirm my acceptance of the conditions set out herein.

Date……. Signed……"

[p.53]

A further and final letter, Ex. B, offering the appellant employment in the Company was also addressed to him on the 7th December, 1964. The contents of that letter reads as follows:

"Dear Mr. Vincent,

We have been in correspondence with our Head Office in London concerning your application for employment and we are now pleased to be able to send you our Formal Letter of offer of employment. As you see, we have left the starting date open but, as in our practice in these cases have stipulated a date by which you would have to start or have our offer withdrawn.

If you accept our offer would you please complete and return to me the enclosed application for employment form. This will keep our records straight. We shall of course, wish to write to previous employers etc., so I would be grateful if you would ensure that the addresses and dates on the forms are reasonably accurate. I am afraid that we do not offer assistance in passages to West Africa and hope that you are able to make arrangements to come to Freetown yourself. As our engagement letter states, you are required to serve a period of probation of six months usually before being confirmed. You may then apply to join the Provident Fund and Pension Funds.

The Company grants a loan to buy a car after an executive completes a minimum of 3 months satisfactory employment. The loan is interest free, repayable over 36 months. When an employee uses his car for business purposes, a car mileage allowance is paid. The Company Staff Provident Fund into which the employee, if he wishes to join the scheme, contributes 10% of his salary, the Company on its part contributing a sum equal to 5%, is open to executive staff. The monies in the fund accumulate at interest and cannot be withdrawn until such time as the employee leaves the Company.

The Pension Fund is noncontributory and applies to executive staff only. If a member reaches pensionable age (55) and has completed 15 years Company Service his annual pension will be calculated at 1/80th of his earnings over his last year of employment multiplied by his years of service.

The Company will not provide you with a house either in Sierra Leone or in Nigeria, where you will probably do a period of temporary duty after a preliminary period in Sierra Leone. However; while you are on temporary duty outside the country of normal domicile the Company will assist you to find suitable accommodation and will pay you a special allowance.

I hope that you will now have enough information to allow you to decide and I will look forward to hearing from you, and if you accept our offer an indication of when you will be able to report for duty in Freetown.

Yours sincerely,

B.P. (West Africa) Ltd.

N. CAMPBELL

Group Manager Administration"

As can be seen from the evidence adduced in this case, the appellant accepted the offer of employment on the terms and conditions stipulated in the two letters I have referred to above and took u [sic] appointment with the Company on the 2nd February, 1965 at the age of 35 years. Sometime in the early part of 1973 the appellant said in his evidence that he was given an Executive Staff Handbook in connection with his employment by the respondents. He himself tendered this book in evidence as Ex. F. The introduction in Ex. F(s.i.c)states that this handbook has been compiled for the information and guidance of Executive Staff particularly newly joined staff of B.P. (West Africa) Ltd. in Sierra Leone. It also describes the conditions of service for staff giving a brief outline of what the Company expects from his employees and what they should expect from the Company. It further states that the Company's Policy is [p.55] reflected in the handbook and is subject to revision from time to time and that the employees would be advised of such changes. Amongst the provisions contained in Ex. F is a paragraph numbered 2.13 which reads as follows:

Retirement or Termination.

The normal retirement age is 55 years of age, by mutual consent or at the discretion of the Company this may be extended or foreshortened.

The length of notice required to be given by either side in the event of termination or resignation is clearly laid down in your letters of appointment."

On the 31st March, 1976 a letter Ex. C was written to the appellant asking him whether he was willing to transfer his service to B.P. (Sierra Leone) Ltd. with his full service benefits and existing terms and conditions of employment. He was to signify his acceptance of his employment with B.P (Sierra Leone) Ltd. in the following terms —

"I accept your offer to transfer to B.P. (Sierra Leone) Ltd. my full service benefits and existing terms and conditions of service."

This he did.

On the 29th December, 1976 the appellant was called in to the office of the General Manager of the respondent/company and was told that they were restructuring the Company and that as such he would no longer fit into the new structure and after some discussions and correspondence the appellant claimed he received a letter on the 31st December, 1976 which he said was a retirement letter.

He did not go to work again.

I think that it is convenient at this stage to set out the letter of retirement. This letter has been tendered as Ex. E and the contents reads as follows —

[p.56]

"Dear Mr. Vincent,

We would refer to our various conversations (Vincent/Callander) on the 29th and 30th December, 1976. We would now formally advise you of the Company's decision to exercise its discretion to, retire you effective 31st December, 1976 in accordance, with the paragraph, 2.13 of the Executive Staff Handbook.

The following entitlements are due to you and we would be obliged if you could call on the undersigned as soon as possible to finalise the matter.

(1) One month's salary in lieu of notice Le967.73

(2) Outstanding leave balance/leave allowance Le1,327.00

(3) Provident Fund Le14,023.06

(4) End of Service Benefit Le3,136.00

(5) Ex Gratia Retiral Gratuity Le3,000.00

Le22,462.79

Note: Income Tax to be deducted at source where applicable. Finally we would like to thank you for your service over the years and wish you every success in the future.

Yours sincerely

On the 21st day of February 1977 the appellant issued a write against the respondents claiming

(1) Breach of the plaintiff's contract of employment.

(2) Damages for wrongful dismissal of the plaintiff from the defendant's employment.

(3) Damages for wrongly inducing the plaintiff by false representation and by the unconscientious use of power and authority to yield to the defendant's discriminatory or unlawful design to deny the plaintiff his right of participation in the defendant's Executive non-contributory Pension Scheme preparatory to the defendant's secret plan to dismiss him unlawfully from its employment."

In his Statement of Claim the plaintiff alleged the following—

"Particulars of Damage

Loss of eight years salary to retirement at the pensionable age of 55 years (calculated to take into account reasonable expectation of appointment to office of General Manager) — Le.114,980.00

Lump sum compensation in lieu of pensionable emoluments (Twenty years at Le.3,000 per annum) — Le.60,000.00

Total — Le.174,980.00

Plus 15% of Le.114,980 i.e.

rent allowance 17,247.00

Le.192,227.00

In the concluding paragraphs of his judgment which was in favour of the appellant the learned trial judge said and I quote—

"The plaintiff has remained unemployed since 31st December 1976 the date on which he was wrongfully retired prematurely.

In spite of his efforts he has been unable to secure alternative employment.

Having regard to the scope of employment for plaintiff which is very narrow in Sierra Leone the imbalanced probability that he would be able to obtain alternative employment within the next five years or so and up to the time when he would have been due for normal retirement cannot be over emphasised. I think therefore that having regard to all the circumstances of this case and the scarce possibility of the [p.58] plaintiff obtaining employment in Sierra Leone in the near future. I will award him damages assessed at eight years salary less an amount for contingencies of life.

Calculated on the basis of Le.976.73 per month the amount of damages would total Le.93,766.08. I allow reduction of this amount at the rate of 3% as I said for contingencies of life. That means the amount allowed is reduced by Le.2,812.98 leaving a net balance of Le.90,955.10. The other claims of the plaintiff are disallowed.

The plaintiff will have judgment in this case in the sum of Le.90,955.10 and the costs of these proceedings, such costs to be taxed."

Subsequently the respondents herein appealed to the Court of Appeal against the decision of the learned trial judge. The Court of Appeal allowed the appeal, set aside the judgment of the Court below and ordered that all amounts paid by the respondents to the appellants be repaid under the judgment. It is against that decision that the appellant has now appealed to this Court.

Various arguments have been canvassed in this Court by both Counsel for the appellant and the respondent. In the main it was contended by Counsel for the appellant Mr. T.S. Johnson that the terms of employment of the appellant were contained in Exs. A & B supra and that as such he could only have been terminated under the provisions contained in the two exhibits. He argued that Ex. F was not binding on the appellant as the provisions contained therein applied only to employees who had entered the employment of the respondents after that document came into operation. He further said that even if Ex. F was binding on the appellant the respondent were bound to negotiate the question of compensation with the appellant and to see what he would accept for his enforced retirement. He was entitled to reasonable compensation he said. He stressed however that though the appellant was retired under Ex. F this point was not a ground of appeal and was not canvassed.

Mr. J. Smythe for respondents countered Counsel for the appellant arguments in short by saying that the appellant had been lawfully retired under Ex. F. He argued further that Ex. F was is binding on the appellant and that all the respondents did was to retire the appellant under paragraph 2.13 of Ex. F, as they, were entitled to do without giving him any notice whatsoever. They had rightfully exercised their discretion and as such it could not be said that the appellant had been wrongfully dismissed.

The problem must as it appears to me to be confined in the present case to the question whether the appellant was in fact bound by Ex. F the handbook and in particular by paragraph 2.13 I have already stated supra the provisions contained in that paragraph. It must therefore follow that the proper matters for consideration is the meaning and effect of the language used in 2.13 and also the purpose for which Ex. F was intended. I would deal with the latter first. Ex. F was compiled for the information and guidance of Executive staff particularly newly joined staff of B.P. (West Africa) Ltd. It also describes the conditions of service of staff and the Company's policy. I have already dealt with this fully above. The appellant was a member of the Executive staff. Quite clearly Exhibit F affected existing staff and in particular newly joined staff. There is also evidence to show that the appellant accepted certain benefits contained in it before he was retired. I therefore have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the appellant was bound by Ex. F. It was so held by the trial judge and the Court of Appeal.

The letters of appointment Exs. A and B indicate certain conditions of employment, the breach of which is alleged to be the foundation of the action for wrongful dismissal by Counsel for the appellant in the present case but since I have already held that the appellant was bound by Ex. F. in my view it is to the handbook to which one must turn to ascertain the rest of the conditions of employment particularly paragraph 2.13. What then is the meaning and effect of that paragraph. In short were the [p.60] respondents entitled to retire the appellant at their discretion at an earlier date, if so, was he entitled to reasonable notice as well although this was not provided for? Could this Court there-fore infer the words (reasonable notice) under the circumstances in the present case.

In Batt on the Law of Master and Servant 5th Edition at pages 27, 61 and 117, it is stated as follows:

"Subject to statutory exceptions hereinafter mentioned the parties may now agree to any form of contract of service containing any stipulations the parties desire so long as the agreement does not involve an illegal purpose or is not otherwise contrary to public policy."

"The basis of our contract law is the common law, not statute and the essentials of the law of Master and Servant are thus founded on the common law, for in spite of many statutes regulating the relations of Master and Servant, the creation and termination of that relationship depends upon the free agreement of the parties and the enforceability of agreements is in the main a matter of common law and not of statutory regulations."

"The length of a contract of service depends entirely upon the agreement of the parties; it may be any period from an hour or a day to years, or even the lives of the contracting parties; since there seem no doubt that an agreement to serve for life is perfectly valid in the absence of vitiating elements such as fraud, undue influence or undue restraint of trade."

"The parties to a contract of service have complete liberty to make whatever terms they choose; they may make elaborate provision about every aspect of the contract, for example as to wages when and where payable what duties are to be performed, what length of notice is to be required to terminate the contract and so on."

To start with it must first be discovered what terms the parties have expressly included in their contract since every contract must be read as a whole and effect must be given to the intention of the parties collected from their expressions of it as a whole "Particular terms are to be construed in that sense which is most consistent with the general intention." See FORD v BEACH 1848 11 Q.B. page 852.

Apart from terms in a contract, which the parties have expressly adopted, there may be others imported into the contract either by custom or by statutes or they may be implied by the Courts in order to reinforce the language of the parties and realize their intention. However a term may be excluded in accordance with the general principles of the common law either by clear and unambiguous language or if its implication would be inconsistent with an express term of the contract. In the case of LYNCH v THORNE reported in (1956) 1 A.E.R. at page 744. The defendant contracted to sell to the plaintiff a plot of land on which was a partially erected house and to complete its construction. The contract provided that the walls were to be [sic] nine-inch brick. The defendant built the house in accordance with this specification but it was in fact unfit for human habitation because the walls could not keep out the rain. The Court of Appeal in giving judgment for the defendant could not imply a …… [sic] in the contract which could create an inconsistency with the express language of the bargain. As a matter of fact the Courts have in a host of cases refused to imply terms in contracts and similarly have been willing to do so in other cases when this becomes necessary depending on the circumstances of each case.

To mention a few in the case of the Moorcock reported in All E.R Reprint 1886-1890 at page 530. The Headnote reads as follows;

"Contract — Implied term — term needed to give efficacy to transaction — Prevention of failure of consideration — presumed intention of parties — Agreement by Ship owners to discharge and load cargo at wharf — Damage through grounding of ship at ebb tide uneven bed of river. Implied warranty by wharfingers as to safety of the river bed."

In that case the defendants also had agreed in consideration of charge for landing and storing the cargo to allow the plaintiff a ship owner to discharge his vessel at their jetty. The jetty extended into the Thames and as both parties realized the vessel must ground at low water. Whilst she was unloading, the tide ebbed and she settled on a ridge of hard ground beneath the mud. The plaintiff sued for the resultant damage.

It was held that both parties must have known when entering into the agreement that unless the ground was safe the ship could be placed in a position of danger and that all the consideration for the payment by the plaintiff to the defendant for the use of the wharf might fail and therefore, a term was to be implied in the agreement that the defendants warranted that they had taken reasonable care to see that the berth was safe and that if it were not safe they would warn the plaintiffs of that fact, and the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed. Bowen L.J. at page 534 had this to say —

"I believe that if one were to take all the instances which are many of implied warranties and convenants in law which occur in the earlier cases, which deal with real property passing through the instances which relate to the warranties of title and of quality, and the case of executory contracts of sale and other classes of implied warranties like the implied authority of an agent to make contracts, it will be seen that in all these cases the law is raising an implication from the presumed intention of the parties with the object of giving to the transaction such efficacy as both parties must have intended it should have.

If that is so the reasonable implication which the law draws must differ according to the circumstances of the various transactions, and in business transaction, what the law desires to effect by the implication is to give such business efficacy to the transaction as must have been intended by both parties; not to impose on one side all the perils of the transaction, or to emancipate one side from [p.63] all the burdens, but to, make each party promise in law as much, at all events, as it must have been in the contemplation of both parties that he should be responsible for."

In the case of WARD V BARCLAY PERKINS & CO. LTD. reported in (1939) 1 All E.R. at page 287 where the plaintiff in that case had been given three months notice to leave the employment of the defendant company the plaintiff had contended that there was an implied contract that if he that if he came into the pension scheme he became a member of the permanent staff, and that he thereby became subject to such considerations as health, good conduct and the continuance of the Company's business, entitled to permanent employment and cou1d not be given ordinary notice until he attained the age of 65 and he obtained the full benefit of his contribution, It was he1d that such a stipulation could not be implied in a contract unless on the evidence, it was shown to have been mutually intended and necessary to give business efficacy to the document. This could not be said in the present case, and the plaintiff, therefore, failed in his action.

See also the case of LISTER v ROMFORD ICE AND COLD STORAGE

CO. LTD. reported in (1957) A.C. at. page 555. The House of Lords by a majority gave judgment for the respondents by implying in the masters favour that the servant would "serve him with good faith and fidelity and that he would, use, reasonable care and skill in the performance of his duties." They however refused to imply a term in favour of the appellant that the respondents should indemnify him "against all claims or proceedings brought against him in the course of his employment".

The next point I have to deal with is whether the respondents were entitled to retire the appellant at an earlier date under paragraph 2.13 of Ex. F without giving him reasonable notice. 2. 13 is headed as follows:

"Retirement or termination," And continues "The normal retirement age is 55 years of age. This may be extended or foreshortened by mutual consent or at the discretion of the Company."

[p.64]

"The length of notice required to be given by either side in the event of termination or resignation is clearly laid down in your letter of engagement."

Paragraph 3 of Ex. A the letter of appointment states as follows;

"That your engagement is subject to termination at any time by one calendar month's prior notice in writing on either side and that the company's liability for salary will cease on the date your engagement terminates."

Quite clearly the letter of appointment Ex. A makes proviso for termination by giving one calendar month's notice in writing on either side. Similarly in the event of resignation or termination under paragraph 213 of Ex. F either side could give one calendar month's notice in writing. However when it comes to the question of retirement, this could be either by mutual consent or at the discretion of the Company. I have already stated above certain principles i.e.

(1) The parties are at liberty to make any form of contract of service containing any stipulations they desire provided that it is not contrary to public policy or for an illegal purpose

(2) That one must look at the express terms of the contract and

(3) That terms could only be implied into a contract by the Courts under certain circumstances.

The general principle is that where the contract of service is silent as to notice the Court will infer reasonable notice. See Batt on the Law of Master and Servant Fifth Edition at page 75.

I quote

"Except where the hiring is for a definite period, the contract must be terminated by notice, and where the parties are silent at the time of making the contract as to notice, the Court will be anxious to find that a reasonable notice must be given, on either side"

[p.65]

See also Chitty on Specific Contracts Twenty First Edition at page 545 which also states as follows:—

"Where the contract of service does not contain any stipulation as to notice it can only be determined by reasonable notice."

The general principle therefore is that in the absence of any express term as to termination (emphasis mine) and apart from misconduct, the engagement can only be terminated after reasonable notice. There are many reported decisions on this point.

In the case of RE AFRICAN ASSOCIATION v ALLEN reported in (1910) 1 K.B. at page 696 in spite of a clause in the contract providing "that the employers may at any time at their absolute discretion, terminate this engagement at an earlier date than specified if they may desire to do so" it was held on the reading of the contract as a whole, that the employers could not in the absence of an agreement terminate the engagement without reasonable notice (Batt on Master and Servant Fifth Edition at page 76).

In that case the Lord Chief Justice Alverstone in giving judgment said—

"The only general principle applicable was that in the absence of misconduct or grounds mentioned in the agreement dismissal must be subject to notice."

Mr. Justice Bray was of the same opinion and he thought that must be taken that under an agreement of employment such as they were dealing with in the absence of misconduct, prima facie there was no right to terminate the employment except by giving reasonable notice, unless there were words in the agreement showing a contrary intention. In his view there was nothing in the agreement to negative the usual implied rule that the service could not be terminated in the absence of misconduct except by notice.

Let me now try to see whether this case could be distinguish from the present case. In the case of Re AFRICAN ASSOCIATION LTD v. ALLEN, the Association claimed that they had an absolute discretion to terminate the employment of Allen as this was contained in an agreement made between the parties. Also in the [p.66] same agreement there was provision for Allen's Services to be terminated in the event of misconduct or on other grounds mentioned in it. The whole contract however was silent as to notice at the time of making it. No provision had been made for it in any event, therefore in that case the only alternative appeal to the Court was for it to imply reasonable notice in the absence of misconduct unless there were words in the agreement showing a contrary intention. In short in order to exclude the implied to as to reasonable notice for termination clear express language must be used by the parties.

In the present case there was express provision for termination by giving one month's notice on either side. There was express provision also for resignation; one calendar month's notice and finally there was an express provision in the contract for retirement at the discretion of the Company without notice by mutual consent.

In the case of MARTIN BAKER, LTD. v CANADIAN FLIGHT EQUIPMENT LTD. (1955) 2 All E.R. at page 722. R.M. was appointed sole selling agent of the North American Continent of all products of M.B. He agreed to use his best endeavours to promote sales in that territory: to act as general marketing consultant for M.B. and not to become interested in the sale of competitive products His remuneration was to be a commission at the rate of 17½ percent on orders obtained by him. M.B. desired to terminate the relationship summarily which he did. Any unilateral termination of the relationship by either party to a contract will be, wrongful unless it is done in accordance with the contract, if there was an express term dealing with the matter. If no such express term exists it will depend upon the construction of the contract. The common intention of the parties with regard to the power of termination must be ascertained in the light of all the available evidence.

"The Common Law, in applying the law merchant to commercial transactions has always proceeded, when filling up the gaps in a contract which the parties have made on the basis of what is reasonable. So far as that does not conflict with the express term of the contract, rather than on the basis of rigidity. There are abundant illustrations throughout the common law authorities which have subsequently found their place in the great codyfing statutes of the Sale of Goods Act 1893, the Marine Insurance Act 1906 and the Bills of Exchange Act, where this view of the law merchant has been adopted and a provision has been inserted to the effect that, where the contract makes no provision for fixing either price or premium, or time at which an act has to be performed, then the law is that a reasonable premium or reasonable time will be implied.

It is of course true that this kind of consideration can in many cases be excluded by express provision, but where the contract leaves the matter open, I __ think that the common law approach would be to provide a situation which is reasonable. At the same time, I bear in mind that it is not the function of the Court to make a reasonable contract between the parties and in so far as the matter is one of implying terms which are reasonable to give business efficacy to the contract."

It was also held in this case that the agreement of March, 9 1954 regarded as a whole was more analogous to an agreement between Master and Servant than to an agreement merely of agency as R.M was to expend much time and money and was restricted from selling other person's product. Accordingly the agreement on its true construction was also determinable by reasonable notice, apart from the provision of Clause 4(iv) which rendered it determinable summarily in certain specified events.

So we see that even in this case express provisions had been made for the summary determination of the contract only under certain circumstances and since no provision was made for notice the only possible thing to do was to infer reasonable notice.

See also the case of McCLELLAND v NORTHERN IRELAND GENERAL HEALTH SERVICES BOARD reported in 1957 2 All E.R. at page 129. By an advertisement in a newspaper in June 1978, the board invited applications for posts which I subject to a probationary period will be permanent and pensionable". The appellant applied for a post and in July 1948 was selected for appointment. Conditions of service known as the "September Conditions" were approved in September 1948. The appellant accepted the conditions, and her[sic] employment which under them was probationary until confirmed, was confirmed in February, 1949.

Under Clause 9 of the conditions, every employee was required to take the oath of allegiance and failure to do so involved immediate dismissal. By Clause 12 the Board could dismiss any officer for gross misconduct or who was proved to be inefficient and unfit to merit continued employment, and except in the case of gross misconduct, the Board had to give at least one month's notice of their intention to exercise their powers of dismissal, all permanent officers who wished to terminate their employment with the Board had to give one month's notice in writing. In 1953 the Board sought to terminate the employment of the appellant on the ground of redundancy of staff and she was finally given 6 months notice expiring in August 1954. The appellant contended that her employment was not subject to termination or reasonable notice by the Board.

Held —

"The Appellant's employment had not been validly terminated by the Board because it was terminable only as provided in the September conditions which was exhaustive in that respect, and, accordingly a power to terminate hand, accordingly a power to terminate her employment by reasonable notice could not be implied."

Lord Oaksey had this to say in his judgment at page 132—

[p.69]

"The clauses I have set out all contain express powers of termination and in my opinion there is no ground for suggesting that it is necessary to imply a further power to terminate the contract in order to give the contract the efficacy which the parties must have intended it to have."

In the case of READ v ASTONA GARAGE LTD. (1952) Ch. at page 637.

It was held that where a managing director was appointed under an article which provided that his appointment was subject to determination ipso facto if the Company by a resolution in a general meeting resolved that his tenure of office be determined, it was held that the appointment could be determined without notice.

As I have already stated above the only point in this case on its true construction, and on a fair reading of it as a whole is whether the respondents could retire the appellant at their discretion. My answer is Yes. The reasons which have lead me to this conclusion are reasons arrived at by processes of comparison and analysis of the various principles and cases mentioned supra and also, on the facts of the present case which is simply that the appellant was appointed in accordance with Exs. A & B and held such tenure of office as was provided for under these two exhibits and paragraph 2.13 of Ex. F. and in my opinion had no special right to receive any particular notice in the event of the respondents deciding to retire him under paragraph 2.13 of Ex. F. Express provisions have been made in this contract and I see no reason to depart from them.

There is however, I think one or two more matters which ought to be taken into consideration. On the other hand, let me for one moment assume that the appellant was entitled to reasonable notice, See Batt Fifth Edition at page 64 which states as follows—

[p.70]

"It is a question of fact for the Court to determine what length of notice the parties contemplated at the time of the creation of the engagement in order to terminate it and their intention, if the terms of the agreement written or oral are silent must be gathered from the circumstances of the case, the nature of the employment, the period at which wages of salaries are paid and the length of notice if any customary to such engagement in the locality or trade in which the agreement is made."

Also in Batt supra at page 78. It is also stated that—

"Decided cases do not conclude the matter, each case must depend upon its own particular facts and a previous case of similar facts is merely a guide as to the future and not binding either on the judge or the jury as governing the case then to be decided."

In the instant case the 1enght of notice required for termination and resignation was one calendar month's notice. The appellant's salary was to be paid monthly. Each case must depend upon its own particular facts and looking at this contract as a whole one could discern that the parties did not intend the perch of notice in any event to exceed one calendar month. I however cannot therefore see how reasonable notice in the present case could exceed one calendar month's notice even if the appellant will retired at the discretion of the respondents. The next question is, was he entitled to any damages.

"If the contract expressly provides that it is terminable upon e.g. one month's notice, the damages will ordinarily be a month's wages."

I think that this is all the appellant was entitled to and this has already been offered to him by the respondents. Even if the appellant had been wrongfully dismissed from his employment the damages for the dismissal cannot include compensation for the [p.71] manner of his dismissal, for his injured feelings, or for the loss he may sustain from the fact that the dismissal of itself makes it difficult for him to obtain fresh employment. See the case of ADDIS v GRAMOPHONE COMPANY LTD. Law Reports (1910) A.C. at page 488.

Notwithstanding the majority judgment of this Court, I am unable to adopt their conclusions. I still think that the judgment of the Court of Appeal ought not to be disturbed. For the reasons which I have already given above, I would dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Costs to the Respondents in this Court and the Courts below.

Dr. W.S. Marcus-Jones for Appellant

J..H. Smythe, Q.C. and with him Mr. Manley-Spain for the Respondents

JUDGMENT DELIVERED THIS 4TH DAY OF JULY. 1985

TEJAN. J.S.C.

The Appellant was an employee of the Respondents in January, 1961, in Liberia, and in June 1965, he was transferred to the branch of the Respondents' Company in Sierra Leone when he had become a Senior Mechanic. In 1970, he was promoted to the post of Superintendent of Maintenance. On 11th November, 1974 the Respondents' workshop was burgled, officers of the Criminal Investigation Department were called, and afterthe appellant had checked the items in the store, he was taken to the

C.I.D. where he was detained for a whole day and night. In January, 1975 the appellant had cause to query one Mr. Scott a fitter in the employment of the Respondents. The query which is exhibit “A” is in the following terms:—

"To: E.M. Scott (Workshop Fitter)

From: E.B. Smith

Date: January, 8, 1975.

Please explain and give reasons why you failed to repair the following faults on the Company's vehicle WR 1251 assigned to you since 6th of January 1975.

(1) The Radiator (2) The Exhaust Pipe. Further you opened the racker cover and dismantle the Caburator switch which I think was uncalled for.

Please explain.

(Sgd.) E.B. Smith

Operations Supervisor.”

A copy of exhibit “A” was sent to the Operations Supervisor. Mr. Scott replied to exhibit “A” on the same day. The reply is exhibit “B” and reads as follows:

“To: E.B. Smith, Maintenance Foreman

From: E.M. Scott

Date: January 8, 1985.

I received your Memorandum dated 7th January, 1975 with regards your observation on my Job. (1) on your return from leave there was nothing between us as things were normal. After a week a case arise about a coil rope missing from the Jetty, and when it was alleged that you told the marine crew that I sold the rope when very well you know that you took it. I was being asked about it and my answer was no, failing to answer that which I have not done, I was being in mind of you and you avoided not even given me jobs: I only took jobs for myself.

In the case of the Bedford Lorry, the driver reported the defects to me, straight away I started working on the vehicle and told the driver to tell Mr. Smith about the vehicle and [p.3] that I am working on it. After my discovery of all the faults I reported them to you; your reply was I don’t care to know. I went as far as to tell you about the lamps ordered were not the correct ones you told me to fit them as it is, your attention was being drawn by me about the bulbs that were not available and you said nothing.

Also Cylencer and Radiator which wore not done by the welders, you said nothing again, instead you keep on shouting and I was molested. We have garage hands but by then they were not available a day the rest of the two hours are spent as house boys.

On Sundays they work as houseboys and paid by Texaco. First and foremost there was nobody to carry the Cylencer to the Welders.

With these few explanations of mine I think things would come to normal and co-operation.

(Sgd.) E.M. Scott

Operations Supervisor"

The appellant wrote to the District Manager. The letter is exhibit "C" dated 9th January, 1975. The letter explained the circumstances of how a particular houseboy was employed and how the houseboy used to press his suits on few Sundays. For clarity, it is necessary to quote Exhibit "C" which is in the following terms:-

"To: The District Manager

From: E.B. Smith

Date: January, 9, 1975.

Fitter E.M. Scott was queried by me with two letters dated 7th and 8th of January, 1975.

Instead of answering the query he brought up allegation that (i) Workshop boys work six hours a day and (ii) One Sunday they went and work as my house boys and they are paid by Texaco.

These allegations are wrong and to explain further I have workshop boy who used to work as houseboy to me. Before he started with me he was working with a European who had long retired from S.A. Coore. My wife engaged him. He later complained that the payment was small because he had wife and children. Because he was very good my wife asked me to help him get a casual job. So he started with Pa Pratt. Because he can iron properly few days Sundays I would ask him to press my suits when they used doing and after a dash that is all but sending men from the Terminal to work at my house is totally incorrect. Because my wife has two to three boys on hire who does all her business

c.c. Operations Supervisor"

Another query which is exhibit "D" dated January, 1975 was sent to Mr. Scott. It reads: —

"I have observed that you have been very reckless with all jobs assigned to you and also you idle your time chatting in the main stores down the marine etc.

(ii) On the 6th January in the morning WR1461 was assigned to you for repairs. The radiator was dismantled and left unrepaired.

You got the welder and plater idle while you leiter the compound.

If your attitude does not improve in future you will face disciplinary actions.

(Sgd.) E.B. Smith

[p.5]

In consequence of exhibits "B", "C" and "D" one Mr. Manley was asked to carry out an investigation. After Mr. Manley has presented the report of his investigation, the appellant was summarily dismissed by letter dated 17th January, 1975. The letter which is exhibit "E" is in the following terms:

"Personnel

E.B. Smith

Dear Sir,

Due to gross misconduct and negligence in the execution of your duty, brought to light in a recent investigation at our terminal, we have to advice you that as from 11.45 hours on January, 18th (Eighteenth) 1975 you are summarily dismissed from Texaco Africa Limited, Freetown.

Will you please present yourself to the Accounts office on Tuesday, January 21st, to collect any monies due you.

Yours very truly,

Texaco Africa Limited

(Sgd.) G. Cooper

District Manager."

Following his dismissal, the appellant on the 19th March, 1975 commenced proceedings against the Respondents by the issue of a writ of summons claiming damages for breach of contract, wrongful dismissal and wrongful detention of goods. In their statement of defence, the Respondents pleaded that they would contend that the appellant was well aware of the charges of gross misconduct and negligence in the execution of his duty made against him and was given the opportunity to defend himself, and would also contend that this dismissal was justifiable on the grounds of gross misconduct and negligence in the execution of his duties.

The case was heard by M.E.A. Cole, J (as he then was) on 20th November, 1975 and subsequent dates. The learned Judge, after carefully listening and examining the evidence of both [p.6] the appellant and respondents, on 17th March, 1977 dismissed the appellant's claim for detinue but gave judgment for the appellant for wrongful dismissal, and made the following awards:

Leave allowance	Le.	75.00
Rent allowance		33.00
Transport allowance		5.00
Night allowance work days		90.00
Night-do-Sundays		180.00
Salary-do-		28.00
General damages	Le.	2025.00
TOTAL	Le	2436.75

It is against that judgment that on the 21st day of April, 1977, the Respondents appealed to the Court of Appeal on the following grounds:—

"(1) That the trial Judge erred in law in failing to consider whether there was sufficient evidence which the Appellant had believe in good faith they would have been justified in dismissing the Plaintiff from their services.

(2) That the trial Judge wrongfully assessed the evidence.

(3) That the decision could not be supported having regard to the evidence.

(4) That the trial Judge applied wrong principles of law in considering the meaning of "Unlawful Dismissal".

The appeal was heard by S.B. Davies; J.A. (as he then was) Warne and Navo JJA. On the 31st day of March, 1981, S.B. Davies J.A. (as he then was) delivered the judgment of the Court. The Court agreed with the findings and conclusions of the trial Judge in every issue with the exception of the issue regarding 2(12 volt batteries). The appeal was allowed and the judgment of the court below was set aside with costs in that Court as well as in the Court below.

The appellant (Smith) being dissatisfied with the Judgment of the Court of Appeal, on the 15th day of June, 1981 appealed to this Court on a number of grounds. These grounds are:

(1) That the summary dismissal of the Appellant was bad and unfair by reason of the fact that the decision to dismiss was based on the findings of a secret investigation which was not brought to the appellant's notice, and in which he was not given an opportunity of testifying or defending himself.

(2) That at the time of the appellant's dismissal the withdrawal of three batteries from store on charge slip No. 2395 was not the reason constituting “gross misconduct and negligence” as justifying the dismissal. The Court of Appeal therefore erred in law in finding that the withdrawal of the batteries was sufficient misconduct to entitle the Respondents to dismiss the Appellant summarily.

(3) That the Court of Appeal were wrong in law in equating authority to withdraw, with actual withdrawal and in holding that the Plaintiff's signature on the charge slip No. 2395 was irregular.

(4) That the Court of Appeal were wrong in finding that the Respondent had satisfied the burden of proof cast upon it by law to justify the dismissal of the Appellant.

(5) That the Court of Appeal were wrong in law in disturbing the specific findings of fact by the learned trial Judge and describing them as “inferences” to be drawn from facts.”

Dr. Marcus-Jones for the appellant contended that the procedure adopted by the Respondents in the conduct of the investigation carried out by Mr. Manley breached the rules of natural justice. To deal with this contention, it is necessary to consider the circumstances which culminated in the dismissal of the appellant. I have already quoted exhibits "A", “B", "C" and "D”.

As a result of exhibits "B", "C" and "D" the respondents decided to engage the services of the Searchlight Agency (of which one Mr. Manley was the head) to investigate. A room in the respondents' place of business was allocated to Mr. Manley for this purpose. Mr. Manley then proceeded with his investigation in this manner: Several employees of the respondent Company were called separately into the room in the absence of the appellant who was unaware that his conduct was being investigated. Each employee was interrogated and a written statement obtained from him. The appellant was not called into the room to enable him to admit or deny the statement of the other employees.

On the 13th January, 1975, Mr. Manley interrogated the appellant who made a statement which is exhibit "S". Exhibit "S" is very illuminating, and it explained lucidly and in detail all the allegations which might or might not have been made against him. In his statement the appellant said inter alia:—

"I fully remember one day when I was leaving for town, Mr. Isaac Williams called me and asked me to collect three (3) 12 volt batteries from Lucas House. He did not give me the local purchase order. The L.P.O. had already been taken to Lucas House. The batteries had already been filled and charged before I got there. I collected the batteries and handed them over at the stores. The batteries were in the store for sometime and Mr. Williams asked me to draw the batteries from the store for Aspet 4. I told Mr. Williams that those were not the batteries for Aspet 4. I told him that the batteries add [p.9] up to 36 volts and the batteries used by Aspet 4 are five by 6 volts heavy duty. Mr. Williams told me that it will be alright, and that it costs less to run Aspect k as the batteries are only for the lights. I withdraw the batteries from the stores and place them in the workshop. Sometime after, Mr. Williams came to me in the workshop for one of the batteries in order to start his car. Mr. Williams further said that someone had used his battery on the barges and had spoilt it and that he was therefore going to claim the one he was borrowing. I told him that he would have to inform the Manager. Mr. Williams replied that he was not afraid of that so long he could prove that they had used his own battery. Mr. Williams took the battery away. I never asked him for the battery again as I expected he would have seen the Manager. I did not want to involve myself with Mr. Williams as Mr. Floode had told me that Mr. Williams was his assistant and every order he gives I have to carry them out.

It is apparent from the evidence that the appellant was unaware that his conduct was being investigated, that the charges alleged against him were not brought to his notice, and that he was not afforded the opportunity to either admit or deny what was said by the other employees who also made statements. Since the statements were not put in evidence, it is impossible for any, of the courts to say that the statements were either favourable or unfavourable to the appellant. In any event, the manner in which Mr. Manley carried out the investigation was improper and violated all the important rules of natural justice.

In this connection, it is relevant to quote the dicta of Pearce L.J. in RIDGE v BALDWIN (1962) 2 W.L.R. 716 at page 727 He said inter alia:

"Assuming, however, that the defendants did have a duty to inquire judicially of quasi-Judicially did they fail in this duty? The requirements of natural justice do not form a code. They may vary according to the exigencies of the situation. But always three things are needed: good faith (which is not herein in question) a knowledge of the man charged of the substance of that which is being put against him, and an opportunity of answering it."

Lord Jenkins summarised the authorities on the rules of natural justice in UNIVERSITY OF CEYLON v FERNANDO (1960) 1 W.L.R. 223. He quoted with approval the words of Tucker L.J. in RUSSEL vs DUKE OF NORFOLK (1949) 1 All E.R. 109 and said inter alia at page 231.

"There are, in my view, no words which are of Universal application to every kind of inquiry and every kind of domestic tribunal. The requirements of natural justice must depend on the circumstances of the case, the nature of the inquiry, the rules under which the tribunal is acting, the subject-matter that is being dealt with, and so forth."

Taking the entire evidence into consideration, it is quite clear firstly, that the appellant was not informed that his conduct was under investigation; secondly, that he was not informed of the substance of any charge, or charges against him; thirdly, he was not given an opportunity of challenging any allegations made against him by the other employees interrogated.

In the circumstances, I am of the opinion that the respondents were in breach of the rules of natural justice in conducting the investigation which led to the dismissal of the appellant. I therefore hold that in those circumstances the dismissal of the appellant was wrongful.

Having arrived at this conclusion, it is not necessary to consider the other grounds of appeal. However I shall deal briefly with the ground on which the Court of Appeal allowed the appeal. The Court of Appeal in setting aside the judgment of the Court below laid great emphasis on the issue of batteries which were alleged to have been irregularly issued by certain employees of the Respondent's Company. With respect, the Court of Appeal did not seem to advert their minds to the evidence of Mr. Floode, the Operation Supervisor of the Respondents' Company. The evidence of Mr. Floode clearly indicated that the issue of batteries was not one of the grounds of complaints against the appellant. In my opinion therefore, the Court of Appeal erred in basing their decision on the issue of batteries.

1 would therefore allow the appeal, set aside the judgment of the Court of Appeal, and restore the judgment of the High Court with costs in the three Courts.

JUDGMENT

KUTUBU, C.J.

This is an appeal from the judgment of the Court of Appeal for Sierra Leone, comprising Turay J.A. , Thompson-Davis J.A., and Johnson J., dated 22nd September, 1988. The brief history of this case can be succinctly stated.

Eighteen accused persons were in the month of June, 1987 arraigned before the High Court in Freetown on a four count indictment of Treason, Misprision of Treason and Murder. Count 1 charged the first 16 accused with the offence of Treason contrary to S. 3(1)(a) of the Treason and State Offences Act, No. 10 of 1963. Four of the 16 accused were charged with the offence of Misprision of Treason, contrary to law.

The trial proceeded before Williams, J.A. and a jury, from 1st June, 1987 and was concluded on 17th October, 1987. Suffice it to say that this trial was beset by many difficulties of unparalleled proportions in the history of criminal trials in this country, one such being the empanelling of jurors which took four weeks to accomplish.

At the close of the case for both the prosecution and the defence, and after a long summing-up by the learned trial Judge which lasted several days, the jury returned a unanimous verdict of guilty as charged in respect of the accused. The death sentence was passed on the first 16 accused, while the 17th and 18th accused were sentenced to terms of imprisonment of 4 and 7 years respectively.

It was against this background that all 18 convicted prisoners appealed to the Court of Appeal against their conviction on various grounds. The 18th Appellant also appealed against sentence. As it was the position in the High Court, all the Appellants in the Court of Appeal were represented by counsel.

On the 16 Appellants convicted of Treason, the Court of Appeal upheld the appeals of the following four Appellants, namely:

[p.42]

(i) Francis Augustine Ensah

(ii) Patrick Benedict Kai-Kai

(iii) Kazim Allie and

(iv) Raymond Brima Dorwie, who were accordingly acquitted and discharged

The appeals of the following twelve Appellants were dismissed by Court of Appeal, namely:

(1) Gabriel Mohamed Tennyson Kai-Kai

(2) Prince Deen Kai-Kai

(3) Joseph John Harding

(4) Daniel Sulaiman Kai-Kai

(5) Francis Mischeck Minah

(6) David Abu Samu

(7) Francis Massaquoi

(8) Amara Allieu Tarawallie

(9) Joseph Abiodun Wiliams

(10) Hassan Morlai Conteh

(11) Conrad Innnis and

(12) Haruna Vandy-Jimmy

The Murder appeals in respect of —

(i) Prince Deen Kai-Kai

(ii) Joseph John Harding

(iii) Daniel Sulaiman Kai-Kai and

(iv) Conrad Innis were dismissed.

So also were the appeals for Misprision of Treason in respect of Benjamin Orissa Dunacca Taylor and Sheku Deen Kamara.

Appellants have appealed to this court against the judgment of the Court of Appeal on various grounds. For the purpose of this judgment, Appellants who number fourteen in all, are now re-numbered 1-14, starting with the 1st Appellant Gabriel Mohamed Tennyson Kai-Kai, and ending up with Sheku Deen Kamara, the 14th Appellant.

[p.43]

The indictment upon which the Appellants were convicted contained four counts which I shall proceed to set out as laid. The count for Treason contains 26 overt acts in all.

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE MURDER CONTRARY TO LAW.

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE: PRINCE DEEN KAI-KAI, JOSEPH JOHN HARDING, DANIEL SULAIMAN KAI-KAI and CONRAD INNIS on the 23rd March 1987 at Freetown in the Western Area of Sierra Leone murdered MOHAMED ADAMA ROGERS.

[p.51]

The case for the prosecution is that between June 1st 1986 and on divers days between that day and the 23rd day of March, 1987 Gabriel Mohamed Tennyson Kai-Kai, 1st Appellant herein and 17 others committed the offence of Treason, in that they prepared to overthrow the Government of Sierra Leone by unlawful means. Four of the Appellants were charged with the Murder of Mohamed Adama Rogers an S.S.D. Officer, and two others were each charged with the offence of Misprision of Treason.

Several acts of preparation were laid in the twenty six overt acts under Count I of the indictment, which included the allegation of conspiracy with other persons unknown to overthrow the said Government in that they agreed among others, to ambush, attack and kill the President of the Republic of Sierra Leone, disband the recognised Party declare a dusk to dawn curfew, form a National Reformation Council and take over the Government by unlawful means.

The prosecution further alleged that in the said act of preparation overthrow the Government several persons were solicited and incited join the plot, monies were collected from individuals and paid to others in pursuit of the plot to overthrow the Government by unlawful means and that arms and ammunition were collected from persons and stored in places, while others were issued to some of the Appellants in furtherance of the said plot.

At the trial in the High Court in Freetown, the prosecution called many witnesses thirty-six in all, in support of their case twenty-two witnesses including the Appellants, some of whom gave evidence on their own behalf, while others made statements from the dock. On the charge of murder, the prosecution relied substantially on circumstantial evidence. On the whole, there was a total of forty-four exhibits.

Many grounds of appeal were filed on behalf of each Appellant in this appeal, but on the whole, they are substantially identical and having common ground with those filed on behalf of the other Appellants. I now proceed to consider these grounds.

THE INDICTMENT

Counsel contended on behalf of Appellants that the laying of overt acts is not permissible under S. 3 (1)(a) of the Treason and State Offences Act, 1963, there being no reference to overt acts in any of the provisions under the said Act. It was also contended that the laying of the several overt acts under the same count rendered the count duplicitous and therefore void. That since the repeal of the Treason Act of 1351 by virtue of S. 19 (2) of the Treason and State Offences Act, 1963 the inclusion of overt acts in a charge of Treason ceased to have any place in our criminal laws, referring in particular to 8.74 of the Courts Act. No. 31 of 1965 and also the Criminal Procedure Act. 1965 S.3 Part 1, captioned, "General Provisions Procedure".

This contention was common ground to almost all the Appellants both in the Court of Appeal and in this Court. To buttress their arguments, counsel among others relied on the judgment of the Court Appeal in the Treason Appeal of Mohamed Sorie Fornah and others v. The State, Cr. App. 31/74 judgment delivered on 30th April, 1975 (unreported). Like in the present appeal, there was before the Court of Appeal in Fornah's case the issue as to whether there was in our laws any legal basis, for the inclusion of overt acts in charges under the Treason and State Offences Act, 1963. This was a ground of appeal before their Lordships.

Luke J.S.C. (as he then was) inter alia, had this to say —

“The necessity for overt acts in information or Indictment of Treason was first introduced by the Treason Act, of 1351. According to the [p.53] statute that requirement related only to the species of Treason of "Being adherent to the King's enemies in his realm", and not to any other species of treason. That species of treason was required to be proved by “open deed”, which in more modern times has been defined as, “any act manifesting the criminal object” (See R v. Thistlewood (1820) 33 St. Tr. 681). In the 17th & 18th centuries the Courts by Judicial interpretation extended the requirement of an overt act to all species of Treason. But the Treason Act, of 1351 is no longer applicable in Sierra Leone. It was repealed by S. 19 (2) of the Treason and State Offences Act, 1963. The question then is: are overt acts necessary in Indictments for the species of Treason created by the Treason and State Offences Act, 1963? That is an arguable question, but it is not necessary to decide it in this appeal because the State chose to lay overt acts in the indictment in the instant case".

Suffice it to say that this issue was never decided by their Lordships’ Court. The question was left open, only to resurface in the Court of Appeal and in this Court for our consideration and determination.

I now consider the term "overt act". What is an overt act? Oxford Universal Dictionary Illustrated 3rd Edition Vol. II 1970 Reprint defines the word overt as follows: open, not closed; uncovered. Open to view or knowledge; evident, plain, unconcealed, not secret.

[p.54]

Learned Attorney-General for State Respondent referred us to Wharton's Law Lexicon 4th Ed. p. 723 and Jowits Dictionary of English Law 2nd Vol. p. 13000, 1977 Ed. Jowit defines "overt act", inter alia as, “an open act, or one consisting of something stronger than mere words, and evidencing a deliberate intention in the mind of the person doing it. The phrase is chiefly used in the law of treason it being a rule that a treasonable intention is not punishable unless it is evidenced by some overt act .....

Wharton's defines "overt act" inter alia as follows:

"The expression overt act means an act which shows the intention of the party doing it is used principally in connection with treason and conspiracy. A treasonable intention is not punishable unless it is manifested by an overt act. In the same way conspirators may make their criminal purpose clear by some overt act, such as an agreement to further their common design .....”

Following the respective legal definitions given to the term "overt act", I take it to mean that an overt act is an act that is open to the world in the sense that it can be perceived by anyone placed to do so.

In Shamwana v. The People (1985) L.R.C. (Criminal) p. 120 to which frequent references were made by counsel on both sides in the prosecution of this appeal, Section 52 of the Republic of Zambia penal Code

Chapter 146 of the Laws of Zambia in relation to Treason and allied offences makes specific reference to “overt act” and defines it in these terms:

"In the case of any of the offences defined in this chapter, when the manifestation by any overt act of an intention to effect any purpose is an element of the offence, every act of conspiring with any person to effect that purpose, and every act done in furtherance of the purpose, by any of the persons conspiring, is deemed to be an overt act manifesting the intention".

We in Sierra Leone, unlike Zambia, do not have a codified system of laws. We therefore look for our laws from the relevant provisions of the Constitution, in particular, S. 125 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act. No. 12 of 1978 (as amended). I have looked in vain for an answer whether it is permissible to lay overt acts under our Treason and State Offences Act, 1963. However, the matter does not rest there.

Criminal proceedings in this country are regulated by the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Act, No. 32 of 1965 (as amended). It is an Act to consolidate and amend the Law Relating to Criminal Procedure. The relevant sections and Rules for our purpose are in these terms.

Section 51 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Act, No. 32 of 1965 states:

"Every information or indictment shall contain, and shall be sufficient if it contains a statement of the specific offence or offences with which the accused is charged, together with such particulars as may be necessary for giving reasonable information as to the nature of the charge".

[p.56]

Rules 3(4) (5) of the Criminal Procedure Rules state as follows:

“After the statement of offence particulars of such offence shall be set out in ordinary language in which the use of technical terms shall not be necessary.

Provided that (a) where any rule of law or any Act or statute limits the particulars of an offence which are required to be given in an information or indictment, nothing in this rule shall require any more particulars to be given than those so required. (b) It shall be sufficient if only the words of the section of the enactment creating the offence are set out in the particulars of the offence.

Rule 3 (5) states:

“The forms set out in the Appendix to these rules, or forms conforming thereto as nearly as may be, shall be used in cases to which they are applicable; and in other cases forms to the like effect or conforming thereto as nearly as may be shall be used, the statement of offence and the particulars of offence being varied according to the circumstances in each case.”

Also in Mattaka & others vs. The people, E.A.L.R. (1963) p, 627 the Appellants were charged with the offence of Treason under S. 39 of the Penal Code of Tanzania. the Criminal procedure Code made no provisions as to the method of laying a charge for Treason contrary to S. 39 (2) and the prosecution followed the English practice of [p.57] sitting out the various overt acts in each count after having first set out the statement of offence. It complied, however, with the Criminal procedure Code as it set out a statement of the specific offence charged and then gave such particulars as may be necessary for giving reasonable information as to the nature of the offence charged. Section 135 of the Tanzanian Criminal Code, which is in the same terms as our section 51 (1) of the Criminal procedure Act, No. 32 of 1965 states:

"Every charge or information shall contain, and shall be sufficient if it contains a statement of the specific offence or offences charged together with such particulars as may be necessary for giving reasonable information as to the nature of the offence charged".

This procedure was not questioned and was in the view of the East African Court of Appeal correct. I am also of the opinion that it was both proper and correct procedure, since it complied with the provisions of S. 52 (1) of our Criminal procedure Act, No. 32 of 1965.

The overt acts laid in the present count are no more than further particulars of the particulars of offence charged. They are in themselves not specific or distinct charges, but merely further particulars.

In my judgment and for the reasons stated supra, the Indictment as laid under S. 3 (1) (a) of the Treason and State Offences Act, 1963 together with the overt acts is correct, proper and in conformity with the provisions of S. 51 of the Criminal Procedure Act No. 32 of 1965 and Rules 3(4) (5) thereof. Under our criminal procedure the proof required for any criminal offence is proof beyond reasonable doubt. In the instant case what the prosecution was required to prove against the accused/appellants herein was he substantive offence of preparation to overthrow the Government of Sierra Leone by unlawful means, which is treason.

It was further contended by Appellants that the court under which they were charged with treason was duplicitous and therefore void. In short, they complained that they were charged with several separate and distinct offences in the same count.

In law, where two or more offences are charged in the same count of an indictment, the indictment is to that extent bad for duplicity. The law relating to duplicity is to ensure the protection of an accused person, by not subjecting him to an unfair trial so that he may know exactly what case he has to answer. It is also to give him an opportunity at some future date to plead autre fois convict or autre fois acquit as the case may be.

It has been said time and again that duplicity in a count is a matter of form not of evidence called in support of the count. To ascertain whether a count is bad for duplicity, one must examine the count itself, that is, the count's statement of offence, as read with its particulars of offence. If an examination shows that two or more offences have been charged therein, then the count is bad for duplicity.

There is a long line of cases where it has been held that where there is duplicity in a count, the conviction should be quashed as it goes to the root of jurisdiction. Thus Lord parker remarking in the case of Mallon v. Allon (1964) 1 Q.B.385; (1963) 3 All E.R. 843 said:

"That duplicity although is a highly technical point is one which goes to the jurisdiction of the Court and if a good point, it is good whenever taken and the conviction should be quashed. An accused should know of what offence he is charged and convicted".

In David Lasana & 11 others v. Regina (1970-71) A.L.R. (S.L.) 186 – the Appellants were charged with preparing or endeavouring to overthrow the Government of Sierra Leone by unlawful means. They were convicted of treason and sentenced accordingly. On appeal, the Court of Appeal set aside the conviction on the grounds that the counts were bad for duplicity.

I must now determine whether the count including the several overt acts is void for duplicity; and also whether in a count for treason two or more conspiracy overt acts may be laid without making the count duplicitous. This brings me to a consideration of the provisions of s. 51 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Act No. 32 of 1965, which I have already set out in appropriate places (supra).

Now the statement of offence in the instant case is Treason, contrary to s. 3 (1)(a) of the Treason and State Offences Act, 1963 (as amended). The particulars of offence inter alia are, "Gabriel Mohamed Tennyson Kai-Kai …….. and Haruna Vandy-Jimmy on the 1st day of June, 1986 and on divers days between that day and the 23rd day of March, 1987 in Sierra Leone prepared to overthrow the Government of Sierra Leone by unlawful means" (emphasis mine).

An examination of Count 1 of the indictment clearly shows that the only offence charged in the statement of offence is treason, not treason and conspiracy or conspiracies. The particulars of offence alleged, that the Appellants together prepared to overthrow the Government - not prepared or/and endeavoured to overthrow the Government. Had the Statement of offence in Count 1 charged Appellants with two separate offences and the particulars of offence alleged that Appellants had "Prepared or endeavoured" to overthrow the Government as was the case in David Lansana and 11 others v. Regina (supra) the count would have been duplicitous and bad in law as the terms "prepared" and "endeavoured" would have related to distinct specific offences of treason. This is not the position in the instant case.

The contention of Appellants that the various overt acts laid in indictment make Count 1 bad for duplicity is in my view insupportable in law and Wholly untenable. Suffice it to say that the various overt acts were not laid as substantive offences but as further particulars of the particulars of offence of the one and only count of treason in the indictment. In law, it is permissible to lay any number of overt acts in the same count of an indictment without making the count duplicitous.

Where there are several overt acts laid in a count of an indictment and a judgment is given on a general verdict of guilty on that count, such judgment will be sustained, though some of the matters alleged as overt acts may be improperly so alleged, provided that the count contains allegations of overt acts that are sufficient are sufficiently laid. In law proof of one overt act will sustain the count provided that the overt act so proved is a sufficient overt act of the species of the treason count in the indictment. Consequently, the charge of the learned trial Judge to the jury, that proof of one overt act is sufficient to sustain the count is correct and proper in law.

I have looked at overt act 4 as laid in the indictment in respect of 5th Appellant and also learned trial Judge's charge to the jury thereof. I am satisfied that there is nothing in the said overt act 4 touching and concerning the 5th Appellant in relation to the treason charge. The direction of the learned trial Judge is clearly wrong in this regard. But as already stated, where there are several overt acts charged in a count of an indictment and a judgment is given on a general verdict of guilty on that count as was the case here, such judgment will be sustained, though some of the matters alleged as overt acts may be improperly so alleged, provided that the count contains al1egations of overt acts that are sufficient and are sufficiently laid.

This in my view is the crux of the matter.

Was the conspiracy overt act in the count properly laid? A specific conspiracy charge is a common law offence (misdemeanour) and an agreement between two or more persons to do an unlawful act or a lawful act by unlawful means. It was defined by Willes J. in Mulcahy v. The Queen (1868) L.R. 3H. L. 306 at 317 as follows:

[p.61]

"A conspiracy consists not merely in the intention of two or more, but in the agreement of two or more to do an unlawful act, or to do a lawful act by unlawful means. So long as such a design rests in intention only, it is not indictable. When two agree to carry it into effect, the very plot is an act in itself, and the act of each of the parties, promise against promise, actus contra actum, capable of being enforced, if lawful, punishable if for a criminal object or for the use of criminal means".

In R v. Brisac, Grose J. said: (1803) 4 East p. 164 at p. 171—

“Conspiracy is a matter of inference, deduced from certain criminal acts of the parties accused, done in pursuance of an apparent criminal purpose in common between them".

In the Queen v. Aspinall (1876) 2 Q.B.D. 48 Brett J .A. said at p. 58—

"The crime of conspiracy is completely committed, if it is committed at all, the moment two or more have agreed that they will do, at once or at some future time certain things. It is not necessary in order to complete the offence, that any one thing should be done beyond the, agreement. The conspirators may repent and stop, or may have no opportunity, or may fail. Nevertheless the crime is completed when they agreed".

If several persons do an act preparatory to the overthrow of the Government by unlawful means, that would amount to treason under s.3(1) (a)of the Treason and State Offences Act, 1963. Consequently, the respective acts of the parties can be laid as overt acts of the treason of preparing. In the instant case, the forbidden act under the treason and State Offences Act, 1963 with which Appellants were charged, was preparation to overthrow the Government of Sierra Leone by unlawful means. Conspiracy is a preparatory act, preparatory to the commission of an unlawful act.

Therefore when persons agree to overthrow Government by unlawful means, that agreement is a preparatory act, which amounts to a preparation to overthrow the Government by unlawful means contrary to S.3(1)(a) of the Treason and State Offences Act, 1963. Consequently, the said agreement to overthrow Government by unlawful means is a sufficient overt act of the species of treason created by S.3 (1) (a) of the Act of 1963.

In law conspiracy to commit treason is a sufficient overt act of treason, and can be properly laid in a count for treason. That this is so is supported by a long line of authorities - See: Mulcahy v. The Queen (supra); Lansana & 11 others v. Regina (supra).

In R v. Greenfield (1973) 3 All E.R. 1050 it was held that the fact that the evidence disclosed other conspiracies did not make the count duplicitous. In McCafferty (supra) two conspiracy overt acts 'were validly laid in the same count. It is also permissible in law to lay two or more conspiracy overt acts in a count for treason.

MISPRISION OF TREASON

This case raises the question whether there is today such an offence as misprision of treason in Sierra Leone. Counsel for 13th and 14th Appellants say that such an offence is not known to our laws; or if it was an offence, it has ceased to be so, since the repeal of [p.63] the English Treason Act of 1351 by virtue of S. 19 (2) of the Treason and State Offences Act, No. 10 of 1963, which in their view swept overboard the common law misdemeanour of misprision of treason. Until its repeal, the Treason Act of 1351 was law in Sierra Leone.

Counsel for State Respondent says that there always has been such an offence, as is exemplified by the prosecution of the instant case. Misprision of Treason is a common law misdemeanour and is committed when any person who knows, or has reasonable cause to believe that another has committed treason, omits to disclose this information or any material Part of it to the proper authority (Smith & Hogan Criminal Law 5th Edn. 1983). It is also defined in Halsbury's Laws of England 4th Edn. Vol. 11 p. 483 as, "an offence at' common law, punishable by fine and imprisonment at the discretion of the court, for a person who knows that treason is being planned or committed not to report it as soon as he can to a Justice of the Peace or other authority".

Over the years eminent legal exponents of the common law have extended its scope to include bare knowledge and concealment. As soon as a person becomes aware of a treasonable design, that is a knowledge that treason is merely being planned or committed, it is his duty to reveal it to a Judge or Justice of the Peace or other authority at the earliest opportunity. Failure to do so is misprision of treason for which he can be prosecuted (See Stephen's Commentaries on the Laws of England 21st Ed. p. 405 at 4O6). I shall come to this aspect later in his judgment.

What appears in my view to have conduced learned counsel to subscribe to this erroneous assumption that misprision of treason is no longer an offence in Sierra Leone, is the DICTUM of his Lordship Tambiah J.A. . in the leading judgment delivered by his Lordship in the Treason Appeal of David Lansana and 11 others v. Regina (1970-71) ALR (S.L.) 186, where his Lordship observed that misprision of treason was no longer an offence in Sierra Leone.

With respect, his Lordship took the view albeit mistaken, that the repeal of the English Treason Act, of 1351, by S. 19 (2) of the Treason and State Offences Act, 1963 ipso facto abolished the common law offence of misprision of treason, particularly so, when the repealing Act did not contain any provision relating to misprision of treason as known to English Law. Regrettably, as the position is, that was never the case. With respect it was a misconception on the part of the learned Justice.

Suffice it to say that neither the repeal of the Treason Act of 1351 nor the absence of any mention of this offence in the Treason and State Offences Act, 1963 makes any difference to the status of misprision of treason as a criminal offence in this country. It is quite another matter, however, if for purposes of convenience, simplicity and clarity our Parliament in its wisdom considers it desirable to spell out the offence of misprision of treason in our laws by appropriate legislation as in some of our sister common law jurisdictions.

Be that as it may, our position will be brought into proper focus if I trace the sources of our laws. The laws of Sierra Leone are to be found in S. 125 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, Act No. 12 of1978 and S. 74 of the Courts Act, No. 31 of 1965. Section 125 inter alia states:

“Subject to the provisions of the Constitution and any other enactment, the common law, the doctrines of equity, and the statutes of general application in force in England on the 1st day of January, 1880 shall be in force in Sierra Leone”.

From the foregoing, it is quite clear that the English law applicable to Sierra Leone is the common law of England, the doctrines of equity and statutes of general application which were in force in England on 1st January, 1880 (S. 74 of the courts Act, 1965 and S. 125 [p.65] of Act No. 12 of 1978). In regard to the contentions of learned counsel for Appellants, I will dismiss such contentions as there are, by reference to the memorable pronouncement of Lord Denning in Sykes case which I consider not only correct but appropriate in the circumstances.

Lord Denning in Sykes case (1961) 3 All E.R. p. 33, held that misprision of treason and misprision of felony still exist in England. I must add here, that I know of no authority to the contrary. By the reasons stated above, misprision of treason has always been and still is a common law offence in Sierra Leone.

In relation to misprision of felony, in the same case, his Lordship had this to say - ([1962] A.C. at 564; [1961] 3 All E.R. at 42):

"My Lords it is said that this offence is out of date. I do not think so. The arm of the law would be too short if it was powerless to reach those who are 'contact' men for thieves who assist them to gather in the fruits of their crime; or those who indulge in gang warfare and refuse to help in its suppression. There is no other offence of which such persons are guilty save that of misprision of felony".

By parity of reason, this principle, which in my view, is sound in law and grounded in common sense, is applicable to the offence of misprision of treason so that the arm of the law in Lord Denning's words would not be too short to reach not only those who hide treason but also those who conceal knowledge that treason is merely being planned or committed – [See Stephen supra]. It is, I feel good law, because it accords with our society's sense of justice, devoid of subtleties and technicalities in the particular circumstances.

Having held that the offence of misprision of treason is known to our laws, and that the 13th and 14th Appellants were properly tried, I now come to consider the evidence adduced by the prosecution in respect of Appellants.

The 13th Appellant Benjamin Orrisa Dumacca Taylor, was up to the time of the abortive coup plot on the 23rd March, 1987 and his subsequent arrest, a senior member of the Republic of Sierra Leone Police force with a record of twenty-three years service to his credit. During this period, he served in various capacities, including that of personal bodyguard, to 5th Appellant, Francis Mischeck Minah, whom he served for a period of nine years, 1973-1982. He rose to the rank of Deputy Superintendent of Police, and at the time of his arrest, was Officer Commanding Central Police Station Freetown.

Briefly, the case for the prosecution was that on Saturday evening, the 21st March, 1987, 13th Appellant Benjamin Taylor visited Jay's Pub at Texaco, Aberdeen Road to have a drink. He found Mustapha Sheriff, 18th prosecution witness already there. Mustapha Sheriff received him warmly and served him a pint of Beer and a second. According to Appellant, he refused the second pint as he was hungry, and was proceeding home to have his meal.

There and then Mustapha Sheriff called Appellant aside and told him that he, Mustapha Sheriff, had been approached by people in connection with a coup plot, but that he had not yet seen weapons and arms. Mustapha Sheriff, however, did not give Appellant the names of the coup planners, but promised to furnish him further details in this regard when he received full information, in any case, not later than following day. Appellant said O.K. and he left Jay's Pub for Aberdeen Village.

In keeping with his promise to call on Appellant, on the following day, Sunday 22nd March, 1987 Mustapha Sheriff, accompanied by his friend Prince Williams P.W.33 boarded a van and set out for Aberdeen Village to see 13th Appellant. Unfortunately for him, due to a road [p.67] block, he was unable to reach the 13th Appellant. They returned and instead, decided to drive to Wilberforce Village and divulge the planned coup plot to the Military Intelligence Branch, which, they did.

This piece of information set the machinery of the Security Forces in motion, culminating in the foiling of the coup plot in the early hours of Monday 23rd March, 1987 and the apprehension of Appellants and others.

"As soon as a person becomes aware of a treasonable design, that is, a knowledge that treason is merely being planned or committed, it is his duty to reveal it to a Judge or Justice of the Peace or other authority at the earliest opportunity. Failure to do so is misprision of treason for which he may be prosecuted" [see Stephen's Commentaries on the Laws of England supra].

Suffice it to say that these words are plain and unambiguous.

The evidence in this case was that Mustapha Sheriff informed 13th Appellant Benjamin Orissa Dumacca Taylor at Jay's Pub, about the planned coup plot, short of giving him the names of the plotters. In the circumstances of this case, was the tip-off given to the 13th Appellant by Mustapha Sheriff not of such a nature and importance as to warrant its expeditious disclosure by 13th Appellant to the proper authorities in the style and manner of a Senior Police Officer, so that a stitch in time would save nine? In all the circumstances of this case, was the information from Mustapha Sheriff not of sufficient momentum and gravity as to put a Police Officer of Appellant's calibre and standing on the qui vive, making it incumbent on him to initiate immediate investigations without more? Finally, was the 13th Appellant interested in any information from Mustapha Sheriff? I fail to see any evidence of it. His general attitude in my view, was one of apathy and resignation.

Suffice it to say that it is the duty of every citizen to assist in the detection and suppression of crime, and that prevention is better than cure. A fortiori, by the nature of his duty which carries with it a high degree of responsibility, much was expected of Appellant at a time when it would appear to any reasonable person that the country was on the brink of a precipice. Regrettably, Appellant was in my view woefully wanting in fore-sight and the expected standards of a highly placed and disciplined Police Officer.

In the circumstances and for the reasons given, I am of the view that the Court of Appeal rightly and correctly dismissed Appellant's appeal. I have looked at the evidence and having regard to the special circumstances of this case, I find myself unable to uphold this appeal. The appeal is accordingly dismissed.

The 14th Appellant, Sheku Deen Kamara was up to the time of his arrest, a private soldier in the Republic of Sierra Leone Military Forces, having served for eleven years.

The case for the prosecution is that the 14th Appellant attended a secret meeting at 42B Waterloo Street, Freetown on the 15th March, 1987 together with Appellants herein, in order to prepare and overthrow the Government of Sierra Leone by unlawful means. There was no denying that Appellant attended this meeting albeit once and did not show his face there again. At this meeting, the logistics of the coup plot were discussed at length. Among those who attended were, Gabriel Mohamed Tennyson Kai-Kai, 1st Appellant, David Samu, 6th Appellant, Francis Masaaquoi, 7th Appellant, Allieu Tarawallie, 8th Appellant Josephus Williams , 9th Appellant and Conrad Innis, 11th Appellant. In his voluntary cautioned statement, Exh. "FF", Appellant said:

"I never thought of revealing this information to any authority because the whole plan seemed to have been impossible for a single Police Officer to stand and fight to overthrow the [p.69] Government of Sierra Leone. O.C. Kai-Kai never gave me any amount to keep the information secret".

Again in his charged statement Exh. "N" he said:

"The reason why I failed to report was because I was not convinced that a Police Officer can succeed in making a coup in this country as there is a standing Military Force".

Appellants gave evidence on oath from the witness box. The jury saw the witnesses, heard them and on a consideration of the evidence adduced, returned a verdict of guilty as charged. The Court of Appeal considered this ground and dismissed it for want of substance.

In my view, no reasonable jury properly directed would have returned a verdict otherwise than guilty of the offence as charged. I agree with the findings of the Court of Appeal and hold that misprision of treason which is a common law misdemeanour, constitutes an offence in this country, punishable under our laws. In my opinion the sentence is neither severe nor inordinate. I would therefore loath interfere with it.

I would dismiss this appeal.

MURDER CHARGE

The 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 11th Appellants herein, were convicted of murder of Mohamed Adama Rogers and sentenced to death by the High Court in Freetown, on the 17th October, 1987. They appealed against conviction to the Court of Appeal for Sierra Leone on various grounds.

It was contended on their behalf that the learned trial Judge had in many respects misdirected the Jury and also failed to put the case of Appellants adequately to them. Particular prominence was given to a contention that the learned trial Judge had failed to direct the [p.70] jury as to how they should view and approach circumstantial evidence, being the pith and substance of the case for the prosecution. That since the prosecution case was based substantially on circumstantial evidence, before Appellants could be convicted on such evidence, it must be so mathematically accurate that it leads to one and only irresistible conclusion that the Appellants murdered the deceased. It was therefore contended that the learned trial Judge's direction to the jury, that they must not convict unless they were satisfied beyond reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused, was not sufficient in law. Apart from this contention, the other points raised by counsel are wholly inconsequential and do not deserve serious consideration. It is sufficient therefore if I deal with the main issues.

The Court of Appeal dealt with these contentions and dismissed Appellants' appeals for want of substance. It held that there was evidence on which the jury properly directed were fully justified in returning a verdict of guilty against Appellants. On a consideration of the whole of the evidence, the Court of Appeal held the view that the learned trial Judge's charge to the jury was proper, fair and accurate.

In a criminal trial, it is the duty of the Judge to make clear to the Jury in terms which are adequate to cover the particular features of the case that they must not convict unless they are satisfied beyond reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused. There is no rule that, where the prosecution case is based on circumstantial evidence the Judge must, as a matter of law, give a further direction that the jury must not convict unless they are satisfied that the facts proved are not only consistent with the guilt of the accused, but also such as to be inconsistent with any other reasonable conclusion.

According to the evidence, the deceased, Mohamed Adama Rogers died from bullet wounds at 42B Waterloo Street Freetown, involving Appellants who were acting in furtherance of a conspiracy to overthrow the Government of Sierra Leone by unlawful means. Appellants and their confederates had assembled at 42B Waterloo Street Freetown, their rendezvous, waiting for the signal, to plunge into action. It came out in evidence that 42B Waterloo Street belonged to 1st Appellant Gabriel Mohamed Tennyson Kai-Kai, who put it at the disposal of his brothers 2nd, 3rd, 4th Appellants and others for residential purposes. That was the position at 42B Waterloo Street on the night of Sunday 22nd - Monday 23rd March, 1987.

The Security Forces had before Sunday evening 22nd March, 1987 got wind of the coup plot, and the movements of Appellants, and were taking counter measures to close in on them as they assembled at 42B Waterloo Street. At the same time, Appellants had discovered to their dismay that they had been betrayed and that their plans and secrets were now in the hands of the Security Forces. In anticipation of an imminent attack on them, Appellants prepared themselves for the worse, as in their estimation retreat was no longer an option open to them in those circumstances.

According to the evidence, 2nd Appellant, Prince Deen Kai-Kai who, as it were, master-minded the affairs of Appellants at 42B Waterloo Street that night, gave each of them one sub-machine gun with magazines full of ammunition. The 3rd, 4th and 11th Appellants went and took their positions by the veranda. The 2nd Appellant who stayed down stairs loaded several weapons and waited there at the ready.

When the Police vehicle arrived at 42B Waterloo Street with its complement of security personnel, including the deceased Mohamed Adama Rogers, all four Appellants opened fire on the Police vehicle [p.72] Mohamed Adama Rogers who had just alighted from the vehicle was fired upon and he dropped dead on the spot. The bullet wound was 6 mm in diameter. It entered through his forehead and escaped through the occiput. After several bursts of fire from Appellants, they ran away, dropping their rifles and ammunition as they made good their escape. After many days of intensive search for Appellants, the 2nd, 3rd and 4th Appellants were apprehended near the Liberian Border, while the 11th Appellant was arrested in Freetown area.

On the basis of the evidence adduced in this case, it cannot be said that there was no clear and convincing evidence of the presence of Appellants at 42B Waterloo Street Freetown on that fateful night, and also of their participation in the unlawful criminal act - the shooting incident culminating in the death of Mohamed Adama Rogers. In addition, there was overwhelming evidence connecting Appellants with the plot, and that they had the opportunity of committing those offences the prosecution alleged against them.

From the evidence adduced that the Appellants conspired with others to overthrow the Government of Sierra Leone by unlawful means, the fact that they were well armed, the discovery of dangerous arms and ammunition of every description at 42B Waterloo Street, the residence of Appellants, the body of Mohamed Adama Rogers found at the scene of the crime, the statements of Appellants giving details of the parts each of them played in this criminal undertaking, the absence of co-existing circumstances which might weaken or destroy the evidence adduced, though circumstantial, that the deceased was murdered by the Appellants, confirmed the view of the Appellate Court that the Appellants committed the offence, charged. Indeed, these were all matters for the jury to consider in arriving at their verdict.

From the range of evidence, it was apparent that there were matters sufficient for the consideration of the jury, and further, that it was open to them to draw conclusions from the mass of evidence which would warrant them in deciding that the guilt of Appellants had been established or not.

Counsel for Appellants in this Court renewed with vigour and tenacity, the same arguments and submissions he had earlier made in the Court of Appeal, as to alleged misdirections. As in the Court below, counsel put much reliance on the authority of Ogwanweka Ona v. The State - Nigeria W.L.R. 1985 p. 164; also Teper v. R [1952] A.C. 480 and Taylor on Circumstantial Evidence for his submissions.

In my view, the locus classicus on the law of circumstantial evidence is to be found in the judgment of the House of Lords in McGREEVY v. D.P.P. [1972] Cr. App. R. 424 in which Lord Morris of Borth-Y-Gest reviewed a wide range of authorities on the subject.

This was an appeal to the House of Lords where Appellant's conviction for murder at his trial in Northern Ireland turned entirely on circumstantial evidence. Their Lordships were invited to consider the point of law, whether at a criminal trial with a jury in which the case against the accused depended wholly or substantially on circumstantial evidence, a special duty devolves on the trial Judge to give a special direction to the jury on the question of proof of guilt, other than the general requirement that proof must be established beyond reasonable doubt.

Suffice it to say that in our criminal procedure the standard of proof is, and has always been, "proof beyond reasonable doubt". It is stated in ARCHBOLD 39th Ed. 598 that notwithstanding the strictures in SUMMERS upon the "reasonable doubt" direction, it nonetheless remains the fact that the House of Lords (in WOOLMINGTON v. D.P.P. (1935) 57. Cr App. R 72) and the House of Lords (in McGREEVT v. D.P.P. (1972) and a substantial body of opinion remains of the view that that form of direction is preferable to the other. The direction is based upon the following passage in WOOLMINGTON:

"Throughout the web of the English Criminal Law one golden thread is always to be seen, that it is the duty of the prosecution to prove the prisoner's guilt, subject [p.74] (to the qualification involving the defence of insanity and to any statutory exception): If at the end of and on the whole of the case, there is a reasonable doubt, created by the evidence given either by the prosecution or the prisoner as to whether (the offence was committed by him), the prosecution has not made out the case and the prisoner is entitled to an acquittal. No matter what the charge or where the trial, the principle that the prosecution must prove the guilt of the prisoner is part of the common law of England and no attempt to whittle it down can be entertained".

At page 95 of WOOLMINGTON v. D.P.P. the Lord Chancellor, Lord Sankey had this to say:

"When dealing with a murder case the Crown must prove:—

(a) Death as a result of a voluntary act of the accused and,

(b) malice of the accused.

It may prove malice either expressly or by implication. For malice may be implied where death occurs as a result of a voluntary act of the accused which is either (1) intentional and (2) unprovoked".

In Taylor on Circumstantial Evidence 11th Ed. Vol. 1 p.74, it is stated that after the facts sworn to are proved, a further and a higher difficult duty remains for the jury to perform.

"They must decide not whether consistent with the prisoner's guilt, but whether they are inconsistent with any other rational conclusion; for it is only on this last hypothesis that they can safely convict the accused.

[p.75]

The circumstances must be such as to produce moral certainty to the exclusion of every reasonable doubt. Moral certainty and the absence of reasonable doubt are in truth one and the same thing".

Taylor, however, expresses the view that the form of any particular direction stems from the general requirement that proof must be established beyond reasonable doubt.

In Tepper v. R. referred to supra at p. 498, Lord Hormand inter alia said:—

"Circumstantial evidence may sometimes be conclusive, but it must always be narrowly examined, if only because evidence of this kind may be fabricated to cast suspicion on another. Joseph commanded the steward of his house, 'put my cup, the silver cup, in the sack's mouth of the youngest', and when the cup was found there Benjamin's brethren too hastily assumed that he must have stolen it. It is also necessary before drawing the inference of the accused's guilt from circumstantial evidence to be sure that there are no other co-existing circumstances which would weaken or destroy the inference".

So also were the words used by Lord Goddard C.J. in ONUFREJCZIK (1955) 39 Cr. App. R. 1; [1955] 1 Q.B. 388 (in dealing with the situation where in a murder case no corpse had been found) when at pp. 3 and 394 of the respective reports he said:

"Now it is perfectly clear that there is apparently no reported case in English law where a man has been convicted of murder when there has been no trace of the body at all. But it is equally clear that the fact of death, like any other fact can be proved by circumstantial evidence, that is to say, evidence of facts which lead to one conclusion only".

In Ona v. The State, on which counsel for Appellant has put great reliance on the effect of circumstantial evidence, where the prosecution case was mainly circumstantial, the facts briefly, were as follows:

Appellant was convicted of murder and sentenced to death by the Anambr State High Court in Nigeria. She was alleged to have killed the deceased, a relation of her husband, by inflicting matchet cuts on her, The evidence against the accused was mainly circumstantial, The corpse of the deceased was found close to her compound. Blood stains were found on her wrapper. A blood stained matchet was also found in her room which she shared with her husband. Matchet cuts were found on the deceased. However, there was no positive evidence linking the accused with the actual killing of the deceased.

The prosecution during trial failed to call as a witness one Eke Agbo, who seemed to know more than anybody else, the circumstances surrounding the killing and whose evidence could have helped a great deal in deciding the case one way of the other. Nevertheless, the learned trial Judge convicted the accused as charged and this was confirmed by the Court of Appeal. The Appellant appealed to the Court of Nigeria. It was held inter alia:

"That before a person can be convicted upon circumstantial evidence, such evidence must be mathematically accurate that it points to the one and only irrestible conclusion that that person was the one responsible for the offence for which he has been charged".

Perhaps it will be pertinent to point out that in the ONA case the Appellant was charged under the Criminal Code of Eastern Nigeria. unlike the instant case where Appellants were charged with murder contrary to law. Murder is a common law offence, in Sierra Leone, where the guilt of the accused must be established by proof beyond reasonable doubt. Even in ONA's case it is significant to note from the Judgment of KAZEEM J.S.C. one of the Justices of the Supreme Court of Nigeria on the panel, of the need for the general requirement, that proof must be established beyond reasonable doubt. The learned Justice inter alia said:

"It may well be that the Appellant in this case in fact killed the deceased; however, the circumstantial evidence relied upon by the prosecution did not lead to the only conclusion that she was the one responsible for the murder of the deceased. The law also requires that the Appellant's involvement with the offence must be proved beyond reasonable doubt……."

With respect, on the facts of ONA's case, no reasonable jury properly directed would have returned a verdict of guilty of murder against her.

[p.78]

In Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law, 15th Ed. [1936], it is said:

"No distrust of circumstantial evidence has been sewn by English law. It does not even require that direct evidence shall receiveany preference over circumstantial evidence".

Also in R v Taylor [1928] 21 Cr. App. R. at p. 20 Lord Hewart said:

"It is no derogation to say that the evidence is circumstantial".

Many instances are cited of important capital convictions of unquestionable standing based solely on indirect or circumstantial evidence. Admittedly, it has become the practice and also a settled rule in some commonwealth jurisdictions that a special direction as to the way circumstantial evidence is to be viewed, should be given. Until lately, the attitude of our criminal courts in this jurisdiction where the case for the prosecution was based upon circumstantial evidence, was that to convict, such evidence should be cogent, compelling and water-tight, and should point exclusively to the accused. Proof beyond reasonable doubt now suffices for all purposes without more.

The principles underlying the judgment of the House of Lords in McGreevy v. D.P.P. can be summarised in the following terms:

(i) There is no special obligation on a trial judge for the purposes of summing-up to seek to classify evidence into direct or circumstantial with the result that, if the case for the prosecution depends (as to the commission of the act) entirely on circumstantial evidence the Judge becomes under obligation to comply with special requirement.

(ii) That although in certain types of cases there are rules of law and practice which require a Judge to give certain warnings [p.79] to a Jury, there should be no set formula to be used by a learned Judge.

(iii) That in all cases, it is the duty of the Judge to make clear to a Jury in terms which are adequate to cover the particular features of the particular case that they must not convict unless they are satisfied , beyond reasonable doubt.

As I said earlier, in this Judgment, our standard of proof in criminal cases is proof beyond reasonable doubt. The Judgment in McGreevy v. D.P.P. in my view, is based on sound principles of law; a fortiori, it has the -support of a substantial body of opinion, making it the locus classicus on the law relating to circumstantial evidence.

For the purpose of this appeal, I hold that the proper direction to be given in all criminal trials in this country irrespective of whether the evidence adduced at such trials is direct or circumstantial is proof beyond reasonable doubt.

I would also like to add that the prosecution case against Appellants was based on common design. It was alleged by the prosecution that Appellants conspired with others to overthrow the Government of Sierra Leone by unlawful means. They led evidence to establish both the conspiracy and the common design to effect their unlawful purpose.In furtherance of the common unlawful purpose, the Appellants on Monday 3rd March 1987 at 42B Waterloo Street, killed Mohamed Adama Rogers, although it was not known by whom the fatal shot was fired. The evidence is already legion and need not be repeated here.

In law, if several persons act together in one common unlawful undertaking and death results, but it is not known by whom, all are responsible. Consequently, the 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 11th Appellants are all responsible for the death of Mohamed Adama Rogers.

There is overwhelming evidence in support of the verdict of guilty of murder which the jury on proper direction rightly returned. The Court of Appeal confirmed the conviction and sentence of the High Court.

On the totality of the evidence, no jury properly directed would have returned a verdict otherwise than that of guilty of murder. The Court of Appeal cannot be faulted in dismissing Appellants' appeals and confirming the conviction and sentence. I would dismiss this appeal.

MISDIRECTIONS/WRONGFUL ADMISSION OP EVIDENCE

HEARSAY EVIDENCE

It was contended by learned Counsel for 5th and 12th Appellants herein that the Court of Appeal erred in law in dismissing the appeal of Appellants inspite of the wrongful admission of evidence against them of the hearsay evidence of D.W.20 relating to intelligence report received by him about meetings allegedly held at Yannihun Village, Wonde Chiefdom, having regard to the nature of the said evidence and the nature of the learned trial Judge's direction on it, and the wrongful basis on which the learned trial Judge admitted that evidence It was also contended by Appellants that the Court of Appeal was in error in refusing to hold that the learned trial Judge misdirected himself by admitting the hearsay evidence of D.W.20. The objection was that that piece of evidence was ever allowed to be given and admitted by the learned trial Judge, considering its prejudicial effect on the minds of the jury.

It is a fundamental rule of evidence that hearsay evidence, whether oral or written (common law and statutory exceptions apart), is inadmissible in criminal proceedings. In the celebrated case of Subramanian v Public Prosecutor [1956] 1 W.L.R. 965 decided by the Privy Council, the following formulation of the Privy Council has gained wide acceptance. It is in these terms:

"Evidence of a statement made to a witness by a person who is not himself called as a witness may or may not be hearsay. It is hearsay and inadmissible when the object of the evidence is to establish the truth of what is contained in the statement. It is not hearsay and is admissible when it is proposed to establish by the evidence not the truth of the statement, but the fact that it was made. The fact that the statement was made, quite apart from its truth, is frequently relevant in considering the mental state and conduct thereafter of the witness or of some other person in whose presence the statement was made."

The essence of hearsay evidence is that the statement complained of was made in the absence of the accused person. It is not the best evidence and it is not delivered on oath. The truthfulness and accura of the person whose words are spoken to by another witness cannot be tested by cross-examination and the light which his demeanour would throw on his testimony is lost. The rule however, admits of certain carefully safeguarded and limited exceptions, one of which is that Words may be proved when they form part of the res gestae, that is, the facts surrounding or accompanying a transaction which is the subject of the legal proceedings.

In the prosecution of the treason count against 5th and 12th Appellants among others in the High Court in Freetown, it was alleged by the prosecution that on Sunday 22nd March, 1987, the 5th and 12th Appellants herein convened a meeting at Nyannihun, Wonde Chiefdom, Bo District where monies were collected in furtherance of a conspiracy to overthrow the Government of Sierra Leone by unlawful means. Their defence was an alibi, both denying presence, participation and knowledge of the said meeting. Witnesses both for the prosecution and the defence gave evidence in court.

D.W. 20 M.M. Bangura, Senior District Officer Bo District justified on behalf of 12th Appellant Haruna Vandi-Jimmy. Under cross-examination, D.W.20 said inter-alia, that from intelligence reports received from the area, it was reported that a meeting was at Yannihun by 12th Appellant, 5th Appellant and others and that monies were collected on behalf of Appellants. This piece of evidence was admitted by the learned trial Judge. In his charge to the jury the learned trial Judge had this to say:

"Well, the Senior District Officer is a disinterested witness who holds no bias for either the 16th or 5th accused or for Paramount Chief Dabo, therefore this piece of evidence ought to be taken very seriously. The 5th and 16th accused have denied holding any meeting at Yannihun. The witnesses called by the Prosecution had testified here that that meeting was held. The witness for the 5th accused have testified here that such a meeting was never held. The Senior District Officer who was a defence witness confirmed that from intelligence report reaching him a meeting was indeed held and monies were collected as alleged by the Prosecution. Therefore gentlemen of the jury this is evidence which you should take into consideration in considering your verdict in so far as the 16th and 5th accused persons are concerned and if you are satisfied that the evidence given by the Senior District Officer is one which is worthy of credit, then it should assist you to come to your conclusion on the verdict you will give against the 5th and 16th accused".

Having regard to D.W.20's evidence and the nature of the learned trial Judge's direction on it to the jury, the contention of Appellants is valid to, the extent that the hearsay evidence of D.W.20 based on the, intelligence reports received, was wrongly admitted by the learned trial Judge in that it went beyond the principles laid down in Subramanian, in that the object of the evidence was to establish the truth of the statement in the intelligence reports not the fact- that It was made. The learned trial Judge misdirected himself by admitting D.W.20's hearsay evidence. The Court of Appeal also erred in law in holding that that piece of evidence was rightly admitted by the learned trial Judge.

Be that as it may, the fact that evidence is wrongly admitted does not make the verdict unsafe unless it can be shown that the evidence has actually influenced the verdict of the jury. Before assessing the prejudice caused by the wrongful admission of the hearsay evidence and deciding whether it affected the substantial justice of the trial, the nature and effect of the other evidence must be looked at.

The question is, barring the evidence of D.W.20, was there other evidence before the jury for consideration in assessing the guilt or otherwise of Appellants in relation to the Nyannihun affair? Suffice it to say that the prosecution called witnesses to support their allegation that Appellants held meetings in Nyannihun on Sunday 22nd March 1987 and collected monies in furtherance of a plot to overthrow the Government of Sierra Leone. These witnesses were emphatic in their assertions particularly their identification of Appellants. Appellants also called witnesses to prove that no meetings were held by them in Nyannihum on Sunday 22nd March, 1987 and that they were neither at Nyannihun that day nor took part in any transactions there. In both cases the prosecution and the defence relied on the evidence adduced in support of their case.

In his summing-up to the jury, the learned trial Judge carefully and repeatedly explained to them the burden and standard of proof in criminal proceedings. On the basis of his direction to the jury, heard the witnesses and watched their demeanour returned their on a matter of credibility which as judges of fact was within their province. By their verdict, it was clearly demonstrated that the jury believed and accepted the evidence of prosecution witnesses and .disbelieved the evidence of defence witnesses.

The question as I see it, is whether looking at the proceedings as a whole and taking into account what has properly been proved, the conclusion arrived at has been a just one. In my view, disregarding the piece of hearsay evidence of D.W.20 relating to the transactions in Nyannihun, there was other evidence to be left to the jury for consideration on a right direction, in determining the guilt or otherwise of the Appellants. The jury were properly directed on that evidence

In my view the jury would or must inevitably have arrived at the same verdict if the evidence complained of had not been admitted.

THE ALIBI

It was argued by counsel for 5th and 12th Appellants that the Court of Appeal in its consideration of the alibi of Haruna Vandy-Jimmy and the evidence of the prosecution witnesses in so far as the alleged meeting in Nyannihun of the 22nd March, 1987 was concerned and the presence of the 5th Appellants herein.

The ease for the prosecution on overt act 3 depended on the presence of the 5th and 12th Appellants, together at Nyannihun on Sunday 22nd March, 1987. Appellants contended that on the basis of the evidence both for the prosecution and the defence, it was highly improbable, if not impossible for the 5th and 12th Appellants to have been together in Nyannihun Village at the time alleged. Their defence [p.85] was an alibi - that Appellants were not at Nyannihun and could not have taken part in any criminal acts there calculated to overthrow the Government of Sierra Leone by unlawful means as alleged.

The prosecution called several witnesses not only to prove that meetings were held in Nyannihun on the date in question, but also to show that Appellants participated in those meetings and that monies were collected in furtherance of a conspiracy to overthrow the Government of Sierra Leone by unlawful means. Appellants also called witnesses who adduced evidence refuting the evidence of prosecution witnesses. Was 12th Appellant's alleged presence at Nyannihun one of mistaken identity as contended on his behalf? On the basis of the evidence adduced, in particular, that of P.W.22 Musu Bawo and the verdict of the Jury, this contention appears to be far-fetched and devoid of truth.

At a criminal trial with a jury, where an accused raises an alibi as a defence, it is the duty of the trial Judge to explain that defence to the jury. He must explain to the Jury what in law amounts to an alibi. It must be explained further to the jury that even where an accused raises an alibi, the burden of proving his guilt lies on the prosecution throughout the proceedings. In law, no duty is imposed on an accused to prove his alibi although nothing stops him from calling witnesses to buttress such alibi if he chooses.

The Jury must be told this in clear terms and that if an alibi fails the matter does not end there. The overall burden of proving the guilt of the accused lies on the prosecution. The standard of proof required of the prosecution is proof beyond reasonable doubt.

In short the trial Judge should give the jury the following directions:

(i) A specific direction on the burden of proof in relation to the defence of alibi.

[p.86]

(ii) That even if the alibi is rejected they must nevertheless go on to consider the case for the prosecution in its bid to establish the guilt of the accused beyond reasonable doubt,

(iii) The defence however weak must be put to the jury.

(iv) That even if the accused's alibi fails, the prosecution did not necessarily succeed.

(v) That even where the alibi is rejected they can only convict on the evidence led by the prosecution if they feel sure of the guilt of the accused.

What were the respective alibi defences of the 12th and 5th Appellants in relation to the Nyannihun Meetings?

In his evidence at his trial, the 12th Appellant Haruna Vandy-Jimmy recalled the morning of Saturday 21st March, 1987 in Bo. He left Bo that day and travelled to Freetown, arriving there at 4 p.m. He proceeded to 44 Wellington Road, Kissy Mess Mess, where he met P.W. 36 Anthony Kallon. He did not go out until the morning hours of the 22nd March and travelled to Freetown to attend Parliament on Monday 23rd March, 1987. In short he was not at Nyannihun on Sunday 22nd March and could not have done what the prosecution alleged he did.' The Appellant in his evidence stated that at 12.30 p.m. on Friday 20th March, 1987 he and his party left Freetown for Bo, arriving thereby 4 p.m. They had lunch in Bo at one Lansana Kallon's residence, and took off at 4.45 p.m. for Pujehun arriving there at 7 p.m.

On Saturday 21st March, 1987 he held a meeting at Yoni from 11 a.m.-1.40 p.m. On Sunday 22nd March, 1987 after seeing into accommodation, he left Pejehun for Bo at 12.30 p.m. arriving there at 3 p.m. They had lunch at Lansana Kallon's residence and the party left for Freetown at about 4 p.m. arriving in Freetown at 7.15 p.m. [p.87] Although Appellants were not in law bound to do so, yet they called witnesses in support of their alibi defences which they had every right to do. The learned trial Judge considered the whole evidence adduced by both the prosecution and the defence including the alibi defence and dealt with the several burdens and standards of proof. Even though there was no specific direction on the burden of proof in relation to an alibi defence as was the proper thing to do nevertheless, there was no evidence of any misdirection on the part of the learned trial Judge in his summing-up to the jury, which could amount to a shifting of the burden of proof from the prosecution to the Appellants in respect of their respective alibi defences.

The learned trial Judge in his summing-up directed the jury over and over on the burden of proof being on the prosecution to establish the guilt of the Appellants and that he did this after reviewing the whole evidence and explaining the nature of their defences to the jury in non-technical language. The jury understood the learned trial Judge's direction and were not confused by it in arriving at their verdict.

By their verdict the jury rejected the evidence adduced on behalf of the Appellants and felt sure that their guilt had been proved by the prosecution beyond reasonable doubt. They accepted the evidence of the prosecution. In my view this ground is not tenable and there has been no miscarriage of justice.

ACCOMPLICES

This was a common ground of appeal both in the Court of Appeal and before this court. It was contended by Appellants that the learned trial Judge misdirected the jury into believing that P.W. 18, P.W. 21 and P.W. 33 were not accomplices, although he went on to warn them of the need for corroboration of an accomplice's evidence. It was also contended by counsel that the learned Appellate justices failed to consider this ground and consequently failed to make a pronouncement on it.

In law, an accomplice simpliciter is a person who is involved in the actual commission of the crime charged, whether as principal or accessory in felony or persons committing, procuring or aiding and abetting in the case of misdemeanor. A police spy is not an accomplice for this purpose.

An accomplice is always a competent witness for the prosecution, although the fact of a witness being an accomplice detracts materially from his credit. The uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is admissible in law; but where an accomplice gives evidence for the prosecution, it is the duty of the Judge to warn the jury that although they may convict on his evidence, it is dangerous to do so unless it is corroborated. This rule although a rule of practice has now become a rule of law.

Where the Judge fails to warn the jury in accordance with this rule, the conviction will be quashed even if in fact there be ample corroborative evidence. Where the Judge has given the jury an adequate warning on corroboration and has explained to them what is meant in law by corroboration, it is not necessary that he should point out to the jury the pieces of evidence which can amount to corroboration. In law an accomplice cannot corroborate the evidence of another accomplice.

Corroboration of a witness's testimony must be afforded by independent evidence which affects the defendant by connecting or tending to connect him with the offence charged. It must be evidence which implicates him, that is, which tends to confirm in some material particular not only that the offence was committed, but also that the defendant committed it.

It is for the Judge to decide whether there is any evidence to show that a witness can be regarded as an accomplice, and it is for the jury to determine whether the witness is infact an accomplice. Is there any Justification in the criticism of the learned trial Judge of a misdirection by him in law in this regard? Did the learned trial [p.89] Judge misdirect the jury in holding that there was no evidence capable of regarding P.W.18, P.W.21 and P.W.33 as accomplices? Did the learned trial Judge usurp the functions of the jury, by taking away from them the function of deciding whether P.W.18, P.W.21 and P.W.33 were in fact accomplices?

I have looked at the whole evidence adduced by P.W. 18, P.W.21 and P.W.33.I am also satisfied that the learned trial Judge reviewed their evidence scrupulously to the jury and explained the law applicable to the facts. I am satisfied that the learned trial Judge correctly assessed their evidence and came to the right conclusion that there was no evidence capable of pointing to P.W.18, P.W.21 and P.W.33 as accomplices. What evidence there was points to the contrary. The learned trial Judge in no way misdirected the jury in believing that P.W.18, P.W.21 and P.W.33 were not accomplices. In my view his direction was fair and proper.

Having held that the learned trial Judge did not misdirect the Jury on the question of P.W.18, P.W.21 and P.W.33, not being accomplices, the only issue here that calls for our consideration and decision is whether in all the circumstances of the case there was need for the learned trial Judge to give the warning on accomplice evidence to the jury. In my view this was unnecessary after the learned trial Judge's finding that P.W.18, P.W.21 and P.W.33 were not capable of being classed as accomplices since the evidence was lacking in this regard. Be that as it may I am satisfied that the jury were in no way confused or misled by the learned trial Judge about the categories of the three witnesses not being accomplices and he rightly left this matter to them for their decision.

The jury were part of the trial; they saw P.W.18, P.W.21 and P.W.33, heard their evidence from the witness box and watched their demeanour. They understood the roles played by each of these witnesses and appreciated everything. Having looked at the whole [p.90] records submitted to this court, by no stretch of the imagination can anyone rightly come to the conclusion on the evidence before the court that P.W.18, P.W.21 and P.W.33 could be regarded as accomplices. In my view they made all efforts to gather information with a view of thwarting the coup plot which they ultimately succeeded in doing. They aided the Security Forces in unearthing the coup plot and their conduct on the whole could not be described as participants in the crime charged.

ALLEGED STATEMENTS MADE BY SUSPECTS AT SCENE OF ALLEGED CRIME

Counsel for Appellants contended that the alleged statements made by suspects in the instant case at the scene of the alleged crime was improper and therefore not admissible in law. Counsel relied on the case of Kojo Bodom & others v. Rex. 2 W.A.C.A. p. 390.

In my view, the facts of Kojo Bodom are exclusively referable to the circumstances of that case and cannot be said to be applicable to the facts of the instant case. In Kojo Bodom, the accused were charged with murder and convicted. They appealed against the conviction on two material grounds – one misdirection by the learned trial Judge in his summing-up to the Assessors and the reception of inadmissible evidence.

The deceased who lived at a village was reported missing. A search party was instituted by the village chief and subsequently his dead body was found hanging on a tree. Suspicion fell on four accused the perpetrators of the crime. They were then tied hand and foot and thoroughly beaten with the object of making them confess. The police were then sent for and the prisoners arrested and cautioned. They were then taken to the locus in quo where they made certain admissions. They were then formally charged with murder and each of them made a confession.

At the trial these confessions were admitted in evidence though objected to at the time. The court found that they made the confessions before a person in authority and that they were induced to make these confessions because of the severe beatings they received.

The court also strongly deprecated the course of action taken by the police in taking the suspects to the locus in quo for the purpose of obtaining admissions from them - that admissions were made, and were given evidence against the accused.

Suffice it to say that in the case of Kojo Bodom, all the ingredients which make an accused's confession inadmissible were present. Can the same be said of the instant case? I don't think so. In the instant case, proper caution was administered to suspects before statements were obtained from them. In the course of ordinary Police Investigations visits were made to places mentioned in the several overt acts and not scenes of crimes simpliciter. As far as possible the proprieties were duty observed.

It should also be emphasised that this was a jury trial, where witnesses for the prosecution gave evidence as well as some of the Appellants in their own defence. The credibility of police witnesses was challenged by Appellants or counsel for Appellants about the oral statements, giving rise to trials within-a-trial. The correct process procedure was followed by the learned trial Judge after which he ruled on admissibility of these statements.

The jury as judges of fact had the opportunity of seeing and hearing these witnesses give evidence and were in position to form their own impressions. Their verdict was an indication that they believed the statements of Appellants.

As I see it, what is important and material in these circumstances irrespective of where the statements are obtained, it the paramount consideration that to be admissible, if they amount to extra judicial confession, they must meet the requirements of voluntariness, not obtained in breach of the Judges Rules. Complaints are always encountered in this regard; some true, others not so true. be that as it may, I will consider a clog on the proper exercise by the police of their investigatory function and, indeed, on the administration of justice itself if we grope ceaselessly for new expedients [p.92] however desirable in this connection. We can only hope for improvements.

In my view, these oral statements apart, there was other evidence before the jury for consideration in arriving at their verdict. The conviction of Appellants was based on the totality of the evidence adduced in court which in my judgment cannot be faulted in the instant case. It is therefore incorrect to state and indeed insupportable in law to hold that the learned trial Judge misdirected himself on the legal statue of an accused's statement made at the scene of the crime as contended by Appellants. This ground accordingly fails.

EXHIBIT JJJJ

It was also contended by learned counsel for 5th Appellant that Exh. JJJJ the unsworn statement of 1st Appellant Gabriel Mohamed Tennyson Kai-Kai did not constitute evidence against 5th Appellant, Francis Misheck Minah, and that it was a fundamental misdirection of the, learned trial Judge when he directed the jury that Exh. JJJJ, could be used against 5th Appellant. Counsel submitted further that the learned trial Judge had a legal duty to inform the jury that Exh. JJJJ was not evidence against 5th Appellant.

There is no doubt that it is a fundamental rule of evidence that statements made by one accused person either to the police or to others than statements, whether in the presence or absence of a co-accused, made in the course and pursuance of a joint criminal enterprise to which the co-accused was a party) are not evidence against a co-accused, unless the co-accused either expressly or by implication adopts the statements and thereby makes them his own: see R v. Rudd [1948] 32 Cr. App. R. 138. And it has repeatedly been that it is the duty of the judge in a jury trial to impress on the jury that the statement of the accused person not made on oath in the course of the trial is not evidence against a co-accused, and must be entirely disregarded: See R v. Gunewardene [1951] 35 Or. App. R. 80, a decision of the English Court of Appeal, where [p.93]

Lord Goddard L.C.J. said inter alia at p. 91:

"If no separate trial is ordered, it is the duty of the Judge to impress on the jury that the statement of the one prisoner not made on oath in the course of the trial is not evidence against the other and must be entirely disregarded".

However, it is the recognised and universal principle of law that, whereas a statement made in the absence of the accused person by a co-defendant cannot be evidence against the accused person, yet it that co-defendant goes into the witness-box and gives evidence in the course of a joint trial, then his sworn evidence becomes evidence for all purposes in the case including that of being evidence against the accused person. This has neither been altered nor detracted from the decision in Meredith and others (1943) 29 Cr. App. R. 40. The headnote to that case states a course which it may be desirable to adopt in directing the jury on a joint trial in certain cases. The headnote is in the following terms:

"Where several prisoners are tried jointly and one or more of them gives evidence on oath, it may in some cases be desirable that the jury should be directed that, although the evidence given by one prisoner does in those circumstances strictly becomes evidence against his co-prisoners they should not regard it as such, but should use that evidence only for the purpose of considering whether that individual prisoner has given an explanation which may be true, or whether his evidence compels the jury to disbelieve him".

On the principles stated above Exh. JJJJ cannot therefore without more be evidence against 5th Appellant. However, at the joint trial in the High Court, 1st Appellant herein, Gabriel Mohamed Tennyson Kai-Kai, maker of Exh. JJJJ, elected to give evidence on oath in his own defence from the witness-box. his sworn evidence from the witness-box became evidence for all proposes in the case including that of being evidence against the accused.

It was seriously contended by counsel for 5th Appellant, that when the 1st Appellant gave evidence on oath from the witness-box, he retracted his prior incriminating statement against 5th Appellant, that is Exh. JJJJ. Was there a retraction of Exh. JJJJ by 1st Appellant? I have to look for an answer from the records of proceedings furnished to this Court.

Now what is the meaning of the word “retract”? The Oxford Universal Dictionary Illustrated 3rd Ed. Vol. II 1970 Re-Print defines the “retract” as follows: To withdraw, recall, revoke, rescind. Funk and Wagnalls Standard Dictionary of the English Language, International Edition defines the word “retract” as follows: To take back (an assertion, accusation, admission); make a disavowal (of), recant.

I have read these records closely, but regrettably, I have failed to find any evidence of a reteraction of Exh. JJJJ. From the records, far from retracting Exh. JJJJ as contended by counsel for 5th Appellant, 1st Appellant in his evidence from the witness-box in relation to Exh. JJJJ, stopped short, conveniently picking extracts here and there, supposedly in the sanguine hope of extracting himself from the conspiracy charge, and not in our view, with a motive of helping 5th Appellant. In his evidence from the witness-box, 1st Appellant gave extracts here and there from Exh. JJJ of conversations which took place between himself, 5th Appellant and Jamil Sahid Mohamed in Jamil's sitting room down stairs.

Like 1st Appellant, 5th Appellant also made a voluntary cautioned statement Exh. HHHH. He elected to give evidence on oath from the witness-box. He challenged portions of Exh. JJJJ; statement of 1st Appellant where he had mentioned his name. 5th Appellant also denied on oath the testimony of 1st Appellant.

The question arising from this situation is, whether it was correct and. proper for the learned trial Judge to leave these matters to the jury for their consideration in arriving at their verdict. In my view, it was the duty of the Judge to leave the matters to the jury to decide, and this was what he did.

In the light of the authorities, we are satisfied that the learned trial Judge did not misdirect the jury in the circumstances. There was nothing to show on the records that 1st Appellant retracted Exh. JJJJ.

EXHIBIT ZZZZQ

Counsel for 1st Appellant submitted to us that their Lordships in the Court of Appeal erred in law in holding that Exh. ZZZZQ, the tape recording of the voice of 1st Appellant Gabriel Mohamed Tennyson Kai-Kai was properly admitted in evidence and therefore did not prejudice the Appellant's trial, thereby depriving him of an acquittal. it was also contended that the circulation of the transcript of Exh. ZZZZQ amongst the jury without proper proof of it was illegal and prejudicial to Appellant's case. Counsel submitted that the pre-requisites for the admissibility of the tape recording were absent. He itemized the following requirements as conditions precedent to the admissibility of the tape recording in evidence.

(i) The accuracy of the tape recording must be proved.

(ii) The voice recorded must be properly identified.

(iii) The evidence must be relevant.

(iv) Exh. ZZZZQ must come from proper custody.

[p.96]

Counsel referred to the authority of R v Maqsud Ali, R v Ashiq Hussain [1962] 2 All E.R. p. 464. As to whether the pre-requisites referred to by learned counsel were established in the instant case the following passage from the Judgment of Marshall J. can serve as a useful guide as it is germain to the issues contended in the present appeal – See p. 469:

"What is clear to this Court is that this case appears to have raised for the first time in the grounds of appeal the question whether a tape recording is admissible in law. Counsel for the Appellants did not seem eager to argue the matter with any great force or in any real detail, but the court nevertheless invited Counsel for the Crown to address the court, if he desired, on the issue and this he has done. We think that the time has come when this court should state its view of the law on a matter which is likely to be increasingly raised as time passes. For many years now photographs have been admissible in evidence on proof that they are relevant to the issues involved in the case and that the prints are taken from negatives that are constructed. The prints as seen represent situations that have been reproduced by means of mechanical and chemical devices. Evidence of things seen through telescopes or binoculars which otherwise would not be picked up by the naked eye have been admitted and now there are devices for picking up, transmitting, and recording conversations. We can see no different in principle between a tape recording and a photograph.

In saying this we must not be taken as saying that such recordings are admissible whatever the circumstances, but it does appear to this court wrong to deny to the law of evidence advantages to be gained by new techniques and new devices, provided the accuracy of the recording can be proved and the voices recorded properly identified; provided also that the evidence is relevant and otherwise admissible, we are satisfied that a tape recording is admissible in evidence. Such evidence should always be regarded with some caution and assessed in the light of all the circumstances of each case. There can be no question of laying down any exhaustive set of rules by which the admissibility of such evidence should be judged".

Was Exh. ZZZZQ, the tape recording relevant in the instant case? The answer is a clear yes, since it touches and concerns overt act 24 of Count 1 of the indictment which is in the following terms:

"On or about 19th March, 1987 in Freetown Gabriel Mohamed Tennyson Kai-Kai wrote a speech in furtherance of a plot to overthrow the Government of Sierra Leone by unlawful means which speech contained measures pertaining to the taking over of the Government of Sierra Leone and was recorded on a cassette:.

First Appellant gave evidence on his own behalf from the witness box. The jury saw him and heard his voice distinctly as he gave his evidence-in-chief and also answered questions under cross-examination.

P.W. 26 Seth Amedofo who tendered Exh. ZZZZQ and in whose custody it had been, knew 1st Appellant very well and both had been on terms of familiarity over a long period. First Appellant was therefore no stranger to P.W.26 and he, P.W.26 was capable and qualified enough to identify his voice with relative ease and confidence.

It will be pertinent to point out that Exh. ZZZZQ was played in open court in the presence and hearing of the jury, the learned trial judge and 1st Appellant among others. It was contended by Appellant that the cassette did not belong to him, 1twas not his property since it did not bear his initials nor his signature, as the other cassettes over which he claimed ownership. It was also contended by counsel for Appellant that since the jury were left unaided by the non-production of an expert evidence to positively identify the voice on Exh. ZZZZQ as that of the 1st Appellant, it would be wrong and unsafe to conclude without more that that was the voice of 1st Appellant.

Counsel submitted that Johnson J. was in error in failing to distinguish between Maksud's case and the instant case, in that in Maksud's case one of the Appellants admitted that the recorded voice whereas in the instant case the 1st Appellant denied that the voice was his.

With respect to learned counsel, this submission is not borne out by the records in this case, particularly Exh. GGGG, the cautioned statement of the 1st Appellant in which he admitted the authorship of ZZZZQ. In Exh. GGGG 1st Appellant said inter alia:

"In one of our meetings they asked that I prepare a speech to reflect their views and the views of the people of this country at this point in time. They demanded to see it in a subsequent meeting. Since some of them were suspicious of the negative aspect of this plan I then decided to please them by preparing a speech and recording it on a cassette tape and to hold on to it.

In a subsequent meeting I had the privilege to play the cassette to only few and read the draft to the greater number of the group. That was the cassette played to me and the group on 23.4.87 in the office of Mr. Prince Cole, Commissioner C.I.D. That was my voice and it was done to impress on them that it was not something negative but rather positive. This was to let them be assured as some of them were getting very suspicious of the negative aspect of the whole plan"

In the light of the foregoing synopsis, it seems to me very clear that all the pre-requisites laid down by learned counsel and also those postulated in Maksud's case were met in the instant case. In the light of clear evidence to the effect, I would regard the suggestion rather preposterous that the surest and safest way o£ identifying the voice of 1st Appellant on Exb. ZZZZQ is through the medium of an expert evidence. In my view the evidence in this regard is not worth any such frolic. The reception of the evidence complained of is not wrongful and was not in any way prejudicial to 1st Appellant.

I am also satisfied that the circulation of the transcript of the tape recording to the jury was proper as a matter of administrative convenience needing no consent from counselor Appellant. I find no justification in the criticism of the learned Appellate Justice. I am satisfied that Exh. ZZZZQ., the recorded cassette, was properly received in evidence.

I have already considered what I think are the more important and serious contentions raised by this appeal. These cover a wide range a complaints as can be seen in appropriate places in this judgment. These considerations apart, nearly all the Appellants in this appeal, in one way or the other, criticised the learned trial Judge's summing-up referring to appropriate passages in the summing-up.

Indeed the summing-up in this case was rather long and tedious, running into nearly 200 type-written pages. It was contended by Appellants that the learned trial Judge's summing-up, did not adequately or fairly put the case of the defence to the jury. They also complained of strong and unfair comments on the part of the learned trial Judge. The records of the learned trial Judge's summing-up were furnished to this Court and we scrupulously read through them.

It seems to me, however, that Counsel for Appellants on the whole, have looked at the summing-up from a narrow compass. This is regrettable. I think that the proper approach is to look at the summing-up as a whole in determining whether it contains misdirections or other matters verging on a miscarriage of justice.

In this regard the words of Lord Goddard L.C.J. in R v Linzee [1956] 3 All E.R. 980 at p. 982 are in point:

“In every Judge's summing-up or nearly some sentence can be found of which one every Judge's summing-up if one goes through it with a magnifying glass can say that it is not quite accurate or that something else ought to have been said. The fact is that one should not look at the summing-up in that way.

[p.101]

The summing-up must be taken as a whole and it must be seen that there is no mis-statement of law".

It has also been authoritatively said over and over again that there is no set formula for a summing-up. In McGreevy v. D.P.P. (1973) 1 W.L.R. 276 H.L. Lord Morris of Borth-Y-Gest said, at p. 281:

"The particular form and style of a summing-up provided it contains what must on any view be certain essential elements, must depend not, only upon the particular features of a particular case but also upon the view formed by and style that will be fair and reasonable and helpful”.

Strong comments by the learned trial Judge in summing-up cannot be equated with unfairness or usurpation of the functions of the jury. A Judge is entitled to express his opinions and to make strong comments on questions of fact as long as he leaves the issues to the jury to decide. In this connection I find it appropriate to re-echo the words of Channel J. in R v. Cohen & Bateman (1909) 2 Cr. App. R. He said at p. 208 – 209, 197 C.C.A

“In our view, a judge is not only entitled, but ought, to give the jury some assistance on questions of fact as well as on questions of law. Of course, questions of fact are for the jury and not for the judge, yet the judge has experience on the bearing of evidence, and in dealing with the relevance of questions of fact, and it is therefore right that the jury should have the assistance of the judge.

It is not wrong for the judge to give confident opinions upon questions of fact.

It is impossible for him to deal with doubtful points of fact unless he can state some of the facts confidently to the jury. It is necessary for him sometimes to express extremely confident opinions. The mere finding, therefore, of every confident expressions in the summing-up does not show that it is an improper one. When one is considering the effect of a summing-up, one must give credit to the jury for intelligence, and for the knowledge that they are not bound by the expressions of the judge upon questions of fact".

A direction in a criminal trial cannot always maintain the precise balance which people sometimes think a direction to a jury should preserve. The learned trial Judge finds it necessary because the facts compel him to direct the jury in such a way as to indicate to them his opinion, having told them that they are judges of fact. A conviction cannot be quashed because a summing-up is adverse to a particular defendant. The only question is whether the case for the defence was fairly been put before the jury.

As was aptly said in the judgment of the New South Wales Court of Criminal Appeal in Reg. v. Ali (1981) 6 A Crim. R. 161 inter alia,

"A summing-up must present a balanced account of the conflicting cases but when one case is strong and the other is weak, it does not follow that a balanced summing-up will be achieved by under-weighting the strong case and over-weighting the weak case. If one case is strong and the other is weak, then a balanced account inevitably will reflect the strength of the one and the weakness of the other".

On the general ground that the verdict is unreasonable or cannot be supported having regard to the evidence, this Court is not entitled to reverse the verdict of the jury, unless no reasonable jury properly directed could have returned that verdict. We are not entitled to substitute our views for that of the jury. It is pertinent to refer to the dicta of Lord Morris of Borth-Y-Gest in McGreevy v. D.P.P. (supra) where he said at p. 281:

"The solemn function of those concerned in a criminal trial is to clear the innocent and to convict the guilty. It is however, not for the judge but for the jury to decide what evidence is to be accepted and what conclusion should be drawn from' it. It is not to be assumed that members of a jury will abandon their reasoning powers and, having decided that they accept as true some particular piece of evidence will not proceed further to consider whether the effect of that piece of evidence is to point to the guilt or is returned or is to point to innocence. Nor is it to be assumed that in the process of weighing up a great many separate pieces of evidence they will forget the fundamental direction, if carefully given to them, that they must not convict unless they are satisfied that guilt has been proved and has been proved beyond all reasonable doubt"

The substance of the Appellants case was put before the jury, and the jury having heard the whole of the evidence, were in a position on proper direction to come to their verdict which they did by convicting the Appellants. There was ample evidence against the [p.104] Appellants on which the jury could convict on all counts, and by their verdict it must be assumed that they did not accept their defence. The Court of Appeal confirmed the convictions.

Indeed, there are misdirections in the learned trial Judge's summing-up. It has been said over and over again that there is not perfect summing-up. In our opinion therefore, the arguments which have been directed to us, powerful as they are, fail.

We approach the question whether or not it is our duty to apply to proviso here by considering whether the evidence was overwhelming and whether a jury properly directed in this case could have come to any other verdict other than that of guilty.

In those circumstances we are quite satisfied that there was here no miscarriage of justice, that the proviso ought to be applied and the appeals against convictions and sentence are dismissed.

WARNE J.S.C.

I wish to add a few words of my own in support of the judgment of the Learned Chief Justice.

Much work and effort have been exerted by both sides in presenting their arguments to this court, indeed great scholarship has been displayed as well. As a result, I wish to congratulate Counsel both for the Appellants and the State/Respondent for such dedication to duty in the interest' of their respective clients.

Having listened avidly to their various submissions, I wish to emphasize certain points which the learned Chief Justice has already dealt with in his judgment and put clearly on record that the laws of Sierra Leone are those contained in Section 125 (1) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, Act No. 12 of 19780

They are "(1) The Laws of Sierra Leone shall comprise—

(a) This Constitution;

(b) enactments made by or under the authority of Parliament established by this Constitution;

(c) Any Orders, Rules and Regulations made by any person or authority pursuant to a power conferred in that behalf by this Constitution or any other law;

(d) The existing law;

(e) the common law.

For the purpose of the opinion I am going to express in my judgment, I will also state sub section 2 of Section 125 herein. It provides:

"(2) the common law of Sierra Leone shall comprise the rules of law generally known as the doctrines of equity; and rules of customary law including those determined by the superior Court of Judicature".

[p.106]

During the course of the arguments, some counsel for some of the Appellants left me with the impression that they may have lost sight of what the laws of Sierra Leone are. This brings me to the gravamen of the contention of counsel for Appellants who were convicted for the offence of Treason.

It is pertinent to refer to the particulars of the Offence which the learned Chief Justice has stated in his judgment. I only wish to highlight the substantive offence for which the Appellants were indicted in count1 ".....on the 1st day of June, 1986 and on diverse days between that day and the 23rd day of March 1987 in Sierra Leone prepared to overthrow the Government of Sierra Leone by unlawful means. (Emphasis mine).

The offence is the preparation to over throw the Government of Sierra Leone by unlawful means, and Section 3 (1)(a) of Act No. 10 of 1963 as amended state that it is treason.

Warton's Law lexicon defined treason as "to betray. An offence against the duty of allegiance and the highest known crime; for it aims at the very destruction of the very Commonwealth itself".

Having a clear view of what the offence of treason is, I will now deal with the contention of Counsel. They argued with great tenacity that since no provision is made in the Treason and State Offences Act No. 10 of 1963 as amended, the laying of overt acts in Count 1 in the indictment, is bad in law. They argued further that there is no justification in law for the laying of overt acts in count 1. I agree there is no provision in the said Act for the laying of overt acts in a count defective? I do not think so. They are, in my opinion further particular of the particulars of offence in the indictment regarding Count 1.

In Section 2 of Act No.10 of 1963, it is stated that "Offence under this Act" includes any act, omission or other thing punishable under this Act.

[p.107]

The Appellants have been charged under S3 (1) (a) of the said Act. What is the justification for the laying of overt acts in Count 1? The answer, in my view is contained in the Criminal procedure Act No. 32 of 1965 Section 3 and 51.

Section 3 provides the following:

"Without prejudice to the provisions of any enactment, all criminal offences shall be enquired into, tried and otherwise dealt with according to the provisions of this Act"

The relevant provision of this Act is Section 51 to which the learned Chief Justice has already referred. I will only emphasise the following words in section 51 (1) "together with such particulars as may be necessary for giving reasonable information as to the nature of the charge".

Sub section 2 is even clearer and I will repeat it "(2) notwithstanding any rule of law or practice, an information shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, not be opened to objection in respect of its form or contents if it is framed in accordance with the rules under this Act". (Emphasis mine).

The rules under this Act are contained in the Frist Schedule in The Criminal procedure Rules – Rule 3 (1) (2) and (4).

The above provisions to which I have referred are part of the Laws of Sierra Leone, vide section 125 act No. 12 of 1978.

In my view, the contention of Counsel are untenable and the overt acts are properly and justifiably laid according to law.

The cases of Lansana and 11 others (1970-71) A.L.R. (S.L. Series) 186; Fornah and 14 others Cr. App. 31/74 of 30th April 1975 (unreported). Have been cited by Counsel in support of their contentions. In these cases, the issue of the laying of overt acts in a court for the offence of treason was never decided nor was a [p.108] definitive opinion expressed by the Court of Appeal. However, Luke J.S.C. (as he then was) in the case of Fornah and 14 others made an attempt to address the issue. Suffice it to say, in all these cases overt acts were laid in the count for treason. It seems to me, this practice, as Hon. Mr. justice Luke termed it in the Fornah and 14 others case, has been adopted by the State in the instant case. Be that as it may, it is a practice which has its foundation in law. This ground of appeal fails.

Is proof of one overt act sufficient to ground the conviction for treason?

Counsel for the Appellants have argued forcefully that the charge of the Learned Trial Judge to the jury that the proof of one overt act is sufficient to found a conviction for treason is bad in law. This is indeed the direction of the Learned Trial Judge to the Jury. The Court of Appeal, it seems to me agreed with the Judge.

It is my view, that the Court of Appeal did not advert its attention to the repeal of the Treason Act of 1351 that by Section 19 of the Treason and State Offences Act No. 10 of 1963 as amended. It is provided in the Treason Act of 1351 that the proof of one overt act was sufficient to ground a conviction for the offence of treason. This act, having been repealed by Act No. 10 of 1963 (supra) we are now to look through our Act to see what proof is required for offences committed under the said Act.

Under the laws of Sierra Leone, of which the said Act is one, the proof required for any criminal offence is proof beyond reasonable doubt. As a result, in the instant case, what the prosecution was required to prove was the substantive offence of preparation to overthrow the Government of Sierra Leone by unlawful means, which is treason. The proof was proof beyond reasonable doubt. I have already opined that overt acts are not charges but further particulars of the particulars of offence. As an adjunct to these particulars, the overt acts have been laid.

It is my view that, where evidence has been lead by the prosecution is support of the overt acts, that will suffice, if such evidence proves any of the overt act beyond reasonable doubt.

Counsel for Appellants have further contended that some of the overt acts as laid create offences specifically provided for in Section 17 of the Treason and State Offences Act No. 10 of 1963 as amended.

Section 17 provides as follows:

"Any person who attempts to commit any offence under this Act, or solicits, or incites or endeavours to persuade another person to commit an offence, or aids or abets or does any act preparatory to the commission of an offence under this Act, shall be deemed to have committed such offence and on conviction shall be liable to the same punishment and to be proceeded against in the same manner as if he had committed the offence".

It is at once clear that this is an all embracing section which covers every section of the Act that creates an offence. The operative words in Section 17 are "shall be deemed to have committed such offence…….". (emphasis mine). "Deemed" has not been interpreted under the Act but "offence" has been, and I have already referred to it.

In my view, deemed means "regarded as" or "considered to be". In my opinion, separate offences are not created by Section 17. The contention is untenable. Be that as it may, I have already opined that the overt acts are not laid as charges. As such, they cannot be deemed to be offences under the Act. At the expense of repetition they are further particulars of the particulars of offence.

[p.110]

On the totality of the evidence, the overts acts have been proved beyond reasonable doubt.

MISPRISION OF TREASON

Counsel for the Appellants who were convicted for the offence of misprision of treason have argued that misprision of treason is not an offence in sierra Leone. They have relied on the obiter dictum of Tambiah J.A. in the case of Lansana and eleven others (supra). This oibiter is not the law nor is it, with respect to the learned Justice, persuasive.

The charge has been laid in breach of the common law.

This offence is a misdemeanor at common law and carries a maximum penalty of life imprisonment.

Counsel for the 14th Appellant has also contended that the sentence of seven years imprisonment imposed on the 14th Appellant is inordinately long and excessive.

It is trite law that the common law is part of the laws of Sierra Leone – vide section 125 of Act No. 12 of 1978. The common Law is not static but must continue to develop, as it has, over the years.

In support of my view, I refer to the case of R.V Turner and others (1975) 61 Cr. App. R 67 et seq, where Milnoo J. referred to the speech of Lord Reid in Myers v Director of Public Prosecutions (1965) A.C. 1001 at 1021E a case in which it was sought to extend the band or reception of hearsay in evidence – Lord Reid said – "The common law must be developed to meet the changing economic conditions and habits of thought; and I would not be deterred by expressions of opinion in this House in old cases. But that there are limits to what can or should do. If we are to extend the law it must be by the development and application of fundamental principles. We cannot introduce arbitrary conditions or limitations that must be left to legislation". I entirely agree with the learned law Lord and I adopt the statement. In my view, this pronouncement is applicable in every case where the common law exists as in the case of the inadmissibility or hearsay evidence.

I will now consider the case against the 13th and 14th Appellants respectively.

Both have appealed against conviction and the 14th Appellant has appealed against sentence as well.

I believe Counsel conceded that Misprision of Treason is an offence in Sierra Leone. However, Counsel for 13th Appellant has submitted that the prosecution have failed to prove the case against the Appellant. That in the evidence against the 13th Appellant P.W. 18 Mustapha Sheriff testified inter alia as follows:…….. At about 6 p.m. we joined a taxi the 12th accused alighted at Congo Cross and I continued and went to jay's Bar at Aberdeen Road Texaco. Whilst there O.C. Benji (17th accused identified) came into the bar. I served him a pint of beer and then a second. I called him to a corner and told him that people had called me about a coup, but I had not yet received information as I had not yet seen weapons and arms. I told him if I received full information either on the 21st or the 22nd March, 1987, I would be informing him again. He said O.K. and went outside".

Counsel for the Appellant said this evidence did not support Count III in the Indictment.

At a cursory glance at the evidence, it would seem the contention and arguments are cogent, compelling and persuasive.

There are several schools of thought as to what evidence would be sufficient to ground a conviction for the offence of misprision of treason.

There is one school which is of the view that the accused/appellant must not only know that treason is being planned or has been committed, but he must know the perpetrators of the treason.

There is yet another school of thought which holds the view that accused/appellant having known that treason is being planned or has been committed, he has a duty to disclose this intelligence to the authorities within a reasonable time what he knows even though he does not know the perpetrators.

There is yet the other school of thought which holds the view that when once the accused/appellant knows that treason is being planned, threatened or committed, he should with due diligence ascertain the facts and disclose those facts to the authorities even though he is not aware of where the traitors will strike, when they will strike or who they are.

In my opinion, these various schools of thought are clear manifestations of the development of the common law.

In this entangled web, how do we determine the issue in the Sierra Leone contest, that is to say, under the common law of Sierra Leone. I will address the issue in this wise- by referring to a local expression – "If one has been bitten by a snake, he should be wary of a worm". The English idiom is "Once bitten twice shy".

Here was a Senior Police Officer, to whom an information has been passed on by a member of the Republic of Sierra Leone Military Forces about a coup plot; he decided to go home because, he was not only hungry, but to await further information from the same source. In fact, the information, albeit scanty, was passed on to an appropriate authority. In my view, he the 13th appellant ought not to have allowed the informant to disappear from his sight. In his capacity as a Senior Police Officer, he should have been alerted there and then and make further investigation. The history of coups and abortive coups in this country since Independence in 1961 is proverbial and should be fresh in the minds of every responsible citizen. The 13th appellant did not pursue the matter as he ought to have. If he had, he would soon have known if it was a hoax or a fact. If it was a hoax, Mustapha Sheriff would have been charged for public mischief, but it was a fact , he would have been duty bound to inform higher authorities failure to pursue the information further was in my view, criminal negligence. What if Mustapha Sheriff, had not gone back to give him further information, as in fact, he was prevented from doing? Would he have gone in search of Sheriff? Perhaps! However as it turned out he never made any effort to seek Sheriff. In my opinion, his inertia, compounded his criminal folly.

I subscribe to the school of thought which holds the view that when once a person knows that treason is being planned or committed, with due diligence ascertain the facts and disclose that information to the authorities even though he does not know who the traitors are, where they will strike or when they will strike.

I think this is the common sense view of interpreting the common law.

In my opinion, the 13th Appellant was justifiably convicted for the offence of misprision of treason. His appeal therefore fails.

The 14th Appellant appealed against his conviction and sentence. The evidence against the 14th Appellant is overwhelming. He was involved in the preparation to overthrow the Government of Sierra Leone by unlawful means, until he himself realized it was a difficult undertaking. In his voluntarily cautioned statement Exhibit "FF" he said, inter alia, "I told him I was not going to join in any plan with O/C Kai-Kai to overthrow the Government of Sierra Leone because O/C Kai-Kai is a frustrated man and if he had any good intention, he should have done so at the time he was carrying rank and not at this moment when the authorities have demoted him in rank.

At this stage, Tarawally told me that he was thinking about the same issue and that O/C Kai-Kai had certain secret which he fails to reveal to us and he also will not join in the plan. He further told me that he was going in search of Massaquoi to warn him not to join in them plot

Since then I did not see any of them again. I never thought of revealing this information to authority because the whole plan seemed to have been impossible for a single Police Officer to stand and fight to overthrow the Government of Sierra Leone. O/C Kai-Kai never gave me any amount to keep this information as a secret". (Emphasis mine).

It is a trite law that what the 14th Appellant said about Tarawally is not evidence against him; but what he said about his involvement is not only evidence against himself, but purely a jury matter. The jury found him guilty of the offence as charged and, in my view, I don't think the verdict ought to be disturbed and I will not disturb it. it is small wonder he was not charged for treason but the prosecution had a right to prefer what charge they wished.

As to the appeal against sentence I will examine the circumstances in order to determine whether the sentence is inordinately long. I think it will be useful to look at the history of the custodial sentence as a punishment under the common law. "Imprisonment as a punishment was alien to the common law of England". This was a statement made by Lord Justice Lawton in the case of Tuner and others (supra). The Learned Law Lord had this to Say:

"We have reminded ourselves that imprisonment as a punishment was alien to the common law of England".

We here are operating, inter alia, under the common law of England and Sierra Leone. The principles enunciated by the Learned Law Lord which should guide the Courts in passing sentence for serious crimes is contained in the case of Turner & others (supra). The Learned Law Lord continued.

"It was the task of judges under the Commission of General Gaol Delivery to clear the goals and not to fill them with convicted offenders".

[p.115]

The Learned Judge then went through the history of punishment for offence committed by individuals against the State and eventually he came to the point where terms of imprisonment became a deterrent.

It is to be noted that Corporal punishment was in existence in England until abolished by the Criminal Justice Act of 1948.

The Learned Judge then opined what should be the appropriate deterrence for grave crimes involving violence or threat of violence. It became clear that these offences deserved long terms of imprisonment.

The judge then referred to the abolition of the death penalty which had an effect upon the length of sentences.

The judge then went on to say:

“since there is now no death penalty, the only sentence which can be imposed for the most serious crime known to English law, treason apart, is that of life imprisonment. With very rare exceptions, those who are sentenced to life imprisonment are discharged from prison at some time. The date when they are discharged depends upon the circumstance of the offence…….

Very few, however, are kept in custody after about 15 years.

This has created a difficult sentencing problem for the courts……

because it seems to us it is not in the public interest that even for grave crimes, sentences should be passed which do not correlate sensible and fairly with the time in prison which is likely to be served by somebody who has committed murder in circumstances in which there were no mitigating circumstances.

There is another aspect of this problem we have to bear in mind. Grave crimes fall into categories. There are some which are wholly abnormal. These circumstances are horrifying. They may endanger the State. What is to be done with those who commit such crimes? (Emphasis mine). There are other crimes which are very grave but which cannot be regarded as normal”.

The Learned Judge then gave examples of the two categories of crime then added, "The problem has been whether crimes of gravity but common occurrence, should be treated as abnormal crimes. We have come to the conclusion that they should not. They fall into category of their own which calls for sentences lower than those which would be appropriate for crimes of an abnormal character”.

I will deal with the appeal against sentence by the 14th Appellant guided by the principles propounded by Lawton L.J. and adopt the ratio decidendi which I think will be useful to courts trying criminal cases.

The death sentence still exists in Sierra Leone for murder or treason. There is therefore no need to measure the sentence passed on the 14th Appellant against the sentence for murder or treason. It is however necessary to determine what category to place the offence of misprision of treason.

In any civilized society, where the rule of law exists, misprision of treason is a grave crime. It is a grave crime in Sierra Leone. It is a crime which endangers the very existence of the State. For such a crime I will consider the maximum sentence which is life imprisonment as against the circumstance in which the offence was committed. It is one of the gravest offences know to the laws of Sierra Leone yet it carries a lower sentence than that for the offence of murder.

In considering whether the sentence is inordinately long, one must bear also in mind the frequency with which such offence is committed and ensure whatever sentence is imposed will be a deterrent to others.

In the twenty-eight years of the Independence of Sierra Leone, there have been as many coups and abortive coups as there have been general elections. The several attempts to overthrow the Government of Sierra Leone by unlawful means are not only disturbing but intolerable. It is reprehensible that persons who know of a coup plot or that treason has been committed should conceal this intelligence from authorities. I think they should feel the full weight of the law.

In the case of the 14th Appellant he did not only attend a meetings where the coup was formulated, he only reneged, because he felt it was impossible of success.

I do not think there are any mitigating circumstances why the court should interfere with the sentence imposed n the Appellant. The sentence of 7 years is not inordinately long. The appeal is therefore dismissed.

HERESAY EVIDENCE

Counsel for the 5th Appellant has criticized the learned trial judge and the Court of Appeal for receiving in evidence the evidence of DW20 because it was hearsay evidence. Hearsay evidence ought not to be admissible in a criminal trial unless it forms part of the res gestae. Vide the case of Teper V.R. (1952) 2 A.E.R. 447 at 449- In this case the learned judge said “and the evidence shall only be admitted if it satisfies the strictest test of close association with the crime in time, place and circumstances”. This case was decided in the Privy Council. Lord Normand in his opinion said “The rule against the admission of hearing evidence is fundamental. It is not the best evidence and it is not delivered on oath. The truthfulness [p.118] an accuracy of the person whose words are spoken to by another witness cannot be tested by cross-examination and the light which his demeanour will throw on his testimony is lost. Nevertheless, the rule admits of certain guarded and limited exceptions, one of which is that words may be proved when they form part of the “res gestae”. I entirely agree with the Learned Law Lord.

In the instant case, the evidence of DW20 ought to have been excluded because it was hearsay evidence and did not form part of the res gestae. This rule applies even to the evidence of a witness called by the Defence. The Criticism by Counsel is justified. Nevertheless the question arises, did the inadmissible evidence preclude the court from considering the other evidence that was available? I do not think so. In my view, there was other admissible evidence against the 5th Appellant which the jury considered.

EVIDENCE OF MUSTAPHA SHERIFF

Counsel of Appellants have contended that the evidence of Mustapha Sheriff P.W. 18 was that of an accomplice and that the learned trial Judge misdirected the jury in this regard.

The foundation of the prosecution's case against all the Apellants was the evidence of Mustapha Sheriff. No doubt, Sheriff was at once a villain and a hero, depending on whether his evidence was for the prosecution or against the Appellants. The evidence of Sheriff was clear, succinct and to the point. The cross-examination of the witness by Counsel for some of the Appellants did not address the gravemen of the charge. On the contrary, some of the questions were not only irrelevant but very insulting and scandalous.

Was Sheriff an accomplice, the learned trial judge did not think he was and directed the jury accordingly and the jury by their verdict did not think that he was an accomplice. I do not think he was either.

In view of the number of accused persons before the trial court, each one being represented by Counsel, I think it is appropriate to call in aid the case of R v Turner & others (1975) 61 Cr. App. R. 67 et seq.

There are several issues in that case which have similarities to the instant case e.g. Several accused persons on the same indictment, the length of the trial hearsay evidence by defence witness, principal witness being tainted as accomplice, oral statements being made by accused persons to police and given in evidence and the complaint of inordinately long sentence.

The Turner & others case was one involving bank robbers. One of the robbers became Crown witness. As a result of his statements to the police, his accomplices were apprehended, prosecuted and many of them convicted and received long prison sentences. The ex bank robber who was the Crown witness, was called Smalls. In that case, Smalls was not only an accomplice, but the Prosecution, the Defence and the judge and jury knew he was an accomplice. Among some of the issues which emerged at the trial were those which I have already mentioned and I believe they are analogous to some of the issues in the instant case. How did the court address these issues?

With regard to hearsay evidence, the Court held that it is inadmissible even when the res gestae.

No doubt the trial of the instant case was indeed a lengthy one. There must be a way by which this can be obviated in the future. A lengthy trial is a strain on those involved – the judge whose responsibility it is to take notes of the evidence in long hand; the jury who has to sit out and listen attentively – and in the instant case, were kept together in one place for the duration of the trial; and above all the expense of the trial to the taxpayers. These are disturbing features which ought to be considered by all the authorities concerned.

Be that as it may, I will continue to highlight the portions of the judgment which are germaine to the instant case.

There has been serious complaints by Counsel for Appellants that it was improper for statements to be obtained by investigators from suspects at alleged scenes of crime where prosecution is pending. They have relied on the case of R v Kojo Bodom and others 2 W.A.C.A 380 at 391.

In answer to the complaints, I will re-echo the words of Lawton L.J. in the case of Turner and others (supra). The said "Apart altogether from the problem of length and expense there was the problem of evidence of a number of police officers as to oral statements (colloquially known as verbals) which the accused are said to have made after arrest. Defence Counsel had to challenge this evidence if their instruction from their clients made challenges necessary. As almost happens in this class of case at the Central Criminal Court (but not so commonly on circuit) nearly all the defending Counsel challenged the credibility f the police witnesses giving evidence about oral statements. They were severally accused of lying, bribery, fabricating and planting evidence, perjury in the case, the theft of LE 25,000, threatening witnesses, Assault and drunkenness. The existing practice followed by the police for putting this kind of evidence before courts almost inevitably leads to attacks on the credibility of police officers if the evidence is true, as it usually is, the jury is greatly helped. It is a matter of human experience which has long then recognized, that wrong doers who are about to be revealed for what they are, often find relief from their inner tensions by talking about what they have done. In our judgment and experience this is a common explanation of oral admissions made at or about the time of arrest and later retracted. But if the evidence of such oral admissions is untrue, as regrettably it sometimes is, defendants are unjustly and unfairly put at risk". In the instant case, the oral statements [p.121] of the appellants which were made to the police officers and given in evidence were vigorously tested in cross-examination. It seems to me that the statements were challenged because they were admissions which were damaging to the case for some of the appellants. However, some of the appellants gave evidence in their own defence and the jury had the opportunity of seeing and hearing the witnesses and they were the judges of facts. The verdict is indicative of the fact that they believed the statement. The case of Kodjo Bodom & others, I regret to say, is not helpful to appellants in his case. I adopt the statement and observations of Layton L.J. and in my view, I can find nothing unsafe or unsatisfactory about the convictions of the appellant even if they were based on the statements made to the police officers and the convictions were not based solely on those statement.

MISDIRECTIONS/MISCARRIAGE OF JUSTICE

Counsel for the appellants have complained forcefully that the learned trial judge misdirected the jury in law and in fact and as such the appellants were deprived of the chance of acquittal. Before considering the passages referred to I will cite the case of R v Wolf 10 Cr. App. R. 107 where it was stated - "An isolated incorrect passage in a summing-up is not sufficient ground for quashing a conviction if the court is satisfied that the jury appreciate the proper questions for them". I do agree that this is the common sense and correct approach.

In a jury trial, it is a presumption that the jurors follow the proceedings and fully understand the evidence. However, in a short and simple trial, if the learned trial judge fails to assist the jury in the summing-up by not reviewing the evidence, the court will not quash the convictions on that ground simpliciter. The situation is different in a lengthy and complicated trial. The instant case is in the latter category. The summing-up in the instant case, is copious and to be certain extent, repetitive. If the learned trial judge misdirected [p.122] the jury on a question of law, the convictions would needs be quashed.

If it is a misdirection on a question of facts, the convictions need not be quashed,unless the misdirection is such that it will be tantamount to a substantial miscarriage of justice.

Ground 8 of the grounds of appeal filed on behalf of the 1st appellant seems to epitomize the contentions of some of the other appellants.

Ground 8 states:

“Their Lordships exoneration of the trial Judge's bias and prejudice during the conduct of the trial is manifestly unjust and unfair to the appellants thus resulting in a substantial miscarriage of justice, as such blatant bias and prejudice disabled the trial Judge from rendering that much needed assistance to the jury to guide them in their deliberations in reaching a free, impartial and an unbiased verdict”.

Counsel then proceeded to cite twenty five passages in the summing-up which he felt were prejudicial to the appellant.

On a cursory glance at the ground of appeal, it seems to me that the contention is about the manner in which the learned trial judge reviewed the evidence and his comments on the evidence.

Let me here and now remind ourselves that the learned trial judge is part and parcel of the trial court, albeit, in the position of an umpire. Strong comments by the learned trial judge on the evidence is no justification for any scathing attack upon the person of the judge or his conduct of the case. Strong comments are permissible provided the judge does not usurp the functions of the jury.

having said this, I will now consider the passages complained of. In considering these passages, I will only comment on those which I believe are prejudicial to the interest of the appellant.

(1) “Some of these statements are what the law would describe as confession statements.

Others are evasive and others still denials”.

In my view, this direction to the jury is equivocal. Voluntary cautioned statement by accused are either confessions or denials or confessions and justification. If the statement is evasive it is tantamount to a denial. It is again not clear whether the Judge was commenting on the confession statement as being evasive or whether the denials ware evasive. I think the direction is unclear and the complaint is tenable.

(8) “Gentlemen of the jury, a lie told out of Court may amount to corroboration of the case against the person who tells the lie and there is no obvious reason why lies told on a certain type told in evidence of an accused should not have similar effect. The contrivance of falsehood can sometimes only be explained on the footing that the contriver is anxious to conceal his guilt although this is not always so. There is a clear distinction between a lie told out of court and evidence given in the witness box which the jury reject as incapable of belief or as otherwise unreliable".

I believe in this passage, the judge was referring to false statements made by a prisoner. I will here refer to the 35th Edit. of Archbold, Criminal Pleading Evidence and practice Paragraph 1301 under the rubric "False statement made by the prisoner". It states: "A false statement made by the prisoner to the police or before the commencement of proceedings is not necessarily corroboration, but may be so. Whether it is or is not capable of affording corroboration must depend on al the circumstances of the particular case.

A lie may afford corroboration if it gives to a proved opportunity a different complexion from that which such opportunity would otherwise have borne: Vide.

The learned trial Judge was no doubt charging the jury to reject the evidences of the 1st appellant as not being wholly reliable in view of the fact that he had made statement previously to the police that did not corroborate the evidence on oath. I do not think he assisted the jury by the direction he gave them. I must say, with respect to the learned trial Judge, it took me some time to unravel the passage. No doubt the 1st appellant had made voluntary statements to the police implicating other co-accused persons. When he testified on oath, he varied his story regarding some co-accused person. It was the duty of the Judge to direct the jury that the statement implicating the co-accused was not evidence against them but only the evidence on oath bought to be considered. Regrettably the Judge's direction to the jury was not only a mouthful but it was clearly a misdirection.

10. "Here is the 1st accused who said in his statement to the police what he alleged 5th accused said during that conversation in furtherance of the common design to overthrow the Government of Sierra Leone. After he had been with the 5th accused and after they have been coming to Court it would appear that he decided to pick out at few words out of that conversation and testified in that witness box that that was all that the 5th accused said. In doing so he offered no explanation for the clear contradiction. When you read exhibit JJJJ you will see that he picked out only one sentence out of that statement and gave evidence about that only.

Why did he leave these out when testifying?

What then is the inference you can draw from that behaviour gentlemen of the jury"?

This charge to the, jury was rather unfortunate. The passage is fraught with flaws. I say unfortunate, because it is a basic principle of evidence that unsworn statements made by an accused implicating a co-accused in his absence is not admissible against the co-accused nor is it evidence against him. Here was the learned trial Judge charging the jury in clear unmistakable language to consider such statement in its entirety, to wit, Exhibit "JJJJ' when he gave evidence on oath. This is clearly a misdirection which militates against the 5th appellant, not the 1st appellant, be that as it may, it is a misdirection.

(14) “It was the 1st accused you will recall

He has told you in his statement what part some of the sixteen accused men played in the preparation to overthrow the Government of Sierra Leone. All what he has told you is part of the prosecution's case which if you believe beyond reasonable doubt could lend you to consider a verdict of guilty against those of whom you are satisfied took part in their common design”.

[p.126]

The learned trial judge, in his attempt to emphasize the common design of the sixteen appellants, fell into error by charging the jury that what 1st appellant said in his unsworn statement implicating the other fifteen appellants was evidence against them. This was only evidence against himself. This is another case of a misdirection.

(15) “This is a situation which I find myself unable to understand, if someone is being investigated regarding an offence and he confesses to that offence how can he then be made a prosecution witness; who then will be made the accused?.....……

Having ruled that all these statements are admissible at law and they have been admitted as evidence, they form part of the evidence in this case”.

With respect to the learned trial Judge, I find the opening statement incredible. I think the learned trial Judge may have been unaware of a long line of cases, more particularly – cases involving the offence of conspiracy where one of the conspirators had been given immunity from prosecution and used as a prosecution witness, and also where someone had been convicted and subsequently used as prosecution witness. Two cases are aptly in point here –Turner and others (supra) where Smalls was made a witness for the Crown where he had confessed to being part of the bank robbers; and the case of Shamwana and others decided in Zambia on 2nd April, 1985.

In the latter case, the principal witness for the prosecution was Major General Christopher Kabwe, P.W.5, who was at the material time, head of the Zambia Air Force (ZAF) in his capacity as Chief of Staff.

P.W 5 had jointly been arraigned with the appellants but was later granted immunity against prosecution. A nolle prosequi was entered in his favour and he became a State witness. He was rightly presented by the prosecution as an accomplice witness and so support for his evidence became necessary. There is also the Supreme Court App. No. 2/77 intitled DaisyA. Venn Vs. The State, where the Principal witness for the State was one Kpake who was an accomplice. He had earlier been convicted and sentenced to a term of imprisonment. The Judgment was delivered on the 14th December, 1977 (Unreported)

The learned trial Judge, having ruled that the statements were admissible at law and therefore formed part of the evidence in the case, was in duty bound to warn the jury that what one accused said against a co-accused in his statement was not evidence against the co-accused.

I lament that this passage is also a misdirection.

(16) “That the 1st accused told them that the weapons were delivered to him at the garage of the 12th accused at Banana Water and he had the weapons loaded into his car and he drove off with the weapons to his Spur Road Residence that subsequently Jaward sent more weapons to him by the same Arabic agent whom the 12th accused accompanied to his residence and at about mid-night he instructed the 12th accused to take the weapons to his residence at 42B Waterloo Street and he called the 11th accused to escort the 12th accused to Waterloo Street…… Why the 1st accused did not wait until day-break? Why, what was the untold urgency for three bags of rice to have been transferred from 'Spur Road to Waterloo. Street at that time of the night? Could it have been three bags full of something else?"

I will repent that what 1st Appellant told P.W.1 about 12th and 11th appellants was not evidence against them and the Judge should have warned the jury accordingly. 'This was a misdirection to put this bit of evidence to them for their consideration. As far as the last portion is concerned, it was a valid comment.

Having considered the various passages complained of, I will now address the issue of the several misdirections.

In my opinion, they amount to a miscarriage of justice. Ought the appeal to be allowed as a result? I do not think so. Counsel contended that such miscarriage of justice deprived the 1st appellant of the chance of an acquittal.

Let me say, it is a principle in an Appellate Court that it is for the Appellant in a criminal appeal to satisfy the court that a substantial miscarriage of justice has occurred for the court to dismiss the appeal.

I draw support for my opinion by referring to Section 58(2) of Courts Act No. 31 of Courts Act No. 31 of 1965 as amended by Act No. 3 of 1976. It provide the following:

"(2) On an appeal against conviction the Court of Appeal, notwithstanding that they are of the opinion that the point raised in the appeal might be decided in favour of the appellant, may (a) either dismiss the appeal, or (b) order the appellant to be retried by a court of competent jurisdiction, if they consider that no substantial miscarriage of justice has actually occurred".

I do not think the jury, by their verdict, were in any doubt as to the conclusiveness of the totality of the evidence against the 1st appellant. I do not think there was any substantial miscarriage of justice to justify the reversal of the judgment of the court below.

I will not adopt the ratio decidendi in the case of R v Sydney Augustus Wann? Cr. App. R. 135 at 138 and 139, in support of my view. In that case the Lord Chief Justice, Lord Alverstone had this to say:—

"In a summing-up the facts may not be stated fully or may be staged incorrectly, without any misdirection on any question of law a mere mis-statement is clearly not a misdirection on any question of law. A mere mis-statement is clearly not a misdirection when the case has been fully heard by the jury, and as to omission, he must be satisfied that it is such that it is reasonable and probable that the jury was misled, in which case there might be a miscarriage of justice. But as I said in delivering the judgment of this Court, "One has to be very careful in dealing with a case of alleged misdirection to appreciate the lines on which a case is conducted as omission to direct the jury on a point which was not taken at the trial if no injustice is done (Meyer 1 Cr. App. R at 11, 1908). The effect of the case on this subject is stated in Ross on the Court of Criminal Appeal at P. 113 as follows: "To have any effect in itself the mis-statement of the evidence must be such as to make it reasonably possible that the jury would not have returned their verdict of guilty if there had been no mis-statements."

With the alteration of the one word "possible" to "probable", we think that the statement is correct."

The statement of Lord Alverstone, in the judgment, is as valid today as it was in 1908 and 1912.

The sum total of Counsel's complaint is that the learned trial Judge failed to direct the jury properly or at all. I do not think the jury were misled as a result. In my view, they appreciated the case against the 1st appellant and would have returned the same verdict had there been a proper direction.

Mr. Berewa, Counsel for the 5th Appa11ant has also complained about certain passages in the summing-up which he submitted were misdirections by the learned trial Judge.

I have gone through the passages and I find that these passages dealt with statements made by the 1st Appellant against the 5th Appellant. I agree with Counsel that the learned trial Judge failed to warn the jury that these statements were not evidence against the 5th Appellant. However, these were complaints made by Counsel in the Court below. Counsel has urged on this court that the Court of Appeal erred in law in upholding the convictions of the 5th Appellants in spite of these misdirections. Counsel has referred to the judgments of Thompson-Davis, J.A. and Johnson J. to support his contention.

It seems, to me that the Court of Appeal addressed the issue of common design within the context of the proof of criminal conspiracy vis a vis the acts and declarations of one accused as they affect the involvement of a co-accused.

In the judgment of Thomson-Davies J.A. , on this point, the learned judge had this to say: “However it is well settled principle of our laws that a man’s confession or admission is evidence against himself and not against his co-prisoner, unless he makes the statement his own. It is also well settled in law that “a statement made in the absence of an accused person by one of his co-prisoners is not and cannot be evidence for all purposes of the case”.

Archbold 36th Ed. para 1127 p. 421, - R v Rudd 1948 32 Cr. App. R explaining R.V. Meredith, Bluston and Bramley, 1943, 29 Cr. App. R p. 40. So too statements of conspirators are not admissible against another, unless they be in furtherance of the conspiracy. R. v Frank Pepper and Annie Ellen Platt 1921 3 K.B. p. 167. I must also have recourse to para 869 of Halsbury 3rd Ed. Vol. 10 p. 475, which reads:—

"Statements made, like the acts done, by one of several accomplices or co-conspirators in pursuance of the common design, are evidence against the others". – R v Blake 1844 6 Q.B. 126, and R v Besman 1868 11 Cox C.C. but statements which are not made in pursuance of the common design are not evidence against the others”.

In Archbold 35th Edition paragraph 4074, we find as follows:

"Before evidence can be given of the acts of one conspirator against another the existence of the conspiracy must be proved and also the fact that the parties were members of the same conspiracy and that the act in question was done in furtherance of the common design".

Once the conspiracy has been fairly established by the evidence whatever is said or done by either of the accused person in pursuance of the common design, is both in law and common sense to be considered as the act of all the conspirators”, Thompson-Davies J. A. then referred to two other cases in support of his opinion and said,

It seems to me that the point which had been argued in this Court, had been dealt with the Court of Appeal.

However, in my opinion the totality of the evidence justifies the conviction of the 5th Appellant. I agree with Thompson-Davies, J.A., there is no merit in the complaint.

[p.132]

In my opinion, I do not think the Court of Appeal considered that a substantial miscarriage of Justice had actually occurred in spite of the misdirections by the learned trial Judge to the jury, consequently, the Court of Appeal dismissed the appeals. I do not think so either. I draw support for my opinion from the case, of the King v Henry Beecham (1921) 3 K B 464 at 471.

“In that case the defendant was charged with manslaughter, it being by driving his motor car at an excessive speed he ran down and killed a boy. The defendant in cross-examination was repeatedly asked and pressed to answer the question whether he did not buy the motor car because it was capable of being driven at high speed, and he at last replied, "It did not appeal to me for that reason because I do not care for driving at high rate of speed myself". The Prosecution treating that statement given by the defendant of his good character as a driver, then asked him whether he had not been, repeatedly convicted of driving to the public danger, and the defendant, being required by the Judge to reply, admitted that was so. The defendant was convicted. On appeal:—

Held, that the method of cross-examination by which the defendant was led to make the above-quoted statement could not be approved, that by led to make the above-quoted statement in the circumstances he could not be taken to have given evidence of his, good character" within the meaning of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 S. 1 (f) (ii) and therefore he ought not to have been asked or required to answer the question as to his previous conviction and that his evidence regarding them was inadmissible. Held, however, that under the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 S.4 Sub. S.1, proviso, notwithstanding that the above point ought to be decided in favour of the defendant, the appeal should be dismissed, in as much as, having regard to the other evidence given at the trial no substantial miscarriage of justice had actually occurred”.

A number of contentions which can be described as jury points, were advanced in support of the appeals. These included criticisms of the summing-up for failure to remind the jury of some of the arguments advanced on behalf of the appellants. It is not proposed to deal with all of them again in detail. The learned trial judge was not required to do any in my judgment he dealt adequately in his summing-up of the case for and against the appellants.

CONCLUSION

The summing-up of the case by the learned trial judge may not be impeccable, and certainly is not.

However, we must take into account the length of the trial, the number of accused persons, the several objections of Counsel for the number of accused persons, the several objections of Counsel for the defence, some warranted and some absolutely unwarranted, and the advantage the judge and jury had to see and hear the several witnesses both for the prosecution and the defence, to restrict this court from being minutely critical. Nevertheless, the Court of Appeal made a determined and critical scrutiny of the whole proceedings. We, on our part, had had our burden lightened by the work of the Court of Appeal. Where there are lacunae we have endeavoured in the circumstance to fill the lacunae.

I do not propose to examine in detail again the course of the trial as Counsel for appellants have urged, not the summing-up by the learned trial Judge even though counsel for appellants have covered it with a large blanket of submissions under misdirections and bias. But having read through the whole proceedings, I have come to the clear conclusion that the learned trial Judge's summing-up is not open to the charge of bias. There are passages in it which are open to the criticisms, these, we have dealt with. But the summing-up must be viewed as a whole, and upon this view of it, I am satisfied that the several appellants were guilty of the offences, as charged.

In support of what I have said about the Summing-up, I will refer to the case of R v Linzee and R v O'Driscoll (1956) 3 All E.R. 980 at p. 982 where Lord Gaddard succinctly stated the functions of the Court of Criminal Appeal. He said:—

"We have to see that the summing-up was adequate and, as we have repeatedly said in the Court of Criminal Appeal, the summing-up is adequate if it states fairly the facts for the prosecution and states fairly the nature and evidence of the defence. It is not necessary to go into the evidence of every witness. The Court has to be reminded to the nature of the defence, and it is desirable that they should be reminded in substance, but not in detail, of the evidence given for the defence. it is not our function to retry the case because we do not see the witness, and no Court of Appeal does re-try the case in the sense of substitution themselves either for a Jury in a civil case or for a court martial in the case of one of the Services".

The notes of the summing-up furnished to the Court of Appeal and to this court, show that the learned trial Judge fairly put the salient points to the jury. He referred to the defence of alibi put forward by the 5th and 12th appellants and rightly pointed out that the burden of disproving the alibi is on the prosecution.

It is therefore a matter of regret that the charge of bias should be made against the trial Judge.

An accused must have a fair trial, and in my view the appellants had a fair trial.

[p.135]

The appeals of the appellants are therefore dismissed. I have had the opportunity of reading the judgment of the Learned Chief Justice and I entirely agree with the conclusions and the reasons leading to these conclusions

[SC. MISC. APP. NO. 4/92] [p.137-147]

DIVISION: THE SUPREME COURT OF SIERRA LEONE

DATE: 11 AUGUST 1992

CORAM: MR. JUSTICE S.M.F. KUTUBU, C.J - (PRESIDING);

MRS. JUSTICE A.V.A. AWUNOR- RENNER, J.S.C.;

MR. JUSTICE M.O ADORPHY, J.A

VS

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL - RESPONDENT

SOLICITORS:—

A. F. SERRY-KAMAL, ESQ., with him F. M.

DABO, ESQ., of Counsel for the Applicant.

MISS G. ATTIBA-DAVIES of Counsel for the Respondent.

RULING delivered this 11th day of August, 1992 by KUTUBU, C.J. - PRESIDING.

RULING

These certiorari proceedings are brought on behalf of the Applicant, Isatu Kamara, by Learned Counsel, Abdul Franklin Serry Kamal for an Order of certiorari to quash the order of the Nylander Commission of Inquiry given on the 8th day of July, 1992, resulting in the conviction and imprisonment of Applicant, a witness before the said Commission for a period of 21 days.

The grounds of the application according to the statement dated 9th July, 1992 inter alia are as follows :—

[p.138]

1. That the Commission exceeded its jurisdiction in convicting and sentencing applicant.

2. That the Commission acted in excess of jurisdiction in convicting and sentencing applicant.

3. That the Commission acted ultra vires in convicting applicant summarily.

Applicant relies on the Affidavits of Isatu Kamara and Fode Maclean Dabo both sworn to on the 24th day of July, 1992 and filed together with the exhibits. Exhibit "A" herein is the Certified True Copy of the record of proceedings of the Nylander Commission of Inquiry, dated. 8th July, 1992, touching and bearing on Isatu Kamara:

It is necessary, we think, to give in brief form, the origin and source of the Nylander Commission of Inquiry; and the facts relating to these proceedings before us. Suffice it to say that the Lynton Nylander

Commission of Inquiry is a creature of statute, established by the National Provisional Ruling Council (N.P.R.C.), in exercise of the powers conferred upon it by Sections 2 and 6 of the Commissions of Inquiry Act, CAP.54 Laws of Sierra Leone, 1960 as adapted by the Proclamation entitled "THE ADMINISTRATION OF SIERRA LEONE (NATIONAL PROVISIONAL RULING COUNCIL) PROCLAMATION, 1992 P.N. NO.20 of 1992, with the following terms of reference:—

1. To inquire into and investigate the financial administration from the 1st day of June, 1986 to the 22nd day of September, 1991 of [p.139] Government Ministers or Departments, Local Authorities, Parastatals including Public Corporations and the Bank of Sierra Leone, or Commissions or Councils established under the Constitution, and ascertain —

(a) whether or not any malpractices or irregularities were committed by any person with respect to those activities;

(b) the nature and extent of the malpractices and irregularities;

(c) the sums of money, and the identities of persons involved in such malpractices and irregularities.

2. To inquire into and investigate any persons or matters as from time to time be referred to the Commission by the National Provisional Ruling Council.

Isatu Kamara, applicant herein, and a witness before the Nylander Commission of Inquiry was on Wednesday, 8th of July, 1992 found guilty of perjury and sentenced to 21 days imprisonment at the Central Prisons, Pademba Road, Freetown, under Section 3(a) of the National Provisional Ruling Council Decree No.4, 1992 - Commissions of Inquiry (Additional Powers) Decree, 1992.

Section 3(a) of N.P.R.C. Decree NO,.4 of 1992 states:—

“Any person who makes any false statement to any Commission issued under the Commissions of Inquiry Act, knowing those statements [p.140] to be false or which he has no reason to believe to be true shall be guilty of contempt, punishable by imprisonment or fine.

It will suffice to state at this juncture that the offence of perjury in the Commissions of Inquiry Act CAP. 54. Laws of Sierra Leone, 1960 is created by Section 11 of that Act - and it states: —

Section 11 — "Any witness who shall willfully give false evidence in any such inquiry concerning the subject matter of such inquiry shall be guilty of perjury and be liable to be prosecuted and punished accordingly”.

On 10th July, 1992 an application for leave to apply for an order of certiorari was made to this Court by Isatu Kamara against the orders of Hon. Mr. Justice Lynton B. O. Nylander dated 8th July, 1992 between:—

ISATU KAMARA - APPLICANT

AND

ATTORNEY GENERAL - RESPONDENT

In the said application: Counsel sought to invoke the supervisory jurisdiction of this Court under Section 125 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, 1991 Act No.6 of 1991 and also Section 148 of the said Constitution which deals with the powers, rights and privileges of Commissions of Inquiry.

Section 125 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone states:

"The Supreme Court shall have supervisory jurisdiction over all other Courts in Sierra Leone and over any adjudicating authority; and in exercise of its supervisory jurisdiction shall have power to issue such directives orders or writs including writs of habeas corpus, orders of certiorari, mandamus and prohibition as it may consider appropriate for the purposes of enforcing or securing the enforcement of its supervisory powers".

Section 2(1) of the PROCLAMATION - THE ADMINISTRATION. OF SIERRA LEONE (NATIONAL PROVISIONAL RULING COUNCIL) PROCLAMATION, 1992, Public Notice No. 20 of 1992 provides for the suspension of certain provisions of the Constitution Sierra Leone Act No.6 of 1991. It states:—

"All provisions of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, 1991 which came into operation on the 1st day of October, 1991 which are inconsistent or in conflict with this Proclamation or any Decree made thereunder shall be deemed to have been suspended with effect from the 29th day of April, 1992"

As far as we are aware, Section 125 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991, Act No.6 of 1991, which invests this Court with supervisory jurisdiction over all other Courts in Sierra Leone and over any adjudicating authority has not been suspended and is still operative.

[p.142]

Counsel for applicant complained of passages here and there in exhibit"A" the record of proceedings of the Nylander Commission of Inquiry touching and bearing on applicant Isatu Kamara. We have carefully looked at these passages.

For the purposes of this ruling, and to avoid prolivity, we have thought it expedient to reproduce verbatim, only the exchanges which took place between the Chairman and the applicant, after the Commission had decided to find the latter guilty of perjury. It runs thus:

Mr. Chairman : The Commission has decided that you are guilty of perjury.

Mrs. Kamara : Can I say something my Lord?

Chairman : Will you wait, I have finished with that. I have just specified two points in which we are not at one with. You said you started in 1991 and we are satisfied that you started before then. You said that you were given a letter from Mr. Sheriff, though he says that he could not recall, but categorically said that the Managing Director directed him then. This is what we say, we have found you guilty of perjury contrary to Sections 3A of the decree, 1992. As such, I will not levy the ultimate or maximum punishment which this section calls for, but from here, forthwith, you will be taken to [p.143] the State Prison at Pademba Road, where you will be kept until July, 29th and you will be brought here again for the continuation of the examination. Have you got anything left? Let the Officers come and take custody of her.

Mrs. Kamara : My Lord can I say something or can I explain myself?

Mr. Chairman : When we come back.

We have taken this step for purposes of clarity and to put things in their proper perspectives.

The issue before this Court is whether his Lordship Lynton B. O. Nylander had jurisdiction to find applicant guilty of perjury under Section 3(a) of the National Provisional Ruling Council Decree No.4, 1992 - Commissions of Inquiry (Additional Powers) Decree, 1992 as he did. I am constrained once more to refer to the provisions of Section 3(a) of N.P.R.C. Decree No.4 of 1992 which states:

"Any person who makes any false statements to any Commission issued under the Commissions of Inquiry Act knowing those statements to be false or which he has no reason to believe to be true, shall be guilty of contempt."

From the foregoing, I can only say, with respect, that Hon. Chairman acted in error in finding applicant guilty perjury instead of contempt as provided by Section 3(a) N.P.R.C. Decree No.4 of 1992, thereby acting in excess of [p.144] jurisdiction.

Even if the Hon. Chairman had jurisdiction to find the applicant guilty of perjury, certain procedure must be followed before conviction and sentence.

It is provided by Section 11 of the Commission of Inquiry Act CAP.54 Laws of Sierra Leone, 1960 as follows:—

"Any witness who shall willfully give false evidence, in any such inquiry concerning the subject-matter of such inquiry shall be guilty of perjury, and shall be liable to be prosecuted and punished accordingly.

The prosecution will then be a matter for the Attorney General and the Director of Public Prosecutions to prefer a charge against the accused who will be tried by the High Court accordingly.

The rationale in my view in resorting to the expedient of an offence of contempt in Section 3(a) of Decree No.4 of 1992 is to make for the speedy despatch of the Commissions work, and to obviate the delay that would result in prosecutions under perjury, the contempt procedure being simpler and less irksome.

IN JOHNSON V. REGINAM ALR (S.L.) Series 1970 - 71 Court of Appeal (Cr. App. No.18/70) an appeal against conviction for contempt, Sir Samuel Bankole Jones - President of the Court of Appeal delivering the judgment of the Court inter. alia said at P.124 lines 23 - 33.

“All the authorities are agreed that when a judge has made up his mind to invoke the summary process for committing [p.145] for contempt, the following procedure should be followed. Firstly, the judge should make the person concerned aware of the pith of the charge against him. Secondly, the person should be given an opportunity to show cause why he should not be so committed. He may then say anything by way of excuse, explanation or possibly correction of any misapprehension as to what has in fact been said or done. It is of the utmost importance that this opportunity should be given, and unless that is done the committal would be unlawful.”

This brings me to the principles of natural justice, the violation of which was a ground of complaint. The applicant that the procedure adopted by the Chairman of the commission in refusing to listen to her before sentencing her to imprisonment was an infringement of the principles of natural justice.

Indeed, there are fundamental principles which govern judicial and quasi - judicial inquiries, and one of these is “the audi alteram partem” rule, that is, a party to judicial proceedings should not be condemned unheard. No one who has a case or against whom an unfavourable decision is given will believe he has been fairly treated if in the course of his trial in any quasi- judicial proceedings leading to his conviction and sentenced is refused hearing.

We have carefully read the records of the proceedings in this, matter, and taking all the circumstances into consideration it seems to us that the procedure, unwittingly no doubt, adopted [p.146] by Chairman Nylander in refusing to hear applicant before sentence, thereby not making it plain and manifest that justice was done, was bad. A judicial or quasi-judicial decision reached by a tribunal in violation of the rules of natural justice may be quashed on certiorari .

Miss Attiba-Davies, Counsel for Respondent argued with force that applicant was only committed to prison and as such, she was not convicted. This was countered by applicant that committal to prison and sentence to prison are both convictions and referred to the reported case of In re: MANNI, 1964 - 66 ALR (S.L.) Series, Court of Appeal for Sierra Leone P.557 - Cr. App. No.23/66; where the Court of Appeal invited arguments from Counsel before application was made for leave to appeal in that matter, the case of a contemmnor who had been convicted by the then Supreme Court (High Court).

The question was whether there existed in law a right of appeal to the Court of Appeal. Both sides agreed that there was. It was held by that Court that an order of the High Court of committal for a criminal, contempt amounts to a conviction and the Court of Appeal therefore has jurisdiction to entertain an appeal against the order.

We are satisfied that this view was a correct one.

In view or the above reasons, we hold that this is a proper case in which the application for an order of certiorari ought to be granted and we so grant.

[p.147]

The proceedings therefore are hereby quashed.

And we direct that the applicant be forthwith discharged from custody in respect of her conviction and commitment thereunder.

JUDGMENT

C.A. HARDING, J.S.C.

This appeal concerns a dispute relating to farming land situated in the Nongowa Chiefdom Kenema District in the Eastern Province. The parties to the dispute are the people of Mano Kortuhun (the "Appellants") and the people of Komande Lowoma (the "Respondents").

Action was first instituted in the Nongowa Local Court in March, 1972 by the people of Lowoma against the people of Mano Kortuhun for planting in their bush (i.e. farm land) without authority. The disputed bush is situated between the two villages i.e. Komende Lowama and Mano Kortuhun. The action was heard by the Nongowa Local Court between May and November, 1972. Judgment was given in favour of the people of Komende Lowoma in November, 1972. The people of Mano Kortuhun appealed to the Group Local Appeal Court at Kennema. The appeal was heard by the Group Local Appeal Court consisting of six chiefs sitting at Kenema in September, 1973. In the course of hearing of the appeal the Court accompanied by the parties and their witnesses visited the land in dispute. The Court delivered judgment in December, 1973, allowing the appeal and awarding compensation to the people of Mano Kortuhun. The people of Komende Lowoma appealed to the District Appeal Court. The District Appeal Court was presided over by Mr. M.O. Taju Deen, then Principal Magistrate, assisted by two assessors. The hearing of the Appeal commenced in November, 1974 and concluded on 25th July 1975 [p.13] when the assessors gave their opinions. In the course, of the hearing the Court visited the land in dispute on two separate occasions. The Magistrate delivered Judgment on 22nd October, 1975 confirming the decision of the Group Local Appeal Court but making a supplementary order in relation to a portion of the land in dispute.

The people of the Mano Kortuhun being aggrieved by the decision of the District Appeal Court appealed to the Local Appeals Division of the High Court. The complaint of the appellants was directed against the supplementary order made by the District Appeal Court. The order of that Court was in the following terms:—

“In accordance with S. 33(1) (a) & (f) of Act No.20 of 1963, the District Appeal Court confirm the decision of the Group Local Appeal Court with the following supplementary order: From Lowoma up to Botey stream; from Botey to the path of the palm tree (i.e. the palm tree pointed during our second Locus-in-quo) to be returned to the people of Lowoma as claimed by them as it had been previously given them by the people of Mano Kortuhun and they had been working on it for over 25 years now. The District Appeal Court is not going to upset the decision of the Group Appeal Court, but the swamp after road leading to the palm tree should go to the people of Mano Kortuhun, and all lands from the palm tree leading to Mano Kortuhun belongs to the people of Mano Kortuhun No order as to costs. Each party bears its own costs."

It will be useful to set out the grounds of appeal relied on by the people of Mano Kortuhun in their appeal to the Local Appeals Division of the High Court. They were as follows:—

[p.14]

"(a) The supplementary order made by the District Appeal Court is inconsistent with and derogatory of the decision of the Group Local Appeal Court, a decision which the District Appeal Court expressly stated it was confirming.

(b) The supplementary order is wrong in law in that in effect, it upturns and subverts the very decision which the District Appeal Court stated it was confirming.

(c) The said supplementary order is wrong and unreasonable and cannot be supported having regard to the evidence.”

The appeal was heard by Golley J. (as he then was) sitting with two assessors, at Kenema in May, 1978. Judgment was delivered in December, 1978 allowing the appeal and setting aside the supplementary order made by the District Appeal Court. The people of Komende Lowoma being dissatisfied with the decision of the Local Courts Division of the High Court appealed to the Court of Appeal. The appeal was heard by the Court of Appeal (Marcus Cole, Navo and Turay JJ.A) in October, 1980. The main contention of the appellant in the Court of Appeal was that any appellate court has jurisdiction to vary the decision of a lower court and that the District Appeal Court had acted within its powers in varying the decision of the Group Local Appeal Court. Judgment was delivered in October, 1981 allowing the appeal.

The people of Mano Kortuhun have now appealed to this …… appellants. Learned Counsel on both sides argued all of them before us. However it is unnecessary to deal with them individually. It will be sufficient to deal with the two important issues raised by the appeal, namely—

(i) Whether the order made by the District Appeal Court was indeed a Supplementary order

[p.15]

(ii) Whether the evidence supports the supplementary order made by the District Appeal Court.

With regard to the first issue it will be recalled that in making its order dated 22nd October, 1975 (quoted above) the District Appeal Court relied on Section 33(1) of the Local Courts

Act,(Ref No.207 1963)1963.That subsection reads—

"33(1) on an appeal any Appeal Court may –

(a) confirm the judgment, order or sentence of the Court below;

(b) substitute for the judgment, order or sentence of the Court below any judgment, order or sentence which might lawfully have been made at first instance ;

(c) remit the case to (the original court or any other court of similar jurisdiction for rehearing;

(d) make any such order as to costs off the proceedings both in the Appeal Court and in the Courts below as may be just;

(e) exercise any powers which might lawfully have been exercised by the Courts below;

(f) make any such supplementary or consequential orders as the justice of the case may require."

The Court stated that "in accordance with Section 33 1(a) and (f) of Act No. 20 of 1963" it confirmed the decision of the Group Appeal Court "with the following supplementary order." In other words, the Court, acting under sub-paragraph (1)(a), confirmed the Judgment of the Group Appeal Court, and acting under sub-paragraph (1) (f), made a supplementary order. The Judge in the Local Appeal Division of the High Court held that the effect of the supplementary order made by the District Appeal Court was to [p.16] derogate from the order of the same court confirming the judgment of the Group Local Appeal Court. The Court of Appeal on the other hand, held in effect that the order made by the District Appeal Court after confirming the decision of the Group Appeal Court was a consequential order.

Mr. Garvas Betts, Learned Counsel for the Appellants, argued before us that the effect of the supplementary order made by the District Appeal Court was to vary the order made by the Group Appeal Court. He submitted that the powers conferred by the various paragraphs of the subsection could not be exercised in such a way as to make contradictory orders or orders which have the effect of nullifying each other. He further submitted that the supplementary order made by the District Appeal Court had the effect of nullifying the order confirming the decision of the Group Local Appeal Court.

Dr. Joko Smart, Learned Counsel for the Respondents, conceded that the District Appeal Court was inconsistent in using the word "confirm" followed by the word "supplementary". He however submitted that from the records, it was clear that the intention of the Magistrate who presided over the District Appeal Court was to accept only part and not the whole of the decision of the Group Appeal Court. He further submitted that the intention of the Magistrate was to accept the decision of the Group Appeal Court substantially and to vary it in order to accommodate the supplementary order following his visit to the land in dispute.

I shall first dispose of the question whether an Appellate Court acting under the powers conferred on it by Section 33(1) of the Local Court Act, 1963 can, while confirming the judgment of the lower court, proceed to make a supplementary order or a consequential order.

In my opinion supplementary or consequential orders are ancillary to an order confirming a judgment. Therefore a court has power to make a supplementary order or a consequential order after making an order confirming the judgment of the Lower Court (which for convenience, I shall call the principal order").

But it is important to emphasize that a' "supplementary order" and a “Consequential order" are not one and the same thing. A supplementary order, as the name implies, is an order which supplies a defect in the principal order. On the other hand a consequential order is an order which follows as a result of the principal order.

Let me take for example a case for possession of a house, where the Lower Court granted possession of the house to the respondent and merely stated the street where the house is situated without stating the number of the house or its boundaries. In such a case an Appellate Court may supply the defect by making a supplementary order specifying the number of the house and/or describing the boundaries of the land on which the house is situated. The Court may at the same time make a consequential order, for instance ordering the appellant to refund to the respondent damages or compensation previously paid to him by virtue of a court order.

The next question is whether a supplementary order or a consequential order can conflict with or vary the principal order confirming a judgment. As stated earlier, a supplementary order or a consequential order is ancillary to the principal order. In my opinion therefore by their very nature a supplementary order and a consequential order are subservient and subordinate to the principal order and they cannot derogate from, or vary or conflict with the principal order. Therefore once an order has been made confirming a judgment of a lower court an Appellate Court may proceed to make orders ancillary to – principle order. Such orders may properly be called supplementary or consequential as the case may be. But the court may not make any such orders which have the effect of derogating from the principal order made. And the court may not get over this prohibition by the device of clothing the offending order as "supplementary" or "consequential". Similarly if the court substitutes a judgment for the judgment of the court below, it may not make any supplementary or consequential order which give the effect of derogating from the main judgment (as substituted).

I shall now proceed to consider whether the supplementary order" made by the Magistrate was indeed a supplementary order. The order has been set out above. The Magistrate stated in no uncertain terms that the District Court confirmed the decision of the court below. He said inter alia:— "The District Appeal Court confirm the decision of the Group Appeal Court …….. The District Appeal Court is not going to upset the decision of the Group Appeal Court”.

It will be useful to set out the relevant part of the Judgment of the Group Appeal Court. It suffice to quote from the concluding paragraphs of the well reasoned and exhaustive Judgment of the court.

They read:—

"24, According to the full inspection of the respondents' boundary in this disputed bush we the members of this court, it was observed with grave concern that there is nothing to prove to we (sic) the members of this court that his boundary is the actual boundary between Komende and Mano Kortunhun as according to native law and custom we all know what should be on a boundary between two towns…….

26. This court do believe when the appellant said one Moriba begged this bush for the people of Mano Kortunhun which is the natural home for (sic) the said Moriba. The appellant told this court that when this bush was given to Moriba, Moriba and his children planted cocoa there. The cocoa planted was inspected by we (sic) the members of this court and while on inspection the appellant he said bush and therefore that will not mean that the people of Komende are the owners of the said bush because Moriba [p.19] Moriba planted cocoa there. According to native law and custom, a nephew will be given a bush from the maternal side and that nephew will not now claim that bush because of that. This court rely on it as fact that the bush was begged when the said cocoa was planted. …….

28 This also proves to this court that this Soryama deserted village belongs to Mano Kortuhun.

29. That the boundary laid by the appellant Momoh Dowu of Mano Kortuhun from Mbote stream on to a bunch of bambo trees, on to the Gbondi tree, on with Mbote across the Mbote swamp, on to Mdorwei tree, on to the source of Songeyei, down with Songeyei, running to Sorya, joining Yumbu stream straight with Yumba to the boundary is therefore accepted as the actual boundary in this disputed bush between Komende and Mano Kortuhun having carefully viewed the boundaries well according to native law and custom governing boundaries between two towns.

30. That the cocoa planted in the said bush by the late Moriba and his children which bush was begged from the people of Mano Kortuhun should from the date of this decision remain the property of the children of late Moriba. Decision. In view of the above facts, findings, coupled with careful examination of this case, we the members of this court unanimously say without fear or favour that the respondent Chief Samuka Kateu is wrong…… We also order that the decision of the Local Court has been reversed".

This was clearly a judgment upholding the boundaries claimed by the appellants, rejecting the boundaries claimed by the respondents, declaring that the land in dispute belonged to the appellants and at the same time declaring that the cocoa trees planted on the land were the property of the children of Moriba and finally dismissing the claim of the respondents.

That was the Judgment against which an appeal was lodged to the District Appeal Court. And that was the judgment which the District Appeal Court confirmed. Having confirmed that judgment, the District Appeal Court then proceeded to order that a portion of land "be returned to the people of Lowoma as claimed by them". Without doubt this was an order granting part of the respondents' claim which had already been dismissed by the Group Local Appeal Court and which dismissal had been confirmed by the District Appeal Court. This was an order taking away from the appellants part of which had been granted them by the judgment confirming the dismissal of the respondents' claim. This was an order derogating from the judgment in favour of the appellants. In my judgment such an order could not by any process of reasoning be classified as a supplementary or a consequential order. It was an invalid order and should be set aside.

Having reached this conclusion, it is not necessary to consider the second issue. I shall however deal with it very briefly. The respondents' claim was for the recovery of the land. The respondents' case was that they had acquired the land by conquest over seventy years ago, that is before the British declared a protectorate over that part of Sierra Leone now known as the Provinces. The case for the appellants was that they had originally brushed the land and that there had never been any adverse claim against their right to the occupation of the land. So the issue between two parties was which of them had a better claim to the land. Starting from the Local Court and up to the District Appeal Court each party called witnesses to prove their respective claims and also to identify the boundaries of the land Claimed by them. The Group Local Appeal Court exhaustively considered the evidence, in the course of which they rejected the [p.21] evidence of the respondents and their witnesses including the evidence given by them relating to the boundaries, and accepted the evidence of the appellants and their witnesses including the evidence relating to the boundaries, and came to the conclusion that the land in dispute belonged to the appellants. The District Appeal Court also considered all the evidence including the evidence adduced before the Lower Courts and rejected the evidence led on behalf of the respondents and accepted the evidence led on behalf of the appellants. Indeed, the whole trend of the judgment of the District Appeal Court up to the stage at which the offending supplementary order was made was in support of the appellants' claim. It seems illogical that having discredited the evidence of the respondents, rejected their claim and given considerable weight to the evidence of the appellants, for the Court to then make an about face turn and say that part of the land belonged to the respondents.

It would appear that that change of front on the part of the District Appeal Court was as a result of the second locus in quo. It is not clear from the recorded evidence of that visit what factors influenced the Court. The reason given by the Court for giving part of the land to the respondents was that "it had been previously given them by the people of Mano Kortuhun and they had been working on it for over 25 years now". This reason is untenable for two reasons. First, it was not part of the case of the respondents that the land in dispute was given to them by the appellants. Their case was that they had acquired it by conquest. Secondly, the evidence does not support the assertion that the appellants had at any time given the land to the respondents. In fact the evidence of the respondents was that the appellants had never owned that land and that they (the respondents) had always owned it.

It is relevant to mention that the appellants admitted that they had allowed one Moriba, their nephew, to plant cocoa trees on part of the land. The respondents did not claim to derive their title through Moriba. So this admission was of no avail to the respondents. The Group Local Appeal court held that the [p.22] arrangement between the appellants and Moriba was in accordance to native law and custom, and proceeded to order that cocoa planted in the bush by late Moriba and his children" should remain the property of the children of late Moriba. It has not been suggested that this order was not In accordance with native law and custom. My understanding of the order of the Group Local Appeal Court is that the land is the property of the appellants but that the cocoa trees planted by Moriba on part of the land belong to Moriba's children. Accordingly the children of Moriba have the right of reaping the cocoa and generally enjoy the fruits of the cocoa trees but that does not mean that they are the owners of the land. This right, in my opinion, is in the nature of the right known in Roman Law as usufruct. Such a right is recognized by our customary law.

Before concluding this judgment, it is necessary, to refer to an issue raised by the Court of Appeal in their judgment. The Court expressed the view that the respondents were entitled to the land in dispute by reason of long user. With respect to the members of that Court, that was not an issue before the Court of Appeal because it was never raised in either of the two Grounds of Appeal or canvassed before that Court, and in any case, the case advanced by the respondents and the evidence adduced do not warrant the application of that doctrine.

For these reasons, I would allow the appeal, set aside the Judgment of the Court of Appeal and restore the judgment of the Local Division of the High Court setting aside the supplementary order made by the District Appeal Court and confirming the judgment of the Group Local Appeal Court.

THE STATE - RESPONDENT

B. MACAULAY (JNR) for 2nd Appellant

H. TEJAN JALLOH (MISS) for The State

JUDGMENT DELIVERED THIS 9TH DAY OF JULY 1986

A. AWUNOR-RENNER. J.S.C.

The appellants were convicted at the Kenema High Court on the 1st day of October 1976 before Navo J. as he then was, and a jury, for the murder of one Albert Samba on the 2nd day of May 1976 at Lowoma Village in the Lower Bambara Chiefdom, Kenema District and sentenced to death. They appealed to the Court of Appeal and judgment was delivered on the 10th day of November 1981 dismissing . the appeal and affirming the conviction and sentence of the High Court. It is against that decision that the appellants have now appealed to this Court on the following grounds viz:—

On behalf of the 1st appellant:

(a) That the Court of Appeal for Sierra Leone was wrong in Law in holding that the verdict was not reasonable nor could it not be supported having regard to the evidence adduced at the trial.

(b) That the Court of Appeal was wrong in Law when it held that the Learned Trial Judge's direction to the jury that if there in any doubt, I am not saying any fanciful doubt, but if there is any substantial doubt, you should resolve that doubt in favour of the accused persons and let them go free was in order.

[p.24]

(c) That the Court was wrong in lay when it held that there was no evidence to leave to the jury for the consideration of the issue of provocation and or self defence.

On behalf of the 2nd appellant:

(a) The Court of Appeal erred in law in holding that the appellants defence of alibi was properly put to the jury

(b) The Court of Appeal erred in law in holding that the learned trial judge had not misdirected the jury on the grounds of implied malice.

(c) The Court of Appeal erred in law in holding that the learned trial judge had not misdirected the jury as to the standard of proof imposed upon the prosecution.

The 1st appellant was not represented by Counsel, however the Court took cognizance of his grounds of appeal that were before us.

The facts so far according to the prosecution and defence as it is necessary to state them are as follows:

On the night of the 1st May 1976 at Lowoma Village in the Lower Bambara Chiefdom the deceased Albert Samba staged a dance at the Barri. One Kene Samba was at the dance helping the deceased to sell tickets at the entrance to the Barri. His wife Elizabeth Jah (alias Binta Samba) was also present running the bar. Later on that same night Mohamed Daramy 2nd accused in the High Court who is now dead came and sat by Kene Samba; when he was questioned about his ticket he said that he had bought one earlier in the evening but had lost it. An argument ensued between the deceased and Mohamad Daramy which later on resulted in a Fight between the two of them. Binta held the deceased by his trousers and then took him out side. By that time 1st and 2nd appellants were standing outside and as Binta took the deceased away the 1st appellant was heard saying "Let us go and finish with the dog"; as the deceased was [p.25] being taken away he was overtaken by the two appellants and Daramy, They crossed in front of them. The second appellant than kicked Binta on her stomach and the 1st appellant broke a bottle on a stone and stabbed the deceased on the right side of his neck. He was then taken into a house whence he later died. Both appellants did not give any evidence or call witnesses but relied on the statements which they made to the Police and which were tendered in evidence in the High Court. The 1st appellant in his statement denied being present at the scene of the alleged incident; in fact he claimed that he was not in Lowoma Village at all but in Tokpombu II Village in the Tongo area where he spent the day and evening in the company of one Alpha jalloh and some other people until 1 a.m. when he retired to bed and woke up at 7 a.m. on the Sunday the 2nd day of May 1976.

The 2nd appellant also alleged that he too was not at the scene but that he spent the night at the house of one Pa Momoh Kpakateh. The other inmates of the house he claimed including the 1st appellant want out at about 10 p.m. and that he was alone in the house until the early hours of the morning when the 1st appellant returned to the house panting; there was blood on the 1st appellant's shirt and when he 2nd appellant questioned him about it the 1st appellant stated that he had been involved in a fight with some one who had bitten him. He was later on arrested and charged.

Three grounds of appeal have been urged on behalf of the 2nd appellant: however I propose only to deal with those which in my opinion are substantial.

The second ground of appeal raised by Berthan Macaulay (Jnr) counsel for the 2nd appellant was that the Court of Appeal erred in law in holding that the learned trial judge had not misdirected the jury on the grounds of implied malice. He referred this Court to what the Court of Appeal had to say about malice aforethought and I quote:—

“Counsel for the 1st and 3rd appellants had submitted that the judge's direction on malice aforethought with particular [p.26] reference to Implied malice is erroneous. Appellants' Counsel had submitted that the Judge had employed the subjective test in directing the jury on whether there was implied malice or not he should have used the objective test as propounded in Sahr Nbambay and others.

The Judge did not fall into the error as he, did not direct the jury that it was the subjective test that they had to apply. I agree with Counsel for the state that he merely gave an example of a factual situation that could amount to implied malice I find no merit in this ground.”

He further referred this Court to quotations from the summing up of the Learned Trial Judge and again I quote—

“Then we come to the most important ingredient with malice aforethought.

The death must be with malice aforethought. What does that mean?

Malice does not mean premeditation. We have two categories of malice, express malice and implied malice. In the case of express malice there is an intention to cause death, or cause grievous bodily harm to any person, whether such person is the person killed or not. Now you make up your mind and say 'I am going to kill some body’. I will take my gun. I am going to shoot at A. If you shoot at A and A dies that is express malice. You had it in mind to do something which will cause grievous bodily harm to A or which may cause the death of the person against whom you inflict or on whom you inflict injuries etc.

He then continued to explain what is meant by express malice. On the question of implied malice the learned trial judge directed the jury in this way.

"Implied malice in many cases where no malice is expressed or openly intended, the law will imply it from a deliberately cruel act committed by a person against another."

[p.27]

“Deliberately cruel act although you did not intend to kill somebody but do a deliberate cruel act, and that act causes his death, you are guilty of murder because the ingredient of implied malice would have been provided.”

“It may be implied where death occurs as a result of a voluntary act of the prisoner which was intended and unprovoked. You were not provoked to do what you have done. I will deal with provocation later on. It must be unprovoked. The law will imply malice from your action and if death occurs or if death results. It is implied that you had malice aforethought you will be found guilty of murder.”

"All the other ingredients in murder are in manslaughter except that in manslaughter the prosecution need not prove malice aforethought. That is perhaps the most important ingredient in the case of murder. The prosecution must prove malice either express or implied."

Mr. Macaulay (Jnr) further contended that the learned trial judge in his direction to the jury on the question of implied malice should have explained what this meant to them in simple language and not merely read out ipssisima verba the contents of Archibold Criminal Pleadings Evidence and Practice Thirty-Fifth edition at page 918 paragraph 2487 under the rubric. "Implied malice" to them which states as follows:

"In many cases where no malice is expressed or openly indicated the law will imply it from a deliberate cruel act committed by one person against another. It may be implied where death occurs as a result of a voluntary act of the prisoner which was (1) intentional and (2) unprovoked."

He referred the Court to several cases in support of his proposition namely Feika v. Regina C.A. 1968/1969. A.L.R. (S.L.) 342 at page 345, H. V. Kargbo same volume at paga 354 and also Sumana v. R. 1970-1971, A.L.R. (S.L.) at page 306 at 316. He also submitted that the trial judge having directed the Jury on implied malice failed to relate that direction to the evidence which had been led relying on the following cases - R. v Finch 12 C. App. Reports at page 77. Sallu Mansaray v The State unreported Supreme Court Criminal Appeal 1/80. The learned trial judge he said seemed to feel that there was implied malice since he speaks of voluntary act and deliberately cruel act and was also equating the actus reus with mens rea. In his reply he alleged further that the learned trial judge did not refer to any evidence which would suggest express malice or implied malice but simply read the law to them and that he made no attempt to direct the jury as to whether this was express or implied malice. Counsel for the respondent Miss Tejan Jalloh stated that express malice and implied malice are components of malice aforethought. She expressed the view that the learned trial judge only referred to implied malice through an abundance of caution and that what was relevant in this case was express malice. She also referred to the case of Sallu Mansaray supra.

Let me now examine some of the authorities cited by Counsel for the respondent as far as they relate to ground 2 of this appeal. In Feika v ReRegina supra, a Court of Appeal decision, one of the grounds of appeal was that the trial judge misdirected the jury on provocation by reading from a text book. It was held in that case that in directing the jury on the law applicable to the case being tried the judge should not resort to reading passages from a text book without more. In Kargbo v. Regina 1968/69 A.L.R. (S.L.) also another Court of Appeal decision at page 354 two of the grounds of appeal were (1) that the learned trial judge failed to direct the Jury adequately on the defence of provocation and (2) that he did not give proper direction with regard to the right of self defence. It was held that a judge in his summing-up should [p.29] not confine his direction on the law to reading from a legal text book, it is his duty to explain in simple language the principle of law applicable to the case, to consider the questions raised by the prosecution and defence respectively and to direct the jury on how to apply the law to the facts. I quote from the judgment of Tambiah 3.A. at page 358 —

"Unfortunately there is misdirection as well as non—direction in the summing-up of the learned trial judge. He adopted a procedurewhich has been condemned both by this Court and the Court of Appeal in England. He read passages from Archibold without analysing the obstruse prepositions of law stated therein. Members of the jury are laymen who have no training in the law and liable to be confused when passages from a text book are read to them. They will not be in a position to comprehend the difficult questions of law applicable to the facts of a case. It is the duty of a judge to explain in simple language the principles of law applicable to the case and to direct them on how to apply the law to the facts."

In the present case I feel that the jury were deprived of the assistance of the learned trial judge in his summing-up. Indeed he proceeded to give them the definition of what was express malice and also tried to explain the meaning of this to them but he further went on to confuse the jury and misled them by bringing in the definition of implied malice and not bothering to explain this to them in simple language and by also not telling them which of the two, [p.30] express or implied malice was applicable in the present circumstances. He had failed in his duty by omitting to direct the Jury sufficiently oh this point. I cannot say whether the jury properly directed would have convicted him. I would therefore allow the appeal on this ground.

The next ground of appeal of the 2nd appellant is a much more serious one and deals with the learned trial judge's misdirecting the jury as to the standard of proof imposed upon the prosecution. This ground of appeal is common to both appellants and it is my view that it can be dealt with conveniently together. In a nut shell Berthan Macaulay (Jnr) for the 2nd appellant submitted that the learned trial judge misdirected the jury on the standard of proof required in a criminal case by equating the words "reasonable doubt" with "substantial doubt". He submitted further that one cannot say that the phrase reasonable doubt is synonymous with the phrase substantial doubt. He contended that by using the word substantial doubt the Court was imposing a lower standard of proof upon the prosecution. He also called the Court's attention to certain portions in the summing up about which he was complaining and relied on the following authorities in support of this last ground of appeal, Moroma v Regina 1964/66 A.L.R. (S.L.) at page 542 at page 547,R.v.Sumners (1953) Cr. App. R. at page 16. Finally he ended up by saying that the case of Bater v Bater relied on by the Court of Appeal was a case involving a divorce petition and had no relevance with the standard of proof in a criminal matter. Miss Tejan-Jalloh for respondent contended that no particular form of words are needed as long as the trial judge puts the case adequately that will suffice, she also relied on R. v Sumners supra and invited the Court to apply the provisions of sub-sec. 2 of sec.58 of the Court's Act number 30 of 1965. On the other hand Mr. Macaulay however urged this Court to reject the question of applying the provisions of sub section 2 of sect 58 of the Court's Act supra as he said that each case should depend on its own facts as regards misdirections and non-directions.

The following directions on the burden and standard of proof were given by the learned trial judge in his summing-up and I quota:—

(1) "It is for the prosecution to prove their case beyond reasonable doubt. If that doubt exists either from the case for the prosecution, or is created by the defence, and you find out that it is a reasonable doubt and not a fanciful doubt the law requires you to resolve that doubt in favour of the accused persons."

(2) "If you have any, substantial doubt let them go free."

(3) "If there is any doubt, I am not saying a fanciful doubt, but if there is any substantial doubt you should resolve that doubt in favour of the accused persons and let them go free."

(4) "If they do, then you may say, those discrepancies may cause considerable doubts reasonable doubt — but so far as the prosecution is concerned they say 1st accused said, "You wait let us go and do away with the dog."

(5) "If you take into consideration the various discrepancies in his evidence and you say that taking these witnesses evidence into consideration there is substantial doubt in your minds, I am not saying fanciful doubts. If it creates any doubts in your mind, you are bound to resolve that doubt In favour of the accused persons."

(6) "If it goes to the root of the case it destroys the case for the prosecution completely or creates a substantial doubt in your minds than you are bound to resolve that doubt in favour of the accused persons. If they do not shake your conscience that a substantial doubt has been created it is for you to say Oh, yes he may have made a mistake here and there."

(7) '' But it is for you again to say 'whether there is a substantial discrepancy that created a doubt in your minds. If it does then, of course you will say it does not make us think this way or that way, therefore the benefit must go to the accused persons."

Having referred to extracts from the summing-up it now remains for me to examine certain reported cases dealing with the burden and standard of proof. In all criminal trials it is the duty of trial judge to direct the jury that on the evidence the prosecution must prove the guilt of the accused to their satisfaction before, they convict and that the onus of proof rests upon the prosecution; this must be made quite clear to the jury in no uncertain terms. In the case of R. v Raymond Blackburn reported in volume 39 of the Criminal Appeal reports at page 84, S. Gorman J. in delivering the judgment of the Court had this to say and I quote:—

"It is for the judge to deal properly with the question of the burden of proof. One matter is quite clear. It cannot be said and this Court does not intend to say that any particular form of words is absolutely necessary or, the Court is concerned with the question whether, whatever form of words was used it was made quite clear to the jury that it was for the prosecution to establish the guilt of the prisoner and if the guilt of the prisoner is not established the prisoner must as of right and not by way of favour be found not guilty. This Court does not subscribe to the view that a particular form of words of necessity means that the summing up was right or that the absence of a particular form of words necessarily means that it was wrong."

[p.33]

In the case of R. v Hepworth and Norman Fearnly reported in volume 39 Cr. App. Reports at page 152. The case of R. u Summers 36. Cr. App. R. at page 14 was commented on and approved. In that case the learned recorder in his summing up failed to direct the jury adequately as to the burden of proof and the standard of proof required. It was held that there was no set formula for explaining to the jury in a summing-up that the burden of proof lies on the prosecution. To tell them that they must be satisfied by the evidence so that they must be satisfied by the evidence so that they can feel sure that the prosecution has established the guilty of the prisoner is appropriate, merely to tell the jury that they must be satisfied with regards to the prisoners guilt is insufficient. The use also of the phrase "reasonable doubt" is better avoided.

I think that it will be appropriate for me to refer to a portion in the judgment Goddard L.C.J which I think is relevant to the present case in my view. I quote:

"Another complaint that is made in this case is that the recorder used only the word "satisfied". It may be especially in view of the number of cases recently in which this question has arisen, that I misled Courts when I said in R. v. Summers 36 Cr. Appeal R. at page 14, at page 15, and I still adhere to it – that I think it is very unfortunate to talk to juries about reasonable doubt, because the explanation given of what is and what is not reasonable doubt are so vary often extraordinary difficult to follow and it is very difficult to tell a jury what is a reasonable doubt. To tell a Jury that it must not be a fanciful doubt is no real guidance. To tell them that a reasonable doubt is such a doubt as would cause them to hesitate in their own affairs never seems to me to convey such a particular standard; one member of the jury might say that he would hesitate over something and another member might say that something would not [p.34] cause him to hesitate at all. I therefore suggested in that case, that it would be better to use some other expression, which I meant that should be conveyed to the Jury that they should convict only if they feel sure of the guilt of the accuser. In some cases the words "satisfied" has been used. It is said that a jury in a civil case has to be satisfied and, therefore one is laying down the same principles as in a civil case. I confess that I have had some difficulty in understanding how there is or there can be two standards if one said in a criminal case to a Jury: "You must be satisfied beyond reasonable doubt" and one could also say: “You must be completely satisfied” or better still, “You must feel sure of the prisoner’s guilt.” But I desire to repeat what I said in the case of Kritz 33 Cr. App. R. at page 169 at page 177; It is not the particular formula of words that matter; it is the effect of the summing-up. If the jury are charged with one set of words or in another and are made to understand that they have to b. satisfied and must not return a verdict against a defendant unless they feel sure, and that the onus is all the time on the prosecution and not on the defence" "that is enough" I shall be very sorry if it were thought that case should depend on the use of a particular formula or particular word Dr words. The point is that the Jury should be directed First that the onus is always on the prosecution. Secondly before they convict they must feel sure of the prisoner's guilt. If that is done that is enough."

Counsel for the 2nd appellant had also argued that the learned trial judge in portions of his summing-up had not only appeared to place the burden of proof on the appellant but that he had failed to put the narrow issue as outlined in the case of R. v Murtagh and Kennedy reported in 39 Cr. App. R. at page 72 and at page 83. In that case there had been a charge of murder and the defence relied on was that of an accident. The convictions were squashed on the grounds that the jury had not been specifically directed to acquit if the explanation of the defendants left them in any doubt. Justice Hibery in delivering the judgment of the Court at page 83 had this to say and I quote:

"Having regard to the evidence it is pre-eminently a case were it was essential for the judge to make clear to the Jury three possible positions in which the jury might find themselves, bearing in mind throughout that it was not for the accused to establish their innocence that is to say:

(1) If they accepted the explanation of the accused they must acquit.

(2) Short of accepting that explanation if it left them in doubt they must acquit.

(3) On consideration of the whole of the evidence they must be satisfied of the guilt of the accused of one or other of the crimes alleged against them."

In order to appreciate counsel for the 2nd appellant's submission on this point I need to make references to certain other passages of the summing-up by the learned trial judge. In these passages he directed them as follows, I quote:

"Then perhaps it is left for you to say that this was planted on him. It is left with you to say whether he was saying the truth. That because of his sore leg it was not possible for him to go to the dance.

He was not there. His story is correct ……. you may believe his story where he said that another said [p.36] no if we take him along he would be able to show where the other colleagues are. If this is the case, then of course it may create a substantial doubt in your minds so far as the third accused is concerned."

Later on in the summing up he said and again I quote:—

"His defence is that he did not go out at all.

He was in bed that is an alibi. He was in bed he did not go out. Well it is for you to say that you believe him that he did not go out that night. It is for you to believe him that because of his sore foot he would not have gone out. If you come to that belief then he is free out of the whole thing he gets out of the whole thing. The defence is short and simple. I did not go out that is his defence etc."

Put in the briefest form the question i.e. whether the words used by the learned trial judge in directing the jury in his summing-up on the question of the burden and standard of proof was a misdirection He repeatedly used the words "If you believe him" in the passages referred to above and that if they believed his story this might create a substantial doubt in their minds, so that apart from the judge using the words "If you believe his story" etc. the fact that an accused person is lying does not necessarily mean that he is guilty or that he may be convicted without more. See the case of Seisay and Siaffa v. R. reported in 1967-1968 African Law Reports (Sierra Leone) Series at page 323. The burden remains on the prosecution to prove the guilt of the prisoner and it is the judge's duty. to make this quite clear to the jury and if the prosecution fails the prisoner must be acquitted.

Bearing in mind the passages referred to supra the authorities cited above together with the fact that the learned trial judge had also told the jury that that appellants were relying on their statements it is my considered view that the learned trial Judge was shifting the burden of proof on to the shoulders of the 2nd appellant when he told them that if they believed the story of the 2nd appellant they must set him free. This to me was clearly a misdirection.

The burden of proof still rests upon the prosecution, Apart from this, after making it clear to the jury upon whom the burden of proof lies, it is also the learned trial Judge's duty to direct them on the standard of proof that is required in a criminal case. It is my opinion that he failed to do so. His use of the words reasonable doubt , fanciful doubt and substantial doubt referred to in the passage quoted above may have caused a lot of confusion in the minds of the Jury. As a matter of fact by using the words substantial doubt he was imposing a lower standard of proof on the prosecution. A case is never proved if the summing-up leaves the Jury in any doubt. It is stated in Archibold Thirty-fifth Edition at 361 paragraph 1001 and I quote:

"That if an explanation is given by or on behalf of the prisoner which raises in the minds of the Jury a reasonable doubt as to his guilt, he is entitled to be. acquitted because if upon the whole of the evidence in the case, the jury are left in any reasonable state of doubt the prosecution has failed to satisfy the onus of proof which lies upon them."

Finally let me end by saying that a summing-up must not be ambiguous in anyway. As stated supra the jury must be directed in no uncertain terms upon whom the burden of proof lies and that before they convict they must be satisfied so that they feel sure of the prisoner's guilt; this was the formula often used. See the cases of R. v Kritz (1950) 1 K.B. at page B2 and R. v. Summers (1952) 1 All E.R. at page 1059.

However in 1912 in the case of Mcgreevy v D.P.P. supra the House of Lords stipulated that the proper direction to be given on the standard of proof is that it must be made plain to the jury that they must not convict unless they are satisfied of guilt beyond all reasonable doubt - thus approving the ruling in the House of Lords in the case of Woolmington v D.P.P. supra.

I had stated earlier that it would be convenient for me to deal with the 2nd ground of appeal of the 1st appellant with the 3rd ground of appeal of the 2nd appellant together as they are both similar. The 1st appellant had also relied on his statements which had been tendered in evidence and his complaint as regards this ground of appeal was against the use of the words substantial doubt and fanciful doubt etc. in the summing up. I do not propose to go into details but will adopt the reasons given and the cases referred to supra on behalf of the 2nd appellant as well.

In view of the above I have therefore come to a clear conclusion under the circumstances that there were fundamental miseducation as well as non-direction contained in the summing up of the learned trial Judge to the Jury and that he did not adequately direct them as regards the burden and standard of proof as far as both appellants were concerned. Finally he also failed, to direct them that whatever view they took of the explanations given by the appellants in their statements and on the whole of the evidence in this case that they must acquit if the explanations given by both appellants left in any doubt. It therefore follows that their appeal on this particular ground must succeed.

On the other hand I find no merit in the other grounds of appeal of both appellants.

This Court has been invited by Miss Tejan Jalloh to apply the provisions of sub-section 2 of sec.58 of ……

This section states as follows—

"On an appeal against conviction the Court of Appeal may act not withstanding that they are of opinion that the point raised may be decided in favour of the appellant dismiss the appeal if they consider that no substantial miscarriage of justice has occurred."

In 1976 a further amendment was made to See 58 (2) of the Courts Act supra giving the Court of Appeal power to order a new trial as an alternative to dismissing the appeal if they feel that no substantial miscarriage of justice has occurred which means that the [p.39] the Position as it is now is that the Court of Appeal may either dismiss the appeal or order a new trial if they are' satisfied that no substantial miscarriage of justice has occurred.

However I find myself unable to apply either of these two provisions and say that there was no substantial miscarriage of justice because in the present circumstances it is impossible to say that the jury would necessarily have come to the same conclusion had they been properly directed; there is clearly a serious misdirection here and I am also of the opinion that the omission of the judge to direct the jury adequately may have brought about the verdict.

For the reasons which I have given above, I cannot allow the conviction of both appellants to stand and would allow the appeal and set aside the convictions.

Appeal of both appellants allowed. Convictions quashed, sentence set aside.

LT. COL. C. M. DEEN (RETIRED) - APPLICANT

F. M. DABOR, Esq., for Applicant

JUDGMENT

BECCLES DAVIES, AG. C.J.

This is an ex parte application on behalf of the applicant Lt. Colonel C.M. Deen for the following orders—

“1. That leave be granted to the applicant to apply for an order of certiorari to bring to this Honourrble Court the indictment dated 24th November 1994 preferred against the applicant herein and all subsequent proceedings in the Court-Martial holden as Military Headquarters, Wilkinson Road, Freetown and the ruling delivered by the Honourable Justice E.A. Thomas, Judge Advocate on the 19th day of December 1994 pursuant to a no case submission made by the defence on behalf of the applicant in the matter intituled the State vs Lt. Col. C.M. Deen (retired) for the purpose of quashing the same.

2. That the trial of the applicant presently going on before the Military Court-Martial at the Military Headquarters, Wilkinson Road, Freetown be [p.149] stayed pending the herring and determination of this application.

3. Any further order the Court may deem fit to make.”

The grounds upon which relief is sought are:

“1. That the applicant not being subject to military law by virtue of section 117 (3) of the Republic of Sierra Leone Military Forces act No. 34 of 1961 as amended the Court-martial has no jurisdiction to try him on counts 1 & 2 of the indictment dated 24th November 1994

2. Assuming without conceding that the applicant is subject to military law the indictment should not be signed by a State Counsel. That S. 138 of the Criminal Procedure Act No. 32 of 1965 is not applicable in this case.

3. The Statement of Offence of Counts 3 & 4 of the indictment do not create any offence as they fail to refer to S. 72 of Republic of Sierra Leone military Forces Act No. 34 of 1961.

4. That Counts 1,2,3,4, & 5 are uncertain and duplicitous and do not comply with Rule 65 of the Rules of Procedure (Army) 1956”

The question for resolution in this case is ‘whether or not this Court can entertain this application.’ The answer is No. The original Section 129 of the Republic of Sierra Leone Military Forces Act 1961, was repealed and replaced by section 5 of the Republic of Sierra Leone Military Forces (Amendment) Act 1971 which provides –

[p.150]

"5. The principal Act is hereby amended by the insertion of the following new section immediately after section 128 thereof –

129. The decision of a Court-Martial shall not be questioned in any court of law.”

This Court cannot having regard to the above provision which is imperative in terms of …… entertain this application. The courts of Sierra Leone are forbidden to entertain it

It is consequently struck out.

BECCLES DAVIES, AG. C.J.

On 12 January, 1994 we granted leave to the applicants to apply for the orders of Mandamus, Prohibition and Certiorari respectively. They have now applied for these orders.

The History

The applicants were arraigned on 17 November 1993 before Gbow J, on a nine count indictment dated 19, October 1993. They were charged with the following offences:—

i. Seditious publication

ii. Publishing Defamatory Libel

iii. Publishing False Reports likely to injure the reputation of the Government of Sierra Leone

iv. Knowingly publishing a false defamatory libel

v. Publishing a false report likely to disturb the public peace.

The Application

After the 1st applicant's plea to the first count of the indictment had been recorded by the learned trial Judge, Mr. Betts applied to make certain submissions pursuant to section 28 (3) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991, ("the Constitution") and in the words of the learned Judge "humbly invited the Court of its own motion, to refer the several questions raised to the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone for a pronouncement". The issues raised by Mr. Betts were that—

1. The defence were being denied a fair hearing contrary to section 23 (1) of the Constitution in view of the extensive pretrial publicity of the facts involved in the trial.

2. The accused were being presumed to be guilty of the offences with which they were charged and that that presumption had arisen consequent upon the wide pretrial publicity in the media contrary to Section 23 (4) of the Constitution,

3. The contravention of section 25 (1) of the Constitution.

That section provides:—

[p.153]

“Except with the his own consent, no person shall be hindered in his enjoinment of his freedom of expression, and for the purpose of this section the said freedom includes the freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart ideas and information without interference, freedom from interference with his correspondence, freedom to own, establish and operate any medium for the dissemination of information, ideas and opinions, and academic freedom in institutions of learning:

Provided that no person other than the Government or any person or body authorised by the President shall own, establish or operate a television or wireless broadcasting station for any purpose whatsoever”.

4. Section 28 (1) and (3) of the Public Order Act contravened section 25 (1) of the Constitution. I have already set out section 25 (1) of the Constitution in 3 above. Section 28 (1) of the Pubic Order Act 1965 states:—

“On the trial of an offence of libel against sections 26 or 27, the accused having pleaded such plea as hereinafter mentioned, the truth of the matters charged may be inquired into, but shall not amount to a defence, unless it was for the public benefits that the said matters charged should be published; and to entitle the accused to give evidence of the truth of such matters charged as a defence to such charge it shall be necessary for the accused in pleading to the said charge, to allege in writing the truth of the said matters charged in the manner now, required in pleading a fair comment and justification to an action for a defamation and [p.154] further to allege in writing that it was for the public benefit that the said matters charged should be published and the particular fact or facts by reason whereof it was for the public benefit that the said matters charged should be published to which plea the prosecutor shall be at liberty to reply generally, denying the whole thereof”

Section 28 (3) provides:—

“The matter charged in the alleged libel complained of by such charge shall be presumed to be false, and the truth thereof shall in no case be inquired into in the absence of such plea as mentioned in subsection (1)”

The basis of the alleged contravention is the Ex-Officio information on which the accused were being tried, the proofs of evidence and all those matters pertaining to the trial.

5. Section 28 (1) and (3) of the Public Order Act set above, contravene Section 23(1), (4) and 5 (b) of the Constitution. Section 23 (1), (4) and (5) (b) provide—

“(1) Whenever any person is charged with a criminal offence he shall unless the charge is withdrawn, be afforded a fair hearing with a reasonable time by an independent and impartial court established by law.

(4) Every person who is charged with a criminal offence, shall be presumed to be innocent until he is proved, or has pleaded guilty:

Provided that nothing contained in evidence under the authority of any law shall be held to be inconsistent with or in contravention of this subsection, to the extent that the law in question imposes on any person charged as aforesaid the burden of proving particular facts.

(5) Every person who is charged with a criminal offence—

(b) shall be given adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his defence";…….

Provided that nothing contained in or done authority of any law shall be held to be inconsistent with or in contravention of this subsection to the extent that the law in question prohibits legal representation in a Local court".

6. The contravention of Section 11 of the Constitution which provides:

"The press, radio and television and other agencies of the mass media shall at all times, be free to uphold the fundamental objectives contained in this Constitution and highlight the responsibility and accountability of the government to the people".

Mr. Brown-Marke, (representing the 5th accused) adopted Mr. Bett's submissions on the alleged contraventions of the Constitution

The judge's Ruling

The learned judge declined Mr. Betts' humble invitation for a reference of the alleged contraventions to this court for its decision.

His reasons for refusing the request fall under five main headings, namely:—

i. The application (request) ought to have been made under section 28 (1) of the Constitution.

ii. Section 127 was more germaine to the issues raised.

iii. The availability of other remedies under section 28 (2) (b).

iv. The application was not properly before him.

v. Even if there were any infringements of the accused's fundamental rights, they did not occur in the proceedings before the court.

[p.156]

Section 28 (1) and 28 (3) 127 (1)

Section 28 (1) of the Constitution under which the judge had declared as appropriate to counsel's request provides:—

"Subject to the provisions of sub-section (4) if any of the provisions of sections 16 to 27 (inclusive) has been, is being or is likely to be contravened in relation to him by any person (or in the case of a person who is detained, of any other person alleges such a contravention in relation to the detained person), the, without prejudice to any other action with respect to the same matter which is lawfully available, that person, (or that other person), may apply by motion to the Supreme court for redress".

Sub Section 4 referred to in this section deals with the rules of practice and procedure and any other additional powers conferred by parliament on the Supreme Court for exercising the jurisdiction conferred under Section 28.

The provisions of section 127 (1) which the judge considered to be more gremaine to counsel's request states:—

"A person who alleges that an enactment of any thing contained in or done under the authority of that or any other enactment is inconsistent with or is in contravention of a provision of this Constitution, may at any time bring an action in the Supreme Court for a declaration to that effect." (Emphais supplied).

Section 28(3)

Counsel's request was made pursuant to section 28(3) which provides:—

"If in any proceedings in any court other than the Supreme Court, any question arises out of the contravention of any of the provisions of section 16 to 27 inclusive, that court may and shall if any [p.157] party to the proceedings so requests, refer the question to the Supreme Court".

I make the following brief observations on the above provisions:

(i) Section 28 (1) caters for situations where there are no proceedings in which alleged contraventions could be raised; in such situations the applicant applies directly to the Supreme Court for redress; this is in contradistinction to section 28 (3) which allows such matters to be raised in proceedings "in any court other than the Supreme Court".

Section 28 (1) stipulates an application by motion for redress, whilst section 28 (3) USGS the word "request" with regard to a deserved reference to this court.

(ii) Sections 127 relates to any alleged inconsistency with or contravention of any provision of the constitution. This provision would be appropriate in relation to Mr. Betts' allegation that section 8 (1) and (3) and the Public Order Act 1965 infringed the provisions of Sections 23 (1) (4) and 23 (5) (b) of the Constitution.

(iii) There were criminal proceedings instituted by the State against the accused persons. The proceedings were being heard by the judge (there had been the consent to file the indictment, the arraignment of the accused, the taking of pleas). Most of the issues raised by Counsel for the accused fall within sections 16 to 2'1 of the Constitution. The learned judge had held alternatively, that been even if there had been infringements of the accused's fundamental rights, those infringements did not occur in the proceedings by him.

[p.158]

I find myself unable to agree with the Learned judge. Allegations of denial of a fair trial and presumption of guilt in consequence of an alleged pre-trial publicity as well as inadequacy of time and facilities for the preparation of the accused's defence, before trial are matters which naturally occur before and not in the course of proceedings; they could properly be raised in the proceedings to which they relate.

The learned judge was obliged by the provisions of section 28 (3) to refer the issues raised by Counsel for determination by this court. The request was properly made under section 28 (3).

We order:—

1. That the said Ruling dated 17 November 1993 be removed into the Supreme Court and that the learned judge to send forthwith the said Ruling or a copy thereof under his hand to the Registrar of the Supreme Court and thereupon the said Ruling be quashed.

2. The questions raised by Counsel for the accused which fall within the provisions of sections 16 to27 of the Constitution be referred to this court on or before 4 July 1994 for determination pursuant to section 28 (3) of the said Constitution and Rule 99 of the Rules of the Supreme Court.

3. The High Court be prohibited, and it is hereby prohibited from further hearing and determining the proceedings founded on criminal Information dated 19 October 1993 pending the Determination by the Supreme Court of the aforesaid Reference.

[p.159]

4. The parties to these proceedings do file their case pursuant to the Rule 99 (3) of the Rules of the Supreme Court on or before 14th Ju1y1994.

RULING

BECCLES DAVIES

This application is made under Rule 60 of the Rules of this Court, for a stay of execution of a judgment of the Court of Appeal dated 17 June 1993.

The history

The Reverend Archibald Gambala John as executor of the estate of the late Reverend Gustavus Ademu John, instituted proceedings against the defendants Abu Black, Allie Fofana and Lamin Dankeh (the applicants' herein) that he is entitled in fee simple in possession to all that piece or parcel of land lying and being at Floregusta Farm, Off Kissy Road, Freetown in the Western Area of Sierra Leone and bounded as follows — On the North by a stream 1065 feet and by property now or lately in the possession of W. Cole and otherwise 545 feet, on the East by private property and State property 406.1 feet, on the South by State property 1527.8 feet, and on the West by property now or lately in the possession of Fourah Bay College 237.2 feet and as to its position dimension and boundaries is more particularly shown verged RED in survey plan numbered L.S. 517/81 comprising in all an area of 7.6270 acres.

The matter was heard by Galley J in the High Court. The learned Judge dismissed the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the latter had "failed to prove his claim."

The plaintiff appealed to the Court of Appeal against the learned Judge's judgment. The appeal was heard by the Court (Thompson-Davis, J.S.C., Adophy and Gelaga-King, JJ.A). The Court reversed Golley J's judgment, declaring the plaintiff the owner of the land in dispute.

The defendants have appealed to this Court, on four grounds. An application was then made to the Court of Appeal for a stay of execution of its judgment; the application was refused.

The application

This application is made in consequence of the Court of Appeal's refusal to grant a stay of execution. Rule 60 under which this application is made provides —

"60(1) A civil appeal shall not operate as a stay of execution or of proceedings under the judgment or decision appealed against except in so far as the Supreme Court or Court of Appeal may otherwise order.

(2) Subject to the provisions of these Rules and to any other enactment governing the same, an application for the stay of execution or proceedings shall first be made to the Court of Appeal and if that Court refuses to grant the application, the applicant shall be entitled to renew the application before the Supreme Court for determination."

The defendants seek the following orders —

"1. An interim stay of execution of the judgment of this Honourable Court dated the 17 day of June 1993 pending the hearing and determination of this application.

[p.211]

2. An Order that the execution of the judgment dated the 17 day of June 1993 and all subsequent proceedings thereto be stayed pending the hearing and determination of the Defendants/Respondents appeal to the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone.

3. And also for an Order that the costs of and occasioned by this application be costs in the cause."

The Issue

The issue here is whether from the facts deposed, this Court can grant a stay of execution pending the determination of the substantive matter before it. Dr. Marcus-Jones, Counsel for the plaintiff has submitted that there must be exceptional circumstances arising out of the application to enable this Court to grant the application. Dr. Marcus-Jones has urged this Court to adopt the practice in appeals from the English Court of Appeal to the House of Lords. The notes to Order 58 rule 12 (1960 English Practice) under the rubric 'Stay pending appeal to the House of Lords' state —

"A stay will not be granted save in very exceptional circumstances, such as where execution would destroy the subject matter of the action or deprive the appellant of the means of prosecuting the appeal ……"

Mr. Turay for the defendants (applicants) submitted that there were exceptional circumstances in this case, as untold hardship would be done to 'bona fide purchasers for value' who are not parties to the action

The expression "very exceptional circumstances' has not been defined.

The example given in the notes in my view are not exhaustive. Each application must turn on its own peculiar facts. THE SHORTER OXFORD ENGLISH DICTIONARY defines 'exceptional' as "Of the nature of or forming an exception; unusual."

Some twenty-eight Deeds of Conveyance had been executed by the defendant. Abu Black to different purchasers since 1982. There is contention as to the quantum of the land he owned. I am of the view that the circumstances on this case are very unusual and that a stay of execution of the judgment of the Court of Appeal ought to be granted pending the determination of the substantive appeal by this Court.

I would grant the application and make the following Orders—

1. The damages of Le500,000 awarded by the Court of Appeal to be paid to plaintiff respondent; the amount to be refunded in case the appeal succeeds.

3. The costs awarded by the Court of Appeal in that Court and in the Court below if already taxed should be paid to the plaintiff's solicitor on his personal undertaking to refund them if the appeal succeeds.

The costs of this application to the plaintiff in any event.

A Motion Paper allegedly taken out by E.M. Turay but signed by A. F. Serry Kamal for E. M. Turay as Solicitor for the Applicants dated the 20lh day of October 1999 and filed in the Registry of the Supreme Court on an application made pursuant to section 126(b) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, Act NO.6 Of 1991 (hereafter called the Constitution) and Rule] 03 of the Rules of the Supreme Court, Public Notice No. 1 of 1982 (hereafter called the Rules) seeks an order from this Honourable Court that the order made by this Court dated the 22nd day of September] 999 be varied, discharged or reversed and that the appeal be restored.

The grounds on which the application is made are:

1. That the Court failed to consider that an application for a stay of execution had been argued by the appellants and respondent before the full court and the court had granted a stay of execution of the judgment of the Cowl of Appeal.

2. That in the light of the above proceedings there was abundant evidence before the court to show that the appeal was being prosecuted by the appellants.

3. That there was evidence before the court that both the court and the respondent had waived compliance with Rule 35 of the Supreme Court Rule.

[p.283]

The Motion is supported by the affidavit of A. F. Serry Kamal dated the 20th day of October 1999 and it contains seven exhibits numbered A to G.

On the 4th day of November 1,999, at the hearing of the application Counsel sought to amend the Motion Paper by the substitution of grounds in place of the grounds in the original Notice of Motion and to use two affidavits in addition to the original affidavit in support of the Motion. The application for amendment was refused.

All the papers filed in the application appear to have been engrossed and signed by Serry Kamal describing himself in paragraph one of his affidavit as Solicitor for the second and third applicants but generally signing for E. M. Turay in the body of the Notice of Motion and the backing of all the papers.

Before I go into the merit of the application, I find it necessary to address what has become the unorthodox practice of some solicitors, possibly as a matter of convenience, to sign notices of motion, summonses, pleadings and other court documents “for” other solicitors When one solicitor acts as such for another, whose document is it? Is the signatory acting as agent for the other? If so, does he or his principal have the authority of the client? A solicitor/client relationship is personal and sometimes it may have adverse effect on the solicitor, for example, liability for negligence and breach of trust, a thing which one solicitor cannot transfer to another. Besides, the solicitor/agent signing for another will be acting without the authority of the client and in addition to his being liable to the client as an intermeddler he may also find himself liable to a third party for breach of implied warranty of authority. A solicitor in a firm can sign for the other solicitors in his firm since it is an incidence of partnership that he is both principal and agent for the others. The current practice whereby one solicitor signs for another when they are not in partnership which I have highlighted is not supported by law. There are certain situations as in the case of appeals in which the Rules of court permit a solicitor to sign on behalf of his client

But a rule which allows one solicitor to act as an agent for another when they are not in partnership to enable him to act on behalf of the other's client still has to be drawn to my attention. I opine that in order to avoid any noxious consequences, the Rules of the High Court which are applicable in this case by virtue of Rule 98 of the Supreme Court 1982 provide for change of solicitor whereby the client gives his written consent to the appointment of a new solicitor in substitution for the old thus severing the personal relationship with him and establishing a new one with the present. This practice should be followed rather than the current one.

Having said that, I will proceed to the heart of the application. Mr. Serry Kamal vigorously argued the original application underlining the fact that there was a reserved judgment of the Court on an application for a stay of execution when the appeal was struck out for non-compliance with Rule 35(2). This was the central plank of his complaint and he infers that both the court sitting with three Justices and the respondent were aware of it at the time that the appeal was struck out. This is a serious indictment of the court which Counsel could not substantiate since neither he nor a member of his firm nor his clients appeared. The papers in which the applicants en devoured to comply' with Rule 35(2) were filed after the appeal had been struck out for non-compliance with the Rule. It was like shutting the stable after the horse had bolted.

This application is in my view on all fours with that made before this Court in Mohamed Juma Jalloh v. T Krishnakumar, unreported, Se. Mice. App. 2/99 ruling delivered on the 26th day of October 1999.except that the grounds in support were different. In that case, there was no appearance by the applicant when the appeal was struck out for non-compliance with Rule 35 and he later applied to the full Court invoking section 126(b) of the Constitution and Rule 103 leading fresh evidence in support of the restoration of the appeal.

Section 126(b) of the Constitution provides for an application to be made to the full court consisting of five Justices when an applicant is not satisfied with an order made by the court comprising three Justices and Rule 103 gives a discretion to the Court to allow an appeal to proceed even though there has been non-compliance with Rules or any other rule or practice if the non-compliance is not with and it is in the interest of justice that the non-compliance is waived.

In the Mohamed Juma Jalloh case hereinbefore referred to Warne JSC delivering the unanimous ruling of the Court had this to say:

“There is no evidence before this Court to show that when the matter came up before the court made up of three Justices that Rule 3 5(1) & (2) of the Rules had been complied with; consequently the court struck out the appeal”

On the interpretation of section 126(b) of the Constitution, Warne JSC further said:

“In my view this subsection presupposes that the three Justices erred in law or otherwise to enable the applicant to invoke the provision of section 126(b) of the Constitution. On the record of proceeding as it stands before the court of three Justices, there was no submission or argument before the court of three Justices before the court struck out the appeal.”

In the instant case, the grounds on which the applicants are relying presuppose that there was an appearance by them before the three justices and there was an argument of the application. “This was not ,the case. The argument now put forward is new as was in the Mohamed Juma Jalloh case. Such argument could have been relevant when the application came up before the three Justices but by then the applicants and their Solicitor had not Shown up. The Rules must be strictly observed It is only in situation where an applicant appear or he is represented by counsel at the hearing for striking out the appeal and reasons are adduced to the satisfaction of the court that the appeal should stand despite non-compliance with the Rules as was the case in Castrol Ltd. v. John Michael, SC. 1/98. Unreported a ruling of this court dated the 30th day of September 1999, that the court might be persuaded to exercise its discretion and save the appeal.

In the light of what I have said, the application is dismissed with costs assessed at Le 500,000 to the respondent herein.

CONSTITUTIONAL REFERENCE BY WAY OF CASE STATED

A.F. SERRY KAMAL ESQ. FOR PLAINTIFF

JUDGMENT

DESMOND E.F. LUKE, C.J.

This is a Constitutional reference by way of case stated by Nylander J, a Judge of the High Court pursuant to Sec. 124(2) of the Constitution of Sierra Lone Act No. 6 of 1991.

Sec. 142 (2) provides as follows:—

"Where any question relating to any matter or question as is referred to in Subsection (i) arises in any proceeding in any court, other than the Supreme Court, that court shall stay the proceedings and refer the question of law involved to the Supreme Court for determination, and the court in which the question arose shall dispose of the case in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court."

[p.225]

The Plaintiff, one of the recognised political parties represented in our Parliament initiated this action by a writ of summons dated the 9th day of April 1996 against the Defendants herein. The first Defendant is an Organization set up by the military government known as the National Association for Mobilization Secretariat. The second Defendant is one of the Ministries in existence at that time. The Plaintiff's claim against the Defendants:

1. Damage for trespass

2. Recovery of possession of the premises known as 39 Siaka Stevens Street, Freetown

3. Mense profit at the rate of Le4,000,000.00 per annum from the 29th April 1992 until possession is yielded

4. Damages for conversion of air conditioners – Le10,000,000.00

5. Damages for malicious damage

6. Cost of restoring premises — Le16,000,000.00

7. Interest on the aforesaid amounts and damages at the rate of 32% per annum until payment.

8. A perpetual injunction to restrain the Defendants whether by himself his servant or agents however called from entering or remaining on the property known as 39 Siaka Stevens Street, Freetown or any part thereof.

9. Any further or other relief.

10. Costs

J.G. Kobba, Esq., State Counsel for the Defendants by a motion dated the 30th April 1996 sought to set the said writ "aside for irregularity and/or informality on the ground that the Plaintiff herein failed to comply with the Provision of Petition of Right, Cap. 23 of the Laws of Sierra Leone in that he issued a writ of summons against NASMOS AND THE MINISTRY OF SOCIAL WELFARE YOUTH AND SPORTS." At the hearing of the Motion, Counsel representing the Defendants submitted that the Honourable Court had no jurisdiction to try this matter because the plaintiff have failed to comply with Cap. 23 titled "Petitions of Right" of the Laws of Sierra Leone 1960 S. 4 of the said Legislation, makes provision how the suit is to commence; and S. 5 makes provision for fiat before prosecution. Counsel read out and explained the relevant sections in his argument that the present writ was irregularly issued. The court was asked therefore to set aside the writ as prayed.

[p.226]

In answer to this application, Counsel Serry-Kamal, Esq., representing the plaintiffs referred the court to S. 133(i) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991. This section reads as follows:—

"Where a person has a claim against the Government, that claim may be enforced as of right by proceedings taken against the Government for that purpose, without the grant of a fiat or the use of the process known as Petition of Right."

Counsel rested his argument on this sub-section and asked the court to dismiss the application.

Counsel for the defendants then asked for an adjournment to prepare his Reply.

At the resumed hearing defendant's Counsel submitted that S. 133 (1) of the 1991 Constitution provides certain Rights which are not in dispute. But S. 133 (2) states that Parliament shall make provision for the exercise of such rights. This sub-section reads as follows:—

"Parliament shall, by an Act of Parliament, make provision for the exercise of jurisdiction under this section."

Counsel pointed out that S. 133(1) is not operative until S. 133(2) is effected by Parliament. In the interim all claims against the Government must comply with Cap. 23 of the Laws of Sierra Leone. Counsel urges the Court to grant his application as prayed.

Whereupon the learned trial judge ruled as follows:—

The legal interpretation in my view spins around the present effect of S. 133(1) of the 1991 Constitution and what effect S. 133 (2) has on it presently. As this to my mind touches on the interpretation of S. 133 as a whole. Presently, I hereby invoke S. 124 (2) of the 1991 Constitution which reads as follows:—

"Where any question relating to any matter or question as is referred to in Subsection (i) (Interpretation of the Constitution) arises in any proceedings in any court, other than the Supreme Court, the court shall stay proceedings and refer the question of law involved to the Supreme Court for determination; and the Court in which, the question arose shall dispose of the case in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court."

I therefore pose the following question for the Supreme Court:—

[p.227]

1. Is S. 133 (1) of the 1991 Constitution in operative until S. 133 (2) is effected by Parliament?

2. If the answer is in the negative, can the High Court Rules apply to put into operation S. 133(1) in the absence of Parliament effecting S. 133(2)?

3. What is the state of a party's right, as at present in relation to S. 133(2).

This matter before the Court is stayed until the Supreme Court's decision is received. Proceedings stayed.

(Sgd.) Nylander J.

Before seeking to answer the question posed by the learned trial Judge, it seems to me that it would be helpful to consider the position of claims by private persons against the Government prior to the 1st October 1991 when the present Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No. 6 of 1991 came into being.

EXISTING LAW PRIOR TO 1ST OCTOBER 1991

The existing law prior to 1st October 1991 is to be found in Cap. 23 of the Laws of Sierra Leone 1960 Section 3, 4, and 5 of which read as follows:-

3. All claims against the general Government of the Colony, or against the Government of any other Colony, being of the same nature as claims which might have been preferred against the Crown in England before the enactment of the Crown Proceedings Act, 1947, by petition, manifestation, or plea of right, may, with the consent of the Governor, be preferred in the Supreme Court in a suit instituted by the claimant as plaintiff, against the Attorney General as defendant, or such other officer as the Governor may from time to time designate for that purpose.

Section 4 makes provision how the suit is to commence:—

4. The claimant under this Ordinance shall not issue a writ of summons, but the suit shall be commenced by the filing of a statement of claim in the Supreme Court, and the delivering of a copy thereof at the office of the Attorney General, or other officer designated as aforesaid, and no fee shall be payable on filing or delivering such statement.

And section 5 makes provision for the fiat before prosecution:—

[p.228]

5. The Registrar shall forthwith transmit the statement of claim to the Attorney General, and the same shall be laid before the Governor. In case the Governor shall grant his consent as aforesaid, the statement of claim shall be returned to the Supreme Court, with the fiat of the Governor endorsed thereon, and the claim shall be prosecuted in the Supreme Court.

It is to be noted:—

FIRSTLY — that only claims being of the same nature as claims which might have been preferred against the Crown in England before the enactment of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947, by petition manifestation or plea or right could with the consent of the appropriate office be preferred.

SECONDLY — that such claims were severally restricted and applied mainly to some contracts which the Crown by itself, its servants or agents had entered into as well as to some compensation for property of the subject taken by the Crown either arbitrary or under Statute (See A.G. v. De Keyere Hotel [1920] A.C. 508 Feather v. the Queen 1865 6 B & S 257)

THIRDLY — that in tort the party aggrieved had no remedy against the Crown — A.G. v. De Keyere Hotel [1920] A.C. 508.

And FOURTHLY — that the grant of a fiat or the use of the process know as Petition of Right was required.

HOW DID SEC. 133 OF THE CONSTITUTION OF SIERRA LEONE ACT No.6 OF 1991 SEC 133 (I) & (II) AFFECT THE POSITION?

Section 133 reads:—

133 (1) Where a person has a claim against the Government, that claim may be enforced as of right by proceedings taken against the Government for that purpose, without the grant of a fiat or the use of the process known as Petition of Right.

(2) Parliament shall, by an Act of Parliament, make provision for the exercise of jurisdiction under this section.

Whereas the possible claim against the Government prior to 1st October 1991 were severally restricted as outlined above and were further encumbered with the procedure of use the process known as

Petition of Right and the grant of a fiat to my mind the plain and unambiguous words of Sec. 133. Subsection (1):—

Undoubtedly remove all such restrictions and encumbrances as existed prior to October 1, 1991

However, Sec. 133 consists not only of subsection (i) but also subsection (ii) which reads: —

(2) Parliament shall, by an Act of Parliament, make provision for the exercise of jurisdiction under this section.

Parliament has not to date passed any such legislation — which raises the question what happens to the unrestricted rights granted by sec. 133 subsection (i) in the absence of legislation envisaged by subsection 133(2).

In constructing section 133 I intend to be guided by the following considerations:

1. Sec. 133 is to be construed as a whole. We cannot construe Sec. 133 as if subsection (2) were not there. Otherwise we would not be interpreting the Constitution — we would be rewriting it. And even Parliament the law makers cannot rewrite Sec. 133 without the peoples consent since Sec. 133 is an entrenched clause — vide Sec. 108 (3) of the Constitution.

I intend to be further guided by THE MODERN VIEW – as regards construction of instruments so eloquently stated by Lord Halsbury L.C. in 1888 in the case of Leader v. Duffey [1888] 13 APP. Cas 294 at 302

"All these refinements and nice distinction of words appear to me to be inconsistent with the modern view — which is I think in accordance with reason and common sense — that, whatever the instrument, it must receive a construction according to the plain meaning of the words and sentences therein contained. But I agree that you must look at the meaning of the instrument taken as a whole in order to give effect, if it be possible to do so, to the intention of the framer of it. But it appears to me to be arguing in a vicious circle to begin by assuming an intention [p.230] apart from the language of the instrument itself, and having made that fallacious assumption to bend the language in favour of the assumption so made."

This "reason and common sense" approach to documentary interpretation is still to be found in the words of Lord L.J. in the case of Oliver Ashworth (Holdings) Ltd v. Ballard (Kent) Ltd. [1999] 2 ALL E.R. 791 when discussing the distinction between literal and purposive approaches to the interpretation of Statutes. This is what he says: —

"It is nowadays misleading — and perhaps it always was to seek to draw a rigid distinction between literal and purposive approaches to the interpretation of Acts or Parliament. The difference between the purposive and literal construction is in truth one of degree only ..... the real distinction lies in the balance to be struck, in the particular case, between the literal meaning of the words on the one hand and the context and purpose of the measure in which they appear on the other"

In this matter, by S. 133 (1) Parliament enacted that—

"where a person has a claim against the Government, that claim may be enforced as of right....."

My quotation stops at this point in the text because in S. 133 (1) the substantive enactment is that a claim against the Government may be enforced as of right.

The words "as of right" are followed by these words—

"by proceedings taken against the Government for that purpose, [without the grant of a fiat or use of the process known as "Petition of Right."]

The words in square brackets indicate the previous Crown proceedings restrictions or fetters on claims against the Crown are abolished. This is necessarily so if enforcement of a claim against the Government is as of right.

[p.231]

Then this new right unfettered by any restrictive direction is to be enforced "by proceedings taken against the Government for that purpose."

Thus unless the Constitution itself indicated expressly or by necessary implication that the new unrestricted right is to be effective only as from some future date or after some further condition has been satisfied than that new right comes into being on the 1st October 1991, the date the Constitution came into operations.

Does Sec. 133 (2) expressly or by necessary implication delay the coming into effective operation of the new unrestricted right? What sec. 133 (2) says is—

"Parliament shall by an Act of Parliament make provision for the exercise of the jurisdiction under this section."

Such provision might for example have been to the effect that claims to enforce the new unfettered right were to be considered by a specially constituted court or courts.

For example, it might have been thought appropriate to set up a Court like the U.S. Federal Court of claims with exclusive jurisdiction to try some or all of the jurisdictional statute might have said that all such claims should be tried in the Supreme Court but by 3 Judges of that Court sitting together. But Parliament could not take away nor in other way derogate from the new unrestricted rights created by Sec. 133 (1) — an entrenched clause of the Constitution. Parliament may say what Courts are to have jurisdiction to hear and determine claims to enforce the new unrestricted rights, and it is, of course, open to Parliament to prescribe by Statute procedural rules which are to apply; but an ordinary alternative is for rule or court, and not an Act of Parliament, to spell out the procedure in the Court for bringing the proceedings. That ordinary alternative is not excluded by anything in S. 133 or elsewhere.

I am therefore unable to find in 133 (2) any express or implied condition postponing the availability of the new unrestricted rights until Parliament has enacted a further Statute prescribing which Court or Courts are to exercise jurisdiction to hear and determine claims for enforcement of the new unrestricted rights.

Parliament has failed to enact a definitive Statute specifying which Courts are to exercise jurisdiction over claims to exercise the new unrestricted rights and has not imposed any delaying or suspensory condition postponing the enforcement of the claims.

In my judgement therefore, the Courts must hear and determine any claim to the new unfettered rights granted by the Constitution under Sec. 133 (1). Parliament has not yet enacted any restriction upon the courts or constituted any court which may exercise the jurisdiction and unless and until it does, the claims must be heard and determined in the ordinary courts of the land in the ordinary manner. Such proceedings are in the language of S.133 (1) "proceedings taken against the Government" for the enforcement as of right of the claims referred to in S. 133(1). For the courts to refuse to entertain such proceedings would be to deny the new unrestricted rights conferred by the Constitution in S. 133 (1).

For the aforestated reasons, it is my opinion that:

The answer to the 1st of the questions posed by the learned trial Judge is No.

The answer to the 2nd question is — Yes

The answer to the 3rd question is — provided by Sec. 133 (1) of the Constitution.

The right "may be enforced as of right by proceedings taken against the Government for that purpose."

The Plaintiffs, the All People's Congress issued a writ of summons against what were then known as NASMOS and the Ministry of Social Welfare Youth and Sports. The Plaintiffs' claimed against the Defendants.

"(1) Recovery of possession of the premises known as 39 Siaka Stevens Street, Freetown.

(2) Mense profit at the rate of Le4,000,000.00 per annum from the 29th April 1992 until possession is yielded.

(3) Damage for trespass.

(4) A perpetual injunction to restrain the Defendants whether by himself his servant or agents however called from entering or remaining on the said property.

(5) Damages for conversion of air conditioners

(6) Malicious damage

(7) Interest".

On the 30th of April 1996, the Defendants filed a motion in the High Court seeking the following orders:

[p.234]

“(1) That the above-mentioned writ be set aside for irregularity and for informality on the grounds that the Plaintiffs herein failed to comply with the provision of the Petition of Right Cap. 23 of the laws of Sierra Leone in that he issued a writ of summons against NASMOS and the Ministry of Social Welfare, Youth and Sports.

(2) That the Plaintiff’s pay the cost of the application".

The Plaintiffs were represented by Mr. A.F. Serry-Kamal while state counsel J.G. Kobba Esq. acted for the Defendants. When the motion came up for hearing Mr. Kobba submitted that the Court had no jursidiction to try the matter because the Plaintiffs had failed to comply with the requirements of section 3, 4 & 5 of the Petition of Right (Cap. 23.)

Section 3 confers on private individuals the right to sue the State but only after first obtaining the fiat of the Attorney General. Section 4 on its part, lays down the mode of commencement of such proceedings. This only requires the filing of a statement of claim, while section 5 deals with the method of transmission of the statement of claim and the endorsement of the fiat of the Attorney General thereon. Because of such non-compliance, counsel for the Defendants urged the court to set aside the writ of summons.

Mr. Serry-Kamal on the other hand maintained that the application should be dismissed because not only had section 133 (1) of the Constitution impliedly repealed section 3, 4 & 5 of Cap. 23, but it had also made it no longer necessary for a claimant to obtain the prior consent of the Attorney General before the institution of proceedings against the State.

More specifically, section 133(1) provides,

“Where a person has a claim against the Government that claim may be enforced as of right by proceedings taken against the Government for that purpose, without the grant of a fiat or the use of the process known as Petition of Right”.

The motion was adjourned for state counsel to rely to Mr. Serry Kamal's submission when the court resumed. Mr. Kobba, while conceding that section 113 (1) of the Constitution gave litigants the right to sue the Government without first getting or obtaining the fiat of the Attorney General, argued that the exercise of such right was limited by the provisions of section 133 (2) which stipulate that,

So, Mr. Kobba contended that until such time as Parliament takes the necessary steps to implement subsection 133 (2) the commencement of all claims against the State must conform with the requirements of the provisions of Cap. 23 section 3. 4 & 5.

At this junction, and being a question of law, the court suspended the proceedings as demanded by section 124 (2) of the Constitution and referred the matter to the Supreme Court.

According to this sub-section

“Where any question relating to any matter or question as is referred to in sub-section (1) (Interpretation of the Constitution) arises in any proceedings in any Court, other than the Supreme Court, that Court shall stay proceedings and refer the question of law involved to the Supreme Court for determination; and the court in which the question arose shall dispose of the matter [p.236] in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court”.

The learned trial judge then posed the following three questions for the consideration of the Court.

“(1) Is section 133 (1) of the 1991 Constitution in operative until section 133 (2) is effected by Parliament?

(2) If the answer is in the negative, can the High Court Rules apply to put into operation section 133 (1) in the absence of Parliament affecting section 133 (2).

(3) What is the state of the parties right as at present in relation to section 133 (1)?

In the Supreme Court we invited counsel on both sides to file their case in writing and thereafter, they more or less repeated their arguments and submissions in the High Court.

Since this is the first time the interpretation of section 133 (1) has come before the Court, it is important that one does more than merely give straight-forward answers to the questions referred to us. I hope, I will be forgiven for making extensive references to other jursidiction than might otherwise be necessary.

The immediate consideration that comes to mind is, what approach should the Court in interpreting a constitutional as opposed to a statutory provision adopt?

There is certainly no unanimity in practice here. The approaches seem to vary from jurisdiction to jurisdiction and sometimes, like Canada, even from period to period.

[p.237]

The conflict has always centered around the question whether the Constitution is to be treated as an ordinary statute to be 1nterpreted in accordance with the ordinary (restrictive) rules or statutory construction or whether it is something more - a “Constitutional statute” and so deserves a more “beneficial” interpretation.

The Privy Council's construction of the British North America Act of 1861 in Att - General for Canada V.A.G. for Ontario (1937) A.C. 326 (P.C.) vividly demonstrated that body's often reluctant attitude towards differentiating between constitutional and statutory documents.

Again in Colonial Sugar Refining Co. v Att Gen (1914) AC, 231 (PC) the Privy Council observed that the Canadian Constitution is just another piece of British legislation. See also Bank of Toronto V Lambe (1887) 12 AC, 575.

Chief Justice Marshall on his part seemed to suggest a different standard ought to apply in construing constitutional provisions when he said in Moculloch v Maryland 1705, 4 Wheaton 316 (1819) at page 136 11we must not forget that it is Constitution we are expounding”. Lord Sankey 1n his famous dictum in British Coal Corporation V The King (1935) 500 (PC) expressedly recognised that,

“In interpreting a Constitution or organic statute such as the British North America Act, that construction most beneficial to the widest possible amplitude of its powers must be adopted”.

Five years earlier in 1930, he had declared in Attorney General for Canada that,

“The British North America Act planted in Canada a living tree capable of growth and explanation within [p.238] its natural limits. The object of the Act was to grant a Constitution to Canada. Their Lordships do not conceive it to be the duty of this Board - it is certainly not their desire - to cut down the provisions of the Act by a narrow and technical construction: but rather to give it a large and liberal interpretation”- Edwards v Attorney General for Canada (1930) AC 124, 136 PC

And in the celebrated Indian case of Gopalan v The State of Madras (1950) SCR 88 while adopting the language of an Austra1ian decision(A.G. for New South Wales v Brewery Employees Union) (1908) 6 C L R 469, Chief Justice Kania observed that,

“Although we are to interpret words of the Constitution as we apply to any ordinary law, these very principles of interpretation compel us to take into account the nature and scope of the Act that we are interpreting - to remember that it is a Constitution, a mechanism under which laws are made and not a mere Act which declares what the law is to be”.

In Adegbenro v Akintola (1963) AC 614 (PC) the Nigerian Supreme Court displayed far greater imagination than the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in regarding the Constitution as something more than a British Government law.

I will next come to what I believe is the thrust of Mr. Kobba's argument that section 133 sub-sections (1) & (2) of the Constitution should be read conjunctively and not in isolation of each other.

I do accept that as a general rule of constructions a Constitution like a statute must be read as a whole. In other words the entire [p.239] Constitution should be examined for the purpose of determining the intention of each section or part. This is what is often referred to as the principle of harmonious construction. Its aim is no doubt, to reconcile different provisions of the Constitution.

Thus in State of Madras V Champakam (1951) SCR 525 and Qutreshi V State of Bihar (1958) SC 731 the Indian Supreme Court held that the Directive Principles of State Policy enshrined in the Construction have to be construed and implemented in such a manner as not to take away or abridge the fundamental rights of the individual. Likewise, that" Court has ruled that though Hindi is the national language and Article 351 of the Indian Constitution makes special provision directing the State to promote the spread of Hindi such object cannot be achieved by any means which violate the protection of the interests of minorities guaranteed by Articles 29 and 30 - see State of Bombay V Bombay Education Society (1955) sea 568

However, it is a cardinal principle of construction too that where the words of a section are clear,

"No rule of construction can require that ..... it shall be necessary to introduce another part of the statute which speaks with leas perspective and of which the words may be capable of such construction as by possibility to diminish the efficacy of the provisions of the Act-Vide Warburton V Loveland (1828) 1 H & B 448.

And finally in the words of the Supreme Court of India.

"If two constructions are possible, then the court must adopt that which will ensure the smooth and harmonious working of the Constitution and eschew the other which will lead to absurdity or give rise to practical inconvenience or make well established provisions of existing law nugatory"— State of Punjob V Ajaib singh (1953) S C R 254.

Mr. Serry-Kamal in his submission appealed to the Court not to read section 133(1) together with section 133 (2). He said the two [p.240] subsections should be treated separately. He further submitted that in so far as Cap. 23 is concerned it is only section 3, 4 & 5, therefore that are inconsistent with the provisions of section 133 (1) and to the extent of that inconsistency are rendered void by section 171 (15) of the Constitution. The rest of the provisions in Cap. 23 according to him remain valid and operational, more particularly, section 8 which provides that,

"So far as the same may be applicable, and except in so far as may be inconsistent with this Act all the powers, authorities and provisions contained in the Courts Act, or in any enactment extending or amending the same and the practice and course of procedure of the High Court, shall extend apply to all suits and proceedings by or against the Government and in all such suits, costs may be awarded in the same manner as in suits between private persons"

I find Mr. Serry-Kamal's argument attractive and I will agree with him that section 133 (1) of the Constitution has impliedly repealed and replaced sections 3, 4 & 5 of Cap. 23. It is my further view that until such period as Parliament brings 1nto operation the provisions of section 133 (2) the correct procedure applicable to suits brought under section 133 (1) is that prescribed under the existing law i.e. section 8 of Cap. 23. Under the English Crown Proceedings Act 1947, in principle it is the normal procedure in civil litigation that applies.

To hold otherwise will, I believe, work great hardship on would be litigants who may have legitimate claims against the state and are eager to pursue them. I beg to differ with counsel for the Defendants contention that claimants against the Government have to pursue their rights by means of the laborious and long-winded process under sections 3, 4 & 5 of the Petition of High Court requiring, among other things, the prior consent of the Attorney General. What happens if the fiat of the Attorney General is not forthcoming? Would that not surely leave the poor litigant in limbo?

To all intents and purposes section 133 (1) has for the first time conferred a new right - that of being able to commence an action against the government without having previously obtained the Attorney General's fiat. That right must not be fettered simply because Par1iament has not over a period of nine years or so thought it worth-the-while to prescribe rules and regulations for the exercise of jurisdiction under section 133 (2).

Let me now examine the position of the "existing law" vis-a-vis the Constitution.

Section 170 (1) of the Constitution states that the laws of Sierra Leone shall comprise:—

"(a)……

(b) ……..

(c) ……

(d) the existing law

and by section 176 "existing law" is defined as,

"Any Act, rule, regulation or other such instrument made in the pursuance of or continuing in operation under the existing Constitution and having effect as part of the laws of Sierra Leone or of any part thereof immediately before the commencement of this Constitution (or any" Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom or Order of Her Majesty in Council so having effect and may be continued with such Modifications, adaptations, qualifications and exceptions as may be necessary to bring it into conformity with this Constitution as if it had been made under this Constitution

Section 171 (1) then went on to say,

"The existing law shall, not withstanding the repeal of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act, 1978, have effect after the entry into force of this Constitution as if they had been made in pursuance of this Constitution and shall be read and construed with such modifications, adaptations, qualifications and exceptions as may be necessary to bring them into [p.242] conformity with this Constitution".

The Constitution having this clearly and copiously explained the position of the existing law, I do not see the reason why this Court cannot apply that part of Cap. 23 which has not been either expressly or impliedly revoked, such as section 8 in particular, to give meaning and teeth to the provisions of section 133 (1).

As an exponent of the liberal approach myself, I hold the view that section 133 (2) of the Constitution must be interpreted in a manner that will not impede the fulfilment of the right granted by section 133 (1). It could hardly have been in the contemplation of the makers of the Constitution that what they had given by the right hand they had taken away with the left. Moreover, when one reads section 133 (1) side by side with the provisions of section 21, dealing with the protection from deprivation of property and section 28, the enforcement section, the case for giving effect to section 133 (1) inspite of section 133 (2) becomes even more compelling. The main complaint here is that the Plaintiffs' property had been compulsorily acquired by the Defendants. Indeed, the Plaintiff's could have applied to the Supreme Court by motion under section 28 for redress. The fact that they had chosen to proceed under section 133 (1) should not prejudice their chances of success simply because Parliament had failed to pass the necessary legislation under section 133 (2)

I will end by reverting to the specific questions posed by Nylander J - i.e.

"(1) Is section 133 (1) of the 1999 Constitution inoperative until S133 (2) is effected by Parliament?

My answer is NO.

(2) If the answer is in the negative, can the High Court Rules apply to put into operation S133 (1) in the absence of Parliament effecting S133 (2)?

My answer is YES

[p.243]

(3) What is the state of a parties right, as at present in relation to S133 (1).

This question is by no means clear. In any case because of what I have already said in (1) & (2) above, I do not think I need to answer it.

[SGD.]

Hon. Mr. Justice A.B. Timbo. JSC

JOKO SMART J.S.C.

This is a constitutional reference to the Supreme Court made by Nylander J. sitting as judge in the High Court pursuant to s. 124(2) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, 1991, Act no. 6 of 1991 which reads:

“Where any question relating to any matter or question as is referred to in subsection (1) arises in any proceeding in any court, other than the Supreme Court, that court shall stay the proceedings and refer the question of law involved to the Supreme Court for determination; and the Court in which the question arose shall dispose of the case in [p.245] accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court.”

Subsection 124 (1)(a) vests original jurisdiction in the Supreme Court to determine the matter raised in s. 124(2). It provides as follows:

“The Supreme Court shall, save as otherwise provided in section 122 of this Constitution, have original jurisdiction, to the exclusion of all Courts—

(a) in all matters relating to the enforcement or interpretation of any provision of this Constitution.

The main thrust of this reference is the interpretation of s.133 of the Constitution which states:

(1) Where a person has a claim against the Government that claim may be enforced as of right by proceedings taken against the Government for that purpose, without the grant of a fiat or the use of the process known as Petitions of Right

(2) Parliament shall, by an Act of Parliament make provision for the exercise of jurisdiction under this section.

The background to the reference

An action was begun in the High Court between ALL PEOPLE'S CONGRESS Plaintiff and NATIONAL ACTION FOR SOCIAL MOBILIZATION SECRETARIAT (NASMOS) and MINISTER OF SOCIAL WELFARE, YOUTH AND SPORTS - defendants., by writ of summons dated 9th day of April 1996 . In the action, the Plaintiffs claims against the defendants were, inter alia,

1. Recovery of possession of premises known as 39 Siaka Stevens Street, Freetown.

2. Mense profits at the rate of Le, 4,000,000 per annum from 29 April 1992 until possession is yielded up,

3. Damages for trespass.

4. A perpetual injunction to restrain the defendants whether by themselves, their servants or agents howsoever called from entering or remaining on the said property.

5. Damages for conversion of air conditioners.

6. Malicious damage

7. Interest.

On the 30th day of April 1996 the defendants filed a Motion in the High Court [p.246] praying for the following orders:—

1. That the said wit of summons be set aside for irregularity and for informality on the grounds that the plaintiff failed to comply with the provisions of the Petitions of Right Act, chapter 23 of the laws of Sierra Leone, 1960, in that the plaintiff issued a writ of summons against NASMOS and the Ministry of Social Welfare Youth and Sports.

2. That the plaintiff pays the costs of the application.

At the hearing of the application, Counsel for the defendants submitted that the Court had no jurisdiction to try the case because the plaintiff had failed to comply with the Petitions of Right Act, CAP. 23, articulating that s. 4 of the said Act prescribed the manner of commencement of a suit against Government and that s.5 of the Act made provision for a fiat to be obtained before an action could be commenced against the defendants. In answer, Counsel for the plaintiff referred to s.133(1) of the Constitution submitting that the plaintiff did not require a fiat or process by petition of right and that that process had been abolished from the date that the Constitution came into force. In reply to Plaintiff Counsel's counter submission, Counsel for the defendants stressed that Parliament has not as yet passed an Act for the conferment of jurisdiction as provided for under s.133(2) of the Constitution, and he urged the Court to rule that s.133(1) becomes operative only when s.133(2) has been complied with.

It is against this background that Nylander J. saw a need for the interpretation of the two subsections of s.133 and stayed proceedings and made this reference in accordance with s.124(2) of the Constitution posing the following questions for determination:

1. Is s.133(1) of the Constitution inoperative until s.133(2) is effected by Parliament?

2. If the answer is in the negative, can the High Court Rules apply to put in operation s.133(1) in the absence of Parliament effecting s.133(2).?

3. What is the state of a party's right as at present in relation to s.133(1)?

In order to illuminate the process of interpretation of the two subsections of s.133, I find it necessary first to outline the law on the type of rights for which a person could sue Government before the passage of the 1991 Constitution.

Proceedings against Government prior to 1991

The home-grown legislation was the Petitions of Right Act, cap. 23 of the laws of Sierra Leone 1960. S. 3 of the Act provided:—

All claims against the Government of the Colony or against [p.247] the Government of any other Colony, being of the same nature as claims which might have been preferred against the Crown in England before the enactment of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947, by petition, manifestation, or plea of right, may, with the consent of the Governor be preferred in the Supreme Court in a suit instituted by the claimant as plaintiff against the Attorney General as defendant, or such other officer as the Governor may from time to time designate for that purpose".

For clarity of purpose, it should be born in mind that under the Interpretation Act 1971 and the Law (Adaptation) Act 1972, Sierra Leone, the Attorney General and the High Court replaced the Colony, Governor and Supreme Court mutatis mutandis in the Petitions of Right Act.

What s.3 of the Act achieved was to transplant to Sierra Leone English law on the rights inherent in private citizens against the sovereign when they suffered wrongs at his hands. As an aid to the complete understanding of the issue before us I find it relevant to ascertain even in broad outline what the law was on suing the Crown.

Under the common law, there were two main rules governing the liability of the Crown and its servants. One was a substantive rule of law and the other was procedural. I shall deal with the latter in due course but for now I will adumbrate the former. The substantive rule was that the King can do no wrong expressed in the Latin maxim Rex non potest peccare. It was an ancient and fundamental principle of the unwritten English Constitution. Though in a personal sense the King was deemed to be incapable of doing wrong, yet some of his acts could in themselves be contrary to law, and on that account, the law could step in and set them aside. The King was considered as a benevolent lord who when it came to certain rights of his subjects in some respects would not be seen to trapple upon them with impunity.

With the emergence of government departments when the Crown, through its servants acting on its behalf, descended into the commercial arena, it became essential that the Crown should at least be made liable to its subject for contracts into which it entered with them.(See Thomas v. The Queen (1874) LR 10 QB 31; Rederiaktiebolget Amphitrite v. The King [1921] 3 KB 500 at p. 503 per Rowlatt .1.) But it was not for every type of contract that redress was available to the subject for its breach; liability depended on the terms of the contract as the case may be. If, for example, the contract provided for money to be paid out of funds voted by Parliament and no vote was made there was no remedy. (See Churchard v The Queen (1865) 1 Q.B. 173).

There was also liability for compensation for property of the subject taken by the [p.248] Crown either arbitrarily or under statute. (See Attorney General v. De Keyser's Royal Hotel [1920] A.C. 508; Feather v. The Queen (1865) 6 B & S 257). In this regard, fat the Crown to be liable under statute, the statute must impose an obligation on it expressly or by implication. (See Cooper v. Hawkins [1904] 2 K.B. 164; Hornsey Urban District Council v. Hennell [1902] 2 K.B.73).

Outside these two grey areas, the subject did not have recourse against the crown for its wrongs. I will briefly mention some of these areas of disadvantage. One was the defence of executive necessity which was available to the Crown for its future action if it was dictated by the needs of the community. Under this defence the Crown could not by contract hamper its freedom of action in matters which concerned the welfare of the state. Thus in the Amphitrite case [1921] 3 K.B. 500 Rowlatt J. held that an undertaking given by the British Government to neutral ships during World War 1 that if they sent their ships to British ports with a particular cargo they would not be detained, was not binding on the government and that it was free to withdraw the undertaking and refuse clearance on the ground that the Crown was not competent to make a contract which would have the effect of limiting its power of executive action in the future. Rowlatt J. however, made a reservation that the defence would not be applicable to ordinary commercial contracts. (See [1921] 3 K.B. 500 at p.503): Denning J. (as he then was) commenting on the stance of Rowlatt J. placed limitations on the defence holding that it only availed the Crown where there was an implied term in a contract to that effect or that it was the true meaning of the contract that the defence should apply. (See Minister of Pensions v. Robertson [1949] 1 K.B. 227 at p.231).

Further, there was no remedy at common law for wrongful dismissal by the Crown of its servants. (See Dunn v. The Queen [1896]1 QB 117 per Lord Herschell at p. 120; Acton J. in Leaman v. The King [1920] 3 K.B.663). No mense profit was payable by the Crown for the recovery of possession of property unless there was a contract for such payment or statute provided as such. (See Attorney General v. De Keyser's Royal Hotel [1920] A.C. 508); there could also be no order for the restitution of property although the, court could make a declaration that the subject/plaintiff was entitled to the property as against the Crown. Furthermore, equitable remedies like injunction and decree of specific performance were not available against the Crown nor could there be discovery of documents against it if to do so would be injurious to the interest of the public. (See Ellis v. Home Office [1953] 2 Q.B. 135). There was no period of limitation for actions by the Crown except that for the recovery of land the period was 60 years reduced to 30 years by the Limitation Act 1939 instead of the ordinary period of 12 years. Finally, the most frequent wrongs that were suffered by the subject were tortious for which there was no remedy. (See Attorney General v. De Keyser's Royal Hotel [1920] A.C. 508 per Lord Dunedin at p.522 and per Lord Atkinson at p. 532; Cockburn CJ in Feather v. The Queen (1865) 6 B & S 257, ER 1191 at p. 1205.)

Now to the procedural rule. So far as this was concerned, the party aggrieved by the Crown did not go straight to court as the King could not be sued in his own courts but had to use the process of petition of right. The procedure was regulated by the Petition of Right Act 1860 enacted only to simplify the process and not to create new rights which the subject did not enjoy before. This was the preliminary step in the commencement of an action after which the normal process of litigation in a court of civil jurisdiction followed.

After this historical background it is appropriate at this stage to determine what is “government” as it is claimed by the defendants herein that they are arms of the Government of Sierra Leone.

Government of Sierra Leone.

The Interpretation Act No. 8 of 1971 defines government as “the Government of Sierra Leone (which shall be deemed to be a person) and includes, where appropriate, any authority by which executive power of the State is duly exercised in a particular case”. There is no doubt that the second defendant is part of the Government of Sierra Leone as it exercises some executive power of the State under the Constitution. (See s. 53(1) and s.53(5) of the Constitution). I have taken the pains to go into this definition in order to draw attention to the identities of the defendants. While I am satisfied that the 2nd defendant answers to that description I am not sure about the 2nd defendant. This and the question whether the proper parties are before the Court as defendants are matters for the trial Court.

The main issues in this reference

Before this Court, counsel for the defendants made two contentions. One is that s. 3, 4 and 5 of the Petition of Right Act, have been violated by the plaintiff. The other is that s. 133(1) and s. 133(2) should be read conjointly to such an extent as to reach the conclusion that s.133 becomes operative only when Parliament has complied with s.133(2). He submitted that there will be an ambiguity if the sections are to be read independently and he cited authorities in support. I shall presently deal with the second contention.

One of the cases Counsel relied upon is Canada Sugar Refining Company Ltd v. The Queen [1898] A.C. 735. This was an appeal from the Canadian Court of Appeal to the Privy Council. In this case the Attorney General of Canada instituted an action against the Canadian Sugar Refining Company to recover customs duty on sugar imported by the company into Canada by a steamship called the Cynthiana. The principal question before the courts was the date of importation of the sugar into the country. The ship had set out from Antwerp in Holland bound for Montreal. Its [p.250] first call in Canada was at the port of North Sydney in Cape Breton on 29 April 1895 where it stopped allegedly to coal before proceeding to Montreal. At port North Sydney the shipmaster made two reports for entry and exit of the ship on the same day that the ship entered and left and he received a customs certificate of clearance. Eventually, when the ship reached its final destination the collector of customs charged duty as from the date of entry into Montreal which was 3 May 1895 and cancelled the clearance certificate issued at the intermediate port. The contention of the Sugar Company was that duty ought to have been levied up to the date of entry into the country at port North Sydney and that between that entry and the final destination the goods should have been cleared duty free. The whole issue revolved on the interpretation of s.150 of the Canadian Customs Act 1896 as to the ascertainment of the precise date of importation. The section provided:

“Whenever, on the levying of any duty, or for any other purpose, it becomes necessary to determine the precise time of the importation or exportation of any goods, or of the arrival or departure of any vessel, such importation, if made by sea, coastwise or by inland navigation in any decked vessel , shall be deemed to have been completed from the time that the vessel in which such goods were imported came within the limits of the port at which they ought to be reported, and if made by land or by inland navigation in any undecked vessel, then, from the time such goods were brought within the limits of Canada”

The respondent Company further submitted that having regard to the context and other sections of the Act, “the words” the port at which they ought to be reported" in section 150 meant the port at which the effective report was to be made for the purpose of importation. Dismissing the contention of the respondent, the Privy Council held that upon interpretation of s.150, the port of importation was Montreal and not port North Sydney. It was then that Lord Davey made the following remark on statutory interpretation on which Counsel for the defendants herein has placed much premium.

“Every clause of a statute should be construed with reference to the context and the other clauses of the Act, so as, s9 far as possible to make a consistent enactment of the whole statute or series of statues relating to the subject matter" (Canadian Sugar Refining Company Ltd v. The Queen [1898] AC 735 at p.741) Much as I regard this as a very persuasive statement of law I do not see how it can be of assistance to the defendants herein in support of their contentions put before this Court. The Privy Council in the Canadian case was concerned with the [p.251] precise interpretation of the words "the port at which they ought to be reported" and from the spirit and intendment of the Customs Act and all the regulations on customs duty they reached the conclusion that the port of importation must be the port of the final discharge of the cargo. The factual situation is not the same as the case before this Court.

The defendants' second support is Curtis v. Stovin [1889] 22 QBD 512. In this case the English Court of Appeal was faced with the task of interpreting s.65 of the County Courts Act 1888 which made the following provision:

"Where in any action of contract brought in the High Court the claim indorsed on the writ does not exceed L 100 it shall be lawful for either party to the action at any time to apply to a judge of the High Court to order such action to be tried in any court in which the action might have been commenced, or in any court convenient thereto, and on the hearing of the application the judge shall order such action to be tried accordingly."

In construing this section, Lord Esher held the view that the legislature had misdescribed the court to which the transfer was to be made and that the legislature did it in such a way as, to show that there was a misdescription of the court. Nevertheless, he thought that the alternative clause which followed "or in any court convenient thereto" was helpful in the construction inasmuch as it referred to a locality which must be the county court in the district in which the parties were. resident. (See Curtis v. Stovin [1889] 22 QBD 512 at p. 517). Bowen L.J. in the same case applied the ut res magis valeat quam pereat rule, and stressed that " if we were to hold that under s. 65 the judge has no power to order that an action shall be tried in a county court unless it is an action which as regards the amount claimed, might have been commenced in a county court, we should be making nonsense of the section." We must avoid such a construction, if the language will admit of our doing so" he emphasised (See Curtis v. Stovin [1889] 22 QBD 512 at p.517). As will be seen in due course, these dicta, to say the least, are of no assistance to the defendants in the interpretation of the subject- matter before us.

Charles Leader & Anor. v. George Duffey (1888) 13 App. cases 294 is another authority on which counsel for the defendants based his argument. In that case the Privy Council was asked to interpret a clause in a settlement which gave property "unto or for the benefit of all and every or anyone or more child or children, or any grand child pr grand children, or other issue then in being of the said intended marriage". The bone of contention was whether the word "then" applied to persons in being at the time of the death of the tenant for life or to persons in being at any time that the settlement took effect. Lord Herschell gave the precise meaning of the word "then in being" to be equivalent to "in esse" that is to say born or about to be [p.252] born, and he concluded that the words were, according to the natural construction of the language used, connected only with the words which immediately preceded them and not with the earlier limb of the sentence.(Charles Leader & Anor v. George Duffey (1888) 13 App. Case 294 at p. 305). On the construction of instruments generally, Lord Halsbury LC emphatically at page 301 of the report observed that “whatever the instrument, it must receive a construction according to the plain meaning of the words and sentences therein contained but the whole instrument must be looked at to ascertain what is the meaning of the instrument taken as a whole in order to give effect to the intention of the framer of it” . This is what I intend to do when I come to the interpretation part in this judgment but I do not think that it will also be helpful to the defendants.

The next case for review is Attorney General for Canada v.Hallett & Carey Ltd [1952] AC 427 in which the respondents before the Privy Council challenged the validity of the order in council of the Governor of Manitoba which resulted in the compulsory acquisition of his barley during the Second World War The National Emergency Transitional Powers Act 1945 provided by its s. 2(1) that:

“The Governor in Council may do and authorize such acts and things and make from time to time such orders and regulations, as he may, by reason of the continued existence of the national emergency arising out of the war against Germany and Japan, deem necessary or, advisable for the purpose of a monitoring, controlling and regulating supplies and services, prices, transportation use, and occupation of property rentals, employments, salaries and wages to ensure economic stability and in orderly transaction to conditions of peace”

In exercise of the powers conferred by s. 2(1) of the 1945 Act, the Order-in Council in question was made providing that "all oats and barley in commercial positions in Canada with certain specified exceptions are hereby vested in the Canadian Wheat Board". Delivering the judgment of the Privy Council Lord Radcliffe held that for the expropriation order to be invalid in law it must be attacked by showing that the Act truly interpreted did not give the Governor the power to carry out what he had purported to achieve. His Lordship first questioned the interpretation given to the Order-in Council by the trial court in Manitoba and by the Court of Appeal to the effect that the Act allowed the continuance of existing powers only and that there was no portion in it giving power to extend the controls, as propositions which imposed a construction that flew in the face of the words of the Act. (see Attorney General for Canada v. Hallett & Carey Ltd [1952] AC 427 at p.446). In this case Lord Radcliffe raised an issue which is very relevant to the matter before this Court and to which I will return when dealu1g with s.133(2) of our Construction [p.253] specifically. It is this: “Where the import of some enactment is inconclusive or ambiguous, the court may properly lean in favour of an interpretation that leaves private rights undisturbed”. (Attorney General for Canada v. Hallett & Carey Ltd [1952] AC 427 at p.450).

The last case that Counsel for the defendants urged us to accept as authority for his propositions is Magor Rural District Council v. Newport Corporation [1950] 2 All ER 1226. I do not find much in this case to merit a detailed treatment. But I am inclined to agree with the dissenting judgment of Denning LJ (-as he then was) when he said:

“We do not sit here to pull the language of Parliament to pieces and make nonsense of it. This is an easy thing to do, and it is a thing to which lawyers are too often prone. We sit here to find out the intention of Parliament and carry it out, and we do this better by filling in the gaps and making sense of the enactment than opening it up to destructive analysis”.([1950] 2 All ER 1226 at p.1236).

I am deeply influenced by this statement of Denning LJ and I see no reason why I should not follow it in this Court.

The interpretation of s.133(1) and s. 133(2).

Next the crux of the reference. Two rules of statutory construction must, in my judgment, be considered in this case. One is the Literal Rule and the other the Purposive Rule. If the words in a statute are themselves precise and unambiguous then no more can be necessary than to expound these words in their natural and ordinary senses.(See Sussex Peerage case (1844) 11 Cl & F 85; 8 ER 1034). But it sometimes happens that the ordinary words in themselves may be misleading and in order to make assurance doubly sure it might be necessary to examine the context including the subject matter the scope, purpose and; if need be, the background of the legislation in order to give effect to the true purpose of the legislation. (See Pepper v. Hart [1993] 1 All ER 42 at p.50 per Lord Griffith). This, I apprehend, is the Current trend in statutory interpretation and it is encapsulated in the judgment of Laws LJ in the English Court of Appeal case of Oliver Ashworth (Holdings) Ltd v. Ballard (Kent) Ltd [1999] 2 All ER 791 with which I cannot agree more. This was what he said:

“It is nowadays misleading - and perhaps it always was to seek to draw a rigid distinction between literal and purposive approaches to the interpretation of Acts of Parliament. The difference between purposive and literal construction is in truth one of degree only. On [p.254] received doctrine we spend our professional lives construing legislation purposively in as much we are enjoined at every turn to ascertain the intention of Parliament. The real distinction lies in the balance to be struck, in the particular case, between the literal meaning of the words on the one hand and the context and purpose of the measure in which they appear on the other. Frequently there will be no opposition between the two, and then no difficulty arises. Where there is a potential clash , the conventional approach has been to give at least very great and often decisive weight to the literal meaning of the enacting words. I will not here go into the details or merits of the shift of emphasis, save broadly to recognise its virtue and its vice. Its virtue is that the legislator's true purpose may be more accurately ascertained. Its vice is that the certainty and accessibility of the law may be reduced or compromised. The common law, which regulates the interpretation of legislation has to balance these considerations “([l999] 2 All ER 791 at p.805).

Thus ambiguity may arise when a word has an ordinary meaning but it also has a latent meaning known only to the person who utters it within a particular context in which he uses it. In this case the context determines the real meaning. Shakespeare affords us with a light-hearted example in the following conversation between two of his characters in The Two Gentlemen of Verona (Act 2 s.5).

Launce: I'll but lean, and my staff understands me.

Speed: It stands under thee indeed.

Launce: Why, stand-under and under-stand is all one.

Still on ambiguity, Laws LJ gave classic examples of how it can create difficulties:

“This concept of ambiguity is not, to my mind, free of difficulty. an expression is strictly ambiguous when, entirely shorn of their context, the words in question are equally capable as a matter of language of meaning at least two different things. In Marlowe's Edward 11 there is the message 'Edward to kill fear not to do the deed is good'. With a comma after 'fear', it tells the recipient not to kill the King; if the comma is after 'not', it commends his murder. With no comma at all, it is in the true sense ambiguous. But this kind of strict ambiguity cannot be the whole reach of what their Lordships meant in HRH Prince Ernest Augustus of Hanover's case, since they considered that it is always necessary to look at the context of the Act in every case; [p.255] and it is by no means in every case that such a strict or internal ambiguity arises. There is however a different sense of ambiguity. It arises where although the words as a matter of language are clear enough, there may be a question as to the scope or subject matter of their intended reference. In the sixth century BC Croesus King of Lydia sent to the oracle at Delphi to divine his likely fortunes if he crossed the river Halys, the boundary of his own kingdom, and attacked the Persian Empire. Herodotus in book 1 of the Histories tells us that the oracle sent back the answer, 'If you cross the Halys you will destroy a great realm'. Thinking this is a good portent Croesus crossed it. But the realm he destroyed was his own; he was utterly defeated by Cyrus King of Persia, and his capital Sardis, was taken” ([1999] 2 All ER 791 at p.807).

I have gone into great length in quoting these passages from the judgment of Laws LJ which I fully endorse and adopt in order to help determine whether there is any ambiguity in s.133(1) and s.133(2) of the Constitution taking them Singularly or conjointly. Counsel for the defendants conceded that s. 133(1) conferred upon citizens unlimited rights to sue Government outright if these rights are infringed; his contention was that the enjoyment of these rights is postponed until Parliament passes a jurisdictional Act as contemplated by s. 133(2). To resolve this, I will go back first to the English Crown Proceedings Act 1947. S. 1 of this Act restated that only those rights which the subject possessed at common law for which he could sue the Crown by a petition of right were now suable as of right without the process of a petition of right reads:

“Where any person has a claim against the Crown after the commencement of this Act, and if this Act had not been passed, the claim might have been enforced, subject to the grant of his Majesty's fiat, by petition of right, or might have been enforced by a proceeding provided by any statutory provision repealed by this Act, then, subject to the provisions of this Act, the claim may be enforced as of right, and without the fiat of His Majesty, by proceedings taken against the Crown for the purpose in accordance with the provisions of this Act. “(Emphasis mine).

It is clear from the words 1 have underlined that the section did not confer any additional rights on a person other than those that he possessed under the common law. The section merely abolished the petition of right process. In order to confer more right on the subject, for example, the right to sue in tort, provisions were made in other sections of the Act. It is certain from the omission from s.133(1) of the Constitution of the underlined words in section 1 of the Crown Proceedings Act, [p.256] that the Sierra Leone Parliament intended to make the Government answerable to the subject for all wrongs as if the Government was any other person. This may be in recognition of the fact that a Government in a republic with a written Constitution does not enjoy any more rights than those conferred by the Constitution thus curtailing the common law prerogatives of the sovereign. No wonder Mr. Kobba, Counsel for the defendants, did not go into the question as to what rights were recognised by s.133(1) but accepted the section as a fait accompli merely arguing that the section comes into operation only when a jurisdictional Act has been passed by Parliament. .

In bringing this action without using the petition of right process, Mr. Kobba argued that the plaintiff violated ss. 3,4 & 5 of the Petitions of Right Act. These are the sections that incorporated the petition of right process into the Sierra Leone legal system and dealt with the preliminary process of obtaining the fiat and filing of a statement of claim. It is a fact that the plaintiff has not gone through this process, its contention being that that process has been abolished by s.133(1) of the Constitution. Mr. Serry Kamal, Counsel for the plaintiff, submitted that s.133(1) came into full force on 1st day of October 1991 when the whole Constitution came into force. Unless I find a reservation in the Constitution that this particular subsection should be postponed to another date for its life, I see no reason why I should disagree with Mr. Kamal on this point. The language of s.133(1) is plain and I have read it literally. S. 133(2) too is clear which again I have read literally. The purpose of the legislature was to abolish the petition of right process. Having found this and taking both sections together, I am unable to see any inconsistency or ambiguity between them in order to sit here and help Counsel for the defendants pull the language of the Constitution into pieces and make nonsense of it, if I may borrow that expression once more from Denning LJ (as he then was) (See Magor Rural District Council v. Newport Corporation [1950] 2 All ER 1226 at p. 1236). It seems to me that Mr. Kobba's argument that the coming into force of s.13 3(1) is postponed until Parliament has performed the duty imposed upon it by s.133(2) might have had some weight if there were words in s.133(1) to suggest that both subsection were linked contemporaneously and that the one was dependent on the other, for example, words like "subject to the provisions of subsection (2) prefacing s.133(1). But I do not find such words in order to persuade me to lean on the side of the defendants.

Mr. Kamal further submitted that ss. 3, 4 & 5 of the Petition of Right Act are inconsistent with s.l33(l) of the Constitution which I hold is now in force, basing his argument on s.171 (15) of the Constitution which provides:

“The Constitution shall be the supreme law of Sierra Leone and any other law found to be inconsistent with any provisions of this [p.257] Constitution shall, to the extent of the inconsistency, be void and of no effect.”(my emphasis).

On the basis of my finding that s.133(1) is now in force I hold that ss. 3, 4 & 5 of the Petitions of Right Act are inconsistent with it and are therefore now void.

The next issue is to determine the fate of the subsequent provisions of the Petitions of Right Act. Have these provisions also been repealed by S s.133(1) of the Constitution? I apprehend that ss. 6, 7, & 8, the remaining sections of cap. 23 have not been expressly repealed by s. 133(1). If that is so, have they been repealed by implication? On implied repeals of statutes, Craies on Statutes, 7th Edition, Fifth Impression, 1985 at p.366 had this to say:

“Where two Act are inconsistent or repugnant, the latter will be read as having impliedly repealed the earlier. The court leans against implying repeals unless two Acts are so plainly repugnant to each other that effect cannot be given to both at the same time, a repeal will not be implied. Special Acts are not repealed by general Acts unless there is a necessary inconsistency in the two Acts standing together. Before coming to the conclusion that there is a repeal by implication the court must be satisfied that the two enactments are so inconsistent or repugnant that they cannot stand together before they can, from the language of the latter, imply the repeal of an express prior enactment -i.e. the repeal must, if not express, flow from necessary implication."

I accept this statement as the correct principle of law and I adopt it. In my judgment, the Constitution has not expressly repealed the Petitions of Right Act. Sections 3, 4, & 5 have been repealed by implication because they were found to be inconsistent with s.133(1). Can the same thing be said of ss.6, 7, & 8? They read"

6. All documents, which, in a suit of the same nature between private parties, would be required to be served upon the defendants, shall be delivered at the office of the Attorney General, or other officer designated as aforesaid.

7. Whenever in any suit)a decree shall be made against the Government, no execution shall issue thereon, but a copy of such decree under the seal of the Court shall be transmitted by the Court to the Governor, who, if the decree shall be for the payment of money, shall by warrant under his hand direct the amount awarded by such decree to be paid, and in the case of any other decree under the seal of the Court shall be transmitted by the same to be carried into effect; or in case [p.258] he shall think fit, he may direct that any competent appeal shall be entered and prosecuted against any decree.

8. So far as the same may be applicable, and except in so far as may be inconsistent with this Ordinance, all the powers, authorities and provisions contained in the Courts Ordinance, or in any enactment extending or amending the same, and the practice and course of procedure of the Supreme Court, shall extend and apply to all suits and proceedings by or against the Government, and in all such suits costs may be awarded in the same manner as in suits between private parties.

Are these sections inconsistent with s. 133(1) and/or s.133(2)? I do not think so. I hold that they have not been repealed either expressly or by implication. In the absence of an Act of Parliament pursuant to s.133(2), in my judgment, the existing law must be resorted to. As can be seen from the Petitions of Right Act, s.6 merely nominates the person on whom documents should be served; s.7 establishes the process of levy of execution and s.8 provides the procedure to follow after the subject had obtained the fiat when he should avail himself of the normal procedure in civil litigation. The Courts Act cap 7 of the Laws of Sierra Leone 1960 referred to in s.8 has now been replaced by the Courts Act 1965, Act no.31 of 1965 which makes provision for trial in the courts of judicature. The framers of the Constitution must have had at the back of their minds that there cannot be a vacuum in the law when they made transitional provisions in the Constitution. The Constitution states:

S. 177(1). The existing law shall, notwithstanding the repeal of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act 1978, have effect after the entry into' force of this Constitution as if they had been made in pursuance of this Constitution and shall be read and construed with such modification, adaptation, qualification and exceptions as may be necessary to bring them in conformity with this Constitution.

S. 177(2).”Where any matter that falls to be prescribed or otherwise provided for under this Constitution or by any other authority or person is prescribed or provided for by or under an existing law (including any amendment to any such law made under this section) or is otherwise prescribed or provided for immediately before the commencement of this Constitution by or under the existing commencement of this Constitution have effect with such codification, alteration, qualification and exceptions [p.259] as may be necessary to bring it into conformity with this Constitution or as the case may be, by the other authority or person.”

The Constitution by its s._176 defines “existing law” as “any Act, rule, regulation, order or other such instrument made in pursuance of, or continuing in operation under, the existing Constitution and having effect as part of the laws of Sierra Leone or of any part thereof immediately before the commencement of this Constitution.”

Conclusion

In a democratic society the Constitution of a state is the grundnorm of its legal system and all other laws derive their validity and efficacy from it. The Constitution is usually a small instrument which does not embrace the details of all the laws governing the state. At most it deals with specific matters like the operation of the three arms of “government” in the wider context - the legislature, the executive and the judiciary, and finance, leaving details of laws in other respects to specific Acts of Parliament and subsidiary legislation. A new Constitution in many instances only engenders changes in the existing Constitution to accommodate the political dictates of the day but leaves the bulk of the existing law untouched. It does not intend to' create a vacuum in the law and so the making of transitional provisions maintaining the status quo ante in areas not specifically altered. The framers of the 1991 Constitution must have been aware of this principle when they enacted Chapter XIV of the Constitution which contains ss. 176 and 177. Indeed, Parliament has not as yet passed legislation to provide for a new jurisdiction governing actions by persons against government but that does not mean that private citizens are to be deprived of remedy against government with the abolition of the fiat and the petition of right procedure. I have earlier in this judgment referred to the dictum of Lord Radcliffe in Attorney General for Canada v. Hallett & Carey Ltd [1952] AC 427 at p. 450 that “where the import of some instrument is inconclusive the court may properly lean in favour of an interpretation that leaves private right undisturbed". I adopt and apply it to this case. In my judgment, the Constitution did not repeal the Petitions of Right Act in its entirety it repealed the substantive law provision in s.3 and only the fiat and its concommitant process in ss. 4 & 5. This was what was accomplished by s. 133(1). The procedure under ss. 6, 7, & 8 remain untouched and it is the procedure to follow in the presence of parliamentary inactivity. These sections prescribe the procedure under the existing law and in my judgment they are applicable to this case which is the fons et origo of this reference.

[p.260]

I will now answer the questions which Nylander J. posed for directions from this Court.

1. To question 1 the answer in the negative.

2. The answer to question 2 is in the affirmative.

3. The party has all the rights available to him as if he were suing another private person

I order that these answers be sent to the trial Court for the appropriate step to be taken.

WRIGHT, J A.

This is a constitutional reference by way of cases stated to the Supreme Court made by Nylander J. sitting in the High Court in which he referred the following questions.

(1) Is sec. 133(1) of the 1991 Constitution in operative until sec.133(2) is effected by Parliament?

(2) If the answer is in the negative can the High Court Rules apply to put into operation sec.133 (1) in the absence of Parliament effecting sec.133 (2)

(3) What is the state of the parties right as at present in relation to sec.133?

I have had the advantage of reading some of the judgments delivered by my learned brothers so I shall not go into the background of the case or the arguments raised by counsel on both sides.

The Interpretation Act No.8 of 1971 defines government as "the Government of Sierra Leone (which shall be deemed to be a person) and includes where appropriate any authority by which executive power of the state is duly exercised in a particular case". I am of the opinion that [p.262] both defendants answer to that description see sec.53(1) and sec.53(5) of the constitution, although this is not before the court.

The gravamen of this matter is the interpretation of section 133(1) and section 133(2) of the constitution of Sierra. Leone Act No.6 of 1991.

I hold the view that sections 3, 4 and 5 of the Petition of Right Act are void and inconsistent with. sec.133 (1) of the constitution which is now in force considering sec. 171 (15) of the constitution which provides "The Constitution shall be the Supreme Law of Sierra Leone and any other law found to be inconsistent with any provisions of this constitution shall, to the extent of the inconsistency be void and of no effect.

I also hold that sections 6, 7 and 8 of the Petition of Right Act has not been repealed by implication by section 133(1) and so is not Inconsistent with the constitution, and is still applicable.

Section 177(1) of the Constitution states: The existing law shall notwithstanding the repealed of the constitution of Sierra Leone Act 1978, have effect after the entering of this constitution as if they have, been made in pursuance of this constitution and shall be read and construed with such modifications, adaptations, qualifications and exceptions as may be necessary to bring them in conformity with the constitution.

Section 177(2) where any matter that fails to be prescribed or otherwise provided for under this constitution by parliament or by any other authority or is prescribed or provided for by or under an existing law (including any amendment to any such law made under this Section) or otherwise prescribed or provided for immediately before the commencement of this Constitution by or under the existing Constitution, that prescription or provision shall as from the commencement of this constitution have effect with such modifications, alterations, qualifications and exceptions as may be necessary to bring it into conformity with this constitution as if it had been made under this constitution by Parliament or as the case may be, by the other authority or person"

The constitution by its section 176 defines "existing law" as:

"any Act, Rule, Regulation, order or other such instrument made in pursuance or continuing in operation under, the existing constitution and having [p.263] effect as part of the law of' Sierra Leone or any part thereof "immediately before the commencement of this constitution".

As I said earlier the procedure under sections 6, 7 and 8 of the petition of Right have not been repealed and so prescribe the procedure under the existing law which is applicable in this case

I have perused several authorities including Oliver Ashworth (Holdings) Ltd. vs. Ballard (Kent) Ltd. 1999 2 A.E.R. 79, Attorney General for Canada vs. Halcet & Carey Ltd. 1952 AC.427, Canada. Sugar Refining Co. VR 1898 AC. 735 in deciding whether section 133(1) and section 133(2) of the constitution should be ready singularly or conjunctively and to decide whether section 133(1) is incorporative until Section 133(2) is effected by Parliament.

In the Sussex Peerage claim (1844) II CL & F85, 143 The judges said:

"If any doubt arises from the terms employed by the legislature, it has always been held a safe means of collecting the intention to call in aid and the ground and cause of making the statute absolute, and to have recourse to the preamble, which according to Chief Justice Dyer in Stoweb vs. Lord Zouch 1562 Floud 353 is a key to open the minds of the makers of the Act and the mischiefs which they intended to redress." Quoted and approved by Lord

Halsbury L.C in Income Tax Commissioner vs. Pen 1891 A.C.531. See Craies on Statute Law 7th Edition page 203.

In Magor and St. Melons Rural District Council vs. New Port Corporation 1950 2 A.E.R. 1226 Lord. Denning L.J. said

"I confess that I find it difficult to deal with these questions of interpretation in the abstract. I like to see their practical application."

In my view it was obvious that the intention of the constitution was that the claims could be brought against the government as considered necessary in accordance with sec.133 (1) of the constitution which reads:

“Where a person has a claim against the government, that claim may be enforced as of right by proceedings taken against the government for that purpose, without the grant of a fiat or the use of the process known as petition of Right.

The fact that the constitution further goes to say in sec. 133(2) “Parliament shall by an Act of Parliament make provisions for the exercise of jurisdiction under this section” does not preclude actions in claim against the government being taken nor is there any express intention that the taking of such action is dependent on parliament making such provision. It is my view that the Section stating that parliament should make such provision is merely to give assurance of a systematized approach as to the practice and procedural steps for taking such action.

In answer to the question which Nylander J. posed for directions to this court

1. To question 1 the answer is in the negative.

2. The answer to question 2 is in the affirmative.

3. The party has all rights available to him as when he is suing another private person.

SGD.

V.A.D. WRIGHT, JA.

TOLLA THOMPSON, JA

I have had the opportunity and the privilege of reading the judgment of my lord the Chief Justice and my learned brothers and sister. I agree with them. I only wish to add my own humble view.

I do not intend to give a narration of the background to this matter as it has already been set out with-lucidity in the judgement of my lord the Chief Justice and my brother Joko Smart JSC. I adopt their accounts. I shall therefore keep this judgement as short as possible.

This matter came to this Court by way of a constitutional reference pursuant to Sec. 124 of the 1999 Constitution Act No. 6 of 1999 and Rule 99 of the Supreme Court Rules 1982 respectively, in which Nylander J posed the following questions for the determination of this Court:

1. Is Section 133(1) of The Constitution inoperative until Section 133(2) is effected by Parliament?

2. If the answer is in the negative can the High Court Rules apply to put into operation Sec. 133(1) in the absence of Parliament effecting Sec. 133(2)?

[p.266]

3. What is the state of the party's right as at present in relation to Sec. 133(1)?

The arguments by Mr. Kobbs learned counsel for the defendant and Mr. Serry Kamal learned counsel for the plaintiff contained novel and interesting points of law, which deserves close consideration.

After listening to their respective submissions and perusing the various authorities cited and those own research unearth. I shall endeavour as best as possible to state the contentions in a summary form in order to isolate and accentuate the issues before me for a clearer elucidation questions to be determined.

The questions posed in this reference matter are most important as they relate to one of the entrenched clauses of the 1991 Constitution Act. No. 6 of 1991 (which I shall henceforth refer to as The Constitution) and obviously of great public importance. Before answering the questions vis-a-vis Sec. 133, I shall endeavour to ascertain the intention of The Constitution. In this respect I think it is necessary to set out in extenso Sec. 133 of the Constitution.

Sec. 133 states:

1) Where a person has a claim against the Government that claim may be enforced as of right by proceedings taken against the Government for that purpose without the grant of a fiat or the use of the process known as a Petition of Right

2) Parliament shall by an Act of Parliament make provision for the exercise of the jurisdiction under this section

I pause here in this judgment to make two observations the first observation is that Sec. 133(1} of The Constitution is part of Sec. 1 of part 1 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947 which repealed the Petition of Rights Act in England. Part 1 of the Act deals the substantive Law. The next observation is that there is no proviso or clause qualifying the provisions under Sec. 133(1). In my view, in the absence of such a proviso, I will be right to come to the conclusion that Sec. 133(1) came into effect at the date when the Constitution as a whole came into force i.e., 1st October 1991.

Having thus recorded these two observations I shall now proceed with the judgment.

In my judgement the words in Sec. 133(1) are so plain, clear and unambiguous that they hardly need any interpretation to ascertain the intention of The Constitution. If peradventure I am said to be wrong in the view I have expressed, I intend to be guided by authoritative decisions on the canons of interpretation.

In the Sussex Peerage Claim [l844] 11 Cl & F85. Tindale CJ said:

“If the words of a statute are in themselves precise and unambiguous then no more can be necessary than to expound those words in the natural and ordinary sense The words themselves in such a case best declare the intention of the law giver”

[p.267]

Lord Simonds in Magor and St Mellons Rural District Council [1952] Ac 189 at page 191 said:

"We sit here to find the intention of Parliament and of Ministers and carry it out and we do this better by filling in the gaps and making sense than by opening, it to destructive analysis"

Coming home Livesey Luke C.J. in Chanrai & Co. Ltd. v Palmer [1970-71] ALR (SL) 391 at 404 had this to say:

"In my judgement if the words used in a statute are plain and unambiguous the court is bound to construe them in their ordinary sense having regard to the contest"

I am persuaded by dicta of these eminent jurists on this point and I shall adopt them, in interpretation of Sec. 133(1). It seems obvious to me using the ordinary sense approach that the intention of The Constitution is to give a person the unqualified right to sue the government or a government department as he would another private person.

The question I now wish to consider is how the right to sue created under Sec. 133(1) can be perused in the light of Sec. 133(2)? Mr. Kobba in his argument was emphatic that the right to, sue created under Sec. 133(1) cannot be invoked until parliament enacts the jurisdictional provision pursuant to Sec. 133(2). He submitted that Sec. 133(1) and 133(2) must be used conjointly, failing which litigant should resort to Sec. 3, 4 and 5 of chapter 23 of the laws of Sierra Leone.

Mr. Serry Kamal on the other hand in a precise and succinct manner submitted that Sec. 3, 4, and 5 of chapter 23 have been repealed by Sec 133(1) by implication. Section, 4 and 5 of chapter 23 are inconsistent with Sec. 133(1) in view of Sec. 171 (15) of The Constitution. He also said that by Sec. 176 of The Constitution the other sections of Chapter 23 are still in existence and for the commencement of an action Sec. 8 of chapter 23 would apply.

I propose to deal first, with the issue of implied repeal of Sections 3, 4 and 5 of chapter 23 by Sec. 133(1).

It was said in Canada Southern Railway Co. v International Bridge Co. [1883] AC 723 "where two acts of a legislature are to be read together the court must construe every part of each of them as if it has been contained in one act, unless there is some manifest discrepancy making it necessary to hold that the later act has to some extent modified something found in the earlier act".

The test was laid down in the case of Westham Church Wardens v. Fourth City Montreal Building Society [1892] 2 QBD 654.

"Are the later act so Inconsistent with, or repugnant to the provision of an earlier act that the two cannot stand together?"

Since Sec. 133(1) of The Constitution has created an unqualified right to sue the government and the provisions of Secs.3, 4, and 5 were the method employed to pursue a claim against the government it is crystal clear to me that "these two cannot stand together"

Afortiori, the coup de grace on this point is to be found in Sec. 171 (15) of The Constitution, which states

“this constitution shall be the Supreme-law of Sierra Leone and any other law found to be inconsistent with any provision of this constitution shall to the extent of the inconsistency be void and of no effect”.

[p.268]

I agree with Mr. Serry Kamal that Sec. 133(1) of The Constitution has repealed the provisions contain in Sec. 3, 4 and 5 of chapter 23 they are also inconsistent with Sec. 133(1) of The Constitution. I therefore hold that the provisions of Secs. 3, 4 and 5 are void and of no effect.

I now come to Mr. Kobba's submission that the right to sue pursuant to Sec. 133(1) cannot be invoked until Parliament enact the jurisdictional provision under Sec. 133(2). As he puts it, the two must be used conjointly and not independently.

With respect to Mr. Kobba, I cannot accord Sec. 133(1) such a restricted effect. What I think ought to be done is to look elsewhere within the context of The Constitution.

It follows therefore that Secs.6, 7 and 8 of chapter 23, which in my view have not been repeated fall within the ambits of Sections 176 and 177 of The Constitution and they can conveniently be applied to give effect to Sec. 133(1) of The Constitution.

In the result I shall answer questions posed by Nylander J. in this manner:

To question 1 The answer is negative

To question 2 The answer is in the affirmative

To question 3 The parties have their rights as if suing any other private person.

RULING delivered this 16th day of March, 1993 by KUTUBU, C.J., PRESIDING

RULING

This is an application by R. Awoonor-Renner Esq., counsel for Appellant/Applicant for stay of execution of the order contained in the Ruling of the Honourable Thompson-Davies J.S.C. delivered in the Court of Appeal of Sierra Leone on the 4th day of March, 1993 and for all subsequent proceedings to be stayed until the determination of Appeal in the Court of Appeal. The application is supported by the Affidavit of Amadu Kanu. Applicant herein, sworn at Freetown on 10th day of March, 1993 and filed.

At the threshold of this application preliminary objection was taken by Dr. H.M. Joko-Smart counsel for Respondent on the ground of non-compliance by counsel for Applicant of the mandatory provisions of Rule 60 of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1982 (P.N. No. 1 of 1982).

Rule 60 (1) states: —

[p.156]

"A civil appeal shall not operate as stay of execution or of proceedings under the judgment or decision appealed against except in so far as the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeal may otherwise order".

Rule 60 (2) states: —

"Subject to the provisions of these Rules and to any other enactment governing the same, an application for stay of execution or proceedings shall first be made to the Court of Appeal and if that Court refuses to grant the application the Applicant shall be entitled to renew the application before the Supreme Court for determination."

Has counsel for Applicant complied with the mandatory provisions of the afore-mentioned Rules in the instant application? If the answer is in the negative can the Supreme Court entertain this Application without causing violence to the Rules? Has the Court any discretion in the matter if it takes the view that the mandatory provisions have not been complied with?

Counsel for Applicant with candour conceded the point that resort was not had to the Supreme Court Rules in the instant application, but nevertheless, based his application on the grounds of concurrent jurisdiction of both the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeal in this regard. Afortiori, that as time was of the essence he proceeded under the provisions of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991 Act No. 6 of 1991 namely, Section 123 which overrides the Rules. What does the Section say?

Section 123 (1) (a) states:—

"An appeal shall lie from a judgement, decree or order of the Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court (a) as of right in any civil cause or matter.

Section 123 (2) —

"Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (1) the Supreme Court shall have power to entertain any application for special leave to appeal in any cause or matter civil or criminal, to the Supreme Court, and to grant such leave accordingly".

[p.157]

The purported application before this Court is for stay of execution of the order contained in the Ruling of the Honourable Thompson-Davis delivered in the Court of Appeal of Sierra Leone on the 4th day of March, 1993. It is not an appeal or an application for special leave to appeal. I cannot therefore see how this provision of the Constitution can avail counsel in this application.

Rule 60 is of obvious advantage to an applicant in stay of execution of proceedings. The rationale behind it is to give an applicant two chances, one in the Court below, the Appeal Court in this instance and another in the Supreme Court, should the Court of Appeal refuse to grant the Application sought. Applicant will therefore have the advantage of a second bite rather than jumping his gun to his detriment or risk.

The order of the Court of Appeal was give on 4th March to take effect on the 15th March, 1993 eleven days from the date of the said order. Counsel for Applicant depressed that since time was of the essence compliance with Rule 60 of the Supreme Court Rules would not have been to his advantage, as execution would have been effected, thereby making the proceedings nugatory. In our view eleven days was a reasonable time within which an application for stay would have been made to the Court of Appeal in the first instance. On refusal a second application would be made to the Supreme Court.

In an application for stay of execution this Court has always taken the view that there should be no short cut to the procedure; the mandatory provisions should be complied with. Nothing has changed the view of this Honourable Court in that regard.

Now what are the consequences of failure to comply with the mandatory provisions of Rule 60 of the Supreme Court Rules? In the instance case has the proper foundation been laid, a condition precedent for us to entertain this purpoted application? The answer is in the negative. In the circumstances the application is struck out.

A notice of Appeal herein dated 10th November 1998 was lodged (filed) on the 11th November 1998. Thereafter no further steps were taken.

Pursuant to Rule 31(i) of the rules of the Supreme Court the appeal was entered on a list of Supreme Court for motion on the 18th December 1998 due notice whereof was given to the parties.

On the 18th December 1998, the matter was adjourned to the 6th of January 1999 when the invasion of Free Town prevented the Courts from sitting on that date and for some time thereafter. The matter was subsequently listed for mention on Tuesday 21st September 1999.

When counsel for the Appellant, Berthan Macauley (Jnr) was asked to address the court on compliance or non compliance with Rules 35 of the Rules of the Supreme Court, he conceded that Rule 35(2) has not been complied with. Whereupon he requested and was granted and adjournment to with a view to remedy the said non-compliance

[p.281]

The case of Gatti & Shoosmith is authority for the unfettered discretion of the Court where dealing with mistake on the part of legal adviser but doe not otherwise provides solace for non-compliance with the Rules of Court - especially where there is no ambiguity.

Parties seeking to come before the Court would be well advised not to think that the discretion provided by Rule 103 will necessarily be exercised in every situation. Whether the matter shall be so treated must depend upon on the facts of each individual case

I am satisfied the interest of justice was served by our allowing the appellant to remedy the non-compliance.

In as much as it appears that on the facts of this case it is one where the discretion of the Court ought to be exercised, the appellant will accordingly be allowed to prosecute the appeal.

RULING

WARNE J.S.C.

Dr. JABBI COUSEL for the applicant attempted to seek leave to amend the Notice of motion filed on the 29th day of October 1999 by adding a fifth relief and filing a supplement affidavit in support thereof.

The learned Attorney-General Counsel for the Respondent objected to the Motion being heard. He submitted that, to file a supplemental Affidavit and to use it in support of the motion cannot be a relief. He further submitted that this is an admission that the papers before the court were not completed before being filed this he argued, cannot be done and he refers to Rules 88 and 89 of the Supreme Court P.N No 1 of 1982 (hereinafter referred to as Rules).

Dr. Jabbi the sought leave to withdraw the original application and leave the file a supplemental Affidavit exhibiting the drawn up order of the High Court dated 18th October, 1999

Before counsel could proceed with the application, the Learned Attorney-General raised a Preliminary Objection to the Motion being entertained by the court. He submitted that from some of the reliefs sought, the Motion is for the original jurisdiction of the Court to be invoked. He argued that in order to do that, the relevant provision is Rule 89(1) of the Rules is applicable. This rule specified the use of form8, which council ahs failed to apply. Reliefs for declaration should be by originating [p.286] Notice of Motion, he submitted. The Attorney –General further submitted that there are three areas where the original jurisdiction of the court can be invoked that is to say

(1) Reference under Section 28 of the constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.6 of 1991 (hereinafter referred to as the Constitution) Section 124 of the Constitution and also section 127 of the constitution. He went on to submit that the Rules applicable in these instances are Rules 89 and 99 of the Rules, Rule 98 of the Rules is in applicable for reliefs for the Declaration he added. The Attorney-General has urged the court that a number of the reliefs sought are not properly before the court since the relevant rules of procedure have not yet been complied with. The Attorney-General urged the court to dismiss the motion because the court lacks jurisdiction.

In answer to the objection, Dr. Jabbi in his usual forthright manner, submitted that the objection is totally misconceived. He argued that the application is concerned with the supervisory jurisdiction of the court. Counsel categorically submitted I quote:" The declaration is in the same vein. I submitted that declaratory orders as to say any relief or remedy under the constitution whether or not they include relief under section 28, and 127 are perfectly appropriate under 125 of the constitution. Counsel cited the case of SC.MISC.APP No.6/93 Justice F.C Gbow Vs Julius Spencer and others in support of his submission. Let me say here and now that, that case does not bind the court. Vide section 122(2)of the constitution. Counsel further argued that the Reference jurisdiction is distinct from original or supervisory jurisdiction. This submission of counsel leaves me at a loss to relate it to the foregoing submission that the declaration reliefs sought are perfectly appropriate under the instant motion. Be that as it may, I will consider all the reliefs sought in due course in order to determine if they can all be entertained in the same motion. Counsel finally submitted that Rules 5 and 98 of the Rules are both residual and orders of Declaration are ancillary orders and urged court to ignore the objection.

The attorney General replied that declaratory orders are not ancillary reliefs but substantive reliefs and these cannot be made ancillary to a prerogative order.

In order to juxtapose these forceful submissions of both counsel, it is imperative that I reiterate the relies, I quote, "In the matter of an [p.287] application by Dr. Harry Will under section 125 of the constitution of Sierra Leone Act No 6 of 1991 for leave to apply for orders of Certiorari and prohibition and for related declaration. In the matter or two rulings given on 18th October 1999 by Hon. (a) CERTIORARI to remove into this Honourable Supreme court for the purpose of being quashed TWO Rulings given by the Hon. Mr. Justice M. O. Taju-Deen (High. Court Judge) on 18th October, 1999 in proceedings on the aforesaid Criminal Information of 30th August 1999 as amended.

(b) Additionally PROBATION restraining the High Court from further hearing and determining proceeding founded on the aforesaid Criminal Information, in so far as the applicant herein and 1st Accused therein is thereby affected, until determination by the Supreme Court of the substantive application for which leave shall have been granted herein, or until the Supreme Court shall otherwise order.

2. Additionally, A DECLARATION, to the effect that the 1st private to subsection (1) of section 136 of the Criminal Procedure Act, No.32 of 1965 as amended by Act No. 1 of 1970

(a) is inconsistent and. irreconcilable with the mandatory and Overriding provisions in Section 108 and the substantive part of Subsection (1) of Section 136 respectively of the Criminal Procedure Act 1965, amended as aforesaid and/or

(b) was and is inconsistent and irreconcilable with the mandatory and overriding provisions in, and, and was accordingly implicitly repealed by section 1 of the courts (Amendments) Act, No.2 of 1981 and/or

(c) was enacted in excess of Ultra vires of the powers thereto conferred on Parliament by law at the time of its enactment

And accordingly was and is invalid, null and void, thereby depriving and denying the high court of all the jurisdiction to try the applicant herein as the 1st Accused or at all on the aforesaid Criminal Information dated 30th August 199, as amended, in so far as the indictment depending on the said Criminal Information was preferred pursuant to the said 1st proviso to Subsection(1) of section 136 of the criminal procedure Act 1965 amended as aforesaid

3. (1) Additionally A DECLARATION to the effect that the provisions in Subsection (3) of Section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Act, No 32 of 1965, takes precedence over and thereby override the provisions in Subsection (2) of section 144 of the said Criminal Procedure Act as amended by section 3 of the act No.11 of 1981

(2) Additionally A DECLARATION to the effect that the learned Presiding Judge in the trial of the Applicant herein, inter alia on the Criminal Information or Indictment dated 30th August,1999 as amended , erred in law in holding in proceedings thereon on 18th October 1999:—

(a) that an application had been duly made to the court for trail by judge alone in terms of Subsection (20 of section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1965, amended as aforesaid by the learned Attorney-General of justice having merely Filed such application without [p.289] Subsequently moving the court to that effect in viva vose proceeding before the Court.

(b) that where in pursuant of subsection (3) of section 146 of the aforesaid Criminal Procedure Act 1965, one of three accused persons charged jointly duly elects to be tried by judge alone and another both of the other accused persons elect or elect to be tried with judge and jury, the judge nevertheless has jurisdiction and /or discretion to rule and/or order that the said three accused persons shall be jointly tried by judge alone

(3) Additionally, A DECLARATION to the effect that, in the circumstances adumbrated in subsection 3(1) and 3(2) hereof and in light of the 1st Accused's (i.e. Applicant's) election to be tried by judge and jury in pursuant of subsection (3) of section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1965 aforesaid, the decisions by the learned judge alone together with the other accused persons or at all, were inconsistent with and in contravention of Sierra Leone, Act No.6 1993, and that the said decisions are accordingly infringement or likely infringement of the 1sts Accused's (i.e. applicant's fundamental human right to "fair hearing" under the said subsection 23 (1) of the constitution and so are accordingly invalid, void and of no effect in terms of subsection (15) of section 171 of the said 1991 constitution.

(4) Additionally an order of PROHIBITION restarting the High Court from further hearing proceedings found on the aforesaid Criminal. Information or Indictment dated 30th August 1999, as amended, on the basis of a trial by judge alone".

The reliefs sought can be put 'under three headings—

(1) Prerogative Orders under Section 125 of the Constitution

(2) Breach of the fundamental human right and freedoms of the individual i.e the applicant.

(3) Parliament acting in excess of jurisdiction

[p.290]

I am satisfied that the prerogative orders could be sought pursuant to the provisions in section 125 of the constitution. Counsel for the applicant is no doubt prosecuting this application pursuant to section 125 of the constitution which provides the following:

"125 The Supreme Court shall have supervisory jurisdiction over all other courts in Sierra Leone and over any other adjudication authority: and in exercise of its supervisory jurisdiction shall have no power to issue such directions orders or writs including writs of habeas corpus, orders of certiorari, mandamus and prohibitions as it may consider appropriate for the purpose of enforcing or securing the enforcement of its supervisory powers". There is no contention between both sides that the court has such supervisory powers as contained in section 125, supra and the court can consider exparte motion for leave to issue orders of certiorari and prohibitions simpliciter. Where additional reliefs are sought for the interpretation of provisions of the Constitution the provisions in section124 of the constitution applies. It provides that the Supreme Court shall save as otherwise provided in section 122 of the Constitution have original jurisdiction to the exclusive of all other courts:—

(a) in all matters relating to the enforcement or interpretation of any provision of this constitution and

(b) where any question arises whether an enactment was made in excess of the power conferred upon Parliament or any other authority or person by law under this Constitution.

(2) Where any question relating to any matter or question as is referred to in subsection (1) arises in any proceedings in any court, other than the Supreme Court, that the Court shall stay the proceedings and refer the question of law involved to the Supreme Court for the determination and the court in which it arose shall dispose of the case in accordance with the decision of the Supreme court".

The provisions in Section 124 are quite and unequivocal.

Section 124 was available to be utilized-by counsel for the applicant but he advised himself to entangle an application for leave to issue prerogative orders with one for interpretation of provisions in the constitution i.e. 23(1) and section 171(12) and whether Parliament acted in excess of the powers conferred upon it.

I opine, that the Constitution clearly empowers the court to determine [p.291] if Parliament acted in excess of the power conferred upon it by the constitution – Vide section 124 supra. Counsel for the applicant has not produced any cogent authority to support his submission that the instant notice of motion is tenable. The rules of the court governing some of the reliefs sought and how application can be made are also clear and unequivocal-vide Rule 89(1) which states "save as otherwise provided, in these Rules an action brought to involve the original jurisdiction of the court shall be commenced by Originating notice of Motion in Form 8 set out in the First Schedule to these Rules which shall be signed by the plaintiff or his counsel".

Form 8 provides in the body the following:—

“TAKE NOTICE that the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone will be moved at the expiration of 21 days from the service upon you of this notice or soon thereafter as counsel can be heard for the following reliefs pursuant to section 104 of the constitution of Sierra Leone, 1978 namely ……..”

Section 104 of that constitution is now replaced by section 124 of the constitution of 1991.

In my view what counsel for the applicant has done is not only irregular but he has attempted to achieve three types of fundamental reliefs by a process unknown to the law. The constitution and rules must be complied with.

Parliament in its wisdom, enacted sections 124 and 125 to meet the situations therein spelt out. The side notes to these two sections are clear indications of what Parliament enacted.

The side notes to section 124 is “Interpretation of the constitution “and that to section 125 is Supervisory Jurisdiction”.

The notice of motion before the court as its stands is one where the leave of the court is mandatory-vide section 125 on the other hand an application made pursuant to section 124 is as of right

Counsel for the applicant has invoked the provision Rule 98 of the rules. I agree with him, it is residual. Rule 98 provides “where [p.292] no provisions is expressly made in these Rules relating to the Original , and Supervisory Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court the practice and procedure for the time being of the High Court shall apply mutantis mutandis

In my view, this rule could not invoked because the court lacks jurisdiction to hear and determine the Notice of Notion because it is not properly before the court.

The court cannot and will not make a severance between the relief for leave to issue any order relating to and concerning the orders of certiorari and Prohibition and. those relating to and concerning the declaratory relief sought. What is the consequence of the culdesac which counsel for the applicant has created? In my View the Notice of Motion ought to be dismissed and is accordingly dismissed with costs.

RULING

WARNE J.S.C.

DR. JABBI COUNSEL for the applicant attempted to seek leave to amend the Notice of Motion filed on the 29th day of October, 1999 by adding a fifth relief and filing a Supplemental Affidavit in support thereof.

The Learned attorney general Counsel for the Respondent objected to the Motion being [p.367] heard. He submitted that to file a supplemental Affidavit and to use it in support of the Motion cannot be a relief. He further submitted that this is an admission that the papers before the court were not completed before being filed - this he argued, cannot be done and he refers to Rules 88 and 89 of the Rules of the Supreme Court P. No.1 of 1982 (hereinafter referred to as the Rules.)

Dr. Jabbi then sought leave to withdraw the Original application and leave to file a supplemental affidavit exhibiting the Drawn Up Order of the High Court dated 18th October 1999.

Before Counsel could proceed with application, the Learned Attorney-General raised a Preliminary Objection to the Motion being entertained the court. He submitted that from some of the relief sought; the Motion is for the Original Jurisdiction of the Court to be invoked. He argued that in order to do that, the relevant provision Rule 89(1) of the Rules is applicable. This rule specifies the use of forum 8, which counsel has failed to apply. Reliefs for declarations should be by Originating.

Notice of Motion, he submitted. The Attorney General further submitted that there are three areas where the original jurisdiction of the court can be invoked that is to say:—

(1) Referenced Under section 28(1) of the constitution of Sierra Leone Act No. 6 of 1991 (hereafter referred to as the Constitution) and also section 127 of the Constitution. He went on to submit that the Rules applicable in these instance are rules 89 and 99 of the rules, Rule 98 of the Rules is inapplicable for reliefs for the Declaration he added. The Attorney general has urged the Court that a number of the reliefs sought are not properly before the court since the relevant rules of procedure have not been complied with. The attorney General finally urged the court to dismiss the motion because the court lacks jurisdiction.

In answer to the objection, Dr. Jabbi in his usual forthright manner submitted that the [p.368] objection is totally misconceived. He urged that the application is concerned with the supervisory jurisdiction of the court. Counsel categorically submitted I quote: "The declarations are in the same vein. I submitted that declaratory orders as to any relief or remedy under the Constitution whether or not the include relief under sections 28, and 127 are perfectly appropriate Under 125 of the Constitution." Counsel cited the case of Sc.MISC.APP.No.61/93 — Justice F.C. Gbow Vs. Julius Spencer and Others in support of his submissions. Let me say here and now that, that case does not bind the court — vide section 122(2) of the constitution. Counsel further argued that the reference jurisdiction is distinct from original and supervisory Jurisdiction. This submission of counsel leaves me at a loss to relate it to the foregoing submission that the declaration reliefs sought are perfectly sought in due course in order to determine if they can all be entertained in the same motion. Counsel finally submitted that rules 5 and 98 of the Rules are both residual and orders of declaration are ancillary orders and urged court to ignore the objection.

The Attorney general replied that declaratory orders are not ancillary reliefs but substantive reliefs and these cannot be made ancillary to prerogative order.

In order to juxtapose these forceful submissions of both counsels, it is imperative that I reiterate the reliefs. I quote: "In the matter of an application by Dr. Harry Will Under Section 125 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.6 of 1991 for leave to apply for Orders of certiorari and prohibition and for related declarations, orders or directions. In the matter or two rulings given on 18th October 1999 by the Hon. Mr. Justice M.O. STATEMENT ACCOMPANYING EX PARTE MOTION FOR LEAVE TO APPLY FOR ORDERS OF CERTIORARI, PROHIBITION. ETC.

PURSUANT TO ORDER 59, RULE 3(2) OF THE (ENGLISH) SUPREME COURT RULES 1960

NAME AND DESCRIPTION OF APPLICANT

DR. Harry Will, of No. 8, Spur road, Wilberforce, Freetown, and 1st accused in the aforesaid criminal Information dated 30th august, 199.

RELIEF SOUGHT

1. The Applicant desires leave to apply for the following orders:

(a) CERTIORARI to remove into this Honourable Supreme Court for the purpose of being quashed TWO Rulings given by the Hon. Mr Justice M.O. Taju-Deen (High Court Judge) on 18th October 1999 in proceedings on the aforesaid Criminal Information of 30th August 1999 as amended.

(b) Additionally, PROHIBITION restraining the High Court from further hearing and determining proceedings founded on the aforesaid criminal Information, in so far as the Applicant herein and 1st Accused therein is thereby affected, until determination by the supreme court of the substantive application for which leave shall have been granted herein, or until the supreme Court shall other-wise order.

2. Additionally, A DECLARATION to the effect that the 1st Proviso to subsection (1) of section 136 of the Criminal Procedure Act, No. 32 of 1965, as amended by act No.1 of 1970.

(a) is inconsistent and irreconcilable with the mandatory and overriding provisions in section 108 and the substantive part of subsection (1) of section 136 respectively of the criminal Procedure act 1965, amended as aforesaid: and/or

(c) was enacted in exacted in excess or Ultra vires of the powers thereto conferred on Parliament by law at the time of its enactment.

And accordingly was and is invalid, null and void, thereby depriving and denying the High Court of all jurisdiction to try the Applicant herein as 1st accused or at all on the aforesaid Criminal Information dated 30th August 1999, as amended, in so far as the indictment depending on the said 1st proviso to Subsection (1) of Section 136 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1965 amended as aforesaid.

3. (1) Additionally, A DECLARATION to the effect that the provisions in Subsection (3) of Section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Act, No 32 of 1965, No. 32 of 1965, take precedence and priority over, and thereby override, the provisions in Subsection (2) of Section 144 of the said Criminal Procedure Act as amended by Section 3 of Act No.11 of 1981.

(2) Additionally A DECLARATION to the effect that the Learned presiding Judge in the Trial of the Applicant herein, inter alia, on the Criminal Information or Indictment dated 30th August, 1999, as amended, erred in law in holding in proceedings thereon on 18th October, 1999:—

(a) that an application had been duly made to the Court for trial by Judge alone in terms of Subsection (2) of Section 144 of the [p.371] criminal Procedure Act 1965, amended as aforesaid, by the Learned attorney General and Minister of Justice having merely filed such application without subsequently moving the Court to that effect in viva voce proceedings before the Court;

(b) that where, in pursuant of subsection (3) of section 146 of the aforesaid criminal Procedure Act 1965, one of three accused persons charged jointly duly elects to be tried by judge alone and another or both of the other accused persons elects or elect to be tried with judge and jury, the judge nevertheless has jurisdiction and/or discretion to rule and/or order that the said three accused persons shall be jointly tried by judge alone.

3. Additionally, A DECLARATION to the effect that, in the circumstances adumbrated in sub-paragraphs (3(10 and 3(2) hereof and in light of the 1st Accused's (i.e. Applicant's) election to the tried by judge and jury in pursuant of subsection (3) of section 146 of the criminal Procedure act 1965 aforesaid, the decisions by the Learned Presiding judge that the 1st Accused shall be tried by Judge alone together with the other accused persons or at all and in assuming jurisdiction to so try the said 1st Accused (Le Applicant herein) among others or at all, were inconsistent with and in contravention of the provisions in subsection (10 of section 23 of the constitution of Sierra Leone, Act. No.6 of 1991, and that the said decisions are accordingly infringements or likely infringements of the 1st Accused (i.e. Applicant's) fundamental human right to a "fair hearing' under the said subsection 23 (10 of the constitution and so are accordingly invalid, void and of no effect in terms of subsection (15) of section 171 of the said 1991 Constitution.

4. Additionally an order of PROHIBITION restraining the High Court from further hearing proceedings founded on the aforesaid criminal information or [p.372] Indictment dated 30th august 1999, as amended, on the basis of a trial by judge alone."

The reliefs sought can be put under three headings:—

(1) Prerogative Orders under Section 125 of the constitution

(2) Breach of the fundamental human right and freedoms of the individual i.e. the applicant.

(3) Parliament acting in excess of jurisdiction.

I am satisfied that the prerogative orders could be sought pursuant to the provisions in section 125 of the Constitution. Counsel for the applicant is no doubt prosecuting this application pursuant to section 125 of the Constitution, which provides the following:

"125 The supreme Court shall have supervisory jurisdiction over all other Courts in Sierra Leone and over any adjudicating authority; and in exercise of its supervisory jurisdiction shall have power to issue such directions orders or writs including writs of habeas corpus, orders of certisoeri, mandamus and prohibition as it may consider appropriate for the purpose of enforcing or securing the enforcement of its supervisory powers." There is no contention between both sides that the court has such supervisory power as contained in section 125,supra; and the court can consider an expert motion for leave to issue orders of certiorari and prohibition simpliciter. Where additional reliefs are sought the interpretation of provisions of the Constitution the provision in section 124 of the Constitution applies. It provides that "The Supreme Court shall, save as otherwise provided in section 122 of this Constitution, have original jurisdiction to the exclusive of all other courts:—

(a) in all matters relating to the enforcement or interpretation of any provision of this Constitution; and

(b) where any question arises whether an enactment was made in excess of the power conferred upon Parliament or any other authority or person by law under this Constitution.

(2) Where any question relating to any matter or question as is referred to in subsection (1) arises in any proceedings in any Court, other than the Supreme Court, that Court shall stay the proceedings and refer thee question of law involved to the Supreme court for determination; and the Court in which the question arose shall dispose of the case in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court."

The provisions in section 124 are quite and unequivocal.

Section 124 was available to be utilized by counsel for the applicant, but he advised himself to entangle an application for leave to issue prerogative orders with one for interpretation of provisions in the Constitution i.e. section 23(1) and section 171 (15) and whether Parliament acted in excess of the powers conferred upon it. I opine, that the Constitution clearly empowers the court to determine if Parliament acted in excess of the powers conferred upon it by the constitution clearly empowers the Court to determine if Parliament acted in excess of the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution — Vide section 124 supra. Counsel for the applicant has not produced any cogent authority to support his submissions that the instant notice of motion is tenable. The rules of court governing some of the reliefs sought and how application can be made are also clear and unequivocal-vide rule 89(10 which states: "save as otherwise provided, in these rules an action brought to involve the original jurisdiction of the Court shall be commenced by Origination Notice pf Notion in from 8 set out in the first Schedule to these Rules which shall be signed by the plaintiff or his counsel."

Form 8 provides in the body the following:—

"TAKR NOTICE that the supreme Court of Sierra Leone will be moved at the expiration of 21 days from the service upon you of this notice or so soon thereafter as Counsel can be heard for the following reliefs pursuant to the section 04 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, 1978 name……"

Section 104 of that Constitution is now replaced by section 124 of the Constitution of 1991.

In my view what counsel for the applicant had done is not only irregular but he has attempted to achieve three types of fundamental reliefs by a process unknown to the law —The Constitution and rules must be complied with.

Parliament, in its wisdom, enacted sections 124 and 125 to meet the situations therein spelt out. The side notes to these two sections are clear indications of what Parliament enacted. The side note section 124 is "Interpretation of the Constitution" and that to section 125 is "Supervisory Jurisdiction."

The notice of motion before the court as it stands is one where the leave of the Court is mandatory -vide section 125; on the other hand an application made pursuant to section 124 is as of right.

Counsel for the applicant has invoked the provision of Rule 98 of the rules. I agree with him, it is residual. Rule 98 provides "Where no provision expressly made in these Rules relating to the Original and supervisory Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court the practice and procedure for the time being of the High Court shall apply mutantis mutandis."

In my view, this rule could not be invoked because the Court lacks jurisdiction to hear and determine the Notice of Motion because it is not properly before the Court.

[p.375]

The Court cannot and will not make a severance between the reliefs for leave to issue and order relating to and concerning the orders of certiorari and Prohibition and those relating to and concerning the declaratory reliefs sought. What is the consequence of the cul-desac which counsel for the applicant has created? In my view the Notice of Motion ought to be dismissed and is accordingly dismissed with costs.

RULING

LUKE, C.J.

This is an application by way of motion for leave to apply for orders of certiorari, mandamus, prohibition and related declarations and directions in respect of the ruling given on 11th October 1999 by the learned Presiding Judge in proceedings on the aforesaid Criminal Information dated 30th August 1999.

Stay of Proceedings founded on the Criminal Information aforesaid and at present pending in the High Court aforesaid, until determination by the Supreme Court of the substantive application for which leave is being sought herein, it and when such leave is granted, or until further order in respect thereof by this honourable Court.

A direction, if necessary, as to the appropriate format for citation of parties in the title or heading of an application for leave to apply for orders of certiorari etc. other than the format as to citation of parties to this application as set out in the above title or heading hereof in circumstances where the leave being sought is in respect of a decision, judgment or order made or given by a Judge presiding in a matter pending in the High Court of Sierra Leone, in view of the provisions in section 125 and subsection 120 (9) respectively of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991; and that the format as directed herein by this honourable Court, if different from the citation of parties hereto in the above title or heading, be used in the substantive application for orders of certiorari. etc. for which leave shall have been granted to the Applicant herein, if and shen so granted.

Notice was given that at the hearing of the motion, Applicant will seek, by Counsels Dr. Bu-Buakei-Jabbi, to use and rely on the statement accompanying the application and the Affidavit of Dr. Bu-Buakei-Jabbi sworn on the 25th day of November 1999 and filed herewith.

However, when this matter first came before the Court on the 20th January 2000 Dr. Jabbi for the Applicant could not proceed and requested an adjournment since he wished to ask leave to amend both the Notice of Motion paper as well as the Statement accompanying the Motion paper. All adjournment to the 9th February 2000 was consequently granted.

On the adjourned date, the leave to amend both the Motion paper and the Statement accompanying it was requested. Taking cognizance of the papers filed the leave to amend sought herein and other related proceedings, the Court ordered Service of the Motion and other papers herein on the Respondent the Attorney General and Minister of Justice against the adjourned date —- Tuesday 15th February 2000.

On the said date the applicants request for leave to amend both the Notice of Motion; paper and the Statement accompanying it was granted.

The Applicant's Counsel's request for an adjournment to file the necessary amended papers was granted and the matter further adjourned to Thursday 17th February 2000.

Counsel for the Applicant on the 17th February urged the Court to grant the leave to apply for the prerogative orders of certiorari, mandamus and prohibition and related directions in respect of the ruling given on the 11th October 1999 by the learned Presiding Judge in proceedings on the aforesaid Criminal Information dated 30th August 1999; to grant a Stay of Proceedings in the Court below founded thereof and directions. Counsel sought to rely on Sec. 125 of the 1991 Constitution. Rules 5 (1) & (2) and Rule 98 of the Rules of the Supreme Court 1982 Ord. 52 r. 3 of the High Court Rules and English Rules 1960 Ord. 5 and especially 3, 4 to 10.

In seeking to persuade the Court to grant the reliefs sought, Counsel relied on the Affidavit sworn on the 25th November 1999 by Dr. Bu-Buakie Jabbi especially paras 4 to 9 thereof and the accompanying statement as amended. Counsel went on to cite the White Book 1960 Ord. 59 r. 3at p. 1725, stating that at this the leave stage of the application for the prerogative orders his duty to make a plausible case had been discharged. Consequently, he prayed the Court to grant the leave and the Stay of Proceedings.

The Attorney-General on 'behalf of the Respondent submitted that the Applicant's application for leave for the prerogative orders to issue was misconceived. He further submitted that the High Court presided over by Justice M.O. Taju-Deen has jurisdiction under See. 132 (1) of the 1991 Constitution, and that jurisdiction had not been exceeded to justify an application such as being currently made: that prerogative orders in Sec. 125 of , the Constitution should not be used to frustrate· the work of the Courts below especially the High Court: And that the mere couching of the matter as a Constitutional matter does not automatically entitle an accused person to have the matter referred to the Supreme Court. The Attorney-General further submitted that it is not every infringement of the law or the Constitution that amounts to a violation of fundamental rights of Sections 16-27 of the Constitution to justify a reference to the Supreme Court under Section 28 (3).

The Attorney-General argued that ''if the Judge erred at all it is an appealable matter" thus laying no foundation for granting leave for the prerogative order of certiorari which applies only for an error of law apparent on the face of the record quoting

The Attorney-General then followed Applicant's Counsel into the labyrinth of whether or not a fair hearing had been obtained in High Court No. 3 presided over by Hon. Mr. Justice M.O. Taju-Deen; whether or not "the 1st proviso to sub-section (1) of Sec. 136 of the Criminal Procedure Act No. 32 of 1965 as amended by Act No. 1 of 1970 -

(a) was enacted in excess or ultra vires of the powers thereto conferred on Parliament by law at the time;

(b) was and is incompatible with the provisions in Sec. 15 (a) and sub-section (1) of Section 23 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No. 6 of 1991;

(c) violates the principle of contradiction vis-avis the substantive part of subsection (1) of Section 136 of the said Criminal Procedure Act 1965 as amended; and was and is accordingly invalid, null and void in terms of subsection (4) of the Interpretation Act No. 7 of 1965 and of subsection 15 of Section 171 of the Constitution of S.L. 1991, respectively, as the case may be."

The learned Attorney finally submitted that the present matter was not a proper case to come before this Court as the Applicant has not even made out a prima facie case for granting the leave. That the High Court acted properly and within its jurisdiction in refusing to quash the indictment on the grounds given by the Applicant. And the High Court properly refused the reliefs sought.

Counsel for the Applicant in reply submitted that moat if not all of the Counsel for the Respondent's arguments were premature in that they raised issue and dealt with matters belonging to the second stage of the application for prerogative orders i.e. the stage after leave has been granted, whereas the motion presently being argued related to the leave or threshold stage.

In my opinion this Court is not required to enter the labyrinth constructed by Applicant's Counsel. For this the leave stage of the application for the prerogative writs of certiorari, mandamus and prohibition a prima facie arguable case for leave to be granted will suffice.

The Court must first be satisfied that the Applicant has 'some genuine locus standi" to appear before it - whether as "a person aggrieved" or one "having a particular grievance" or one having a "specific legal right" or "a sufficient interest." If so satisfied and a prima facie cue, albeit a somewhat flimsy one exists, this could suffice to allow the Court to exercise its direction in granting the leave to apply for the Orders.

In the words of Lord Diplock in the case of I.R.C. v Federation of Self Employed 1981 2 A.E.R. 93 at p. 106:

(At the leave stage) "If on a quick perusal of the material then available, the Court thinks that it discloses what might on further consideration turn out to be an arguable case in favour of granting to the applicant the relief claimed, it ought, in the exercise of a judicial discretion to give him leave to apply for that relief."

In my view this dictum is a correct statement of what is required at the leave stage; and I adopt it.

In this case, the applicant Dr. Harry Will is one of the three accused persons standing trial in High Court No. 3 as such I find that he is a person having a sufficient interest in the matter to which the application relates. Having looked at the papers filed herein and listened to the submissions of learned counsel, I also find that a prima facie arguable case exists.

As such, I will grant the leave requested to apply for the Orders of Certiorari, Mandamus and Prohibition in respect of the Ruling given on 11th October 1999 by the learned Presiding Judge in proceedings on the aforesaid Criminal Information dated 30th August 1999.

I do not grant the stay of Proceedings requested.

In respect of the request for directions:- It is my opinion that no one single format for citation of parties in the title or heading of an application for leave to apply for Orders of Certiorari etc. will necessarily fit each and every set of circumstances Counsel asking to appear before the Supreme Court would be well advised not to violate the Constitution or any other substantive law, rule or court or settled practice.

[p.303]

In the instant case, although I am still not fully convinced that it is entirely necessary to give such directions, Counsel would do well to ensure that the format used in the substantive application sufficiently identifies the matter pending in the High Court for any Orders that might issue to apply to and only to the said proceedings.

Suffice it to say that in the instant case the parties shall be The State vs. High Court No. 3 (ex parte Dr. Harry Will)

CONTEMPT PROCEEDINGS

The Court draws attention to Dr. Jabbi to a letter dated 15.3.2000 asking him to show why the content thereof should not be deemed to be contemptuous of the court. Letter read part of the proceedings

Dr. Jabbi defended his letter and apologized.

A.G as an officer of the Court states the gravity of the contempt.

Contempt proceedings are stood down.

Court resumes at 11.30a.m.

Court: The matter was stood down. Dr. Jabbi's letter written on the 15.3.2000 has been read out. Dr. Jabbi was given the opportunity to purge his contempt.

Dr. Jabbi is given and opportunity to say something before the judgment of this Court is delivered.

D. Bu-Buakei – As I said earlier, the letter was not by any stretch of the imagination intended to be contemptuous. I have profoundest respect not only for the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone but for every member individually and personally of the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone and indeed for all the courts, Justices and officers of the Judiciary of Sierra Leone. Far be it from me to ever contemplate the contempt towards [p.305] any of the officers of the Court. I have not consciously or intentionally done so in the said letter of 15th March, 2000. However, the effect of the said letter having being what to my surprise it has turned out to be, I have to accept your Lordship's view of the effect. And I crave the indulgence or your Lordship to accept that very sincere Apology and to treat the contempt though unintended, as sincerely and effectively purged. As a practitioner before this Court, I have always shown the greatest courtesy and respect in my appearance before your Lordship. I believe the same is true in my relationship and appearance before other jurisdictions. I urge your Lordship to take Judicial notice of that past conduct of mine both in this Court and in my other interaction with your Lordships. I did not intend to be contemptuous towards this Court. I very much regret that the said letter has given that effect. I accept that view of the matter. And I unreserved1y withdraw the parts of the letter that have given that effect. The contempt 1n the letter is not a contempt in the face of the Court. I would never knowingly commit such a contempt in the face of the court. The said contempt being what it is, I respectfully urge your Lordships to accept my unreserved apologies for it and to also accept my plea that it be totally withdrawn and effaced both from the records and your memories. And I hereby make solemn undertaking that neither in my thought nor in my conduct before this or any other Court in this jurisdiction or towards any judicial officer in that capacity nor in any other from whatsoever will I ever do anything smacking of such contempt or indeed amount1ng to such contempt. My Lords, on the basis of my acceptance of the effect of the letter as unintentionally amounting to a contempt and on the basis of my unreserved acceptance of that effect and the parts of the letter and on the basis of my apology and undertaking I urge your lordships to graciously treat the contempt as purged and you withhold the ultimate sanction that you might otherwise be inclined to impose. I can only finally leave my self at your mercy.

The Court by a unanimous verdict finds you guilty of contempt of this Court. Do you have anything to say before sentence?

Jabbi: I am at the mercy of the Court.

Sentenced to 1 day's imprisonment

JUDGMENT

JOKO SMART, JSC:

This application a link in a chain of Motions before this court by the same applicant seeking, among other things, an order the effect of which is to put an end to his current trial in the High Court before the Hon. Mrs. Justice Patricia Macauley. Following the ruling of this Court on 18 [p.377] January 2001 whereby an Order nisi previously granted to the applicant to pursue certiorari proceedings was discharged, the applicant appears to have abandoned that course of action and has opted to proceed with Prohibition and a Motion for various Declarations. The present application is the one dealing with Prohibition. We decided to defer a hearing of the Motion for Declarations to a later stage.

The applicant is not happy with Mrs. Justice Patricia Macauley presiding over his trial in a criminal matter in the High Court because, in his view, there is a likelihood of her being biased. The trial is by judge alone. This apart, the applicant wants to be rid of the whole indictment against him because he alleges that there were certain defects in the preliminary proceedings leading to a Report of the Anti-Corruption Commission, a body established under the Anti-Corruption act, Act No.1 of 2000, which report the Attorney-General formed the basis of the indictment. I will give details of these defects later on in this ruling.

We decided to make the application for leave inter parties and invited written arguments on the two issues from both the Applicant and the Respondents. Having perused the written arguments we granted the leave and we limited the oral arguments to the question of bias only as we were satisfied that the written arguments were sufficient to make us reach a decision on the second leg of the application.

Prohibition, like the other prerogative orders of certiorari and mandamus, lies when there is a defect in the process by which a decision of a subordinate court is reached; it is not concerned with the merits of the decision itself. Speaking on judicial review generally, of which prohibition is a part, Lord Hailsham of St. Marylebone underscores the point in North Wales Police v Evans f1982U ALL ER 141, 143:

"The purpose of judicial review is to ensure that the individual receives fair treatment and not to ensure that the authority, after according treatment, reaches on a matter which it is authorised or enjoined by law to decide for itself, a conclusion which is correct in the eyes of the court".

Prohibition can therefore lie where there is a complaint of bias against a judge trying a matter. This is jurisdictional as bias goes to the root of the judicial process. But if the grievance is about a defect in a system before a matter went before the judge there are other considerations to be taken into account. I shall elaborate on this when I come to the second leg of the application.

Bias

The applicant's allegation of bias by the Hon. Mrs. Justice Patricia Macauley is founded on two incidents: one allegedly took place in the Chambers of the applicant himself at the time when he was a judge sitting on a criminal trial, i.e., The State vs. Hon. Dr. Harry Will and Others, and the other in the Chambers of Mrs. Justice Macauley. In respect of the first, the applicant complains that Mrs. Justice Macauley made certain remarks to him as reported in his exhibit MOTD 19 attached to his affidavit sworn the 11th January 200 I and filed in support of this application. The remarks were that there were rumours in Freetown that the applicant would not find the accused persons he was trying guilty. The applicant now claims that these remarks may very well haunt Mrs. Macauley now trying him since there is a nexus with the indictment on which he is standing trial. The nexus is that the substratum of the indictment relates to his dealings with one of the accused persons, Bockari Kakay, who was the only accused that was eventually found not guilty by the judge. There is no suggestion that at the time that the alleged remarks were made there was any inkling that the applicant might one day be charged with offences having a nexus with that trial. Indeed, Mr. Terry, Counsel for the applicant forcefully put before us that only a clairvoyant, and Mrs. Macauley is not one such person, would have at the time that the remarks were made, known that the applicant would be in his present predicament. Mr. Terry therefore lays more emphasis on likelihood of bias rather that on naked bias. In his supplemental affidavit sworn to the 12 February 2001 in opposition to the application, Lahai Momoh Farmah deposed that Mrs. Justice Macauley denied making the remarks complained of. I will not go into the merits of this denial as I regard it as hearsay.

The other incident, as I have mentioned earlier, happened in the chambers of Mrs. Macualey. The applicant complains that the judge ordered her Registrar to remove from her file in the criminal case against the applicant an affidavit dated 21 November 2000 sworn to by the applicant. This complaint is supported by an affidavit sworn to the 11th January 2001 by Michael Turay, a clerk in the office of Mr. Terry, who deposed that he presented the said affidavit to Felix Koroma, the Registrar attached to the court of Mrs. Macauley. The applicant's said affidavit was not exhibited in the affidavit of Michael Turay. Turay's affidavit repeated verbatim his affidavit sworn to the 7th day of December 2000 in support of a Notice of Motion of the same day. There is no denial by the respondents that a document was removed from the file at the instance of the judge but there is a contention with regard to the nature of the document. Felix Koroma, the registrar, deposed in his affidavit of the 30th January 2001 that the document which he received from Michael Turay was a Notice of Motion in the High Court captioned: MISC.APP.228/2000 D.No12:

BETWEEN: THE STATE — Respondent AND HON. MR. JUSTICE M.O TAJU-DEEN — Applicant. [p.379]

The said Notice of Motion, Koroma says, is exhibit "A" of the affidavit of Lahai Momoh Farmah sworn to on 30th January 2001 in opposition to this application. That Notice of Motion is supported by an affidavit sworn to by the applicant herein and it contains two exhibits. One is a letter written by the applicant to the Chief Justice which contains the alleged remarks by Mrs. Macauley (exhibit MOTD 1). This affidavit is the same as exhibit MOTD 19 of the affidavit of the applicant in support of his present application before us. The other exhibit (MOTD2) is the affidavit of Michael Turay dated the 7th December 2000 which is also the same as his affidavit of the 11th January 2001. I must say that there has been total prolixity in the filing of affidavits many of which are repetitive but this cannot be allowed to obfuscate an issue which appears to me to be very simple.

I consider it unnecessary, in reaching a conclusion as to a likelihood of bias, to determine which document was actually delivered to the clerk of Mrs. Justice Macauley and which she ordered to be expunged from her court records and be returned to the source from which it came. What I consider to be relevant is whether or not the disputed document regularly found its place in the file of the judge. If the answer is in the negative then the question of bias cannot arise. I will describe the regular process by which documents filed in the office of the Master & Registrar find their places in judges' files. I knew it during my 32 years practice at the bar and I have no reason to believe that it has changed. In the case of an affidavit relating to a matter before a judge, the original and a copy are put in the judge's file by the filing officer in the office of the Master and Registrar and the file is collected by the Registrar attached to the judge or is taken to him or her by another officer in the filing office. F or all other documents requiring a fresh allocation to a judge like a Miscellaneous Application, a separate file is opened and the application is placed there. Then the file is sent by the Master and Registrar to the Chief Justice or the Justice of Supreme Court responsible for the allocation of cases for assignment to a judge. It is after the assignment that the case file containing the original document together with a copy finds itself in the chambers of the judge taken there by the Registrar attached to the judge or some officer of the filing office. In neither case is it regular for a solicitor's clerk to take the original and copy document intended for the judge's file to the chambers of the judge and request the Registrar to place them in the judge's file. This being the case, I opine that Mrs. Justice Macauley rightly ordered the document whatever it was to be removed from her file and returned. The question about her motive in doing so becomes to me irrelevant. I therefore find that bias cannot be imputed to her in the circumstances.

The only incident left to consider for the allegation of bias is the first I will do so by beginning with the law on bias.

[p.37]

The law on bias.

Speaking on bias, Lord Cranworth, L.C. had this to say in Ranger v. Great Western R. v. Co. 5 H.L. 72, 98:

"A judge ought to be, and is supposed to be, indifferent between the parties. He has, or is supposed to have, no bias inducing him to lean to the one side rather than to the other. In ordinary cases it is a just ground of exception to a judge that he is not indifferent, and the fact that he is himself a party, or interested as a party, affords the strongest proof that he cannot be indifferent."

But in Franklin v. Minister of Town and Country Planning [1949] A.C. 87. 1 03, Lord Thankerton gives a much limited connotation to the word bias. He says:

"The use of the word bias should be confined to its proper sphere; its proper significance, in my opinion, is to denote a departure from the standard of even-handed justice which the law requires from those who occupy judicial office, or those who are commonly regarded as holding a quasi-judicial office as an arbitrator. The reason for this clearly is that, having to adjudicate as between two or more parties, he must come to his adjudication with an independent mind, without any inclination or bias towards one side or other in the dispute."

Bias is presumed if a judge has an interest, pecuniary or otherwise and he is automatically disqualified from sitting in judgment over a case concerning that interest. This is in line with the principle that a man shall not be a judge in his own cause expressed by the Latin maxim nemo judex in sua causa. This has been established as far back as 1852. Thus in Dimes v. Proprietors of Grand Junction Canal (1852) 3 HL Cas. 759. 10 ER 301, Lord Cottenham, the then Lord Chancellor, owned substantial shares in the defendant company. In an action against the company, Lord Cottenham sat on appeal from a judgment in favour of the company, which he affirmed. On an appeal to the House of Lords, it was held that Lord Cottenham was disqualified form sitting as a judge in the case because of the financial interest which he had in the suit. A very significant modem example is that of Lord Hoffmann in the case of R. v Bow Street Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate & Ors. ex parte Pinochet Ugarte (No.2) [1999] 1 ALL ER 577 in which the House of Lord set aside its own previous judgment, in [1998] 4 ALL ER 897 because Lord Hoffmann sat on the case when he was at that time a director and chairperson of Amnesty International Charity Limited, a subsidiary of Amnesty International that was a party in the action.

In Pinochet's case, like the instant case before us, no allegation of actual bias was made and established against Lord Hoffmann. What was in issue is the likelihood of bias. This case was preceded by a stream of cases beginning with R. v Rand (1866) LR 1 OB 230 in which Blackhurn J. expressed the view that a real likelihood of bias must be proved to exist before proceedings will be vitiated on the ground that a person who has taken part or assisted in adjudicating then was incapacitated by interest from doing so. In R. (De Vesci) v. Queen's County JJ. [1908] 2IR.271 Lord O'Brien took a further step to explain the contents of "bias". He said: "by bias I understand a real likelihood of an operative prejudice, whether conscious or unconscious. There must, in my opinion, be real evidence to satisfy (the court) that there was a real likelihood of bias". Two years later, in R. (Donoghue) b. County Cork JJ [1910] 2 IR 271 275 Lord O' Brien elaborated on bias as follows: I do not think that the mere vague suspicion of whimsical, capricious, and unreasonable people should be made a standard to regulate our action here. It might be different if suspicion rested on reasonable grounds, but certainly merely flimsy, elusive, morbid suspicion should not be permitted to form a ground of decision"

In R. v. Nailsworth Licensing Justices, ex parte Bird [1953] 2 Q.B.D 652, the court did not mention these last three cases but Goddard C.J. at page 654 expressed the view on bias as follows:—

"It is not something which raises doubt in somebody's mind that is enough to cause an order or a judgement to be set aside. There must be something in the nature of real bias. The fact that a person has a proprietary or a pecuniary interest in the subject matter before the court which he does not disclose, has always been held to be enough to upset the decision of the court, but merely that a justice may be thought to have formed some opinion beforehand is not, in my opinion, enough to do so".

In this case, one of three justices on a licensing committee hearing of an application for off-licence had previously been a signatory of a petition by members of the local community in favour of the licence. She signed the petition some weeks before the date of the hearing when she was shopping at a store known as Price's Stores. She was not originally scheduled to be on the committee hearing the application but on the day before the application was to be heard she was requested to take the place on the bench of other justices who were unable to attend the court the next day. She was not informed that any licensing application was due to be heard and she was not given details of the court's list for that day. She could not remember signing the petition and so she did not inform the other two justices that she had signed it. At the hearing of the application the petition was tendered in support of the application. It was objected to by those who opposed the application. The objection was overruled [p.382] and the petition was tendered in evidence. It was not read out in court nor was it handed to the justices for their inspection. While the justices were in retirement to consider the decision, it was observed that one of them had previously signed the petition. The justices returned into the court and announced that they have granted the licence. It was at this juncture that objection was raised that one of the justices had signed the petition but the justices declined to alter their decision. On a motion to the Queen's Bench Division for an order of certiorari to quash the justices' order on the ground of bias, it was held that although it was undesirable that a justice who had signed a petition should sit and adjudicated on the subject-matter of the petition, to justify setting aside that decision there must be something in the nature of real bias; merely that a justice might be thought to have formed some opinion on the subject-matter which she is called upon to decide was not a ground on which the decision could be set aside. Because both the applicant and the respondents have relied heavily on this case I will come back to it.

R. v. Camborne Justices: Ex parte Pearce [1954] 2 ALL ER 850 is another case worth mentioning. In this case Slade J. sitting in the Queen's Bench Division with two other judges, Lord Goddard C.J. and Cassels J., in a unanimous judgement of the court, applied the dictum of Blackburn J. in R. v. Rand (ante), adopted the views of Lord O'Brien (ante), and subscribed the following dicta which I find very illuminating for a decision of the case before us. "This court is of opinion that a real likelihood of bias must be made to appear not only from the materials in fact ascertained by the part complaining, but from such further fact as he might readily have ascertained and easily verified in the course of his enquiries." (at page 855). Slade J concludes his judgement with a caution on the indiscriminate application of the famous aphorism of Lord Hewart that it is of fundamental importance that justice should not only be done, but should manifestly and undoubtedly be seen to be done:

"The frequency with which allegations of bias have come before courts in recent times seems to indicate that the reminder of Lord Hewart, C.J., R. v Sussex JJ. Ex p. McCarthy [1924] 1 K.B. 259 is being urged as a warrant for quashing convictions or invalidation of orders on quite unsubstantial grounds and, indeed, in some cases on the flimsiest pretexts of bias. While indorsing and fully maintaining the integrity of the principle reasserted by Lord Hewart C.J. is not applicable may lead to the erroneous impression that it is more important that justice should appear to be done than that it should in fact be done." (at page 855).

This is as far as I consider it necessary to delve into English case law on bias for the purpose of the instant case. Apart from two reported cases, (See Foulah v. Kolifa Rowala Tribal Authority 1950 -56 ALR

S.L. 142; Hon. T.S. [p.383] Brewa v. Tuberville & Ors. SLLR 1960 — 61, 111) in which dicta were expressed by Luke, Ag. J. and Bankole Jones J respectively on the possible application of the nemo judex in sua causa principle to Local Court members who are customary court judges if the evidence warranted it, but there was no such evidence to warrant applying it, local judicial precedent involving superior court judges is lacking on bias. This is therefore one appropriate area in which I can legitimately borrow a leaf from English common law bearing in mind that that law is our residuary law pursuant to section 170 of the 1991 Constitution. I will therefore adopt the various dicta expressed in those cases as I find them apposite to the case before us.

The oral presentation

With their written presentation as their coin of vantage and the time limitation we imposed on them, counsel on both sides merely highlighted their positions of strength. I will therefore summarise here their arguments. With regard to the first incident, for the applicant, Mr. Terry did not go beyond his written exposition save that he assisted this court with his statement that Mrs. Justice Macauley might not even have remembered while sitting on his client's case that she made those remarks and that was one of the reasons that he deemed it necessary to file the affidavit which gave rise to the second incident in order to jug her memory that she did make those remarks. No further evidence is adduced to substantiate the allegation of likelihood of bias. So far as the other incident is concerned, Mr. Terry stressed that the removal of the affidavit from the file on the instruction of the judge is what constitutes bias on her part when taken in combination with the first incident. It must be noted that Mr. Terry never intended to use the affidavit at the trial. Mr Berewa for the respondents contended that the document that was removed was Miscellaneous Application 228/2000. I have already ruled that the nature of the document is irrelevant for the present purpose.

Both parties have relied heavily on the cases of R. v. Nailsworth Licensine Justices, ex parte Bird [1953] 2 ALL ER 652 and R. v. Cam borne Justices ex parte Pearce [1954] 2 ALL ER 850. But Mr. Terry distinguishes the Bird case from the instant case in that while no objection was raised to Alice Waine sitting on the licensing committee even though the solicitors for the objectors knew at that time that she had signed the petition and only raised their objection after a decision had been reached, in the instant case, his client had objected to the judge trying him right from the beginning of the trial and before verdict. I disagree with Mr Terry that the decision in the Bird case would have been different even if the objection to Alice Waine had been taken before the committee pronounced its decision. A careful perusal of that case warrants my conclusion. In dismissing the application, this was what Goddard C.J. said:—

"Having carefully considered the affidavits, we refuse the order on two grounds - (i) because we do not think it was established that there was any real bias on the part of this justice or that there was anything done which would make it appear improper, and not merely undesirable, for her to sit (and we have no reason to suppose that she would have signed this petition if she had known she was going to sit):, (ii) because we think there was ample opportunity for any objection to have been made before the was given."

As can clearly be seen, the two grounds are independent. It is the first ground that is of great importance in this application.

Before reaching a conclusion on bias let me go back to the case of Franklin v. Minister of Town and Country Planning [1949] A.C. 87, the facts of which will throw more insight on my judgment. Parliament had given the minister of Town and Country Planning power to establish new towns. Pursuant to that power, the Minister made an Order designating Stevenage as a new town. The order was challenged by Franklin and others who had objected to the creation of the new town one of the grounds being that the Minister was biased when he made the Order. The facts in support of the allegation of bias are that, before the Act of Parliament pursuant to which the Order was made, the Minister had made a statement in speeches that the designation of Stevenages as a new town would be carried through. Further facts however disclosed that when the New Towns Act was passed, the Minister, before making the Order, caused the draft of the Order to be published and notices to be sent out inviting objections. When the objections were received he set up an independent public local inquiry and a report of the enquiry submitted. He acted on the strength of the report on the enquiry itself. The Court held that a likelihood of bias in the making of the order could not be inferred from the previous statements made by the Minister. It was then that Lord Thankerton made the statements with which I started the law on bias in this ruling.

From all the arguments presented to this Court, I apprehend that further facts have not been given by the applicant in order to support the allegation of a likelihood of bias on the part of Mrs. Justice Macauley. I have already concluded that the judge was right in ordering the removal of the disputed document from her file. Without this second incident, the allegation in the first incident is paralysed. Rumour mongering has become a past-time activity in our society today. Many of them are innocently conveyed only to whet the appetite. When there is an unsavoury rumour about a person it takes only a friend or a faithful colleague to acquaint him with it. Others spread the rumour to create more excitement than an earthquake. Counsel for the applicant made the case much simpler for us when he conceded that but for his attempt to jug the memory of the judge she would not even have remembered making the [p.385] remarks. Bias is concerned with what operates in the mind of the person accused of it. Based on the authorities which I have considered in this ruling and on my own judgment, I do not think that the alleged remarks alone, in the circumstances, create a likelihood of bias. I will therefore dismiss this leg of the application.

The trouble with the Anti-Corruption Commission

In this application as it was with the application for certiorari, the Anti Corruption Commission is again under fire. In a nutshell, the complaint is that (i) the Commission was not properly constituted according to law in that the deputy Commissioner had not been appointed up to the time that the applicant was charged with a 12 count Indictment on which he is standing trial: (ii) there is a breach of the principles of natural justice in that he did not appear before the Commission before findings were made against him and a report sent to the Attorney-General upon which the Indictment was preferred: (iii) there is a violation of some mandatory provisions of the Anti-Corruption Act under which the findings were made.

As I mentioned at the beginning of this ruling, having allowed ourselves the luxury of reading through the notice of Motion and the written arguments by counsel on both sides, we decided that we can give a ruling on this issue without listening to any further oral arguments.

The law is replete with authorities on the non-availability of the orders of prohibition, certiorari or mandamus when there are other remedies open to the applicant. Sir John Donaldson M.R. in R. v Epping and Harlow General Commissioners, ex parte Goldstraw [1983] 3 ALL ER 257, 262 made the following observation on the point.:

"It is a cardinal principle that, save in the most exceptional circumstances that (the judicial review) jurisdiction will not be exercised where other remedies were available and have not been used."

In another case, R. V. Chief Constable of Merseyside Police, exp. Calveley Ors. [1986] 1 ALL ER 257 at 260 Donaldson M.R. in clarification of his previous statement said:

"(It) does not support the proposition that judicial review is not available when there is an alternative remedy by way of appeal. It asserts simply that the court, in the exercise of its discretion will very rarely make this remedy available in these circumstance."

In the same case, May L.J. subscribed to the view when he said:

[p.386]

"I think that one must guard against granting judicial review in cases where there is an alternative appeal route merely because it may be more effective and convenient to do so." (at page 265).

In Preston v. IRC [1985] 2 ALL ER 327, two law lords made similar pronouncements on judicial review. Lord Scarman said.

"A remedy by way of judicial review is not to be made available where an alternative remedy exists. This is a proposition of great importance. Judicial review is a collateral challenge; it is not an appeal." (at page 330)

Lord Templeman followed suit when he said:

"Judicial review should not be granted when an alternative remedy is available" (at page 337).

Of course, the authorities do not completely shut the door against the prerogative orders when there is an alternative remedy to pursue. Even in the presence of an alternative remedy, the court has a discretion to prefer judicial review but only in exceptional cases. One exception is when on the face of a decision it is clearly made without jurisdiction or in consequence of an error of law. See speech of Lord Widgery C.J. in R.V. Hillington London Borough, ex parte Royce Homes Ltd. [1974] 2 ALL ER 643, 649. A second exception is when the process is in breach of natural justice. See the dictum of Lord Hailsham, L.C. in R. v. Chief Constable of the North South Police v. Evans (ante). However, two other law Lords have given a signal warning on this exception. Lord Evershed in Ridge v. Baldwin [1963] 2 ALL EAR 66, 91 has pointed out the "danger of usurpation of power on the part of the courts under the pretext of having regard to the principles of natural justice". The warning is taken up by Lord Brightman in Chief Constable of the North Wales Police v. Evans [1982] 3 ALL ER 141, 154: "Judicial review is not concerned with the decision but with the decision-making process. Unless that restriction on the power of the court is observed, that court will, in my view, under the guise of preventing the abuse of power, be itself guilty of usurpation of power."

After this brief excursion into English law let me now return home in the bid to lay the matter to rest. In Regina v. Commissioner of Police, ex parte Macaulav 1968 -69 ALR S.L. 8, Cole Ag. C.J. sitting in the High Court on an application for certiorari where the complaint was that there was a defect in the committal proceedings before a trial in the high court, ruled that the remedy was not obtainable and that the proper step which the applicant should have taken was to bring the defect to the trial court I think that this is a sound and correct exposition of the law. Defects in all matters concerned with [p.387] preliminary proceedings before a case goes on trial should first be brought to the attention of the trial court and if the complainant is dissatisfied with the decision of that court his remedy is to appeal and not to by-pass that process and resort to a superior court for a review.

In the instant case, there is no evidence before this court that the allegations against the Anti-Corruption Commission were brought to the attention of the trial judge in the criminal case for a ruling. If this had been done, the appropriate remedy would have been an appeal against an adverse ruling. In the present circumstances, there cannot be a straight application to the Supreme Court under section 125 of the Constitution for the court to exercise its supervisory jurisdiction having regard to what had previously transpired in the court of Massally J., which was not the court trying the applicant, as evidenced by exhibit MOTD 10 in the applicant's affidavit in support of this Motion. The Affidavit is the judgment of Massally J. that the Anti-Corruption Commission is neither a court nor an adjudicating body against which the High Court can exercise supervisory powers under section 134 of the Constitution. The question now is. Can the applicant leave that decision on the record not having appealed against it and apply to this Court under section 125 of the Constitution to re-open the same question that has been decided upon by the High Court? The answer is no. The trouble with the Anti-Corruption Commission can only be resolved by this Court when the Court is able to rule that that body is a court or an adjudicating body but this Court cannot do so in the prevailing circumstances.

Conclusion

In the light of all what I have said, the application is dismissed

D.E.F. LUKE, C.J.

This is an ex parte Notice of Motion by the Applicant herein seeking the following Orders:—

(1) An Order granting leave to the Applicant herein Muctaru Ola Taju-Deen for an Order of Certiorari to issue both under the Common Law and Section 125 of the 1991 Constitution of Sierra Leone to bring up to the Supreme Court for the purposes of its being quashed the purported Report and/or the purported undated Extracts of the alleged Findings of the Anti-Corruption Commission signed by the Commissioner of the Anti-Corruption Commission that evidence exists of alleged Non existing offences against the Plaintiff herein under a Non-Existing Act to wit the Purported Anti-Corruption Commission Act 2000 upon grounds of failure to observe one of [p.326] the fundamental principles of natural Justice, Committal of Error of law on the Face of the Records and several other Errors of Law, want of Jurisdiction and/or excess of jurisdiction, as set forth and contained in the Copy Statement herewith exhibited to the affidavit in Support of this Application.

(2) An Interim Stay of the Criminal Proceedings Holden at High Court No. 1 before the Hon. Mrs. Justice Patricia Macauley in the case Between THE STATE vs. HONOURABLE JUSTICE MUCTARU OLA TAJU-DEEN pending the hearing and determination of the application for the Order of Certiorari if the leave is granted by the Honourable Supreme Court under the first order prayed for above.

(3) Such further OR other Orders as this Honourable Court may deem fit to make.

(4) That the costs of and occasioned by this application be costs in the cause.

Multiple arguments were advanced in support of the application. Suffice it to say That having heard the arguments of Mr. Terence Terry Counsel for the Applicant and having given due consideration thereto and to the papers filed herein, I am satisfied that the Applicant has a locus standi and has established a prima facie arguable case for an Order of Certiorari to issue.

I will therefore grant the leave sought and the Orders as prayed for in paras. (2),(3) and (4)'" Order (2) is refused.

As regards Order (3),

I make the following Orders:

(1) That the Respondents be served the relevant papers within four days of this order

(2) That the application for the Order of Certiorari be heard on the 2nd day of January, 2001.

O.V. ROBIN-MASON ESQ., FOR THE APPELLANT

S. A. BAH ESQ., FOR THE RESPONDENT

JUDGEMENT DELIVERED THE 24 DAY OF OCTOBER 2000

TIMBO, J.S.C

The Appellant was arraigned on a two-count Indictment in the Freetown High Court presided over by William Johnson J (sitting alone) with the following offences:—

(1) Larceny contrary to Regulation 38 (a) of the Public Economic Emergency Regulations 1987 (P.N. No.2S of 1987)

(2) Fraudulent Conversion of property contrary to Regulation 39(b) of the Public Economic Emergency Regulations 1987 (P.M. NO.25 of 1987).

At the end of the trial the appellant was found guilty on both counts and sentenced to: Le400,000.00 fine or 10 years imprisonment on Count 1 and Le40,000.00 fine or 1 year imprisonment on Count 2, both terms of imprisonment to run consecutively .

Being' dissatisfied with the decision of the learned trial judge, the Appellant appealed on both counts. The court of Appeal unanimously allowed the appeal in respect of the second count and accordingly quashed the conviction and sentence. The court was, on the other hand, divided as to the first count. Thompson-Davis JSC and Adophy JA (as he then was) while dismissing the appeal, Taju-Deen J.A. on his part, was of the opinion that the Appellant was equally not guilty on this Count and ought to be acquitted and discharged. So we are here concerned with only Count 1.

The circumstances, which gave rise to Count 1, were briefly as follows: the Appellant was at all material times Permanent Secretary in the Ministry of Works, Freetown. He had pioneered a building project known as the Daru Rest House Project. While the building was still under construction he managed to procure certain items of furniture for the said house. He directed that the said furniture should be delivered to his official residence at Kingharman Road, Brookfields instead of to the Government Store in Freetown. This was sometime in March 1987. Inside the same month the Appellant wrote to the Area Engineer in Kenema informing him of the acquisition of the furniture and promised that he would be sending them to him for safekeeping to await the completion of the Daru Rest House. He had not done so up till August 1987 when the matter was reported to the police in Freetown. The C. I. D. subsequently found the furniture in a house the Appellant was erecting not far away from his official quarters where the furniture had originally been off-loaded. All the pieces of furniture were however untouched. None had been installed in the Appellant's new house.

In his statement to the police the Appellant said among other things, that he had kept the furniture in his house because he was afraid that they would be stolen if left in any of the designated Government stores. Furthermore, he told the police that he had in fact dispatched eight of the chairs to Daru on loan for the official opening of the Daru Rural Bank (another project partly funded through his efforts) by His Excellency the President with specific instructions that they should be put in a secluded area after the opening ceremony.

The Appellant filed three grounds of appeal to this court. When the hearing commenced before us, counsel for the Appellant sought and was granted leave to argue only the third ground thus abandoning the other two Grounds. Ground three states:

"The Court of Appeal did not apply the proper legal test relating to intent to deprive permanently in so far as it relates to the charge of Larceny with which the Appellant was convicted and [p.315] thus wrongly held that the essential ingredient of the offence charged that is, the intent to deprive permanently was proved directly or inferentially by the prosecution"'

More particularly, counsel submitted that the test as laid down by the Court of Appeal was incomplete in so far as it failed to address the issue as to the time the intent to deprive permanently if any, was formed. This was what Adophy J. A. (as he then was) said in reading the judgment of the Court at page 177 of the typed record.

"It is accepted that to sustain this element, the thief must intend to deprive the owner not temporarily but permanently of his property. Regrettably, there seems not to be any statutory definition of the words "intention of permanently depriving". In respect of this, the learned trial judge said inter alia, "these issues can only be resolved by inferences to be drawn from the evidence adduced hereinl1• Learned counsel for the State dealing with this submitted and quite rightly that to prove that ingredient one can only infer whether the accused had the intention to permanently deprive."

Regulation 38(a) under which the Appellant was charged in Count 1 stipulates,

"38 Every person who—

(1) Steals any chattel money or valuable security belonging to or in the possession of the Government, Local Authority or a Public Corporation or entrusted to or received or taken into possession by such person by virtue of his employment..... shall be guilty of an offence".

And by Section 1(1) of the Larceny Act, 1916,

"a person steals who, without the consent of the owner, fraudulently and without a claim of right made in good faith, takes and carries away anything capable of being stolen with intent, at the time of such taking, permanently to deprive the owner thereof".

It is remarkable that at no time did Adophy J. A. (as he then was) stress that the intent permanently to deprive the owner must be formed the time at which the taking away occurs as stated in Section 1(1) of the Larceny Act 1916. This point is also emphasised in Archbold Criminal Pleading Evidence and Practice 35 Edition paragraph 1471 at page 596.

There is no doubt that there was an asportation of the furniture by the Appellant. But was the necessary animus furandi (the mental element) present at the time of such taking or for that matter, at any other time? The [p.316] evidence indeed disclosed that the Appellant gave orders for the delivery of the furniture to his quarters rather than to a Government store. He however explained the reasons for doing so. In his evidence in-chief he stated that:

"From experience, a lot of thieving had been going on in Government stores and quarters. For example, at the Kissy Second Highway Store, a lot of thieving was done there. I had to draft in the Military to provide twenty-four hours security. The Lodge at Hill Station was vandalized and the case was in court. P. K. Lodge was also vandalised and had to be refurbished. At Kissy Central Stores, several battery chargers were stolen. The Government stores were not safe because I was promoting the Daru Rest House through the Area Engineer and the Daru Rural Bank through the promoters of which I was one, I decided to keep the items myself..... I kept the furniture to make sure they were safe. The items would have gone if the project had been completed".

Mrs. Kona Koroma his deputy also said in her evidence that during this period they had reports of in-sufficiency of security in some of their quarters and stores. Under 'cross-examination by Mr. Terrence Terry, Counsel for, the Appellant in the High Court, she admitted that she raised no objections when the Appellant instructed her to convey the furniture to his residence. In answer to another question by defence counsel, she told the court that, "If the goods are delivered to the stores and they are stolen, the Permanent Secretary and the Storekeeper would take full' responsibility therefor".

She even went further to say that if she was' Permanent Secretary her first and foremost task would be to ensure the safety of goods ordered and that the burden was especially heavier when the goods had to leave Freetown for Daru. Concluding her testimony she agreed it was not unusual to keep Government property temporarily before eventual delivery to their final destination.

Turning to the crucial question whether the Appellant had the necessary intention permanently to deprive the Government of Sierra Leone of the ownership of the furniture at the time he received them or more accurately when he caused them to be delivered at his residence, we will clearly see from the evidence that there was no such intention on the side of the Appellant. This is supported by the story of the Area Engineer, Ishmael Kebbay the third prosecution witness who said during his examination in-chief,

"I recall March, 1987 — I heard from the accused in connection with the furnishing of the repaired building. He told me that he had secured some furniture for the building (Rest House), which would [p.317] be sent to me later. The Accused said that he would send the furniture after the completion of the repairs".

There was no evidence before the Court that the repairs to the building at Daru had been completed and that the Appellant had refused to release the furniture,. On the contrary, the Court was informed that the repairs had been delayed due to lack of funds.

Moreover, Sonny Julius Musa, the Manager of the Daru Rural Bank had emphasised in his testimony that when he received the eight chairs from the Appellant he was given strict orders to secure them properly as they were for the Rest House. The C.I.D themselves found the chairs were not in general use but had been kept separately in a safe place by the Manager. Even the tenth prosecution witness, Sonny Kangoma the cabinet maker from Daru, narrated in court that sometime in 1987 when he had cause to live with the Appellant on a short visit to Freetown, he saw the furniture in the Appellant's new house and that the Appellant had told him that they were for the Daru Rest House and that he would eventually transfer them to Daru upon the successful completion of the building scheme.

As was contended by Mr. S. E. Berewa, counsel for the Appellant in the Court of Appeal, not once had the Appellant asserted any claim of right over the furniture or made any attempt to dispose of them or treat them as his own property. The presence of these factors, in my view, would surely negative any intention on the, part of the Appellant to deprive the Sierra Leone Government permanently of the use of the furniture.

Thus in Rv Hudson (1943) 29 CR. App. R. 65 where a letter containing a cheque was by mistake delivered to the prisoner who had received it innocently, the court held that the prisoner did not receive the cheque until he had opened the letter and discovered it contained a cheque. If at that time he formed the animus furandi in relation to the cheque then he would be guilty of Larceny of the cheque. Vide also Maynes V. Cooper (1950 40 Cr. App. R. 198.

Likewise in Ruse V Read (1949) I All E. R. 398. Here the respondent while on leave went to spend part of his holiday with his mother in Sidmouth, Devon, England on the 30th June 1948. Coincidentally, an amusement fair was being held on that same day in the village. Around 9 p.m. one Raymond Purchase rode his bicycle to the fair and left it by the wall near the entrance and went inside. Fifteen minutes or so later on his way back he discovered to his amazement that the bicycle was no longer there. Meanwhile, the respondent while on his way to the fair ground visited several public houses and had plenty to drink. On his way out, the respondent saw the bicycle. He removed it and rode it for two hours. He then became sober. But not knowing what to do with the bicycle he took it home and placed it in the Lane at the back of his mother's house. The following day, he got panicky. So he drove the bicycle to the railway station and consigned it by rail to York [p.318] addressing the label thus "Mr. Read, York Railway Station, to be collected". Upon being arraigned for the larceny of the bicycle the respondent argued that when he took the machine he did not realise because of his drunken condition, the consequences of his action and it was to get rid of it that he sent it to the York Railway Station. It however became clear later that he had no intention of going to the said railway station to collect it. The justices held that the respondent had no intention at the time of taking the bicycle to permanently deprive the owner of his property and so was incapable of forming such an intention. He was found not guilty and duly discharged. On appeal by the prosecution, the King's Bench Division (Lord Goddard O. Humphrey's and Finermore J. J. held the initial taking of the bicycle by the respondent being a trespass (though not felonious, there being no animus furandi) the sending away of the bicycle to York Railway Station the next day was a clear manifestation of the respondent's intention to. deprive the owner permanently of his property and therefore he should have been convicted and they so ordered.

Even under the English Theft Act 1968 it is still the law that the appropriation must be followed by an intention on the part of the accused to permanently deprive the owner of the property alleged to be stolen. This point was heavily underscored by Edmond Davies LJ. In RV. Easmon (1971) 1 ALL. ER 945. The facts were somehow interesting. On the evening of the 27th December, 1969 a certain woman police Sgt. Crooks together with two other plain clothes officers went to the Metropolitan Cinema in Victoria, London. She sat in the aisle seat and placed her handbag by her side on the floor. She attached the said bag to her right wrist using a piece of black cloth. One of the officers occupied the inside seat next to her. During the interval, when the lights were put on, they saw the Appellant sitting on the aisle seat in the row immediately at the back of Sgt. Crooks but the seat next to him was vacant. Shortly after the light had been switched off Sgt. Crooks felt the 'string tied to her wrist tightened. She then at once passed a prearranged signal to one of her friends, P. C. Hensman. The cotton string was pulled a second time but so hard that she had to break it off. Within a few seconds the officers heard the rustle of tissues and the sound of the handbag being closed. The Appellant then rose from his seat and went to the toilet. When the officers turned round they saw Sgt. Crooks' handbag lying on the floor behind her seat and in front of the seat previously occupied by the Appellant who had meanwhile moved to another part of the cinema hall. The contents of the bag were all in order not one had been removed. When confronted by the police officers about the theft of the handbag and contents the Appellant flatly denied having anything to do with that. He was later charged with the theft of handbag and contents under section 1(a) of the Theft Act 1968.

Edmund Davies L.J. delivering the judgement of the Court of Appeal, which reversed 'the decision of the lower court had this to say at page 947.

[p.319]

"In the respective view of this court, the jury were misdirected. In every case of theft the appropriation must be accompanied by the intention of permanently depriving the owner of his property. If the appropriator has it in mind merely to deprive the owner of such of his property as on examination proves worth taking and then finding that the booty is to him valueless then leaves it ready at hand to be repossessed by the owner he has not stolen".

Continuing, the learned justice of appeal opined;

"If a dishonest postal sorter picks up a pile of letters intending to steal any which are registered, but on finding that none of them are, replaces them he has stolen nothing".

Edmund Davies U. maintained this was so in spite of section 6(1) of the theft Act 1968 which provides that,

"A. person appropriating property belonging to another without meaning the other permanently to lose the thing itself is never the less to be regarded as having the intention of permanently depriving the other of it if his intention is to treat it as his own to dispose of regardless of the other's rights".

The Court of Appeal further held that the Appellant could not even be convicted of attempted theft unless it was proved that he was animated by the same intention permanently to deprive as in the case of the full offence.

I am not oblivious of the fact that the English authorities I have cited in this judgement are merely persuasive and not binding on us. That notwithstanding, I see a lot of good sense in them and so I adopt them.

As we have seen in Ruse V. Read (infra) the Appellant was convicted because as soon as he consigned the bicycle to York Railway Station when he had no intention of ever collecting it from there it became obvious from that moment he intended to deprive the owner permanently of the use of his property. The situation is different, altogether in the instant case. Here, all along the Appellant denied that he ever intended to deprive the Government of Sierra Leone of the use of the furniture. He explained throughout that he took the furniture to his residence purely because he did not want them to be stolen, nor did he conceal the fact that these items of furniture were with him for safekeeping. He informed the Area Engineer immediately after he had received them. The fact that he kept them from March to August 1987 does not in my considered opinion alter the situation in any way. According to the Area Engineer, the Appellant said he would send the furniture when the repairs to the building were finished. We have heard that the building had not been· completed up to the period the Appellant was arrested. The police found the eight chairs the Appellant sent to Daru well secured. So too the rest of the furniture they retrieved from the Appellant's new house. They [p.320] were all intact not a single piece had been utilised. No evidence was ever led to indicate that the Appellant had done some act, which was inconsistent with the Government's ownership of the furniture. The Appellant was steadfast in his denial that he delivered the furniture to his residence for any other purpose than to protect them from being carted away.

I have taken considerable care and pains to analyse the salient features of the evidence as well as the law applicable in this appeal. Had the court of first instance and the Court of Appeal done the same, I have no doubt their conclusions would have been completely different. Be that as it may, 1 regret I cannot accept that there was evidence either direct or indirect from which it could be inferred that the Appellant had intended at the time he took delivery of the furniture or at any time thereafter, to deprive permanently the Government of Sierra Leone of the ownership of the furniture, the subject-matter of the charge in Count 1.

The appeal is therefore allowed. The Appellant is acquitted and discharged. The fine of Le400, 000.00 if already paid should be refunded.

Let me say before I end, the dissenting opinion of Taju-Deen J.A. has regrettably been of no assistance to us in this court. It contains nothing of significance.

RULING

TIMBO, JSC.

This is an application by notice of motion dated the 4th day of February 2000 that the proceedings in the action known as SC3/97 be continued between Hon. Ibrahim Bashiru Kanu MP as the first Applicant in the place of the 1st applicant Hon. Kakpindi Jamiru (Deceased) and the 2nd applicant Hon Joseph Sallu Conteh MP. therein on the one part [p.294] and the respondent herein on the other part. The substantive SC.3/97 seeks among other things, an order for Certiorari to remove into the Supreme Court and to quash the decision or order of the Hon Justice A.B. Rashid High Court Judge made on the 22nd day of April 1997 to the effect that the High Court has jurisdiction to hear and determine an application for interlocutory injunction pursuant to order 37 rule 10 of the High Court Rules 1960 and subsection (3) of section 78 of the Constitution of Sierra. Leone 1991 in respect of the action titled CC: 149/97 IC. No. 22 pending before the said High Court.

The application has been necessiated by the death of Hon. Kakpindi Jamiru the 1st applicant in the substantive application.

At first, counsel informed the court that the application was made in pursuance of Rule 98 of the Supreme Court Rules 1982. (PN No.1 of 1982) and the High Court Rules Order 13 rules 2 & 4 and order 24 rule 6. It was only after he had been reminded by the Bench of Rule 37 of our rules that he hesitatingly referred to that rule.

The first question that arises for determination therefore is, which rule governs this application - is it rule 37 or rule 98?

Rule 37 provides that:

“An application for an order for Revivor or Substitution shall be accompanied by an affidavit sworn by the applicant or where the applicant is represented by a legal practitioner the said affidavit shall be sworn by such legal practitioner showing who is the proper person to be substituted or entered on the record. in the place of or in addition to a party who has died or undergone a change of status”.

[p.295]

Rule 98 which is ever so familiar, on its part reads:

“Where no provision is expressly made in these rules relating to the Original and Supervisory Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court the practice and procedure for the time being of the High Court shall apply “mutatis mutandi.” The fact that rule 37 falls under the rubric “Civil Appeals Generally” does not in my opinion, preclude, in any manner, its application to circumstances other than -appeals in the Supreme Court. The rule is quite explicit. It deliberately uses the word “Applicant”. It is intended to deal with the kind of situation that has arisen here.

Having thus held that, it is rule 37 that is applicable, has counsel fulfilled the 'prescriptions of that rule?

In the present application, Dr. Bu Buakei Jabbi has failed to show any where in his supporting affidavit, as is required by rule 37, that the Hon. Ibrahim Bashiru Kanu MP is the proper person to be substituted in the place of the deceased 1st applicant except to describe him vaguely in paragraph 5 thereof as the successor in interest to the late Hon. Kakpindi Jamiru and filing his consent to so act. The only interest it would appear that is common between the proposed 1st applicant and the deceased he seeks to replace is that at one time they were both Members of Parliament together.

This application can be contrasted with that made in the Supreme Court not so long ago in Civil Appeal No.3/87

JOHN ADAMA - RESPONDENTS

There, while the appeal was still pending in the Supreme Court and before the Actual commencement of the proceedings, all two respondents died. Dr. Ade- Renner Thomas, counsel for the relatives of both respondents applied to the court by Notice of Motion dated 22/5/92 to have the deceased respondents substituted by their personal representatives. The application was brought under rule 37. The order for substitution 'Was granted readily by the Supreme Court.

Unlike what Dr Bu-Buakei Jabbi has done, Dr. Ade Renner Thomas deposed in very clear language in paragraph 3 of his affidavit;

“3 that the High Court of Sierra Leone (Probate Jurisdiction) granted Probate of the Will of the First respondent herein to Weabah Smith on the 2nd day of April 1992 and also granted Letters of Administration of the estate of the second respondent to Francis Bannerman (alias Adama) on the 28th day of April 1992.

Copies of the said Probate and Letters of Administration were also produced and. marked. ART 1 and ART 2 respectively.

The mere consent by the Hon. Ibrahim Bashiru Kanu MP to act is not sufficient to cloth him with the necessary capacity to continue with the proceedings begun by the deceased 1st applicant.

[p.297]

In the circumstances, I will accordingly refuse the application, and it is so refused. Costs assessed at Le 500,00/00 to be paid personally by counsel.

JUDGMENT delivered this 14 day of July 1995

WARNE, J.S.C.

This is an appeal against the judgment of the Court of Appeal delivered on the 19th day of November, 1986.

This Appellant, being aggrieved with the judgment, filed two grounds of appeal namely: (1) The court of Appeal was wrong in resting its decision solely on a ground not set forth by the Appellant and without the parties having had sufficient opportunity of contesting the case on that ground.

(2) The several conclusions of the Court of Appeal on the question of illegality are wrong in law particularly having regard to the absence of evidence that the Plaintiff acted outside the law."

The Statement of Claim was that: "The Plaintiff's claim against the Defendant is for the sum of US 79620 dollars being money payable by the Defendant to the Plaintiff for money had [p.179] and received by the Defendant for the use of the Plaintiff, interest and costs."

The Particulars, inter alia, state:

"(21 On or about the 2nd day of October, 1984 at the request of the Defendant. the Plaintiff paid the sum of US 79,620 (Seventy nine Thousand Six Hundred and Twenty United States Dollars) in the Defendant's Bank Account at Bank of Credit and Commerce International at 135 Earls Court Road. London England for use in connection with the Plaintiff's said business."

The Plaintiff claims:—

(1) The said sum of US 79620/00 Dollars.

(2) Interest on the said sum of US 79620 Dollars at the rate of 22per centum per annum from the 2nd day of October, 1984 till payment or Judgment.

(3) Further or other relief.

(4) Costs."

I shall hereinafter refer in this judgment to the Appellant as Plaintiff and the Respondent as Defendant.

The Statement of claim, in my view, is infelicitously worded. As a result, the Defendant sought further and better particulars. The defendant, however, denied the claim. Issue was joined and the cause went to trial before Thomas. J. He gave Judgment for the plaintiff. Against that Judgment, the Defendant appealed to the Court of Appeal which consisted of Navo, Turay and Adophy JJA.

The facts of the case are simple. The Plaintiff is a precious metals Broker, Bullion Dealer and Refiner resident at 4 Prince Albert Street Brighton in England in the United Kingdom. In his field of business, he wrote to the Chamber of Mines in Freetown to find out about alluvial gold dealers in Sierra Leone. The copy letter was received in evidence and for ease of reference I will here Quote the letter and the [p.180] reply which he received and were tendered in evidence.

The letter is addressed to: —

"J.T. Nottidge Esq.,

Executive Officer

Sierra Leone Chamber of Mines

Spiritus House

Freetown

Dear Sir,

We are a gold purchasing company in the transaction of precious metals for a considerable number of clients, most of whom are situated in the United Kingdom.

We are currently involved in the implementation of a statistical study of certain countries located throughout the African Continent. It is appreciated by ourselves that your country is involved considerably in the production of gold, and we feel that because of our interest in alluvial gold, we would like to consider offering a precious metal purchasing and refining facility.

We would therefore ask for your assistance in providing full details, where possible, of individuals and companies who are currently involved in this field, and that might be willing, at least, to negotiate possible transactions.

There are a wide range of services that we can offer and we would like the opportunity to discuss this locally with interested parties, at some date in the near future.

We therefore look forward to receiving your reply. Any information given will of course, be treated confidentially and your help in this matter is very much appreciated.

Yours sincerely

(SGD)

H. Mason"

[p.181]

In reply the Plaintiff received Ex "B" which is a list of authorised Alluvial Gold Dealers. In that list was No. 11 Mr. Tungi Wilson - 35, Pademba Road Freetown Sierra Leone'. There is no dispute that Mr. Tungi Wilson is the Defendant herein.

As a result the Plaintiff wrote to the Defendant a letter dated 12th July, 1984 which reads;

"Mr. Tungi Wilson

35, Pademda Road

Freetown

Sierra Leone.

Dear Sir,

We have been corresponding with the Sierra Leone Chamber of Mines, and Mr. J.T. Nottidge Executive Officer has stated that you are currently involved in purchasing alluvial gold.

However, as Sierra Leone is considerably involved in the production of gold, and because of our interest in this field, we would like to consider offering a precious metal purchasing and refining facility. We are obviously unsure of your existing arrangements, although we believe that a large percentage of the gold generated in your country is directed to Swiss Refineries.

We realise that the only way to effectively commence business dealings, is to be given the opportunity to discuss locally all aspects with you. To this end, we envisage a visit to Freetown shortly, and therefore, we would welcome your comments in order that we can make arrangements for meeting with you to negotiate all considerations regarding the business.

Finally, any terms and conditions offered will only be treated in strict confidence, but will be extremely competitive because of our good connection with the London Gold Market.

We therefore look forward to receiving your reply in the very near future.

Yours faithfully

(SGD.)

H. Mason"

Dear Sir,

Your letter reached me and all contents were well understood". I am involved in Purchasing Alluvial Gold.

Your request in Purchasing Gold from me is cordially granted. As you have stated in your letter the only way to commence business dealings with me is to make a visit to Freetown as soon as possible.

State by telex the date of your arrival so that I can meet you at the Air Port and arrange a meeting with you to negotiate all considerations regarding the Business.

I am looking forward to your arrival in Freetown. You are welcome at any time

The Plaintiff by letter dated 31st July 1984 sought further [p.183] details from the Defendant thus - current sales of alluvial gold i.e. volumes available, say on a monthly basis, how monetary values are transferred, bank(s) involved, and whether or not the Ministry of Mines is involved in assessing purity levels.

The Defendant promptly replied to part of the details required by telex dated 2nd August 1984. The Plaintiff did not travel to Freetown, he sent a representative, one Anthony John Powell. The Plaintiff had written to all the seventeen individuals or companies mentioned in the list sent to him by Mr. Nottidge. Suffice it to say, he was now negotiating with the Defendant.

Anthony John Powell was put in touch with the Defendant with whom he negotiated for the purchase of 10Kilos of Alluvial Gold valued at 79620 US Dollars. This transaction was concluded as a result of several telegraphic messages between Anthony John Powell and Mr. Mason, the Plaintiff. Consequently, the 79620 us Dollar were paid into the Bank Account of Defendant at the Bank of Credit and Commerce International 135 Earls Court Road in London. The defendant agreed the money was paid into his account but contended he gave Anthony John Powell 8.5 Kilos of Gold in exchange. There were several requests made for the refund of the 79620 US Dollars from Defendant, but to no avail.

The Court of Appeal considered the evidence in support of the claim and the submission of both Counsel, and before Judgment was delivered made this observation.

"Court. This was not made a ground of appeal. But pursuant to Rule 9 sub-rule 6 of the Rules of Court, we invite Counsel to address us on whether this transaction is not rooted, or its performance tainted with, illegality thus making the Maxim Ex Turpi causa oritur actio applicable.

If so, can our courts lend aid to either party in the performance or enforcement."

The whole appeal turns mainly on the question of illegality. Dr. Renner-Thomas, Counsel for the Plaintiff, has taken issue with [p.184] that observation of the Court of .Appeal. Counsel referred Court to Rule 9 sub-rule 6 of P.N. No. 29 of 1985 which provides:

"Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this rule, the Court in deciding the appeal shall not be confined to the grounds set forth by the appellant.

Provided that the Court shall not rest its decision on a ground not set forth by the appellant unless the parties had sufficient opportunity of contesting the case on that ground" [Emphasis mine]

Counsel submitted that since the appeal had not been contested on the ground of illegality, the parties should have been give sufficient opportunity to argue that ground. He submitted, that was not so. He argued that Counsel for the defendant had completed his argument when the observation was made by the Court of Appeal. He urged the Court to give the word "sufficient" its ordinary meaning.

Counsel submitted that Counsel for defendant had completed his argument when the question of illegality was put to him.

In my view, this submission is not tenable. The record is quite clear. When the question of illegality was posed by the Court, Counsel for plaintiff replied thus:

"I submit that there is nothing illegal to buy gold in Sierra Leone. It could be illegal if the person selling is not a licensed dealer. I submit that where a statute provides that person could not enter a contract except he is licensed to do so then the effect of not being licensed, will depend on the construction of the statute or the intention of Parliament. Read Mamoud Ispahani (1921) K.B. 716, Rep. 217 St John's Shipping Corporation v Joseph Rand Ltd. (1957) 1 Q.B. 267; 1956 3 W.L.R. 870".

The foregoing shows clearly that Counsel replied to the observation of the Court of Appeal. Was Counsel given sufficient opportunity to contest the ground of illegality? I will first of all give sufficient opportunity its ordinary meaning and then [p.185] decide if such opportunity was given to the parties.

According to the Concise Oxford Dictionary - "Sufficient" means: sufficing, adequate; and Opportunity means: a good chance, a favourable occasion, a change or opening offered by circumstances, good fortune."

Did the Court give Counsel an adequate opportunity to contest the question of illegality? In my view, Counsel was given sufficient opportunity to contest the issue of illegality. If more time was needed by Counsel, he should have applied to the Court for such time to answer the point.

Counsel contends that Counsel for defendant replied to the ground of illegality when replying to his submissions. I see nothing wrong in this procedure.

In fact, Counsel for defendant justly and rightly disposed of the issue of illegality in his reply. This was what Counsel for defendant said in his submission: —

"By excluding contract the Defendant was denied such legal Defence as might be open to him. I submit further that even so the Trial Court could of its own motion have raised the question of illegality. Bull v .Chapman (1853) 8 Lich 444 22 L.J.E. at 257 Snell v Unity Finance Co. Ltd. (1964) 2 Q.B."

In my view the record is quite clear. Both parties had. s1fficient opportunity to contend the ground of illegality.

The complaint of Counsel for the Plaintiff is unfounded and that ground of appeal fails.

Having disposed of this ground I will now turn my attention to Ground 2 of the Grounds of Appeal. This is more substantial and creates greater difficulty in resolving.

Counsel on both sides have been of considerable help to the Court by furnishing the Court with some useful authorities.

Counsel for plaintiff has made the following submissions:

that there was no evidence of illegality in the contract. There was no burden on the Plaintiff to prove that he was an authorised dealer in gold. Counsel, however, conceded that even though neither party to the dispute may have raised the question of illegality, the Court suo moto, can raise [p.186] it if the contract is tainted with illegality. Counsel submitted that before the Court can do that several conditions should be fulfilled before the Court can raise the issue.

In support of that submission, Counsel cited several legal authorities; among them were North Western Salt Co. Ltd. v. Electrolyte Co. Ltd. H.L. (1914/1915) A.E.R. 752 at 756,759, 760, 761 and Peterson v Tuboku-Metzger (1964/1966 A.L.R. (SL) 442 at 449 and Chitty on Contract Vol. 1, 24 Edit. Para. 1059.

Counsel finally submitted that there is no evidence to support the findings of the Court of Appeal and that the conclusions are wrong and the Judgment of the High Court be restored.

In response to the submissions of Counsel for the plaintiff Counsel for the defendant has urged the Court to adopt one of these courses —

(1) If the appeal is dismissed that is the end of the matter

(2) If allowed, the Judgment of High Court cannot stand; if so, then

(3) The case has to be remitted to the Court of Appeal for rehearing, because the Court of Appeal did not decide the Case on the substantive grounds of Appeal Counsel cited the case of North western Salt Co. Ltd. (supra) I have already disposed of Ground (1) of the Grounds of Appeal and will now consider the submissions of Counsel in reply to Ground (2). Counsel submitted there was evidence before the Court that the Plaintiff was not an authorised dealer.

Counsel contended that both vendor and purchaser should be authorised dealers and he refers to the Exchange Control Act.

Cap. 265 Section 3 (1). Counsel submitted further that if the name of the Plaintiff is not on the list of authorised dealers, he is not an authorised dealer and has cited these case of Nabieu Amadu v. Alah Sidiki (1972/1973 A.L.R. (S.L.) 42.

[p.187]

Counsel submitted that the whole transaction was shrouded in secrecy as a result the Plaintiff sued in quasi-contract. Counsel urged that the laws of Sierra Leone were violated and the whole purpose of the legislation was to combat smuggling and tax evasion. Counsel finally submitted that it was irrelevant by what term the transaction is called.

What I have to consider are the following points—

(1) Was there a contract between the plaintiff and the Defendant

(2) If there was a contract, was it an illegal contract ab initio?

(3) If it was an illegal contract ab initio, can it be enforced by either party?

(4) Can an innocent party sue on such an illegal contract to recover money had and received?

(5) Was there any evidence on which the Court of Appeal based its decision?

I will endeavour to resolve the points posed supra.

In order to determine if there was a contract between the parties, I must go back to the correspondence between the parties. Money was alleged to have been transferred to the defendant. Before the plaintiff came into contact with the defendant, he wrote a letter to the Executive Officer, Chamber of Mines identifying his line of business and said he needed assistance in meeting interested parties with a view to offering a range of services in that line of business - gold and precious metals. In reply, he received a list of authorised alluvial gold dealers. In that list, was the name of the defendant. As a result the plaintiff wrote to the defendant. It will be pertinent to refer to the letter plaintiff wrote to the defendant (EX 'C') hereinbefore mentioned.

The defendant promptly replied. In the end the plaintiff set a representative to the defendant. After some negotiations between the defendant and the representative of the plaintiff the sum of 79620 US Dollars was sent to the defendant agreed that there was a transaction offer for the sale of gold to the representative and [p.188] the quantity was about 8.5Kilos or a little over for the price of 79620 us Dollars. Subsequently, defendant received the purchase price which was 79620 US Dollars. However, he insisted that the gold was given to the representative of the plaintiff. The Court of Appeal held that "This is a clear case of a contract entered into on behalf of the plaintiff (a discl principal), by Powell his Agent and the defendant". I agree,

There was, no doubt, a contract between the plaintiff and the defendant.

The Court of Appeal, however, having found that there was contract between the parties had this to say per Navo J .A.

"In the light of the above submission and indeed the entire circumstances of this case, I make bold to say that in my view the agreement to pay the sum of 79620 United States Dollars into the Bank Account of the Appellant Wilson, which agreement was contracted by the Appellant and the Respondent through his Agent Anthony J. Powell and performed by the Respondent Mason by paying the amount into the Bank of Credit and Commerce International Ltd at Earls Court Road London for 10 kilos Alluvial Gold was a deliberate and calculated devise to eclipse and by-pass the Exchange Control Regulations cited earlier. by Mr. T.S. Johnson. thus depriving this country of much needed foreign exchange. The transaction call it money had and received or what you like is clearly not only illegal is also against Public Policy and thus making the Maxim Exturpi causa non oritur actio applicable. "

The Court of Appeal having made such positive findings disturbed the findings of fact made by the High Court. An Appellate Court ought not to disturb findings of fact, of a lower court unless the findings are clearly wrong and cannot be supported in law - Benmax v. Austin Motor Co. Ltd. (1955) All E.R. 326

In that case Viscount Simmonds at p. 327 said:

[p.189]

"In such a case a distinction should be made between facts deposed to by witnesses and found by the Court; and inferences of facts drawn therefrom by the Court"

In the instant case, the positive findings of fact were made the High Court as a result of the deposed to by the witnesses.

These were the findings of the Judge in the High Court. The Learned trial Judge said among other things:

"Has the defendant been unjustly enriched at the plaintiff's expense? A finding of fact is called for here. From the evidence adduced on both sides about the delivery or non-de livery of the gold, the issue one way or the other must be resolved by the relative weight to be attached to the evidence on each side. It is all a question of credibility. I have carefully watched the demeanor of the witnesses when testifying the mode of response to questions as they were put to them in examination in chief or cross examination. I have also considered the content of the exhibits along side the oral testimony of the witnesses, whether there were inconsistencies in the evidence of the one side and whether such in-consistencies are material. I have also taken great care not to be influenced by extraneous matters and irrelevant pieces of evidence, but to weigh and consider adequately the evidence in its entirety I hold the plaintiff and his witnesses as credible witnesses. The defendants' evidence cannot be relied upon because of material inconsistencies in his evidence."

The learned trial Judge then highlighted several passages of the defendant's evidence which he considered were inconsistencies

The Judge went on to say "On the other hand the plaintiff and his witness in my view told a consistent story". He accordingly spelt out these several passages in the evidence.

[p.190]

Finally, the learned trial Judge said "Having considered the case as a whole I hold that the plaintiff has proved his case on a balance of probabilities".

There was no evidence on which the Court of Appeal made its findings.

I see no reason to disturb the findings of fact made by the learned trial Judge. Having said that, I will now consider the law under which the Court of Appeal grounded its decision.

It is the Exchange Control Act. Cap. 265 of the Laws of Sierra Leone as amended. The title is "An Act to confer power: and impose duties and restrictions, in relation to gold, current payments, securities, debts, and the import, export, transfer and settlement of property and for purposes connected with the matters aforesaid". The Act does not create an offence per se.

It confers powers and imposes duties and restrictions.

In this regard, the Court of Appeal referred to the Exchange Control (Amendment) Act 1965" Section 3 (1) which provides:

"Except with the permission of the Minister no person other than an authorised dealer shall in Sierra Leone, and no other person resident in Sierra Leone other than an authorised dealer, shall, outside Sierra Leone, buy or borrow any gold or currency of a Non-Scheduled territory from or sell or lend any gold or currency of a Non-Scheduled Territory to any person other than an authorised dealer."

The Court of Appeal having invoked in aid the Exchange Control (Amendment) Act, 1965, more particularly section 3 (1), the learned justices, with respect, misapplied the law. The contract between the plaintiff and the defendant was executed in Sierra Leone (Emphasis mine). The contract therefore is governed by the laws of Sierra Leone. Section 3 (1) of the said Act of 1965 refers to dealings in "gold or currency of a Non-Scheduled Territory". Sierra Leone is listed as one of the Scheduled Territories in the First Schedule of the Act. Section 3 (1) refers.

In the light of the correspondence between the plaintiff and the defendant, can the Court lend its aid to the plaintiff I think it can.

After the initial correspondence between the plaintiff and defendant which created the contract, there were several others which show that nothing was, "shrouded in secrecy", on the part of the plaintiff as counsel for the defendant urged the Court to believe.

The following communications passed between the plaintiff-defendant and the representative of plaintiff and the son of plaintiff and defendant respectively

"Mr. Wilson is not coming to the office this week because he is very ill and unable to work".

As a result of this message from the Secretary of defendant the plaintiff sought other means of getting through to the defendant. In his evidence, plaintiff said "I telephoned the defendant from the U.K. about the refunding of my money 79620 U.S. Dollars. I got to know the defendant telephone number because it is stated in his letter head. The defendant was in Freetown when I made the telephone call. I personally dialled the defendant's number, a girl answered the telephone. I asked for the defendant, he came on the line. I said first what happened to my gold? or words to that effect. The reply came don't worry you will be refunded. I replied "when?"

Then he said, I have diamonds which I can sell which will enable me to refund the money. After that, I did not hear anything for a week or two. I phoned him again and he promised to send the 10 Kilos to me by a Mr. Kakay who would be travelling on a B. CAL flight.

These telephone conversations took place after Mr. Powell had returned to London without the gold.

After the telephone conversations I received a Telex about the arrival of Mr. Kakay in London."

This telex was tendered in evidence and it was dated 26. 10. 84 and reads:

"Attn. Mr. Tony Powell

Pl. meet Mr Kakay (the gentleman who took you to the airport) at Gatwick airport on Friday Nov.3. He will be arriving by BCAL.

Regards

Tisco Enterprises".

The plaintiff's evidence continues "Mr. Kakay did not ARRIVE IN London as expected. I then sent my son and Mr. Powell to Freetown to see what was going on. I have heard of (missing line) Mr. Larmie from whose office the defendant used to send telex messages to me. I do not know a Mr. Leopold. I have heard of him.

I spoke to someone on the telephone who identified himself to me as a Mr. Leopold. I spoke to him about the 10 Kilos of gold".

As can be seen from the evidence the situation was becoming very desperate for the plaintiff. How did he come to know about Mr. Kakay? It was through the defendant and Mr. Powell. Both Powell and Michael Mason had met Mr. Leopold in London at his Leopold's request. In his evidence Michael Mason said "I also know one Mr. S. Leopold. He is not in Court. I came to know him in London. Before I came to Freetown last year he telephoned to say he wanted to meet Mr Powell and myself. I met him in Hackney in London sometime [p.199] in October, 1984-. I am aware that my father and his partners were involved on a transaction with the defendant. He asked Mr. Leopold about the money 79620 U.S. Dollars owed to Mr. Harry Mason by the defendant. He said he would look into the matter as he was related to the defendant somehow. I believe Mr. Leopold was married or getting married to the defendant's mother. Mr. Powell was present at the time."

Mr. Powell in his testimony also referred to this meeting with Leopold and also the expected arrival of Mr. Kakay in London with the 10 Kilos of gold. The plaintiff was informed of this encounter with Mr. Leopold vis-a-vis his business transaction with the defendant. Mr. Powell said "I told Mr. Leopold about the background of the transaction with the defendant. Mr. Leopold said we need not worry, we would get the gold, suggesting that defendant would perform his own side of the agreement ultimately;

Mr. Leopold said that he knew the defendant's mother, very very well.

The plaintiff felt he could seek the assistance of Mr. Leopold to recover his money. He therefore sent him a telex dated 18.1.85 which reads:

"Attn. Mr. Leopold

The situation with Mr Wilson has still not been resolved. We have not received any gold or refund for the money which was deposited in his London Account last October. As we understand your company was involved in transferring the funds from London to Freetown. We respectfully request your help and cooperation in settling this matter.

Kindest regards

Harry Mason"

[p.200]

In reply, Mr. Leopold sent a telex message to Mr. Mason, the plaintiff, which to say the least, is devastating. It is dated 21.1.85. This is the telex.

"ATTN. MR. HARRY MASON - 21.1.85

Many tks yr TLK of Jan 18 we are. indeed surprised to learn that your business with Mr. Wilson has still not been concluded.

Tony and your son were here sometime last November and phoned us from their hotel but never made any personal contact with us since then we have not heard from them and assumed that everything was O.K. You have been misinformed about our involvement in transfer of yr money. It is important that we inform you that Mr. Wilson authorised his bankers in London to transfer the amount you made available to him to a local-merchant Mr. Mohamed Gebara's account with the Soho Branch of Barclays Bank. Mr. Mohamed. Gebara in turn paid Mr. Wilson here in Freetown in Leones at double the official Bank rate of exchange. Pls feel free to ascertain the fact of the transfer from your bankers·. Our company was certainly never RPT never involved with any transfers. Nevertheless, we shall contact Mr. Wilson immediately to find out the position and revert soonest.

Sincere regards

On the 26.10.84 the defendant had sent a telex to Powell in England to meet Mr. Kakay, at Gatwick airport on Friday November 3 who will be arriving in England by BCAL.

This is the evidence Powell gave: I should meet Mr. Kakay on 3/11/84 at Gatwick. The purpose was to meet Mr. Kakay to receive the 10 kilos of gold at the airport'. I know this from a telephone conversation with the defendant [p.201] on 15/10/84. I informed the plaintiff about the telex and the plaintiff's son Michael accompanied me to Gatwick in the hope of meeting Mr. Kakay at the airport.

As I see it, Powell knew the man he was going to meet at Gatwick on 3rd November.

Powell continued his evidence by saying:-

"Mr. Kakay did not arrive on the flight according to information received from the BCAL computerised reservations at Gatwick. As far as I know Mr. Kakay did not arrive in London at all."

The evidence of the plaintiff and Powell show clearly that the defendant was not willing to fulfil his side of the contract.

The defendant admitted in evidence, that he received 79620 US Dollars. What did he receive the money for? I have no doubt in my mind that it was the purchase price for the 10 kilos of gold agreed upon by both parties. For a clearer picture, I will quote the evidence of defendant - he said: - "I eventually received the 79620 U.S. Dollars in the form of Leones in Freetown. I received the equivalent in Leones of 79620 US Dollars at the end of October 1984. I received the equivalent in the sum of Le440,000.00 or thereabout. The said sum of Le440,000.00 was received by me at the Barclays Bank Wilberforce Street . I now say that the 79620 US Dollars were paid by my bank in London to Mr. Mohamed Gebara of Wilberforce Street who in turn gave me their equivalent in Leones in Freetown."

This bit of the evidence of defendant confirms the content of the telex of Leopold to Mason that the defendant had indeed received the equivalent in Leones of the 79620 US Dollars.

In spite of this overwhelming bit of evidence, the Court of Appeal made findings of fact which were not supported by the evidence. The Court of Appeal allowed the appeal on the grounds "that the transaction between plaintiff/respondent was entered into or tainted with illegality thus making the maxim 'Ex turpi [p.202] causa non-oritur actio applicable." I do not agree with the findings of the Court of Appeal. The Communications between the parties and agent of the plaintiff and the son of the plaintiff show clearly that the plaintiff was an innocent victim of a well thought out-scheme to deprive him of his money with impunity. In such a case, the innocent victim is entitled to recover whatever consideration passed under the contract. The judgment of the Court of Appeal was delivered on the 19th November 1986. It is interesting to note that the Court based its decision on Public Notices that had been revoked — that is to say P.N No. 47 of 1973 P.N. No. 57 of 1974. The current PN is No. 5 of 1977.

The object of the Exchange Control Act is "to confer powers, and impose duties and restrictions in relation to gold". The maxim was invoked, without justification.

In the instant case, there was a legally binding contract between the plaintiff and the defendant. There is abundant evidence that the defendant failed to fulfil his side of the contract; that is to say to hand over the 10 Ki1os of gold agreed upon for the price of 79.620 United States Dollars to the plaintiff or to refund the said amount. In fact, there is evidence that the defendant received double the exchange rate for the dollars in Leones. There is evidence that the defendant attempted to get more money from the plaintiff, in order to effect other business transactions to enable him to get funds to reimburse the plaintiff.

In my opinion, the plaintiff dealt with the defendant in an honest and business like manner, albeit, through his agent Powel

On the contrary, the defendant was not honest in his dealings with the plaintiff. He wove a web of deceitful communications to deprive the plaintiff of his money. I am satisfied there is no moral turpitude on the part of the plaintiff to prevent him from recovering the sum of 79620 US Dollars from defendant.

Ground II of the appeal therefore succeeds.

[p.203]

I will therefore allow the appeal, set aside the judgment of the Court of Appeal and restore the judgment of the High Court. The defendant shall pay to the plaintiff the costs occasioned by this appeal and the costs in the court below, such costs to be taxed.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL RESPONDENT

SOLICITORS:

A.F. SERRY-KAMAL, ESQ., with him F. M.

DABO, ESQ., of Counsel for the Applicant.

MISS G. ATTIIBA-DAVIES of Counsel for the Respondent.

RULING delivered this 11th day of August, 1992 by KUTUBU, C.J., PRESIDING.

RULING

These certiorari proceedings are brought on behalf of the Applicant, Isatu Kamara, by Learned Counsel, Abdul Franklin Serry Kamal for an Order of certiorari to quash the order of the Nylander Commission of Inquiry given on the 8th day of July, 1992, resulting in the conviction and imprisonment of Applicant, a witness before the said Commission for a period of 21 days.

The grounds of the application according to the statement dated 9th July, 1992 inter alia are as follows:—

[p.145]

1. That the Commission exceeded its jurisdiction in convicting and sentencing applicant.

2. That the Commission acted in excess of jurisdiction in convicting and sentencing applicant.

3. That the Commission acted ultra vires in convicting applicant summarily.

Applicant relies on the Affidavits of Isatu Kamara and Fode Maclean Dabo both sworn to on the 24th day of July, 1992 and filed together with the exhibits. Exhibit "A" herein is the Certified True Copy of the record of proceedings of the Nylander Commission of Inquiry; dated 8th July, 1992, touching and bearing on Isatu Kamara.

It is necessary, we think; to give in brief form, the origin and source of the Nylander Commission of Inquiry; and the facts relating to these proceedings before us. Suffice it to say that the Lynton Nylander Commission of Inquiry is a creature of statute, established by the National Provisional Ruling Council (N.P.R.C.), in exercise of the powers conferred upon it by Section 2 and 6 of the Commissions of Inquiry Act, CAP.54 Laws of Sierra Leone, 1960 as adapted by the Proclamation entitled "THE ADMINISTRATION OF SIERRA LEONE (NATIONAL PROVISIONAL RULING COUNCIL) PROCLAMATION, 1992 P.N. NO.20 of 1992, with the following terms of reference:—

1. To inquire into and investigate the financial administration from the 1st day of June, 1986 to the 22nd day of September, 1991 of [p.146] Government Ministers or Departments, Local Authorities, Parastatals including Public Corporations and the Bank of Sierra Leone, or Commissions or Councils established under the Constitution, and ascertain —

(a) whether or not any malpractices or irregularities were committed by any person with respect to those activities;

(b) the nature and extent of the malpractices and irregularities;

(c) the sums of money, and the identities of persons involved in such malpractices and irregularities,

2. To inquire into and investigate any persons or matters as from time to time be referred to the Commission by the National Provisional Ruling Council.

Isatu Kamara, applicant herein, and a witness before the Nylander Commission of Inquiry was on Wednesday, 8th day of July, 1992 found guilty of perjury and sentenced to 21 days imprisonment at the Central Prisons, Pademba Road, Freetown, under Section 3(a) of the National Provisional Ruling Council Decree No.4, 1992 - Commissions of Inquiry (Additional Powers) Decree, 1992.

Section 3(a) of N.P.R.C. Decree No.4 of 1992 states:

"Any person who makes any false statement to any Commission issued under the Commissions of Inquiry Act, knowing those statements [p.147] to be false or which he has no reason to believe to be true) shall be guilty of contempt punishable by imprisonment or fine.

It will suffice to state at this juncture that the offence of perjury in the Commissions of Inquiry Act CAP, 54 Laws of Sierra Leone, 1960 is created by Section 11 of that Act — and it states :—

Section 11 —

"Any witness who shall wilfully give false evidence in any such inquiry concerning the subject matter of such inquiry shall be guilty of perjury and be liable to be prosecuted and punished accordingly".

On 10th July, 1992 an application for leave to apply for an order of certiorari was made to this Court by Isatu Kamara against the orders of Hon. Mr. Justice Lynton B. O. Nylander dated 8th July, 1992 between :—

ISATU KAMARA — APPLICANT

AND

ATTORNEY GENERAL — RESPONDENT

In the said application, Counsel sought to invoke the supervisory jurisdiction of this Court under Section 125 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, 1991 Act No.6 of 1991 and also Section 148 of the said Constitution which deals with the powers, rights and privileges of Commissions of Inquiry.

Section 125 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone states:

[p.148]

"The Supreme Court shall have supervisory jurisdiction over all other Courts in Sierra Leone and over any adjudicating authority; and in exercise of its supervisory jurisdiction shall have power to issue such directives orders or writs including writs of habeas corpus orders of certiorari, mandamus and prohibition as it may consider appropriate for the purposes of enforcing or securing the enforcement of its supervisory powers".

Section 2 (1) of the PROCLAMATION —THE ADMINISTRATION OF SIERRA LEONE (NATIONAL PROVISIONAL RULING COUNCIL) PROCLAMATION, 1992, Public Notice No.20 of 1992 provides for the suspension of certain provisions of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.6 of 1991. It states:—

"All provisions of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, 1991 which came into operation on the 1st day of October, 1991 which are inconsistent or in conflict with this Proclamation or any Decree made thereunder shall be deemed to have been suspended with effect from the 29th day of April, 1992".

As far as we are aware, Section 125 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991, Act No. 6. of 1991, which invests this Court with supervisory jurisdiction over all other Courts in Sierra Leone and over any adjudicating authority has not been suspended and is still operative.

[p.149]

Counsel for applicant complained of passages here and there in exhibit "A" the record of proceedings of the Nylander Commission of Inquiry touching and bearing on applicant Isatu Kamara. We have carefully looked at these passages.

For the purposes of this ruling, and to avoid prolivity, we have thought it expedient to reproduce verbatim, only the exchanges which took place between the Chairman and the applicant, after the Commission had decided to find the latter guilty of perjury. It runs thus:

Mr. Chairman: The Commission has decided that you are guilty of perjury.

Mrs Kamara: Can I say something my Lord?

Chairman: Will you wait, I have finished with that. I have just specified two points in which we are not at one with. You said you started in 1991 and we are satisfied that you started before then. You said that you were given a letter from Mr. Sheriff, though he says that he could not recall, but categorically said that the Managing Director directed him then. This is what we say, we have found you guilty of perjury contrary to sections 3A of the decree, 1992. As such, I will not levy the ultimate or maximum punishment which this section calls for, but from here, forthwith, you will be taken to [p.150] the State Prison at Pademba Road, where you will be kept until July, 29th and you will be brought here again for the continuation of the examination. Have you got anything left? Let the Officers come and take custody of her.

Mrs Kamara: My Lord can I say something or can I explain myself?

Mr. Chairman: When we come back.

We have taken this step for purposes of clarity and to put things in their proper perspectives.

The issue before this Court is whether his Lordship

Lynton B. O. Nylander had jurisdiction to find applicant guilty of perjury under Section 3(a) of the National Provisional Ruling Council Decree No.4, 1992 —Commissions of Inquiry (Additional Powers) Decree, 1992 as he did. I am constrained once more to refer to the provisions of Section 3(a) of N.P.R.C. Decree No.4 of 1992 which states:

"Any person who makes any false statements to any Commission issued under the Commissions of Inquiry Act knowing those statements to be false or which he has no reason to believe to be true, shall be guilty of contempt."

From the foregoing, I can only say, with respect, that the Hon. Chairman acted in error in finding applicant guilty of perjury instead of contempt as provided by Section 3(a) of N.P.R.C. Decree No.4 of 1992, thereby acting in excess of [p.151] jurisdiction

Even if the Hon. Chairman had jurisdiction to find the applicant guilty of perjury, certain procedure must be followed before conviction and sentence.

It is provided by Section 11 of the Commission of Inquiry Act CAP.54 Laws of Sierra Leone, 1960 as follows:—

"Any witness who shall wilfully give false evidence, in any such inquiry concerning the subject-matter of such inquiry shall be guilty of perjury, and shall be liable to be prosecuted and punished accordingly".

The prosecution will then be a matter for the Attorney-General and the Director of Public Prosecutions to prefer a charge against the accused who will be tried by the High Court accordingly.

The rationale in my view in resorting to the expedient of an offence of contempt in Section 3(a) of Decree No.4 of 1992 is to make for the speedy despatch of the Commissions work, and to obviate the delay that would result in prosecutions under perjury, the contempt procedure being simpler and less irksome.

IN JOHNSON V. REGINAM ALR (S.L.) Series. 1970 - 71 Court of Appeal (Cr. App. No.18/70) an appeal against conviction for contempt, Sir Samuel Bankole Jones - President of the Court of Appeal delivering the judgment of the Court inter alia said at p.124 lines 23 - 33.

"All the authorities are agreed that when a judge has made up his mind to invoke the summary process for committing [p.152] for contempt, the following procedure should be followed. Firstly, the judge should make the person concerned aware of the pith of the charge against him. Secondly, the person, should be given an opportunity to show cause why he should not be so committed. He may then say anything by way of excuse, 'explanation or possibly correction of any misapprehension as to what has in fact been said or done. It is of the utmost importance that this opportunity should be given, and unless that is done the committal would be unlawful."

This brings me to the principles of natural justice, the violation of which was a ground of complaint. The applicant complained that the procedure adopted by the Chairman of the Commission in refusing to listen to her before sentencing her to imprisonment was an infringement of the principles of natural justice.

Indeed, there are fundamental principles which govern judicial and quasi- judicial inquiries, and one of these is the "audi alteram partem" rule, that is, a party to judicial proceedings Should not be condemned unheard. No one who has a case or against whom an unfavourable decision is given will believe he has been fairly treated if in the course of his trial in any quasi - judicial proceedings leading to his conviction and sentenced is refused hearing.

We have carefully read the records of the proceedings in this matter, and taking all the circumstances into consideration, it seems to us that the procedure, unwittingly no doubt, adopted [p.153] by Chairman Nylander in refusing to hear applicant before sentence, thereby not making it plain and manifest that justice was done, was bad. A judicial or quasi-judicial decision reached by a tribunal in violation of the rules of natural justice may be quashed on certiorari

Miss Attiba-Davies, Counsel for Respondent argued with force that applicant was only committed to prison and as such, she was not convicted. This was countered by applicant that committal to prison and sentence to prison are both convictions and referred to the reported case of In re: MANNI, 1964 - 66

ALR (S.L.) Series, Court of Appeal for Sierra Leone p.557 - Cr. App. No.28/66; where the Court of Appeal invited arguments from Counsel before application was made for leave to appeal in that matter, the case of a contemmor who had been convicted by the then Supreme Court (High Court).

The question was whether there existed in law a right of appeal to the Court of Appeal. Both sides agreed that there was. It was held by that Court that an order of the High Court, of committal for a criminal, contempt amounts to a conviction and the Court of Appeal therefore has jurisdiction to entertain an appeal against the order.

We are satisfied that this view was a correct one.

In view of the above reasons, we hold that this is a proper case in which the application for an order of certiorari ought to be granted and we so grant.

[p.154]

The proceedings therefore are hereby quashed.

And we direct that the applicant be forthwith discharged from custody in respect of her conviction and commitment thereunder.

MOMOH KAI — RESPONDENT

F.M. CAREW ESQ. For the Appellant

E.J. AKAR ESQ. for the Respondent

JUDGMENT

WARNE: J.S.C.

This is an appeal against the judgment of the Court of Appeal delivered on the 6th day of April, 1984 reversing the judgment of the High Court Delivered on the 22nd day of November, 1980. James Tamba (the Appellant herein) by writ of Summons dated 10th October, 1977 made a claim against Momoh Kai (the Respondent herein) for:

(a) Damages for trespass, and

(b) An injunction

The facts of the cased are as follows:

By Deed of Conveyance dated 2nd October, 1968, one Grant Sallu Bundu sold a certain piece or parcel of land situate and lying off City Road Wellington in the western Area of (the republic of) Sierra Leone to one Momoh Kamara. The land was demarcated in the said Conveyance thus, on the North by Private property 150.0 feet: on the South by Access Road 149.5 feet: on the east by the remaining portion of the said land then in the possession of the vendor 74.1 feet. The conveyance was tendered in evidence and marked Exh. “J” Momoh Kamara divided this land into three plots and sold one plot to James Camara Macauley. The Deed of conveyance [p.130] was dated 1st May, 1971 and a Copy was tendered in evidence and marked Exhibit “F 2".

On the 8th April, 1974, Momoh Kamara sold another portion of the Said land to Momoh Kai. This Conveyance was tendered and Harked Exh. "E".

On the 15th October, 1975, James Camara Macauley sold his piece of land to Momoh Kai. A Copy of the Conveyance was tendered and Marked Exh "G 2".

During the negotiation for the sa1e of Land by Momoh Kamara firstly to James Camara Macauley and secondly to the Respondent, the Appellant was the “go between”.

After Exhibit "G 2" had, been executed between James Camara Macauley and the Respondent, the Respondent said that was the said piece of 1and he bought from Momoh Kamara. Momoh Kamara had since died. The Respondent subsequently reported the matter to the C. I .D. and claimed from the Appellant the sum of Le1,637.50 for expense incurred on the land transaction.

The Appellant paid Respondent the money and Respondent subsequently executed a Deed of conveyance in favour of Appellant which was tendered in evidence as Exh. “A”.

Exhibit "A." is the subject matter of the dispute between Appellant and Respondent.

The History of the Proceedings is as follows:—

A writ of Summons issued on 10th October, 1977 was accompanied by a Statement of Claim. I will herein set out what I consider to be the material Paragraphs:—

"3. That by-Indenture of Conveyance dated the 8th day of April, 1974 expressed to be made between Momoh Kamara (Principal or plaintiff) of the first part and Momoh Kai (Defendant herein) of the other part, and registered as No 310 at Page 143 in volume 266 in the Book of Conveyance in the office of the Registrar General, Freetown, the said land was conveyed to the Defendant.

4. That after the execution of the said Indenture of conveyance someone laid claim to the said land which caused defendant to report plaintiff to the criminal Investigation Department of police in Freetown.

5. That the police on receipt of Defendant’s report against Plaintiff regarding the sale of said land, requested plaintiff to return the purchase price of the said land plus all expenses incurred by defendant which Plaintiff willingly did.

6. By an indenture of conveyance bearing date the 20th day of September, 1976 expressed to be made between Momoh Kai (defendant herein) Seaman of No. 66 soldier street, Freetown of the first part and James Tamba Seaman of No. 8D Cemetery Road, Congo Town, Freetown of the other part and registered as No. 972 at P.144 in Volume 287 in the Book of Conveyances in the Office of the Registered-General, Freetown the said land was re-conveyance by the Defendant herein to the Plaintiff herein for Le1,637.50.

7. That in spite of the said Conveyance of the said land the Defendant has trespassed on Plaintiff’s land by erecting permanent building structures on the said land without the consent of the Plaintiff.

8. The plaintiff therefore claims:—

(a) Damages for trespass

(b) An injunction against the defendant, his agents and servants from committing further acts of trespass.

(c) An order ordering Defendant to demolish all structures erected on the said land.

(d) Damages for mense profit at the sum of Le1,000 per annum.

(e) And for any other relief which this Honourable Court may deem fit in interest of Justice."

[p.132]

The respondent duly filed a defence which was subsequently amended.

The amended Defence was in the following terms:—

"1. The defendant admits Paragraphs 1 to 5 of the Statement of Claim filed herein.

2. The Defendant avers that he was induced by C.I.D. officers to sign the conveyance bearing date of the 20th day of September, 1976 and expressed to be made between Momoh Kai (Defendant herein) Seaman and James Tamba (Plaintiff herein) as stated in paragraph 6 of the statement of claim filed herein but denies selling the said land therein described in the said Conveyance to the Plaintiff.

3. The Defendant will further contend that the sum of Le1,637.50 paid by the Plaintiff to the Defendant was merely a refund by the said defendant to the Plaintiff of the land originally to the plaintiff of the purchase price of the land originally to the Plaintiff of the land originally bought from Momoh Kamara in Conveyance registered as number 310 at page 143 in volume 266 of the Books of conveyances in the office of the Registrar-General plus other expenses incurred in the improvement of the said land and that the defendant was not selling his land to the Plaintiff and had no reason to do so.

4. The Defendant will contend that he is the Legal and rightful owner of the said Property for which he holds a valid and registered conveyance fore the said Property dated 15th day of October, 1975 and registered as No. 922 at page 48 in volume 279 in the books of Conveyance in the Office of the Registrar-General."

The plaintiff filed an amended reply and made the following avertments:—

"1. The Plaintiff says that paragraph 2 of the amended Defence is a complete contradiction of admission already made in paragraph 1 respectively of Defence and amended Defence.

[p.133]

2. The plaintiff denies Defendants in paragraph 2 of Amended Defence and puts him to strict proof of his allegation.

3. Save as is herein expressly admitted the Plaintiff denies each and every allegation of fact contanined as if the same were set out seriatim and specifically traversed."

In due course, the action went to trial, the trial commenced on 21st December, 1978 before Alghali J. (as he then was). Both parties were represented by counsel. The plaintiff testified and called one witness Frederick Cornelius Macauley, a surveyor. Five witnesses testified on behalf of the defendant including the defendant himself. They were Miss Henrietta Aubee of the office of the Register-General, Mr. James Seisay Kamara, Mr. Lysias McEwen a surveyor, and Mr. Gustavis Fowler a Deputy Assistant Registrar, Magistrate court.

Counsel for both parties addressed the Learned Trial Judge on the 4th and 11th June, 1979 respectively, at the end of which the Learned Judge reserved Judgment. Judgment was delivered on the 22nd November, 1980. The Judgment was in favour of the Appellant. The learned Judge made the following orders:—

"(1) That damages of Le500 be awarded against Defendant.

(2) That the Defendant, his servant or Agents are restrained from entering the said land or to commit further trespass to the land.

(3) That what is upon the land belongs to the land.

(4) That the costs of this Action to be paid to Plaintiff. Such costs to be taxed."

The Respondent appealed to the court of Appeal on nine grounds:—

I will therefore state grounds 1, 2, 9 which I think will suffice for the purpose of the Appeal. They are "(1) The Learned Trial Judge erred in law and fact when he held, that the Appellant/Defendant made a valid sale on his land to Respondent's admission in his statement of claim that the land was re-conveyed to him after he had refunded Appellant's original purchase money for the land sold to Appellant by Momoh Kamara (deceased) but not the land sold to Appellant by James Camara Macauley.

[p.134]

(2) The Learned Trial Judge erred in Law when he failed to properly consider Appellant's Defence or consider them at all.

(9) The judgment of the High Court was against the weight of the evidence."

The hearing of the Appeal commenced before SHORT, NAVO and TURAY J.J.A. on 19th October, 1982 and ended on 28th March, 1984 when judgment of the High Court was reversed. Judgment was delivered on 6th April, 1984 allowing the Appeal and setting aside the judgment and orders of the High Court.

It is against that judgment that the Appellant has appealed to this Court. Several grounds of Appeal were filed on behalf of the Appellant and argued before us by his counsel. It was not necessary to set them out. Suffice it to say that the material issues raised in this appeal may be formulated thus:—

(1) Was exhibit "A" a legally executed conveyance of land situate and lying off Main Road Wellington by Respondent to Appellant?

(2) Was the identity of the land conveyed to appellant by Respondent clearly and unequivocally defined? If the answer is in the affirmative, the

(3) Did respondent commit an act of trespass on the land?

(4) If Respondent committed an act of trespass on the land, is Appellant entitled to damages and an Injunction?

(5) Is Appellant entitled to any other relief?

I will now proceed to consider these several issues:

It will be convenient to consider the first and second together. It will be re-called that the land was originally owned by Momoh Kamara (deceased). He authorised the Appellant to sell the land on his behalf. Appellant divided the land into three plots. He sold one Plot to James Camara Macauley, one plot to the Respondent and one plot to Kelfala Kanu. The dispute arose as to whether the plot he sold to James Camara Macauley was the same plot sold to the Respondent. The deed of conveyance in respect of the Plot sold to a James Camara Macauley was tendered in evidence as Exhibit "F 2". This was dated 15th May, 1971. The survey plan LS.196/67. The hearing on the beacons were Q.5/71; Q.6/71; Q.7/71; Q.8/71 and it is stated thereon certified true copy 21A/71.

The dimension is as follows:— 75 feet by 50 feet by 75 feet by 50 feet.

The deed of conveyance in respect of the land sold to the Respondent was tendered and marked Exhibit "E". This was dated 8th April, 1974. The survey Plan on Exhibit "E" was IS.1535/73 which is a re-Survey of plan IS.21A/71. The bearing on the beacons were Q.5/71; Q.6/71; Q.7/71; Q/71.

The dimension is as follows: 74 feet by 50; 75 feet by 49.6 feet.

After James Camara Macauley had purchased the plot mentioned above, he went to the land in 1977 and found out that it was Appellant who erecting the store. After making some representations to Momoh Kamara, the vendor, he decided to sell the land to Appellant for Le1,000. the offer was accepted, but later , after he had received the money, he said he returned it to him. He said he did this only to confirm that he owned the land. James Camara Macauley said, he later found another store being erected on the same land which he discovered was being erected by Respondent. He consulted a solicitor; action was being when he decided to sell the land to the Respondent. He sold the land to Respondent and executed a deed of Conveyance which was tendered as Exhibit "G 2".

I will now consider Exhibit “G 2“.

There is a Survey Plan attached to Exhibit “G 2”. It is marked LS. 1533/75 it is a sub-division of survey plan LS.196/67. The beacons on the plan are marked Q.5/71; Q.6/71; Q.7/71; Q.8/71. The dimension is 50.0 feet by 75.0 feet by 50.0 feet by 75.0 feet.

The various plans are very revealing except for a difference of the .6 feet on survey plan LS. 1535/73 attached to Exhibit “E”; the other particulars are identical.

In his evidence, James Camara Macauley said “I later came to know that P.W 1 sold my land to Momoh Kai (Defendant). It was in the year between 1974 -75. Yes the only compromise was to sell the same land to Momoh Kai though I know P.W. 1 had sold it to him. Yes Momoh Kai told me that this land I was claiming was sold to him by P.W. 1 I see Exhibit “A” it is a conveyance from Momoh Kai to James Tamba.”

P.W. 1 is the Appellant and Momoh Kai is the Respondent. What did Respondent say in respect of this transaction with James Camara Macauley. Kamara through P.W.1. I paid for the land through P.W.1 to Momoh Kamara. I paid Le600.00. A conveyance was executed in my favour. There was a dispute concerning this land.

I later summon by D.W. 2 for the said land, he claiming ownership of the said land. Before the dispute arose I had build a store on the land I bought. The store was demolished so I reported P.W.1. Later Momoh Kamara P.W.1. told me to build store again as I am the owner of the land, so I erected a store again. I then start to build a dwelling house on the land. D.W.2 issued a Writ against me. I went to the Registrar-General’s Office I discovered the same land which I had bought from Momoh Kamara through P.W.1 was in fact registered under the name of D.W.2 as the owner. As a result, I contacted D.W.2 concerning the said land telling him that I now realised he is the registered owner of the land. I later re-negotiated to purchase the land from D.W.2 for Le1,470.00 after which a conveyance was executed in my favour.”

It will be observed that the foregoing evidence was given by and on behalf of the Respondent. It is necessary to consider the evidence of the Appellant in this regard. He states “the land which was given to me tobe sold by Momoh Kamara I divided into three portions. The 1st plot is the portion I sold to James Macauley also known as James Camara Macauley. The middle plot I sold to Momoh kai the Defendant and plot furtherest I sold to Kalfala Kanu. I executed a conveyance to defendant Momoh Kai on 8th April, 1974 ……

The defendant paid Le600 for the plot. After the conveyance was executed in 1975 I was invited to C.I.D. Headquarters. I met Defendant there. I was asked if I know him. I answered in the affirmative. I was asked if there was any dealings between us about land at Wellington off main motor Road. I told them he gave me money for land to Momoh Kamara. I told them he paid Le600.00 to the said Momoh Kamara (defendant) (deceased). He now wants Le1,637.50 for the same land sold previously to him for Le600.00. He said he had developed the land.

I paid this amount of Le1, 637.50 to the C.I.D. Headquarters and Defendant handed over all the document to me again.

The defendant re-conveyed the land to me in 1976 of the same land. The conveyance was executed to me in my name. This conveyance — tendered no objection — Exhibit "A".

[p.137]

This is a convenient point to examine Exhibit "A". Exhibit "A" is a Deed of Conveyance made between Momoh Kai and James Tamba. The survey plan is marked LS.1766/75 and is a re-survey of LS.21A/71.

The beacons are marked Q.5/71; Q.6/71; Q.7/71; Q8/71. The dimension is shown as 50 feet by 74 feet by 49.6 feet by 75 feet. The common feature which runs through the various plans mentioned above is the markings on the beacons, that is to say, Q.5/71; Q.6/71; Q.7/71; Q8/71.

When Respondent was executing Deed of conveyance Exhibit "A" he well knew he was doing although he testified that he was forced into signing the document by the C.I.D.

It must be recalled that it was the Respondent who invited the C.I.D. into a purely civil matter.

How can he be heard to say that undue influence was brought to bear on him to sign the document. The Respondent had already received Le1,637.50 (one thousand sic hundred and thirty-seven Leones fifty Centsw) for what Respondent called "my money expense were incurred were refunded to me by P.W.1 ……

At the C.I.D.; as a result of my complaint to them P.W.1 refunded Le1,600.00 plus this included capital expenses incurred on the land." The inference I can draw from the evidence is that the Respondent having discovered that he cannot enjoy the free and undisturbed possession of t6he land in dispute, opted voluntarily to dispose of it; to the Appellant who originally got him involved in the whole transaction. I do not agree with the court of Appeal, when it declared that:

"The Conveyance referred to in Exhibit "A" is the purported re-conveyance by Momoh Kai to James Tamba dated 20th September, 1976." In my view, Exhibit "A" was a genuine and legally executed conveyance voluntarily made by Respondent. The answer to the first issue, is therefore, in the affirmative.

[p.138]

There is abundance evidence that the identity of the land was never in doubt. The evidence of the Appellant, the evidence of the Respondent, the evidence of James Camara Macauley, the evidence of Mr. McEwen the surveyor and the various Exhibits tendered, that is to say, Exhibits “A”, “F 2”, G2, “E” speak eloquently of the identity and give clear demarcation of its boundary.

Apart from the evidence of the Appellant, the Respondent himself conceded that land he conveyed to the Appellant and demarcated in the plan on Exhibit “A” was the plot sold to him originally by James Camara Macauley. He conceded also that was the piece or parcel of land James Camara Macauley sold to him.

The evidence of Mr. M’cewen is too cogent to be ignored. I am surprised that the court of Appeal was not attracted by such evidence. Indeed the Court of Appeal dismissed the evidence of both Surveyors summarily. In my view, the court of Appeal misdirected itself on the evidence touching and concerning the identity of the land. It is quite that if the Court had carefully considered the survey plans on the various exhibits culminating in Exhibit “A” and the evidence of Mr. McEwen, the identity of the land would have been crystal clear to the court of Appeal.

Even Exhibit “C” which was tendered as an encroachment plan is in the perimeter of land enclosed by beacons .5/71; Q.6/71; Q.7/71; Q8/71.

In my view, the Court of Appeal did not attach much weight to the survey plans, which respect was unfortunate. The learned Trial Judge considered them and the identity of the land into which the land of Momoh Kamara was divided and given in evidence, in my opinion, misled the court of Appeal. The powers of the Court of Appeal to disturb a finding of fact by the trial Judge has been well established by a series of decisions over the years. These powers are exercised on well established principles:—

See the case of Powell v. Streatham Manor Nursing Home A.E.R. Reprint (1935) 58. The head note states:— “On an Appeal from the decision of a judge sitting without a Jury the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal is free and un restricted. The court has the same right is free and unrestricted. The court has the same right as the Trial Judge to come to decisions on issues of fact as well as of law. But the court is still a Court of [p.139] Appeal, and in exercising it’s functions it is subject to the inevitable qualifications of that position.

Where the question is one of credibility, where either story told in the witness box may be true, where the probabilities and possibilities are evenly balanced, and where the personal motives and interests of the parties cannot but affect their testimony, an Appellant Court should be reluctant to differ from the Judge who has seen and heard the witnesses and has had the opportunity of watching their demeanour, unless it is clearly shown that he has fallen in error.”

This was a case decided in the House of Lords; among the law Lords who gave concurring judgments was Lord Wright. In his judgment the Learned Law Lord referred to the principles laid down in Clarke v. Edinburgh and District Tramways Co. (1914) S.C. 775 and then said:—

“Two principles are, I think, beyond controversy.. First it is, I think, clear that in an Appeal of this character — that is from a decision of a Trial Judge based on the opinion of the trustworthiness of witness whom he has seen — The Court of Appeal; “IN order to reverse must not merely entertain doubts whether the decision below is right, but be convinced that it is wrong.”

The Julia Bland v. Ross (1860) 14 Moore P.C.C. at p.235 per Lord Kingsdown, cited with approval by Lord Summer (1927) A.C. at p.47. And secondly, the court has no right to ignore that facts the judge has found on his impression of the credibility of the witnesses and proceed to the case on paper on its own view of the probabilities as if there has been no oral hearing. Lord Summer protested against such a course being taken; he thus stated (1927) A.C. at p.50 what were to his mind the proper questions which the Appellate Court should propound to itself in considering the conclusions of fact of the trial Judge.

"(i) Does it appear from the President’s judgment that he made full use of the opportunity given him by hearing the viva voce evidence?

(ii) Was there evidence before him, affecting the relative credibility of the witnesses, which would make the exercise of his critical faculties in judging the demeanour of the witnesses a useful and necessary operation?

(iii) Is there any glaring improbability about the story accepted, sufficient in itself to constitute a governing fact which in relating to others has created a wrong impression or any specific misunderstanding or disregard of a material fact or any extreme or over whelming pressure that has had the same effect?

Did the Court of Appeal give head to the above guidelines? I do not think so. See also the case Dr. C. W. Seymour-Wilson v. Musa Abess Civ. App. No.5/79 decided in this court on the 17th day of June, 1981 (unreported) Luke C.J. said at p. 66. “There is no doubt that an Appellate court power to evaluate the evidence led in the court below reach its own conclusion and in a suitable case to reverse, the findings of fact of a trial Judge. But those powers are exercisable on well settled principles and an appellate Court will not disturb the findings of fact of a Trial Judge unless those principles are applicable. The principles have been frequently stated locally and in other common wealth countries.

In view of what I have stated above, there was not justifiable reason for the court of appeal to disturb the finding of fact of the Learned Trial Judge. “Having found that the identity of the land is not in doubt, I will now consider whether the Appellant was in possession of the land. I have already found that the Appellant was armed with a validity executed conveyance relating to the land i.e. exhibit “A”. However he is not claiming for a Declaration of Title, he is claiming for trespass to a place or parcel of land based on Exhibit “A”.

In order to prove trespass the Appellant must show by evidence that he was in possession of the land.

“Trespass to land is an entry upon or any direct and immediate act or interference with the possession of land.”

[p.141]

This was so stated by Mrs. Justice A.V.A. Awunor-Renner in the Case of Momoh Seisay v. Amadu Kargbo and others Sup. Court Civ.App. No. 1/82 deliverd on the 31st December, 1984 (unreported). The Learned Justice then referred to two passages of Halburys Laws of England 3rd Edition Volume 38 at p. 739 para. 1205 and p. 744 para. 1214. She then referred to the case of Wuta ofei v. Danquah (1961) 2 W.L.R. 1238, and Bristow v. Cormmican (1878) 3 A.C. 641 at 637: and Ocean Estates v. Norman Pinder (1969) 2 W.L.R. 1364. After the Learned Justice had stated the principles of law enunciated in those Cases; She had this to say:—

"Actual Possession is a question of fact which consists of an intention to possess the land in question and exercise control over the land. The type of control which should be exercised over the land would vary with the nature of the land and the use of the land in question."

I entirely agree with the learned Justice and would not add anything more. The standard of proof required in a case of trespass based on title to land is much higher than that based on possession. See the case of Dustant E. John and Another v. William Stafford and others Sup. Court Civ. App. No. 1/75. Judgment delivered 13th July, 1976 per Betts J.S.C. page 11 – p. 12 (unreported). This judgment is very instructive and the ratio decidendi can be applied with equal force in the instant case. "The Respondent in his Statement of Defence has claimed "that he is the legal and rightful owner of the said property dated 15th day of October 1975 registered as No. 922 at page 48 in volume 279 in the Books of Conveyances in the office of the Registrar General." The respondent gave evidence in support of his claim.

In another, case Dr. Seymour-Wilson v. Musa Abess Civ. App. No. 5/79 decided in the court of appeal on 17th June, 1981 (unreported) above the Learned Chief Justice referring to the case of Kokilinye v. Odu (1935) 2 W.A.C.A. 336 at 337 – 338 said inter alia, "Quite apart from the Rule first stated above it is relevant to mention that the Defendant pleaded in his Defence that he was in possession of the Disputed land. That Plea is in accordance with order XVIII Rule 20 of the High Court Rules. The effect of such Plea is a denial of the allegations of facts in the statement of Claim."

The learned Chief Justice then referred to the case of Danford v.

Has the Appellant proved the averment that he was in possession? In my opinion, he has by virtue of Exhibit "A". The Learned Trial Judge did not make any specific finding that the Appellant was in possession at the time of the trespass by Respondent. Nevertheless, the Learned Trial Judge mad e a positive finding of fact that Appellant was legal owner of the land by virtue of Exhibit "A". I do not think this finding ought to have been disturbed by the Court of Appeal. This is a complete disregard of the principles laid down over the years where a court of Appeal can disturb a finding of fact by a trial Judge. The court of Appeal deprived itself of the opportunity of disturbing this finding of fact when it held that "The real "res" for identification in this case was which of the three plots of land being off main Motor Road, Wellington NOT THE LAND OFF Main Motor Road Wellington. This in my respectful view, was the crux of the matter which eluded the learned Trial Judge's attention nor did it elude my attention either. The evidence is clear and unmistakable.

For the reasons I have stated above, I will give the answer to the third issue in the affirmative and hold that the Respondent committed an act of trespass on the land owned by Appellant.

Is the Appellant entitled to Damages and Injunction? I believe he is entitled to Damages and the injunction prayed for.

No evidence was given to warrant a relief for mesne profit. In the circumstances I will allow the Appeal, set aside the judgment and orders of the court of appeal, restore the Judgment of the High Court in Respect of trespass and the consequent Damages awarded and the injunction ordered.

[p.142]

I will also award Taxed costs to the appellant incurred in the High Court and the Court of Appeal respectively. Costs occasioned by this Appeal to the Appellant assessed at Le50,000.

RULING

BECCLES DAVIES.J.S.C.

The applicant Madam Kadiatu Jalloh seeks leave to issue an Order of Certiorari to remove into this Honourable Court for the purpose of being quashed an Order or judgment dated the 31st day of January 1986 authorising the National Insurance Company Limited No. 18/20 Walpole Street for possession of No.14 Wallpole Street the Matrimonial home of the applicant and THREE OTHER WIVES of the late Alhaji Abubakar Jalloh of No.14, Walpole Street." The order or judgment dated 31st January 1986 referred to in the application was made by the High Court.

The power of this Court to issue an order of certiorari is to be found in section 105 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1978 (Act No. 12 of 1978).

Section 105 provides—

"The Supreme Court shall have supervising jurisdiction over all other Courts in Sierra Leone and over any adjudicat1ng authority; and in exercise of its supervisory jurisdictions shall have power to issue such directions, orders or writs [p.2] or orders in the nature of habeas corpus, certiorari, mandamus or prohibition as it may consider appropriate for the purposes of enforcing or securing the enforcement of its supervisory powers."

The applicant has involved the provision of Section 105. The Order of Certiorari lies at the instance of an aggrieved party for the purpose or removing the proceedings of the inferior Courts of record or other persons or bodies of persons exercising judicial and quasi-judicial functions and determining whether such proceedings shal1 be quashed, or to quash them. It will issue to quash a determination for want or excess of jurisdiction, error on the face of the record, breach of the rules of natural justice, or where the determination was procured by fraud, col1usion or perjury.

The proceedings which are the subject of this application were commenced and concluded in the High Court. Final judgment was entered for the respondents. Several grounds have been urged in the applicant's statement. The short point to be decided is can an order for certiorari be made quashing the judgments of inferior courts of civil jurisdiction? The answer to that question is No. (See Halsbury's Laws of England 3rd Ed. Vol at page 130.) Where it is stated that certiorari does not lie to quash the judgment of inferior court of civil jurisdiction. See also LAWES v HUTCHINSON (1835) 3 DOWL 506 at pp. 508.

In the circumstances the application for leave is refused.

INTRODUCTION

This is an application for an enlargement of time to appeal against the judgment of the Court of Appeal dated the 2nd day of April 1996 made pursuant to Rule 26 (4) of the Supreme Court Rules (Public Notice No. l of 1982) (the Rules). The Notice of Motion was dated the 31st day of July 1996 and was lodged at the Registry on the 1st day of August 1996 but was listed for hearing on 22nd September 1999. No reason has been adduced for the interim between the date of lodgement and the date of hearing. It seems to me that there was a serious administrative lapse but it is my considered view that the lapse should in no way affect the computation of time in deciding whether or not the application should be granted or refused. The application is supported by two affidavits; one by Kora Sesay, the 1st Applicant dated the 31st day of July 1996, and the other by Mr. Seny Kama1 solicitor for the Applicants dated the 24th day of September 1999. At the hearing of the application on 22nd September 1999, Mr. Kamal sought the leave of the Court to file a Supplemental Affidavit and leave was granted.

[p.214]

The Notice of Motion was taken out over three months after the date of delivery of the judgment against which it is sought to appeal Rule 26 (1) of the Rules provides:

"Where an appeal lies as of right the Appellant shall lodge his notice of appeal within three months from the date of the judgment appealed against unless the Supreme Court shall enlarge the time".

This provision is mandatory.

However, in order to allow a concession to Appellants who do not fulfil the provisions of Rule 26 (1) but who have acceptable explanatory reasons for non-compliance, Rule 26 (4) stipulates, inter alia, that

"No application for enlargement of time for appeal shall be made after the expiration of one month from the expiration of the time prescribed within which an appeal may be brought. Every application for enlargement of time shall be by motion supported by an affidavit settin g forth good and substantial reasons for the application and by Grounds of Appeal which prima facie show good cause for leave to be granted".

The application is made within the time allowed by Rule 26 (4) but compliance with the time alone is not sufficient for the application to be granted. Rule 26 (4) explicitly imposes three conditions after the fulfillment of which the Court may exercise its discretion to enlarge the time for appeal.

1. An affidavit in support of the application must be sworn.

2. The affidavit must set forth good and substantial reasons.

3. The proposed Grounds of Appeal must be good on the face of the application.

THE APPLICANTS

There are three Applicants but only one of them, the 1st Applicant, has filed an affidavit. Paragraph 3 of the said affidavit mentions one Abdul Sesay as having 'been taken ill some time in June and was taken up country where he died. During the hearing of the application on the 22nd September, 1999 when asked by the Court whether that Abdul Sesay was the same as the 2nd Applicant, Mr. Kamal, Counsel for the Applicants replied that he was the same person. When again Counsel was asked why he did not appeal within the time allowed by Rule 26 (1) his candid and correct reply was that he could not have done so without the authority of the Applicants. In my judgment, I find it inconceivable how then Counsel could have made an application on behalf of the 2nd Applicant who according to the affidavit of the 1st Applicant was not aware of the judgment of the Court of appeal and was dead at the time of the Notice of Motion for enlargement of time, a fact confirmed by Counsel himself. I therefore find that the application of the 2nd Applicant is not properly before the Court. Similarly, in his Supplemental Affidavit, Mr. Kamal deposed that the 3rd Applicant is dead (date of death unspecified). I cannot see how this application can be made by the 3rd [p.215] Applicant too. Dead men do not tell tales. The correct procedure would have been , for the personal representatives of the deceased, if any, to make an application for an order of substitution and then an application for enlargement of time provided the deceased were alive at the date of the application but died subsequently.

Rule 37 of the rules makes this provision. It stipulates:

"An application for an Order for Rivivor or Substitution shall be accompanied by an affidavit sworn by the Applicant or where the Applicant is represented by a legal practitioner the said affidavit shall be sworn by such legal practitioner showing who is the proper person to be substituted, or entered, on the record in place of, or in addition to a party who has died or undergone a change of status".

On this ground too, I hold that the application of the 3rd Applicant is not properly before the Court.

Before I leave the issue of competence let me deal with one connected matter which in my opinion needs mention. I observe from the two affidavits filed herein that the subject matter of the dispute between the parties is land. One significant question that requires an answer is whether the 1st Applicant as survivor of the other Applicants could have made this application without the intervention of the personal representatives of the two deceased parties. As a matter of law if there are more than one party to a dispute as either Plaintiffs or Defendants and judgment is given against one side and all but one of the losers choose not to appeal against the judgment, the remainder can legitimately do so but it all depends on the interest of that person in the subject matter of the case. As I have already mentioned ownership of land is in issue in this case and the land is claimed by both the Applicants and the Respondents. It is not clear from the affidavits filed what was the interest that each of the Applicants held in the land. I can see however from Mr. Kamal's affidavit that they were claiming a freehold estate in the land, but nothing more can be gathered from it whether they were claiming as tenants-in-common or as joint-tenants. If they held as tenants-in-common each party had a distinct fixed and undivided share in it and the 1st Applicant could appeal without the intervention of the personal representatives of the deceased and would therefore correctly have made; this application alone. (See R.E. Megarry: A Manual of The Law of Real Property 2nd ed. p.241). But if they held as joint-tenants he could not do so. The position with regard to joint tenancies is clearly stated in Blackstone's Commentaries Vol. 2 (1766) at page 182 which I regard as the correct statement of the law;' it reads. "In all actions relating to their estate, one joint-tenant cannot sue or be sued without joining the others".

AFFIDAVIT OF 1ST APPLICANT

I have already stated that one of the conditions on which the Court will exercise its discretion to enlarge the time is that the Affidavit in support of the Application must set forth good and substantial reasons for the application. I will now summarise the reasons preferred by the 1st Applicant as follows:—

1. The judgment in the Court of Appeal had been reserved for over two years and he did not think that judgment would be given at the time that it was given.

2. He went up country with a sick and dying man and stayed there until after the 40th day ceremony.

3. If the 2nd Applicant had not died and the roads were safe he would not have stayed for the length of time that he took.

4. He was not aware of the date of the judgment unti1 he went to his solicitor after he had returned from up country.

I will now dilate on these reasons to see whether they meet the requirement, of good and substantial reasons. The Reader's Digest Universal 'Dictionary, 1987 defines "good reason" as a reason that is "genuine or real" Stroud's Judicial Dictionary Vol. 4 Third Edition, states that the adjective "substantial" is "a word of no fixed meaning, it is an unsatisfactory medium for carrying the idea of some , ascertainable proposition of the whole (Terry's Motors, Ltd v. Rinder [1984] S.A.S.R. 167)" Goodness and substantiality are words of value judgment about which much ink has been spilt by relativist philosophers throughout the ages and I am inclined to agree with Ashurst J. who in delivering the judgment of the Court in R. V. Stubbs, 2 T.R. 395, said, "The word 'substantial' is a relative term". In Palser v. Grinling [1948] 1 ALL E.R. 1 Vicount Simon in the English House of Lords said" One of the primary meanings of substantial is equivalent to considerable, solid or big; it is in this sense that we speak of a substantial fortune, a substantial meal, a substantial man, a substantial argument or ground of defence" (see [1948] 1 ALL E.R. 1 at p. 11). In my judgment, for a reason to be good and substantial within the context in which I am dealing, it must not only be genuine on the face of it but it must also be reasonable and so convincing that a reasonable man can conclude that the Applicant had done all that was possible to avoid the default. Evidence of a family tie between the 1st Applicant and the deceased, the death certificate of the deceased or an acceptable explanatory statement for its non production, notification by the 1st Applicant to his solicitor of his pending departure to the provinces and of his forwarding address, the time that elapsed between the date of the delivery of the judgment and the date that he left for the provinces, and the date of his return to Freetown are factors which, might be in favour of the 1st Applicant.

I will now consider whether the 1st Applicant has provided the requisite evidence for this Court to be able to exercise its discretion in his favour. He has not established any family tie between himself and the 2nd Applicant. I shall elaborate on this issue later in this ruling. He deposed that he went up country without informing his Solicitor and only got to know about the judgment on his return. Obliquely, his reason for doing so was that the judgment had been reserved since "about mid 1993'. While I do not approve or disapprove of delays in the delivery of judgment in these present times taking into consideration the conditions under which my brothers work, I apprehend that it is incumbent upon litigants to inform their solicitors of their movements and changes of addresses when they have cases pending in the Courts. Failure to do so is at their peril. It is only in exceptional cases like sickness and deprivation of complete freedom of movement in circumstances that they are unable to contact a relative or mend or a well-wisher to inform their solicitor of their dilemma that such failure becomes excusable.

I will now proceed to the time factor. The 1st Applicant alleges that the 2nd Applicant was taken ill some time in June (the exact date unspecified) and that the deceased died thereafter (the exact date unspecified). He stayed up country until the 40th day ceremony and thereafter returned to Freetown (against the exact date unspecified). I shall return to the ceremony later in this ruling. As time is of the essence in this application it is of the absolute necessity that the Applicant's solicitor should have ensured that he obtained from his client the dates of these events as exactly as possible. I shall nevertheless endeavour to compute the time but before I do so I will refer to another aspect of uncertainty in the time frame of events. The 1st Applicant deposed that his solicitor told him that the judgment had been reserved since about mid 1993. Here again no precise date is given. This imprecision, in, my judgment, should not have occurred since the Applicant's solicitor who prepared the affidavit should have obtained the precise date from the records of the case so as to make the information available to his client. Alternatively, Counsel should have sworn an affidavit himself deposing to this fact (see Rule 36 of the Rules). I will now return to the computation of time. Judgment was delivered on 2nd April 1996 and the 1st Applicant left for up Country some time in June. There is a time lapse of at least two months from the date of the judgment to the time that he left even if he left on 1st June 1996. A diligent solicitor, and I have no doubt that Mr. Kamal is one, should have informed his client of the judgment within the three months period. I also do not doubt that Mr. Kamal made the effort but his client had skedaddled before he sent to him for in paragraph 2 of his affidavit he deposed: "My solicitor informs me that he sent someone to find me but that he could not find my address". Which address he was referring to, his address in Freetown or up country, it is difficult to comprehend.

The 1st Applicant explained his over-stay up country as being due to the death of the deceased followed by the 40th day ceremony and the unsafeness of the road. He has not stated what made the road unsafe and which road it was leading from which town up country to Freetown. I am not oblivious of the war situation that prevailed in this country since 1991 and that from April 1997 to the present most of the roads linking Freetown with the provinces have been rendered unsafe. But I am also not oblivious of the fact that in June 1996 the 1st Applicant using the same roads went up country with a sick man, stayed until after the 40th day ceremonies which could not have taken place before 10 July 1996 and returned to Freetown on or before 31 July 1996, the date of his affidavit - a span of at most 20 days. Surely all of the roads in this country would not have been unsafe during that period. In fact by the 10 July 1996 the three month period within which to file an appeal had expired. The unsafeness of the roads is, in my judgment, therefore irrelevant.

I now come back to the family tie which I have mentioned earlier in the ruling. According to the customs and traditions of many ethnic communities in this country the appropriate place for a man to die and be buried is his home town or village. Migration has resulted in the exodus of many ethnic groups from rural to urban areas in quest of employment opportunities and other greener pastures. It is therefore common ground that while in Freetown and a member of a migrant ethnic group is overtaken by 'illness which is likely to be fatal, he is taken to his home town or village where the rest of his relatives reside. It is a common belief among these groups, a belief which I am not competent to accept, challenge or denounce, that native herbs and therapy in some cases, are more medicinal and potent than [p.218] treatment available in hospitals. Furthermore, death is not only a macabre event to the living but is also an association with the departed ancestors. The combination calls for the celebration of the life of the deceased accompanied by societal ceremonies. In appropriate cases our Courts are bound to take cognisance of these customs since customary law is part of the common law of this country.

See s. 170(2) of the 1991 Constitution Act No.6 of 1991.

The 1st Applicant has not however averred that he belongs to one such ethnic group nor has he established any relationship of consanguinity or affinity between him and the 2nd Applicant despite the similarity of their surnames.

On the whole, I find that the affidavit of the 1st Applicant is vague and inadequate and the provision of Rule 26(4) of the rules with respect to good and substantial reasons for the enlargement of time has not been complied with.

THE PROPOSED GROUNDS OF APPEAL

Exhibit "A" attached to the affidavit of Kora Sesay in support of the application contains two Grounds of Appeal. They are

1. That judgment is against the weight of evidence

2. That the judgment is unreasonable and cannot be supported having regard to the evidence.

When this Court pointed out to Mr. Kamal that the two grounds are in fact only one Ground of Appeal, one being civil and the other criminal, he conceded that there was only one ground but that he decided to put both grounds ex abundanti cautela because he alleged that there have been conflicting opinions in the Court of Appeal as to which ground was appropriate in Civil Appeals. I think that this conflict, if there is any, should now be resolved once and for all.

For criminal appeals, Rule 75(2) of the Rules provides specifically, inter alia, as follows:

"No Ground of Appeal which is vague or general in terms of disclosing no reasonable ground shall be permitted except the general ground that the judgment is unreasonable or cannot be supported having regard to the evidence".

There is no similar provision in the Rules governing Civil Appeals and so there appears to be a vacuum in the law. Rule 5(2) of the rules states:

"Where no provision is expressly made by these Rules regarding the practice and procedure which shall apply to any appeal or application before the Supreme Court, the Supreme Court shall prescribe by means of practice directions such practice and procedure as in the opinion of the Supreme Court the justice of the appeal or application may require".

There has been as yet no practice direction by the Supreme Court with regard to the form that a general Ground of Appeal in civil cases should take: However, it has been the perennial practice in our Courts to adopt the appropriate wording of the general ground as it appears in ground 1 of the proposed notice of appeal of the Applicants and I see no good reason to depart from it. (See the "English Annual Practice 1960 Vol. 1p. 1660; Chitty & Jacobs, Queen's Bench Forms, 21st Edition Form 2000). This is the Ground of Appeal based on a melange of facts commonly resorted to by many a Counsel desperate for a ground of appeal as a last resort when they cannot pinpoint a specific misdirection in law substantial enough to make it a ground of its own. It has become the bountiful answer to fit all appeals just like the barber's chair that fits all buttocks — the pin buttock, the quatch buttock, the brown buttock, or any buttock, if I may borrow that expression from Shakespeare (See All's Well That Ends Well, Act 2 scene 2). In appropriate cases an appeal can succeed on this ground alone but the evidence against which the judgment is given must be weighty and overwhelming indeed.

It is my considered view that for a straight appeal under Rule 26(1) it is not necessary for the Court to look at the substance of any of the Grounds of Appeal until the appeal is heard. But for an application under Rule 26(4) of the Rules the Court is bound to consider whether the grounds prima facie show good cause for leave to be granted. In my judgment, this provision requires the Court to look at the face of the proposed Grounds of Appeal to see whether there is an arguable matter to be determined when ,the appeal is heard. This can easily be ascertained where the Ground of Appeal is against a misdirection on a point of law the particulars of which are clearly stated in the proposed grounds of appeal. But in case of a general ground of appeal being the only ground of appeal, looking at the face of the proposed ground alone will not enable the Court to ascertain whether the ground prima facie shows a good cause. It was in this vein that the Court invited Mr. Kamal to file a supplemental affidavit. The Court was mindful that the use of any additional information is not a pre-judgment of the appeal.

Having looked at the affidavit of Mr. Kamal in particular Ex "A" I find that the bone of contention of the case in both the High Court and the Court of Appeal, was the identity of the land in dispute which was purely a question of fact, the Court finding that the land claimed by the Plaintiff/Respondents was not the same land which the document of title of the Defendants/Applicants supported. It was not a question as to who had a better title. It is a well-settled principle that an Appellate Court will not disturb the findings of fact of a trial judge unless it is suggested that he has misdirected himself in law. (See Watt or Thomas v. Thomas. [1947] 1 ALL E.R. 582; Benmax v. Auston Motors Co. [1955] 1 ALL E.R. 326; Seynmour Wilson v. Musa Abess Civ. App. No. 5/79 judgment dated 17 June 1981). I have also carefully looked at Exb "B" of Mr. Kamal's affidavit which was the grounds of appeal before the Court of Appeal

They read:

1. That the judgment is against the weight of the evidence

2. That the Learned Trial Judge applied wrong principles in giving judgment jar the Plaintiffs/Respondents

3. That the Learned Trial Judge applied wrong principles in granting the Plaintiffs/Respondents relief not sought in the statement of claim.

[p.220]

The first ground is the general ground. The other grounds complain of misdirections the details of which were not stated. It suffices to say nothing more about them but to continue with the present application.

In an application for an extension of time for appealing made to the English Court of Appeal, Griffiths L.J. opined that before the Court can allow such application; ..

"All the relevant factors must be taken into account in deciding how to exercise the discretion to extend the time. Those factors include the length of delay, the reason for the delay, whether there is an arguable case on the appeal and the degree of prejudice to the Defendant if the time is extended" (See Van Stillevoldt BV. V. El Carriers [1983] 1 ALL E.R. 699 at p. 704)

I adopt the view of Griffiths L.J. and I find it crucial to and apply it in this application to both the Applicants and the Respondents.

CONCLUSION

Counsel for the Respondents did not address the Court on the application and was indifferent rightly saying that it is left to the Court to exercise its discretion based on the application of the Applicants. At the end of his argument Counsel for the Applicants urged the Court to waive his non-compliance with the Rules in reliance on rule 103 which provides inter alia;

"Non-compliance on the part of an Appellant with these Rules or with any rule of practice from the time being in force shall not prevent the further prosecution of the appeal, cause, matter or reference if the supreme Court considers that such non-compliance was not wilful and that it is in the interest of justice that such non-compliance be waived. The Court may in such manner as it thinks fit direct the Appellant or any party to an appeal cause, matter or reference to remedy such non-compliance, and thereupon the appeal shall proceed".

I do not think that this Rule can be invoked in aid of the discrepancies which I have highlighted in this ruling. The application hinges on the contents of Rule 26(4) of the Rules the particulars of which have not been satisfied by the Applicants on points of law inside and outside the Rule. It is not a question of failing to comply with a procedural rule or particle which the Court can remedy by making an order to that effect.

I find that the application falls short of the provisions of Rule 26(4) and it is hereby dismissed. The cost of this application to the Respondents to be paid by the 1st Applicant assessed at Le50,000.

N.D. ALHADI

By a Notice dated the 31/7/96 the applicants/Appellants applied for leave to appeal out of time and an enlargement of time within which to do so.

The judgment sought to appeal against was delivered on the 2/1/96 by the Court of appeal. By Rule 26(1) of Supreme Court Rules 1982, where an appeal lies as of right the appellant shall lodge his notice of appeal within three months from the date of judgement appealed against unless this court enlarges the time. It is clear from the application before us that no appeal has been lodged within the stipulated time referred to above. It is this failure that has necessitated this application.

Rule 26(4) provides ……. "No application for enlargement to time in which to appeal shall be made after the expiration of one month from the expiration of the time prescribed within which an appeal may be brought. Every application for enlargement of time shall be by motion supported by an affidavit setting forth good and substantial reasons for the application and by grounds of appeal which prima facie show good cause for leave to be granted. When time is so enlarged a copy of the order granting such enlargement shall be annexed to the notice of appeal."

The first part of this sub-rule is not under consideration in this application before us, since this Notice of Notion has been filed within the one month from the expiration of the time to appeal.

The whole issue now is what are the circumstances in which this court can exercise its discretion for an enlargement of time within which to file an appeal. The second part of the sub-rule requires that the affidavit in support must set forth good and substantial reasons for the application and by grounds of appeal which prima facie show good cause for leave to be granted.

The good and substantial reasons given for the application are those stated in the affidavit in support by Kora Sesay wherein she deposed that in June Abdul Sesay (which also I take to be the 2nd Appellant) fell ill and she took him to the provinces where he died. That she stayed on the provinces to await the 40th day ceremony. That she did not inform her Solicitor when she was leaving. That if Abdul Sesay had not died and the roads were safe she would not have stayed in the provinces for the length of period she took. That she was not expecting the judgment to be delivered at that time since the judgment had been reserved for over two years. This in my view is an indictment against the court for it is provided in Section 120 (16) of the Constitution following— ……."

Every Court established under this Constitution deliver its decision in writing not later than three months after the conclusion of the evidence and final addresses or arguments of appeal and furnish all parties to the cause or matter determine with duly authenticated copies of the decision on the data of delivery thereof—……."

In my view, the court should not readily refuse an application under this provision of the Rules other than good reasons for the delay not been disclosed in the supporting affidavit and or the ground or grounds of appeal in this case is on the facts does not impunge its validity for consideration by this court. Otherwise a refusal on such ground would be interpreted as this court prejudging the issues to be argued on the appeal. There might be issues where it can be shown that the trial court did not take into account all the relevant facts or that the trial judge misapprehended the evidence or drawn an inference which there is no evidence to support it — See Lofthouse vs. Leicester Corporation (1948) 64 T.J.R. 604. Again it might be that the plaintiff, the respondent herein was unable to establish his claim with that degree of certainty that is required in a Civil Suit that is with that preponderance of probability for him to succeed in his claim. In which case this court is bound to interfere with the finding of fact by the court.

The question of good reasons for not lodging the appeal within the stipulated time has to be considered not with reference to the length of time ipso facto but with reference to the circumstances of the case. The delay in this case is not unconnected with the then prevailing insecurity of the country in the provinces where the bulk of the population were held behind rebel lines and the non-availability of transportation to the capital [p.223] city. The facts deposed to by Kora Sesay in her affidavit, in my view are credible.

In conclusion, I will say that as long as there are arguable issues disclosed on the Notice of Appeal, and sufficient and relevant explanation given for the delay, a refusal to enlarge the time will manifestly prejudice the appellant's right to have his appeal adjudicated upon thereby cause manifest injustice to him.

In light of all what I have said, I will grant the application.

A.F. SERRY-KAMAL ESQ., FOR APPLICANTS

DR. ADE RENNER-THOMAS FOR RESPONDENTS

RULING

WARNE, JSC:

This is an application by way of a motion for an enlargement of time within which to appeal to the Supreme Court pursuant to Rule 26(4) of the Rules of the Supreme Court PN. No.1 of 1982 (herein referred to as the Rules) This is a matter which has a long history. The application was first heard by a Court of three Justices of the Supreme Court. Submissions were made before that Court and the Court refused the application by a majority of two and there was a dissenting Ruling by one Justice.

Being dissatisfied, Counsel for the applicants renewed the application before the full court of five Justices pursuant to section 126(b) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.6 of 1991 (hereafter referred to as the Constitution). There were several adjournments at the instance of, the applicants. On the 14th December 1999, the matter was struck out for want of prosecution of the action. On that date Counsel was absent without any reason given to the Court. Be that as it may, the first applicant, Kora Sesay, being present, was invited to prosecute the motion but indicated that he could not because he was unwell and cannot speak out for himself.

It is pertinent that, I relate the proceedings before the Court of five Justices on the 14th December 1999 Among the Justices there was Mr. Justice N.D. Alhadi JA; who gave the dissenting Ruling in the Court of three Justices herein before mentioned. These are the notes in the proceedings:—

"Serry-Kamal for the Applicant absent Dr. Ade Renner-Thomas for Respondent Kora Sesay applicant present informs court two of the applicants are dead. Kora Sesay applicant was invited by the court to proceed with the motion, this he failed to do. The matter was therefore struck out. Costs awarded to Respondent assessed at Le 100,000."

In spite of this decision, Counsel for applicant renewed his application before the full court of five Justices.

On the 20th January,. 2000 the matter came up before the full Court. Mr. Serry-Kamal for applicants was again absent, Kora Sesay 1st applicant was present. It is reported that two of the applicants were dead.

Dr. Ade Renner-Thomas, with him was Miss U. Kamara was present for the Respondent's. At that hearing Kora Sesay stated his lawyer was absent.

The Court indicated that it was minded to grant a further adjournment on condition the applicant pays the costs of Le100,000 to be paid by the firm of Serry-Kamal and Co, Solicitors.

On the 9th February 2000 the matter came up again for hearing. Mr. Serry-Kamal for applicants was present and Dr. Ade Renner-Thomas for the Respondents was also present. There was a. full blown hearing. Counsel on both sides made their submissions with conviction. I will later refer to the various submissions. The matter was adjourned to 15th February 2000. At the hearing on the 15th February 2000, Mr. Serry-Kamal was reminded that this application had been struck out on 14th December, 1999 for want of prosecution. On that same date Mr. Serry-Kamal submitted that section 126(b) of the Constitution gave him a right to hearing, and argued that the Court is not properly constituted because the application is a review not an appeal.

The Court ruled that it is properly constituted and adjourned the matter to 17th February 2000.

In spite of the fact that there is no provision in the Constitution and the Rules that when a Court of five Justices had struck out an application, the application can be heard again by a full court, the Court invoked its inherent jurisdiction to continue the hearing of the application in the interest of justice and furthermore that litigation must have an end.

Having said that, I will now consider the arguments put forward by both Counsels.

The motion filed is clear and unequivocal. It states, inter alia:

"an application on behalf of the aforesaid Kora. Sesay for an order that the Order of this Honourable Court dated the 30th day of September 1999 be varied, discharged or reversed by a full court pursuant to Section 126(b) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1999 Act Number 6 of 1991 'on the grounds that: ....."

The grounds were numbered 1 - 5 inclusive. Counsel applied for leave to abandon grounds 1- 4. Counsel for respondent did not object. The Court granted the leave accordingly, whereupon Counsel proceeded to argue ground 5 which reads "that the applicant Kora Sesay 'be granted an enlargement of time within which to file his appeal to the Supreme Court."

This application as I have stated is made pursuant to rule 26(4) of P. N. No. 1 of 1982.

Rule 26(4) provides that:

"No application for enlargement of time in which to appeal shall be made, after the expiration of one month from the expiration of the time prescribed with which an appeal may be sought. Every application for enlargement of time shall be by motion supported by an affidavit setting forth good and substantial reasons for the application and by grounds of appeal_ which prima facie show good cause for leave be granted. - (Emphasis mine) - when time is so enlarged a"' copy of the order granting such enlargement shall be annexed to the notice of appeal."

[p.309]

The rule is. clear and unequivocal Counsel for the applicant proceeded. With his submission and was granted leave to use a. supplemental affidavit sworn on 29th December, 1999. Counsel further submitted that all the documents /exhibits filed are in support of the motion.

The documents/exhibits are the following:—

The affidavit of Kora Sesay the 1st applicant herein Sworn to on 20th December 1999. Exhibit "A" is the Writ of Summons filed on 4th July, 1987. Exhibit "E" is the drawn up Order of the Court of Appeal dated 2nd April, 1996.

Exhibit "C" is the Notice of Motion to the Supreme Court for an enlargement of time in which to appeal to the Supreme Court dated 31st July, 1996.

Exhibit "D" is the Intended Notice of Appeal.

“There is also a supplemental affidavit sworn to by Abdul Franklyn Serry-Kamal on 29th December 1998 and filed herein with certain exhibits in support of the Affidavit Exhibit A” is the Ruling of the Supreme Court delivered on the 30th September 1999 refusing the application for enlargement of ,time within which to appeal.

Dr Renner-Thomas argued forcefully that the application should be refused. He made the following submissions:—

"(1). That the oral application is a departure from the reliefs sought in the body of the motion. He submitted that the Court has power to vary, discharge or reverse order of the Court of three Justices. He argued that Mr. Serry-Kama has not shown why the Order of the Court of three should be varied, discharged or reversed.

(2) Counsel submitted further that Mr. Serry-Kamal having abandoned Grounds 1 - 4 of the reliefs sought, what purports to be the ground 5 is not a ground.

Counsel submitted that he relies on the Ruling of Joko-Smart JSC. in the Ruling of the 30th September 1999 as regards the Locus Standi of the applicants. He added that the title states three applicants and in the body of the motion there is only one applicant and there is no evidence why the two other applicants are not applying and he referred to Rule 37 of the Rules of the Supreme Court. Counsel has referred to Paragraph 6 of Exhibit "D" that there are prospective appellants including the two dead ones. Counsel referred to [p.310] paragraph 9 of the affidavit t of Kora Sesay where he deposed that that he is the owner of the Land.

(3) Counsel further submitted that the said Paragraph 9 of the affidavit of Kora Sesay when juxta posed with the prospective grounds for appeal in the Exhibit there is not any good cause why leave should be granted. Counsel argued that paragraph 9 disclosed a new cause of action and since there is no evidence that the court of three Justices made an error the Court of five Justices ought not to depart from that Ruling, he concluded.

Mr. Serry-Kamal in reply conceded that he ought to have amended his notice of motion. He thereby sought leave to make such an amendment, to which Dr. Renner-Thomas objected.

Mr. Serry-Kamal submitted that the application is not too late and will not embarrass the Respondents.

Rule 26(4) is clear and unequivocal as I have already stated. I have underlined the clauses that are relevant to the application. I will now consider the motion in the sequence in which it is presented and prosecuted. I will begin with the title . In the title, there are three applicants but the motion is, made in the name of 1st Applicant, Kora Sesay. In the affidavit Kora Sesay deposed that Abdul Sesay and Dura Conteh the 2nd and 3rd applicants are dead. No steps have been taken to replace them in the application since their claim does not abate by death. It is not enough to make the application in the name of the surviving applicant vide Rule 37 of the Rules which provides the following:—

"An application for an Order for Rivivor or Substitution shall be accompanied by an affidavit sworn by the applicant (emphasis mine) or where the applicant is represented by legal practitioner the said affidavit shall be sworn by such legal practitioner showing who is the proper person to be substituted, or entered, on the record in place of, or in addition to a party who has died or undergone a change of status."

I opine that Rule 37 is deliberately enacted to protect the estate or interest of a deceased person or one who has undergone a change of status. [p.311] Counsel for applicants has failed to invoke the provision of Rule 37 even, though he was reminded of its existence by the Court.

Be that as it may, what the motion is seeking to achieve is an order that the Order of this Honourable Court dated the 30th. day of September, 1999 by varied, discharged or reversed by the full Court pursuant to Section 126(b) of the Constitution .....

The words used in the motion are the same as those provided in Section 126 (b) aforesaid, that is to say varied, discharged or reversed.."

In order to apply any of these terms, the grounds for the relief sought must be “good and substantial reasons." These good and substantial reasons must be set forth in the affidavit of the applicant.

What is the Order to be varied discharged or reversed.?

This is contained in Exhibit “A" annexed to the affidavit of Abdul Franklyn Serry-Kamal sworn to on 29th December, 1999.

The order is "Ifind. the application falls short of the provisions of Rule 26(4) and. it is hereby dismissed.. The costs of this application to the Respondents to be paid by the 1st Applicant assessed at Le50,000

Having stated the Order of the Court of three Justices, I will consider the affidavit of Kora. Sesay in its entirety. There are sixteen paragraphs in the affidavit.

In my view the several paragraphs do not set forth good. and substantial reasons for the application to be considered favourably.

Perhaps it is necessary to reiterate paragraph 9 of the affidavit ,which deposed the following:—

"I am the fee simple owner of the property in dispute. I vested parts of it to Abdul Sesay and Dura Conteh both deceased……..

It must be stated that there is no counterclaim to the Writ of Summons which is Exhibited as "A". In my View, this paragraph 9 raises a new cause of action, which does not help the Court to consider the credulity of the affidavit. However, the affidavit is evidence before this Court for what it is worth.

There is nothing in the Notice of Motion to indicate that the applicant is aggrieved. with the order made by the Court of three Justices.

In order to invoke the provisions of Section 126(b) of the Constitution, the applicant ought to show that he is aggrieved by the order made by the [p.312] Court of three Justices and must give grounds for being so aggrieved..

Paragraph 5 of the grounds before the Court is of no moment. It states:

"that the applicant Kora Sesay be granted an enlargement of time within which to file his Appeal to the Supreme Court."

In my view this is no ground on which to base the application. This is only begging the issue.

Again in my view, the motion has no merit and as a matter of law the documents filed lack substance" I opine, that the whole conduct of the cause is dilatory.

In my opinion. This is one notice of motion that ought not to have been argued because the papers fall far short of what is required by Rule 26(4) of the Rules. The application is refused and the motion is dismissed with costs.

Cost awarded Le250,000

THE STATE - RESPONDENT

APPELLANT-IN-PERSON

..... FOR THE RESPONDENT

JUDGMENT

WARNE J.S.C.

This is an appeal against the judgment of the Court of appeal delivered on the 20th day of December, 1984.

There is only one ground of appeal which reads: —

"That there was miscarriage of justice throughout the proceedings both in the High Court and the Appeal Court."

At the hearing of the appeal on Friday 26th May, 1995, the appellant argued his case in person. The State/Respondent was un-represented.

The gravamen of the argument of the appellant is that his was a case of mistaken identity. He pointed out the inconsistencies in the evidence of the two women who gave evidence against him. The appellant submitted that the identification parade at the C.I.D. was unfair because he was the tallest man among the men in the parade. The appellant concluded that he was never at the scene of the crime at the 31st of October, 1982.

On a cursory glance, the record of proceedings both in the Court of Appeal and the High Court was unsatisfactory.

The appellant was convicted in the High Court before a Judge and jury and sentenced to 25 years (twenty five years) imprisonment.

[p.172]

Against that conviction, he appealed to the Court of Appeal. Among the grounds of appeal which were before the Court was "That the verdict was unreasonable or cannot "be supported having regard to the evidence."

The argument of the appellant before the Court was submitted in writing it states "Identification was wrong. Incident took place on the 31st October, 1982, was identified a week later. Wot not have gone that way".

In answer to this submission, Counsel submitted that "issue is of identity. Identification parade was surplusage. Submits verdict is reasonable and supported "by evidence"

The judgment of the Court was reserved on that date, 8th November and delivered on 20th December, 1984. The appeal was dismiss reasons to be given later. There is no record that the reasons were ever given.

The course open to the Court of Appeal on an appeal before it contained in Section 58(1) Courts Act No. 31 of 1965.

It provides:—

(1) Subject and without prejudice to subsection (2) the Court of Appeal on any such appeal against conviction shall allow the appeal if they, think that the verdict should be set aside on the ground that it is unreasonable or cannot be supported having regard to the evidence, or the judgment of the Court before whom the appellant was convicted should be set aside on the ground of a wrong decision of any question of law, or that on any ground there was a miscarriage of' justice, and in any other case shall dismiss the appeal."

It is pertinent to repeat subsection (2). Subsection (2) provides:—

"On the appeal against conviction the Court of Appeal, notwithstanding that they are of opinion that the point raised in the appeal might be decided in favour of the appellant, may—

(a) either dismiss the appeal or

[p.173]

(b) order the appellant to be retried by a Court of competent jurisdiction, if they consider that no substantial miscarriage of justice has actually occurred".

As I have said, the Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal without giving any reasons as Section 58 (1) and (2) hereto fore-mentioned, presupposes. Be that as it may, this Court is empowered to examine the record, consider the entire proceedings and make its own findings according to law-Section 122(3) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.6 of 1991 provides:—

"For the purposes of' hearing and determining any matter within its jurisdiction and the amendment, execution or the enforcement of any judgment or order made on any such matter, and for the purpose of any other authority expressly or by necessary implication given to it, the Supreme Court shall have all the powers, authority and jurisdiction vested in any Court established by this Constitution or any other law."

Even though Rule 98 of the Rules of this Court is subordinate to the provisions of Section 122 of the Constitution, I shall however, spell out its provisions. It provides:—

"Where no provision is expressly made in these Rules relating to the Original and Supervisory Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court the practice and procedure for the time being of the High Court shall apply mutantis mutandis."

Having said this, I shall now consider the appeal within the context of the proceedings in the High Court. In my view, the Summing Up of the Learned Trial Judge is flawed. The Court of Appeal should have seen the error in the Summing Up before dismissing the appeal summarily. In the High Court, the jury did not have the necessary assistance from the Judge to enable them [p.174] to return a ..... verdict.

There were three witnesses for the prosecution and one for the defence. The appellant relied on his voluntary statement for his defence. That statement was an alibi.

The Learned Trial Judge failed to direct the jury on the Statement and on the defence of an alibi. The law is quite clear on the point. It is essential that the defence of the prisoner shall be adequately put to the jury- R v. Mills, 25 CR. APP. R. 138 R. v. Waters (1954) Cum L.R. 147 C.C.A; on this score alone the appeal must succeed; but more on this later.

There were also inconsistencies in the evidence of the two women who gave evidence - P.W. 1 and P.W. 2. It is not enough for the Judge just to repeat the evidence of the witnesses to the jury.

P.W. 1 Sylvia Shirley Barnett said "He then threatened to return and kill us if we shouted. He then left the room. Right through the incident the accused was holding a revolver."

The other witness P.W. 2 recounting the incident, said "The accused had in his hands a gun, a knife and an iron.

In the Summing Up the Learned Trial Judge said:"According to her (P.W.1) three of the raiders entered their room including the accused in the dock. This witness asserted that it was the accused who was carrying a revolver which he pointed straight at her. I will not bother to go into the part of her evidence regarding the accused's threat to rape them. She stated that she was so terribly apprehensive of her life that she felt like giving Up."

The witness did say she was apprehensive of her life but never said she felt like giving up. The witness said "As he insisted on raping us, I told him I was from the hospital and I had my tablets with me to take. I asked accused to pass me the tablets, he did so.

As far as the evidence of the second witness was concerned, the Judge only dealt with it in passing in his Summing-Up. This was what [p.175] the Judge said "The other lady Rhoda Kona Barnett came to the witness box According to her testimony, she too was able to identify the accused because the three raiders were unmasked and as the electric lights were on she saw him clearly, I will not bother to go through her evidence as she too narrated the incident in substantially the same manner like the other lady"

In their evidence on the identity of the accused the witnesses said — P.W. 1 — "At the time when the thieves forced themselves into our room the fluorescent electric light was on. I could not remember now how the thieves were dressed but I remember they were not masked but I could clearly see the 1st accused face.....

Some time after the raid I was walking along Kortright when I came across a group of men amongst whom I saw the accused and I immediately I recognised him as one of the men who raided our flat."

In answer to cross-examination the witness said "The security, men then followed you and returned with you. I said before that I was able to recognise you by your face, your beard, and the way you stood up. Yes during the identification parade you had a red piece of cloth on your head."

On this issue of identification P.W. 2 said "About a week later P.W. 1 reported to us that she had seen the accused about. The Security Officers and P.W. 1 went after the accused, I later identified him at the College Security Post and also at the C.I.D. Headquarters. Our bedroom lights were on when the thieves entered our room unmasked

In answer to cross examination the witness said:

"I did not pick you out at an identification parade, I confirmed that you were one of our attackers."

On the issue of identification the third witness for the prosecution, the police officer, said in answer to cross examination.

"You were all given the same colour of material to tie on your head. I had received certain information about your feet. Prior to the parade, I asked you to lift up your trousers which you did but I did not notice any deep cut on your [p.176] leg. I did not take any finger print impression at the scene of the crime because there was none at the scene."

Earlier in his evidence the witness had this to say "I recall the 31st October 1982 whilst on duty at the C.I.D Headquarters a report of Robbery with Aggravation was made by one Sylvia Barnette of Flat 128 Kortright Fourah Bay College (P.W. 1 identified). I took up the investigation and went up to Fourah Bay College to the said Flat. There I observed that its back door was damaged. I entered the flat and discovered that the Parlour had been ransacked. P.W. 1 took me to their room which I noticed had been ransacked also. Outside the building I found a crow bar which P.W. 1 said did not belong to them. I took custody of it as an exhibit."

These are bits of evidence which should have been carefully put to the jury and juxtaposed with the statement of the appellant, which was, in fact, his defence.

In that case, if the Judge had done this, I do not think the jury would have returned the same verdict.

In the Summing-Up, the Judge had this to say about the evidence of the investigator:

"The third witness was the investigator who took down the voluntary cautioned statement from the accused and charged him this in brief is the prosecution's case.

The identity of the appellant and his alibi were material elements in the case. The Judge should have pointed them out to the jury.

The appellant had made a voluntary cautioned statement on which he relied as his defence. Did the judge put it adequately to the jury as he ought to have done? I do not think so. In fact, he did not. All the Judge said in the Summing-Up was "But if an accused person offers a defence jurors are bound to consider that defence alongside the prosecution's case. In this case the accused has offered a defence. Firstly, by saying he relies on his statement which he [p.177] made to the police. Secondly by giving the names of two witnesses whom he wanted to come to this Court and testify on his behalf. In my view, this is a good preface before putting to the jury such defence for what it was worth. This the Learned Trial Judge failed to do. In my opinion, this is fatal. The appellant in his statement denied ever being in the vicinity of the crime on the 31st October, 1982. The Judge only put to the jury the evidence of the defence witness. The evidence in my view was not relevant to the issue. In the Summing-Up, the Judge had this to say, "Fortunately the other was traced and he was the last man to testify in the witness box. I will draw your attention to one fact, that man said that he and others were walking along Kortright Road and they walked passed some ladies and other people and that not long thereafter a Volkswagen car drove up and a lady came out and said that man (the accused) was one of those who raided their flat sometime ago. According to that witness he asked the lady whether she was sure and the lady said she was positive and she was able to identify the accused amongst the witness and others who were there. Well this is the witness of the accused. The defence witness was not ruffled in any way, you saw him in the witness box he gave a straight forward piece of evidence. (Emphasis Mine) The comment of the Judge, in my opinion, was more prejudicial than probative.

In view of what I have said supra, I allow the appeal set aside the conviction, squash the sentence and acquit and discharge the accused.

JUDGMENT

JOKO SMART JSC

I have had the advantage of reading in draft the ruling of my learned brother E.C. Thompson-Davies JSC. I too agree that the application be dismissed. However, because I find in the said ruling a difference in approach and of opinion on the question of the applicant's locus standi before the full Court a second time, I have decided to append a few remarks of my own.

[p.329]

The main question in this application is whether the applicant can come again before the full court after the Court sitting in bane had previously heard and the Court consisting of five Justices on a fresh ground which was never canvassed and contested before the Court sitting with a panel of three Justices.

Dr. Renner-Thomas, Counsel for the applicant, relies on section 126(b) of the 1991 Constitution of Sierra Leone, Act No. 6 of 1991, and Rule 32 of the Rules of the Supreme Court, Public Notice No. of 1982 (The Rules) as the basis of the application. Section 126 (b) of the Constitution reads inter alia;

"three Justices of the Supreme Court acting in its civil jurisdiction may exercise any power vested in the Supreme Court not involving the decision of a cause or matter before the Supreme Court save that (b) in civil matters any order, direction or decision made or given by the three Justices in pursuance of the powers conferred by this section may be varied, discharged or reversed by the Supreme Court constituted by five Justices thereof'

This provision dealing partly with the composition of the Court in interlocutory matters has had a short but chequered history. The Constitution of Sierra Leone 1971; Act No. 6 of 1971, by section 66, established the Supreme Court in place of Her Majesty's Privy Council as the final Court of Appeal for Sierra Leone. Section 14 of the Constitution (Consequential Provisions) Act, Act No.9 of 1971, went further to provide that until the new Supreme Court was composed, its jurisdiction should be undertaken by the Court of Appeal as established under the 1971 Constitution. Pursuant to the 1971 Constitution, interlocutory matters in the Court of Appeal were heard by one Justice and his decision was subject to a review by three Justices of the Court of Appeal. When the Supreme Court was eventually set up, the Constitution of 1978, Act No. 13 of 1978 gave power to a single Justice of the Supreme Court to sit on interlocutory civil matters and his decision was subject to a review by three Justices. See Section 106 of the 1978 Constitution.

Finally, the 1991 Constitution increased the composition of the court to three Justices and five Justices respectively in similar circumstances. Having poured this libation to Clio, I now turn to the issues in this application.

Dr. Renner-Thomas contends that the Registrar of the Supreme Court has not complied with Rule 31 of the rules. The salient requirements of this Rule are carefully spelt out in the ruling of my brother Thompson-Davis and I do not consider it necessary to repeat them here.

The application now before us concerns essentially the interpretation of section 126 (b) of the 1991 constitution and this can be done in the light of five scenarios.

1. Whether an application in interlocutory matters can properly be made to five Justices without a first recourse to the court consisting of three Justices.

2. Whether the application can properly be made to the court consisting of five Justices without any reference to a previous application adjudicated upon by three Justices.

3. Where an application has been disposed of by three Justices whether a further application can be made to five outright without stating that the three Justices erred in law or otherwise in making their order.

4. Whether after an application has been dismissed by three Justices a further application can be made to five Justices on a point that was not canvassed before the three Justices.

5. Where an application has been disposed of by five Justices after it has previously been considered by three Justices, whether the full court can sit again on a further application on a new ground.

With respect to scenario one, I see nothing in the section to prevent an interlocutory matter from being decided by five Justices in the first instance. I hold the view that the section was intended to ensure that such matters are dealt with expeditiously in the absence of a full court of five. But this does not mean that if the full complement of five Justices available, the application may not be made to them. Because of the position I have taken in respect of the other scenarios, let me hasten to say that here, an applicant can rely on any ground that will enable him to support his case.

Scenarios two, three and four have a common ground and I can conveniently consider them together. For my part, it will be absurd to conceive that Parliament, aware of the limitations on the composition of the Court inherent in section 121 of the 1991 Constitution, would have created a parallel situation in which applicants can indulge in forum-shopping at will without any apparent legal reason but merely with the expectation that the full Court might be more favourable disposed to them after they have tried with the Court of three to no avail. On this issue, I cannot but agree more with Warne JSC when this matter came up previously before five Justices. At that time, in a unanimous ruling of the court, he said; "In my view, this sub-section presupposes that the three Justices erred in law or otherwise to enable the applicant to invoke the provision of section 126(b) of the Constitution." See SC Misc. App. 2/99 Mohamed Juma Jalloh v. T Krishnakumar, unreported, ruling dated 26 October 1999. Again, in another ruling of the full Court which was also unanimous, I held a similar view when I said "Section 126(b) of the Constitution provides for an application to be made to the full Court consisting of five Justices when an applicant is not satisfied with an order made by the Court comprising three Justices." Also, on the question of a new ground before the Court consisting of five Justices this was what I said in the same case;" The argument now put forward is new as was the case in the Mohamed Juma Jalloh case. Such argument could have been relevant when the application came up before the three Justices." (See se Misc. App. 5/93 Abu Black & ors. V. Rev. Archibald Gambala John (Executor of the Estate of late Rev. Gustavus Ademu John, unreported, dated 20th January 2000). What [p.332] these rulings are saying, is that a Court of five sitting to review an order of a Court of three is not the proper place to raise a new ground.

Scenario number five is the one most relevant to the present application. The applicant in this matter is coming before the full Court a second time. His Counsel has argued with the greatest candour that he has no quarrel with the full Court's ruling of the 26 October 1999 which dismissed the application. He alleges that it was as a result of that ruling that he got the green light to have the records at the Supreme Court Registry searched. When the search was conducted by Mr. Unisa Kamara, the searcher came out as if it were with the Archimedean exclamation "eureka" upon the discovery that there was no evidence on record that the Registrar of the Supreme Court had complied with the provisions of Rule 31(1) of the Rules. This finding is supported by the affidavit of Unisa Kamara sworn to on the 29th day of December 1999. It is on the basis of this discovery that the applicant has invoked the jurisdiction of the Court to be heard a second time by a court made up of five Justices. In this second application, the applicant is challenging the Order made on the 22nd September 1999 by the three Justices on the ground that the said Order was not made in strict compliance with the provisions of Rule 31 of the Rules in that there is no evidence on record that the Registrar of the Supreme Court had acted in accordance with the provisions of that rule before the said Order was made. This is a new ground that was never canvassed in the previous proceedings.

In the first application before the five Justices, the applicant did not contend that the three Justices erred in law or otherwise. He proceeded on the basis that the Court was right in striking out the appeal, that he did not comply with Rule 35(2) of the Rules and he craved the indulgence of the Court pursuant to Rule 103 of the Rules to file the Certificate of service of the appeal as required by Rule 35(2), a thing that he had failed to do and which necessitated the striking out of the appeal. At that time the blame was on the doorstep of one M.A. Bangura. Part of the affidavit of Mohamed Juma Jalloh sworn on the 4th of October 1999 and filed in support of that application attested to this. It read:

"5. That I am further reliable informed by my solicitor and verily believe that one of the solicitors of Renner-Thomas & Co., M.A. Bangura, Esquire, who was handling this matter left the jurisdiction on the 15th day of July 1999 for further studies.

6. That I am further reliably informed by my Solicitor and verily believe that the said solicitor M.A. Bangura, Esquire, did not inform the other solicitors in the firm of Renner- Thomas & Co that a certificate of service had not been filed.

9. That I am reliably informed by my solicitor and verily believe that failure to file a certificate of such service was not deliberate but was due to the inadvertence on the part of the said M.A. Bangura.

This, to my mind, could have been a valid excuse for non-compliance with the Rules but the court in the first application was not moved by it, the reason being that the proper place where the excuse, a new ground, could have been raised was in the Court of three Justices. It was then that the Court formulated the rule that for an application against the order of three Justices to succeed, the applicant must show that they erred in law or otherwise. The full Court then dismissed the application. It was not struck out. Finding himself in a dilemma and in a bid to salvage the situation, the applicant in this second application now challenges the Order of the three Justices made on 22 September 1999 by raising a new ground which was never canvassed before the three Justices or even before the full Court. But can he do this successfully now in this second application before the full court? In my view, not having raised the new ground before the Court of three in the first instance as the appeal was struck off and not dismissed, what the applicant should have done was to go back to the Court of three with his new ground before ever resorting to the Court of five.

In my judgment the applicant has an up-hill task. By raising non-compliance with Rule 31 of the rules at this stage, he is relying on a new ground, which has never been canvassed before the Court sitting with three Justices in the first instance. The alleged ground was in existence right from the beginning of these applications and it could have been discovered with the exercise of the utmost care and diligence. This is as far as I can go on the fate of the new ground.

I agree with Counsel for the Respondent that the basic issue in this application is whether after the five Justices have dismissed the first application, the applicant can come before them again. I hold the view that he cannot. As this is the main issue on which I part company with my learned brother E.C. Thompson-Davies, JSC, I find it necessary to elaborate further. The constitutional provision in section 126(b) and the rulings of Warne JSC and mine to which I have already referred do not allow repeated appearances before the full Court in such a circumstance as the one now before us. These reasons apart, I hold that there must be an end to litigation. In the first application before this Court consisting of five Justices for the appeal to be reinstated there was a full argument by counsel on both sides on the merits of the application before it was dismissed, it was not struck out which if it had been the case there might have been a possibility for its renewal for reasons other than the discovery of a new ground. Sacrificing repetition on the altar of emphasis, I maintain that in dismissing that application, the Court categorically came to the conclusion that for an applicant to succeed before the full Court from a ruling of the Court of three it must be shown that that Court erred in law or otherwise. Unless the full Court is now prepared to exercise its constitutional right inherent in section 122(2) of the Constitution and say unequivocally that it is departing from its previous stance taken in the first application, I do not see my way through to accommodate the application with or without a new ground which has nothing to do with a mistake of law or fact by the Court sitting with three Justices.

The fact that the decision was interlocutory does not, in my view, entitle the applicant to come before the full Court again on the same issue, i.e. whether or not the appeal should [p.335] be reinstated. In taking this stance I derive additional strength from the decision of the West African Court of Appeal case of Emanuel Onalaja v. n E.A. Oshinubi 12 WACA 503. 504 in which Varity C,J. delivering the judgment of the Court said: "The Courts have not infrequently intervened to prevent the perversion to base uses of bare right to reopen matters already litigated where no estoppel per rem judicatem has been strictly observed. Thus where estoppel per rem judicatem has not been sufficiently pleaded or made out but the circumstances are such as to render re-agitation of the question formerly adjudicated upon a scandal and an abuse, the Court will not hesitate to dismiss the action." Having reached this conclusion. it is my considered view that the Court cannot entertain this application and adjudicate on the merit or demerit of Rule 31 of the Rules. This is not to say that this Court being the highest Court of Appeal in this land cannot adjudicate on every matter that is brought before it but in my opinion the matter must arise from an action or application in which the litigant has a locus standi and which the Court entertains. For my part, this application is not one of such situations.

JUDGMENT

A. AWUNOR-RENNER. J.S.C.

The appellant were convicted at the Kenema High Court on the 1st day of October 1976 before Navo J. as he then was and a jury for the murder of one Albert Samba on the 2nd day of May 1976 at Lowoma Village in the Lower Bambara Chiefdom, Kenema District and sentenced to death. They appealed to the Court of Appeal and judgment was delivered on the 10th day of November 1981 dismissing the appeal and affirming the conviction and sentence of the High Court. It is against that decision that the appellant have now appealed to this Court on the following grounds viz:—

On behalf of the 1st appellant:

That the Court of Appeal for Sierra Leone was wrong in Law in holding that the verdict was not unreasonable nor could it not be supported having regard to the evidence adduced at the trial.

That the Court of Appeal was wrong in Law when it held that the Learned Trial Judge's direction to the jury that if there is any doubt, I am not saying any fanciful doubt but if there is any substantial doubt, you should resolve that doubt in favour of the accused persons and let them go free was in order.

[p.4]

(c) that the Court was wrong in law when it held that there was no evidence to leave to the jury for the consideration of the issue of provocation and of self defence.

On behalf of the 2nd appellant:

(a) The Court of Appeal erred in law in holding that the appellant defence of alibi was properly put to the jury.

(b) The Court of Appeal erred in law in holding that the Learned trial judge had not misdirected the jury on the grounds of implied malice.

(c) The Court of Appeal erred in law in holding that the learned trial judge had not misdirected the jury as to the standard of proof imposed upon the prosecution.

The 1st Appellant was not represented by Counsel, however the Court took cognizance of his grounds of Appeal that were before us.

The facts so far according to the prosecution and defence as it is necessary to state them are as follows:

On the night of the 1st May 1976 at Lowoma Village in the Lower Bambara Chiefdom the deceased Albert Samba staged a dance at the Barri. One Kene Samba was at the dance helping the deceased to sell tickets at the entrance to the Barri. His wife Elizabeth Jah (alias Binta Samba) was also present running the bar. Later on that same night Mohamed Daramy, 2nd accused in the High Court who is now dead came and sat by Kene Samba; when he was questioned about his ticket he said that he had bought one earlier in the evening but had lost it. An argument ensued between the deceased and Mohamed Damary which later on resulted in a fight between the two of them. Binta held the deceased by his trousers and then took him outside. By that time the 1st and 2nd appellants were standing outside and as Binta took the deceased away the 1st appellant was heard saying “Let us go and finish with the dog”; as the deceased was [p.5] being taken away he was overtaken by the two appellant and Damary. They crossed in front of them. The second appellant then kicked Binta on his stomach and the 1st appellant broke a bottle on a stone and stabbed the deceased on the right side of his neck. He was then taken into a house whence he later died. Both appellants did not give evidence or call witnesses but relied on the statement which they made to the Police and which were tendered in evidence in the High Court. The 1st appellant in his statement denied being present at the scene of the alleged incident; in fact he claimed that he was not in Lowoma Village at all but in Tokpombu II Village in the Tongued area where he spent the day and evening in the company of one Alpha Jalloh and some other people until 1 a.m. when he retired to bed and woke up at 7 am on the Sunday the 2nd day of May 1976.

The 2nd appellant also alleged that he too was not at the scene but that he spent the night at the house of one Pa Momoh Kpakateh. The other inmates of the house he claimed including the 1st appellant went out at about 10 pm. and that he was alone in the house until the early hours of the morning when the 1st appellant returned to the house panting; there was blood on the 1st appellant’s shirt and when the 2nd appellant questioned him about it the 1st appellant stated that he had been involved in a fight with someone who had bitten him. He was later on arrested and charged.

Three grounds of appeal have been urged on behalf of the 2nd appellant: however I propose only to deal with those which in my opinion are substantial.

The second group of appeal raised by Berthan Macaulay (Jnr) counsel for the 2nd appellant was that the Court of Appeal erred in law in holding that the learned trial judge had not misdirected the jury on the grounds of implied malice. He referred this Court to what the Court of Appeal had to say about malice aforethought and I quote:—

"Counsel for the 1st and 3rd appellants had submitted that the judge's direction on malice aforethought with particular [p.6] reference to implied malice is erroneous. Appellants' Counsel had submitted that the Judge had employed the subjective test in directing the jury on whether there was implied malice or not he should have used the objective test as propounded in Sahr Nbambay and others.

The judge did not fall into the error as he did not direct the Jury that it was the subjective test that they had to apply. I agree with Counsel for the state that he merely gave an example of a factual situation that could amount to implied malice I find no merit in this ground."

He further referred this Court to quotations from the summing up of the Learned Trial Judge and again I quote—

"Then we come to the most important ingredient with malice aforethought.

The death must be with malice aforethought.

What does that mean?

Malice does not mean premeditation. We have two categorise of malice, express malice and implied malice. In the case of express malice there is an intention to cause death, or cause grievous bodily harm to any person, whether such person is the person killed or not.

Now you make up your mind and say 'I am going to kill somebody'. I wi11 take my gun. I am going to shoot at A. If you shoot at A and A dies that is express malice. You had it in mind to do something which will cause grievous bodily harm to A or which may cause the death of the person against whom you inflict or on whom you inflict injuries etc.

He then continued to explain what is meant by express malice. On the question of implied malice the learned trial Judge directed the jury in this way.

"Implied malice in many cases where no malice is expressed or openly intended, the law will imply it from a deliberately cruel act committed by a person against another."

[p.7]

"Deliberately cruel act although you did not intend to kill somebody but do a deliberate cruel act and that act causes his death you are guilty of murder because the in gradient of implied malice would have been provided."

"It may be implied where death occurs as a result of a voluntary act of the prisoner which was intended and unprovoked. You were not provoked to do what you have done. I will deal with provocation later on. It must be unprovoked. The law will imply malice from your action and if death occurs or if death results. It is implied that you had malice aforethought you will be found guilty of murder."

"All the other ingredients in murder are in manslaughter except that in manslaughter the prosecution need not prove malice aforethought. That is perhaps the most important ingredient in the case of murder. The prosecution must prove malice either express or implied."

Mr. Macaulay (Jnr) further contented that the learned trial judge in his direction to the jury on the question of implied malice should have explained what this meant to them in simple language and not merely read out ipssisima verba the contents of Archibald Criminal Pleadings Evidence and Practice Thirty-fifth edition at page 918 paragraph 2487 under the rubric. "Implied malice" to them which states as follows:

"In many cases where no malice is expressed or openly indicated the law will imply it from a deliberate cruel act committed by one person against another. It may be implied where death occurs as a result of a voluntary act of the prisoner which was (1) intentional and (2) unprovoked."

Let me now examine some of the authorities cited by Counsel for the respondent as far as they relate to ground 2 of this appeal. In Feika v Regina supra, a Court of Appeal decision, one of the grounds of appeal was that the trial judge misdirected the jury on provocation by reading from a text book. It was held in that case that in directing the jury on the law applicable to the case being tried the judge should not report to reading passages from a text book without more. In Kargbo v Regina 1968/69 A.L.R. (S.L.) also another Court of Appeal decision at page 345 two of the grounds of appeal were (1) that the learned trial judge failed to direct the jury adequately on the defence of provocation and (2) that he did not give proper direction with regard to the right of self defence. It was held that a judge in his summing up should [p.9] not confine his direction on the law to reading from a legal text book. It is his duty to explain in simple language the principle of law application to the case, to consider the question raised by

"Unfortunately there is misdirection as well as non-direction in the summing up of the learned trial judge. He adopted a procedure which has been condemned both by this Court and the Court of Appeal in England. He read passages from Archibald without analyzing the obstruse proposition of law stated therein. Members of the jury are laymen who have no training in the law and liable to be confused when passages from a text book are read to them. They will not be in the position to comprehend the difficult question of law applicable to the facts of a case. It is the duty of a judge to explain in simple language the principle of law applicable to the case and to direct them on how to apply the law to the facts."

In the present case I feel that the jury were deprived of the assistance of the learned trial judge in his summing up. Indeed he proceeded to give them the definition of what was express malice and also tried to explain the meaning of this to them by bringing in the definition of implied malice and not bothering to explain this to them in simple language and by also not telling them which of the two, [p.10] express or implied malice was applicable in the present circumstances. He had failed in his duty by omitting to direct the jury sufficiently on this point. I cannot say whether the jury properly directed would have convicted him. I would therefore allow the appeal on this ground.

The next ground of appeal of the 2nd appellant is a much more serious one and deals with the learned trial judge's misdirecting the jury as to the standard of proof imposed upon the prosecution. This ground of appeal is common to both appellants and it is my view that it can be dealt with conveniently together. In a nut shell Berthan Macaulay (Jnr) for the 2nd appellant submitted that the learned trial judge misdirected the jury on the standard of proof required in a criminal case by equating the words "unreasonable doubt" with "substantial doubt". He submitted further that one cannot say that the phrase reasonable doubt is synonymous with the phrase substantial doubt. He contended that by using the word substantial doubt the Court was imposing a lower standard of proof upon the prosecution. He also called the Court's attention to certain portions in the summing up about which he was complaining and relied on the following authorities in support of this last ground of appeal, Noroma v Regina 1964/66 A.L.R. (S.L.) at page 542 at page 547, R v Sumners (1953) Cr. App. R. at page 16.

Finally he ended up by saying that the case of Bater v Bater relied on by the Court of Appeal was a case involving a divorce petition and had no relevance with the standard of proof in a criminal matter. Miss Tejan Jalloh for respondent contended that no particular form of words are needed as long as the trial judge puts the case adequately that will suffice, she also relied on R. v Sumners supra and invited the Court to apply the provision of sub-sec.2 of sec .58 of the Court's Act number 30 of 1965. On the other hand Mr. Macaulay however urged this Court to reject the question of applying the provisions of sub section 2 of sec. 58 of the Court's Act supra as he said that each case should depend on its own facts as regards misdirections and non-directions.

The following directions on the burden and standard of proof were given by the learned trial judge in his summing up and I quote:—

(1) " It is for the prosecution to prove their case beyond reasonable doubt. If that doubt exists either from the case for the prosecution or is created by the defence, and you find out that it is a reasonable doubt and not a fanciful doubt the law requires you to resolve that doubt in favour of the accused persons."

(2) " If you have any substantial doubt let them go free."

(3) " If there is any doubt I am not saying a fanciful doubt, but if there is any substantial doubt you should resolve that doubt in favour of the accused persons and let them go free."

(4) " If they do then you may say those discrepancies may cause consideration doubts – reasonable doubts – but so far as the prosecution is concerned they say 1st accused said. You wait let us go and do away with the dog."

(5) " If you take into consideration the various discrepancies in his evidence and you say that taking these witnesses evidence into consideration there is substantial doubt in your minds. I am not saying fanciful doubts. If it creates any doubts in your mind, you are bound to resolve that doubt in favour of the accused persons."

(6) " If it goes to the root of the case it destroys the case for the prosecution completely or creates a substantial doubt in your minds then you are bound to resolve that doubt in favour of the accused persons. If they do not shake your conscience that a substantial doubt has been created it is for you to say Oh, yes he may have made a mistake here and there."

(7) " But it is for you again to say whether there is a substantial discrepancy that created a doubt in your minds. If it does then of course you will say it does not make us think this way or that way, therefore the benefit must go to the accused persons."

Having referred to extracts from the summing up it now remains for me to examine certain reported cases dealing with the burden and standard of proof. In all criminal trials it is the duty of the trial judge to direct the jury that on the evidence the prosecution must prove the guilt of the accused to their satisfaction before they convict and that the onus of prove rests upon the prosecution; this must be made quite clear to the jury in no uncertain terms. In the case of R. v Raymond Blackburn reported in volume 39 of the Criminal Appeal reports at page 84, S. Gorman J. in delivering the judgment of the Court had this to say and I quote:-

" It is for the judge to deal properly with the question of the burden of proof. One matter is quite clear. It cannot be said and this Court does not intend to say that any particular form of words is absolutely necessary or the Court is concerned with the question whether whatever form of words was used it was made quite clear to the jury that it was for the prosecution to establish the guilt of the prisoner and if the guilt of the prisoner is not established the prisoner must as of right and not by way of favour be found not guilty. This Court does not subscribe to the view that a particular form of words of necessity means that the summing up was right or that the absence of a particular form of words necessarily means that it was wrong."

[p.13]

In the case of R. v Hepworth and Norman Fearnly reported in volume 39 Cr. App. Reports, at page 152. The case of R. v Summers 36. Cr. App. R. at page 14 l was commented and approved. In that case the learned recorder in his summing up failed to direct the jury adequately as to the burden of proof and the standard of proof required. It was held that there was no set formula for explaining to the jury in a summing-up that the burden of proof lies on the prosecution To tell them that they must be satisfied by the evidence so that they can feel sure that the prosecution has established the guilt of the prisoner is appropriate, merely to tell the jury that they must be satisfied with regards to the prisoners guilt is insufficient. The use also of the phrase "reasonable doubt" is better avoided.

I think that it will be appropriate for me to refer to a portion in the judgment Goddard L.C.J. which I think is relevant to the present case in my view. I quote:

"Another complaint that is made in this case is that the recorder used only the word "satisfied". It may be especially in view of the number of cases recently in which this question has arisen, that I misled Courts when l said in R. v. Summers 36 Cr. Appeal R. at page 14, at page 15 and I still adhere to it - that I think it is very unfortunate to talk to juries about reasonable doubt because the explanation given to what is and what is not a reasonable doubt are so very often extraordinarily difficult to follow and it is very difficult to tell a jury what is a reasonable doubt. To tell a jury that it must not be a fanciful doubt is no real guidance. To tell them that a reasonable doubt is such a doubt as would cause them to hesitate in their own affairs never seems to me to convey such a particular standard; one member of the jury might say that he would hesitate over something and another member might say that something would not [p.14] cause him to hesitate at all. I therefore suggested in that case that it would be better to use some other expressions by which I meant that should convict only if they feel sure of the guilt of the accused. In some cases the words "satisfied" has been used. It is said that a jury in a civil case has to be satisfied and therefore one is laying down the same principles as in a civil case. I confess that I have had some difficulty in understanding how there is or there can be two standards if one said in a criminal case to a jury: "You must be satisfied beyond reasonable doubt" and one could also say: "You must be completely satisfied" or prisoner better still, "You must feel sure of the prisoner's guilt". But I desire to repeat what I said in the case of Kritz 33 Cr. App. R. at page 169 at page 177; It is not the particular formula of words that matter; it is the effect of the summing up. If the jury are charged with one set of words or in another and are made to understand that they have to be satisfied and must not return a verdict against a defendant unless they feel sure and that the onus is all the tome on the prosecution and not on the defence "that is enough" I shall be very sorry if it were thought that case should depend on the use of a particular formula or particular word or words. The point is that the jury should be directed first that the onus is always on the prosecution. Secondly before they convict they must feel sure of the prisoner's guilt. If that is done that is enough."

Counsel for the 2nd appellant had also argued that the learned trial judge in portions of his summing up had not only appeared to place the burden of proof on the appellant but that he had failed to put the narrow issue as outlined in the case of R. v Murtagh and Kennedy reported in39 Cr. App. R. at page 72 and at page 83. In that case there had been a charge of murder and the defence relied on was that of an accident. The convictions were quashed on the grounds that the jury had not been specifically directed to acquit if the explanation of the defendants left them in any doubt. Justice Hilbery in delivering the judgment of the Court at page 83 had this to say and I quote:

"Having regard to the evidence it is pre-eminently a case where it was essential for the judge to make clear to the jury three possible positions in which the jury might find themselves bearing in mind throughout that it was not for the accused to establish their innocence: that is to say:

(1) If they accepted the explanation of the accused, they must acquit.

(2) Short of accepting that explanation if it left them in doubt they must acquit.

(3) On consideration of the whole of the evidence they must be satisfied of the guilt of the accused of one or other of the crimes alleged against them."

In order to appreciate counsel for the 2nd appellant's submission on this point I need to make references to certain other passages of the summing up by the learned trial judge. In these passages he directed them as follows, I quote:

"Then perhaps it is left for you to say that this was planted on him. It is left with you to say whether he was saying the truth. That because of his leg it was possible for him to go to the dance.

He was not there. You may want to believe that his story is correct …….. you may believe his story where he said that another said [p.16] no if we take him along he would be able to show where the other colleagues are. If this is the case then of course it may create a substantial doubt in your minds so far as the third accused is concerned."

Later on in the summing up he said and again I quote:—

"His defence is that he did not go out at all. He was in bed that is an alibi. He was in bed he did not go out. Well it is for you say that you believe him that he did not go out that night. It is for you to believe him that because of his sore foot he would not have gone out. If you come to that belief then he is free out of the whole thing and he gets out of the whole thing. The defence is short and simple. I did not go out that is his defence etc."

Put in the briefest form of the question is whether the words used by the learned trial judge in directing the jury in his summing up on the question of the burden and standard of proof was a misdirection. He repeatedly used the words "If you believed him" in the passages referred to above and that if they believed his story this might create a substantial doubt in their minds so that apart from the judge using the words "If you believe his story" etc the fact that an accused person is lying does not necessarily mean that he is guilty or that he may be convicted without more. See the case of Seisay and Siaffa v. R. reported in 1967-1968 African Law Reports (Sierra Leone) Series at page 323. The burden remains on the prosecution to prove the guilt of the prisoner and it is the judge's duty to make this quite clear to the jury and if the prosecution fails the prisoner must be acquitted.

Bearing in mind the passage referred to supra the authorities cited above together with the facts that the learned trial judge had also told the jury that the appellants were relying on their statements, it is my considered view that the learned trial judge was shifting the burden of proof on to the shoulders of the 2nd appellant when he told them that if they believed the story of the 2nd appellant they must set him free. This to me was clearly a misdirection.

The burden of proof still rests upon the prosecution. Apart from this, after making it clear to the jury whom the burden of proof lies, it is also the learned trial judge's duty to direct them on the standard of proof that is required in a criminal case. It is my opinion that he failed to do so. His use of the words reasonable doubt, fanciful doubt and substantial doubt referred to in the passages quoted above may have caused a lot of confusion in the minds of the jury. As a matter of fact by using the words substantial doubt he was imposing a lower standard of proof on the prosecution. A case is never proved if the summing up leaves the jury in any doubt. It is stated in Archibold Thirty-Fifth Edition at 361 paragraph 1001 and I quote:

"That if an explanation is given by or on behalf of the prisoner which raises in the minds of the jury a reasonable doubt as to his guilt, he is entitled to be acquitted because if upon the whole of the evidence in the case, the jury are left in any reasonable state of doubt the prosecution has failed to satisfy the onus of proof which lies upon them."

Finally let me end by saying that a summing up must not be ambiguous in anyway. As stated supra the jury must be directed in no uncertain terms upon whom the burden of lies and that before they convict they must be satisfied so that they feel sure of the prisoner's guilt; this was the formula often used. See the cases of R. v Kritz (1950) 1 K.B. at page 82 R. v Summers (1952) 1 All E.R. at page 1059.

However in 1972 in the case of McGreevy v D.P.P. supra the House of Lords stipulated that the proper direction to be given on the standard of proof is that it must be made plain to the jury that they must not convict unless they are satisfied of guilt beyond all reasonable doubt – thus approving the ruling in the House of Lords in the case of Woolmington v D.P.P. supra.

I had stated that it would be convenient for me to deal with the 2nd ground of appeal of the 1st appellant with the 3rd ground of appeal of the 2nd appellant together as they are both similar. The 1st appellant had also relied on his statement which had been tendered in evidence and his complaint as regards this ground of appeal was against the use of the words substantial doubt and fanciful doubt etc. in summing up. I do not propose to go into details but will adopt the reason given and the cases referred to supra on behalf of the 2nd appellant as well.

In view of the above I have therefore come to a clear conclusion under the circumstances that there were fundamental misdirections as well as non-direction contained in the summing up of the learned trial judge to the jury and that he did not adequately direct them as regards the burden and standard of proof as far as both appellants were concerned. Finally he also failed to direct them that whatever view they took of the whole of the explanations given by the appellants in their statements and on the whole of the evidence in this case that they must acquit if the explanation given by both appellants left them in any doubt. It therefore follows that their appeal on this particular ground must succeed.

On the other hand I find no merit in the other grounds of appeal of both appellants.

This Court has been invited by Miss Tejan Jalloh to apply the provisions of sub-section 2 of sec.58 of the Courts act 1965. This section states as follows:—

I quote:—

"On an appeal against conviction the Court of Appeal may act not with standing that they are of opinion that the point raised may be decided in favour of the appellant dismiss the appeal if they consider that no substantial miscarriage of justice has occurred."

In 1976 a further amendment was made to Sec 58 (2) of the Courts Act supra giving the Court of Appeal power to order a new trial as an alternative to dismissing the appeal if they feel that no substantial miscarriage of justice has occurred which means that [p.19] the position as it is now is that the Court of Appeal may either dismiss the appeal or order a new trial if they are satisfied that no substantial miscarriage of justice has occurred.

However I find myself unable to apply either of these two provisions and say that there was no substantial miscarriage of justice because in the present circumstance it is impossible to say that the jury would necessarily have come to the same conclusion had they been properly directed; there is clearly a serious misdirection here and I am also of the opinion that the omission of the judge to direct the jury adequately may have brought about the verdict.

For the reasons which I have given above I cannot allow the conviction of both appellants to stand and would allow the appeal and set aside the convictions.

Appeal of both appellants allowed. Convictions quashed, sentences set aside.

The Background

It is Government's policy to root out corruption in the public service. Pursuant to this policy the Anti-Corruption Act, 2000 Act No.1 of 2000 was passed. The Act does not discriminate between public officers by reason of positions they hold or status in the society. Even judges can fall foul with it. The legislation provides for a Commission whose functions include the investigation of instances of alleged or suspected corruption referred to it by any person or authority or which has come to its attention whether by complaint or otherwise and the taking of such steps as may be necessary for the eradication or suppression of corrupt practices. Where after an investigation, the Commissioner is of the opinion that the findings of the Commission warrant consideration by the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice as to whether criminal action may be taken thereon, he sends the report of the investigation to the Attorney-General. An adverse finding of guilt of corrupt acquisition of wealth is to be referred to the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice. If after examining the report the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice decides that there are sufficient grounds to prosecute the public officer, he pursues the case in the courts.

Sometime in July 2000, an acting judge of the High Court was suspected of having offended against the Act. That judge is the Hon. Mr. Justice Muctaru ala Taju-Deen. The Commissioner of the Anti-Corruption Commission sent a report of an investigation on the judge to the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice. The judge was eventually charged on a 12 count indictment and he appeared before the High Court. On 24 August 2000 while the trial was in one Court, Justice Taju-Deen applied to another judge of the High Court for leave to proceed on certiorari for the report of the Commission on him to be quashed. The leave was granted. On the 26 August 2000, he made a second application to the same judge for quashing the report. That application was dismissed. Later, he made a fresh ex parte application to the Supreme Court for leave to proceed on certiorari to quash the report. Leave was granted. Under the 1991 Constitution, he can apply for certiorari to the High Court (section 134) or to the Supreme Court (section 125).

The ex-parte application

On an ex-parte application made to the Supreme Court on the 6 day of December 2000 the Respondent herein then applicant sought the following orders:-

(1) An Order granting leave to the Applicant herein Muctaru ala Taju-Deen for an Order of Certiorari to issue both under the Common Law and section 125 of the 1991 Constitution of Sierra Leone to bring up to the Supreme Court for the purpose of its being quashed the purported Report and/or the purported undated Extracts of the alleged Findings of the Anti-Corruption Commission signed by the Commissioner of the Anti-Corruption that evidence exists of alleged non existing offences against the Plaintiff herein under a Non-existing Act to wit the purported Anti-Corruption Commission Act 2000 upon grounds of failure to observe one of the fundamental principles of Natural Justice, Committal of Error of Law on the face of the Records and several other errors of law, want of [p.340] jurisdiction and/or excess of jurisdiction, as set forth and contained in the copy Statement herewith exhibited to the affidavit in support of the Application.

(2) An interim Stay of the Criminal proceedings Holden at High Court No.1 before the Hon. Mrs. Justice Patricia Macauley in the case between THE STATE vs. HONOURABLE JUSTICE MUCTARU OLA TAJU-DEEN pending the hearing and determination of the application for the Order of Certiorari if the leave is granted by the Honourable Supreme Court under the first Order prayed for above.

(3) Such further OR other Orders as this Honourable Court may deem fit to make.

(4) That the costs of and occasioned by this Application be costs in the cause.

The Motion was supported by the Affidavit of Muctaru Ola Taju-Deen sworn to the 2 December 2000 to which were attached several exhibits.

On the 19 December 2000 this Court sitting with three justices granted the orders prayed for except the one in para 2 of the motion paper. The Court also made the consequential orders that the Respondents be served the relevant papers within four days of this order and that the application for the Order of Certiorari be heard on the 2 January 2001.

The application now before this Court

Before 2 January 2001, the Commissioner of the Anti-Corruption Commission, The Anticorruption Commission and The State represented by the Learned Attorney-General and Minister of Justice, the 1st, 2nd and 3rd Applicants respectively, filed a Notice of Motion dated 20 December 2000 which is the subject-matter of the Application now before us seeking an order that the Order made by this Court on the 19 December 2000 granting the respondent herein leave to apply for an order of Certiorari to issue be discharged on the following grounds:—

(1) That in making the application ex-parte resulting in the granting of the said order the respondent herein failed to make full and frank disclosure of material facts and/or did not fulfill the requirements of observing the utmost good faith in the making of the said ex-parte application in that (a) he failed to disclose to this Honourable Court the fact that he had earlier made identical application to the High Court against the same parties and the application was dismissed by the High Court (b) in the said application the High Court had determined the issue as to whether an Order for certiorari will lie against the Anti-Corruption Commission.

(2) That the Applicant's proper course, after the earlier application referred to in (1) above had been dismissed by the High Court was, in law, not to file an identical application in this Honourable Court but to appeal against the Order of the High Court dismissing the said earlier application.

(3) That the Respondent is precluded by the doctrine of estoppel per rem judicatam from making an application the subject-matter of the application herein.

(4) Such further or other Orders as this Honourable Court may deem fit to make.

The Motion is supported by two affidavits sworn to by Lahai Momoh Farmah, Senior State Counsel. The first, sworn to on 20 December 2000, exhibits the Judge's Summons of the 26 August 2000 which the applicants alleged had been dismissed by the High Court (exhibit "A") together with nine other exhibits among which are (a) a Statement dated 26 August 2000 filed by the Applicant in support of the judge's Summons (exhibit "D"), (b) the Respondent's ex-parte Motion of the 6 December 2000 before this Court (exhibit "F") and (c) the order nisi of this Court made on the 20 December 2000 (exhibit "J"). These specific exhibits are the ones most relevant to the matter now before us. The second affidavit, a supplemental affidavit, sworn to on 30 December 2000, exhibits a certified copy of the whole proceedings in the judge's Summons. (exhibit “K") and the ruling of the judge (exhibit “L").

The respondent filed an Affidavit in Opposition dated 20 December 2000 in which he exhibited a certified extract of the proceedings in the judge's summons (exhibit "MOTD"). By this exhibit, the respondent for the first time made a clean breast to this Court of the judge's Summons.

The Arguments

Mr. Berewa, Attorney-General, Counsel for the applicants, underlined two issues as forming the nerve centre of the case for the applicants. One is that the respondent failed to disclose material facts to this Court when he made his ex parte application for an order nisi, the material fact being the proceedings of the judge's Summons which culminated in a decision. The other is that the decision by the judge in that summons raises the issue of judicata per rem in respect of the Respondent's ex parte application.

Non-Disclosure

To buttress his posture on the effect of non-disclosure, Mr. Berewa referred us to two cases: The Hagen [1908-10] All. ER 21 and The Andria r198411AII.ER 1126. In The Hagen the facts of which I find unnecessary for repetition in this judgment, Farwell LJ said at page 26:—

"In as much as the application was made ex parte, the fullest disclosure was necessary, as in all ex parte applications, and a failure to make a full disclosure would justify the court in discharging the full order, even though the party might afterwards be in a position to make another application."

In the case of The Andria, concerned with an arrest of a ship on a warrant based on an affidavit filed by the plaintiffs which failed to disclose the existence of arbitration proceedings or that arbitration was actively pursued, and the defendant's protection and indemnity club furnished an undertaking to the plaintiffs that the club would pay any sum awarded to the plaintiffs in return for the ship's release from arrest, Robert Goff LJ had this to say at page 1135:—

"Though we do not for one moment suggest any bad faith on the part of the deponent, the fact is that the affidavit sworn to lead the warrant of arrest failed to disclose facts which were material to the issue of the warrant; and, as a result of the non-disclosure, the warrant was issued and thereafter the ship was arrested. It follows, in our judgment, that the invocation by the [p.342] appellants of the court's jurisdiction to arrest the ship amounted in the circumstances of the case to an abuse of process of the court and that the club's letter of undertaking must be discharged",

Exhibits “K" and "L" of the supplemental affidavit in Opposition which provides the first inkling of what transpired before the judge, though belatedly, tells the whole story. Exhibit “K" gives in detail arguments by both sides on the objection to the jurisdiction of the court to hear the Summons on the ground that the Anti-Corruption Commission was neither a court nor an adjudicating authority and therefore the court was not competent to quash the report of its findings in exercise of its supervisory powers over inferior courts and adjudicating authorities pursuant to section 134 of the 1991 Constitution. Exhibit “L" is the ruling of the judge that the Commission was neither a court nor an adjudicating authority. On the basis of these exhibits and the authorities cited, Mr. Berewa asks for the ex parte order nisi given by us to be discharged.

In reply to this particular issue, Mr. Terry, Counsel for the respondent, made five submissions which I can glean from his several submissions. Three of them appear to be general on the whole issue in controversy and the others are specific to the question of non-disclosure. One submission is that once an order nisi has been granted the Court cannot listen to a complaint against the order before the substantive hearing for the order of certiorari but that it may do so at the hearing when it is sought to make the order absolute. The second is that if at all the Court can look into the complaint before the substantive hearing the party affected by the order nisi must show that the court was wrong in making the order. The third is that a court has a discretion to set aside its ex parte order but in doing so the court should hold a balance between the ordinary citizens inter se and the citizens on the one hand and the state on the other. For this submission he relies on a passage from the judgment of Kutubu CJ in the case of The State vs. Adel Osman and Others [1998] LRC (Const) 212 at 221. The fourth is that there is no obligation on the exparte applicant to make a full and frank disclosure of material facts but that all he needs to do is to show that he has a locus standi and to establish a prima facie case. For this submission he relies on the decision of the court in Harry Will vs. Attorney-General & Minister of Justice. Mis. App, No. &/99. (unreported. ruling delivered on 23 March 2000). The fifth submission is that the principle of full and frank disclosure is elementary but that it does not apply to certiorari proceedings. With due respect for the high quality of the research ability of counsel, I find nothing in the cases cited by him that supports the propositions which he posits. In particular, in the Harry Will case, Luke CJ merely stated the conditions on which an order can be made on an exparte application. Non-disclosure of material facts was not in issue and therefore the Court did not address itself to it. I will come back to the first three submissions later.

Disclosure of material facts is, to my mind, incorporated into the principle of natural justice encapsulated in the doctrine of "audi alteram partem" which is cardinal in the rule of law. No man can be condemned behind his back in respect of either his person or his property. Exparte applications are merely intended to enable a litigant to have an expeditious access to the court without notifying the other party in a matter between them when that litigant's legal right is in danger and if he is to give the other party a proper notice of his intention to go to court, delay will defeat the ends of justice. Exparte applications must, to use a feline phrase, let the cat out of the bag. Disclosure of material facts when such an application is made in the absence of the other party, enables the court to bridge the lacuna created by the absence of the other party and to hold the scale evenly between them. This is the reason why an applicant must make a clean breast of material issues to [p.343] the court to which the application is made. It is a duty which the applicant owes to the court which I hold the respondent herein did not discharge when he made his exparte application. The proceedings before Massallly,J, in the High Court were very material to be disclosed to this Court when the Exparte Application was made. It might not have made any difference to the outcome of the Court's decision if that material fact was revealed. On that occasion, the Court might have exercised its discretion to ask the Applicant herein to take part in the exparte proceedings before it as it did in the Harry Will case.

Having said all this, I will go back to The Hagen case in which Lord Alverstone CJ articulated the point which I am making before discharging the exparte order.

"If I had felt that Hargrave Deane J., had taken all the facts into consideration and had come to a conclusion upon them, I should hesitate to interfere with his decision, but looking at the judgment I can find nothing to show that he did. I come to the conclusion that he has not exercised his discretion, and I think it is a jurisdiction that ought to be very carefully exercised" (at page 26).

In the light of this statement of Lord Alverstone CJ., which I fully endorse, can we say that we really exercised our discretion when the full facts were not known to us? With reluctance, I apprehend that we did not.

In the cases which I have relied upon for the effect of non-disclosure, it was an Appeal Court that had to vacate an order of a lower court. In the light of this and section 122 of our Constitution, a searching question which I now pose is whether we have the power to vacate our own order. Section 126(b) of the Constitution specifically gives us that power in civil matters that have been decided by three Justices but there is no specific provision for criminal cases. Mr. Berewa urged that we can. Mr. Terry, on the other hand, did not deny that we cannot. What he submitted is that we may do so but only if the issue is raised at the substantive hearing of his application and when it is shown that we erred in law in making the order. This leads me into the field of autonomy. On binding precedent, section 122 of the Constitution enable us, as the highest court in the land, in the interest of justice, to depart from previous decisions which we take. A restrictive interpretation of a "previous decision" is a decision that has been taken in some other cause. I would not regard an order made in an interlocutory proceedings by a court to be a previous decision. Nevertheless, to my mind, this court or any other court has an inherent right to discharge any such order if justice requires it. This is where I agree with the third submission of Mr. Terry, the principle of which, I have stated, he perhaps inadvertently attributed to Adel Osman's case.

The estoppel Question

Mr. Berewa for the applicants articulates that when the judge dismissed the application before him the proper course for the applicant to have pursued was to appeal as provided for under section 63 of the Courts Act, 1965, Act No. 31 of 1965. That section provides for appeals from the High Court to the Court of Appeal from any decision of the Supreme Court in exercise of its prerogative or supervisory jurisdiction in criminal matters.

The learned Attorney-General argues that instead of appealing, the respondent herein came to us on certiorari on the same matter that the High Court has taken a decision upon [p.344] and we gave the respondent leave to proceed with the certiorari. He contends that, in the circumstances, the respondent is estopped from raising the same issue, if I may put his case so very simply. He referred us to several authorities on estoppel. I will mention here the ones I regard as relevant to the matter before us. In Foli and Others v. Agya-Atta and others [1976] 1 G.L.R. 194, the Court of Appeal of Ghana held that estoppel per rem judicatam applies where an action is dismissed if the dismissal involves a determination of any particular issue or question of fact or law. Amissah JA, in his judgment at page 200 of the report made the following pronouncement on estoppel adopting the view of Spence-Bower and Turner, on Res Judicata, second edition, 1969, page 28:-

"When an action, or motion, or application, is dismissed by a judicial tribunal after a trial or hearing, it is often a question whether anything can be said to have been decided, so as to conclude the parties, beyond the actual fact of the dismissal. The answer to this inquiry depends upon whether, on reference to the record and such other materials as may; properly be resorted to, the dismissal itself is seen to have necessarily involved a determination of any particular issue or question of fact or law in which case there is an adjudication on the question or issues; if otherwise, the dismissal decides nothing except that the party has been refuse the relief which he sought."

In another case, Thoday V. Thoday [1964] 1 All ER 341, Diplock, LJ in the English Court of Appeal, gives two instances of estoppel that will prevent a litigant from bringing an action when a previous one has been decided by a court. One is "cause of action estoppel" and the other is "issue estoppel". He defines "cause of action estoppel" as that

"Which prevents a party to an action from asserting or denying as against the other party, the existence of a particular cause of action the non-existence or existence of which has been determined by a court of competent jurisdiction in previous litigation between the same parties ... If the cause of action was determined to exist, Le., judgment was given on it, it is said to be merged in the same judgment. .. If it was determined not to exist, the unsuccessful plaintiff can no longer assert that it does. This is simply an application of the rule of public policy." (at page 352)

He continues on issue estoppel.

"The second species which I will call 'issue estoppel' is, an extension of the same rule of public policy. There are many causes of action which can only be established by proving that two or more different conditions are fulfilled. Such causes of action involve as many separate issues between the parties as there are conditions to be fulfilled by the plaintiff in order to establish his cause of action; and there may be cases where the fulfillment of an identical condition is a requirement common to two or more different causes of action if in litigation on one such cause of action any of such separate issues whether a particular condition has been fulfilled is determined by a court of competent jurisdiction either on evidence or on admission by a party to the litigation, neither party can, in subsequent litigation between them on any cause of action which depends on the fulfillment of the identical condition, assert that the condition was fulfilled if the court has in the first litigation [p.345] determined that it was not, or deny that it was fulfilled if the court in the first litigation determined that it was. (at page 352)

The statement which Diplock makes refers specifically to estoppel in civil litigation. Mr. Terry argues the question of estoppel from two vantage points. One is that estoppel is not applicable to certiorari proceedings and he relies on the judgment of May LJ in R v. Secretary of State for the Environment, Ex part Hackney London Borough Council and another [1983] 3 All ER 358. where he said:

"In such Judicial review) proceedings there are no formal pleadings and it will frequently be difficult if not impossible to identify a particular issue which the first application will have decided. Moreover, we do not think that there is in proceedings brought under RSC ord. 53 a true lis between the crown in whose name the proceedings are brought and the respondent or between the exparte applicant and the respondent. Further, we doubt whether a decision in such proceedings, in the sense necessary for issue estoppel to operate, is a final decision; the nature of the relief, in many cases, leaves open reconsideration by the statutory or other tribunal of the matter in dispute"

In his reply to this point, Mr. Berewa referred us to the decision of the Court of Appeal when this case went on appeal but he did not elaborate. After careful perusal of the case on appeal, I found that the judgment of the Divisional Court was upheld. Dunn LJ said:-

“The Divisional Court was right to hold that the doctrine of issue estoppel cannot be relied upon in applications for judicial review although the court has an inherent jurisdiction as a matter of discretion in the interest of finality not to allow a particular issue which has already been litigated to be opened. This depends on the special nature of judicial review under RSC Ord 53, which makes it different both from ordinary civil litigation inter parties and from criminal proceedings". ([1984] 1 ALL ER 956 at 964)

I am grateful to both counsel for referring me to these two reports. For my part, I agree with the premise but not with the conclusion which Mr. Terry reached. The statements which the two lord justices made should not be taken out of context. The Hackney case should be considered with circumspection. There is another case which is linked with it in a chain of events: it immediately precedes the Hackney case in the same volume of the All England Law Reports. It is R.v. Secretary of State for the Environment. ex parte Brent London Borough Council and another [19831 3 All ER 321. In that case six applicants including Hackney and Camden Borough Councils applied for and obtained orders for certiorari. An issue that was decided by the court was that on a specific date "the applicants were entitled to receive (from the Secretary of State) the rate Support Grant order 1979 as thus increased; thus the decision (made on 26 January 1981) to reduce the applicants' rate support grants adversely affected not merely an expectation but a right to a substantial sums of money". See judgment of Ackner, LJ at pp. 354, 355.

But the judgment did not end there. It left it open to the Secretary of State, "after considering the applicants' representations, now fully documented to make any decisions he considers right," (See page 357.)

Two of the applicants in. the Brent case, i.e., Hackney and Camden, made a further application for certiorari in the Hackney case. Their complaint was, among other things, that the Secretary of State had deferred payment on their entitlements and reduced their grants and contending that their entitlement had been fixed by the judgment and that the Secretary of State was estopped by the judgment. The Secretary of State submitted that on the previous application, which the court accepted, all that was decided was that he had failed to hear last minute representations and that the court did not hold that he could not lawfully make a decision to reduce the grant. As can clearly be seen, the issues raised in the two cases were different. May LJ pointed out the difference when he said:-

"In the present case, however, we think that there are two answers to the powerful submissions on this point. (Le. issue estoppel) made by counsel for the applicants. First, although on their face the passage from the first judgment do appear to contain a finding in favour of the present applicants on the particular issue, in our opinion, a careful reading of the context in which the passages occur, makes it quite clear that the court on the first occasion was not purporting to make the finding for which counsel for the applicants contends. In the first place, the circumstances in which and the times at which the Secretary of state was liable under the Statute to make payments of rate support were not in issue on the earlier application." (at p. 365)

Going back to the prior opinions of May and Dunn LJJ, I think they should be viewed from the peculiar nature of judicial review in which the court does not determine the validity of the order of the tribunal as between the parties but merely decides as to whether there has been excess or lack of jurisdiction. This does not mean that if a legal point arises and the court takes a decision on it, an issues estoppel cannot be eventually asserted to sustain it.

I do not find it necessary to draw a line between judicial review in England and certiorari proceedings here which the learned Attorney-General tried to make. The conclusion which I have reached will be the same if I do so.

I think that what is in issues in the case before us is actually not one directly concerned with certiorari. To my mind we should not confuse certiorari proceedings with what actually transpired before Massally, J. He did not go into the question as to whether or not the Anti-Corruption Commission acted contrary to or in excess of its statutory authority. Instead, an issue was raised in what was going to be certiorari proceedings. The identity of the Commission, the body against which the judge was to make a certiorari order was in issue and the judge decided that he could not proceed with the certiorari proceedings because the Commission was neither a court nor an adjudicating authority. If he had proceeded with certiorari, after his decision that he lacked jurisdiction, his decision thereafter would have amounted to a nullity. See Macaulay V. Commissioner of Police (1968 - 69) ALR SL 9, pae14.

It is in this vein, to my mind, that the doctrine of estoppel should be considered.

The other plank of Mr. Terry's posture on estoppel is that the dismissal of the application before Massally J. amounts to a mere refusal based on an issue during the proceedings and that no decision was taken on the merits of the application for certiorari issue i.e., the cause of action; therefore, the respondent cannot be precluded by estoppel when he comes to the Supreme Court. If I get him right, Mr. Terry is saying that there was no final [p.347] decision on the cause of action to attract estoppel. With respect to the learned Counsel, this argument is fraught with two misconceptions. First, it suggests that estoppel per rem judicatam does not apply to a final decision on an issue in an interlocutory matter. This is "issue estoppel". Both "cause of action estoppel" and "issue estoppel" need not coincide before estoppel per rem judicatam cap be raised. They are independent of each other. In reaching this conclusion, I lean heavily on the Foli and Thoday's cases herein-before mentioned and to the decision in the English Queens Bench Division case of R.v. Governor of Brixton. ex parte Osman (No.1) [1992] 1 All ER 108. This was an application for habeas corpus but the principle stated therein, in my view, applies to certiorari as well. The facts are very revealing. The applicant, Osman who was in remand at Brixton prison awaiting extradition to Hong Kong to face criminal charges made three unsuccessful applications for a writ of habeas corpus. In the third application he sought the disclosure of some official documents and he was granted. In a fourth application he sought the disclosure of nine other official documents but the court refused it on the ground of irrelevance. Osman made a fifth application in which he again sought the disclosure of the nine documents referred to in the fourth application. Thereupon, the Secretary of State moved the court for the parts of Osman's affirmations which either referred to or quoted from the nine documents to be struck out, one of the grounds being that the court's decision in the fourth application refusing further disclosure on the basis of irrelevance resulted in an issue estoppel which prevented Osman from later asserting that the documents were relevant. In the judgment of the court this was what Mann LJ said.

"The issue estoppel in this case is said to arise from the decision of this court on 20 January 1990. That was a decision on an interlocutory application. That it was a decision on an interlocutory application does not, in my judgment, disable it from an ability to give rise to an issue estoppel. I can see no reason in principle why a final decision upon an interlocutory application should not be in this regard treated as any other decision." (p. 118)

My second reason for disagreement with Mr. Terry is that it is not necessary for a court to make a final pronouncement on the merits of a case before estoppel can be invoked. If I get Mr. Terry rightly again he is referring to "cause of action estoppel" which I have held to be independent of "issue estoppel". The jurisdictional issue that the respondents articulated before the judge pivoted on the identity of the Commission. The judge made a decision on it. This, to my mind, would give rise to issue estoppel on that issue. In taking this stance, I also derive support from the judgment of Simon Tuckey, Q.C. a deputy judge of the Queens Bench Division in Palmer & Anor v. Dunford Ford (3 Firm) and Anor. [1992] 2 All ER 122, at page 129 in which he states what I regard as a correct statement of the law as follows:-

"The plaintiff contends that this was not a final decision of the court because the court did not itself pronounce on the merits of the claim. I disagree. I think that a final decision for this purpose is one which would give rise to a plea of res judicata. Such a decision is one which leaves nothing to be judicially determined or ascertained thereafter in order to render it effective."

Mr. Berewa, in his argument, emphasizes that the cause of action was in fact decided. I apprehend, with the greatest respect. that this was not done as the judge did not go into the merits of whether the Anti-Corruption Commi5sion acted within or outside its mandate conferred by the Act. Mr. Berewa referred us to Hines v. Birkbeck College (No.2) [1991] [p.348] 4 AII ER 450 but Mr. Terry did not mention it to buttress his argument on estoppel not arising when a cause of action has not been decided on its merits.In this case, the plaintiff, a professor of Economics at a college in London University, issued a writ claiming that his College had wrongfully dismissed him. The judge struck out the claim on the ground that the subject matter of the claim was exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Visitor to the College. There was no hearing on any issue. Later, the Education Reform Act 1988 came into force giving the court jurisdiction over disputes concerning the appointment or termination of the appointment of a member of the University staff. The plaintiff thereupon issued a second writ in identical terms to the first alleging wrongful dismissal. The "college and the University appl.ied without success to strike out the second action on the ground, inter alia, of res judicata. This was a case of "cause of action estoppel" but it must be noted that the court refused to go into the merit in the first instance by virtue of the fact that no jurisdiction was vested in it over such matters. It is distinguishable from the Taju-Deen case before us in that the court in the instant case ruled that it had jurisdiction to supervise inferior courts or adjudicating bodies but that the Anti-Corruption Commission was neither a court nor an adjudicating body.

In my judgment, a case of "issue estoppel" could arise if it is sought to re-open the question of the identify of the Anti-Corruption Commission as a court or adjudicating authority but not a "cause of action estoppel". I am fortified on this stance by the judgment of Diplock LJ in Fidelitas Shipping v. via Exportchleb r19651 2 All ER4. 10 where he says:

"Where the issue separately decided is not decisive of the suit, the judgment on that issue is an interlocutory judgment and the suit continues. Yet I take it to be too clear to need citation of authority that the parties to the suit are bound by the determination of the issue. They cannot subsequently in the same suit advance arguments or adduce further evidence directed to show that the issue was wrongly determined. Their only remedy is by way of appeal from the interlocutory judgment."

Conclusion

This is as far as I can go on the arguments presented to us by counsel on both sides. I cannot, however, at this stage, rule whether or not estoppel applies because the application before us at present is to discharge the order nisi. I uphold Mr. Terry's submissions that the appropriate stage for a determination on estoppel is at the substantive application for certiorari and I may add, at any other proceedings which the Respondent may institute. It suffices only to hold and J so hold that the application succeeds on the ground of non-disclosure of material facts.

M. Sesay, State Counsel- for the Defendants RULING DELIVERED 3RD DAY OF APRIL, 2001

RULING

TIMBO, JSC:

This is an application by Originating Notice of Motion under sections 18, 24, 124, 125, 127, and 170 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone (Act. No. 6 of 1991). The application is supported by the affidavit of the Plaintiff Muctaru Ola Taju-Deen dated the 4th day of December 2000. The said affidavit contains no less than twenty-five paragraphs to which is also attached several exhibits. A further affidavit in support was sworn to be counsel for the plaintiff Claudius Doe-Smith on the same date.

[p.390]

The present application is one in a series of three motions filed in the Supreme Court on behalf of the plaintiff. One was for an order of certiorari and the other was for prohibition.

These two have already been disposed of the Court in SC. Misc.App.6/2000 and 1/2001 respectively. What is now left is the application for the several declarations.

In view of our findings or conclusions in respect of the applications for certiorari and prohibition, I will not now be dealing with all the eleven or so declarations sought by the plaintiff.

Instead, I shall confine myself only to declarations (e) (i) and (j).

But before proceeding to consider the merits of the said three declarations, let me first give a brief background to the chain of events, which led to this multiplicity of applications.

The plaintiff is a retired justice of the court of Appeal of Sierra Leone. While on retirement he was invited and he readily accepted to serve as a judge of the superior court of judicature in certain criminal matters which were then pending in the High Court. Prominent among these, was the case of the state v. Dr. Henry Will, Lamin Feika and Bockari Kakay.

It was the outcome of the said trial that precipitated the subsequent arraignment of the plaintiff in the High Court under the newly enacted Anti-Corruption act (No.1 of 2000) this act forbids among other things, the corrupt acquisition of wealth or the taking or acceptance of advantage by public servants in the performance of their official duties.

It is an unhappy coincidence that the plaintiff happens to be the No. l person to be prosecuted under the new legislation.

[p.391]

When the present motion came before us for the first time on the 18th of January 2001, we indicated to counsel on both sides the manner we intended to proceed with the application. We told both of them to file their respective arguments and submit all relevant authorities to the Court before the next adjourned date. Thereafter we invited counsel to address us briefly and we then adjourned for our ruling. We adopted this procedure in order to expedite the hearing of the motion.

It is important at this point to look at the essential features of the declaratory relief itself

Unlike other common law remedies, such as certiorari, prohibition and mandamus, the declaratory judgment as the name implies, merely declares the state of the law on any given subject or the right of parties to a dispute. Ordinarily, it decrees no penalty.

Although in strict law the non-compliance of a declaratory order simpliciter at common law evokes no direct legal consequences, actions taken in defiance of such order may be declared void if challenged. In a action of declaration, the plaintiff must show that he has an immediate personal interest in the proceedings. In other words, he must establish that he has a locus standi to maintain the suit. The declaratory relief is based upon the existence of a genuine dispute between the parties and must relate to existing facts and not to something that is too remote or hypothetical. Another great advantage of the declaratory judgment is that it may be made in advance of an apprehended infringement of one's private rights.

Furthermore, while the technical limitations that surround the prerogative writs of mandamus certiorari and prohibition often create stumbling blocks for intending litigants wishing to seek redress from the excesses of the administration this is not the case with the declaratory remedy, which is generally simple and flexible.

The remedy however, remains basically discretionary and as Sir Carleton Allen once observed in the 69 Lay Quarterly Review (1953) page 451 — 3,

[p.392]

"It seems improbable that……..judges Will allow it to be used by frivolous and Unmeritorious litigants."

Apart from the common law remedy of declaration, section 127(1) of the constitution specifically stipulates that,

(l) A person who alleges that an enactment or anything contained in or done under authority of that or any other enactment is in contradiction of a provision of this constitution, may at any time bring an action in the Supreme Court for a to that effect.

(2) The Supreme Court shall for the purposes of a Declaration under subsection (1) make such order and give such direction as it may consider appropriate for giving effect to or enabling effect to be given to the declaration so made.

(3) Any person to whom an order or direction is Addressed under subsection (1) by the Supreme Court shall obey and carry out the terms of the order or direction.

(4) Failure to obey or carry out the terms of an order or directed made or given under subsection (1) shall constitute a crime under this subsection."

With these preliminary remarks, I shall now revert to the three declaratory orders I have indicated I shall be examining.

[p.392]

I shall begin with declaration (e). Under this, counsel for the plaintiff Mr. Terry contended that in so far as the provisions of sections 7 (1) and 8(1) of the Anti Corruption act (Act No.1 of 2000) have been framed, they are clearly repugnant to and a violation of the express provisions of sections 120(9) and 137(4) of the constitution (Act No 6 of 1991.

Sections 9(1) and 8(1) of the Anti-Corruption Act 2000 are the sub-sections which create the twin offences of the corrupt acquisition of wealth and the soliciting or accepting of an advantage by public officer's in the execution of their official functions.

The plaintiff relied on section 127(1) of the Constitution for this declaration.

My initial reaction here is to say the plaintiff cannot seek this declaration in the face of Criminal Appeal No.9/2000 filed by the Plaintiff and still pending in the Court Appeal against the decision of the Hon. Mrs. Justice Patricia Macauley date the 14th day of December on the interpretation the same section 120(9) of the Constitution.

But since section 127(1) states unequivocally that an aggrieved party (here the plaintiff) can make the application for declaration at any time to the Supreme Court, I feel bound to entertain such application.

Having said that much, I now wish to examine the provisions of sections 120(9) and 137(4) of the Constitution in a greater detail.

Section 120(9) provides:

"(a) A judge of the Superior Court Judicature shall not be liable to any "action" or "suit" for any matter or thing done by him in the performance of his judicial functions."

[p.393]

Section 137(4) on the other hank, state as follows:

"(4) Subject to the provisions of this section, a Judge of the Supreme Court of Judicature may be removed from office only for inability to Perform the function of his office, whether arising from infirmity of mind or for stated misconduct, and shall not be so moved saved in accordance with the provisions of this section."

Mr. Terry implored the Court to give a liberal and purposive construction to the words "action" and "suit" in section 120(9) so as to include immunity from criminal proceedings. What counsel is saying, as I understand him, is that section 120(9) confers blanket immunity to a judge in respect of anything done or said by him in the exercise of his judicial functions whether Civil or Criminal. This also seems to be the view of B.O. Nwabueze, the Learned author of "Constitutional Law of the Nigerian Republic" (1964) when he said at page 293 that,

"A judge is also immune from civil and criminal liability for anything said or done in his judicial capacity."

The Learned Attorney-General and Minister of Justice on his part argued strenuously, that section 120(9) only prohibits the institution of civil proceedings against a judge of the superior court of judicature for things done or said by him in the performance of the duties of his office.

In "Words and Phrases Legally Defined," Vol. 1 2nd edition A — C, it is stated at page 33 that,

"Action shall include every judicial proceeding instituted in any court, civil, criminal or ecclesiastical, (See British Law Ascertain Act, 1859. S.5) [p.395] Likewise, in :A Dictionary of Law" 4th edition Oxford University Press, the word ''suit'' is described as a term commonly used for any court proceedings.

It is however further observed on the same page of "Words and Phrases Legally Defined "4th edition that "action" is generally used in a more restricted or popular sense to denote a civil action commenced by writ or plaint (vide 1 Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd edition).

By order 1 of our High Court rules, 1960, "action" Means a civil proceeding commenced by writ or In such other manner as may be prescribed by Rules or court, but does not include criminal proceedings"

There is certainly no ill1animity of opinion as to the precise purport of these two words.

Whatever definition is ascribed to the words "action" and "suit" the basic question we have to answer is whether by judicial interpretation or call it interpolation if you with, this Court can legitimately extend the meaning of either word to encompass criminal proceedings. This appears to me to be the bottom line.

We were reminded not so long ago by the Privy Council in British Coal Corporation v. The King (1935) P.C. 158 that,

"In interpreting a constituent or organic stature, that the construction most beneficial to the widest amplitude of its powers must be adopted."

Similarly, in construing the Government of India Act the same year, the Indian Supreme Court admonished that,

[p.396]

"A broad and liberal spirit should inspire those whose duty it is to interpret it."

But the court was nevertheless quick to point out that,

".....this does not imply that they are free to stretch or pervert the language of the enactment in the interests of any legal or constitutional theory or even for the purpose of supplying omissions or correcting supposed errors."

Yet, in another Indian case, Kershara Menon v. State of Bombay, (1951) SC.R228, 232, the Supreme Court again opined:

"In argument founded on what is claimed to be the spirit of the constitution is always attractive for it has powerful appeal to sentiment and emotion; but a court of law has to gather the spirit of the constitution from the language of the constitution. What one may believe or think to be the spirit of the constitution cannot prevail if the language of the constitution does not support that vies."

When one juxtaposes sections 48(4) and 99(1) of the Constitution with section 120(9) it becomes extremely difficult if not impossible to resist the conclusion that the immunity granted to a judge of the superior court of judicature is confined purely to civil litigation. Section 48(4) and 99(1) are unambiguous as to the extent or limit of the immunity granted to the president on one side and the members of the legislature on the other. They cover immunity from both civil and criminal proceedings.

The fact becomes even clearer when the respective provisions of these two sub-sections are fully examined. I shall therefore set them out verbatim than otherwise might have been necessary.

Section 48 says:

"While any person holds performs the functions of the office of president no civil or criminal proceedings shall be instituted or continued against him in respect of anything done or omitted to be done by him in his official or private capacity.

Section 99(1) on its part provides

"Subject to the provision of this section but without prejudice to the generality of section 99, no civil or criminal proceedings shall be instituted against a member of parliament in any court or place by reason of anything said by him in parliament."

The difference in phraseology between these sub-sections and section 120(9) cannot be accidental. The change of language does suggest a change of intention on the side of parliament.

The common law stance on the immunity of a judge for things said or done by him in the course of his official functions was re-echoed by Lord Denning not so long ago in Sirros v. Moore and others (1974) ALL.E.R. 776 at page 781 when the Learned Master of the Rolls had to say:

"Ever since 1613, if not before, it has been accepted in our law that no action is maintainable against a judge for anything said or done by him in the exercise of a Jurisdiction which belongs to [p.398] him. The words which he speaks are protected by absolute privilege. The words which he used and the sentence which he imposes cannot be made the subject of civil proceedings against him. No matter that the judge was under some gross error or ignorance or was actuated by envy hate or malice and all uncharitable ness, is not liable to an action ... of course, if the judge has accepted bribes or has perverted the course of justice, he can be punished in the criminal courts) emphasis mine).

Lord Denning's dictum in Sirros v. Moore may be contracted with the some-what extreme case of Gahan v. Lafitte (2842) 3 Moo.P.C.C.382 cited by T.O. Elias in his Book "British Colonial Law" (1962) at page 71.

Certain persons had exercised the office of judges under Commissions which were issued irregularly by the then Governor of St. Lucia. In an action brought against them for trespass and false imprisonment, it was held that the said judges were liable for the acts done by them while so acting.

The decision in the case could well have turned on the fact that the jurisdiction under which the judges had acted was only a pretended one.

Surely, if the legislature had intend to give immunity to judges for their criminal acts it would have been easy for it to say so as indeed it had done in the case of the president and our legislators. "Liberalism" is one thing. But to import into the Constitution words which were, from all indications, never intended to be there is another matter altogether. As hard as it might appear, I regret, I am not allowed to do so.

In fact, even if the plaintiff were immune from criminal prosecution because of section 120(9), the question would still remain whether what he is alleged to have done was done [p.399] in the course of execution of his duties as a judge of the superior court of judicature in order to attract immunity under section 120(9).

Mr. Terry's reliance on section 137(4) I think is premature. What is in issue at this stage is whether the plaintiff can be tried for the allege offences enumerated in the 12 — count indictment preferred against him. It is only when and if the plaintiff s convicted of such offences will, in my opinion, the matter of his removal for stated mis-conduct under section 137(4) arise and the full mechanism prescribe in subsections 5,6, & 7 of section 137 for his removal from office come into operation. No misconduct has so far been established against the plaintiff

I shall turn next to declaration (i)

The pith and substance of this complaint is that the plaintiff was never afforded an opportunity to defend himself before the Anti-Corruption Commission, thus contravening the audi alteram parteam rule.

This allegation was refuted by the Learned Attorney-General and Minister of Justice who state that the plaintiff had been accorded all the rights and privileges of a person being investigated under the Act is entitled to. He stressed that it was indeed the refusal of the plaintiff to co-operate with the commission that prompted the Commissioner Mr. Valentine 1. Collier to write to the Non. Chief Justice to solicit his assistance and that it was only then that the plaintiff volunteered his cautioned statement annexed to his affidavit of 4th December 2000. By so doing Mr. Berewa argued, the plaintiff had availed himself of the opportunity to be heard albeit only reluctantly.

I find the dicta of Lord Loreburn L.C. in Board v. Rice (1911) ALL.E.R. at page 189 very instructive. This was what he said,

"Comparatively, recent statutes have extended, if they have not originated, the practice of imposing upon departments or offices of state the duty of deciding or determining questions of various kinds..... In such cases,.....they must act in good faith and fairly listen to both sides, for that is a duty lying upon everyone who decides anything. But I do not think they are bound to treat such question as though it were a trial.....They can obtain information in anyway they think best always giving a fair opportunity to those who are parties in the controversy for correcting or contradicting any relevant statement prejudicial to their view' (emphasis mine).

This is even less so in the instant case where the powers of the Anti-corruption Commission under the Act are restricted in the main to the investigation of corrupt practices by public servants and the submitting of reports.

Natural justice does not in my considered view always postulate a right adduce evidence or confront or cross-examine witnesses. What is of paramount importance is that a party must be afforded a fair chance to make representation against a proposed course of action. See Nakkuda Ali v. Jayaratne (1951) A.C. 66 and Ceylon University v. Fernando (1960) 1 ALL E.R. 631.

In the United States, whether oral hearing is required under "due process' in the absence of statutory provision would depend on the circumstances of the case and the particular interests affected. As was pointed out in F.C.C. v. W.J.R. (1949 337 V.S. 265 at page 276, the right to an oral hearing before administrative tribunals "is not a matter for broadside generalization and indiscriminate application." See also Golberg v. Kelly 397 V.S. 90 S. Ct. 1011, (1970) Richardson V. Wright 405 V.S. 208 (1972) Matthews v. Eldridge 96 S. Ct. 893 (1976).

I will now come to declaration (i). The plaintiff's counsel submitted here that the granting by the learned trial judge of an order for the plaintiff’s doctor to come to court and testify regarding the health of his client was a contravention of the provisions of section 23 (20 of the Constitution since the medical report of the plaintiff was already before her. See Exhibit M.O.T. D.6.

The crux of the matter as I perceive it, is whether it is open to the learned trial judge to go behind the plaintiff's medical certificate and cause to be examined Dr. Claudius Cole on the state of his patient's health. Did this amount to a breach of the principle of confidentiality that normally exists between Doctor and Patient?

For my part, I see no wrong do41g by the learned trial judge here because as the person in charge of the trial she was free to satisfy herself that the plaintiff was really unfit to attend court on the stated day due to ill health and that he was not simply using delaying tactics to drag or frustrate the proceedings.

There is nothing novel or unusual about this practice. In any event, section 23(2) itself requires that any such trial shall be concluded ''within a reasonable time."

On the related question of whether the Doctor should have been examined in chambers, and not in the open whilst this may be the preferred thing to do depending on the type and nature of the ailment it will be unfair to cast blame on the learned trial judge for failing to do so since she saw and read the medical report.

It may not be inappropriate whilst on this issue to refer to the head note in C.V.C. (1946) I ALL.E.R 562. It reads,

"It is in the public interest that justice should be done and for this purpose it may be necessary at time to override the [p.402] confidential relationship existing between doctor and patient."

So too, in 'Gamer v. Gamer (1920) 36 T.L.R. 196, where it was earlier held that a doctor might be compelled to give evidence that his patient was suffering from venereal disease, even though the relevant statutory regulations confer absolute secrecy on the doctor.

In the light of my respective findings above, I regret I cannot grant the declarations sought under (e) (i) & (j) by counsel for the plaintiff.

Finally I wish to thank counsel on both sides for their industry and tremendous assistance to the court throughout the hearing of these motions.

[p.403-404]

V.A.D WRIGHT J.S.C.

This Originating Notice of Motion dated the 14th December 2000 is a culmination of a series of application made before this court for the orders for Certiorari and Prohibition. The application is supported by an affidavits of Muctaru Ola Taju Deen sworn to on the 4th December, 2000 and the exhibit attached and of Claudius Doe Smith sworn to on the 4th December, 2000 and of the plaintiff sworn to on the 21st day of November, 200 in the criminal case between the State vs. Muctaru Ola Taju Deen Holden at the High Court.

I wish to commend counsel on both sides, for the well-reasoned and forceful manner they presented their cases. Arguments were presented on behalf of the plaintiff herein Muctaru Taju Deen and on behalf of the 1st, 2nd, 3rd defendants. At the hearing both sides highlighted several points on the declaratory orders sought.

Although eleven declaratory orders were prayed for namely (a) to (k) as set out in the Originating Notice of Motion herein I will confine my Ruling to Orders E and 1. Nearly all the declaratory Orders prayed for by the plaintiff have been dealt with either in the ruling given on the orders for Certiorari or Prohibition Le. Misc. App. 1/2001 dated 23.2.2002 unreported and Misc. App. 6/2000 dated 18.1. 2001 unreported.

"I will first deal with declaratory order (e) which states:—

"A Declaration to the effect that the provision of Section 7(1) and 8 (1) of the Anti corruption act. No. 1 2000 in so far as they have laid and framed as Constitution Offences against a Judge or acting Judge of the Superior Court of Judicature and in particular the Honourable Mr. Justice Muctary Ola Taju Deen are clearly repugnant to and inconsistent with the express mandatory entrenched provisions of Section 120 (9) and 137 (4) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No. 6 of 1991."

[p.405]

I shall not go into the legal definition of the remedy of declaration as this was adequately dealt with in the legal argument presented on behalf of the plaintiff herein Muctaru Ola Taju-Deen in this matter. The Honourable Mrs. Justice Patricia Macauley in the Criminal trial in the High Court had given a Ruling on this Declaratory Order sought and this has been appealed against to the Court of Appeal.

It is clear that under Section 127 (1) at the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No. 6 of 1991 which states:—

127 (1) A person who alleges that an enactment or anything contained in or done under the authority of that or any other enactment is inconsistent with, or is in contravention of a provisions of this Constitution may, at any time bring an action in the Supreme Court for a declaration to that effect.

(2) The Supreme Court shall, for the purpose of a declaration under subsection (1) make such orders and give such directions as it may consider appropriate for giving effect to, or enabling effect to be given to, the declaration so made.

Since the applicant is alleging that Section 7 (10 and 8 (1) of the Anti corruption act No. t of 2000 is inconsistent with Section 120 (9) and 137 (4) of the constitution he is entitled to bring the action for a declaration to that effect. In this declaration sought we are faced with the interpretation and construction of simple words in the Constitution and I agree with Learned counsel for the plaintiff that in construing or interpreting a Constitution, the Court is not permitted to substitute its own right meaning or to give a construction to the Constitutional Provisions order than the ordinary and proper meaning of the language which the Legislature sees fit to sue. See Olalere Obdara and other vs. President Naadan West District Customary Court 1964 1ANLR 336.

Section 120(9) of the Constitution states that a Judge of the Superior Court of Judicature shall not be liable to any action or suit for any matter or thing done by him in performance of his judicial functions.

I will now look into the construction and interpretation of the words action and suit. I agree with the interpretation of the meaning of the action in Stroud's Judicial dictionary of words and Phrases 4th Edition Page 45 in the 2nd Paragraph herein is states:—

Action 1. This is a generic term and means a litigation in a Civil Court for The recovery of individual right or redress of individual wrong, inclusive in its proper legal sense, of suits by the Crown (Bradlaught vs. Clarke 8 App. Case 354).

2. For the purpose of the judicature Act "action means' a Civil Proceeding commenced by writ or in such other manner as may be prescribed by Rules of Court.

This Interpretation is further re-inforced by the interpretation of Action in the High Court rules 1960.

"Action" means a Civil Proceeding commenced by a writ or in such other manner as may be prescribed by rules of court, but does not include Criminal Proceeding by the Crown."

In words and phrases Legally defined Volume 1: A — C Page 33 states:—

"An "Action" according to the legal meaning of the term, is a proceeding by which one party seeks in a court of justice to enforce some right against or to restrain the commission of some wrong by another party. More concisely it may be said to be ''the legal demands of a right" or the mode of pursuing a right of [p.407] judgment." It implies the existence of parties of an alleged right, of an alleged infringement thereof (either actual or threatened) and of a court having power to enforce such right. In its wider meaning the term includes both Civil and criminal Proceedings..... It is however generally used in a more restricted or popular sense as denoting Civil action commenced by writ or plaint.

On Page 34 it states; "It may be true to say that in some cases "actions will include indictments or will include criminal information. In some cases it may, but the question is whether in this Act or Parliament it does, and when the Legislature is found using the words "by action' that work contained according to its ordinary meaning does not seem to me to include an indictment or criminal information."

Action is defined as a proceeding by which one party seeks in a court of justice to enforce some right against or to restrain the commission of some wrong by another party. In its ordinary meaning the term includes both Civil and Criminal Proceedings. It is generally used in a more restricted or popular sense as denoting a civil action commenced by a writ or plaint See. Bradlaught vs. Clarke. There are several statutory definitions thus for the purpose of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act 1925 and rules of the Supreme Court it means a civil Proceeding commenced by writ, or in such other manner as may be prescribed by rules of court and does not include a criminal proceeding by the crown.

For the same purpose the word "suit" is to include "action" the old technical distinction between actions at law and suits in equity being thus rendered absolute and both "action and "suit" are to be included in the same under term "cause.

In words and Phrases Legally defined Volume 5 2nd edition S-Z at Page 146 states. It was argued that suit in the English version of the Hague rules meant an action in the Courts and was distinct from an arbitration and that, if a step had been take in an arbitration in due time but no writ had been issued in the courts. The plaintiffs Claim could have defeated, if the requirement of The Hague rules had been invoked as no "suit" having been established the defendants would have been discharged from liability."

The word "suit" in Section 64 (3) of the constitution of Sierra Leone Section 64 (3)

states:

"All offenses prosecuted in the name of the republic of Sierra Leone shall be at the suit of the Attorney-General and minister of Justice or some other person authorized by him in accordance with any law governing the same.'

Having stated the different definitions given on action I opine that the work action in general includes both civil and criminal action but to my mind the test is whether Parliament intended by the words action to include criminal proceedings in Section 120 (9) of the constitution.

Section 120 (9) of the constitution states:

"All Judge of the Superior Court of Judicature shall not be liable - to any action or suit for any matter or thing done by him in the performance of his judicial functions."

Before any person can claim exception from criminal liability there must be clear and unambiguous words to that effect in a statute or constitution exempting such a person from the criminal offences from which he is seeking exemption. Such references ought to be clearly spelt so as not to admit any doubt in the application of such exemption. Such references ought to be clearly spelt so as not to admit any doubt in the application of such exemption was done in Section 48(4) of the Constitution in the case of the President and in Section 99 (1) of the constitution in the case of members of parliament.

[p.409]

Therefore in my view Parliament never intended to include criminal Proceedings to the words action in relation to Section 120(9) of the constitution.

Section 120(9) of the Constitution states:—

"All judge of the Superior Court of Judicature shall not be liable to any action or suit for any matter or thing done by him in the performance of his judicial functions."

Before any person can claim exception from criminal liability there must be clear and unambiguous words to that effect in a statute or constitution exempting such a person from the criminal offences from which he is seeking exemption. Such reference ought to be clearly spelt so as not to admit any doubt in the application of such exemption was done in section 48(4) of a Constitution in the case of the President and in section 99 (1) of the constitution in the case of Members of Parliament. Therefore in my view Parliament never intended to include Criminal Proceedings to the words action in relation to section 12 (9) of the constitution.

In analyzing section 120 (9) of the Constitution it must be clear what judicial functions the performance of which exempts liability whether civil or criminal. These functions are confined to a judge's role during the trial. The role of the trial judge is set out in Volume 37 of Halsbury's Page 387 at Paragraph 510 in which the judge's functions as stated to be within the body of trial and not outside a trial. Therefore the action taking a gift or reward to influence a judge's behaviour or anything done in the conduct of his office is a bribe under the Common Law. See Halsbury's Laws of England Volume 11 at Page 541 Paragraph 921.

On the question of construing statues and other documents it is that you must not imply in them what is inconsistent with the words expressly used. "Per Lord Greene MR in Re a Debtor (1948) 2 AL LLR 533 at Page 536."

Section 120 (9) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone clearly prohibits the institution of any civil action against a judge of the Superior Court of Judicature in respect of anything done by him in the performance of his judicial functions. I opine that the term "Criminal Proceedings which is the type of proceedings instituted by the 12 Count Indictment is used in Section23 (1) (5) (7) and (8) and 9 contrary to the terms Civil or Obligation used in Section 23 (2) and (30 of the name Constitution connoting thereby a suit or an action.

It is clear that Section 120 (9) confers on a judge of the superior court of Judicature immunity from liability in respect of whatever he does in performance of his judicial functions but can one honestly say that if a judge takes bribe in the performance of his duty he is immuned from prosecution?

Lord Denning in Sirros vs. Moore and Others (19740 3 ALR 776 Page 781 said:

"Of course if the judge has accepted bribes or been in the lease corrupt or has perverted the cause of justice he can be punished in criminal courts. In my opinion the term "criminal Proceedings" in the expression suit or action will be repugnant to the cannons of construction."

Section 137 (40 of the Constitution stipulates that:

"subject to the provisions of this Section a Judge of the Superior Court of Judicature my be removed from office. Only for inability to perform the functions of his office. Whether arising from infirmity of body or mind or for stated misconduct and shall not be removed save in accordance with the provisions of this section."

I therefore agree with learned Counsel for the defendants that Section 137 (40 of the Constitution is irrelevant since removal of the plaintiff is not in issue now, and may come late if the plaintiff is convicted.

[p.411].

In my opinion the preferment of offices under Section 7 (10 and section 8 (10 of the Anti-Corruption Act No. 1 of 2000 is not repugnant to and is not inconsistent with provisions of section 137 (40 of the Constitution.

Also Section 120 (9) do no conflict with the provisions of Section 7 and 8 of the Anti-Corruption Act.

For the reasons given this Declaratory Order sought is thereby not granted.

Declaration to the effect that the apparent refusal and OR reluctance of the Trial Judge the Honourable Miss Patricia Macauley to grant an adjournment based on Dr. Claudius Cole's medical report which was properly before her on the 2nd day of November, 2000 regarding the state of health of the plaintiff herein the accused in the criminal trial holden at the High Court No. 1 Freetown contravenes and does violence to the Provisions of section 23 (2) of the constitution of sierra Leone Act. No. 6 of 1991 in circumstances which led to the granting of an Order for the said Doctor Claudius Cole to come and prove that the accused person is not in a state to appear before the High Court.

Counsel for the plaintiff posed the question whether the Honourable Miss Patricia Macauley could go behind that report of Dr. Claudius Cole to with Exhibit "MOTD 6." The answer I submit is in the affirmative.

I will invite you to Halsbury's Laws of England 4th Edition volume 30 on Medicine paragraph 19 which states:

''the relationship between a Medical Practitioner and his patient does not excuse the practitioner whatever medical etiquette may require from the obligation, if directed to do so to given evidence in a court of law or to disclose records, or other documents in the course of legal proceedings. He is in the same position as any other person who is not specially privileged in this respect by the law. He may be summoned to give evidence in [p.412] civil and criminal causes and may be liable to be punished by contempt of court it he neglects to attend.

In Civil cases, a judge has no discretion on grounds of confidentiality alone to direct a doctor that he need not disclose information which come to him through his professional relationship with a patient. Where however such disclosure would be in breach of some ethical or social value involving the public interest the court has a discretion to uphold a refusal to disclose public evidence if it considers that on the valance the public interest is better served by excluding such evidence"

(1) The relevant law is authoritatively stated in Dv National Society for Prevention of cruelty to Children (1978) AC 171. A doctor may therefore be required to disclose on oath information which come to his through his professional relationship with a patient, and he may be committed for contempt of court if he refuses to answer"

See Garner v Garner (1920) 16 TLH 1966 where a medical practitioner who is the cause of treating a patient under natural scheme for dealing with venereal disease, could be compelled to give evidence to that effect even though statutory regulations applied in the scheme enjoined absolute secrecy on the medical evidence. There are several authorities on this issue which I will not go into details but is clear that every case must be governed by the particular circumstances, and the ruling of the judge will be the test.

The Hon. Miss Justice Patricia Macauley was right to refuse to grant an adjournment based on Dr. Cole's medical Report which was before her regarding the health of the plaintiff herein the accused in the criminal trial before her if she was not satisfied and she had all right to order the said Dr. Claudius Cole to appear before her to prove that the plaintiff (the accused) was not in a state to appear before her.

There is no legal professional privilege between doctor and patient as between solicitor and client. See Taylor's Principles and Practice Medical Jurisprudence Volume 12th edition Page 22 states:

"Doctors may feel they have a privilege not to answer certain questions put to them in a court of law, on the ground that the matters have come to their knowledge out of professional confidences with their patient. The law concedes no special privilege on this nature to members of the medical profession. Whilst admitting desire of a doctor to preserve some kind of privacy about matters communicated to him in confidence by a patient all questions must be answered provided they are relevant to the case. The only exception is where an answer might incriminate the doctor."

See Nuttal v. Nuttal (10) SOL J.605).

It is common practice in our courts for medical experts to be called to give evidence to clarify certain points on notes, medical or Scientific reports etc., and I see nothing wrong in the Hon. Mrs. Justice Patricia Macauley calling the doctor to give evidence on the report.

For the foregoing reasons the Hon. Miss Patricia Macauley was not wrong in law in not granting an adjournment sought based on the report properly before her but rather ordered the doctor to appear before her to prove that the plaintiff was not in a state to appear before the High court and clearly this is not wrong neither in law or contravened the provisions of Section 23 (20 of the 1999 Constitution. The Declaration Order sough is hereby refused.

Hon. Mrs. Justice V.A. D. Wright - J.S.C.

JOKO SMART: JSC

This Motion is the last in the trial effort of the plaintiff before this Court to stay or put an end to his current trial in the High Court presided over by Mrs. Justice Patricia Macauley. Certiorari was eventually abandoned when we discharged an Order nisi previously granted him. Prohibition did not succeed either.

[p.415]

In addition to invoking the supervisory powers of this Court under section 125 of the 1991 Constitution, the plaintiff has now explored new ground with section 127 of the Constitution by seeking declarations with respect to certain issues connected with the Anti-Corruption Act 2000, Act No. 1 of 2000 and the Anti-Corruption Commission established pursuant to this Act. He is also asking us to use our powers under section 124 of the Constitution to say that section 120(9) of the Constitution applies to both civil actions and criminal prosecutions in respect of a judge.

In all, the plaintiff is seeking 11 declarations. By now, nothing turns on the particular facts, so I can be appropriately economical in my rehearsal of them. The first declaration is invoking our supervisory powers over the defendants herein. The second requires a ruling that the Report of the Commissioner of the Anti-Corruption Commission is invalid. The third contends that certain provisions of the Anti - Corruption Act are mandatory and that the defendants did not comply with them. The fourth argues that the Anti-Corruption Commission was not properly constituted at the time that the plaintiff was charged on an indictment based on a report of that Commission. The fifth maintains that the sections of the Anti-Corruption Act under which the plaintiff was charged are ultra vires sections 120(9) and 137(4) of the Constitution. Section 120(9) gives immunity to judges for actions and suits done in the performance of their duty while section 137(4) lays the procedure for the removal of a judge for misconduct. The sixth holds that Mrs. Patricia Macauley, the trial judge, ought to recluse herself on the ground of appearance of bias. The seventh complains of a defect in the preliminary proceedings before charges were laid against the plaintiff. This complaint is similar to that in the third declaration. The eighth is in the same vein as the second except that the plaintiff now stresses a breach of his fundamental human right to a fair hearing. The ninth essentially repeats the second with emphasis on the contravention of the audi alteram partem principle by the Commission. The tenth which is novel in the threefold proceedings hitherto instituted by the plaintiff contends that the order of the trial judge requiring the plaintiff s doctor to attend court and give evidence on the state of health of the plaintiff in support of a medical report which the doctor had issued on the plaintiff is in contravention of section 23(2) of the Constitution. The eleventh underscores the trial judge's lack of jurisdiction in conducting the trial of the plaintiff Let me say that the effect of granting any of the declarations in the manner in which they are couched is to terminate the current trial of the plaintiff.

As was with Misc. App SC 1/2001. we invited written presentations from both sides and we limited oral arguments to the highlights of their respective cases.

For the purpose of the present ruling, I can put the declarations sought by the plaintiff into two separate compartments. First, the ones which can legitimately be considered in this application having regard to our two previous rulings in Misc. App. SC 6/2000 and Misc. App. se 1/2001 together with the nature of the remedy now sought.. These break new ground. Second, the ones which can be given short shrift having regard to the rulings which have already been given in respect of certiorari and prohibition.

I shall begin with the second set. These include all the declarations except nos. (e) and (j) i.e., 5 and 10. The plaintiff must have had this set in mind when he moved the Court under section 125 of the Constitution. Under this section, this Court has supervisory jurisdiction over all other courts and adjudicating authorities in Sierra Leone. In our [p.416] rulings on the certiorari and prohibition, the supporting evidence of which are the same as these now before the Court, it was held that the remedies sought could not be given for the reasons stated in those rulings. I do not intend to repeat them here. It is sufficient merely to draw attention to them. Ingeniously, the plaintiff has now come by way of declaratory judgment, which, in my view, cannot be given under section 125 of the Constitution as it is not a prerogative order and the reliefs sought do not involve inconsistency between a statutory provision and the Constitution.. Possibly, the plaintiff now relies on common law as section 127 is specific. I can here understand why he includes section 170 of the Constitution as the basis of his application. The common law position in the circumstances is not as clear as the plaintiff would like this Court to believe. One view is that a declaratory judgment may lie where the prerogative orders fail. This was the opinion of Lord Goddard in Pyx Granite Co. v. Ministry of Housing[i959] 3 All ER 1 at 5 where he said:" I know of no authority for saying that, if an order or decision can be attacked by certiorari, the court is debarred from granting a declaration in an appropriate case.", Speaking specifically of the High Court which also exercises supervisory powers o~ inferior tribunals, Upjohn LJ in Punton v. Ministry of Pensions [1963] 1 All ER 275 at 279 expressed a similar view when he said:"It appears that the High Court has jurisdiction to correct the decisions of inferior tribunals by declaration where it is alleged that the inferior tribunal has made some mistake of law". He then referred to the case of Barnard v. National Dock Labour Board [1953]1 All ER 1113 where it was held that the subject is not confined necessarily to proceedings by way of certiorari., and he continued: " Where the alleged mistake of law is said to consist in some misconstruction by the tribunal of some statutory rule or order, it is a convenient, speedy and cheap procedure to raise the question and to ask for a declaration." But in the same case, at pa2e 279. Diplock, U, concurring in the judgments of Lord Denning MR and Upjohn LJ issued the following caveat. "I do not wish it to be thought that, without further careful examination, I necessarily assent to the proposition that a declaration lies as an alternative remedy wherever certiorari would lie. I think that it must depend, or may, at any rate, depend on the statutory terms in which jurisdiction is conferred on the inferior tribunal and on the statutory effect of its decision".

There is therefore no conclusive rule that a declaration may lie even if there is an alternative course to pursue. The inconclusiveness apart, the power to make a declaratory judgment at common law is discretionary; the discretion is to be exercised with care and caution, and judicial, with regard to all the circumstances of the case. (See Halsbury, Laws of England, 3rd Edition, Volume 22 para 1611). The history of the circumstances leading to this application which is now familiar cannot be lost sight of As I observed earlier, all the supporting evidence in the previous proceedings are identical with the ones in support of the present application; Massally J. ' s ruling in the certiorari proceedings in the High Court still hovers above the Plaintiff like the sword of Damocles. The dicta expressed in favour of a declaration in the English cases to which I have referred are concerned with decisions of adjudicating authorities which are inapposite to the present case as we have not yet decided that the Anti-Corruption Commission is an adjudicating authority. Before I leave this part of my ruling let me say that the reliefs sought do not involve the interpretation of the Constitution nor are they couched with precision even if a constitutional question can be gleaned from them to warrant coming to this Court under section 124 of the Constitution for an interpretation. In reaching this conclusion. I am guided by the judgment of this Court in Wellington Distilleries v. Electrodia P. [p.417] Clarkson (Constitutional Reference) unreported Misc.App. No. 4/81 delivered on 8 April 1982 wherein Tejan JSC opined that "it should be noted that not all Constitutional questions may necessarily involve or entail the interpretation of the Constitution. The question that should be referred to the Supreme Court must relate to the interpretation of any of the provisions of the Constitution". In the circumstances, this Court cannot give the declarations in the second set.

I now come to declarations (e) and (j) which I consider to break new ground in this series of applications.. The plaintiff has come, I believe, under section 23 (1) & (2) and sections 127 and 137(4) of the Constitution to substantiate them. I regard the inclusion of section 170(1)(a) to (e) and section 170 (2) & (4) as significant which , in my view, invites the common law as applicable law although counsel for the Plaintiff persuaded us in his argument that we should disregard this law in our interpretation of section 120(9) of the Constitution.

In support of declaration (e), the plaintiff bases his case on three premises. One is that section 7(1) and section 8(1) of the Anti-Corruption Act, No. 1 of 2000 are repugnant to sections 120(9) and 137(4) of the Constitution. The other is that a judge is immune from criminal prosecution under section 120(9) of the Constitution. The third is that if a judge does not have immunity under section 120(9), the proper procedure is that under section 137(4) of the Constitution and not a trial in court.

What gives the plaintiff a locus standi before this Court in respect of a declaration that a statute is repugnant to the Constitution is section 127 of the Constitution which provides as follows:—

"127 (1) A person who alleges that an enactment or anything contained in or done under the authority of that or any other enactment is inconsistent with, or is in contravention of a provision of this Constitution, may at any time bring an action in the Supreme Court for a declaration to that effect.

(2) The Supreme Court shall, for the purpose of a declaration under subsection (1), make such orders and give such directions as it may consider appropriate for giving effect to, or enabling effect to be given to, the declaration so made.

(3) Any person to whom an order or direction is addressed under subsection (1) by the Supreme Court shall duly obey and carry out the terms of the order or direction. (4) Failure to obey or to carry out the terms of an order or direction made or given under subsection (1) shall constitute a crime under this Constitution."

The first question that comes to mind is whether the Plaintiff can legitimately come directly to the Supreme Court for a declaration on the repugnancy question having regard to the history of the applications he has made to this Court. I apprehend that he can. The language of section 127 is clear and precise. It is the plaintiff's constitutional right to [p.418] apply to this Court for a declaration on repugnancy at any time and the fact that he has raised the issue only now does not prejudice that right. The second question is whether this Court can give a ruling on the interpretation of section 120(9) again having regard to what has transpired before the Plaintiff came to this Court for a declaration. As this question is merged in the first, I also hold that this Court can do so in the present action. As a starting point, it came to light in the application for prohibition that Macauley J in the High Court had given a ruling on the interpretation of section 120(9) of the Constitution and that there is an appeal pending in the Court of Appeal against that ruling. None of the parties herein has made a reference to that appeal nor have the defendants made it an issue in the present application. I hold that the outcome of that appeal is irrelevant to the question now posed before this Court. I think that it would be very mischievous to hold that when the Constitution compels a person to resort to the Supreme Court for a remedy, except there is a similar provision for resort to an inferior court, he can come first to the High Court or the Court of Appeal for a determination of the very matter relegated to the Supreme Court alone. This issue has not been canvassed by either side in this case but I consider it necessary to make a ruling on it in order to remove all doubt and to justify this Court in dealing with the declaration on repugnancy.

I turn now to the gist of the declaration and I begin by stating in full the expunged provisions of the Anti-Corruption Act and the relevant sections of the Constitution. Section 7(1) of the Anti-Corruption Act enacts that:

"A public officer is guilty of the offence of corrupt acquisition of wealth if it is found, after investigation by the Commission, that he is in control or in possession of any resources or property or in receipt of the benefit of any advantage which he may reasonably be suspected of having acquired or received corruptly or in circumstances which amount to an offence under this Act. "

Section 8(1) provides that

"Any public officer who solicits or accepts any advantage as an inducement to or reward for or otherwise on account of his (a) performing or abstaining from performing or having performed or abstained from performing any act in his capacity as a public officer;

(b) expediting, delaying, hindering or preventing or having expedited, delayed, hindered or prevented, the performance of an act, whether by himself or by any other public officer in his capacity as a public officer; or

(c) assisting, favouring, hindering or delaying or having assisted, favoured, hindered or delayed, any person in the transaction of any business with a public body;

is guilty of an offence."

[p.419]

Section 120(9) of the Constitution states that

"A Judge of the Superior Court of Judicature shall not be liable to any action or suit for any matter or thing done by him in the performance of his judicial functions."

Section 137(4) stipulates that

"Subject to the provisions of this section, a Judge of the Superior Court of Judicature may be removed from office only for inability to perform the functions of his office, whether arising from infirmity of body or mind or for stated misconduct, and shall not be removed save in accordance with the provisions of this section."

The remaining provisions of the section make judges removable from office by a two thirds majority of Parliament after the stipulated procedure has been adopted. In respect of this section, Counsel for the Plaintiff contends that even if a judge is accused of a criminal act in the performance of his judicial duty, he cannot be tried by a court but is liable to removal under this section.

At common law, the authorities seem to agree on one point, i.e. that judges enjoy immunity in civil actions, as a matter of public policy, for acts performed in the course of their judicial functions. (See Lord Tenterden CJ in Garnett v. Ferrand (1827) 6 B & C 611 at 625,626. [1824-34] All ER Rep 244 at 246. ; Lord Esher MR in Anderson v. Gorrie [1895] 1 OB 670.) As Lord Denning, MR articulates the point in Sirros v. Moore and Others [1974] 3 All ER 776 at 785," the reason underlying this immunity is to ensure that they may be free in thought and independent in judgment. Each should be protected from liability to damages when he is acting judicially. Each should be able to do his work in complete independence and free from fear. He should not have to turn the pages of his books with trembling fingers, asking himself: 'If I do this, shall I be liable in damages?' So long as he does his work in the honest belief that it is within his jurisdiction, then he is not liable to an action. He may be mistaken in fact. He may be ignorant in law. What he does may be outside his jurisdiction- in fact or in law-but so long that he honestly believes it to be within his jurisdiction, he should not be liable. He should not be plagued with allegations of malice or ill-will or bias or anything of the kind." But for acts coram non judice the authorities also agree that the judge is not immune to civil liability. Buckley LJ correctly draws the line between acts coram judice and those coram non judice in the following passage in Sirros v. Moore at p.787: "In determining whether a judge is liable for some act which he purports to have done in his judicial capacity, the sole question may, I think, be said to be whether it was an act coram non judice. If he were not then performing a judicial function, the act was not coram judice and the judge has no protection. If he was purporting to perform a judicial function but the matter was such that he had not jurisdiction to adjudicate on it, again the act was non coram judice because he had no authority to act as a judge for that purpose, and again he is without protection. If, however, he did the act in question in the purported performance of his judicial function and it was within his jurisdiction, then the act was [p.420] coram judice and the judge is protected." As can clearly be seen, the authorities draw a sharp line of distinction between a judicial act which is protected and a non judicial act which is not. There is therefore no absolute immunity even for civil liability.

On immunity to criminal liability, there is one authority which mentions corruption and which if the context is not carefully considered may carry the impression that a judge is not criminally liable for a crime .. It is the judgment of Crompton J in Frav v. Blackburn(1863) 3 B & S 576 at 578 which states that: "it is a principle of our law that no action will lie against a Judge of one of the superior Courts for a judicial act, though it be alleged to have been done maliciously and corruptly. The public are deeply interested in this rule, which, indeed, exists for their benefit, and was established in order to secure the independence of the Judges, and prevent their being harassed by vexatious actions." In this case the plaintiff who had obtained an interlocutory judgment against one defendant appeared before Blackburn, now the defendant, for the order nisi for costs to be made absolute. The judge refused to make the order absolute which was deliberate and contrary to law and he was sued by the plaintiff for all the costs which she had incurred. It was not a criminal case .A straightforward comment on criminal liability came some 111 years later from Lord Denning MR in Sirros v. Moore (supra) at page782 after stating the immunity of the judge when he said: "Of course, if the judge has accepted bribes or been in the least degree corrupt, or has perverted the course of justice, he can be punished in the criminal court."

A more recent pronouncement within the English common law, is that immunity inures against civil actions, at any rate, for negligence. In Arthur J.S. Hall & Co (a firm) v. Simmons [2000] 3 All ER 673, a case not directly concerned with judges but dealing specifically with the immunity of lawyers, the House of Lords, stressed that civil immunity is accorded judges and all those concerned with the administration of justice. Lord Hutton, echowing the views of his predecessors said: "A judge is given immunity because the law considers that it is in the public interest that he should not be harassed by vexatious litigation."(at page 732). With respect to criminal immunity in contradistinction with civil immunity, when a judge has erred, Lord Hobhouse expressed his views as follows: "A feature of the trial is that in the public interest all those directly taking part are given civil immunity for their participation. The relevant sanction is being prosecuted under the criminal law."(at page 739). Lord Hobhouse's opinion bears close affinity to that of Lord Denning in Sirros v. Moore (supra).

Having considered the common law position as it exists in England, I can now conveniently . return to the crux of the declaration. The relevant words in section 120(9)for my consideration are "action" and "suit" and "in the performance of his judicial functions". I will begin with my statement in The State v. The Hon. Mr. Justice M.O. Taju- Deen. ex parte Dr. Harry Will & Ors. Misc. App. 3/99. rulin2 on 9 November. 1999 to which the plaintiff has referred as one of the authorities in support of his application. In that ruling I said" If a judge is made a party to any action he is open to liability of any sort and that liability imports a duty resting on him for which he is answerable in law. I opine that if a judge is joined in any proceedings, he is exposed to all the incidents and consequencies of litigation. Thus he can be compelled to attend to answer allegations made against him and he can be amenable to the payment of costs." I later had cause to refer to this statement in the Foundation Day Lecture of the Sierra Leone Law School which I delivered on 23 February 2000, when I said: "In Sierra Leone [p.421] it is arguable that section 120(9) of the Constitution gives a blanket immunity to judges in respect of crimes. This is debatable but I do not think that Parliament would have, at any rate, condoned the commission of corrupt practices by judges and let them go free. The Anti-Corruption Act, 2000 now specifically includes judges and magistrates within the meaning of public officers who may be tried for corrupt practices". Little did I know then that some day I will be called upon to give a judicial ruling on the section.

Counsel for the plaintiff calls upon this Court to give a wide meaning to "suit" and "action" to include criminal as well as civil matters. He contends that the rights provided under this section are vested in that they are the same as those in the repealed 1978 Constitution and he exhorts this court not to take away these vested rights, relying on Akar v. Attorney-General, 1968-69 ALR S.L,274. I agree with his premise but not with his conclusion as the latter has no bearing on the meaning of the two words because no authorities have been cited to show the meanings that had been attributed to those words under the 1978 Constitution, which we should not depart from. In Akar's case, an Act of Parliament sought to deprive Akar of his citizenship which had been conferred on him by the Constitution. It is not the same case here. Be that as it may, I agree with plaintiff's counsel that we must adopt a liberal and purposive approach in interpreting provisions of the Constitution. In particular, I derive inspiration from the dicta of Denning L.J in Seaford Court Estates Ltd. v. Asher [1949] 2 All ER 155 at 164 where he said:

"A judge, believing himself to be fettered by the supposed rule that he must look to the language and nothing else, laments that the draftsmen have not provided for this or that, or have been guilty of some other ambiguity. It would certainly save the judges trouble if Acts of Parliament were drafted with divine prescience and perfect clarity. In the absence of it, when a defect appears a judge cannot simply fold his hands and blame the draftsman. He must set to work on the constructive task of finding the intention of Parliament, and he must do this not only from the language of the statute, but also from a consideration of the social conditions which gave rise to it and of the mischief which it was passed to remedy, and then he must supplement the written words so as to give <force and life' to the intention of the legislature. A judge must not alter the material of which the Act is woven, but he can and should iron out the creases."

With this statement of Denning L.J as my guiding principle, I will now tackle the meanings of "suit" and "action". Section 120(9) is not as clear as section 48 (4) of the Constitution which removes any doubt about the immunity of the President as it clearly states that he is immune from both civil and criminal proceedings while he holds or performs the functions of his office as President. For judges, we have to look to other sources for more guidance. Mr. Teny drew our attention to the Nigerian case of Egbe v. Adefarasin and Another. We were not provided with a full report of that case but from the extract which he gave us, I observe that the Supreme Court of Nigeria was making a ruling on civil immunity of a judge and not on criminal immunity. The Court relied on English authorities some of which I have already mentioned in this ruling, in particular [p.422] the opinion of Buckley LJ in Sirros v. Moore. Another case, The Merak, T.B. & S Batchelor & Co. Ltd (Owners of Cargo on the Merak) v. Owners of S.S. Merak [1965] 1 All ER 230 upon which the plaintiff has relied is not helpful to his application as this case simply decided that for the purpose of the one year period of limitation in bringing actions under the Hague Rules, the term “action" includes arbitration .. Further, Mr. Terry refers to the meaning of "action" in Words and Phrases Legally Defined Volume 1 2nd Edition as "including every judicial proceeding instituted in any Court, civil, criminal or ecclesiastical", but this definition is derived from a statute, i.e., The British Law Ascertainment Act 1859, section 5. However, Counsel did not draw our attention to one definition of an "action" in Words and Phrases Legally Defined where it is stated that "Action in its wider meaning includes both civil and criminal proceedings." But the same Book goes on to say that "action" "is, however, generally used in a more restricted and popular sense as denoting a civil action". The consensus of all the definitions cited in this Book is that an action means civil proceeding. Jowitt's Dictionary of English Law Volume 1 throws more light on the meaning of "action". It says that "in early times, actions were divided into criminal and civil ... In modem times, however, 'action' always meant a civil action." In our High Court Rules "action" is defined as a civil proceeding commenced by writ, but does not include a criminal proceeding. The face of a writ of summons contains the phrase "action at the suit of' There in no reference to suit or action in the Criminal Procedure Act .On the meaning of "suit" the plaintiff seeks comfort from section 64(3) of the Constitution which provides that all offences prosecuted in the name of the Republic of Sierra Leone shall be at the suit of the Attorney-General and Minster of Justice. The word "suit" in this context, in my opinion, simply means "instance" and does not refer to the nature of the proceeding. Counsel for the defendants cited most of the preceding authorities to canvass that "action or suit" does not include criminal proceedings.

It is now left for me to decide. I do not think that my task is to give the words "action" and "suit" meanings different from those that have been attributed to them from the beginning of legal history to the present times. Rather, my task is to ascertain these meanings and apply them within the context of our Constitution. The use of the words "action" and "suit" at common law has historical antecedents dating as far back as the period before the Judicature Acts 1873-75. Originally, when the common law courts were different from the court of equity the word "action" was confined to refer to proceedings in a court of law, commencing with the writ. "Suit", on the other hand, referred to proceedings in chancery commencing with a petition and it included petitions for criminal wrongs ... The term later became to mean any legal proceeding of a civil kind brought by one person against another. (See Coke on Littleton 291a.). With the merger of law and equity both terms are now being used interchangeably in civil litigation. The preferred term for a criminal litigation nowadays is a prosecution although, "action" is also commonly used. I think that for the interpretation of a constitution a liberal and wide construction is to be preferred but at the same time for some provisions of the constitution, the demands of public policy cannot be completely abandoned. Taking a cue from the several meanings of "action or suit" which I have been able to come across in this ruling I hold that "action or suit" can refer to both civil proceedings and a prosecution for a crime. However, I find it inconceivable that by enacting section 120(9) of the Constitution, Parliament intended to exempt a judge from a crime committed by him when he is occupying the seat of justice and the crime has no bearing [p.423] on the case that he sits upon. A judge owes a special duty to the community to ensure that justice is done in a trial which he conducts. Immunity is afforded him in order to avoid harassment by disgruntled persons who have been tried by him and not for his personal benefit. It is in this context that I view section 120(9). The immunity does not entitle a judge to go on an escapade of his own. For such activity, it is my opinion that he will not be acting in the performance of his judicial functions. I will regard acts that are in the course of arriving at a verdict or judgment even if they are done maliciously or negligently to assist one party and not the other as being done in the performance of his judicial functions provided that he does not derive some financial or proprietary interest from them. But such acts will be few indeed if one can find them. For example the commission of a criminal libel against any person in a judgment is an act in the performance of a judge's functions which I regard as not being actionable but a judge taking a bribe or any advantage for his own benefit so that he can pursue a line of action in a case on which he sits is something that I regard as being outside his judicial functions and not within his jurisdiction. If he engages in such activity, his personal interest is in conflict with his duty. Every democratic society frowns upon such a conduct in a person called upon to sit in judgment over others. Corruption is a pernicious, spreading evil in society which the legislature cannot condone in any body . In this connection, I refer to section 6 (5) of the Constitution which enacts that : "The State shall take all steps to eradicate all corrupt practices." I consider it the duty of the courts in interpreting a constitution like ours to consider its provisions as so inter-related as to give effect to the expressed intention of Parliament as gathered from the language used and the apparent policy of the enactment. It is in this light, and bearing in mind section 6(5) that I interpret section 120(9) ut res magis valeat quam pereat and exclude corruption from its ambit. On this score and uno flatu, I am in complete agreement with Lord Denning M.R in Sirros v.

Moore (supra) on the criminal liability of a judge for corruption.. I therefore hold that sections 7(1) and 8(1) of the Anti-Corruption Act dealing with corrupt practices are not inconsistent with section 120(9) of the Constitution.

The next question is whether a court is the proper forum for the trial of a judge who has committed a crime. Counsel for the Plaintiff says that the proper venue is Parliament under section 137(4) of the Constitution. This section speaks of removal for misconduct among other things. A crime, to my mind constitutes misconduct which may warrant the removal of a judge under this section but I do not think that removal is the only remedy. The fact that a judge may be removed from office because he has committed a crime does not absolves him from being prosecuted for that crime. If this were not the case the section would have said so in no uncertain terms. Apart from this, it is not every crime that a judge commits that is tantamount to misconduct warranting removal under this section. It will be preposterous, for example, to hold that this section can be invoked to remove a judge for a single serious traffic offence.

I now come to declaration (j). whereby the plaintiff contends that the refusal and/or reluctance of the trial judge to grant an adjournment based on Dr. Claudius Cole's medical report regarding the state of health of the Plaintiff in circumstances which led to the doctor being summoned to substantiate his report on the unfitness of the plaintiff to appear in court contravenes section 23(2) of the 1991 Constitution. It reads:

"Any court or other authority prescribed by law for the determination of the existence or extent of civil rights or obligations shall be independent and impartial; and where proceedings for such determination are instituted by or against any person or authority or the Government before such court or authority, the case shall be given fair hearing within a reasonable time."

Although counsel for the plaintiff did not specifically say so he seems to be basing his case on the doctor/patient privilege. I fail to see how such privilege can apply in this matter. The point at issue is not a doctor being compelled to reveal the state of health of his patient which may be a secret to both of them and which may attract privilege. The alleged state of health of the plaintiff was no longer a secret between him and his doctor when the latter issued the medical report. What was then in issue before the trial court was, in my view, the credibility of that report. The examination of witnesses on reports prepared by them is an essential element of our legal system for the ascertainment of veracity. This apart, I do not see how appropriately counsel's argument tallies with section 23(2).. I cannot find any impartiality on the part of the trial judge in ordering the appearance of the doctor.

My conclusion therefore is that the declarations be refused and I so order.

HON. JUSTICE H.R. JOKSRE, JSC.

HONOURABLE MRS. JUST

[p.425-426]

S.C.E. WARNE

This Originating Notice of Motion filed on the 4th day of December 2000 is a culmination of a series of application that have come before this Court over the past five months. In the series as in the instantmotion, theparties are the same or nearly the same. The end desire of all the applications is to stop the trial of the Hon. Mr. M.O. Taju Deen on Corruption Charges.

The application is made pursuant to Section 124, 125, 127, 170(1) (a) to (e), 170 Sub-Rule 2, 4 and 23 Sub Rule 1 & 2 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No. 6 of 1991.

Let me observe that the several sections referred to leave me rather uncertain as to what section is relevant for a declaration to be made by this Court. The application becomes more perplexing when the court is asked to make declaration pursuant to a sub rule of the Constitution. The Constitution is not Subsidiary Legislation.

Be that as it may, the power of this Court to pronounce a declaratory Judgment or Order is contained in section 127 (1) of the said Constitution which provides "person who alleges that an enactment or anything contained in or done under the authority of that or any other enactment is inconsistent with, or is in contravention of a provision of this Constitution, may at any time bring an action in the Supreme Court for a declaration to that effect."

Among the series of application made to this Court, was one for certiorari where leave was granted and later discharged; and another for Prohibition which was refused. The contents of the affidavits and statements in support of the instant motion are similar in most respects as these in the previous applications mentioned above.

There are eleven declarations sought, only the Declaration under paragraph (e) had not been previously considered by this Court. In the case of paragraph (j), I do not think it is one which attracts a declaratory order. This is a clear case of admissibility of evidence. Section 23(2) of Act. No. 6 of 1991 has no relevance to admissibility of evidence in a [p.427] criminal trial. The right of the trial judge to order the appearance of a witness to testify has nothing to do with a declaratory order. Section 23(2) states: "Any court or other authority prescribed by law for the determination of the existence or extent of civil rights or obligations shall be independent and impartial; and where proceedings for such determination are instituted by or against any person or authority or the Government before such Court or authority the case shall be given fair hearing within a reasonable time."

Let me hasten to say that I can find no evidence in the affidavit or the statement filed herein that the calling of a witness is s criminal trial has done any violence to section 23(20 aforesaid. In my view this is clearly an abuse of due process. If anything this particular application under paragraph G) is not in anyway aiding "a fair hearing within a reasonable time", albeit, that the section has nothing to do with the declaratory order being sought.

This Court has given two considered rulings toughing and concerning the Declaratory Orders sought in paragraphs (a) (b) (c) (d) (t) (g) (h) (i) (g) vide unreported Rulings of 18th January 2001 and unreported Ruling of 23rd February 2001.

It only remains for me to consider whether a declaratory order should be mad with regard to paragraph (e).

Paragraph (e) states:— A Declaration to the effect that the provisions of section 7(1) and 8(1) of the Anti Corruption Act No. I of2000 in so far as they have been laid and framed as Constituting Offences against a judge or Acting Judge of the Superior Court of Judicature and in particular the Honourable Mr. Justice Muctaru Ola Taju Deen are clearly repugnant to and inconsistent with the express mandatory entrenched provisions of Section l20(a) and 137 (4) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.6 of 1991.

In spite of the fact that the paragraph is infelicitously worded, I shall consider it for what it is worth.

[p.428]

S.120 (9) states: A Judge of the Superior Court of Judicature shall not be liable to any action or suit for any matter or thing done by him in the performance of his judicial functions. "

I opine that this is a Salutary provision of the Constitution. Mr. Terry has also referred to Section 137 (4) of the Constitution which states:

"Subject to the provision of this section, a judge of the Superior Court of Judicature may be removed from office only for inability to perform the functions of his office, whether arising from infirmity of body or mind or for stated misconduct, and shall not be removed save in accordance with the provision of this section."

The plaintiff is not being removed from office for any of the reasons stated section 137(4).

The plaintiff has been charged with a criminal offence under the Anti-Corruption Act No. I of 2000. While the charge is pending he cannot be moved from office. It is a trite principle to law that an accused is innocent until proved guilty vide section 23(4) of the Constitution: It provides "Every person who is charged with criminal offence shall be presumed to be innocent until he is proved, or has pleaded guilty."

I hold that S.137 (4) is not germane to the issue before the Court. I will now refer to Sections 7(1) and 8 (1) of the Anti corruption Act No. I, 2000 which Mr. Terry argued "are clearly repugnant to and inconsistent with the express mandatory provisions of Sections 120(a) and 237 (4) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No. 6 of 1991." Section 7 (1) provides "A public officer is guilty of the offence of corrupt acquisition of wealth if it is found after investigation by the Commission that he is in control or possession of any resources or property or in receipt of the benefit of any advantage which he may reasonably be suspected of having acquired or received corruptly or in [p.429] circumstances which amount to an offence under this Act" 8(1) provided (a) Any public officer who solicits or accepts any advantage as an inducement to or reward for or otherwise on account of his performing or having performed or abstained from performing any act in his capacity as a public officer:

(b) .....

I have for convenience stated the statutory provisions which I consider necessary in this application and having regard to the arguments that have addressed to us, it may now be convenient to state in chronological order how the questions between the Plaintiff and the Defendants arose.

Briefly the Plaintiff was the trial judge in the case of the state V. Dr. Harry Will and two others. At the end of the Trial, Dr. Harry Will and the 2nd accused were found guilty of the offence charged but the third accused one Bockari Kakay was found not guilty of the offences and he was acquitted and discharged. The Attorney-General Mr. Solomon Berewa led the prosecution in the case. In the course of time the Attorney-General laid on Indictment against the Plaintiff contrary to section 7 (1) and section 8(1) of the Anti-Corruption Act No. I of 2000. The Plaintiff pleaded not guilty to all the charges. Mr. Terry, during the pendency of the trial moved the High Court pursuant to section 134 of the Constitution to have indictment quashed by an order of certiorari section 134 provides: The High Court of Justices shall have supervisory jurisdiction over all inferior and traditional courts in sierra Leone and any adjudicating authority and in the exercise of its supervisory jurisdiction shall have power to issue such directions, writs and orders, including writs of habeas Corpus, and order of certiorari, mandamus and prohibition as it may consider appropriate for the purpose of enforcing or securing the enforcement of its supervisory powers."

The High Court ruled that the Anti-Corruption Commission was not an adjudicating authority. The Plaintiff proceeded to the Supreme Court for leave to issue an order of certiorari. Leave was granted but later discharged for failing to disclose that such application had been made in the High Court. The Plaintiff again moved the Supreme Court for an Order of Prohibition on several grounds, inter alia, that the trial judge should be prevented form continuing with the trial because of bias or the likelihood of bias. The motion was refused. The instant motion, as I have said earlier is a culmination of the multiplicity of motions before this Court.

In my view, declaration may be granted in all cases where there is a dispute between a plaintiff and a defendant, and a claim for a declaration in a convenient method of dealing with such dispute, I think the view for a declaratory judgement is that which is stated by Lord Sterndale N.B. In Hason V. Radcliffe Urban District Council (1922) 2 Ch. 90 at 507.

These are the words of Lord Sterndale M.R

"Further, the defendants are a statutory body, which has purported to interfere with a contract made between two parties, and I adhere to my judgment in Guaranty Trust Co. of New York V Hamming and Company in which although I had the misfortune to disagree with Lord Wrenbury I said that a number of declarations had been made in my opinion, rightly made, as to the rights of parties under contracts, without waiting for some events to happen, as for instance, for a ship to arrive at its destination, in order to determine result of the contracts, and what the exact causes of the action might be.

In my opinion under R.S.C. Order 23 Rule 5, the power of the Court to make a declaration, where it is a question of defining the rights of two parties, is almost unlimited by its own discretion. The direction should of course be exercised judicially.

But it seems to me that the discretion is very wide.....

[p.431]

This is a quotation by Greer L.J. in the case of Cooper V. Wilson in (1937) 2 K.B. at 720 at 754."

It seems to me that declaratory judgment can be granted to parties who have disputes and I subscribe to the opinion of the Learned Law Lord, Lord Sterndale M.R.

In my opinion there is no dispute between two parties to warrant a declaration of any kind under section 127 of the Constitution. We derive our power specifically in this instant case from section 127 of the Constitution.

It is necessary to consider the function of the Commission. Under Part II of the Anti Corruption Act. No. I of 2000, Section 5 (1) spells out the object for which the Commission is established and it is to investigate instances of alleged or suspected corruption referred to it by any person or authority or which had come to its attention, whether by complaint or otherwise and to take such steps as may be necessary for the eradication or suppression of corrupt practices.

Having spelt out what the functions of the commission are, I will now consider the Sections which Mr. Terry complians about. If section 7 (1) and 8 (1) are clearly repugnant to and inconsistent with the provisions of section 120 (9) and 137 (40 of the Constitution, a fortiori, the entire Act that is to say the Anti-Corruption Act No. 10f2000 is repugnant to and inconsistent with the said Section 120 (9) and 137 (40 of the Constitutions.

I do think this view is right because of the functions of the Commission expressed in section 5 (1) of the Anti-Corruption Act No. 1 of 2000. The powers of the Commission are wide. In my view, the Act is enacted to protect the integrity of the State. This is an unequivocal Act to insure that no person is above the law.

In my view, I do think section 7 (10 and 8 (1) of the Anti corruption act No. (1) of2000 are inconsistent with or in contravention of Section 120 (9) is specifically enacted to provide protection, indeed immunity for judges who are performing their judicial [p.432] functions with honesty, dignity and impartiality. Moreover, it is enacted to prevent ill disposed persons or even unsuccessful litigants from bringing suits against judges who have acted within their jurisdiction. This protection and immunity are grounded in antiquity. In my view. Mr. Terry has misconceived the object of Parliament in enacting Section 120 (9) of the Constitution and thereby has been misled into relating the provisions therein to the provisions in Section137 (4) of the Constitution. This is rather unfortunate. Sections 7 and 8 of the Anti corruption Act No. 1 of 2000 were not enacted to entrap judges in their judicial capacity but they are to ensure that public officer are brought to justice where they have betrayed their trust.

I will refuse the motion in its entirety and dismiss the application.

Garvas J. Betts Esq. and Yasmin Jusu-Sheriff for Appellants

A. J. Bishop Gooding Esq. for Respondent

JUDGMENT

KUTUBU

This is an appeal against the Ruling and Order of the Court of Appeal for Sierra Leone, delivered on the 18th day of November, 1986 by Williams J.A., upholding a preliminary objection by counsel for Respondent, on a Motion brought by counsel for Appellants, herein, the Applicant/Defendants in the court below, seeking leave to appeal against the Ruling of the High Court, delivered on the 16th day of June, 1986 by Adophy J. (as he then was).

It is, I think, necessary at the outset, that the facts of the case be ascertained, and the dates of the various steps taken be kept in mind, before considering the grounds of appeal. In order to avoid confusion in the course of this judgment, and for purposes of easy reference, I may hereafter refer to the Respondent as “plaintiff claimed from the defendants the value of certain missing/damaged goods duty, loss of profits and interest. No appearance having been entered within the prescribed time, fifty days in the instant case, interlocutory judgment in default of appearance dated 18th February, 1986 was obtained against the defendants. An Order for Assessment Proceedings was made on 6th March, 1986.

On 21st April, 1986 defendants entered appearance under protest and filed a Notice of Motion, dated 21st April, 1986 seeking to set aside the Judgment in Default of Appearance dated 18th February, 1986 This was struck out with costs on 27th May, 1986.

Another Notice of Motion which was filed, dated 29th May, 1986 seeking the same remedy was dismissed with costs on the 16th June, 1986 by Adophy J. (as he then was).

On 21st June, 1986 the defendants applied to the High Court for leave to appeal against the said decision. On the 11th day of July, 1986 the application for leave to appeal was refused.

Consequent upon the aforesaid refusal, the defendants on the 23rd July, 1986 applied to the Court of Appeal for leave to appeal against the decision of the, High Court dated 16th June, 1986.

When the application came up far hearing on 29th October, 1986 counsel for plaintiff raised a preliminary objection, by submitting that the Court of Appeal lacked jurisdiction to, entertain the said application, which in his submission was out of time, thus depriving that Court of jurisdiction. Counsel for plaintiff grounded, his submission on Rules 10 (1) and 10 (4) .of the Court of Appeal Rules 1985 Public Notice No 29 of 1985.

Defendants' application was dismissed by the Court of 28th day of November, 1986. In delivering the Ruling of the Court of Appeal, Williams J .A . had his to say:—

“The application before this court was dated 2ndJuly, 1986. It is for leave to appeal against the decision of the High Court: delivered en the 16th day of June, 1986.Clearly such an application is out of time in that it was made 36 days after the date on which the decision of the High Court was delivered. There is application before this Court for enlargement of time within which to apply for leave to appeal.”

[p.57]

Williams J.A concluded by saying:—

“In view of the authorities on the matter, the failure of the applicants to comply with the statutory requirements and to fulfill the statutory conditions requisite for the' purposes of the intended appeal, deprived this court of any jurisdiction to hear the application”.

It is against' that Ruling that defendants have appealed to this court on the following grounds, which I find somehow tedious to set out in full, but for a clear understanding of defendants' complaints in this appeal, I am constrained to' set them out in extenso. The following constitutes defendants' grounds of Appeal.

1. That when the learned judge said, “The application. before this court was dated 23rd July, 1986 it is far leave to appeal against the decision of the High Court delivered on the 16th June, 1986 clearly such an application is out of time in that it was made se me 36 days after the date on which the decision of the High Court was delivered,” the court thereby misconstrued the provision of Rule 10 (1) and 10 (4) of the Court of appeal Rules, Public Notice No. 29 of 1985 in treating the aid sub-rules cumulatively as required that after four' weeks after the date of the decision in respect of which leave to appeal is sought, an applicant who has applied for leave to appeal in the court below within the two weeks stipulated in Rule 10 (1), would necessarily first have to' apply tar enlargement of time, to appeal, where the court below has refused the application for leave to appeal, and such a ruling refusing leave fell outside a fourteen days after the delivery of the decision in. respect of which leave to appeal is sought.

2. In holding aforesaid, that the Applicant is out of time in that it was made some 36 days after the date on which the decision of the Court below was delivered,” the Court failed to construe properly or at all Rule 10(1) of the said Court of Appeal Rules, in relation to sub-rule 10 (4) and Rule 64. The misconstruction or failure to construe properly is that by its ruling the Court below failed to hold, as in law it should that where the Applicant in the High Court had filed his Notice for leave to appeal within time such an Applicant had complied with the requirement of Rule 10 (1) and the requirement for enlargement of time in the said sub-rule would no longer apply to such an Applicant and that further, such an Applicant to whom leave is denied would be entitled to have his application determined by the Court.

3. That when the Court of Appeal held that it could "not agree more, that in law, an affidavit in opposition which was filed could not act as a waiver, the court misdirected itself in law in that such a step, with full knowledge of noncompliance "with the Rules is a fresh step and so a waiver.

4. That in holding that, lithe failure of the Applicant to comply with the statutory requirements and to fulfill the statutory conditions required for the purposes of the intended appeal," the, Court erred in law in treating an act of non-compliance as having the effect in law in making an application void rather than merely irregular, and in doing so depriving itself of the capacity to grant consequential relief to Applicants, or wrongly putting it beyond itself to consider granting such relief.

[p.59]

The reliefs sought by defendants in this Court are:—

1. Reversal of the Order of the Court of Appeal; and

2. remission of defendants' application to the Court of Appeal for hearing and determination.

From the substance of the Court of Appeal's Ruling, the grounds 0f appeal in this case and arguments of counsel before this Court, essentially, this appeal turns on the construction of Rules 10,(1), 10 (1) and Rule 64 of the Court of Appeal Rules 1985, Public Notice No. 29 of 1985. I therefore find it necessary and appropriate at this juncture to set out these Rules in extenso:—

Rule 10 (1) states:—

"Where an appeal lies by leave only, any person desiring to appeal shall apply to the Court below or to the Court by Notice of Motion within fourteen days from the date of the decision against which leave to appeal is sought unless the Court below or the Court enlarges the time."

Rule 10 (4) states:—

"No application for enlargement of time within which to apply for leave to appeal shall be made after the expiration of fourteen days from the expiration of the time prescribed within which an application for leave to appeal may be made application for leave to appeal may be made."

Rule 64 states:—

"Except where otherwise provided in these rules or by any other enactment, where any application may be made either to the Court below or to the Court, it shall be made in the first instance to the Court below, but if the Court below refuses t the application, the applicant shall be entitled to have the application determined by the Courts."

[p.60]

The issues raised in this appeal may be summarised as follows:

1. Did the Court of Appeal misconstrue the provisions of Rules 10(1), 10(4) and 64 of the Court of Appeal Rules 1985, Public Notice No. 29 of 19851

2. Was the Court of Appeal right in treating Rules 10(1) and 10(4) cumulatively as requiring that after four weeks after the date of the decision in respect of 1mich leave to appeal was sought, the defendants who had applied for leave to appeal in the court below within the statutory period of fourteen days (Rule 10(1), would necessarily have to apply for enlargement of time for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal, where the court below had 'refused the application for leave to appeal after, fourteen days?

3. Was the Court of Appeal right in holding that the requirements for enlargement of time in Rule 10 (4) applied to defendants, even where they in the court below had filed their Notice of Motion for leave to appeal within time, as stipulated in Rule 10(1)?

4. Was the Court of Appeal right in holding that in law an affidavit in opposition which was filed by plaintiff with full knowledge of non-compliance by defendants, could not act as a waiver? "Did the affidavit in opposition constitute a fresh step in the proceeding and therefore a waiver?

5. Did the Court of Appeal err in law in treating an act of non compliance as having the effect in law in making the defendant's application for leave to appeal [p.61] void rather than merely irregular, thereby ousting the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal to grant consequential relief to defendants?

6. Has the Court of Appeal right in its construction of Rule 10(1), thereby resulting in manifest absurdity and inconvenience to defendants?

I now consider the first three issues outlined above. The decision of the High Court dated 16th June, 1986 was an interlocutory decision, and so statutorily, defendants were obliged to apply to that court by Notice of Motion for leave to appeal against the said decision to the Court of Appeal. By virtue of Rule 10(1) both the High Court and the Court of Appeal have concurrent jurisdiction in the matter of application to these Courts for leave to appeal" for enlargement of time. Application for leave to appeal must be made within fourteen days of the date of the decision of the High Court.

Rule 64, however, provides that the application must first be made to the High Court and on refusal, to the Court of Appeal for determination. Rule 64 which in my opinion is merely procedural, is silent on the question of time since it does not stipulate time within which an applicant may apply to either the High Court or the Court of Appeal for leave to appeal. To all intents and purposes, an applicant must look to the provisions of Rules 10(1) and 10(4) for time construction.

An applicant under Rule 10(1) has to comply with the provision of Rule 10(2) which states as follows:

"Any application for leave to appeal or for enlargement of time within which an application for leave to appeal may be made, shall be supported by an affidavit setting forth good and sufficient reasons for the application and by proposed grounds of appeal which prima facie show good cause for leave to appeal or enlargement of time within which to apply for such leave should be granted".

[p.62]

As already stated, application for leave to appeal under Rule 10(1) must be made within fourteen days of the date of the decision, unless the Court below the Court of Appeal enlarges time. Time therefore starts to run from the date of the decision. Where the fourteen days stipulated under Rule 10(1) have not yet expired, an applicant can apply for enlargement of time to the High Court, which that Court may grant, but not when time has expired, as by then the jurisdiction of the High Court would have closed.

Under Rule 10(3), where time is enlarged, a copy of the order granting enlargement shall be annexed to the application.

There appears to be no problem where the application for leave to appeal is granted within time. In my opinion, where the application is refused within the prescribed fourteen days, the applicant will have to make a fresh application for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal. Where the application is refused after the fourteen days period specified in Rule 10(1); an applicant must apply for enlargement of time together with an application to the Court of Appeal for leave to appeal, in view of the provision of Rule 10(4), which taken together with Rule 10(1) gives the applicant twenty-eight days for time to run out.

Now how do the facts of this case reflect the observance by defendants of the statutory requirements, if at all?

On the 21st June, 1986, that is, five days after the date of the decision in the High Court dated 16th June, 1986, defendants applied to the High Court for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal. This application fell within the statutory period of fourteen days prescribed by Rule 10(1). On the 11th July, 1986 that is, nineteen days after the application to the High Court for leave to appeal, and twenty four days from the date of the decision in the High Court, the application was refused by the High Court. On the 23rd July, 1986, that is twelve days after the date of refusal, the defendants without more, applied to the Court of Appeal for leave to appeal against the decision of the High Court dated 16th June, 1986; in all, thirty-six days from the date of that decision.

[p.63]

The Court of Appeal took the view that time having run out by virtue of Rules 10(1) and 10(4) of the Court of Appeal Rules, which cumulatively comes up to twenty eight days within which to appeal, and there being no prior application before them by defendants for enlargement of time to appeal, which would have clothed them with jurisdiction, refused to entertain the application. On this reckoning, at the time of the refusal of the High Court to grant defendants' application for leave to appeal, that is, 11th July, 1986 defendants still had four days within which to apply for enlargement of time, which the Court has power to grant even after the' expiration of the time allowed or appointed I do not support the submission of defendants, which was argued strenuously before this Court, that once an applicant has complied with the provisions of Rule 10(1), by applying to the High Court within the statutory period of fourteen days, he there and then has no further obligation to seek enlargement of time t, appeal to the Court of Appeal, on refusal by the High Court to grant leave to 'appeal.

In my opinion, where an applicant's application under Rule 10(1) has been refused and time has already expired for making such application, it will be futile to take solace in the, assumption that he can proceed to the Court of Appeal on the bas: of his original application to the High Court, be it within time. The proper thing to do in the circumstances, knowing that the jurisdiction of the High Court has closed after its refusal to grant application for leave to appeal, is to apply to the Court of Appeal, which by virtue of Rule 10(1), has concurrent jurisdiction with the High Court. The applicant would therefore have to proceed to the Court of Appeal by fresh application to the concurrent jurisdiction of that court and not on the basis of the original application to the High Court for leave to appeal. Suffice it to say, that after refusal by the High Court no further application for enlargement of time should be made to that Court if only for want of jurisdiction.

[p.64]

As I see it, the provisions of the old Court of Appeal Rules 19?3 Public Notice No. 28 of 1973, that is Rules 10(1) (2) and 11(4) which I need not spell out, are similar to the present Rule; Rules 10(1), 10(4) and 64 Public Notice No. 29 of 1985, except that under the old Rules the applicant has fourteen days plus one month to have his application determined by the Court of Appeal. Under these Rules, where time has expired, an application for enlargement of time must be made to the Court of Appeal.

In respect of issues 1, 2 and 3 above, I hold as follows:

1. That the Court of Appeal properly construed the provisions of Rules 10(1) 10(4) and 64 of the Court of Appeal Rules 1985, Public Notice No. 29 of 1985.

2. That the Court of Appeal was right in treating Rules 10(1) and 10(4) cumulatively.

3. That the requirements for enlargement of time applied to defendants irrespective of their earlier application to the High Court for leave to appeal within time.

In arguing Ground 3 of the Grounds of Appeal defendants submitted that the affidavit in apposition filed by plaintiff with full knowledge of the alleged irregularity, that is, defendant failure to apply to the Court of Appeal for enlargment of time to appeal to the court of Appeal after refusal by the high Court was a fresh step in the proceeding, which constituted a waiver of any Irregularity on the part of defendants.

Plaintiff in his reply contended that an affidavit in opposition to an affidavit in support of an application for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal cannot be deemed to be a waiver or jurisdiction .He submitted that the failure to comply with a statutory requirement is not a mere irregularity which may be waived by plaintiff, since it is deprived the court of appeal of jurisdiction to hear the application. He submitted further that what constitutes a waiver depends upon the nature of [p.65] irregularity this being so fundamental and therefore incurable. Plaintiff further argued that in taking the steps he took in filing the affidavit in opposition, he was acting ex abundanti cautela, since a preliminary objection was only being taken by him at the time, which might prove unsuccessful.

The Court of Appeal held that Plaintiff's affidavit in opposition did not constitute a waiver. I agree. Indeed, I find no merit in defendants' submission, as in my opinion the irregularity in this case is not a mere irregularity which can be waived by the plaintiff where there is jurisdiction, but an irregularity which calls into question the very jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal.

In determining the fourth issue outlined above I hold that plaintiff's affidavit in opposition did not constitute a fresh step in the proceedings, nor did it amount to a waiver.

The fifth issue posed, is, whether the Court of Appeal erred in law in treating an act of non-compliance, (that is, failure by defendants to apply to the Court for enlargement of time) as having the effect in law in making defendants' application for leave to appeal void rather than merely irregular.

In arguing this issue, defendants submitted that the act of non-compliance in the instant case, was a mere irregularity which did not go to jurisdiction and therefore it was wrong in law for the Court of Appeal to have deprived itself of jurisdiction.

Plaintiff maintained that the act of non-compliance was fundamental, being in contravention of statutory requirements, thereby depriving the Court of Appeal of jurisdiction. Plaintiff referred us to two authorities in support of his arguments which I consider relevant to the point- Oranye vs. Jibowu 13, W.A.C.A. (Selected Judgments of the West African Court of Appeal) p. 41 at 42 and Ohene Moore vs. Akesseh Tayee, 2.W.A.C.A. 43

[p.66]

In Oranye vs. Jibowu, the issue turned on an appeal from the Magistrate's Court where Appellants appealed out of time and had taken no step to have the time extended in accordance with the provisions of the Rules. The defects escaped the notice of everybody concerned, with the result that the judge of the Supreme Court proceeded to hear the appeal.

It was held that the irregularity could not be regarded as mere technicality, but constituted an incurable defect. The failure to comply with the statutory requirements deprived the Supreme Court of any jurisdiction to hear the appeal.

In Ohene Moore vs. Akesseh Tayee which turned, not on extent of time but failure to fulfill certain statutory requirements requisite for the purposes of an appeal, Lord Atkin in delivering the opinion of the Privy Council observed as follows;

“It is quite true that their Lordships as every other Court attempt to do substantial justica and to avoid technicalities but their Lordships, like any other Court, are bound by the statute law, and if the statute law says there shall be no jurisdiction in a certain event and that event has occurred then it is impossible for their Lordships or for any other Court to have jurisdiction”

In my opinion these authorities reflect the correct p0sition of the law with which I have no reason to differ. In the circumstances I find no substance in defendant’s submission which must fail.

The answer to the fifth issue herein is that the Court of Appeal was right in holding that they had no jurisdiction to entertain defendant's application.

[p.67]

The last and final issue for consideration, is whether the Court of Appeal was right in its construction of Rule 10(1) of the Court of Appeal Rules, Public Notice No. 29 of 1985.

In their arguments, defendants submitted that the Court of Appeal wrongly construed Rule 10(1) thereby resulting in manifest absurdity and inconvenience. That on a proper construction the Court of Appeal would have arrived at a different conclusion.

Plaintiff on the other hand, submitted that the words of the said Rule 10(1) are plain and unambiguous, and as a result, they must be given their plain and ordinary meaning, irrespective of Consequences. He further submitted that where the language of an Act or Rule is explicit, its consequences are for Parliament and the Rules of Court Committee, and not for the Courts to consider.

The whole arguments therefore turn on the canons of interpretation for which there are many authoritative decisions. IN SUSSE PEERAGE CLAIM (1844) 11 Cl. & F.85 Tindale C.J. said:—

"If the words of a statute are, in themselves precise and unambiguous, then no more can be necessary than to expound those words in their natural and ordinary sense. The words themselves alone do in such a case best declare the intention of the lawgiver".

Cotton L.J in Reid v. Reid (1886) 31 Ch. D. 402, 407 had this to say:—

"In considering the true construction of an Act, I am not so much affected as some judges are by consequences which may arise from different constructions. Of course if the words are ambiguous and one construction leads to enormous inconvenience, and another construction does not, the one which leads to least inconvenience is to be preferred".

[p.68]

Lord Esher M.B. in R v. JUDGE OF CITY OF LONDON COURT (1892 1 Q.B. 273 said:

"If the words of an Act are clear you must follow them even though they may lead to manifest absurdity. The Court has nothing to do with the question of whether the legislature has committed an absurdity"

Lord Simons in the House of Lords - 1952 A.C. 189 said:

"The duty of the Court is to interpret the words the legislature has used; these may be ambiguous but even if they are the powers and duty of the court to travel outside them on a voyage of discovery are strictly limited."

Continuing his Lordship said:

"It appears to me to be a naked usurpation of the legislative function under the thin disguise of interpretation. And it is less justifiable when it is guess-work with what material the legislature would, if it had discovered the gap, would have filled it. If a gap is discovered the remedy lies in an amending Act."

The Court of Appeal held, and rightly so, that the words of Rule 10(1) are plain and unambiguous, and so gave those words their plain and ordinary meaning. The language of the Rule quoted above is quite clear and unambiguous. If the strict application to the Rule would lead to manifest absurdity, inconvenience, hardship or financial loss to the defendants, as admittedly it appears in the instant case, the remedy lies in the hands of the Rules Committee to make the necessary amendment.

[p.69]

Having considered the various grounds of appeal in this case, and the arguments of counsel, I have come to the inevitable conclusion that these grounds are untenable and must fail. I agree with ruling of the Court of Appeal and I see no reason to disturb it. This appeal must fail.

The appeal is according dismissed with costs to Plaintiff/Respondent.

C.A. HARDING J.S.C.

This Appeal arose out of the refusal by the Court of Appeal to entertain an Application for leave to appeal against a decision of the High Court given in an interlocutory matter. The Court of Appeal declined to hear the application on the ground that it lacked Jurisdiction being that the application was made out of time.

The Brief History of the Case is as follows:—

1. On 18th February, 1986 the Respondent herein, as Plaintiff in the High Court, obtained an interlocutory judgment in Default of Appearance against the Appellants herein, the Defendants in the High Court.

2. On 29th May, 1986, the Appellants filed a Notice of Motion in the High Court seeking to set aside the Judgment in Default and to defend the Action.

3. On 16th June, 1996, the High Court gave a Ruling dismissing the Application.

4. On 21st June, 1986, the Appellants applied to the High Court for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal against the decision of the High Court dated 16th June, 1986.

5. On 11th July, 1986 the application for leave to appeal was, refused.

[p.71]

6. On 23rd July, 1986, consequent upon the refusal aforesaid the Appellants applied to the Court of Appeal for leave to appeal.

7. On 1st November, 1986 the Court of Appeal dismissed the application on a preliminary objection and held that it had no jurisdiction to hear the application.

8. Thereafter, on application made to this Court, special Leave to Appeal against the decision of the Court of Appeal was granted to the Appellants on 18th February, 1988.

Four grounds of Appeal were filed before this Court by the Appellant. The first two in essence complained of misconstruction of the provisions of Rules 10 (1), 10 (4) and 64 of the Court of Appeal Rules, Public Notice No.29 of 1985, by the Court of Appeal when it held that "the application before this Court was dated 23rd July, 1986, it is for leave to appeal against the decision of the High Court delivered on the 18th June, 1986. Clearly, such an application is out of time in that it was made some 36 days after the date on which the decision of the High Court was delivered."

The third ground - in my view, not warranting much consideration for the purposes of this appeal complained of misdirection in law by the Court of Appeal when it held an Affidavit in opposition which was filed could not act as a waiver in that such step was "a fresh step".

The fourth ground was abandoned.

The issue briefly before this Court is under what circumstance if any at all, can the Court of Appeal entertain an application for leave to appeal if the application is made after 14 days from the date of the decision against which leave to appeal is sought.

Rule 10 (1) of the, Court of Appeal Rules, Public Notice No.29 of 1985 states:—

"10 (1) Where an appeal lies by leave only, any person desiring to appeal shall apply to the Court below or to the Court by Notice of Motion within fourteen days from the date of the decision against which leave to appeal is sought unless the Court below or the Court enlarges time."

[p.72]

There is no ambiguity about the words used in this provision.

It means simply that an Applicant can make his application either to the Court below, i.e. the High Court, or to the Court of Appeal within fourteen days from the date of the decision against which leave is sought unless that period is enlarged either by the Court below or by the Court of Appeal.

Rule 10 (4) prescribes:—

“10 (4) No application for the enlargement of time within which to apply for leave to Appeal shall be made after the expiration of fourteen days from the expiration of the time prescribed within which an application for leave to appeal may be made.”

Again, there is no ambiguity about the words used here. This provision deals about applications for enlargement of time as distinct from applications for leave to appeal. It makes it mandatory for an Applicant who is seeking an enlargement of time within which to apply for leave to Appeal to do so within twenty eight days from the date of the decision against which leave to appeal is sought. In my view, this provision only applies when no application whatever has been made for leave to appeal within fourteen days either to the Court below or to the Court of Appeal.

However, Rule 64 of the Court of Appeal Rules referred to above makes it obligatory for an Applicant to first make his application to the Court below and where that Court refuses the application, he shall then proceed to have the application determined by the Court of Appeal.

The provision is as follows:—

“64. Except where otherwise provided in these [p.73] Rules or by any other enactment, where any application may be made either to the Court below or to the Court, it shall be made in the first instance to the Court below, but if the Court below refuses the application, the Applicant shall be entitled to have the application determined by the Court.”

Here as well the provisions are quite clear - application must first be made to the Court below and it is only after that Court has refused the application that the Applicant can renew the application in the Court of Appeal. In other words the right to have the application determined by the Court of Appeal only accrues after there has been a refusal by the Court of Appeal. It cannot be otherwise because if the Court below grants the application there will be no need to go to the Court of Appeal.

Counsel for the Appellants submitted that when once an Application has been made to the High Court within fourteen das there is no further obligation on the Applicant's part to seek enlargement of time. The Applicant can always make a further application to the Court of Appeal provided he does so within reasonable time.

Counsel for the Respondents on the other hand has strenuously argued that time in any event commences to run from the date of the decision against which leave to Appeal is sough and that any prudent Solicitor, notwithstanding the fact that he has already applied to the Court below within time, should proceed to make an Application for an enlargement of time if he apprehends that fourteen days would have elapsed before a Ruling [p.74] is made as to whether or not leave is granted. I must say that attractive though this argument may sound, I find it untenable for the mere fact that Rule 64 makes it obligatory to go first to the Court below and it is only when that Court has refused leave that the Applicant “shall be entitled to have the application determined by the Court of Appeal.”

By way of comparison I would refer to Rule 7 of the Supreme Court Rules which provides that “Application for leave to Appeal must first be made to the Court of Appeal, but if leave is refused by that Court an Application may be made for Special Leave to Appeal to the Supreme Court by Notice of Motion in that behalf filed by the intending Appellant."

Rule 10 of the same Rules provide; that "An Application for special Leave shall be filed within one month of the date of the Judgment from which leave to Appeal is sought or of the date on which leave to Appeal to the Supreme Court is refused by the Court of Appeal."

These Rules, like those of the Court of Appeal, contemplate that an application for leave must first be made to the Court of Appeal (within one month in this instance from the date of the Judgment, decision or order to be appealed from - vide Rule 69 of the Court of Appeal Rules) and it is only after leave has been refused by that Court that application for Special Leave may be made to the Supreme Court, again within one month of the date of refusal.

The Court of Appeal Rules did not specify any time limit as to when the Applicant shall be entitled to have his application determined by the court of Appeal after a refusal by the High court. In my view, a reasonable time will suffice and in this connection what is a reasonable time will depend on the [p.75] circumstances of the particular case. In the instant case, I do not think eleven days after the Court below has refused the application an unreasonable time.

Earlier on, I did refer to the third grounds of appeal; I must say that I find no merit in that ground.

For the reasons I have stated above, I would allow the Appeal, order a reversal of the Order of the Court of Appeal and remit the Application for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal for hearing and determination by that Court. Costs to the Appellant.

JUSTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT

A. AWUNOR-RENNER J.S.C.

This is an appeal against an order and unanimous judgment of the Sierra Leone Court of appeal made and pronounced on the 18th day of November, 1986 by the Honourable Mr. Justice S.T. Navo presiding Justice D.E.M. Williams and Justice M.S. Turay dismissing on a preliminary objection by counsel for the respondent a motion by the appellant herein the Applicant/Defendant in the Court below seeking leave to appeal against a ruling of the High Court delivered on the 16th June 1986 by the Honourable Mr. Justice M.A. Adophy.

This appeal raises questions on the construction of Rules 10(1), 10(4) and 64 of the Court of Appeal Rules P.N. Number 29 of 1985 together with sec. 108 of the Constitution Act No. 12 of 1978 & sec. 56 (1) (b) of the Courts Act No. 31 of 1965. Before I refer to their provisions I will briefly state the relevant facts.

The respondent herein the plaintiff in the High Court obtained an interlocutory judgment in default of appearance against the appellant herein on the 18th of February 1986. On the 6th day of March 1986 the respondent obtained an order from Mrs. Justice V.A.D. Wright in the High Court for assessment of general and special damages and a date was then fixed for assessment on the 14th March 1986. On the 21st day of April, 1986 the defendant entered an appearance and filed a motion seeking inter alia that the judgement in default of Appearance dated 18th day of February 1986 be set aside and that the defendants/applicant be at liberty to defend the action.

This motion was withdrawn and another one filed on the 29th day of May 1986. On the 16th day of June 1986, Mr. Justice Adophy gave a ruling dismissing the defendant's motion. On the 21st day of June 1986 the defendants filed a motion seeking inter alia leave to appeal to the Sierra Leone Court of Appeal against the decision of the Honourable Mr. Justice M.O. Adophy, sitting as a High Court Judge on the 16th day of June, 1986. On the 11th day of July, 1986 the Honourable Mr. Justice M.O. Adophy refused the defendant's motion for leave to appeal against his order of the 16th June 1986. Again on the 23rd day of July 1986 the defendant filed a Notice of Motion for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal and certain interlocutory orders were made by Justice C.A. Harding sitting as a Single Judge on the 19th day of August 1986. The Court of Appeal on the 18th day of November 1986 dismissed the Defendant/Applicant's Motion to the court of Appeal for leave to apply against Mr. Justice Adophy's order of the 16th June 1986 on a preliminary objection taken by Plaintiffs/Respondents counsel on the grounds that I quote from the order made by that court:

“In view of the authorities on the matter, the failure of the applicants to comply with the statutory requirements and to fulfill the statutory conditions requisite for the purposes of the intended appeal deprived this court of any jurisdiction to hear the application.”

Later on the 17th December 1986 the Defendant/Applicant sought leave from the Court of Appeal to appeal to the Supreme Court against the Court of Appeal's refusal of the application for leave to appeal to it. This application together with the application for a stay of execution were also refused. The Hon. Mr. Justice Gelaga-King dissenting. The Supreme Court finally granted Special Leave to appeal and a stay of execution on the 18th February 1988. I think that it is now necessary for me to refer to all the relevant rules referred to by counsel for the appellants and respondents respectively. As I said before in my opinion the main issues to the determined in this appeal are the construction of rules 10(1), 10(4) [p.78] & 64 of the Court of Appeal Rules P.N. Number 29 of 1985 that is to say whether an applicant who has to obtain leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal and who has made this application for such leave to the High Court within the prescribed time that is 14 days as stipulated by rule 10 (1) of the said rule has to ask for an enlargement of time if such leave is not granted within the said period or until after the expiry of the extra period of 14 days as provided for in rule 10(4) of the afore-mentioned rules.

Rule 10(1) states the procedure to apply for leave to appeal from the High Court to the Court of Appeal and is as follows:

"Where an appeal lies by leave only, any person desiring to appeal shall apply to the court below or to the Court by notice of motion within 14 days from the date of the decision against which leave to appeal is sought unless the Court below or the Court enlarges time."

Rule 10(4) of the Court of appeal Rules supra provides as follows:

"No application for enlargement of time within which to apply for leave to appeal shall be made after the expiration of 14 days from the expiration of the time prescribed within which an application for leave to appeal may be made."

Another rule urged for construction is rule 64 of the same rules and this is couched in the following terms:

"Except where otherwise provided in these rules or by any other enactment; where any application may be made either to the Court below or to the Court, it shall be made in the first instance to the Court below but if the Court below refuses the application the applicant shall be entitled to have this application determined by the Court."

[p.79]

Various arguments have been urged by counsel on both sides. I propose to refer to them briefly. Counsel for appellants contented that the principle issue has to do with the construction of P.N. Number 29 of 1985, Court of Appeal Rules particularly the construction of Rules 10(1), 10(4) and rule 64. He posed the question that where an applicant has sought leave in the High Court to appeal within the stipulated time of 14 days whether he ought to seek an enlargement of time to make an application to the Court of Appeal for leave to appeal to the Court if the High Court makes an order after 14 days refusing him leave to appeal. He contended that there was no further obligation to seek leave for enlargement to the Court, or to the Court of Appeal once you have already applied for leave to appeal within the stipulated time. The three rules he said must be looked at together and compared with the old rules. Time he added further ceases to rune when an applicant has filed his application for leave to appeal under 10(1) of the said rules. Mr. A. Gooding on the other hand contended that the Court of Appeal had no jurisdiction to entertain an application for leave when the intending applicant had failed to apply to the Court of Appeal within the time prescribed by rule 10(1) when a previous enlargement of time had not been asked for. The applicant he stated was clearly out of time. Rule 10(1) is unambiguous he stated and needs no extraneous aids of construction. He referred this court to the case of OHENE MORE V TAYEE reported in – 2 WACA at page 43. He further suggested that rules 11(1) and 11(6) have a hearing on the construction of rule 10(1) and this governs the time for appealing in an interlocutory matter and in a final decision. Rule 11(1) states as follows:

"No appeal shall be brought after the expiration of 14 days in the case of an appeal against an interlocutory decision or of three months in the case of an appeal against a final decision unless the court enlarges the time."

[p.80]

"Rule 11(6) also, states that no application for enlargement of time within which to appeal shall be made after the expiration of one month from the expiration of the time prescribed within which an appeal may be brought."

Let me at once say at this stage that these last two rules deal only with the time limit for appealing.

Mr. Gooding also claimed that an appeal against an interlocutory decision is an appeal as of right and referred to sec. 108(2) of the Constitution and the Courts Act sec. 56(1) a & b. section 108(2) of the Constitution provides as follows:

"Save as otherwise provided in this Constitution or any other law an appeal shall lie as of right from a judgment, decree or order of the High Court of Justice to the Court of Appeal in any cause or matter determined by the High Court of Justice."

In my opinion, an interpretation of this Section of the Constitution was given by this Court – In Misc. App. No. 31/81 in the case of James Allie & Others V The State in which the Court construed the said phrase "or any other law" to include the provisions of the Courts Act No. 31 of 1965 with particular regard to section 57. Although two of the questions posed in that reference dealt specifically with sec. 56. The Court declined to make any pronouncement on section 56 for the reason that the reference deals with a criminal matter and that section 56 concerns civil matters. It is my understanding that though section 56 was not specifically dealt with, the reasoning and consideration of the phrase "or any other law" should also be applied in this case. Section 56(1) a & b of the Courts Act states as follows:

"56(1) Subject to the provisions of this section an appeal shall lie to the court of appeal:—

(a) from any final judgment, Order or other decision of the High Court given or made in the exercise of its [p.81] original, prerogative or supervisory jurisdiction in any suit or matter.

(b) By leave of the Judge making the order or of the court of appeal, from any interlocutory judgment, order or other decision, given or made in the exercise of any such jurisdiction as aforesaid."

It is my opinion therefore, that the expression "or any other law" also applies to Sec. 56 of the Courts Act and that an appeal against an interlocutory order of the High Court is by way of leave and not as of right as contended by Mr. Arnold Gooding.

One point which has to be considered at this stage was whether the application for leave to appeal was made within the prescribed period of 14 days as required by Rule 10(1) of the Court of Appeal Rules Number 29 of 1985 supra. The answer to that is yes on the facts as stated above.

Another point which also has to be considered are the provisions dealing with which court an application should be made, whether to the Court below or to the Court of Appeal. This is clearly dealt with in Rule 64 of the above rules. It is my opinion that Rule 64 deals with two matters; firstly, it states that where an application may be made to the Court below or to the Court of Appeal it should be made in the first instance to the Court below. Secondly, it goes on to provide that where an application is refused by the Court below then the applicant is entitled to have his application determined by the Court of Appeal. In Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes 19th Edition at pages 2 and 5 I refer to the following phrases and I quote:

(1) "If the words of a Statute are in themselves precise and unambiguous no more is necessary than to expound these words in their mutual or ordinary sense. The words themselves in such cases declaring the intention of the legislature."

(2) "If there is one rule of construction for statutes and other documents it is that your must not imply anything in them which is inconsistent with the words expressly used."

(3) "Where, by the use of clear and unequivocal language capable of only one meaning anything is enacted by the legislature, it must be enforced, even though it be absurd or mischievous, the underlying principle is that the meaning and intention of a statute must be collected from the plain and unambiguous words used therein rather than from any notion, which may be entertained by the court as to what is just or expedient."

Reading Rules 10 & Rule 64 together, they deal with the following situations

(a) Where an applicant applies to the Court below for leave to appeal within the prescribed 14 day period.

(b) Where an applicant applies to the High Court for enlargement of time for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal.

(c) When an applicant applies to the Court of Appeal for enlargement of time such application having been refused by the Court below.

(d) When an application for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal where such an application has been refused by the High Court.

Reading Rules 10 & 64 it is clear from rule 10(1) that the situation referred to under (a) is that the application for leave shall be made within 14 days. Reading Rule 10(4) it is also clear that the time limit [p.83] within which an application for enlargement of time within which to apply for leave is 14 days from the expiration of the 14 days period within which an application for leave to appeal may be made.

Whereas there is a statutory time limit for the situation referred to in (a) and (b) above there is no such time limit so far as (c) and (d) are concerned; all that rule 64 has done is to put a restraint on the exercise of the right by the applicant to go the Court of Appeal by first going to the Lower Court and if leave is refused then he is entitled to apply to the Court of Appeal by first going to the Lower Court and if leave is refused he is entitled to the Court of Appeal to have application heard and that restraint cannot be removed.

Furthermore, rule 64 does not state time within which the application for the Leave to Appeal is to be made to the Court of appeal where there has been a refusal by the High Court for Leave to Appeal to the court of Appeal and the argument that the time limit is implied by Reference to Rule 10(1) which deals with Application for Leave to Appeal in the first instance is completely unfounded. This doctrine finds no support in any authority and it is in my opinion entirely alien as to how it is alleged it is to be applied. It is my opinion also that the absence of time limit within which such an application should be made to the Court of Appeal has not nullified the right which has been given to the applicant by virtue of the Constitution sec. 108 (2) and by virtue of sec. 64 itself. The Interpretation Act sec. 39(i)d or Act number 8 of 1971 also provides that "where no time is prescribed or allowed within which anything shall be done, such thing shall be done, without unreasonable delay and as often as due occasion arises."

Rule 10 – deals with the time limit within which leave to appeal and enlargement of time to etc can be made, Rule 64 deals with the application for leave to appeal/enlargement of time where there has been a refusal.

It is my opinion that rule 10(1) and (2) in so far as they deal with enlargement of time could not be called upon by the so called prudent solicitor for the following reasons:

An application for enlargement of time under Rule 10 is to enable applicant to apply for leave to appeal (vide Rule 10). Rule 10 does not provide for an applicant to simply file his motion papers and await the outcome of the application for leave to appeal which he has already made. What would "the Prudent Solicitor" do if his application for enlargement of time is refused and the ruling is delivered some two months after it had been made? Would be whilst awaiting the said ruling on his application for enlargement of time file another Motion addressed to the Court of Appeal asking, for enlargement of time. The position at that point in time would be as follows:

1. A pending application before the High Court for leave to appeal to the court of Appeal.

2. A pending application in the High Court for enlargement of time within which to apply for leave to appeal notwithstanding (1) above.

3. An application to the Court of Appeal for enlargement of time within which to appeal notwithstanding (1) and (2) above.

Surely that could not be the intention of Parliament.

If one were to accede to the argument of "the Prudent Solicitor" the Court below or the Court of Appeal would grant an applicant enlargement of time to do that which he has already done.

In the present case the applicant had done all that he had to do. He had filed his application for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal within the time prescribed by rule 10(1) of the Court of Appeal rules number 29 of 1985. See the case of Waterton v. Baker reported in (1868). Law Reports Q.B. Volume 3 at page 173. In that case By 13 & 14 Vict C.61 s. 14, County Court Rules of 1857 rule 134. On appeal [p.85] from the Country Court, the party appealing, shall, within 10 days after the determination appealed against, give notice of appeal to the other party, and also give security to the approved by the registrar for the costs of the Appeal. By country Court Rules 134, where a party proposes to give a bond by way of security, he shall give to the opposite party and the Registrar Notice of the proposed Sureties and the Registrar shall fix a day for the bond to be executed and for the other party to make any objection he may have to the Sureties. An Interpleader summons in a Country Court having been determined against the claimant on the 16th November, he on the same day gave notice of appeal and tendered a bond with sureties to the Registrar. On the 19th day of December he gave notice of the proposed sureties to the plaintiff. The Plaintiff required further information as to the sufficiency of the sureties and the claimant having been unable to obtain a definite answer as to whether or not he objected to the sureties, the Registrar on the 17th day of January fixed the 21st of January for the execution of the Bond and gave notice to the Plaintiff to make his objection if any, on that day. The Plaintiff did not appear and the bond was then executed with the original sureties: - Held that although the security had not been completed until after the 10 days yet as the appellant had done all he could to perfect it within that time and the delay was caused by the plaintiff, the appellant had complied with the requirement of Sec. 14 & Rule 134 and was entitled to have his appeal heard.

Cerkburn C.J. had this to say in his judgment:

“It would be exceedingly hard and unjust upon a party that he should be debarred from appealing because the Registrar for some cause or other, such as sickness or requiring further information is unable to complete the matter in due time and a portion of the delay occurs because the other party wants to make further enquiries; I think it would be monstrous to say in such a case that a man is to be ousted of his right to appeal which the Legislature intended him to have. I think the fair construction of the statute is that as a party so far as in [p.86] him lies must within the prescribed time offer the security and be ready to make it effectual. If he does that and afterwards complete the security he has done all that he is bound to do and he is entitled to his appeal.”

Shee J: also in the same case had this to say and I quote:

“The object of the enactment is to secure to the unsuccessful suitor an appeal by the appeal is to be allowed only in his giving security to the successful party for costs of the appeal, in order that the proceedings may bot be unduly delayed he is bound to give notice of appeal within 10 days and rule 134 provides that notice of the sureties is to be given to the successful party and to the registrar of the Court. This is all that the appellant ought to do. If he gives notice of appeal within 10 days and gives notice to the successful party and to the Registrar who his sureties are, and if the Registrar approves of them and they ultimately execute the bond, then he does all that his is called upon by sec. 14 & the rule to do.”

I have cited the above case for the principles contained therein regarding the construction and interpretation to be given where an applicant pr party has done all that he could do assuming that I am wrong in my construction of Rules 10 and 64 as set out supra. I would therefore hold on this alternative ground that the appellant herein had done all that he could do.

In the present case the applicant had applied to the Lower Court within 14 days as prescribed by Rule 10(1). He had also complied with rule 64 which states that he must first make his application to the Lower Court and if leave is refused then to the Court of Appeal. I am therefore of the view that there was nothing more he could have done. By way of contrast, let me finally refer to the previous rules of the Court of Appeal – P.N. number 28 of 1973 which states as follows:—

10(2) Whenever an application may be made wither to the Court below or to the Court it shall be made in the first instance to the Court below but if the Court below refuses the application the applicant shall subject to the provisions of rule 11(4) be entitled to have the application determined by the Court."

Rule 11(4) states as follows:—

"No application for enlargement of time in which to appeal shall be made after the expiration of one month from the expiration of the time prescribed within which to appeal may be brought. Every such application shall be supported by an affidavit setting forth good and sufficient reasons for the application and by grounds of appeal which prima facie show good cause for leave to be granted. When time is so enlarged a copy of the order granting such an enlargement shall be annexed to the Notice of Appeal."

The words "subject to the provisions of 11(4) have been rejected by the subsidiary legislation. All Appellate Courts in the Commonwealth are established by Statutes including Sierra Leone. As such their jurisdiction and powers are statutory and they cannot act without the state or subsidiary legislation thereunder. See Moore v Tayee 2 W.A.C.A.

Finally, the question now is whether the Court of Appeal had power to deprive a party of rights acquired by it under Rules 10(1) & Rules 64, of the above rules. I have not heard of any specific authority on these points. For the reasons which I have given above, I am of the view that the Court of Appeal was wrong when it stated that it had no jurisdiction to hear the application. Rule 10 deals with the High Courts jurisdiction and that of the Court of Appeal for leave to appeal and for enlargement of time. It does not deal with the excercise of the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal where leave to appeal or an enlargement of time is refused.

The Court of Appeal's exercise of jurisdiction is dealt with in rule 64.

Although most of your Lordships are of a contrary opinion, for the reasons given above, I would allow the appeal. Appeal allowed in favour of the appellant and would order that the appellant's motion dated 23rd July 1986 be remitted to the Court of Appeal for a hearing.

Costs to be taxed in favour of the appellant.

[p.89-90]

WARNE J.S.C

This is an appeal against a judgment of the Court of Appeal delivered on 18th November 1986.

The application before the Court of Appeal was made pursuant to Rule 10(1) and Rule 64 of the Court of Appeal Rules Public Notice No. 29 of 1985.

Counsel for the Respondent made a preliminary objection to the application on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction because of effluxion of time within which the application should be made.

Rule 10(1) states: "Where an appeal lies by leave only, any person desiring to appeal shall apply to the court below or to the Court by notice of motion within 14 days from the date of the decision against which leave to appeal is sought unless the Court below or the Court enlarges time."

From the foregoing, it is at once clear that the application could be made either to the court below or that Court. Both courts therefore, have concurrent jurisdiction. In the Rule, the time within which the application for leave is to be made is fourteen days from the date of the decision against which leave to appeal [p.91] is sought.

I must first of all determine and ascertain the date of the said decision. It is clear that the decision was made on the 16th June, 1986 by Adophy J (as he then was).

Appellant being dissatisfied with the decision of Adophy J. sought leave of the High Court for several orders including an order for leave to appeal. This was by motion filed on the 21st June, 1986.

I am satisfied this motion was filed five days from the date of the decision. The motion was duly heard and Adophy J refused the application on the 11th July 1986.

In my view when Adophy J refused the application on the 11th July 1986, the duty of the High Court was functus officio.

The appellants were then entitled to make a fresh application to the Court of Appeal for leave to appeal against the decision given on the 16th June, 1986. (vide Rule 10(1))

However, the application could not be made before the refusal of the application by this court below. vide rule 64.

Rule 64 states:

"Except where otherwise provided in these rules or by any other enactment; where any application may be made either to the Court below or to the Court, it shall be made in the first instance to the Court below but if the Court below refuses the application the applicant shall be entitled to have this application determined by the Court."

In this rule, no time is stipulated within which the applicant is entitled to make the application to have it determined by the Court. In my view, this is deliberate, because if the application is not made within fourteen days of the decision in the Court below the applicant can apply to the Court below for an [p.92] enlargement of time vide Rule 10(1) and Rule 10(4)

Rule 10(4) states:

"No application for enlargement of time within which to apply for leave to appeal shall be made after the expiration of 14 days from the expiration of the time prescribed within which an application for leave to appeal may be made."

Rule 10(1) stipulates "fourteen days".

Counsel for Appellants has urged on the Court that when once the application is made within time to the High Court, he has no further obligation to make a further application to the Court of Appeal unless the Court below refused the Application. I do not agree, because, after the refusal by the High Court the application before the Court is for leave to appeal against the decision made in the High Court in the instant case, it was made on the 16th June 1986.

Time starts to run from the date of the decision given in the High Court. The time for making the Application to the High Court and the Court of Appeal runs together.

When as in Rule 10(1) fourteen days have expired, under Rule 10(4) the Applicant has another fourteen days within which to apply for enlargement of time. On the face of Rule 10(1) and Rule 10(4) it would appear that the applicant had been barred from making a fresh application to the Court as he was entitled under Rule 64. In my view, that cannot be the intendment of the Legislature. The Appellants were not time barred from applying for an enlargement of time within which to apply for leave to appeal.

The High Court having refused the application for leave to appeal on the 11th day of July, 1986, the appellants were entitled to make a fresh application to the Court of Appeal. This they did by filing a motion dated 23rd day of July, 1986. This was clearly out of time from the date of the decision given on 16th June, 1986.

In my opinion, it was obligatory on the Appellants to apply to the Court of Appeal for enlargement of time within which to have the motion filed on 23rd day of July, 1986 being heard – vide Rule 10 (1) Rule 10 (4).

On the construction of Rules 10(1), Rule 10(4) and Rule 64, the application for an enlargement of time could have been made to the Court of Appeal at the same time when the application for leave to Appeal was sought. In my view, the Appellants were time barred and unless the application for enlargement was made, the court could not grant that indulgence.

Vide Bradshaw V Warlow 32 Ch. D. (1986) 403.

In that case it was decided that the application for an enlargement of time within which to seek leave to appeal and that for leave to appeal could be made simultaneously.

In that case, the court of Appeal had to construe Order XXXIII Rule 21 of the Rules of Palatine Court of Lancaster. Rule 21 is as follows. “Any verdict or judgment obtained where one party does not appear at the trial may be set aside by the Court or Vice Chancellor upon such terms as may seem fit, upon an application made within six days after the time, or at the next sitting of the Court.”

The Court also considered and construed Order LI Rule 5 of the said rules which is as follows:

“The Court or Vice Chancellor shall have power to enlarge or abridge the time appointed by these rules for doing any act or taking any proceeding upon such terms, if any, as the justice of the case may require; and any such enlargement may be ordered although the application of the same is not made until after the expiration of the time stipulated or allowed”

The facts of the case are as follows:

[p.94]

“The action was brought for the recovery of a sum of money and came on for trial at Manchester on the 24th of March, 1986. The Defendants not appearing, judgment was given for the Plaintiffs with costs. The sittings of Palatine Court continued through March and April, and the Court sat for hearing motions on the 25th of March and the 5th, 12th, and 19th of April.

On the 8th of April, the Defendant gave notice of motion for the 12th of April to set aside the judgment as irregular and that the action may be restored to the paper for trial at the next sittings which would be held at Liverpool.

The motion was heard on the 19th of April, when the Vice Chancellor refused the application on the ground that it was too late. The Defendant asked for an extension of time, but the vice Chancellor was of the opinion that an application for extension of time ought to be made by a separate motion, and gave the Defendant short notice of such application.

The Defendant, however, did not give any notice, but appealed from the order of the 18th of April.

At the same time, he applied to the Court of Appeal for any extension of time for making the application to set aside the judgment .....

On the 24th of March, when the action came on, Counsel for the Defendant said he had received a telegram from his clients instructing him to ask for a postponement of the trial and upon the Vice-Chancellor refusing to accede to the application, the Counsel said he had no instructions to appear for the Defendant at the trial. Judgement was accordingly pronounced against the Defendant in his absence. No step was taken by the Defendant till the 8th of April, when he moved to set aside the judgment as before stated.

“Held, according to the true construction of Order XXXIII Rule 21 of the Rules of the Palatine Court of Lancaster a party against whom judgment has been give by default must make application to set it aside within six days if [p.95] the Court be then sitting, and it be not then sitting, on the next day on which the Court shall be sitting to hear such motions.

An application for extension of time by a party who desires to apply to set aside a judgement made against him by default, may be made at the same time when he makes the application to set aside the judgment, if the action is still pending.”

I agree with the ratio desidendi in the above mentioned case.

According to the true construction of Rule 10(1) of the Rules of the Court of Appeal, time starts to run from the date of the decision against which leave to appeal is sought unless the Court below or the Court enlarges the time.

The appellants sought to have applied for an enlargement of time at the same time when the application for leave to appeal was made before the Court of Appeal. Failure to take such a step was fatal. In my opinion, the Appellant was out of time when he made his application for leave to appeal in the Court of Appeal.

In view of what I have said above grounds 1 and 2 of the grounds of appeal fail.

Counsel for the Appellants have submitted that the affidavit filed by John E. Bankole Jones on the 28th of October, 1986, was a fresh step in the proceedings and submitted that it was a waiver of any irregularity committed by the Appellants in the proceedings. Counsel has referred to Order 50 Rule 2 of the Rules of the High Court and Order 70 Rule 2 of the English Rules 1961:

Order 50 Rule 2 is as follows

“No application to set aside any proceeding for irregularity shall be allowed unless made within reasonable time; nor if the party applying has taken any fresh step after knowledge of the irregularity.

[p.96]

Order 70 Rule 2 is ipsisima verbal

These rules are not applicable to proceedings in the Court of Appeal

However, what this Court is called upon to determine is whether the Court of Appeal erred when it said “I could not agree more” in its opinion on the submission that the affidavit filed on the 28th October 1986 was not a waiver of an irregularity in the proceedings.

What was the irregularity complained of in the proceedings? That the Appellants failed to apply for an enlargement of time before applying to the Court for leave to appeal when they were out of time. Counsel for the Respondents has argued that the filing of the affidavit on the 28th October, 1986 is not a waiver.

The relevant rule is Rule 66 of the Rules of the Court of Appeal.

Rule 66 is as follows:

“Non-compliance on the part of an appellant with these rules or with any rule of practice for the time being in force shall not prevent the further prosecution of his appeal if the Court considers that the non-compliance was not wilful and that it is in the interest of justice that the non-compliance should be waived.

.....

when those directions were given.”

This rule clearly indicates that the issue of waiver is at the discretion of the Court to determine. The rules also spell out the perimeter within which the discretion could be exercised.

Firstly, in the instant case the appellant moved the Court of Appeal on an original motion in a fresh motion seeking leave to appeal. They were not appellants within the provision of Rule 66 or within the definition in Rule 1 of the said Rules.

Secondly, the issue of waiver is at the discretion of the Court and it is not at the instances of the parties to decide that a [p.97] step taken in the proceedings is a waiver.

Thirdly, it is for the Court to determine if the step taken in the proceedings is an irregularity, and if so, whether it can be cured without injustices, on terms.

On the contrary, if there has been a breach of a statutory provision the Court ought not to grant any indulgence to any party whatsoever, whether a step has been taken in the proceedings by the party raising the objections or not.

In the instant case, the appellants failed to comply with the provisions in Rule 10 sub-rule (1) and sub-rule (4).

In my opinion the submission of Counsel for appellants is untenable and grounds 3 & 4 therefore fail.

I will dismiss the appeal and it is dismissed with costs to the Respondents.

Sidney Warne,

Justice of the Supreme Courts

[p.98]

THOMPSON-DAVIS, J.A.

I have had the privilege of reading the judgments of my Lord the Learned Chief Justice and my brother Warne, J.S.C. I concur in their reasons and I wish to add my own humble views which I consider to be merely supplementary to what they said.

The questions raised by this Appeal are of some importance since they concern the interpretation of some rules of the Court of Appeal; thus leaving the impression that the Court of Appeal cannot on its own interpret its own rules.

The points agitated before us concern Rules 10(1), 10(4) and 64 of the said Rules.

Rule 10 (1) reads:

"Where an appeal lies by leave only, any person desiring to appeal shall apply to the court below or to the Court by Notice of Motion within fourteen days from the date of the [p.99] decision against which leave to appeal is sought unless the Court below or the Court enlarges time."

Rule 10(4) reads:

"No application for enlargement of time within which to apply for leave to appeal shall be made after the expiration of fourteen days from the expiration of the time prescribed within which an application for leave to appeal may be made."

And Rule 64 reads:

"Except where otherwise provided in these rules or by any other enactment; where any application may be made either to the Court below or to the Court, it shall be made in the first instance to the Court below but if the Court below refuses the application the applicant shall be entitled to have this application determined by the Court."

The question therefore is one of the interpretation as applied to the facts of the case of these Rules.

The central issues relied on by the Appellants are that the Court of Appeal —

(a) "Misconstrued the provisions of Rule 10(1) and Rule 10(4) of the Court of Appeal Rules, P.N. No. 29 of 1985 in treating the said sub-rules cumulatively as requiring that after four weeks after the date of the decision in respect of which leave to appeal is sought, an applicant who has applied for leave to appeal in the Court below within two weeks stipulated in Rule 10(1), would [p.100] necessarily first, have to apply for enlargement of time, for leave to appeal, where the Court below has refused the application for leave to appeal, and such a ruling refusing eave fall outside of fourteen days, after the delivery of the decision in respect of which leave to appeal is sought."

(b) Failed to hold, as in law it should that where the applicant in the High Court had filed his Notice for leave to appeal within time, such an Applicant had complied with the requirements of Rule 10(1) and that the requirements for enlargement of time in the said sub-rule would not longer apply to such an Applicant to whom leave is denied would be entitled to have his application determined by the Court".

(c) That when the Court of Appeal held that it could “not agree more” that in law, an affidavit in opposition which was filed could not act as a waiver the Court misdirected itself in law in that such a step, with full knowledge of non-compliance with the Rules is a fresh step, and so a waiver”.

(d) Erred in law in treating an act of non-compliance, as having the effect in law in making an application void rather than merely irregular.....”

The appellants have therefore claimed "Reversal of the Order of the Court of Appeal and a remission of the application to the said Court for a determination and hearing”.

The Respondent has maintained that the decision of the Court of Appeal is right and ought to be affirmed”.

Under the said Rule 10(1) an application for leave to appeal where an appal lies by leave only must of necessity be made within 14 days from the date of the decision against which leave to appeal is sought, and such an applicant must first apply to the High Court by virtue of Rule 64. The High Court may by virtue of the said Rule 10(1) extend the time of 14 days as that is the Court before whom the proceedings will be taken. It seems clear to me that the applicant must apply to that Court for any enlargement of the period of 14 days before it expires. I shall come back to the point.

In my view, there are three possible results which can arise in the circumstances:—

(i) the application may be granted by the High Court; the applicant will then have to file a Notice of Appeal under Rule 9 and comply with Rules 11(1) & (2).

(ii) The application may be refused within the 14 day period, the applicant will then have to file a fresh application for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal and comply with the relevant portion of Rule 10(2) – setting forth “proposed good ground of appeal which prima facie show good cause for leave to appeal”.

(iii) The application may be refused outside the 14 day period, the applicant must then apply to the Court of Appeal if the 14 day period has been enlarged, he must then comply with Rule 10(2) and annex to the application the Order granting the enlargement of time under Rule 10(3).

[p.102] I must notice at this point what appears to be a very conspicuous fallacy of the Appellants' argument. They have urged upon this court to say that "where an Appellant in the High Court had filed his notice for leave to appeal within time (14 days) such an applicant had complied with the requirement of Rule 10 (1) and that the requirement for enlargement of time in the said sub-rule would no longer apply to such an applicant……." This argument misconceives the significance of the said Rule 10 (1) & (4).

The pertinent question is how does an Applicant go to Court of Appeal if his application under the Rule 10 (1) has been refused and time for making such application has expired? Does he merely change the title of application to read "In the Court of Appeal" and send it to that court relying on the fact that he had made a similar application in the High Court within the statutory fourteen day limit which had been refused? A procedure of this nature would hardly be creditable to the judicial process: - The first step to be taken toward the acquisition of a right to go the Court of Appeal from a refusal made under Rules 10 (1) & 64 of the Court of Appeal Rules, made by the High Court is an application for extension of time to its concurrent jurisdiction if an Applicant is out of time.

Once the High Court has refused such an application and the 14 day period mentioned in Rule 10 (1) has expired, its jurisdiction closes and an applicant has to make a fresh application to the concurrent jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal to have his application determined by it. At that stage the High Court has no jurisdiction and so no time which it could enlarge. As a general rule and subject to any specific provision to the contrary, all applications for doing any act or taking any proceedings must be done in the first instance to the court or person who has jurisdiction to deal with the substance of the matter in relation to which the extension of time for a step [p.103] to be taken is required; thus application for extension of time to appeal to the court of Appeal must be made to that court.

When one looks at the old Court of Appeal Rule (P.N. 28) of 1973 it is, patently clear that once the High Court has refused an application for leave to appeal, its jurisdiction becomes extinct and the Applicant must now apply to the Court of Appeal to have the application determined subject to its rule 11 (4), and he must apply within one month. Rules 10 (1) (2) & 11 (4) of the 1973 Rules reads:—

10 (1) Where an appeal lies by leave only any person desiring to appeal shall apply to the Court below or to the Court by notice of motion for leave within fourteen days from the date of the decision against which leave is sought.

10 (2) Whenever an application may be made either to the Court below or to the Court it shall be made in the first instance to the Court below, but if the Court below refuses the application the applicant shall subject to the provisions of rule 11 (4) be entitled to have the application determined by the Court.

11 (4) No application for enlargement of time in which to appeal shall be made after the expiration of one month from the expiration of the time prescribed within which an appeal may be brought. Every such application shall be supported by an affidavit setting forth good and sufficient reasons for the application and by grounds of appeal which prima facie show good cause for leave to be granted. When times [p.104] is so enlarged a copy of the order granting such enlargement shall be annexed to the notice of appeal.

What difference there is between the present and the old rules is that an Applicant has 14 days plus another 14 days under rules 10 (1) & (4) within which to have his application determined by the court of Appeal if such an application is refused by the high Court, whilst the statutory period under the old rules in the same circumstances is 14 days plus one month; in both cases an application for enlargement of time must be made to the Court of Appeal if time has expired.

What is very clear from what I believe is a true construction of the said rules is that whilst the lower Court is empowered to enlarge the period of 14 days it can only do so before that time has expired.

Another consideration which inclines me to accept this view is the provisions of O. 58, r. 14, & O. 64 r. 7 of the rules of the Supreme Court — The annual Practice.

As the court of appeal under the provision of Rule 38 of its Rules has power to refer to the Rules & Practice which were in force in that Court immediately before April 27, 1961 on matters not expressly provided for by its Rules, I have had recourse to the said O. 58, r. 14, & O. 64 r. 7 to enable me to have the appropriate intention of the said Rules 10 (1) & 64. the combined effect of these O. 58, r. 14, & O. 64 r. 7 is that while the court of Appeal has power to enlarge or abridge time, and may enlarge it even after its expiration, the High court can only enlarge the time upon application made before its expiration and no power to abridge it — Vide Re 20 Exchange Street Manchester; Austin Reed Ltd. V Royal Insurance Co. 1956 1 W.L.R. p.765.

It is sometime assumed that because of the provision of Rule 64 of the court of appeal Rules which makes no provision as to time, an application for enlargement of time must first be made to the Court below that is the High Court and if refused to the court of appeal. I must say that this is in my view a misinterpretation of the said Rule, the rule applies to applications which "may be made either to the court below or the Court" and I think only Rules 10 (1) & 29 seem to be within the grips of the said Rules requiring an application for extension or abridgement of time to be made to the court below or to the Court of Appeal; the application must be made to the court having jurisdiction to deal with the substance of the matter in relation to the application for enlargement of time and before whom the proceedings will be taken.

Following what I have already held I have no doubts whatsoever in saying that the decision arrived at by the court of Appeal was the true one. An Applicant seeking leave to appeal must have his application determined by the court of Appeal once it has been refused by the lower Court; if he is out of time, his first duty is to apply for an enlargement of time to the court of Appeal as that is the before whom the proceedings will be taken and it being the Court having jurisdiction to deal with the substance of the matter in relation to which the extension of time for a step to be taken. As was held in the case of Sabrah v. Governor and Attorney-General No. 2 A.L.R. (S.L.) 1957-60 p. 116, both documents — the application for extension of time to appeal should be filed together.

Where an enlargement of time has been granted, a copy of the order granting the enlargement of time must be annexed to the Notice of Appeal; as was held in Elija Speck vs. Gbassay Keister 1962 S.L.L.R. 1962. In that case Done-Edwin, J.A. had this to say [p.106] "In the circumstances the omission to follow the rules in fatal and it is my opinion that the appeal is not properly before the Court and should be struck out".

It seems clear to me that in all the circumstances, the appellant here have failed to follow the rules by applying to the Court of appeal, to have their application determined when they were out of time without first obtaining an order granting them an enlargement of time there was no appeal before the court; that omission was fatal. It could surely not have prejudiced the appellants; case if they had chosen to obtain an enlargement of time to apply to the court of appeal. On that basis the Appellants have no rights to complain about the court of Appeal's decision, the court had no jurisdiction in the matter, it could not have adjudicated on it and therefore could not have assumed jurisdiction even where is a fresh step or waiver by the respondents of any non-compliance with any of its rules.

I am therefore of opinion that this appeal must be refused. The respondents will have the cost of this appeal; such costs to be taxed.

WARNE, J.S.C.

This is an application by the applicants herein for the following Orders.

(1) Special leave to appeal against a ruling and order of the court of appeal dated the 20th of June, 1990.

(2) Stay of all proceedings in the High Court in an action No. CC 30/85. 1985. A. No. 26 Intituled Abdul Ahmed (Trading as Abdul Aziz Enterprises) plaintiff v Nigerian shipping Lines Defendants.

Facts

On the 20th, June, 1990, the High Court of Appeal dismissed an application by the Applicants herein for an order for extension of judgment of the High Court dated 4th July, 1989. (2) Further or other relief. The orders sought in the Court of Appeal were as follows:

(1) That the Defendant/Applicant be granted an extension of time to seek leave to appeal against the ruling and order of the Court of Appeal dated 29th January, 1990; (2) A stay of proceeding (Trading as Abdul Aziz Enterprises v. Nigerian Shipping Lines; (3) stay of Proceeding of the action herein; (4) Further or other relief.

On the 30th June 1989, the applicant sought leave from the Supreme Court for Orders of Mandamus, Prohibition and Certiorari. Leave was granted on the 18th July, 1989 and a stay of Proceedings in the matter was ordered by the Court. On the 7th November 1989 the Supreme Court struck out the application for the Orders of certiorari, Mandamus and prohibition.

The application before this Court is made pursuant to Section 103 (2) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, Act No. 12 of 1978, hereinafter, referred to as “The Constitution” and Rule 6 (2) of the Rules of the Supreme Court RN No. 1 of 1982, (hereinafter referred to as 'The Rules').

In my view it is relevant that I state clearly the provisions that deals with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court. This is contained in section 103 of 'the constitution.'

Section 103 provides: —

"103 (1) An appeal shall lie from a judgment, decree or order of the Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court - (a) as of right in any civil cause or matter where the amount or value of the subject matter of the dispute is not less such an amount as may be determined by parliament; or

(b) as of right, in any criminal cause or matter in respect of which an appeal has been brought to the Court of Appeal from a judgment, decree or order of the High Court of Justice in the exercise of its original jurisdiction; or

(c) with the leave of the Court of Appeal in any other case or matter, civil or criminal, where the Court of Appeal is satisfied that the ease involves a substantial question of law or is of public importance.

(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of the preceding subsection the Supreme Court shall have power to entertain any application for leave to appeal in any cause or matter, civil or criminal, to the Supreme Court and to grant such leave accordingly".

The provisions in section 103 (1) and (2) are repeated in Rule 6 (1) (a), (b) and (c) and Rule 6 (2) of 'the Rules'.

With special reference to Rule 6 (2) it is clear that it enables an intending appellant to apply to this Court for 'special leave' to appeal.

In the light of the application before this Court and the submissions of Counsel for applicants, due regard must be given to Rule 7 of the Rules.

Rule 7 provides:

"An application for leave to appeal must first be made to the Court of Appeal, but if leave is refused by that Court, an application may be made for special leave to appeal to the Supreme Court by notice of motion in that behalf filled by the intending appellant".

Having stated the provisions of Rule 7. I shall now refer to Rule 8 which clearly spells out the procedure to be followed in an application for "Special Leave".

Let me here and now state that 'The Constitution' is the basic law of the land from which all other enactments spring.

The Rules provide the procedure to be followed to enable any Application to be heard.

[p.110]

In my opinion, Rules 7 and 8 must be read together. I cannot subscribe to the submission that they are separate and distinct. In my view that will not only be a narrow construction of the said rules it will violently attack the hierarchy of Courts set up under 'The constitution' the case of Solomon Demby v. Mana Kpaka. S.C. Misc App. No. 7/83 delivered on the 18th April 1984, per Beccles Davies JSC (unreported). The learned Justice had this to say:

"In order to give due regard to the hierarchy of Courts set up by Sections 101. 107. 110 of the Constitution, Rule 7 of 'The Rules' provides that an application for leave to appeal must be made in the first instance to the Court of Appeal and if that Court refuses to grant leave sought, then application could be made to this Court for special leave to appeal".

Submissions Counsel for the applicants submitted that Section 103 (1) and section 103 (2) create different powers given to the Supreme Court She submitted that it must be different, because Section 103 (2) is a restatement in a statuary enactment of the Courts inherent power or jurisdiction. Because the Legislature cannot envisage every situation the Court, being the highest Court, is given such a power to see that justice is done. In my view the main thrust of counsel' submission, is, that throughout the long and tortuous history of this case, the applicants have never had any opportunity to argue their case on the merits. She argued that at every stage they have followed the rules of the various courts and have come to the Courts with clean hands.

Counsel for the Respondents, for his part, has submitted that (1) the application is not properly before the court; (2) there is non-compliance with Rule 7 of the Rules of the Court; (3) the application is frivolous, vexatious and an abuse of the process of the Court. Counsel then buttressed his submissions with some vigorous arguments and legal authorities.

Indeed, the case has a long and tortuous history. However, Counsel for the applicants has urged this Court to truncate the history of the case by restricting itself to the events that took place from the 30th June, 1989 to the date of the instant application. I find this submission rather restrictive in view of the bulk of documents before the Court, which is the record of the case in the instant application.

In 'The Rules', in Part I Interpretation:—

Rule (1) provides "In these Rules unless the context otherwise require

"Records" means the aggregate of papers relating to an appeal (including the pleadings, proceedings, (emphasis mine) evidence and Judgments) proper to be laid before the Supreme Court on the hearing of an appeal or any application (emphasis mine) which by these Rules may be made to the Supreme Court".

Suffice it to say, that this Court cannot ignore all that is before it in the instant application. In my view, justice will be better served by paying due regard to the entire record before the Court. Counsel's submission is therefore untenable. Having said that, is this application properly before the Court? I will now consider the law applicable to this application. Rule 7 of the Rules is clear and unequivocal.

The application before the Court of Appeal, inter alia, was for leave for an extension of time to appeal against the judgment of the High Court given on 4th July, 1989, which application was dismissed. There was no refusal by the Court of Appeal to grant leave to appeal to the Supreme Court. In my opinion, an application for special leave to appeal to the Supreme Court by an intending appellant, can only be made after an application had been made to the Court of Appeal and it has been refused. There has been such application to the Court of Appeal which was refused.

Special Leave Rule 8 provides what the notice of motion should contain It cannot be said too often that this Court is a creature of statute; indeed, so are the other Courts of the Superior Court of Judicature. This Court can only act within the confines of the Constitution, the Rules and any other law which permit it so to do.

As I see it, the applicants are asking this Court to make an absurd order. That is, to grant special leave to appeal against a non-existing order. This it cannot do. Even if there was an order, this Court has no power to grant enlargement of time within which to appeal. The applicants are urging on the Court to invoke its inherent jurisdiction. This Court can do so if it is clothed with one. I have searched the Rules but I can find no specific rule giving the Court inherent jurisdiction except what is provided for in Rule 98 of 'The Rules'.

Rule 98 provides:

"Where no provision is expressly made ,in these Rules relating to the Original and the Supervisory Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, the ,practice and procedure for the time being of the High Court shall apply mutantis mutandis"

I will now revert to the High Court Rules. The relevant High Court provision is Order 21. rule 4.

Order 21 Rule 4 provides:

"The Court may order any pleading to be struck out, on the ground that it discloses no reasonable cause of action or answer, and in any such case or in the case of the action or defence being shown by the pleadings to be frivolous or vexatious, the Court may order the action to be dismissed, or judgment to be entered accordingly, as may be just.

[p.113]

An application under this rule shall be deemed to invoke the inherent jurisdiction of the Court though not mentioned as well as that given by this rule".

The corresponding English Rule as contained in the Annual Practice is order 25 Rule 4.

Rule 4 provides:

"The Court or Judge may order any pleading to be struck out, on the ground that it discloses no reasonable cause of action or answer and in any such case or in the case of the action or defence being shown by the pleadings to be frivolous or vexatious, the court or Judge may order the action to be stayed or dismissed, or judgment to be entered accordingly, as may be just".

It is clear that this Court has inherent jurisdiction to grant any orders to see that justice is done. However, this jurisdiction is not invoked in vacuo, but within settled principles of law and practice.

Several issues have been raised in this application, inter alia, that the court of Appeal was wrong in not addressing the issues before it to enable it to exercise its discretion judicially.

In her submission on the wrongful exercise of the discretion of the Court of Appeal to grant an extension of time within which to appeal, counsel for the applicants has submitted, inter alia, that the Court of Appeal was wrong when it said the applicants had been to the High Court, court of Appeal and Supreme Court in the same matter.

[p.114]

The interlocutory branches had been chopped off. No basis for the reasons the Court of Appeal gave for its conclusion", she added.

In answer to the submission, I will refer to the case of Ratnam v. Cumarasamy and Another (1965) 1 WLR, 8; (1964) 3 AER, 893, where Lord Guest said in an Appeal of the Federation of Malaya:

“The principles on which a court will act in reviewing the discretion exercised by the lower court are well settled. There is a presumption that the judge has rightly exercised his discretion: charles Osenton & Co. v. Johnson (1941) 2 AER 245 at 257. (1942) A.C. 130 at p. 148: per Lord Wright. The Court will not interfere unless it is clearly satisfied that the, discretion has been exercised on a wrong principle and should have been exercised in a contrary way or that there has been a miscarriage of Justice. Evans v. Bartlam (1937) 2 AER (646: 1937 A.C. 473 ……

The rules of Court must prima facie, be Obeyed, and in order to justify a Court in extending the time during which some step in procedure requires to be taken, there must be some material Of which the Court can exercise it discretion.

If the law were otherwise, a party in breach would have an unqualified right to an extension of time which would defeat the purpose of the rules which is to provide a time table for the conduct of litigation (emphasis mine). The only material before the Court of Appeal was the affidavit of the appellant. The grounds stated were that he [p.115] did not instruct his solicitor until a day before the record of appeal was due to be lodged, and that his reason was that he hoped for a compromise. Their Lordships are satisfied that the Court of Appeal were entitled to take the view this did not constitute material on which they could exercise their discretion in favour of the appellant. In these circumstances, their Lordships find it impossible to say that the discretion of the Court of Appeal was exercised on wrong principles.

The principle for which the appellant's counsel contended was that the application should be granted unless to do otherwise would result in irreparable mischief

The learned lawlord considered the extract from the judgment of Bramwell L.J., in Atwood v. Chichester (1878), 3 Q.B.D. 722 AT p. 723 and continued;

"Their Lordships note that these observations were made in reference to a case where the application was to set aside a judgment by default, which is on a different basis from an app1ication to extend the time for appealing (emphasis mine). In the one case the litigant has had no trial at all in the other he has a trial and lost. Their Lordships do not regard these observations as of general application"

I am of opinion also, that the observations of Bramwell L.J. (Supreme are not of general application, at least not in the instant case.

The facts contained in the various affidavits before the Court of Appeal were of such a nature, that this court cannot say the exercise of the discretion by the Court of Appeal was on a wrong principle. I am of opinion that the ratio decidendi in the case of Ratnam V. Cumarasamy (supra) is applicable in the instant case with equal force.

Under the rubric "Inherent Jurisdiction", it is stated that "The Court has jurisdiction to stay all proceedings before it which are obviously frivolous and vexatious or an abuse of its process, vide Reichel V. Magrath 14 App. Cas. 665. The Court can also remove from its file any matter improperly placed therein vide Nixon V. Laundes (1990) 2 IR.R. I.

The inherent jurisdiction is a valuable adjunct to the powers conferred on the Court by these Rules. When an app11cation is made to the inherent jurisdiction of the Court, all facts can be gone into and affidavits as to facts are admissible vide Willis V. Earl Howe (1893) 2 Ch. pp. 551, 554. Vide Remmington V. Scoles (1897) 2 Ch. 1. where it was only by extraneous evidence that Romer J., was convinced that, it was a sham defence that ought to be struck out as an abuse of the process of the Court

In the case of Willis V. Earl How (1893) 2 Ch. (supra) in the statement of claim of an action for ejectment, the plaintiff was heir at law of w. J. who died intestate, in 1798, and that on his death his real estate was wrongfully taken possession of by the mother of G. C. an instant, in his name under the false pretence that G.C., was the pair at law to W.J., that G.C. died an infant and that his mother continued to hold possession of the estate in the name of the estate in the name of R.G., infant, whom she falsely asserted to be the brother of G.C. but who was real1y a supposititious child
……..

The Defendant moved to have the statement of claim struck out as frivolous and vexatious, and filed an affidavit showing that the story of R.C. being a supposititious child was publicly spoken of in newspapers and otherwise as early as 1853, and had been made the ground of previous unsuccessful actions of other claimants against the defendants and his predecessors.

Held (affirming the decision of Kekewich J.) that the allegations in the statement of claim as to the entry in 1798 on behalf of G.C. did not show a case of concealed fraud within Sect 26 of the 384 Will 4 C. 27 but only a wrongful entry under a false claim that the statute began to run against the Plaintiff's predecessors in title in 1798, and as the possession had been adverse to the Plaintiff and his predecessor ever since, the operation of the title had not been suspended by the alleged fraud in 1805: and that the Plaintiff or his predecessors might with reasonable diligence have discovered the concealed fraud, if any, more than twelve years before the commencement of the action. On these grounds the statement of claim and the action was struck out and the action dismissed as frivolous and vexatious."

In this case the emphasis was the previous unsuccessful claims that had been made by other claimants against Defendants and his successors, and the Plaintiff had slept on his right and adverse possession had given title to the Defendants. In the other case of Remmington V. Scoles (1897) 2 Ch 1, A defendant delivered a statement of defence in which he either denied or refused to admit each of the allegations in the statement of claim, but set up no case of his own. In previous proceedings in another action he admitted several of the material statements which he now denied, and had not denied any of the others:—

Held (By Homer J. and by the Court of Appeal) that though the Court will not on affidavit evidence order a pleading to struck out on the ground that the statements in are false, the circumstances in the case showed the statement of defence to be frivolous and vexatious, and which ought to be struck out as being an abuse of the Procedure of Court.

These two cases are very instructive and are of persuasive influence when addressing the issue of the inherent jurisdiction of the Court. In the Remmington V. Scales (supra) Romer J. said:—

"The Court has an inherent power to prevent the abuse of legal machinery. Willis V. Earl Beauchamp 11 P.B. 63. Undoubtly therefore, the Court has power to strike out a statement of claim; but the power of the Court is not confined to that: it applies also to a statement of defence which is frivolous and vexatious and an abuse of the procedure: Reichel v. Magrath (1889) 14 App. Cas. 665. It appears to me that evidence may be received in a proper case on a motion of this kind to show that a pleading is an abuse of the process of the Court: Boswell v. Coaks (1894)6R. 167. In the present case I think the Plaintiffs are entitled by their evidence to state the circumstances which show that the statement of defence is merely an abuse of process of the court, though they are not entitled, to show by evidence generally the untruth of the statements in the statement of defence".

I agree with the learned judge and the principle of law and Practice emaciated.

In the instant case, the several affidavits filed, state the circumstances in the action, culminating in this application.

"The Court of Appeal affirmed the decision of Romer J. in the aforementioned case." The Judges in the Court of Appeal, while Recognising the right of a defendant to put in a statement of Defence not confined to denying the allegations in the statement of claim, agreed with Romer J. that where the defence is a mere sham defence, not an honest defence, but framed with a view to gain time, ought to be struck out.

[p.119]

"The Court has inherent jurisdiction to stay an action which must fail …… A judicial discretion must be used as to what proceedings are vexatious; for the Court must not prevent a suitor from exercising his undoubted rights on any vague or indefinite principle. The jurisdiction will not be exercised except with great circumspection and unless it is perfectly clear that the plea cannot succeed .....

……

so, too, any action which the plaintiff clearly cannot prove and which is without any solid basis, may be stayed under this inherent jurisdiction as frivolous and vexatious
……..

And when any party to an action has made repeated frivolous applications to the Judge or Master, the Court has power to make an order prohibiting any further application by him without leave, vide Grape V. Doan (1887) 37 Ch. D. 168: Kinnard V. Field (1905) 2 Ch. 306. But if the action be clearly vexatious and oppressive, the proper course is to dismiss it".

I am of the opinion that the Court of Appeal considered the submission of counsel on both sides and the affidavits before the more the court and made a deliberate finding that is to say:—

"Taking therefore the peculiar nature of the case and all the other authorities cited before, we are unable to grant the reliefs sought by the applicants".

[p.120]

I see no reason why this Court should interfere with the exercise of the discretion of the Court of Appeal to refuse to grant the reliefs sought. I am satisfied the discretion was properly exercised. Indeed the Court of Appeal need not have given reason for refusing to exercise its discretion in favour of the applicants. Vide the case of Donald Macauley V. Emmanuel Shallop and Mirib Shallop SC. Misc. App. 3/8 (Unreported). In that case, the Supreme Court made this ruling per Harding J.S.C Beccles Davies J.S.C. agreeing and Awunor-Renner J.S.C. dissenting.

"I have listened carefully to the arguments of counsel on both sides and read the various affidavits thereto tiled herein. As regards the first order applied for, I do not think this is proper case calling for the exercise of my discretion to grant special leave to appeal to this court, accordingly, I would refuse special leave. Special leave to appeal to this court having been refused, it necessarily follows that no order for a stay of execution of the judgment could be ordered by this Court. I would dismiss the application with costs to the respondent".

Having spelt out some of the principles and practice by which the Court acts when the inherent jurisdiction is invoked, I wil1 now consider its applicability in the instant case.

This is a case replete with several applications since the Writ of Summons was issued in December, 1985. The first of these was, to secure an order to enter judgment in default of appearance by the applicants. Thereafter, all the applications for some order or the other have been made either in the High Court, Court of Appeal or Supreme Court by the applicant. Some have been warranted and some unwarranted. In my 20 years in the Supreme Court of Judicature, I have yet to recall any such prolific and persistent applications as in the instant case.

[p.121]

In the instant case, it is one more attempt by the applicants to secure an order to challenge the judgment given on 4th July 1989: and I am of opinion that it is an abuse of the due process of the law. This Court ought not to permit it and will not permit the abuse of its process. From the record before the Court, this application ought to have been dismissed without Counsel being heard. It ought to be noted that the application before the Court is for the following orders:

"(1) Special leave to appeal against a ruling and order of the Court of Appeal dated 20th June, 1990.

(2) stay of all proceedings in the High Court in an action CC. 30/85. 1985, A. No. 26 — IN THE HIQH COURT OF SIERRA LEONE

BETWEEN

ABDUL AHMED (TRADING AS ABDUL AZIZ ENTERPRISES) — PLAINTIFF

And

NIGERIAN NATIONAL SHIPPING LINES — DEFENDANTS

Pending the hearing and determination of the application and pending the hearing and determination of the proposed appeal".

Let me here and now state that the action sought to be stayed before the Court o£ Appeal, which among other orders sought, was CC. 806/85 1985 N. No 28 — Between Nigerian National Shipping Lines vs. Abdul Ahmed as amended to read Abdul Ahmed (Trading as Abdul Aziz Enterprises and Nigerian National Shipping Lines.

The High Court Cause List revealed that CC. 30/85 B. No. 4, was between Kalba Bangura vs. Samuel Carew. This being the case, how then can the Court are required to make an order in respect of a matter that had no relationship to the matter which was before the Court of Appeal.

It is either one of two things or both: — that the application was made [p.122] male fides or it was deliberate attempt to mislead the Court. Whether it is one or the other, it is clearly an abuse of the due process of the Court I shall say no more. Nevertheless, this Court in its pursuit of Fairness and in the interest of justice heard arguments on both sides

In my opinion the applicants having failed to obtain an order for an extension of time within which to appeal against the Judgment of the High Court dated the 4th July, 1989, have now come to this Court for special leave to appeal against the Ruling of the Court of Appeal for an order which is tantamount to an enlargement of time within which to appeal against the said Judgment. If this Court were to grant the orders prayed for, it would be a travesty of the law.

This Court has ruled that it has no power to grant an order for enlargement of time within which1to appeal. Vide Solomon Demby v. Mana Kpaka (supra). In that case, Beccles Davies J.S.C reviewed in the decision in the case of Gatti v. Shoesmith (1939) 3 All E. R. 916 and ruled thus:

“To be able to exercise a discretion the Court must be empowered by some rule of law or practice which then becomes the basis on which the discretion could be exercised one way or the other. There is no similar provision in the Rules of this Court giving it a blank cheque as it were to exercise its discretion to extend time within which special leave could be applied for".

I entirely agree with the ruling of the learned justice. In view of the fact that there was no application before the Court of Appeal which was refused which could be renewed under Rule 7 of the Rules,’ I am of the opinion that it was inappropriate and premature to invoke the provisions under Rule 8 of the Rules.

Finally, the applicants having 1nvoked the inherent jurisdiction of the court, the law must take its course. I will re-echo the submission of Counsel for applicants that the history of this case is not [p.123] only long and tortuous, but scandalous. Litigation must come to an end. See the case of In the Davies A.L.R. SL (1920-1936) 12 at 14; and the case of Brown v. Dean & another (1910) A.C. 373 AT6 374.

In the case of Brown v. Dean and another (1910) A.C. 373 at 374 where Lord Loreburn L.C. said:

“My Lords, the chief effect of the arguments which your Lordships have heard is to confirm in my mind the extreme value of the old doctrine “Interest Republicae ut sit finis litium”. means at their command are easily able to exhaust the resources of a poor antagonist.

With great respect for the authority of Fletcher Moulton L.J., I am of opinion that the order of the divisional court confirmed by the majority of the Court of Appeal is perfectly right. When a litigant has obtained judgement in a Court of justice or one of the High Courts, he is by law entitled not to be deprived of that judgment without very solids grounds; and where (as in this case) the ground is the alleged discovery of new evidence, it must at least be such as presumably to be believed, and if believed would be conclusive”.

I entirely agree with the learned law lord, and adopt the pronouncement in toto.

In view of what I have said supra, I hold this application to be wholly unfounded, frivolous and vexatious and ought to be dismissed, and I accordingly dismiss the application with costs to the respondent

SYDNEY WARNE, J.S.C

[p.124]

NAVO, J.S.C.,

By noticing of motion Misc. App. 4/90 dated the 19th day of July, 1990 the Applicant the Nigerian National Shipping lines, applies to this Court for the following orders:

1. That the Applicant be granted Special leave to appeal against the Ruling and order of the Court of Appeal in the matter:

Misc. App.50/89

IN THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR SIERRA-LEONE

BETWEEN:

NIGERIAN NATIONAL SHIPPING LINES — APPLICANT

AND

ABDUL AHMED (TRADING AS ABDUL AZIZ ENTERPRISES) —RESPONDENT

DATED 20TH JUNE, 1990

2. A stay of all proceedings in the High Court action CC 30/85 1995 A. No. 26 IN THE HIGH COURT OF SIERRA LEONE

BETWEEN:

ABDUL AHMED(TRADING AS ABDUL AZIZ ENTERPRISES — PLAINTIFF

AND

NIGERIAN NATIONAL SHIPPING LINES – DEFENDANT

Pending the hearing and determination of this application and pending the hearing and determination of the proposed appeal. (The underlined for purposes of emphasis is mine)

[p.125]

The applicant supplied three grounds upon which special leave to appeal is sought, which if the necessity arises, I shall consider in the Ruling.

I find it necessary at this stage to state that I have had the previledge of reading in the thinking of my learned brother Warne J.S.C., with which I am in total agreement that this application fails in its entirety and should be dismissed.

The Applicant says that this application is made pursuant to Section 103(2) of the Constitution, Act. No. 12 of 1978. My learned brother Warne JSC has so exhaustively interpreted the provision of Sec. 103 of Act, No.12 of 1978 that there is very little, if anything, that I can usefully add to his exposition of that section a dissatisfied litigant to come to this court. The practise and procedure to do this is provided for under Rules 6 and 7 of the Rules of this Court, Public Notice No.1 of 1982 as follows:

"6(1) Appeal shall be from a judgment, Decree or Order of the court of Appeal to the Supreme Court

(a) ……(b)……

(c) with leaves of the court in any other cause or matter civil or criminal where the Court of Appeal is satisfied that the case involves a substantial question of law or is of public importance.

(d) …… (e)……(f)……."

7. Application for leave to Appeal must first be made to the court but if leave is refused by the Court an application may be made for Special Leave to appeal to the Supreme Court by notice of motion in that behalf filed by then intending applicant."

The provision of Rule 6(1) (c) is ipssisima verba that of s.103 (10)(c).

There is no evidence before us that the procedure in Rule 7 of these Rules was complied with in bringing this Application. Further more, the order against which still leave is sought to appeal was not drawn up and filed. The Application therefore is not properly before this court and ought to have been dismissed without asking the respondents to answer. The rules of our Court speaks in peremptory language — it says " Thou shall and if thou does not, thou art out.

But before I dismiss this Application let me consider the second order prayed for. It asks for:

"(2) A stay of all proceedings in the High Court Action CC 30/85 1985 A. No.26 IN THE HIGH COURT OF SIERRA LEONE

BETWEEN:

ABDUL AHMED (TRADING AS ABDUL AZIZ ENTERPRISES -PLAINTIFF

AND

NIGERIAN NATIONAL SHIPPING LINES - DEFENDANT

[p.126]

I quote extracts fro the judgment of Purcell C.J. at p.15 Purcell C.J.— after his opening remarks had this to say inter alia

"…… I can only express my surprise that Mr. Barlatt is not better informed and instructed with regard to the practice regulating appeals and the time within which such application must be made. Not only has this appeal court been in existence for nearly 10 years but the rules regulating these matters are perfectly well known and have on several occasions been discussed at length in this court."

The Learned C.J. referred to the Ghana case of AMPONDURO V. WEREKU

(1905) then 313 and went on to say

"……we are quite certain that the object of the rules was to limit the time during which an appeal could be kept hanging over a successful litigant's head, and during which he could be kept out of the fruits of his judgment."

The Learned C.J. went on to say at p. 19

"As was said by Thesager C.J.

x x x x x x x x x x

" In the interest of the public the court ought to take care that appeals are brought before it in proper time, and as between the parties it has often been remarked, in the branch of this court which sits at Lincoln's Inn, that when a judgment has been pronounced, and the time for appeal has elapsed without appeal, the successful party has a vested right to the judgment, which ought, except under every special circumstances, to be made effectual. And I think that the legislature intends that appeals from judgments should be brought within the prescribed time and that no extension of time should be granted except under very special circumstances."

x x x x x x x x x

The learned C.J. concluded his judgment in these words

"For myself I think the time has come when this court should speak with no uncertain voice on this question of these applications by a would be appellant who has merely neglected to take the advantage of the machinery which the law allows him with regard to appealing. I think that this court should let it be known that in future it will not, except under very peculiar and extraordinary circumstances, grant special leave to appeal. I do not think that this can be too widely understood or recognised. So far as the present application is concerned, and for the reasons I have already stated, I think that this application should be dismissed with costs."

[p.127]

Pending the hearing and determination of this application and pending the determination of the proposal appeal.

The order Prayed for is most interesting if not deceiving. All through these proceedings the records in this action the records speak of and the parties argued on an action amanating from writ of Summons numbered CC.806/85 1985 A.NO.26 between the parties mentioned above. That we are asked to stay proceedings in an action CC30/85 1985 A.NO.26 did not only defeat this application itself but also led us to do some research in the records, which surprisingly revealed that action CC30/85 was, or is still a matter between KABBA BANGURA VS. SAMUEL CAREW who are not parties to this application.

How on earth can we be asked to, and can we, stay all proceedings in action CC.30/85 between parties than these in the current action when they are all strangers to that action. If reference to the Bangura v. Carew case CC.30/85 was made only once in the notice of motion one would have entertained a very remote probability. That it was a mistake but it was repeated even in para 2 of the Affidavit of Yasmin Baindu Jusu Sheriff sworn to on the 19th day of July 1990 exhibit as "YBJS"?

In his Affidavit in opposition to this application Mr. A.J. Bishop Gooding has deposed, and that has not been refused, that since judgment in the original action in the High Court was Delivered in 1985 the defendant/Applicant has adopted various strategies to defeat the ends of justice and to deprive the successful Plaintiff/respondents of the fruits of his judgment. For example not less than four application have been made to the court of Appeal, six to the Supreme Court and which but for one in the Supreme Court for an order of certiorari, Mandamus and Prohibiting have been dismissed with costs which costs plus that of the trial by the High Court ordered against the applicant, have still now not been paid and that this tantamount to a deliberate attempt to defeat the ends of justice. He further asked the court to make an order that the applicant be not allowed to come by any means to this court or the courts below as there is no appeal as pending within the jurisdiction of the courts.

I have considered this application and perused also the affidavits and document filed by both parties and have come to the conclusion that they are all for leave or special leave to appeal against the judgment of the High Court and this defeats the ends of justice a gross abuse of the process of these courts. There must be an end to litigation. And it is this Court, the highest in the land, to speak loud and clear once and for all, to all who practice before our court.

On the question of application for extension of time within which to appear the Rules are quite clear and have been dismissed on umpty times in this Court and in the courts below, and all practitioners in these Court sought to be aware of. I wish only to refer to case of NICHOLAS VS. MBOYAWA (1922) A.L.R. (S.L. Series) 1930-36 (Full Court (Purcell C.J.,) Sacrey — Cookson J. and McDonnell.

[p.128]

And so do I, speaking for myself, dismiss this application with costs. The respective judgments of the High Court and the assessment Proceedings are affirmed.

"I further order that the said Applicant or any of time be not allowed to make any further application in these proceedings or either of them to this court being first obtained. And if notice of any such application shall be given without such leave being obtained, and it shall be dismissed without being heard."

OSMAN B. CONTEH APPELLANT

Vs.

SIERRA LEONE DOCK WOKERS UNION RESPONDENTS

AWUNOR-RENNER, J.S.C.

THIS IS THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT WITH WHICH THE OTHER MEMBERS OF THE COURT AGREE WITH THE EXCEPTION OF THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE F. A. SHORT WHO IS NOW DECEASED.

This is an appeal from the Judgment of the Court of Appeal dated the 6th day of January, 1984 reversing a judgment of the High Court dated the 20th day of October, 1982.

The facts on which the appeal turns are as follows:

The Appellant Osman Borbor Conteh had been in the Service of the Sierra Leone Dock Workers Union (hereinafter known as the "Union"), the Respondent herein, for a number of years during which period he had been elected as Assistant General Secretary and finally in November, 1971 as full time General Secretary of the Union.

[p.160]

His salary at the time was Le4000.00 per annum plus other fringe benefits.

On the 22nd day of May, 1979, the President of the Respondent Union one D.F. Kanu wrote to the Appellant as Secretary General asking him to convene a meeting of the Executive Council for Saturday the 26th day of May. The Appellant wrote back to say that that day was not convenient for him. Kanu wrote again asking him to convene the said meeting on Monday the 28th day of May, 1979 but the Meeting was not convened by the Appellant on that date. The President himself convened the meeting and it was on that date that the Executive Council wrote to the Appellant to say that he had been suspended from office with effect from that date.

He was neither present at the said meeting nor informed in writing that charges would be preferred against him at that meeting.

The Appellant was then ordered to make an inventory of the Unions' properties in his custody in the presence of the Trustees of the Union, this he refused to do and was subsequently dismissed from the office of Secretary General by the Executive Council of the Union.

The Appellant thereafter instituted this action against the Respondents asking the High Court for a declaration that the action taken by the Executive Council of the Respondent Union in suspending him on the 28th day of May, 1979 and in subsequently dismissing him on the 22nd day of September, 1979 from the Office of Secretary General of the Union were both contrary to the Rules of Natural Justice and therefore illegal and in the alternative were ultra vires the rules of the Respondent Union.

The Appellant further claimed arrears of salary plus other fringe benefits which he alleged he was entitled to from the date of his suspension on the 28th day of May, 1979 until the date of Judgment.

At the time of the suspension referred to, the Appellant stated that he was in receipt of a salary of:

(1) Le4000.00 per annum

(2) Transport Allowance of Le160 per month and

(3) Entertainment Allowance of Le60.00 per month.

The Respondent filed a Defence and Counterclaim against the Appellant. Judgment was however given in favour of the Appellant in the High Court but this was later reversed in the Court of Appeal substituting a Judgment in favour of the Respondent. Let me at this stage deviate and say that the Appellant's appointment and Conditions of Service were subject to the Rules of the Sierra Leone Dock Workers Union (hereinafter referred to as the "Rules") which were tendered in evidence. The Rules govern the Union and bind everyone of its members and officials, it is therefore convenient at this stage to refer to the relevant Rules in so far as they affect the position of the Appellant in this matter:

RULE 5(1) "The government of the Union shall be the Annual Conference and Subject to that authority the Executive Council.

RULE 7(5) "The Executive Council may appoint organisers and such clerical staff as it may consider necessary for the smooth working of the Union. It may suspend or dismiss any officer or member of staff.

[p.162]

for neglect of duty, dishonesty incompetence, refusal to carry out the decisions of the Executive or for any other reasons which it deems good and sufficient in the interest of the Union. It shall decide the salary of the General Secretary, Office Staff and the amount of honoraria to be paid to other officers.

RULE 8(2) The Officers of the Union shall be the President, General Secretary, Assistant Secretary, Financial Secretary, Treasurer Trustees and Auditors.

RULE 8(4) The General Secretary shall be elected by a vote of the Annual Conference and shall hold office at the pleasure of the union etc.

RULE 19(3) No member or official shall be suspended or expelled unless he has been given an opportunity to state his case personally at a meeting of the Executive Council of which he has received not less than seven days notice in writing.

The matter with which the official is charged shall be set out in such notice.

The Appellant has now appealed to this Court on the following grounds:-

(1) That the Learned Justices of Appeal wrongfully and unjustifiably usurped the functions of the Learned Trial Judge who had the advantage of seeing and hearing the witnesses in their oral testimony and had resolved violent conflicts in the evidence given by witnesses on both sides [p.163] by reversing findings of facts made by him and substituting their own impression of how the evidence should have been viewed and how the issues should have been decided, without applying or seeking guidance from any of the settled and well established legal principles contained in decisions of the Court of Appeal or the Supreme Court or indeed in any other Court for that matter setting out the criteria governing cases where an Appellate Court can properly reverse findings of fact made by the said Judge.

(2) That the Learned Justices of Appeal failed to consider adequately the various legal issues raised in the Appeal inspire of the Legal Arguments on both sides and the several authorities cited by treating the matter as being one between Master and Servant notwithstanding the fact that the matter concerned essentially members of a Trade Union and the interpretation of the Rules of a Trade Union.

(3) That the Learned Justices of Appeal failed to avert their minds to and accordingly failed to apply the several legal principles and presumptions governing the rules of Natural Justices to the instant case, thereby arriving at an erroneous Judgment.

Counsel for the Appellant argued that the Respondents failed to comply with the principles of Natural Justice and that they were therefore in breach of the audi alteram partem rule when they suspended the Appellant on the 28th day of May, 1979 and subsequently dismissed him on the 22nd day of September, 1979 and that these actions were therefore illegal and in the alternative were ultra vires the rules of the said union.

He referred the Court to the case of RIDGE V BALDWIN and several [p.164] other authorities in his case for the Appellant. He further stated categorically that he was submitting and I quote that:

"One of the fundamental rules of Natural Justice is that man has a right to be heard: audi alteram partem.

The rule embrace the whole nature of the fair procedure or due process. The position is clear in that when a person is in a judicial or quasi judicial position to exercise judgment or administer power and does so in a manner which could affect the livelihood of another then that person is bound to comply with the principles of Natural Justice"

He also stated that the Appellant was never informed; that he was going to face charges at the meeting of the 28th April, not informed of what the charges were. He also alleged that the Appellant was never afforded the opportunity of defending himself. He also relied heavily on Rule 19 (3) of the rules of the Union, as stated supra.

Counsel for the Respondents on the other hand presented the following arguments on their behalf. He argued that Counsel for the Appellant and himself conceded that the Appellant himself was an employee of the Union' and that if that was the case the Rules of Natural Justice would only apply if there was any attempt to expel the Appellant from his Union. In the present case he said that the Appellant was dismissed from his employment. He referred to ABBOT V. SULLIVAN reported in (1952) 1 K.B. at page 189 and Rule 19 (3) Supra. He further argued that the Appellant held office at the pleasure of the Union and was never suspended or expelled by the Union. The applicable rule he contended was Rule 7 (5). He said therefore that the Appellant should not have come to Court for wrongful dismissal but for wrongful expulsion. He too referred to the case of RIDGE V BALDWIN and another reported in 1963 2 A.E.R. at page 66 and at page 71. He further claimed that the High Court and the Court of Appeal applied two principles. The High Court relied on Rule 19 (3) of the Rules of the Union and the Court of Appeal relied on Rule 7 (5) of the same rules and came to the conclusion that the [p.165] Appellant was an employee of the Union and in addition to being a member of the Union.

The rules of Natural Justice were therefore not applicable to his dismissal or suspension.

I have already referred to the relevant rules in this action and now propose to deal with the most salient points and uncontroverted facts given in the evidence so far briefly:

Let me first of all deal with the question of Natural Justice as was presented to [the Court] me by Counsel for the Appellant on his behalf. In my opinion; the gravamen of Counsel's argument was that he claimed that the Appellant had been employed as Secretary General of the Sierra Leone Dock Workers Union. He had been elected by virtue of Rule 8 (4) supra and should have remained in office at the pleasure of the Annual Conference. Had that been the case this would have bet a simple matter. See the case of TERREL & COLONIAL SECRETARY of State for the Colonies. Reported in (1953) 2 A.E.R. at Page 90.

That case involved the tenure of office of a Colonial Judge who had been dismissed and who had held office at the pleasure of the crown. On a Claim by him that he was not liable to be dismissed before he reached the age of 62 when he would be entitled to a larger pension it was held:

1. That Judges in Malaya did not held office during good behaviour but had held office at the pleasure of the crown and therefore the claimant had held office during pleasure. (continued at p.7)

2. The right of the Crown to dismiss at pleasure was a rule of law which could not be taken away by any contractualarrangement made by any Executive Officer or department of State and therefore the letter of July 5 and August 7 1930 did not constitute a contract between the claimant and the Crown that the Crown would employ him till he reached the age of 62 and therefore his claim must be dismissed.

Apart from Judges and others whose tenure of office is governed by Statute all servants and officers of the Crown hold office at pleasure [p.166] and this has been said to apply to a Colonial Judge "TERREL & SECRETARY of STATE Supra "It has always been held and I think rightly that such an officer has no right to be heard before he is dismissed and the reason is clear, as the person having the power of dismissal need not have anything against the officer, he need not give any reason".

I have cited this case to give illustrations of what is meant by "at the pleasure of"

The Appellant in this matter was not suspended and dismissed by the Union. As a. matter of fact the Appellant was first suspended by the Executive Council on the 28th day of May, 1979 in accordance with Rule 7(5) of the Rules. He was subsequently dismissed from his office as Secretary General by the same Executive Council who claimed to have acted under the same rule.

The Executive Council had power to suspend or dismiss any officer or member of Staff for neglect of duty, dishonesty, incompetence or refusal to carry out the decision of the Executive etc.

The Appellant was not only a paid up member but also an officer of the Union. He had been asked to convene a meeting of the Executive Council on the 26th day of May, 1979. This he failed to do.

A meeting was convened by the Executive Council on the 28th day of May, 1979 and it was at that meeting that the decision was taken to suspend the Appellant. He was neither present at that meeting nor told that charges would be preferred against him on that date or what the charges would be. He had no opportunity of defending himself in any way before the suspension. Later on in September he was subsequently dismissed. It is my opinion that the Executive Council was definitely in breach of the Rules of Natural Justice and legal principles of the Audi Alteram Partem Rules. What Audi Alteram Partem rule contemplates is an adequate opportunity to appear and be heard. I have come to this conclusion after considering all the evidence and legal principles relating to this matter [canvassed] adduced before this Court.

I do not in anyway support [agree with] the arguments put forward for the Respondents.

The Court of Appeal was clearly wrong in arriving at a different conclusion from that of the High Court without even averting their minds to the Audi Alteram Partem rule or rule 19 (3) which is in my view are more or less synonymous with that of the audi alteram partem rules.

I would also like to quote a few of the utterances made by Justice Navo – J. A. in his Judgment to support my conclusion. At one point he said and I quote:—

"It is clear, that the Respondent was not heard in his defence before he was suspended and dismissed but was he given an opportunity to be so heard? or did the occasion require the Executive to clearly sit and wait for the Respondent at his convenience to be first heard before they look the steps while they did.

There is no doubt that Justice Navo knew from the evidence that the Appellant had not been notified of the charges that would brought against him or informed him why the meeting was being held, (See page 13).

In another paragraph he further had this to say again I quote:—

"On the complaint that the appellant did not observe the rules of natural justice that is the audi alteram partem rule, there was abundant evidence, that the respondent was summoned to the meeting which discussed his suspension but in flagrant disobedience, arrogance and gross insubordination refused to attend and instead was holding an unauthorised meeting with some members of the Union at the same time the Executive meeting was held".

From these quotation it is quite clear that the Court of Appeal was quite cognisant of the fact that the Appellant was not heard in his own [p.168] defence before he was suspended and dismissed. It is also quite clear that there was a breach of the audi alteram partem rule because even though the Court of Appeal accepted that the Appellant was summoned to the meeting they refused to accept that in fact no notice of the charges which the appellant had to face was ever communicated to him in writing at least seven days before meeting at which the appellant case was considered and his subsequent dismissal.

For the reason given above, I have no alternative but to find for the appellant after considering, the evidence, the .rules and cases referred to supra, again I must say that.

On the while I do not agree with the Court of Appeal for the reasons given above and wish to add that apart from the Appellants case the Respondent in his own case and arguments presented in this matter seem to have supported the Court of Appeal in some parts by agreeing with them whole heartedly. I do not expect him [them] to behave otherwise as he [Counsel] gave his reasons for his support by stating that this was a case of Master and Servant and that the Appellant further held office at the pleasure of the Union. He further stated that the Respondent was suspended from office as General Secretary and subsequently dismissed from that post. He was neither suspended nor expelled from the Union. That distinction is absolutely necessary to be made quite apparent because the principle of natural Justice has been held not to be applicable to the original contractual relation of Master and servant as stated above. I agree with Counsel for Respondent when he said that the appellant was dismissed by the Executive Council as secretary General but had they the right he do? The answer is no. This is in contrast to the Letter of Dismissal Exh "E". That letter states that Appellant was dismissed in pursuance of Rule 7 (5) Supra. He himself Counsel for Respondent had admitted that the Appellant" held office at the pleasure of the Union rule 8(4).

This being the case the Executive had no right to dismiss him as [p.169] Rule 8(4) is quite clear on this point as I have already explained the position Supra. The Executive Council alleged that the Appellant had been disobedient and refused to call a meeting of the Executive Council when requested to do and to make an inventory of the Unions Properties in his possession which he was requested to do and as such they had very wide powers of disciplining him. I hold that the Appellant should have been dismissed by the Annual General Council and no more.

This is not a case of Master and Servant. The Respondent's counsel relied on The Rules of the Union. In paragraph 15 of the case for the Respondent, he said;

"The Respondent consequently submits that the purpose of Rule 19(2) and 19(3) of Exh."A" was to meet the requirement.

English Law as outlined above, and further said that the provisions of the said subsections of 19(2) and 19(3) have absolutely no application in the contractual relationship of Master and Servant. After considering the rules of natural Justice and the rules of the Union as relied upon above and the evidence adduced. I hold that the declaration sought in this case ought to be granted.

1. The Appellant is entitled to his salary from the 28th day of May 1979 to the day of judgment in the High Court which is the 20th day of October 1988.

2. I allow Le. 60 a month for entertainment.

3. I allow Le. 100 a month for transport for the same period.

As regards the Defendants/Respondents Counterclaim. I would allow them the sum of Le600 which had been paid to the Appellant in respect of the Seminar, in Ghana, which did not materialize.

I would also allow them the sum of Le600 which the Appellant had not accounted for as, alleged by the Respondents. He had produced debit notes from Giani Store in support of his case that he had bought drinks for the I.T.F. Seminar. There is no receipt in support of his assertion.

[p.170]

The Appellant had paid 17 instalments totalling Le1,413.12 from May 1979 on the loan granted him by the Respondents for the purchase of his car, this I would allow him. The outstanding balance would be deducted by the Respondents from the salary due to him.

Interest to be paid to the Appellant on all monies due and owing to him under this Judgment at the rate of 5% per annum.

Costs to be paid by the Respondents to the Appellant. Such costs to be taxed

BETWEEN:

VS

JAMAL MOROWAH - RESPONDENT/RESPONDENT

E.A. Halloway Esq. for the Appellant/Applicant

A.F. Serry Kamal Esq. for the Respondent/Respondent

RULING

BECCLES DAVIBS. J.S.C.

The Appellant/applicant by his Notice of Motion dated 24th April 1987 as amended has sought the following orders:—

1. That the order of the Court of Appeal dated the 8th day of April 1987 and all proceedings thereof be stayed pending the hearing and determination of the Appellant/Applicant's appeal to this Honourable Court - Civ App 4/87

2. That the order or the High Court dated the 17th day of March 1987 and all proceedings thereof be stayed pending the hearing and determination of the Appellant/Applicant's appeal to this Honourable Court Civ App No 4/87.

[p.21]

3. An order setting aside the Writ of Possession issued pursuant to an ex parte order of the High Court dated the 29th day of April 1987 in that the said Honourable Court lacked jurisdiction to grant such an order in interlocutory proceedings and furthermore the said writ of Possession was irregular in that it was not attested in the name of the Chief Justice of Sierra Leone.

4. An order that possession of this said shop numbered 30 Goderich Street Freetown in the Western Area of the Republic of Sierra Leone be given by the Respondent to the Appellant/Applicant and for leave to issue a Writ of Restitution in that behalf.

5. An interim stay of 1 and 2 aforementioned pending the hearing and determination of this application.

6. Any other further order as to this Honourable Court may seem just.

7. That the costs of this application be costs in the cause."

Mr. Serry Kamal raised a preliminary objection to the hearing of the application on the ground that Counsel for the Applicant had applied to the Court of Appeal under Section 56(1) (b) of the Court's Act and Rule 10 of the Court of Appeal Rules. The appeal was not properly before the Court.

[p.22]

I shall now state the facts as they appear from the papers filed by Counsel for the applicant.

The applicant as the plaintiff in the High Court had obtained judgment in default of Appearance against the Respondent (as defendant) in the High Court. That judgment was set aside by the High Court on the application of the respondent. The applicant then applied to the High Court for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal against the order setting aside the judgment in default of appearance. Leave was refused. An application for leave to appeal was thereafter made to the Court of Appeal. That application was also refused. The applicant lodged an appeal as of right to this Court. It Is on the basis of the purported appeal to this Court that the applications there set out are founded.

As I understand Mr. Serry Kamal's objection, the appeal filed in this Court is improperly before it therefore this Court cannot properly entertain and grant the orders sought. Mr. Halloway's reply was that the judgment of the High Court was final. He consequently had a right to file an appeal without seeking leave to do so.

The perfected order of the High Court is in the following terms:—

1. That the judgment in default of appearance dated the 26th day of January 1987 be set aside.

2. That the plaintiff/respondent restores possession of the premises the subject matter of the application to the defendant/applicant within 21 days

3. That the application for leave to appeal against this order is refused.

[p.23]

4. That the application for stay of execution is refused."

Was the above order final or interlocutory? I desire assistance in answering this question from the judgment of Cotton L J in GILBERT v ENDEAN (1875) 9 Ch D 259 at pp 268, 269. The Learned Lord Justice said:-

"These applications are considered interlocutory which do not decide the rights of the parties, but are made for the purpose of keeping things in status quo till the rights can be decided, or for the purpose of obtaining some direction of the Court as to how the cause is to be conducted, as to what is to be done in the progress of the cause for the purpose of enabling the Court ultimately to decide upon the rights of the parties."

The application made by the defendant was to obtain an opportunity of appearing before the Court in order to enable that Court to decide the rights of the plaintiff and himself in respect of the subject matter of the action. The order granting that application was in my view interlocutory. It did not dispose of the rights of the parties. It endeavoured to preserve the status quo until the rights of the parties were determined.

[p.24]

There should have been an application to this Court for special leave under Rules 7 and 8 of the Rules of this Court against the Order. Had special leave been granted, this Court could have properly entertained an application for a stay of proceedings. The appeal on which the present application is based is a nullity. I would uphold Mr. Serry-Kamal's objection and strike out the application.

RULING

KUTUBU, C.J

This is a reference to the Supreme Court by way of case stated by Wright J under the provisions of Section 104(2) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1978 Act No 12 of 1978 (which I shall hereafter refer to as the Constitution) and Rule 99 of the Supreme Court Rules 1982 Public Notice No 1 of 1982.

[p.26]

This section of the Constitution empowering lower courts to refer matters or questions to the Supreme Court for determination reads as follows:—

"104(1) The Supreme Court shall save as otherwise provided in Sections 18 and 101 of this Constitution have original jurisdiction to the exclusion of all other courts—

(a) in all matters relating to the enforcement or interpretation of any provision of this Constitution and

(b) where any question arises whether an enactment was made in excess of the power conferred upon Parliament or any other authority or person by law or under this Constitution.

(2) Where any question relating to any matter or question as is referred to in the preceding sub-section arises in any proceedings in court, other than the Supreme Court, that court, shall stay the proceedings and refer [p.27] the question of law involved to the Supreme Court for determination; and the court in which the question arose shall dispose of the case in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court."

Rule 99(1) of the Rules of the Supreme Court states:—

"A reference to the court for the determination of any question, cause or matter pursuant to any provision of the Constitution or any other law shall be by way of case stated by the Court below making the reference."

At the Criminal Sessions of the High Court holden at Freetown on the 6th January, 1988 pursuant to Section 136 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1965, Act No 32 of 1965 her Ladyship gave her consent in writing for the preferment of a two count indictment against all the applicants named above, under the Public Economic Emergency Regulations 1987, Public Notice No 25 of 1987 (as amended).

On the 10th February, 1988 Mr. Terry for 2nd applicant, Shamsu Mustapha, formulated several questions for the determination of the Supreme Court pursuant to Section 104 of the Constitution. Mr Eke Halloway Counsel for 5th applicant, Richard Barlay, followed suit. The Director of Public Prosecutions Mr. Tejan-Cole for the State supported the proposed reference to the Supreme Court for determination.

The question of law referred by Wright J to the Supreme Court for determination are as follows:—

"1. In the light of the express mandatory provisions of Section 13(7) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No 12 of 1987 can an accused person or persons inclusive of the 2nd accused person in this matter be tried and held guilty by our courts for an alleged offence or offences under the Public Economic Emergency Regulations Public Notice 25 of 1987 (as amended) in circumstances where the alleged offence or offences were not in existence at the time of the alleged act or acts which constitute the alleged offence or offences against the accused person or persons?

2. Do the provisions of Regulation 59 of the Public Economic Emergency Regulations Public Notice No 25 of 1987 (as amended) expressly or by necessary implication conflict with the express provisions of Section 13(7) and Section 13(9) of the Constitution? If the answer to that question is in the affirmative does that fact render the entire Public Economic Emergency Regulation null and void and ULTRA VIRES the Constitution?

3. On the true and proper construction of Section 125(6) of the Constitution Act No 12 of 1978 can it be said that the procedure followed by the Parliament of Sierra Leone in laying, publishing and bringing the Public Economic Emergency Regulations into full force was in total compliance with the express provisions of Section 125(6) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone?

4. Does Section 19 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No 12 of 1978 expressly contemplate or provide for a declaration by His Excellency the President of a State of Public Economic Emergency or for a state of Public Emergency on a true and proper construction of the said Section 19 of the Constitution?

5. Does Section 19 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone contemplate or provide for the passing of resolution by Parliament for the purpose of declaring a State of Public Economic Emergency or a resolution declaring a State of Public Emergency?

6. In the light of Section 19 of the Constitution Act No 12 of 1978 can Parliament pass a resolution which has the effect of approving the proclamation of the State of Public Emergency declared by the President on the 2nd day of November, 1987?

7. In the light of questions 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 posed supra can a provision in a regulation to wit regulation 59 of the Public Economic Emergency Regulations Public Notice 25 of 1987 render express constitutional provisions to wit Section 13(7) and Section 13(9) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No 12 of 1978 in operative notwithstanding the fact that the said regulations expost facto create crimes and punishments and destroy fair safeguards to the 2nd accused person and other accused persons as guaranteed under the Constitution?

8. In the light of questions 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 supra can our courts and in particular this court be said to be vested with jurisdiction to try and pronounce the 2nd accused person guilty of offence or offences contrary to the [p.31] express provisions of Sections 13(7) and 13(9) of the Constitution having regard to the peculiar circumstances of this case?

9. Whether the 5th accused in particular could be convicted of offences against the Public Economic Emergency Regulations 1987 (as amended) in respect of things done by him before the regulations aforesaid came into force and in particular offences against Regulation 40(a) of the Public Economic Emergency Regulations (as amended) and Regulation 44 of the Public Economic Emergency (as amended)

10. Whether the Public Economic Emergency (as amended) is not ultra vires the Constitution and therefore rendered a nullity/nugatory for non-compliance with Section 125(6) and particularly (c) of sub-section 6 of Section 125.

11. Whether Section 125(6) is mandatory or directive. If mandatory whether the exercise of the powers conferred on the President and Minister of Defence under Section 19 sub-3ection 4 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone exercised [p.32] in non-compliance of Section 125 sub- section 6(c) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone render the exercise of that power valid or of any legality under the laws of the Republic.

Mr Terry submitted eight of the eleven questions, namely, questions 1-8 inclusive, while Mr Halloway submitted three questions, namely, questions 9-11 inclusive. Wright J thought it necessary to refer the aforesaid questions to the Supreme Court for determination as she considered their answers necessary for the continuation of the proceedings before her.

Mr Terry made several submissions in the course of his arguments before this court, based among others, on excess of jurisdiction, infringement of the fundamental rights and freedoms of the applicants, in particular, the 2nd applicant, under the Constitution, and also forcefully impugned the constitutional validity of the Proclamation dated 2nd November, 1987 declaring a state of Public Economic Emergency in the Republic by the President, and the Public Economic Emergency Regulations, 1987 Public Notice No 25 of 1987, made pursuant to the Proclamation. Mr Terry maintained that they did not conform with the manner, language and express provisions of the consti- tution which rendered them ultra vires and void.

Mr. Terry referred to the provisions of Section 19 of the Constitution and submitted that both the Proclamation and the Regulations made thereunder, were invalid and ultra vires the Constitution by reason of the introduction or importation, as he put it, of the word, "Economic", in both the Proclamation and the Regulations. In his view both the Proclamation and the Regulations would have been within the intendment and spirit of the Constitution if they had been titled "Public Emergency" and "Public Emergency Regulations" simpliciter, and no further. Such addition or importation proved fatal, he maintained.

The Proclamation referred to was in the following terms:—

PUBLIC NOTICE

PUBLIC NOTICE NO 24 OF 1987

Published 2nd November, 1987 PROCLAMATION

UNDER SECTION 19 OF THE CONSTITUTION OF SIERRA LEONE 1978 (Act No 12 of 1978)

By His Excellency

Major General Dr Joseph Saidu Momoh, President of the Republic of Sierra Leone, Supreme Head of State, Grand Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces, Fountain Head of Unity, Honour, Freedom and Justice.

LS

JOSEPH SAIDU MOMOH

PRESIDENT

[p.34]

WHEREAS paragraph (b) of Sub-Section (1) of Section 19 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, 1978, provides that whenever a period of public emergency shall commence, the President may, at any time, by Proclamation declare that a situation exists which, if it is allowed to continue, may lead to a state of public emergency in any part of or in the whole of Sierra Leone:

AND WHEREAS it appears to the President that a situation of economic crisis exists which, if it is allowed to continue may lead to a state of public emergency throughout Sierra Leone:

NOW THEREFORE, I JOSEPH SAIDU MOMOH, President of the Republic, Supreme Head of State, Grand Commander of the Order of the Republic, Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces, Fountain Head of Unity, Honour, Freedom and Justice, DO HEREBY by this Proclamation declare a state of Public Economic Emergency in the Republic, as from the publication hereof.

Given under my hand and the Public Seal of the State of Sierra Leone at the State House Freetown, this 2nd day of November, in the Year of Our Lord One Thousand Nine Hundred and Eighty Seven.

LONG LIVE THE STATE OF SIERRA LEONE

The Proclamation itself embraces Section 19(1)(a) and (b) of the Constitution which reads as follows:—

"Section 19(1) whenever a period of public emergency shall commence, the President may at any time, by [p.35] Proclamation which shall be published in the Gazette, declare that

(a) a state of public emergency exists either in any part or in the whole of Sierra Leone;

(b) a situation exists which, if it is allowed to continue may lead to a state of public emergency in any part of or the whole of Sierra Leone."

As I see it, the thrust and pivot of the arguments of Counsel on the respective questions submitted to this court rest with the following main questions:—

(1) Whether the use of the word "Economic", used in the Proclamation and the Regulations is outside the scope of Section 19 of the Constitution;

(2) On the assumption that the Public Economic Emergency Regulations are regular and therefore valid, whether they did not lapse after a period of ninety days thereby nullifying their effect by virtue of Section 19 of the Constitution;

[p.36]

(3) Whether the Public Economic Emergency Regulations do not conflict with the provisions of Section 13(7) and 13(9) of the Constitution, and in particular, the effect of Regulation 59 of the Public Economic Emergency Regulations on the fundamental Human Rights provisions of the Constitution having, regard to its ex post facto or retroactive nature;

(4) Whether the way and manner of bringing the Public Economic Emergency Regulations, Public Notice No 25 of 1987 (as amended) into operation, was not in conformity with Section 125 (6) of the Constitution and therefore rendered void and ultra vires the Constitution.

In answering these questions while it may well be useful to look for guidance and inspiration elsewhere, in particular, from the practice of other Commonwealth jurisdictions, it is in the end the wording of the Constitution itself, that is to be interpreted and applied. In short, the answers to these questions are to be gathered from the four corners of the Constitution.

The far-reaching source of Emergency Declaration for the determination of the questions before us is the Constitution. Section 19, empowers the President by proclamation to declare a state of public emergency.

[p.37]

It provides as follows:—

"Section 19 (1) whenever a period of public emergency shall commence, the President may at any time, by Proclamation which shall be published in the Gazette, declare that —

(a) a state of public emergency exists either in any part, or in the whole of Sierra Leone; or

(b) a situation exists which if it is allowed to continue may lead to a state of public emergency in any part of or the whole of Sierra Leone.

(2) Every declaration made under sub-section (1) of this Section shall lapse—

(a) in the case of a declaration made when Parliament is sitting at the expiration of a period of fourteen days beginning with the date of publication of the declaration, and

[p.38]

(b) in any other case, at the expiration of a period of ninety days beginning with the date of publication of the declaration.

Unless it has in the meantime been approved by or superseded by a Resolution of Parliament supported by the votes of two-thirds of the Members of Parliament.

Section 19(4) of the Constitution empowers the President to make Regulations pursuant to a proclamation of a state of public emergency and it reads:—

"During a period of public emergency the President may make such Regulations and take such measures as appear to him to be necessary or expedient for the purposes of maintaining and securing peace, order and good government in Sierra Leone or any part thereof."

Section 19(5)(d) states:

"Without prejudice to the generality of the powers conferred by sub-section (4) of this Section and notwithstanding the provisions of this Chapter the Regulations or measures may, so far as appears to the President to be necessary or expedient for any of the purposes mentioned in that sub-section—

[p.39]

(d) amend any law, suspend the operation of any law and apply any law with or without modification;

Provided that such amendment, suspension or modification shall not apply to this Constitution.

Section 19(1) does not state what is "public emergency. I therefore look for assistance in Section 156 of the Constitution which defines public emergency as follows:—

"Public Emergency" means any period during which—

(a) Sierra Leone is at war, or

(b) there is in force a proclamation issued by the President under sub-section (1) of Section 19 , or

(c) there is in force a Resolution of Parliament made under sub-section (2) of Section 16 of this Constitution.

The present state of public emergency came into being by Presidential Proclamation under Section 19(1)(b) of the Constitution that is the position referred to under Section 156(b) of the Constitution. Under the Constitution, the power of the President to declare by proclamation that a state of public emergency exists or a situation" exists which may lead to a state of public emergency is in his absolute and unfettered discretion subject only to the provisi6ns of sub-section (2) of Section 19 supra.

Section 19(1)(b) also does not define "a situation".

This could be wide-ranging and encompasses a multiplicity of situations ad infinitim. It lies in the sole power and discretion of the President to determine a situation, which at any given time in his estimation, deserves a declaration by Proclamation of a state of public emergency. The exercise of this power is unquestionable and unchallengeable. The situation could be described as "Economic" "Political" —"National Disaster", and like situations, too numerous to mention here. Indeed, they are many and varied.

The President, in his Proclamation of 2nd November, 1987 Public Notice No 24 of 1987, expressly referred to the existence of a situation of "economic crises" in the country, Which if allowed continuing may lead to a state of public emergency in part or in the whole of Sierra Leone. Once the decision to declare a state of public emergency vests in the President in relation to a situation of which he is the sole determinant, his characterization of any such situation, which I regard as purely descriptive cannot derogate from the force and authority of Section 19 of the Constitution which is the "fons et origo" of the Presidents emergency powers.

It was therefore proper and correct, legitimate and constitutional for the President to characterise both the Proclamation, Public No 24 of 1987 and the Regulations, Public Notice No 25 of 1987 (as amended) in the manner and style he did, namely, “Public Economic Emergency” and [p.41] “Public Economic Emergency Regulations”. Alternatively, it would have also been proper for the President to entitle both the Proclamation and the Regulations as “Public Emergency (Economic) and Public Emergency Regulations” (Economic). Both the Proclamation and the Public Economic Emergency Regulations are accordingly within the scope of Section 19 of the Constitution.

The question which follows this finding is, - on the assumption that the' Public Economic Emergency Regulations are regular and therefore valid, whether they did not lapse after a period of ninety days thereby nullifying their effect by virtue of Section 19 of the Constitution.

The answer to this question is, no. The position is saved by the provision of Section 18 (1) (e) of the Interpretation Act, 1971 Act No 8 of 1971 which reads as follows:—

Section 18(1) (e) The repeal or revocation of an Act, unless a contrary intention appears, shall not—

(e) affect any investigation legal proceedings or remedy in respect of any such right, privilege, obligation, liability, penalty, forfeiture or punishment and any such investigation, legal proceedings or remedy may be instituted, continued or enforced and any such penalty forfeiture or punishment may be imposed as if the Act had not been repealed.

[p.42]

Also Section 18(2) When an Act expires, lapses or otherwise ceases to have effect this section shall apply as if the Act had been repealed or revoked.

The next question for consideration is whether the Public Economic Emergency Regulations 1987 Public Notice No 25, 1987 (as amended) do not conflict with 'the provisions of Section 13(7) and 13(9) of the Constitution, and in particular the effect of Regulation 59 of the Public Economic Regulations on the fundamental Human Rights provisions of the Constitution having regard to its ex post facto or retroactive nature.

Before embarking on an answer to this question, I consider it pertinent to state in brief, the constitutional provisions in this country in regard to the fundamental rights and freedoms of the individual as by law established. Suffice it to say that the Constitution provides adequate guarantees for the fundamental rights and freedoms of the individual subject to certain safeguards. In this regard, Section 5 of Chapter 11 of the Constitution provides as follows:—

“Whereas every person in Sierra Leone is entitled to the fundamental rights and freedoms of the individual, that is to say, has the right, whatever his race, tribe, place of origin, colour, creed or sex but subject to respect for the rights and freedoms of others and of the [p.43] Recognised Party, and for the public interest, to each and all of the following:—

(a) life, liberty, security of the person, the enjoyment of property and the protection of the law;

(b) freedom of conscience, of expression, of assembly and association;

(c) respect for his private and family life;

the subsequent provisions of this Chapter shall have effect for the purpose of affording protection to the aforesaid rights and freedoms, subject to such limitations of that protection as are contained in those provisions being limitations designed to ensure the enjoyment of the said rights and freedoms by any individual does not prejudice the rights and freedoms of others, or of the public or of the national well-being".

In short, our enjoyment of or rights to the enjoyment of such rights and freedoms as are guaranteed by the Constitution, are neither absolute nor unlimited in scope, but relative and restrictive in all its aspects. In protecting fundamental rights, the court as the guardian of the Constitution has been described as being "in the role of a sentinel on the qui vive". It protects the individual against violations of his constitutional or legal rights or misuse or abuse of power by the State of its officers.

[p.44]

In the same vein, it is the duty of the court to seek to protect the State against anti-social, disruptive conduct, by individuals or groups of persons whose purpose is to disturb the peace and good order of society or threaten the economic life of the nation. From this vantage point, the court holds the balance between the ordinary citizens inter se and the citizens on the one hand and the state on the other.

To that extent, our fundamental rights and freedoms are not only limited in scope, but circumscribed and controlled, in the interest of an orderly society under the sovereignty of the law.

Emergency situations connote abnormality, and curtailment of our rights and freedoms. This is an emergency, which empowers the President to take measures as he sees fit or necessary to control and contain a crisis situation.

In the words of Rodrigo J. in Visuvalingam & Ors v Liyanage & Ors, Supreme Court of Sri Lanka, Law Reports of the Commonwealth, 1985 Pp. 919-922 (which I adopt), "Emergency Regulations are laws to which the fundamental rights constitutionally have to give way; They take a back seat to the extent the Emergency Regulations take the front seat. There is no room for both in the front seat." An emergency is what the word means".

Coming back to the question which was posed, I find it necessary and appropriate to look at the provisions of Section 13(7) and 13(9) which falls under the Fundamental [p.45] Human Rights provisions of the Constitution. I shall in turn consider the provisions of Regulation 59 of the Public Economic Emergency Regulations, Public Notice No 25 of 1987 (as amended).

Section 13(7) provides as follows:—

"No person shall be held to be guilty of a criminal offence on account of any act or omission which did not at the time it took place, constitute such an offence and no penalty shall be imposed for any criminal offence which is severer in degree or description than the maximum penalty which might have been imposed for that offence at the time it was committed."

Section 13(9) states:—

"Nothing contained in or done under the authority of any law shall be held to be inconsistent with or in contravention of any provisions of this Section other than (7) to the extent that the law in question authorises the talking during a period of public emergency of measures that are reasonably justifiable for the purpose of dealing with the situation that exists before or during that p8riod of public emergency."

[p.46]

Regulation 59 of the Public Economic Emergency Regulations provides as follows:—

"Where on the coming into force of the regulations, any investigation or case relating to the subject matter of the offences specified in these regulations is pending all the provisions of these Regulations shall apply in the determination of that investigation or case."

The applicants are charged with the offence of obtaining by false pretences, and also, conspiracy under Regulations 40(a) and 44 of the Public Economic Emergency Regulations. It is trite law to mention that in our criminal procedure, an accused person is deemed to be innocent until his guilt is proved beyond reasonable doubt. Be that as it may, Section 13(4) of the Constitution provides that—

"Every person who is charged with a criminal offence shall be presumed to be innocent until he is proved, or has pleaded guilty:

Provided that nothing contained in or done under the authority of any law shall be held to be inconsistent with or in contravention of this sub-section, to the extent that the law in question imposes on any person charged as aforesaid the burden of proving particular facts.

[p.47]

Mr. Tejan-Cole, Director of Prosecutions, for the State, urged on us, that contrary to the submissions of Counsel for applicants, the offences complained of were not new to the criminal law of this country, and submitted with force, that they were in existence at the time the consent order was sought and obtained on 6th January, 1988 for the preferment of an indictment against, applicants in the High Court.

I have looked at the charges preferred under Regulations 40(a) and 44 of the Public Economic Emergency Regulations. On reflection, I cannot but agree with the submission of the Learned Director of Public Prosecutions that these offences existed at the time the consent order was sought and obtained and that they are still part and parcel of the criminal law c this country. I can find no legal Justification in support of the submissions of Counsel for applicants on this question I hold that the charges are correct, valid and 'properly laid.

Looking at the provisions of Section 13(7) of the Constitution it is apparent from the wording of Section 13(9) that it was intended to save Section 13(7). Regrettably, it failed in this, in the light of Section 19(11) of the Constitution which provides as follows:—

"Every Regulation made under this Section and every Order or Rule made in pursuance of such a Regulation shall have effect notwithstanding anything inconsistent therewith contained in any law; and any provisions of a law which is inconsistent [p.48] with any such Regulation, Order or Rule shall, whether that provision has or has not been amended, modified or suspended in its operation under any Act, cease to have effect to the extent that such Regulation, Order or Rule remains in force."

The Constitution tells us what comprises the laws of Sierra Leone. Section 125 of the Constitution provides as follows:—

Section 125(1) The laws of Sierra Leone shall comprise—

(a) this Constitution;

(b) enactments made by or under the authority of the Parliament established by this., Constitution;

(c) any Orders, Rules and Regulations made by any person or authority pursuant to a power conferred in that behalf by this Constitution or any other law;

(d) the existing law; and

(e) the common law.

[p.49]

Section 3(1) of the Interpretation Act No 8 of 1971 refers to an Act, and states inter alia, that "Act" or "Act of Parliament includes any Act, and any order, proclamation, rule, regulation or bye-law duly made under the authority of an Act.

The second part of Section 19(11) of the Constitution after the semi-colon7 speaks of "any provision of a law which is inconsistent with any such Regulation, Order or Rule (Emphasis mine).

In my view, to all intents and purposes, reference to "a law" in this context includes the Constitution in addition to other laws.

A fortiori, having regard to the existence of a state of public emergency, the provisions of Section 13(7), 13(9) and 19(5) are suspended during the currency of the emergency.

These provisions in my view are not sacrosanct and inviolate, but must give way in an emergency, a crisis situation, in the interest, among others, of the public and of the national well-being.

Now, as regards the question whether or not Regulation 59 of the Public Economic Emergency Regulations can operate retroactively, Counsel for applicants submitted that it cannot, on the ground that the language is not clear and precise enough to convey that intention. I disagree.

It is a cardinal rule of construction that a statute should be prospective and not retrospective, unless its language is such as plainly to require such a construction.

[p.50]

The question in each case, is whether the legislature has sufficiently expressed that intention and this can be discovered by looking to the general scope and purview of the statute and at the remedy sought to be applied. If a statute is passed for the purpose of protecting the public and also individuals it may be allowed to operate retrospectively even though it causes hardship and injustice.

When I look at the language of Regulation 59, I come to the conclusion that it is perfectly clear and unambiguous to convey the intention of retroactive operation, and I so hold. The provisions of Sections 18(1) (e) and 18(2) of the Interpretation Act No 8 of 1971 referred to supra apply accordingly.

The last question in my resume of questions for consideration is whether or not the way and manner of bringing the Public Economic Emergency Regulations, Public Notice No 25 of 1987 (as amended) into - force was in conformity with Section 125(6) of the Constitution.

Counsel for applicants with much persuasion urged on us that the provisions of Section 125(6) are mandatory and that the President has no powers to abridge time, that is to say, to act contrary to the provisions of Section 125(6)(c), requiring any Orders, Rules or Regulations to be laid before Parliament for twenty-one days before they become operational. That the non-compliance of the provisions of Section 125(6) rendered the Public Economic Emergency Regulations void and ultra vires the Constitution.

Section 125(6) of the Constitution referred to supra provides as follows:—

“Any Orders, Rules or Regulations made by any person or authority pursuant to a power conferred in that behalf by this Constitution or any other law—

(a) shall be laid before Parliament;

(b) shall be published in the Gazette on or before the day they are so laid before Parliament;

(c) shall come into force at the expiration of a period of twenty-one days of being so laid unless Parliament before the expiration of twenty-one days annuls any such Orders Rules Regulations by the votes of not less than two-thirds of the members of Parliament.

Section 19(4) empowers the President to make Regulations pursuant to the declaration of a state of public emergency. The state of public emergency was declared on 2nd November, 1987 and the Emergency Regulations came into operation on 5th November, 1987, far short of the twenty-one days contemplated by Section 125(6) (c) of the Constitution.

Indeed, there is a conflict between the provisions of Section 19 (4) and Section 125 (6) of the Constitution, but it does not end there. While Section 125(6) is a general [p.52] provision Section 19(4) is a specific provision. Where a Section of an Act dealing with general provisions conflicts with another Section dealing with specific provisions, as in the instant case, the specific provisions shall prevail over the general provisions. Even though Section 125(6) is a later provision, it makes no difference where the earlier provisions, that is, section 19(4) are specific in their application.

Suffice it to say that while Section 19 of the Constitution contemplates an emergency, Section 125(6) envisages a situation calling for the due observance of the doctrine of Parliamentary sovereignty; that is to say, all Orders, Rules or Regulations made by any person pursuant to the Constitution shall without more be subject to Parliamentary control by being required to lay before Parliament, publish in the Gazette on or before laying, and shall become operational on the expiration of twenty-one days of being so laid unless Parliament sooner annuls by two-thirds votes of the Members.

I would answer the eleven questions submitted to this Court as follows:—

Questions — 1. The offences complained of were in existence

2. The answer to this question is in the negative. No conflict.

The subsidiary question is unnecessary.

[p.53]

3. There is no material before us to answer question No.3

4. Section 19 provides for a declaration of a state of public emergency which expression embraces a multitude of situations which can be descriptive of the type of public emergency.

5. No material having been furnished about a Resolution by Parliament under the proviso to Section 19(4,) of the Constitution, the question becomes hypothetical and an answer therefore becomes unnecessary.

6. No material having been furnished to this court, the question becomes unnecessary.

7. Regulation 59 does not create an offence. Assuming that the reference to the said regulation was intended to mean the entire' body regulations, the answer is yes.

8. The courts have jurisdiction. The offences set out in Regulations 40(a) and 44 are not contrary to the provisions of Sections 13(7) [p.54] and 13(9) of the Constitution having regard to the peculiar circumstances of this case.

9. The answer to question 9 is yes.

10. The answer to question 10 is no.

11. The question posed under 11 is academic.

Decision accordingly.

JUDGMENT

BECCLES DAVIES AG. C.J.:

This is an application for an Order of certiorari to remove the indictment preferred against Lance Corporal SIA/18166316 Corporal Sidique Sallu Jah and Lance Corporal 18163974 Alghassim Jah and all proceedings subsequent thereto at the Republic of Sierra Leone Military Forces Court Martial Holden at Freetown and the ruling of the Honourable Mr. Justice E.A. Thomas, Judge Advocate, before the said Court Martial dated the 16th day of August 1993 ... for the same to be quashed, and that the entire proceedings including the conviction and sentence be set aside.

This application is made on behalf of Lance Corporal Alghassim Jah who was tried and convicted on the following indictment:—

[p.205]

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE:

Committing a Civil Offence that is to say Robbery with Aggravation, contrary to Section 23 (1) (a) of the Larceny Act 1916 (as amended)

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE

SLA/18163974 Lance Corporal Alghassim Jah and SLA/18166316 Lance Corporal Sidique Sallu Jah soldiers of the Republic of Sierra Leone Military Forces being subject to Military Law under the Republic of Sierra Leone Military Forces Act. 1961 (as amended) on Sunday the 18th day of April, 1993 at Murraytown Freetown in the Western Area of the Republic of Sierra Leone being together robbed Berthan Macualey (Jnr.) of a car (Mercedes Benz 190E) registration No. SB 333 with its contents; that is to say one spare tyre with rim, two Ray Ban sunglasses and one radio cassette player of the value of Le8,209,000.00.

STATE COUNSEL

The applicant seeks relief on the following grounds.

1. The applicant being subject to military law, was charged with a criminal offence under the general criminal law and prosecuted before a military court-martial.

2. The applicant on being subject to military law was charged on an indictment which was signed by a State Counsel and tried before a military Court-martial.

3. The applicant being subject to military law was charged on an indictment before a military [p.206] court-martial which did not comply with military law"

Can this court grant the application? It is made under the provision of Section 125 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991 ("The Constitution") which provides—

"125 The Supreme Court shall have supervisory jurisdiction over all other Courts in Sierra Leone and over any adjudicating authority; and in exercise of its supervisory jurisdiction shall have power to issue such directions, orders or writs including writs of habeas corpus, orders of certiorari, mandamus and prohibition as it may consider appropriate for the purpose of enforcing and securing the enforcement of its supervisory powers."

The Court-martial in which the applicant was tried has its foundation in the Republic of Sierra Leone Military Forces Act 1961. It is part of the "the existing law" of Sierra Leone which is defined in Section 170 (4) of the Constitution as comprising

"..... the written and unwritten laws of Sierra Leone as they existed immediately before the date of the coming into force of this Constitution and any statutory instrument issued or made before that date which is to come into force on or after that date."

The effect of the existing law after the commencement of "the Constitution" is set out in subsection (5) of Section 170 thus

"(5) subject to the provisions of this section the operation of the existing laws shall not be affected by such commencement; and accordingly the existing law shall be construed with such modifications, adaptations, qualifications and exceptions as [p.207] may be necessary to bring it into conformity with the provisions of this Constitution or otherwise to give effect to or enable effect to be given to any changes effected by this Constitution." [Emphasis mine]

The provisions of the Republic of Sierra Leone Military Forces Act 1961 therefore continue to be operative after the commencement of "the Constitution."

Under the law of England, there is a right of appeal to the Court of Appeal in addition to that of applying for the writs of habeas corpus and orders of mandamus, certiorari and prohibition. A similar situation existed in the law of Sierra Leone until 15th April 1971. See 129 of the Sierra Leone Military Forces Act 1961 ("the principal Act") which was operative until its subsequent repeal had contained the following provisions—

"129 Subject to the following provisions of this part, an appeal shall lie from decisions of a court-martial to the Court of Appeal with the leave of that Court."

Provided that an appeal as aforesaid shall be as of its right without leave from any decision of a court-martial involving a sentence of death.

The "Part" (Part VI) referred to in Section 129 spans Sections 129 to 147.

It deals with the right of appeal and procedure in appeals from courts-martial.

Section 6 of the Republic of Sierra Leone Military Forces (Amendment) Act 1971 ('the amending Act') which became operative on 16 April 1971, repealed Part VI of the [p.208] principal Act thereby extinguishing the right of appeal to the Court of Appeal.

Section 5 of the "the amending Act" brought into existence a new section 129. It reads —

"The principal now is hereby amended by the insertion of the following new section immediately after section 128 thereof—

129. The decisions of a court-martial shall not be questioned in any court of law."

The marginal note to that new sections states:—

"No appeal from decisions of Courts-martial".

I find Section 129 to be much wider in scope than its portrayal by the marginal note.

The language of the section is clear and unambiguous; it forbids any excursion in any form whatsoever, to any court for the purpose of examining decisions of courts-martial.

This application therefore in the light of the above provision cannot be entertained by this Court or any other Court. It is therefore dismissed.

RULING

C.J.

This is an application on behalf of the appellant bail pending the determination of his appeal and three other Orders as stated in the Notice of Motion dated 9th July 2001.

The application is supported by the two affidavit of the appellant to on the 9th day of July 2001 and the exhibits attached thereto marked MOTD and that sworn to on the 16th day of July 2001 and also the affidavit of Ayo M Dixon sworn to on the 10th July 2001.

The applicant was in the High Court presided over by Justice Patricia Macaulay charged and convicted of offences of corruption contrary to Sec 7(1) 8(1) of the Anti-Corruption Act No. 1 of 2000 and on 22nd day of June 2001 sentence on Counts 1, 2, 5 and 6 to a term of 1 year imprisonment concurrently and on Counts 3, 4, 7 and 8 was fined the sum of Le30,000.000 or 6 months imprisonment. Both sentences to run concurrently.

By Notice of Motion dated the 26th June 2001 the appellant applied to the Court of Appeal for bail pending the determination o£ his appeal to that Honour Court. And by a Ruling delivered on the 5th day of July 2001 the following ord were made:—

[p.434]

"Application for bail pending the determination of the applicant's appeal is disallowed. The Registrar of the Court of Appeal to prepare the Records of Appeal in the Criminal Appeal herein within 21 days of this Order and that the said appeal be entered for hearing out of its Order in the Registrar of Appeals".

GIVEN under my hand and seal of the Court this 5th day of July, 2001.

Registrar Court of Appeal.

The appellant now applies to this Court for bail to be granted pending the determination of his appeal before the Court of Appeal and for the Order of the Court of Appeal dated the 5th day of July in Mis. App. 15/2001. The State Respondent as----- Justice M.O. Taju-Deen — Applicant be revoked and/or varied.

Bail will not be granted pending the hearing of an appeal unless the applicant shows. To this end Terence Terry, Counsel for the applicant sought to rely on the---- affidavits filed and on various authorities cited:—

(1) FRANKLYN BUNTING-DA VIES VS. REV. J.E. HARRIS — CR APP. 26/84.

(2) ZOUZOUKO DEGUI VS. THE STATE - CR. APP. 28/80

(8) AKRONG & ANOR vs. THE REPUBLIC — 1972 (2) G.L.R. 244

(9) REX. vs. TREOPHILUS ADENUGA TUNWASHE - VOLUME 1

Counsel argued forcefully that the complexity of the case, the impossibility of the applicant's appeal being heard before the completion of his sentence or a substantial part thereof, the desirability of having full opportunities of consulting with his legal advisers, his advanced age and the precarious state of his health;

the fact that the applicant had been acquitted on four of the original twelve counts charged; and was most likely to succeed in his appeal all constitute special and exceptional circumstances for XXX to enable the Court to grant bail pending the appeal Mr. Kebbie, Director of Public Prosecution on behalf of the Respondent likewise relied on the affidavit of Manfred Momoh Sesay and forcefully urged upon the Court that no special circumstances had been shown to warrant granting bail in this particular case and that in view of the Order of the Court of Appeal dated 5th July 2001 there would be no delay as alleged; and that there was no substance in any of the allegation relied upon by the applicant, and the authorities cited were irrelevant.

As I am satisfied that the aforesaid Order of the Court of Appeal affords the appellant an early opportunity for a full hearing of all the matters in contention herein I do not deem it necessary to make any other determination now.

Having read all the documents filed herein and having listened to the learned Counsel on both sides and taking all the circumstances of the case into consideration, I am of the view that justice to all concerned would best be served by the hearing and determination of the said appeal as soon as possible.

[p.436]

In this regard it is my view that the Court of Appeal did not err in law or otherwise in ordering that the records be prepared within 21 days Applicant’s Counsel argued that the Court of Appeal's Order that “the said appeal be entered for hearing out of its order in the Register of Appeals" did not necessarily mean it would be heard expeditiously. To clarify any doubts I confirm the Order of the Court of Appeal in its entirety — and I further order that the said appeal be entered for hearing within seven days of the preparation of the said Records of appeal.

I therefore order as follows:—

1. The appellant's application to this Court that bail be granted pending the determination of his appeal is refused.

2. That the Order of the Court of Appeal dated the 5th day of July 2001 in Mis. App. 15/2001 that:—

"Application for bail pending determination of the applicant's appeal is disallowed. The Registrar of the Court of Appeal do prepare the Records of appeal in the Criminal Appeal herein within 21 days of this Order and that the said appeal be entered for hearing out of its order in the Register of Appeals".

Is upheld.

3. That the said appeal be entered for hearing within seven days of the preparation of the said Records of Appeal.

RULING

JOKO SMART JSC

This is a Motion for LEAVE to apply for orders of certiorari mandamus and prohibition and related or consequential orders or directions in respect of the ruling given on 11th October 1999 by the Honorable Mr. Justice M.O. Taju-Deen (High Court Judge) in proceedings on a criminal information dated 30th August 1999 and for an order of stay of proceedings founded on the Criminal Information dated 30th August 1999 pending in the High Court until determination by the Supreme Court of the substantive application for which leave is granted, if and when so granted, and for such other or further orders and directions as this honourable Court may deem fit.

When the Motion came up for hearing for the first time on the 21st October 1999 the Court drew the attention of Counsel for the Applicants that the Honourable Mr. Justice M.O. Taju-Deen (Judge) has been joined in the matter as Respondent and invited Dr . Jabbi to address the Court on the legality of doing so having regard to s. 120(9) of the Constitution which provides:

'A Judge of Superior Court of Judicature shall not be liable to an action or suit for any matter or thing done by him in the performance of his judicial actions'.

Dr. Jabbi vigorously argued that a judge can properly be made a party in an action at any rate in certiorari, mandamus and prohibition proceedings and he rested his argument on the following premises.

Firstly, that in the matter:

'MISC.APP. NO. 6/93 A&B

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF SIERRA LEONE

BETWEEN:

THE STATE - APPLICANT

AND

HON. MR. JUSTICE F.C.GBOW, JUDGE - RESONDENT

EX PARTE JULIUS SPENCER & ORS - APPLICANTS

a similar format was used in an application before this Court sitting in banc and no objection was raised and the Court went on to rule on the remedies sought.

Secondly, that s.120(9) of the Constitution is applicable only in an action or suit in which a judge is sued personally for wrongs committed by him while performing judicial functions.

Thirdly, that even if the joining of a judge in the matter before the Court is wrongful it is an irregularity and a mere technicality which can be cured by the Court in the exercise of its discretion and allow the case to proceed in a constitutional matter of great importance and where time is of the essence.

In support of his contentions Dr. Jabbi cited passages from Noordally v. Attorney-General [1987] LRC (Const.) 599, 606; Ali v. Teaching Service Commission [1993] 3LRC 225, 229-230; Jaundou v. Attorney-General [1971] 3 WLR 13 and All Peoples' Congress v. Nasmos & Ministry of Social Welfare, Youth and Sports S.C No. 4/96 decided by this Court on 26 October 1999. After a careful analysis of these cases, I dare say, none of the propositions relied upon is relevant to the main issue herein. i.e. whether a judge in our jurisdiction can properly be made a party to an action of any sort based on allegations made against him while performing his judicial function.

With respect to Dr. Jabbi's first contention, this Court has the power to depart from a previous decision of, its own when it appears right to do so. See s. 122(2) of the Constitution. In my view, in the Spencer's case tile attention of the Court 'was presumably not adverted to the fact that the judge was made a party to the action and the matter proceeded under the mistaken premise that it was right to do so. The case cannot therefore be regarded as a precedent which this Court now sitting can follow. To do so will be in clear contravention of the Constitution.

So far as the second contention is concerned. I disagree with Counsel that the phrase shall not be liable in s. 120(9) of the Constitution is limited to actions in which the judge is sued personally for wrongs committed by him in the performance of his judicial function. If a judge is made a party to any action he is open to liability of any sort and that liability imports a duty resting on him for which he is answerable in law. I opine that if a judge is joined in any proceeding he is exposed to all the incidents and consequences of litigation. Thus he can be compelled to attend to answer allegations made against him and can also be amenable to the payment of cost in this respect, I do not regard the joining of a judge as party to an action to be a mere technicality. Why should he made a party in certiorari proceedings? Is it not sufficient for clarity and identification if the judge's order or ruling which is challenged is cited in the title of the action a thing which I observe has been done in this before us and in Spencer's case.

In answer to the third submission, it is my considered view that making a judge a party to an action as such cannot be an irregularity. It is a nullity over which the Court cannot exercise its discretion. The [p.271] fact that the application deals with a Constitutional issue makes the situation even worse in that the Court is being urged to exercise its discretion in a matter in which a provision of the Constitution has been infringed. Our Constitution preserves the integrity of judges and any move to undermine it cannot be treated lightly. This integrity is eloquently articulated in s. 120(9) of the Constitution and in the judicial oath in the second schedule of the Constitution "whereby a judge swears inter alia, to do right to all manner of people after the laws and usages of the land without fear or favour, affection or ill will. This is the reason why judges are invested with immunity from actions. Dr. Jabbi informed the Court that there are other jurisdictions in which judges are made parties to similar actions before us. He was requested to provide authorities to substantiate this statement and all that he produced were the authorities which I have herein-before mentioned which I hold do not support that allegation. If for any reason judges in at her jurisdictions can be made parties to proceedings touching and affecting their judicial functions, our own Constitution forbids it.

I will therefore dismiss the Motion.

S.C.E.WARNE, JSC

The application before this Court is contained in a Notice of Motion for certain reliefs; inter alia:

(1) Leave to apply for Orders of certiorari, mandamus and prohibition and related or consequentional orders or directions in respect of the ruling given on 11th October, 1999 at 10.00 hours by the Learned Judge in proceedings on the criminal information dated 30th August, 1999.

(2) An Order of Stay of Proceedings founded on Criminal Information dated 30th August, 1999 at present pending in the High Court until determination of the substantive application for which leave is granted herein, if and when so granted".

The Motion is supported by an affidavit sworn to By Bu-Buakai Jabbi on the 18th day of October, 1999."

Before the Motion could be heard Counsel sought an amendment to certain Acts of the motion which was granted.

Counsel urged the court to entertain the application inspite of the defect in the title of the cause, which on the face referred to The Hon. Mr. Justice M.O. Taju-Deen as Respondent. The title again stated that the State and Dr. Harry Will are both applicants.

On the face of the motion paper counsel avers that the affidavit herein is made pursuant to Order 59. Rule 3(2) of the (English) Supreme Court Rules 1960.

Among the other papers filed by counsel was a Statement Pursuant [p.273] to Rule 98 of the Supreme Court Rules 1982 and Rule 3 Order 52 of the High Court Rules (Sierra Leone) and Rule 3(2) of Order 59 of (English) Supreme Court Rules 1960.

The statement reads, inter alia:—

"IN THE SUPREME COURT OF SIERRA LEONE"

In the matter of an application by Dr. Harry Will under Section 125 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.6 of 1991 for leave to Apply for Orders of Certiorari Mandamus and Prohibition and for related declaration and other ancillary or consequential orders and directions.

In the matter of a Ruling given and 11th day of October 1999 by the Honourable Mr. Justice M.O. Taju-Deen (High Court Judge) in the Criminal Information dated 30th August, 1999 filed in the High Court of Sierra. Leone Holden at Freetown and entitled "The state vs. Dr. Harry Will, Lamin Feika, Bookarie Kakay Trading as Mariama. & Sons (A Firm)

BETWEEN

THE STATE - APPLICANT

AND

THE HON. MR.JUSTICE M.O. TAJU-DEEN - RESPONDENT

(JUDGE)

EX PARTE DR. HARRY WILL - APPLICATION

The said statement, averred the Grounds on which the relief is Sought:—

1. That the Learned Judge erred in law in refusing to state and refer to the Supreme Court as requested by counsel for the 1st Accused appropriate questions on the constitutional issues raised in term of sub-section (i) (c) of Section 124 and Section 15(a) and sub-Sections (1) and (2) of Section 23 of the Constitution Sierra Leone 1991 in counsel's application on behalf of the 1st Accused that the indictment be quashed as invalid, illegal and void and the 1st accused accordingly discharged, as foresaid.

2. That the Learned Judge erred in law in holding that it was not necessary for him to have in advance a draft of the proposed questions being requested to be referred to the Supreme

3. That, the Learned Judge erred in law in refusing to stay proceedings on Criminal Information dated 30th August, 1999 for the purpose of making the reference under subsection (3) of Section 28 of the constitution as aforesaid pending the determination of the said reference to the Supreme Court.

4. That the Learned Judge lacked jurisdiction to determine the Constitutional issue aforesaid, as he purported so to do in his Ruling on the application and submissions by counsel for the 1st accused and in his refusal to refer appropriate questions on the said issues to the Supreme Court as aforesaid and in deciding to go on with proceedings on the aforesaid Criminal Information without first making the required reference."

In arguing the issue as to whether this court can hear and determine the motion, council submits that Section 120 (9) of the Constitution, Act No.6 of 1991 applies only in cases "where an Action is brought claiming liability of a Judge done in that process." Such liability where established would normally go with sanctions and costs" vide Order 52 Rules of the High Court. He want on to submit that, even assuming that, notwithstanding the two previous submissions it would still be irregular for the judge to be mentioned as a party in the heading of an application for the exercise of the Supervisory Jurisdiction there is an authority for the court to use its discretion to allow the proceedings to go on, on the true basis especially where the provisions of the Constitution are concerned or time is of the essence and otherwise to allow leave to do an amendment. The actions which can be pursued under section 125 of the Act No.6 of 1991 are not mentioned. In reply to the court, counsel has cited certain authorities in support of his submission that the motion can be heard on its merit despite the inclusion of the name of the judge in the title of the application. The cases cited are:—

(1) Nordally v. Attorney General (1981) L.R.C. 599 SC of Mainitius.

[p.275]

(2) A.S.C. v. (Nasmos) unreported Supreme Court of Sierra Leone delivered 26th October, 1999

(3) Alie v. Teaching Service Commission (1983) L.R.C. 229-230

(4) Janudco v. Attorney-General of Suyana (1971) 3 WLR 13.

Counsel finally submits that the matter should proceed notwithstanding the defect in the Title by including the name of the Judge.

I think it will be appropriate to state the status of the High Court. This was preserved by Section 178(5) of the Constitution Act No.6 of 1991. It states "The High Court of Justice established under the provision of sub section (4) of Section 120 of this Constitution shall be successor to the High Court in being immediately before the coming into force of' this Constitution."

The High Court is therefore a creature of Statute. The creation of the court is spelt out in section 120(4) of the constitution, that is to say:—

“The Judicature shall consist of the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone, the Court of Appeal and the High Court of Justice which shall be the Superior Court of record of Sierra Leone and which shall constitute one Superior Court of Judicature, and such other inferior and traditional courts as Parliament may by law establish. (emphasis mine)

I will now consider the jurisdiction of the High Court as provided in Section 132(1) and (5) of the Constitution. 132(1) The High Court of Justice Shall have jurisdiction in Civil and Criminal Matters and such other original appellate and other jurisdiction as may be conferred upon it by the Constitution or any other law.

(5) Any Judge of the High Court of Justice may, in accordance with the Rules of Court made in that behalf, exercise in Court or in Chambers all or any part of the jurisdiction vested in the High Court or Justice by this Constitution or any other law.”

What has the Judge Mr. Justice M.O. Taju-Deen done that he had no jurisdiction to do? 'What was before the Learned Judge, was a Criminal matter'. The law says he has jurisdiction in Civil and Criminal Matters vide Section 132(1) of the Constitution. In Exhibit “c” to the Affidavit [p.276] of Dr. Jabbi herein before mentioned - Mr. Justice M.O. Taju-Deen made a. consent order in writing under Section 136(1) of the Criminal Procedure Act No.32 of 1965 as amended for Dr. Harry Will and others to stand trial on Criminal charges. This Order was made on 31st August 1999 not as counsel deposed as having been made on 30 August, 1999. Did the Judge have power to make that order. I opine that had the power vide section 132(5) of the Constitution.

The accused were arraigned before the Learned Judge, whereupon counsel moved the court to stay proceedings on the ground that certain sections of the Constitution ought to be tested in the Supreme Court vis-a.-vis their legality and whether some of the fundamental rights of Dr. Hill had not been breached. The Learned Trial Judge made a ruling refusing the application for reference to the Supreme Court for the determination.

In my view the High Court or the Judge does not have to grant the application for reference as a matter of course. The Judge has a right to look at the provisions of the Constitution on which the application is based. In the application as contained in Ex. “D” of the said affidavit, Counsel states:—

“My Lord, I implore and request this Honourable Court in terms, of Sub section (3) of Section 28 of the Constitution of 1991, to stay the present proceedings and refer to the Supreme Court for prior determination the questions of law involved in the above grounds of the constitutional invalidity of the said enactments and Judge's Order.”

The various enactments referred to in the applications are section 136(1) of Criminal Procedure Act 1965 as amended by Act No.1 of 1970 as having been enacted in excess or Ultra-vires of the powers conferred on Parliament by law as per section 124(1) (b) - that section 136 of C.P.A. 1965 is inconsistent and. incompatible with the provisions of section 15(1) and section 23(1) of the Constitution, and subsection of Interpretation Act. No. 7 of 1965 section 171 (15) of the Constitution."

put upon Judges by such applications, which to say the least are often times misconceived and are time consuming. In my view this motion is one such misconceived application. In my opinion" this motion is an exercise in academic pursuit t and an abuse of due process of the court. The Learned Judge in the exercise of his legitimate duty under the law has been brought before this Court as a respondent thus placing him in jeopardy of being mulcted in costs which the Constitution precludes - Vide section 120 (9) of the Constitution which states:

"A Judge of the Superior Court of Judicature shall not be liable to any Action or suit for any matter or thing done by him in the performance of his judicial functions" The Hon. Mr. Justice M.O. Taju-Deen is one such judge, who from all the papers filed in the matter herein was performing such functions. He has not only been brought before this court but has been made a respondent facing two applicants. The State and Dr. Harry Will.

If the judge was minded to apply for leave to" join issue in this matter, he could not because section 120(9) of the Constitution protects him therefrom.

I think I aught to address the issue of the Supervisory powers of the Court as contained in section 125 of the constitution. It provides: "The Supreme Court shall have supervisory jurisdiction over all other Courts in Sierra. Leone and over any adjudicating authority; and in exercise of its supervisory jurisdiction shall have popup to issue such directions, orders or writs including writs is of habeas corpus, orders of' certiorari, mandamus and prohibition as it may consider appropriate for the purposes of enforcing or securing the enforcement of its supervisory powers"

The supervisory powers of the Court is not spelt out in the Constitution but I opine, that the supervisory jurisdiction is the one contained in Rule 88 of the Rules of the Supreme Court PN.No.1 of 1982. which states. "(1) 'There any judgment or ruling has been reserved by any subordinate to the Supreme Court for three months or more, the Court may, on its mm motion or upon the application of a party to the action or appeal, as the case may be, order the Lower Court concerned to deliver judgment or ruling or before a date specified in the order."

Sub-sections (2),(3) and (4) provide what should happen thereafter.

I have already opined that this application by notice of motion not only misconceived but an abuse of due person of the Court. Every [p.278] Counsel referred to the case of The State - Applicant and The Honourable Mr. Justice F.C. Gbow Judge Respondent

Ex Parte Julius Spencer

Donald John

Alfred Payitie Conteh

Mohamed Bangura.

Alusine Kargbo Bashiru Applicants.

So. Misc. App. No. 6/93 A & B unreported.

I concede that the Court entertained the application in the above cause and made the orders sought.

Be that as it may, the law does not preclude the court from revisiting the issue if subsequently brought before it, vide section 122(2) of the Constitution Act No.6 of 1991. It provides as follows: "The Supreme Court may, while treating its own previous decision as binding, depart from a previous decision when it appears right so to do, and all other courts shall be bound to follow the decision of the Supreme Court on questions of law." In the instant case, the court will perforce have to depart from the decision given in the case of The State and The Hon. Mr. Justice F.C. Gbow Ex. Parte Julius Spencer and others.

I have already said the Judge ought not, as a matter of course refer every matter to the Supreme Court it did not Seem to him right so to do.

In my view, the High Court of Justice is not a rubber stamp to grant every such application made for reference to the Supreme Court; the provisions of section 28(2) and. section 124(1) of the Constitution states clearly that the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction to the exclusion of all other courts - so be it, but how is the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court invoked? Surely it is not by reference from a lower court simpliciter, I opine, it is by a notice of motion supported by an affidavit. In my opinion, this is precisely why section 127 (1) of the Constitution was enacted. The provision is "A person who alleges that an enactment or anything done under the authority of that or any other enactment is inconsistent with, or is in contravention of a provision of this constitution may at any time being an action in the Supreme Court for declaration to that effect." Need we say more, yes; it is necessary to remind Counsel appearing in our Courts of the strain [p.279] court has an inherent duty to protect its process. This is trite law-and I am of the view that that this court has a duty to protect its process when it is being abused and to refer to an application based on a misconception of law.

I hold the view that the court must invoke its inherent jurisdiction in such a case to prevent an abuse. The indictment before Mr. Justice Taju-Deen is on having as its foundation a consent order in writing under the hand of a judge of the High Court of Justice- where is the constitutional issue in that matter which is outside the jurisdiction of the judge. What is the constitutional issue to be resolved by the Supreme Court. I see none.

JUDGMENT

WARNE JSC.

This is an appeal against the judgment of the Court or Appeal, made up of NAVO, TURAY AND WILLIAMS JJA. delivered on Thursday 22nd day of January 1987.

THE GROUNDS OF APPEAL ARE

1. The Court of Appeal misdirected itself in law by failing to appreciate the order to recover possession of 13 Nana Kroo Street Freetown meant and could only he reasonably interpreted to mean so much of 13 Nana Kroo Street as was in the actual possession or occupation of the Second Defendant' tenant in the said premises and by construing that order to seem recovering "more relief' than was claimed.

2. The Court of Appeal erred in Law in not making an order dismissing the counterclaim.

FACTS: The facts of the case are that appellant is the owner of and is in possession and control of property No, 13 Nana Kroo Street. This property she let to three tenants. These tenants paid rent to her until one of the tenants defaulted who she evicted. This tenant one James Lewis vacated the room and put in possession the 1st Respondent. The 1st Respondent vacated the room and put in possession, the 2nd Respondent. The Appellant sought to remove the 2nd Respondent but the 1st Respondent opposed her action. both Respondents were then sued in the High Court for the possession of the room.

[p.6]

On the 14th October 1982, the High Court gave Judgment in favour of the Appellant granting her the reliefs sought. In the proceedings in the High Court, four witnesses testified for Appellant and five witnesses testified for the Defendants. At the end of the testimony, both Counsel addressed the Court. Johnson J. reviewed the evidence for the Appellant and for the Respondents and had this to say— "I accept the whole evidence of the Plaintiff and her witnesses. I do not believe or accept the evidence of the 1st Defendant and that of the witnesses for the defendant, I find as a tact, that Abigail Samson was in possession of premises 13, Nana Kroo Street and that she validly disposed of the premises to the Plaintiff, in accordance with Kroo Customary Law. In this regard, I accept the evidence of P. W.4. I do not find P.W.4 to be an interested party. I find that Abigail Samson has better right to possession of premises 13, Nana Kroo Street, I do not accept the evidence that the 1st. Defendant's father was the owner of the premises. I find that the Plaintiff in all the circumstances, has a better right to possession of the said premises than the 1st Defendant herein.

It is an established principle of law that an Appellate Court will not readily disturb the findings of facts of the Trial Court, but where the facts do not support the findings of the Trial Court or the findings have violently contravened a principle of law, or the findings are contrary to the facts or the facts have not been evaluated, the Appellate Court can interfere with such findings of facts.

In my view, the Trail Judge did not evaluate the facts adequately before his findings. To compound the flaw in the findings the Trial Judge did not consider the Counterclaim to enable him make any findings whatsoever.

In any case, the Court of Appeal has a right of rehearing the- whole case which they did.

In fairness to the Counsel for Appellant he gave several reasons why the Appeal should succeed. I will repeat them.

(1) Because the second Respondent was a tenant having no beneficial interest in premises the and led no evidence in defence of the claim against him.

(2) Because the High Court was right in finding that the Appellant had a better right to possession of the premises than the 1st Respondent.

(3) Because the Appellant was not merely owner in accordance with Kroo Customary Law but was at all material times in undisturbed possession of the premises.

(4) Because the 1st Respondent failed to establish her right to a declaration of title, damages and an injunction.

(5) Because at no time was the property vested in the 1st Respondent nor was she ever in possession of the same.

(6) Because on the totality of the evidence the Judgment of the High Court was correct and ought to be upheld and the Court of Appeal was one [p.7] sided in reversing it.

Having said this 1 will consider the proceedings in the Court of Appeal. Both parties were represented in the Court of Appeal and made their submissions.

The Court of Appeal having heard the submissions had this to say: "her claim was for recovery of possession of only a portion of the said premises, yet the Court below ordered that the Respondent "do recover possession of 13, Nana Kroo Street, Freetown from the Second Defendant."

This the Court found to be Contrary to Law. On a closer examination of the evidence and on a proper evaluation the court found that the property the Appellant was claiming was clearly defined and there was no documentary evidence to substantiate her claim. On the evidence before the court, there is evidence that the Respondent acquired the property by the Kroo Customary Law. The Court of Appeal referred to cap. 127 Laws of Sierra Leone and determined that the property in dispute is within the Kroo Reservation Area as defined in Cap. 127. In determining the acquisition of 13 Nana Kroo Street by the Appellant, The Court of Appeal found that. " The effect of the Kroo Reservation (Chapter 127) is not to make Kroo Laws and Customs prevail over the General and Common Law except in the specified case of succession on Intestacy spelt out in Rule 2 Schedule B of Kroo Reservation Act to be found at page 942 Vol. VII of the Laws of Sierra Leone." I agree with the findings of the Court of Appeal. The Court of Appeal also found that the disposal of the property No. 13 Nana Kroo Street by Abigail Samson is not valid according to Law. I find no fault with such findings. She had neither prescriptive right to dispose of the property nor legal or equitable right.

It is unfortunate that this case has dragged on for so long. The Learned Trial Judge did not make any finding on the Counterclaim nor did the Court of Appeal make a finding as well. What is the option open to this Court? In my view it is to remit the Counterclaim to the High Court for rehearing. However, what purpose will that serve? It is the duty of the Court to ensure that justice is done to litigants who come to our Courts. Since this Court can make any order vested in the High Court, I will proceed to review the case for the Respondents.

I have reviewed the whole evidence carefully and hold that on a balance of probality the 1st Respondent has failed to establish that she is the owner of property No.13 Nana Kroo Street, Freetown. I will dismiss the Counterclaim and I grant liberty to apply.

In view of what I have said supra I hold that there is no merit in Ground I of the Grounds of Appeal and it is dismissed and Ground II of the Grounds of Appeal Succeed.

C.F Margai Esq. and E.E.C. Shears-Moses Esq. for the Appellant

A.F. Serry-Kamal Esq. for the Respondent

JUDGMENT

WRIGHT J.S.C.

This is an appeal from the judgment of the Court of Appeal dated the 29th day of June 2004. The respondent had issued a writ claiming possession for the recovery of the premises situate at 27 Pultney Street, Freetown on the 7th August 2002, during the long vacation. An appearance was entered but no defence was filed. The respondent then applied for leave to enter a summary judgment in the High Court.

There was an appeal to the Court of Appeal that the High Court Judge was wrong in granting leave to sign summary judgment based on the ground that the appellant had a good defence and that there were triable issues.

There were several grounds of appeal as to whether summary judgment can be entered by the court when several triable issues have been raised before the Court and the appellant had a good defence.

The Court of Appeal based their judgment on the merits of the case and not on whether it was a case for leave to grant a summary judgment. As a result the Court of Appeal dismissed the Appeal [p.349] E. E. Shears-Moses Esq. Counsel for the appellant argued all seven grounds of appeal together. He stated that the appeal was not about the substance of the action but that it was not a proper case for summary judgment pursuant to Order Xl of the High Court Rules. He pointed out the triable issues in this matter Charles Margai Esq. also Counsel for the appellant stated that the identity of the property was not in dispute but that in the affidavit in opposition the appellant said that she had paid rent in full but that the receipts were burnt.

A.F. Serry-Kamal Esq. Counsel for the respondent stated that the property in dispute is 27 Pultney Street and not 26 Pultney Street Freetown. Therefore the answer must be that they are not one and the same property. He said that the court of Appeal rightly exercised its discretion in granting the judgment since there was no triable defence.

What are the issues involved in this case? The property in dispute is 27 Pultney Street, but the letter exhibited as AC2 to the affidavit is for 26 Pultney Street. Counsel for the appellant contended that the property was not in dispute since both sides knew the property, but Counsel for the respondent said that they were not the same property. There was no evidence to show that rent was paid to Alhaji S.A. Koroma or that the purported document was signed by him.

From the documents tendered the premises were let by Alhaji S.A. Koroma as Chairman/Leader of the A.P.C. According to the respondent the tenancy expired on the 31st August 2001, and the appellant continued to live on the premises after the expiry of the aforesaid agreement. The proceedings to evict the appellant were commenced against her because she did not vacate 27 Pultney Street despite several demands on the 31st August 2001.

Does the appellant have any triable defence? The respondent was asking for possession of the premises at 27 Pultney Street, Freetown. The appellant in her affidavit sworn on the 21st August 2002 exhibited a letter marked AC2 by the then AP.C. Chairman Alhaji S.A.T. Koroma stating that her tenancy was to be until the 31st December 2003. The notice given to her to vacate within 21 days from the 24th July 2002 was to the contrary. There was thus a triable issue if the tenancy was still subsisting. Alhaji S.A.T. Koroma never swore to an affidavit denying that he wrote Exhibit AC2.

Further to this, the notice to quit stated that the appellant was in breach of clause 6 of of the agreement. The breach was that she was putting up a permanent structure which she denied and is shown in her proposed defence which is Exhibit AC3 at page 32.

Over and above that the appellant denied signing the purported lease agreement Exhibit A FSK 3 in her paragraphs 3-7. I hold that that these are all triable issues including her putting up any structure as is even provided for in the lease agreement in paragraph 2 at page 40 of the records.

Further to that, the agreement in dispute exhibited by the Respondent agrees with the [p.350] letter of the 8th October 1998 in Exhibit ASK 9 at page 37 written by Alhaji F.B. Turay acknowledging the good work the Appellant was doing on the property. These are all triable issues that vitiate against a summary judgment pursuant to Order 11 of the High Court Rules 1960. Further evidence in support of the arguments that there are triable issues in this matter is the letter of the 24th July 2002 marked as Exhibit AC 1 at page 27. The Respondents were saying that the tenancy was to expire on the 31st January 2003 which follows that at the time a notice to quit was served her term had not expired.

Let me now turn to Order 11 Rule 1 as amended by Public Notice No 24 of 1964 which states as follows—

"(a) Where The Defendant appears to a Writ of Summons specially indorsed with or accompanied by a statement of claim of the remedy or relief to which the plaintiff claims to be entitled under Order iii Rule 6, the Plaintiff may on affidavit made by himself or by any other person who can swear positively to the facts, verifying the cause of action and the amount claimed (if any liquidated sum is claimed) and stating that in his belief there is no defence to the action except as to the amount of damages claimed if any, apply to a Judge for liberty to enter judgment for such remedy or relief as upon the statement of claim the Plaintiff may be entitled to. The Judge thereupon, unless the Defendant by affidavit, by his own viva voce evidence or otherwise shall satisfy him that he has a good defence to the action on the merit, or shall disclose such facts as may be deemed sufficient to entitled him to defend the action generally, may make an order empowering the Plaintiff to enter such judgment as may be just, having regard to the nature of the remedy or relief claimed." The power of the court to grant leave to enter summary judgment is given by order 11 Rule 1 of the High Court Rules 1960 as amended.

The object of the order is to ensure a speedy conclusion of the matters or cases where the Plaintiff can establish clearly that the defendant has no defence or triable issues. This draconian power of the court in preventing the defendant from putting his case before the court must be used judiciously. A judge must be satisfied that there are no triable issues before exercising his discretion to grant leave to enter a summary judgment. The judge is also obliged to examine the defence in detail to ensure that there are no triable issues.

This remedy given by this order is a stringent one which is a judgment given without a trial. It was the intention when the order was framed that the affidavit so required must be a condition precedent to the exercise of the power conferred by the order to give Judgment without a trial. Therefore if an affidavit fails to satisfy the requirement of that order because the deponent cannot swear positively to the facts thereon stated may produce on the minds of the judge, who hears the matter a strong impression that though the affidavit is not one which satisfies the terms of the order, it nevertheless indicates a strong probability that the Plaintiff has a good cause.

However recently the English Courts have gone one step further in their endeavour to ensure a speedy conclusion of matters under this order in the spirit of what it is now [p.351] commonly known as the Woolf Reform. The test is not that there should only be a triable issue but that the defence should have a real prospect of success as distinct from a fanciful prospect of success (See Swain vs Hillman and another reported in 1 All England Reports 2001 Page 91 at Page 95 paragraph J)

It is therefore the duty of the judge to examine the issues of Law and of facts raised and determine whether the defendant has a good chance of success.

The Digest 37 (3) para 3103 referred to the judgment of Vaughan Williams L J in Symon & Co VS Palmer's Stores (1903) Ltd (1912) IKB 439, 106 LT 176, C A. A condition to be satisfied in the granting of a summary judgment is that there must be an affidavit by the Plaintiff himself or by any other person who can swear positively to the facts verifying the cause of action, and the amount claimed if any, and stating that in his belief there is no defence to the action".

The position in Law has been well settled. As a general rule where a defendant shows by his affidavit that he has a reasonable ground for setting up a defence he ought to have leave to defend the claim brought by him. The court has to take into account all the circumstances of the case including triable issues in deciding whether leave to defend ought to be given (See Saw vs. Hakim 5 T L R P 72 and Jones vs Stone (1894) AC 122). The case of Jones vs Stone see above laid down the rule that where there are questions of facts in disputes, summary judgment ought not to be given under order 14 equivalent to Order 11 of the High Court Rules. See also Ofodofe vs Central Insurance Co. ((1991) 2 G L R 207.)

See also the case of Sheppards & Co vs. Wilkinson and Jarvis (1889) 6 T L R 13 C.A in which it laid down that "Summary Judgment conferred by this order must be used with care. A defendant ought not to be shut out from defending unless it is very clear indeed that he has no case in the action under discussion. Thus where a defendant has filed a defence which discloses a triable defence, it will be a travesty of justice for a court to refuse him leave to defend simply because he had not filed an affidavit in opposition responding to the fact set out already in his defence. In Jacobs vs. Booths Distillers Co. (1901) 85 LT 262.

It was stated that judgment should only be ordered under summary judgment where assuming all the facts are in favour of the defendants, they do not amount to a defence in law.

In Wellington V Mutual Society ((1880) 5AC 685 at page 690.) A defendant who raises a triable defence shall have a right to have his case tried. The Justices of the Court of Appeal with respect should not have gone into the substance of the action but as to whether or not it was a proper case for summary judgment to be granted pursuant to Order Xl of the High Court Rules. It appears that the learned Justices of Appeal acknowledged that there was a defence in their judgment even though later they said there was no defence.

[p.352]

Let me emphasize that summary judgment under Order 11 of the High Court Rules 1960 should not be given during the vacation unless both parties consent to the order see Macfoy vs. United Africa Co. Ltd. (1960 AC. House of Lords page 157) where Lord Denning dealt with the effect of delivering a statement of claim in the long vacation.

The learned Justices of the Court of Appeal should not have gone into the substantive matter and also not to have upheld the judgment since there were triable issues.

Order 11 Rule 6 of the High Court Rules 1960 states "Leave to defend may be given unconditionally, or subject to such terms as to giving security or time or mode of trial or otherwise as the court may think fit".

In determining whether leave is unconditional or conditional the judge could examine other features surrounding the case such as good or bad faith of the parties, whether the conduct of any of the parties is questionable, whether the imposition of a condition could be oppressive which could result in shutting out the defendant's ability to defend or proceed with the action. The foregoing examples are not exhaustive since circumstances may differ from case to case.

For the reasons given above the judgment of the Court of Appeal dated 7th April 2004 and the judgment of the High Court dated 12th September 2002 are hereby set aside. The matter is remitted to the High Court and the appellant is given leave to defend the matter in the High Court.

In this case I do not see any need for conditions to be imposed.

The respondent is to pay the taxed costs of this appeal and those of the Court below.

BETWEEN

CASTROL LIMITED — APPELLANT

AND

JOHN MICHAEL MOTORS LIMITED — RESPONDENT

Berthan Macaulay (Jnr) Esq. for the Appellant

Abdul Tejan-Cole Esq. and Martin Michael Esq. for the Respondent

RENNER-THOMAS, C.J.

The Appellant in this Appeal, Castrol Limited (hereinafter referred to as "Castrol") is an English Company and was at all material times wholesalers of various lubricants and other allied products (hereinafter referred to as "Castrol products") in respect of which they had appointed the Respondent John Michael Motors Limited, the Respondent herein, (hereinafter referred to as "John Michael Motors") as sole distributor in Sierra Leone sometime in 1971. John Michael Motors was at all material times a local Company engaged in the business of importing, marketing and distributing the said Castrol products as well as in the sale and servicing of motor vehicles, motor cycles and other allied products.

The terms and conditions of the agreement under which John Michael Motors was appointed sole distributor of Castrol products were not pleaded nor was evidence led on the same. Until September 1987 John Michael Motors continued to act as sole distributor of Castrol products in Sierra Leone. Thereafter, it was agreed between the parties that the Second [p.233] Defendant in the High Court, Datsun Motors Limited, (hereinafter referred to as "Datsun Motors") would also be allowed to import and distribute Castrol products in Sierra Leone. It was further agreed that for each consignment of Castrol products Datsun Motors imported into Sierra Leone Castrol would pay John Michael Motors a commission of 5 per cent of the C.I.F. value of the consignment.

On the 5 day of November 1987 Castrol addressed the following communication to John Michael Motors:—

"WE HEREBY GIVE YOU NOTICE terminating the Distribution Agreement or arrangements between Castrol Limited and John Michael Motors Limited on 7th February 1988. From such date you must not hold yourself out as being authorised to distribute Castrol Limited lubricants and allied products in the Territory of Sierra Leone and you must remove from all stationery and other literature any reference to your company being a distributor of Castrol Lubricants arid Allied Products. Castrol Limited reserves its rights against John Michael Motors Limited in respect of the outstanding sterling account of £16,238.42 payment of which we understand Mr. John Michael of 9 Cherrington Close, Shankhill Co. Dublin, Republic of Ireland has accepted primary responsibility. We put you on Notice that we reserve rights against you in the event that Mr. John Michael does not settle these outstanding amounts within next 30 days".

The document was admitted in evidence during the trial and marked as Exhibit "D2".

Quite understandably, the management of John Michael Motors was quite displeased at this development. In a letter addressed to Castrol, the General Manager of John Michael Motors stated that management was completely surprised to have received such a letter without any previous comment on the subject; He continued as follows:—

"We have been selling and distributing your products since the early 1972 even at the time when companies like Shell, BP, Mobil, Texaco were not to be competed with.

We have done a lot to push your products in this part of the world and if there is success today, it is because of our past effort. We have [p.234] been advertising, printing signs and made adverts on Television and Radio at our own expense. What Castrol has provided in terms of adverts is not even 20% what we have spent locally."

The letter was admitted evidence as Exhibit "E".

This was followed by another more detailed letter dated 26th November 1987 from Mr. John Michael to Mr Scott of Castrol. For the first time, the issue of the inadequacy of the notice to terminate the distribution agreement was raised. The reply from Castrol was contained in a letter dated 22nd January 1988 signed by Mr. Scott, as Solicitor and Assistant Legal Adviser, addressed to Mr. John Michael. First, Mr. Scott gave as reason for terminating the agreement the poor sales performance "during the last few years compared with [Castrol's] assessment of the real market potential in Sierra Leone for Castrol lubricants, if marketed aggressively". Secondly, he said Castrol's decision to terminate the agency agreement was irrevocable. Thirdly, and most importantly for this matter, Castrol refused to extend the period of notice.

Consequently, John Michael Motors instituted an action in the High Court in which Castrol was First Defendant and Datsun Motors was Second Defendant. In their amended Statement of claim John Michael Motors contended, inter alia, that in the absence of any agreed period for the termination of the distributorship agreement reasonable notice should have been twelve months rather than the three months given by Castrol. It claimed, inter alia, damages for breach of contract and £240,000/00 apparently as special damages.

At the trial the General Manager of John Michael Motors gave uncontroverted evidence of their contention that the Plaintiff Company had spent a lot of time and money in promoting Castrol products in Sierra Leone and that it stood to lose a considerable amount of profit on lost sales of Castrol products and on collateral business because of the alleged unlawful termination of the agreement. The trial Judge agreed with the contention of John Michael Motors that three months notice was unreasonable in the circumstances to terminate the agreement. He held that twelve months notice was reasonable in the circumstances of this case. However, the trial judge rejected the claim for £240,000/00 which he dealt with as special damages but went on to award the John Michael Motors [p.235] general damages of £200,000.00. Perhaps, I should mention for completeness that the trial judge allowed the claim of John Michael Motors against Datsun Motors.

Being dissatisfied with the decision of the trial judge as far as it affected them Castrol appealed to the Court of Appeal on several grounds. The Court of Appeal rejected the appeal and agreed with the trial judge that twelve months notice should have been given for the termination of the distributorship agreement instead of three months. The Court of Appeal also upheld the award of the sum of £200,000/00 as general damages. It is against this Judgment of the Court of Appeal that Castrol has appealed to this Court on the following grounds:

"(1) The Court of Appeal having failed to draw the proper and or correct inferences from the facts established at the trial wrongly affirmed the decision of the Learned Trial Judge that reasonable notice in the instant case was twelve months and that the Appellant wee in. breach of their agreement with the Respondents by not giving them twelve months notice to determine the said Agreement.

(2) The Court of Appeal in upholding the decision of the Learned Trial Judge that twelve months notice was reasonable in the instant case misdirected itself in holding that the case of DECRO-WALL INTERNATIONAL S. A. VS PRACTITIONERS IN MARKETING LIMITED (1971) 2 ALL. E. R. 216 "played a pivotal role" in that the said case was clearly distinguishable from the case before the Court and that the award of twelve months notice in that case ought not to have been replicated by the Learned Trial Judge nor confirmed by the Court of appeal in the instant case.

(3) The Court of Appeal failed to consider or adequately consider the Appellant's case on the question of reasonable notice in the circumstances of the particular case that was before the Court.

(4) The Court of Appeal in dismissing ground two (2) of the Appellant's grounds of appeal, which was couched in the following terms:—

[p.236]

"That the award of £200,000/00 (TWO HUNDRED POUNDS STERLING) awarded by the Learned Trial Judge, as damages for breach of contract on the ground of termination, is so inordinately high, in that no evidence, or insufficient evidence, was available to the Judge to justify any quantification of damages and also in view of the dismissal of the Plaintiff's claim for special damages, that it must have been an entirely erroneous estimate of the damage suffered." (emphasis mine) misdirected itself in—

(a) addressing the issues of remoteness and categorisation of damages, either as general or special damages, when the issue complained of was the quantum of damages, and

(b) referring to irrelevant matters by citing the following passage from the judgment in the case of Strom Bucks Akie Bolag vs John and Peter Hutchinson (1905) AC 515:

"I do not think the court ought to be astute in defeating an honest claim in favour of persons who have wilfully disregarded their obligations……." (emphasis mine)

In that there was no basis for such a reference and assuming without conceding that there was evidence of such a behaviour on the part of the Appellant, such conduct was totally irrelevant in deciding whether the quantum of general damages awarded was inordinately high or not, thereby failing to property adjudicate on the issue of quantum of damages.

(5) Further and or in the alternative the Court of Appeal having referred to the dicta of Lord McNaghten in the Stroms Bucks Akie Bolag vs John & Peter Hutchinson (1905) A.C. 515 at 526 in the following terms:

"I am unable to see what difference it can make whether you claim damages generally and shew that an award of [p.237] general damages would include and cover special loss from which you seek relief, or whether you seek compensation for a special loss and shew that the loss would more than be covered or compensated by an award of special damages."

erred in upholding the award by the Learned Trial Judge of £200,000/00 (Two Hundred Thousand Pounds Sterling) as General Damages having regard to the fact that the said Learned Trial Judge had rejected the Respondent's claim for special damages, which included a general claim at large of 2 loss of sale of Castrol products" (not referable to any specific contract/agreement) of £100,000 which said claim was in the nature of general damages.

(6) The Court of Appeal misdirected itself when it held as follows:

"It is therefore justified in the circumstances that it is for the respondent to select the currency in which to make his claim seeing that such currency would most truly express the respondent loss and invariably most fully and exactly compensate him for that loss. See the Folias (1979) 1 ALL E.R. 421" (emphasis mine).

in upholding the Learned Trial judge's award of general damages in foreign currency in the sum of £200,000.00 in that in The Folias the Court had held, inter alia, that "If then the contract fails to provide a decisive interpretation, the damage should be calculated in the currency in which the loss was felt by the Plaintiff or "which most truly expresses his loss" and that the Respondent itself had led evidence to show that the earning from sales of Castrol products were in Leones and had not led any evidence to show that the loss of profits from future sales, as a result of the insufficient notice in sterling.

[p.238]

(7) The Court of Appeal in adjudicating upon the Appellant's appeal against the award of damages in foreign currency failed to consider or adequately consider the Appellant's case especially the authority of Attorney-General of the Republic of Ghana and Ghana National Petroleum Corporation v. Texaco Overseas Tank ships Limited (1994) 1 Lloyds Law Report 473 which was cited to the Court.

(8) The judgment is against the weight of the evidence. "

Despite these rather detailed grounds of appeal the issues to be determined by this Court could be summarized as follows:—

1. Taking into account all the circumstances of the case, was the Court of Appeal right in upholding the decision of the trial judge that twelve months notice, rather than three months notice, was reasonable for the termination of the distributorship agreement?

2. Was the Court of Appeal right in upholding the amount of £200,000.00 awarded by the trial judge as general damages?

3. Taking into account all the circumstances of the instant case, was the Court of Appeal right in upholding the decision of the trial judge to award damages in a foreign currency?

To be able to answer the first question this Court should first enquire whether there was any available evidence upon which the trial judge could have relied in reaching the conclusion that a period of twelve months rather than three months was reasonable notice for the termination of the agreement.

There are several reasons why this exercise has got to be undertaken. First, all appeals are by way of rehearing. Rule 9 (1) of the Court of Appeal Rules, Statutory Instrument No. 29 of 1985, makes this plain in the case of the Court of Appeal. Though there is no similar provision in the Rules of this Court, Statutory Instrument No.1 of 1982, this Court can apply the provision of the said Rule 9(1) as it has the same powers, authority and jurisdiction vested in any court [p.239] established by the Constitution or any other law (see Section 11 (3) of the Constitution, Act. No.6 of 1991.

The provision of Rule 9(1) of the Court of Appeal Rules was applied by this Court in the case of Amadu Wurie v. Edward Wilson Shomefun and Foday Bangura S.C. Civ. App. No.8/81, judgment delivered on the 29th day of December 1983, (unreported) in which Tejan J.S.C. stated as follows:—

"it should be noted that in rule 9 (1) of the Court of Appeal Rules, the expression "by way of rehearing " is used . The expression does not mean that the parties and their witnesses are to appear before the Court of Appeal and to give their evidence. The words "by way of rehearing" express the practice of the old Chancery appeal (which was not strictly an appeal so much as a rehearing before a higher Court). (See Quilter v Walpleson (1882) 9 Q.B.D. at page 676; see order 58 Rule 3 of the English Rules (1959) edition. It is simply a rehearing on the record."

Secondly, I am obliged by law to satisfy myself that there was evidence on which the trial judge could properly have relied in reaching the conclusion that twelve months notice as opposed to three months notice was reasonable in the circumstances of this case. I am obliged to do this notwithstanding the existence of a concurrent finding by the Court of Appeal. The decision whether there is such evidence is a question of law and the search for the answer to that question is one of those special circumstances that would justify a departure from the practice of declining to review the evidence for the third time where there are concurrent findings of two lower courts on a pure question of fact. In the case of Agip (SL.) Limited v. Edmask 1972-73 ALR S.L. 218 this Court cited with approval the dicta of Lord Thankerton to that effect in the case of Srimati Bibhati Devi v. Kumar Ramendra Narayan Roy (1946) A.C. 508 at 521.

In dealing with this issue Acquah J.S.C (as he then was) had this say in delivering the Judgment of the Ghana Supreme Court in the case of Koglex (No. 2) v. Field (2000) SC. GLR 175 at 185:—

"The very fact that the first appellate court has confirmed the judgment of the trial court does not relieve the second appellate court of its duty to satisfy itself that the first appellate court's judgment i.e. like the trial court is also justified by the evidence on record. For an appeal, at whatever stage, is by way of rehearing, and every appellate court has a [p.340] duty to make its own independent examination of the record of proceedings."

I cannot agree more.

Having said this, it must be pointed out that in carrying out its functions of rehearing the case an appellate court should be guided by certain principles particularly when dealing with the trial judge's findings on questions of fact. This Court has restated those principles and applied them in a long list of cases starting with El Nasr Export and Import Co. Ltd. v. Mohie El Deen Mansour SC. Civ. App. No. 3/73 judgment delivered on the 25th April, 1974. (unreported) in which this Court stated, inter alia, as follows:—

" It is true that Rule 21 of the Court of Appeal Rules 1973 (Public Notice No. 28 of 1973) [now replaced by Rule 9(1) of the present Court of Appeal Rules) gives very wide and sweeping powers to the Court of Appeal even to the extent of re-hearing the whole case. At the same time it is settled law and good sense that it should be in the rarest occasions and in circumstances where the appellate court is convinced by the plainest considerations, that it would be justified in finding that the trial judge had formed a wrong opinion. In this connection I quote with approval the words of Lord Thankerten in WATT or THOMAS v. THOMAS (1947) A.C. at page 487 referred to in the House of Lords in the case of BENMAX v. A USTIN MOTOR Co. LTD. (1955) 1 A.E.R. 326:

1. Where a question of fact has been tried by a Judge without a jury, and there is no question of misdirection of himself by the Judge, an appellate court which is disposed to come to a different conclusion on the printed evidence should not do so unless it is satisfied that any advantage enjoyed by the trial judge, by reason of having seen and heard the witnesses, could not be sufficient to explain or justify the trial judge's conclusion.

2. The appellate court may take the view that, without having seen or heard the witnesses, it is not in a position to come to any satisfactory conclusion on the printed evidence.

3. The appellate court, either because the reasons given by the trial judge are not satisfactory, because it unmistakably so [p.241] appears from the evidence, may be satisfied that he has not taken proper advantage of his having seen and heard the witnesses, and the matter will then become at large for the appellate court".

(See also the cases of KPONUGLO v. KODADJA (1933) 2 WA. C.A. 24 and KlZIDGUv. DOMPREH (1937) 2 WA.CA. 28],)

This Court has reiterated these same guidelines in following cases:—

1. Ayo Wilson v. James Samura & Anor S.C. Civ. App No. 3/74 judgment delivered on 3rd June 1975 (unreported);

2. Seymour Wilson v. Musa Abess — S.C. Civ. App. No.5/79, judgment delivered on 17th June 1981 (unreported);

3. J.S. Bangura v. Sierra Leone Electricity Corporation S.C. Civ. App. No.10/81, judgment delivered on 5th May 1983 (unreported); and

4. Amadu Wurie v. Edward Sholl mefun Wilson {supra).

Let me hasten to say that having evaluated the findings of facts by the trial judge in the instant case and bearing in mind those guidelines laid by this Court in the authorities I have just cited I see no justifiable reason for interfering with those findings of fact which the trial judge relied on to reach the conclusion that twelve months was reasonable notice for the termination of the agreement.

Having said that the question still has to be answered whether on the facts as found the trial judge was justified inholding that twelve months notice was reasonable in the circumstances.

Indeed, quite a lot of emphasis was placed by Counsel for both parties in this appeal on the similarities on the one hand and the dissimilarities on the other hand between the facts in the instant case and those in DecroWall International SA v Practitioners in Marketing Limited [1971] 2 All ER 216. With the greatest respect to Counsel on either side,fhough I find the Decro-Wall case helpful for some of the principles stated therein the emphasis placed on the similarities by the Counsel for the Appellant on the [p.242] one hand and on the dissimilarities by Counsel fof the Respondent on the other hand was not very helpful.

Indeed, according to Buckley L.J. in the Decro-Wall case the question what is reasonable notice must be answered in the light of all the relevant surrounding circumstances of each particular case

The question of what is reasonable notice to terminate a contract came before this Court in the case of Thomas O. Vincent v. B.P (Sierra Leone) Limited, S. C. Civ. App. No. 2/81 judgment delivered on the 3rd day of April 1984 (unreported). Though that case dealt with the termination ora contract of employment I find some of the principles laid down therein helpful and I do adopt them. The basic principle to be gleaned from that case is that what is reasonable notice to determinate a contract where the parties thereto have not made any express provision is a question of fact for the Court to determine. Further, in determining that question regard must be had to the circumstances of the case.

There is also cited in the Vincent case the following passage froni Batt on Master and Servant 5th Edition at page 78:—

"Decided cases do not conclude this matter, each case must depend on its own particular facts and a previous case of similar facts is merely a guide as to the future and not binding either on the judges or the jury as governing the case to be decided".

I have no hesitation in adapting that passage to the circumstances of the instant case.

What then are the particular facts of this case? I shall first set out those found by the trial judge. In addition, I shall highlight further facts which, in my opinion, tend to lend support to the conclusion I have reached that both the trial judge and the Court of Appeal were right in concluding that three months notice was not reasonable.

The trial judge accepted the evidence of PW1 that in 1971 when the agency started Castrol was a new product in the Sierra Leone market. John Michael Motors was faced with stiff competition from other brands and it [p.243] took them time and effort between 1971 and 1979 to conquer the market. He relied particularly on the following account by PW1 :

"In the beginning Castrol was a new product and we were faced with very strong competition from other brands and as such it took us quite a long time to break into the market. We had to do a lot in terms of adverts. e.g. Radio Commercials, Newspaper Adverts, Road Signs. We also sponsored Golf Tournaments in Freetown and Yengema and we gave out lots of donations to charity, Dances and Raffles. We gave out free samples of our products to Motor Companies. The adverts went on from 1971 up to 1979. John Michael Motors spent at least £20,000.00-£30,000.00 sterling on Adverts during this period. In the late 70's up to 1986 we knew one Mr Bruce Whorley with whom we worked for a period of over ten years. He wrote us a commendable letter and thanked us for our past efforts before we left Sierra Leon. From 1971-1975 we did at least one or more containers at an average value of between £4000-£5000 sterling per container.

From 1975-79 we did between 2-4 containers per annum at an average value of between £6000-£7000 sterling per container, 1979-80 we did a total of 10 containers at an average vale of between £8000-£10000 sterling per container, 1981-84 we did no imports but in 1985, 1988 we did one container only valued around £17000 sterling, 1986 we did a total of three containers at a total value of over £40,000.00 sterling, 1987 we did only one container valued at around £11,000.00 sterling."

"At the time we were given the notice in November 1987 we already had one container of products on the high seas consigned to us. The container arrived in mid December 1987. We had just over one month to sell the goods in the container. We also had old stock that we had to get rid of and we had to make new arrangements with other sub agents and customers. Most of their booked orders were cancelled."

He found as a fact that sometime in September 1987 the parties agreed to a variation of the agreement. Under the new arrangement John Michael Motors was to cease being sole agent/distributor of Castrol products in [p.244] Sierra Leone in exchange for a commission of 5% of the value of each container of Castrol products imported into Sierra Leone by third parties.

Immediately after this variation John Michael Motors was going to order three containers of Castrol products in respect of which they were going to open letters of credit for three containers of Castrol products. As it turned out, they had only been able to open the letter of credit for just one container by the agreement was terminated in early November 1987. This container of Castrol products was in fact still on the high seas when the agreement was terminated.

The trial judge also took note of the exchange of correspondence between the parties after the termination of the agreement. He seems to have put some weight on the various issues raised by Mr. John Michael in his letter of 26th November 1987, Exh "F" addressed to Mr. Scott to which I referred earlier.

These issues related inter alia to the nature of the relationship during the 17 years the agreement had been in force. He also took into account the reason proferred by Mr, Scott, the legal adviser of Castrol, for the termination of the agreement but accepted the evidence of PW1 that the only reason why John Michael Motors did not import more Castrol products before the termination of the agreement was because of the difficulty they were experiencing in obtaining foreign exchange.

Finally, he highlighted what, strangely in my view, were apparent similarities between the facts in the instant case and those in the DecroWall as follows:—

"1. The plaintiff company in the instant case imports markets distributes and sells motor vehicles in this country.

2 On or about 1971 the 1st defendant company appointed the plaintiff company as their Sole Agents in this country to Import, market, distribute and sell their products (Castrol Products) especially lubricants.

3 The Agreement was an oral Agreement and the liabilities of the parties vis-a-vis their duties and obligations is as is shown in the Decro-Wall case;"

[p.245]

I would have hesitated to hold that based on the above findings alone the trial judge was justified in holding that twelve months notice was reasonable for terminating the agreement.

However, there are other factors which I have myself taken into account based on the circumstances of this particular case which make me inclined to share the view that twelve months notice was reasonable.

First, the only inference one can possibly draw from the fact that the parties agreed to vary the agreement in September 1987, as stated above, was that it was the intention of each side that this new agreement was to last for more than six months. It could not have been in the contemplation of the parties that this new agreement was going to be terminated without adequate notice for a reason which was already known to both parties at the time when it was entered into i.e. that John Michael Motors was having difficulties getting foreign exchange to pay for their imports of Castrol products or even for the reason ultimately proferred by the legal officer of Castrol, viz. John Michael Motors' failure to market the products "aggressively".

Secondly, the Castrol knew in November 1987 that the container ordered by John Michael Motors under the new arrangement had not yet arrived in Sierra Leone and that it would take, most probably, more than three months to dispose of the products contained therein especially in the light of the fact that Datsun Motors were also now allowed to import the same products into Sierra Leone. In addition, there was the uncontroverted evidence of PW1 that some of the products ordered in 1986 had still not been sold at the time the agreement was terminated.

Thirdly, from the very wording of the letter of termination Castrol must have known that John Michael Motors had built up quite an outfit for the distribution and marketing of Castrol products in Sierra Leone which had to be dismantled. Not only did they not want John Michael Motors to stop importing Castrol products but they also wanted them to stop holding themselves out as distributors of Castrol products in Sierra Leone. My understanding of that is that within three months of the notice of termination John Michael Motors should have stopped offering Castrol products for sale in Sierra Leone as agents of Castrol.

[p.245]

I would have hesitated to hold that based on the above findings alone the trial judge was justified in holding that twelve months notice was reasonable for terminating the agreement.

However, there are other factors which I have myself taken into account based on the circumstances of this particular case which make me inclined to share the view that twelve months notice was reasonable.

First, the only inference one can possibly draw from the fact that the parties agreed to vary the agreement in September 1987, as stated above, was that it was the intention of each side that this new agreement was to last for more than six months. It could not have been in the contemplation of the parties that this new agreement was going to be terminated without adequate notice for a reason which was already known to both parties at the time when it was entered into i.e. that John Michael Motors was having difficulties getting foreign exchange to pay for their imports of Castrol products or even for the reason ultimately proferred by the legal officer of Castrol, viz. John Michael Motors' failure to market the products "aggressively".

Secondly, the Castrol knew in November 1987 that the container ordered by John Michael Motors under the new arrangement had not yet arrived in Sierra Leone and that it would take, most probably, more than three months to dispose of the products contained therein especially in the light of the fact that Datsun Motors were also now allowed to import the same products into Sierra Leone. In addition, there was the uncontroverted evidence of PW1 that some of the products ordered in 1986 had still not been sold at the time the agreement was terminated..

Thirdly, from the very wording of the letter of termination Castrol must have known that John Michael Motors had built up quite an outfit for the distribution and marketing of Castrol products in Sierra Leone which had to be dismantled. Not only did they not want John Michael Motors to stop importing Castrol products but they also wanted them to stop holding themselves out as distributors of Castrol products in Sierra Leone. My understanding of that is that within three months of the notice of termination John Michael Motors should have stopped offering Castrol products for sale in Sierra Leone as agents of Castrol.

In this regard, John Michael Motors was under an obligation too remove all reference in their letter head and other Company literature to their being distributors of Castrol products in Sierra Leone. What John Michael Motors was faced with was the task of undoing in three months a network of distributorship and sub-agencies which it had been built-up over 17 years, and this at a time when one-container load of Castrol products was on the high seas en route to them and an unspecified quantity of these products still remained unsold in their stores

In the course of the arguments in this court Mr. Berthan Macaulay Jnr, Counsel for Castrol, conceded that three months notice to terminate the agreement in the instant case was not reasonable but, quite rightly, he would not be drawn into saying what, in the circumstances of this case, was reasonable. Having reviewed the evidence, and for the several reasons I have stated above, I see no reason for reversing the conclusion of the trial judge and of the Court of Appeal that reasonable notice to terminate the agreement between the parties herein should have been twelve months notice. As a result grounds 1, 2 and 3 in the amended Notice of Appeal fail.

I now turn to the second issue raised by this appeal, namely, whether the award of £200,000.00 as general damages was justified in the circumstances of this case.

I am of the view that before seeking to answer this question it is ·important to state that an appeal against an award of damages is, like appeals generally, by way of rehearing and therefore an appellate court has power to review the award. (See ldrissa Conteh vs Abdul K. Kamara S.C. Civ. App No.2/79 judgment delivered 1st April 1980 (unreported))

However, there are certain principles on which an appellate court must apply in the exercise of its power to review an award of damages by a judge sitting alone. These have been laid down in along line of cases by our courts and are well established. In the ldrissa Conteh case this court stated that:

"the rule is that an appellate court will not interfere with the award of damages unless it is satisfied that the judge acted on wrong principles [p.247] of law, or has misapprehended the facts or has made a wholly erroneous estimate of the damages to which the claimant is entitled."

This Court then went on to cite with approval dicta from the following cases;

a) Flint v. Lovell (1935) 1. K.B. 354 at 360 per Greer LJ.;

b. Owen v. Sykes (1936) 1 K.B. 192 C.A. where Greer L.J. elaborated on the rule as stated in the Flint case in the following terms: —

"it has been laid down in Flint v. Lovell that this court does not readily interfere with the estimate of damages made by a learned judge at the trial. An assessment of damages is necessarily an estimate and an estimate is necessarily a matter of degree and it seems to me that unless we come to the conclusion that the learned judge took an erroneous view of the evidence as to the damage suffered by the plaintiff or made some mistake in giving weight to evidence that ought not to have affected his mind, or in leaving out of consideration something that ought to have affected his mind, we ought not to interfere".

c) Davies v Powell Duffryn Associated Collieries Limited (1942) A.C. 601 at 617 per Lord Wright that "The scale must go down heavily against the figure if the appellate court is to interfere, whether on the grounds of excess or insufficiency"

(See also Alimamy Turay v Cecilia Koroma S.C. Civ. App. 3/80 judgment delivered on the 17th December 1981, (unreported)).

I shall now proceed to apply the above principles to the facts of the instant case. According to the prayer in the amended Statement of Claim John Michael Motors claimed, inter alia, the following: —

"1. Damage for breach of the agency and distribution contract between the plaintiff and the 1st Defendant;

2) £240,000/00".

[p.248]

The breakdown of the sum of £240,000/00 was given in paragraph 13 of the Statement of Claim under the heading "Particulars of loss and damage" as follows: —

"a)Loss on sale of Castrol products; — £100,000/00;

b) Loss of profit on service of vehicles and sales of spare parts — £40,000/00;

c) Loss of sales on care, vans trucks motorcycles, generators and agricultural equipment — £60,000/00

d) Adverts and stationery — £30,000/00;

e) Re-organization of business — £10,000/00;

The trial judge treated the above as the same as "particulars of special damages" even though they were not pleaded as such.

The trial judge then went on to review the evidenced led in support of each of these items and rejected each of them. After referring to the cases of Chatin & Sons v. Epope (1963) GLR at 168 where Blay J.S.C. cited the following dicta in Benham-Carter v. Hyde Park Hotel Limited (1948) 64 TLR at 178: —

"Plaintiffs must understand that if they bring actions for damages it is for them to prove their damage}' it is not enough to write down the particulars, and so to speak, throw them at the face of the Court, saying "this is what I have lost, I ask you to give me these damages." They have to prove it."

the trial judge concluded as follows: —

"In the light of the claims put forward by Counsel for the Plaintiff Company I would be bold to say that he has merely presented a list of figures which they allege was [sic] amounts they have lost without attempting in any way to prove how he came about them and expects this Court to award them damages to the tune of these amounts claimed. I am, therefore in agreement with the submission of Counsel for the Ft Defendant Company that the Plaintiff Company's claim for special damages must fail in the circumstances".

To be able to determine whether the trial judge was right in rejecting John Michael Motors' claim for £240,000/00 by way of special damages it is [p.249] necessary to restate the basic principles of law governing the award of special damages.

First, it is important to deal with the distinction between general damages and special damages. Indeed, Counsel for the Appellant was unhappy about the use that the Court of Appeal made of the dicta of Lord McNaghten in Stroms Bruks Aktie v. John & Peter Hutchinson (1905) A.C. 515 at 526 in the following terms: —

"I am unable to see what difference it can make whether you claim damages generally and shew that an award of general damages would include and cover loss from which you seek relief, or whether you seek relief, or whether you seek compensation for a special loss and shew that the loss would more than be covered or compensated by an award of special damages."

In my view, it is useful to recognize the variety of meanings attributed to the terms "general damages" and "special damages". In McGregor on Damages 15th edition at pages 19-23 three meanings are identified:

The first meaning concerns liability coinciding with the distinction between the first and second rules in Hadley v Baxendale (1854) 9 Ex. 341 " best expressed by Lord Wright in Monarch S.S. Co. v Karlshamns Oljefabriker (1949) A.C. 196 at 221 where he said:

"the distinction drawn [viz. in Hadley v Baxendale] is between damages arising naturally (which means in the normal course of things) and cases where they are special and extraordinary circumstances beyond the reasonable provision of the parties. "

The second meaning, according to McGregor, concerns proof and is clearly illustrated in the contract case of Prehn v Royal Bank of Liverpool (1870) L.R.5 Ex. 92 where Martin B. distinguished between general damages being such as "the jury may give when the judge cannot point out any measure by which they are to be assessed, except the opinion and judgment of a reasonable man and on the other hand special damages which are given in respect of any consequences reasonably and probably arising from the breach complained of"

This type of general damages according to Mcgregor is usually concerned with non-pecuniary losses which are difficult to estimate, such as injury to reputation in defamation cases or pain and suffering in personal injury claims.

The third and find distinction between general and special damages concerns pleading and evidence. In my view, this is the most relevant for the instant case. In this context, special damages is that precise amount of pecuniary loss which the claimant can prove to have resulted from the particular facts set out in his pleading. They must be specifically pleaded and strictly proved. Examples are out of pocket expenses, loss of earnings and loss of profit. If proved, they will be awarded. If not proved, they will be rejected. On the other hand, general damages in this context are given in respect of such loss as the law presumes to result from the infringement of a legal right or duty. The loss must equally be proved but, invariably, the claimant cannot quantify exactly any particular items in it.

Though the calculation is a matter for either the jury or the judge sitting alone evidence to assist the Court in doing the calculation must be given if the plaintiff wishes to obtain substantial damages on the general head. (see Mcgregor (ibid) and Chitty on Contracts 27th edition, Volume 1, pages 1199/1200 under the rubric "Kinds of Damages-General and Special Damages."

Having thus disposed of the significance of the distinction between special damages and general damages, I now turn to the law relating to the measure of damages to which the innocent party may be entitled in contract cases. This is how it is stated in Halsbury's Law of England, 4th edition, Volume 12 at pp. 262-263 in paragraph 1174:

"In cases of breach of contract the contract breaker is responsible and responsible only for resultant damage which he ought to have foreseen or contemplated when the contract was made as being not unlikely or liable to result from such breach, or of which there was a serious possibility of real damage. The requisite degree of likelihood is in general higher than in tort since the parties make their own bargain, but special knowledge may apparently affix a contract [p.251] breaker with a greater liability than a tortfeasor with no special knowledge ".

Then follows paragraph 1175 in these terms:

"The requisite degree of foresight may be attributed to the contract breaker under what is known as the rule in Hadlev v Baxendale (supra) either (1) because the damage is such as may fairly and reasonably be regarded as arising naturally, that is to say according to the usual course of things, from the breach, or (2) because of special knowledge which he had at the time of making the contract.

These principles may be regarded as two branches of one rule, and may run into each other and, indeed, be one. It is not necessary that responsibility for the relevant loss should have been assumed as a term of the contract".

Finally in paragraph 1176 we find the following statement dealing, with reasonable foresight based upon presumed or actual knowledge:.

"Subject to the principles governing the degree of likelihood necessary to render a contract breaker liable for damage, a contract breaker should be presumed to have had knowledge of the fact of everyday life when making the contract, and this includes knowledge of the general course of business and of the general circumstance of the business of the parties at that time and place.

Further, the contract breaker may be liable for consequences resulting from special circumstances brought to his notice at the time of making the contract ".

Having evaluated the evidence in support of the items claimed by the John Michael Motors totalling £240,000/00 and treated, by the trial judge as a claim for special damages, I agree with the trial judge that the various claims were not strictly proven as required by law.

Having said that, was there any basis for the learned trial judge to have awarded £200,000/00 as general damages? The trial judge did not give [p.252] any breakdown of this award. Indeed, except in the case of general damages awarded for personal injuries where it is possible and desirable to apportion the award of general damages between various accepted heads, I doubt whether a judge is obliged to give a breakdown of an award of general damages. (See dicta of Livesey Luke C.J. in the case of ldrissa Conteh v Abdul J. Kamara (supra) and Alimamy Turay v Cecilia Koroma both decisions of this Court.)

Mr. Berthan Macaulay Jr., Counsel for Castrol, the Appellant, contended that the items under "Particulars of Loss and Damage" in the amended Statement of Claim were in the nature of general damages. For reasons which I have already stated above I entirely agree with him. However, he further contended that if the trial judge had found these claims not proven for the purposes of an award of special damages he should not have taken them into account in making an award of general damages. With respect I do not agree.

First, in a claim for general damages, the amount of compensation to be awarded for any loss suffered is at large. Evidence may be given in monetary terms of the loss suffered but this can only serve as a guide to the judge or jury in calculating the quantum of damages to be awarded.

As stated earlier, in awarding general damages, particularly in contract cases, where the law presumes that some loss has resulted from the breach of contract it is not for the claimant to quantify exactly any particular item to be included in the award. All he needs to do is to adduce evidence which will assist the court in making the calculation.

There is therefore a need to evaluate the evidence in the instant case to see if there are any facts which could have guided the trial judge in assessing general damages. All the evidence of the consequences of the appellant's failure to give adequate notice came from P.W1. In my opinion, the trial judge did take cognizance of such evidence. This becomes clear in the following passage from his judgment leading up to the award of the amount of £200,000/00:—

"P.W1 Victor Sayhoun gave the evidence as to what happened to the plaintiff company as a result of the Notice of Termination of the Agency dated 5th November 1987 [as follows]: —" At the time we were giving the notice in November 1987 we already had one [p.253] container of products on the high seas consigned to us. The container arrived in mid December 1987. We had just over a month to sell the good in the container. We had to sell the container at cost price and we lost out on the profit. We also had old stock that we had to got rid off at cost price and we also lost on the profit. We had to stop selling Castrol products after February 1988. We had to remove signs and do away with letter heads that had any reference to John Michael Motors being Agent of Castrol Ltd. We had to do away with business books such as Invoice and Cash Sales Books. Our entire business was virtually on the brinks of collapse. After February 1988 it took us at least two years to get our business back on its normal footing. We placed an order sometime between December 1987 and January 1988 that is after the notice of termination. The order was rejected outright. It was for a container of Castrol Products valued around outright. It was for a container of Castrol Produce valued around £11,000—£12,000 sterling. He lost majority of our customers as a result of the termination of the Agency. Customers used to come in with their trucks, cars, motor cycle to do servicing and buy oil, change Filters, Plugs and other parts. We used to have Agents and Sub-Agents whom we used to supply Castrol Products. As a result of the termination of the Agency we had to do some re-organisation. "

When examined on behalf of the 1st defendant the witness said: "In 1988 we had access to Castrol products from DatsunMotors although we had stopped importing from 1988-90 August. We were buying Castrol Products from our Garage. The products were available for the use of our customers. Our business was a company involved in the Importation of Motor vehicles, motorcycles, Lubricants, Garage Service, Spare Parts, Manufacturing of Steel Trucks etc. "

The trial judge then referred to Exhibit "E" the letter written by P.W.1 to Castrol after the termination of the agreement and to Exhibit "F" the reply thereto. He also referred to Exhibit "D" the letter of termination and to a passage from Salmon L.J,'s judgment in the Decro-Wall case and then concluded as follows: —

"Having said this and having taken into consideration the entire evidence and the submissions of Counsel on both sides. I award the [p.254] plaintiff company general damages of £200,000/00 and the costs of this action such costs to be taxed"

In my view, if the trial judge had properly evaluated the relevant evidence and drawn the right inferences there was no way he could have awarded the Respondents £200,000/00 as general damages.

I have in accordance with the principles stated earlier properly evaluated the evidence given on behalf of John Michael Motors which could assist this Court in assessing the general damages to be awarded for the failure of Castrol to give adequate notice for the termination of the agreement.

I shall now endeavour to apply the above principles to the particular facts of the instant case paying attention to the situation that obtained just before the termination of the agreement and to the period thereafter up till November 1988 when the requisite notice would have expired. In September 1987 the parties it would be recalled had agreed to a variation of the original agreement between Castrol, as supplier of Castrol products and John Michael Motors, as sole distributor in Sierra Leone of those products, which agreement had lasted sixteen years, that is, since 1971. During this period John Michael Motors, as wholesaler and retailer of Castrol products in Sierra Leone, had built up quite a network of market and sub-agencies for the products. According to P.W.1 between 1970 and 1980 John Michael Motors imported ten containers of Castrol products. Between 1981 and 1984 nothing was imported. In 1985 one container was imported. In 1986 John Michae1 Motors managed to import three containers load of Castrol products.

Against this background Castrol was willing to continue the relationship but on different terms. John Michael Motors was going to be allowed to import Castrol products for distribution and marketing in Sierra Leone but no longer as sole agents. To compensate them for this change in status Castrol was going to pay John Michael Motors 5% commission on the value of all Castrol products imported into Sierra Leone by third parties. Nothing else was to change.

Based on these new circumstances John Michael Motors arranged to import three container load of Castrol products into Sierra Leone. They managed to pay for one only because of the foreign exchange constraint that Castrol was aware of at the time of the variation. There then followed [p.255] the letter of termination of the relationship between the parties. This time it was to be a complete break. Not only was John Michael Motors no longer to be sole distributor of Castrol products but they were no longer to act as distributor of the products.

As a result Castrol refused to supply a second container load ordered by John Michael Motors in January 1988. On the available evidence, John Michael Motors was forced to sell the existing stock and the new stock ordered in September 1987 at cost losing the profit it would have made on the distribution and marketing of the stock in hand and the stock it was prevented from ordering because of Castrol' s breach.

John Michael Motors contend that they would have ordered between ten and twelve containers during the period the notice should have lasted i.e. between September 1987 and September 1988. Based on their track record over the years I hold that this was most improbable. The most John Michael Motors was likely to have ordered during the notice period was three containers as they did in 1986.

John Michael Motors also claims that it would have made a profit of #100,000/00 on the twelve containers. There is no evidence of what profit John Michael Motors had made in previous years. Besides, since September 1986, for the first time, John Michael Motors was being faced with competition from a third party, viz. Datsun Motors.

If John Michael Motors was to be believed on the quantum of profit it stood to make in 1986/1987 it would have earned the equivalent in leones of £8333/33 for each container ordered after the termination of the contract. But John Michael Motors has failed to take into account the diminution in their sales as a result of the competition from Datsun Motors and the 5 percent commission it was going to receive on the value of the products ordered by Datsun Motors or any other third party.

Even if the trial judge allowed John Michael Motors the full amount of profit estimated for the three containers which I have held was the maximum it was likely to order the total profit lost would have been in the region of the equivalent in leones of £25,000/00.

For all these reasons, I hold that the award of £200,000/00 was excessive and in no way justified by the evidence. I would defer the question of what [p.256] figure I would substitute in lieu of the £200,000/00 until I have answered the third question i.e. whether the trial judge was right in making the award in foreign currency instead of in leones.

Indeed, the next question I have to answer in this appeal is whether the Court of Appeal was right in upholding the award of damages by the trial judge in foreign currency, to wit, pound sterling. Before attempting to answer this question, I should state that a distinction ought to be drawn between the pronouncement of a judgment in foreign currency by our courts and the enforcement of a money judgment in any currency other than leones.

As far as the issue of enforcement is concerned, because the leone is the only legal tender in Sierra Leone, no one can compel a judgment debtor to satisfy a money judgment in any currency other than the leone. One may retort that it makes no difference then whether the judgment is pronounced in leones or in some other currency since when it comes to enforcement the only relevant currency is the leone. But on closer examination the problem is not so simple, for where a judgment is pronounced in a foreign currency and the judgment is not satisfied so that enforcement becomes necessary, this raises issues which could be problematic. The most important of these issues is the answer to the question: for the purpose of enforcement, what rate of exchange should be utilized to convert the foreign currency award into leones? Should it be the rate of exchange prevailing at the date the cause of action arose, or should it be that at the date of judgment, or yet still should it be that at the date of payment?

As illustrated in the case of Attorney-General of the Republic of Ghana and the Ghana National Petroleum Corporation v Texaco Overseas Tankships Limited (The "Texaco Melbourne") [1994] 1 Lloyd's Law Report 473 (herein after referred as "The Texaco Melbourne"), to which I shall be returning later, the answer to each of these questions could provide a result that might appear unjust depending on whether one is the judgment creditor or the judgment debtor.

However, before addressing the question of the consequences and implications of the pronouncement of a judgment in foreign currency, I have to address the fundamental question of whether our courts do have jurisdiction to pronounce a judgment in foreign currency.

It is significant to note that as far as my research reveals this is the first time that this issue has come up for determination by this. Court. In searching for authority my first source was statute law. As our laws now stand there is no legislation which prohibits the pronouncement by our courts of any judgment in foreign currency. In saying this, I have taken cognizance of the provisions of Exchange Control Act Cap 265 of the Laws of Sierra Leone, 1960 and amendments thereto. I have come to the conclusions that its provisions may only apply when one comes to deal with the issue of enforcement and the receipt and disposal of the proceeds of a foreign currency judgment satisfied, in a currency other than the leone.

The next source I turned to was precedent or judge-made law. As I said earlier, there is no decision of this Court bearing on the issue. As a result, I have had to look elsewhere, to those jurisdictions whose precedents have guided our decisions over the years as illustrated earlier in the instant case regarding several other issues. The most obvious source in this regard is English case law. So I pose the question: how then has the case law on this point evolved in England?

Prior to 1975, there was a basic presupposition that, procedurally, an action could not be brought in England for recovery or payment of a sum expressed in foreign currency. It could only be brought for a sum expressed in sterling, recoverable by way of damages. This was reaffirmed by the House of Lords in the leading case of Re United Railways of the Havana and Regla Warehouses, Ltd [1960] 2 All ER 332 where Viscount Simmonds had this to say:

"it is established by authority binding on this House that a claim for damages for breach of contract or for tort in terms of a foreign currency must be converted into sterling at the rate prevailing at the date of breach or tortuous act"

Viscount Simmonds continued by stating that a claim for damages and one for debt could not be distinguished as had been contended in the Havanna case where the claim was for payment of a debt owed in dollars.

Lord Denning put it more emphatically in the following terms:

"And if there is one thing more clear in our law, it is that a claim must be made in sterling and the judgment given in sterling. We do not give [p.258] judgment in dollars any more than the United States courts give judgment in sterling." [1960] 2 All ER at 351.

But this was in 1960. By 1975 Lord Denning, sitting in the Court of Appeal in the case of Schorsch Meir Gmbh v. Hennin [1975 l All ER at 156, 157, had had a change of heart and was part of the majority of that Court which held that changed circumstances had nullified the reasons which had led the House of Lords to the formulation of the rules in the Havanna case, and that applying the maxim "cessante ratione cessat ipsa lex" made it necessary or at least permissible for that Court to declare that the rules of law so established and endorsed were no longer of binding force-in effect were abrogated

This refusal by the Court of Appeal to follow the rules laid down by the House of Lords in the Havanna case presented Bristow J. with a dilemma when he came to decide the case of Milangos v. George Frank (Textiles) Ltd [1975] 1 All ER at 1079 which dilemma he expressed in the following terms:

"I am faced with a judgment of the majority of the Court of Appeal, which in its application to the issue raised before me says that a rule of English law taken for granted by the Court of Appeal and the House of Lords for some 350 years is no longer a rule of English law"

When the Milangos case came before the House of Lords Lord Wilberforce sought to answer the question whether any fresh considerations of any substance had emerged since 1961 which should induce the House to follow a different rule from that laid down in the Havanna case. He then identified several considerations which he held were significant among which are the following:

a) The courts had evolved a procedure under which orders could be made for payment of foreign currency debts in foreign currency. The form which had been approved by the Court of Appeal in the Schorsch Meir case was expressed thus: "It is adjudged .... that the defendant do pay the plaintiff [the sum in foreign currency] or the sterling equivalent at the time of payment";

b) The situation as regards currency stability had substantially changed since 1961. World currency were no longer fixed or fairly stable in value but were then "floating" i.e. they no longer had fixed value from day to day and that was true of the sterling;

c) This state of facts under "b" above had become recognised in those commercial circles closely concerned with commercial contracts. In the case of Jugoslavenska Oceanska Plovidba v. Castle Investment Co Inc. [1973] 3 All ER 498 the Court of Appeal had held that an arbitration award expressed in terms of US dollars was valid;

d) In the Halcyon the Great [1973] an order had been made in admiralty for the sale of a ship in US dollars, and for the lodgement of the price in a separate dollar account.

Lord Wilberforce then continued by stating:

"These considerations and the circumstances I have set forth, when related to the arguments which moved their Lordships in the Havanna Railways case, lead me to the conclusion that, if these circumstances had been shown to exist in 1950, some at least of their Lordships, assuming always that the interests of justice in the particular case so required, would have been led, as one of them very notably has been led, to take a different view. "

His Lordship then concluded as follows;

"The law on this topic is judge made; it has been built up over the years from case to case. It is entirely within the House's duty, in the course of administering justice, to give the law a new direction in a particular case, where, on principle and in reason, it appears right to do so. I cannot accept the suggestion that because a rule is long established only legislation can change it-that may be when the rule is so deeply entrenched that it has infected the whole legal system, or the choice of a new rule involves more far-reaching research than courts can carry out.

This is very sound reasoning and I would readily adopt it.

Though after the Milangos case it became clear that English courts could pronounce judgment for a sum of money expressed in a foreign currency the matter did not end there. The next question, where there were several currencies to choose from, was the following: based on what principle was the appropriate currency to be identified? This was resolved by the House Lords in the two subsequent landmark cases decided together and reported in (1979) L Lloyds Report 1 and in (1979) A.C. 685.

The first, Owners of M V Eleqtheroma v Owners of M.V. Despina R. ('The Despina R.) was concerned with a claim 'for damages for tort whilst the second, Services Europe Atlantique Sud (Seas) of Paris v Stockholm Rederiaktiebolag Svea of Stockholm (The Folias) concerned a claim in foreign currency for damages for breach of a contract of carriage by sea. It is not necessary for present purposes to go into the details of the principles laid down in the Despina R as they are not applicable here. On the ,other hand, the principles laid down by Lord Wilberforce in The Folias may properly be applied to the instant case. I shall state them briefly borrowing the dicta of Lord Goff in the case of The "Texaco Melbourne":

" First, it is necessary to ascertain whether there is an intention, to be derived from the terms of the contract, that damages for breach of contract should be awarded in any particular currency or currencies.

In the absence of such an intention the damage should be calculated in the currency in which the loss was felt by the plaintiff or which most truly expresses his loss".

The above principles are sound and have indeed have been frequently applied by the courts in this country in cases between landlords and tenants for the recovery of arrears of rent or mesne profits where the evidence disclosed that it had been agreed by the parties that payment of rent was to be effected in some currency other than the leone. The same is also true of admiralty cases where the practice has been to order the payment of damages or to settle maritime claims in foreign currency (see the case entitled CC487/96 lbrahim Bazzy & Sons (a firm) v. The Owners and/or Persons Interested in the Vessel "The Santiago de Cuba ", judgment of Nylander J. delivered on the 4th day of October 1996) (unreported).

However, it is plain from the totality of the evidence in the instant case that the parties to the distributorship agreement never intended that damages for its breach were to be awarded in any foreign currency. The currency in which the loss suffered by John Michael was felt or to put it another way the one which most truly expresses its loss was the leone. Foreign currency considerations should never have entered into the calculation of the damages due John Michael Motors for breach by Castrol of the agreement for distributorship. The measure of damages in a case of this kind is the difference between what the plaintiff would have earned if the appropriate period of notice had been given to terminate the contract less .,what he actually earned from the date of the notice until the end of the correct period of notice, in this case between September 1987 and September 1988.

It is clear in this case that the currency in which the Respondent carried on business in Sierra Leone was at all material times the leone. Whatever profit it earned was in leones. The only time a foreign currency came into the reckoning was when John Michael Motors had to settle Castrol's invoices for the supply of Castrol products.

Having said this, this Court is faced with the dilemma arising from the fact that the only available evidence of the loss suffered by John Michael Motors as a result of Castrol's breach of the distributorship agreement is in a foreign currency, viz. pounds sterling. At no time throughout the trial nor in the Court of Appeal was any attempt made to give evidence of the leone equivalent prevailing at the date of the breach. Presumably, this was what misled the trial judge in expressing the award of damages in pound sterling.

Now what are the options open to this Court? Should it ignore the available evidence and refuse to make an award because of its inability to place a leone value on the loss suffered by the Respondent? In my view this would not be just.

The proper solution, I venture to say would be, to remit the case to the High Court with a direction that it should take further evidence on the exchange rate of the pound sterling to the leone at the date the cause of action arose.

I also feel convinced the case ought to be remitted for another reason. Though John Michael Motors claimed interest at the trial the trial judge omitted to address this issue. In my view, the trial judge should have exercised the discretion granted to him by the Section 4 of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act Cap 19 of the Laws of Sierra Leone 1960 to award interest on the amount awarded as general damages at the appropriate rate from the date of breach till the date of judgment. Such interest will compensate John Michael Motors for the delay that has occurred in this case between the date of breach and the date of judgment and for the depreciation of the leone that has taken place since the date of breach and of which this court is bound to take judicial notice. (see The "Texaco Melbourne ").

I therefore order that this case be remitted to the High Court solely for the purpose of receiving evidence as to the exchange rate between the pound sterling and the leone and as to the prime rate of interest for overdrafts prevailing, in both cases, at the date of the breach i.e. the 7th November 1987. I further order that this be done not later than the 23rd June 2005.

Thereafter, I shall make the final orders in this appeal.

This is a continuation of the judgment I started to deliver on the 13th June 2005. Pursuant to the Order made by this Court on that date that the action herein be remitted to the High Court for the sole purpose of adducing evidence as to the prime rate of interest for overdrafts prevailing on the 17th day of November 1987 as well as the rate of exchange between the leone and the pound sterling on the same date i.e. the 7th day of November 1987 the matter came up before the High Court on the 29th June 2005.

According to the certified record of proceedings at the High Court on the 29th June 2005 two additional witnesses testified in support of the Plaintiffs case. The first witness testified that the prime rate of interest for overdraft facilities at the relevant date was Le30/00 per centum per annum.

This evidence was not controverted. The second additional witness testified that the buying rate of exchange between the pound sterling and the leone as at 7th November 1987 was Le39/80 to £1/00, sterling the selling rate being Le39/99 to £1/00 sterling. This evidence was also not controverted.

I accept both pieces of evidence and would rely on them in arriving at a final decision in this matter as to the quantum of damages John Michael Motors the Plaintiff in the Court below should have been awarded and the rate of interest to which it is entitled.

I had earlier said that the relevant currency for the award of damages in this case is the leone. However, it is pertinent to observe that based on the additional evidence that has been adduced pursuant to the Order of this Court, it is clear that there has been a significant fluctuation in the value of the leone between the date of the breach in 1987 and the present day value of which I take judicial notice. The House of Lords was confronted with a similar situation in The "Texaco Melbourne" (1974) 1 Lloyds Law Reports 472 and this was how Lord GOFF OF CHIEVELEY addressed the issue at page 476:

"We have at all times to bear in mind that fluctuations in the relevant currency between the date of breach and the, date of judgment are not taken into account. The award of damages is assessed as at the date of breach and, the appropriate currency (usually sterling) in which that award is to be made as at date is identified. Delay between the date of breach and the date of judgment is compensated for by the award of interest (as indeed is delay in the satisfaction of the judgment). But, as I have said, no account is taken of fluctuations in the relevant currency as against other currencies between the date of breach and the date of judgment.

So, if that currency appreciates as against other currencies, no compensating reduction is made in the amount of the award,' nor is any compensating increase made if the currency depreciates. Indeed, it would in any event not be easy to select and identify another particular currency against which any such appreciation or depreciation is to be measured".

I would readily adopt the above principles in this case and hereby do so.

What rate of interest and for what period should this court award on the damages as assessed? This is governed by section 4 (1) of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, Cap 19 of the Laws of Sierra Leone 1960 which provide as follows:

"In any proceedings tried in any court of record for the recovery of any debt or damages, the court may, if it thinks fit, order that shall [p.264] be included in the sum for which judgment is given interest at such rate as it thinks fit on the whole or any part of the debt or damages for the whole or any part of the period between the date when the cause of action arose and the date of the judgment".

In this case the cause of action arose on the 7th November 1987 and judgment was delivered by the High Court on the 23rd November 1992.

Based on the totality of the evidence before the Court, I am of the view that the award of £200,000/00 was excessive and there was no basis for making the award in pound sterling. I would therefore set aside the award of £200,000 made by the trial Judge as general damages to John Michael Motors, the plaintiff in the court below, and in lieu thereof make an award of general damages in leones. To that extent, the appeal succeeds and I make the following Orders:—

1. That Castrol, the Appellant, do pay to John Michael Motors, the Respondent, the sum of Lel,000,000/00 as general damages;

2. That the Appellant do pay the Plaintiff simple interest on the said sum of Le1,000,000/00 at the rate of Le30/00 per centum per annum from the 7th day of November 1987 till the 23rd day of November 1992, the date of the date of the judgment in the Court below;

3. Each party to bear its own costs here and in the courts below.

Let me before I close express my gratitude to Counsel on both sides for the invaluable assistance I received from them during the argument of this appeal.

RULING

WRIGHT J.S.C.

This is an application on behalf of the Defendant/Applicant by way of motion dated the 15th April 2002 for the following orders:—

1. That the Originating Notice of Motion dated 11th day of April 2002 and all subsequent proceedings be set aside on the grounds of irregularity to wit:- that the same is not properly before this Honourable Court for the following reasons:

(a) The proceedings commenced by Originating Notice of Motion herein dated 11th April 2002 by the Plaintiff has failed to comply strictly with the provisions of the said section 32 (2) of the Electoral Laws Act. No.2 of 2002 as no objection to the nomination of the defendant herein has in fact been lodged with the Supreme Court within seven days of the publication of the relevant Government Notice No 129 published in the Sierra Leone Gazette No 17 of the 4th April 2002.

(b) That the said Originating Notice of Motion is irregular in form and content in that through it purports to invoke the Original Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, it does not comply with. Rule 89 (1) of Public Notice No.1 of 1982 which requires such an Originating Notice of Motion to be in form 8 set out in the first schedule of the said Rules nor as required by Rule 98 of the said Supreme Court Rules Public Notice No 1 of 1982 nor does it comply with the relevant provisions of the High Court Rules governing the issue of an Originating Notice of Motion as supplimented by the Rules procedure practice and forms in force in the High Court of Justice in England on the 1st day of January 1960 in accordance with Order 52 Rule 3 of the High Court Rules.

(c) Any other or further reliefs.

(d) The costs of this application be borne by the Plaintiff,

The application is supported by the affidavits of Ransford Johnson sworn to on the 12th and 15th April 2002 respectively. There were several exhibits attached to the said affidavit including the Originating Notice of Motion dated 11th April 2002 which they are seeking to set aside and the Sierra Leone Gazette of 4th April 2002.

Counsel for the Defendant submitted that the Electoral Laws Act 2002 as amended confers original jurisdiction on the Supreme Court. The said Electoral Laws created a separate regime for the objection of candidates with the lodging of objections as required by section 32 (2) of the Electoral Laws Act 2002 as amended which is a condition precedent and must all be completed within 30 days. He reiterated that it was incumbent upon the person making the objection to fix a date promptly thereafter for the objection to be heard. Time being of the essence. He submitted that the notice of intention to object was not an objection. There was no return date in the originating notice of motion dated 11th April 2002. He further submitted that strict compliance was necessary in this case. He referred to Bennion Statutory Interpretation 1992 2nd Edition by Butterworth where directory and mandatory requirements were fully discussed. He concluded that the compliance was mandatory, and that non-compliance was fatal and incurable. He also referred to several authorities in support of his submissions.

On ground 1, the Electoral Laws Act No 2 of 2002 Sec 32 (3) states "The Government Notice referred to in sub section (1) shall direct that any citizen of Sierra Leone may lodge an objection if any, against the nomination of a presidential candidate but that such objection shall be lodged with the Supreme Court within seven days of the publication of the Government Notice.

3. Any objection against the nomination of any presidential candidate shall be heard by the Supreme Court made up of three Justices whose decision shall be given within thirty days of the lodging of the objection."

In computing time for the purposes of an Act, according to sec 39(1) (a) of the Interpretation Act 1971 No.8 of 1971 "a period reckoned by days from the happening of an event or the doing of any act or thing done shall be deemed to be exclusive of the day on which the event happens or the act or thing done.

[p.3]

The publication in the gazette stating the nomination of Alhaji Dr. Ahmed Tejan Kabbah was on the 4th April 2002. The purported originating notice of motion to object was filed oil the 11th April 2002. In view of the Electoral Laws Act No.2 of 2002 as amended section 32 (2) there was no objection filed.

I now turn to Exhibit RJ 1 which is the originating notice of motion dated 11th April 2002 which reads:

"Take Notice that at a date, time and place appointed by the Honourable Supreme Court the Applicant intends to object to the presidential nomination of Alhaji Dr. Ahmed Tejan Kabbah pursuant to section 32 (2) of the Electoral Laws Act No 2 of 2002 as amended etc."

The above does not comply with the provision of Rule 89 (1) of the Supreme Court Rules Public Notice No 1 of 1982. This rules states:

(a) Save as otherwise provided in these Rules, an action brought to invoke the original jurisdiction of the court shall be commenced by originating notice of motion in form 8 set out in the first schedule of these rules which shall be signed by the Plaintiff or his Counsel.

Is the non-compliance mandatory? In Bennion Statutory Interpretation 2nd edition by Butterworth page 28 under Section 10 mandatory and directory requirements states:

"(1) This section applies where:—

(a) a person ("the person affected") may be affected by thing done under an enactment, and

(b) the legal effectiveness of that thing is subject to the performance by the same or any other person ("the person bound") of some statutory requirement ("the relevant requirement"), and

(c) the relevant requirement is not complied with, and

(d) the intended consequence of the failure to comply is not stated in the legislation

2. In ascertaining, in a case where this section applies, the effect of the failure to comply with the relevant requirement, it is necessary to determine whether the requirement was intended by the legislature to be mandatory or merely directory. For this purpose it maybe relevant to consider whether the person affected and the person bound are the same, and whether the thing done under the enactment is beneficial or adverse to the person affected.

3. Where the relevant requirement is held to be mandatory, the failure to comply with it will invalidate the thing done under the enactment.

4. Where the relevant requirement is held to be merely directory, the failure to comply with it will not invalidate the thing done under the enactment; and the law will be applied as nearly as may be as if the requirement has been complied with" In [p.4] deciding one has to look at the consequences Parliament intended to follow when making the statute. I agree that strict compliance is mandatory in this case.

In Opong v Attorney General & Ors. in the Supreme Court of Ghana Law Reports 2000 page 275 it was unanimously held that the defendant's preliminary objection to the plantiff's writ per Bamford-Addo J.S.C. would be struck out because the requirements in Rule 45 (1) of the Supreme Court Rules 1996 (C116) were not complied with by the plaintiff, no action have been initiated by a writ. The other documents i.e. the statement of case filed by the plaintiff and an affidavit were of no consequence and the same are null and void. The plaintiff's request in the supplementary affidavit filed on 30th September 1999 that the said invalid documents should be attached to the writ filed on 30th September 1999 is misconceived. It is not for the Registrar to rectify lapses in the filing of papers for parties who failed to comply with rules of procedure, nor has he any power to do so. Neither can invalid and void documents be resurrected and given life by attaching same to a later valid document. Raman vs. Cumarasmy (1965) WLR 8 PC, Revoco Vs Prentice Hall Incorporated (1969)WLR 157, CA were cited.

Per Bamford-Addo JSC said in this case "many a time litigants and their Counsel have taken the rules of procedure lightly and ignored them altogether as if those rules were made in vain and without any purpose. Rules of procedure setting time limits are important for the administration of Justice, they are meant to prevent delays by keeping the wheels of justice rolling smoothly. If this were not so, parties would initiate actions in court and thereafter go to sleep only to wake up at their own appointed time to continue with such litigation. “I entirely agree with the decision and I adopt it.

In view of the fact that Rule 103 of the Rules of the Supreme Court is not applicable in the present matter I now turn to Rule 98 of the Supreme Court Rules which states “where no provision is expressly made in these Rules relating to the original and the supervisory jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, the practice and procedure for the time being of the High Court shall apply mutantis mutandis”.

This Rule 98(1) of the Supreme Court Rules Public No. of 1982 empowers the Court to use the practice and procedure in the High Court in the absence of a relevant rule in the Supreme Court Rules. The practice in the High Court in application before the court in trials if the plaintiff or his counsel fails to appear and reasons for their non appearance were not given to this court the matter is struck out for want of prosecution. This court has already adjourned once to allow the plaintiff to appear by himself or his counsel but he has not appeared and there was an affidavit of service filed. The law requires that a person must register an objection in the Supreme Court. If such a person or his counsel does not appear the court is left with no alternative but to strike out the originating notice of motion.

In view of what has been said supra the matter is struck out.

The Background

It is Government's policy to root out corruption in the public service. Pursuant to this policy the Anti-Corruption Act, 2000 Act NO.1 of 2000 was passed. The Act does not discriminate between public officers by reason of positions they hold or status in the society. Even judges can fall foul with it The legislation provides for a Commission whose functions include the investigation of instances of alleged or suspected corruption referred to it by any person or authority or which has come to its attention whether by complaint or otherwise and the taking of such steps as may be necessary for the eradication or suppression of corrupt practices. Where after an investigation, the Commissioner is of the opinion that the findings of the Commission warrant consideration by the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice as to whether criminal action may be taken thereon, he sends the report of the investigation to the Attorney-General. An adverse finding of guilt of corrupt acquisition of wealth is to be referred to the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice. If after examining the report the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice decides that there are sufficient grounds to prosecute the public officer, he pursues the case in the courts.

Sometime in July 2000, an acting judge of the High Court was suspected of having offended against the Act. That judge is the Hon. Mr. Justice Muctaru Ola Taju-Deen. The Commissioner of the Anti-Corruption Commission sent a report of an investigation on the judge to the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice. The judge was eventually charged on a 12 count indictment and he appeared before the High Court. On 24 August 2000 while the trial was in one Court, Justice Taju-Deen applied to another judge of the High Court for leave to proceed on certiorari for the report of the Commission on him to be quashed. The leave was granted. On the 26 August 2000, he made a second application to the same judge for quashing the report. That application was dismissed. Later, he made a fresh exparte application to the Supreme Court for leave to proceed on certiorari to quash the report. Leave was granted. Under the 1991 Constitution, he can apply for certiorari to the High Court (section 134) or to the Supreme Court (section 125).

The ex-parte application

On an ex-parte application made to the Supreme Court on the 6 day of December 2000 the Respondent herein then applicant sought the following orders:—

(1) An Order granting leave to the Applicant herein Muctaru Ola Taju-Deen for an Order of Certiorari to issue both under the Common Law and section 125 of the 1991 Constitution of Sierra Leone to bring up to the Supreme Court for the purpose of its being quashed the purported Report and/or the purported undated Extracts of the alleged Findings of the Anti-Corruption Commission signed by the Commissioner of the Anti-Corruption that evidence exists of alleged non-existing offences against the Plaintiff herein under a Non-existing Act to wit the purported Anti-Corruption Commission Act 2000 upon grounds of failure to observe one of the fundamental principles of Natural Justice, Committal of Error of Law on the face of the Records and several other errors of law, want of [p.12] jurisdiction and/or excess of jurisdiction, as set forth and contained in the copy Statement herewith exhibited to the affidavit in support of the Application.

(2) An interim Stay of the Criminal proceedings Holden at High Court NO.1 before the Hon. Mrs Justice Patricia Macauley in the case between THE STATE vs. HONOURABLE JUSTICE MUCTARU OLA TAJU-DEEN pending the hearing and determination of the application for the Order of Certiorari if the leave is granted by the Honourable Supreme Court under the first Order prayed for above.

(3) Such further OR other Orders as this Honourable Court may deem fit to make.

(4) That the costs of and occasioned by this Application be costs in the cause.

The Motion was supported by the Affidavit of Muctaru Ola Taju-Deen sworn to the 2 December 2000 to which were attached several exhibits.

On the 19 December 2000 this Court sitting with three justices granted the orders prayed for except the one in para 2 of the motion paper. The Court also made the consequential orders that the Respondents be served the relevant papers within four days of this order and that the application for the Order of Certiorari be heard on the 2 January 2001.

The application now before this Court

Before 2 January 2001, the Commissioner of the Anti-Corruption Commission, The Anticorruption Commission and The State represented by the Learned Attorney-General and Minister of Justice, the 1st, 2nd and 3rd Applicants respectively, filed a Notice of Motion dated 20 December 2000 which is the subject-matter of the Application now before us seeking an order that the Order made by this Court on the 19 December 2000 granting the respondent herein leave to apply for an order of Certiorari to issue be discharged on the following grounds:—

(1) That in making the application ex-parte resulting in the granting of the said order the respondent herein failed to make full and frank disclosure of material facts and/or did not fulfil the requirements of observing the utmost good faith in the making of the said ex-parte application in that (a) he failed to disclose to this Honourable Court the fact that he had earlier made identical application to the High Court against the same parties and the application was dismissed by the High Court (b) in the said application the High Court had determined the issue as to whether an Order for certiorari will lie against the Anti-Corruption Commission.

(2) That the Applicant's proper course, after the earlier application referred to in (1) above had been dismissed by the High Court was, in law, not to file an identical application in this Honourable Court but to appeal against the Order of the High Court the said dismissing earlier application.

(3) That the Respondent is precluded by the doctrine of estoppel per rem judicatam from making an application the subject-matter of the application herein,

(4) Such further or other Orders as this Honourable Court may deem fit to make.

[p.13]

The Motion is supported by two affidavits sworn to by Lahai Momoh Farmah, Senior State Counsel. The first, sworn to on 20 December 2000, exhibits the Judge's Summons of the 26 August 2000 which the applicants alleged had been dismissed by the High Court (exhibit “A”) together with nine other exhibits among which are (a) a Statement dated 26 August 2000 filed by the Applicant in support of the judge's Summon's (exhibit “D”), (b) the Respondent's ex-parte Motion of the 6 December 2000 before this Court (exhibit “F”) and (c) the order nisi of this Court made on the 20 December 2000 (exhibit “J”). These specific exhibits are the ones most relevant to the matter now before us. The second affidavit, a supplemental affidavit, sworn to on 30 December 2000, exhibits a certified copy of the whole proceedings in the judge's Summons. (exhibit “K”) and the ruling of the judge (exhibit “L”).

The respondent filed an Affidavit in Opposition dated 20 December 2000 in which he exhibited a certified extract of the proceedings in the judge's summons (exhibit “MOTD”). By this exhibit, the respondent for the first time made a clean breast to this Court of the judge's Summons.

The Arguments

Mr. Berewa, Attorney-General, Counsel for the applicants, underlined two issues as forming the nerve centre of the case for the applicants. One is that the respondent failed to disclose material facts to this Court when he made his exparte application for an order nisi, the material fact being the proceedings of the judge's Summons which culminated in a decision. The other is that the decision by the judge in that summons raises the issue of judicata per rem in respect of the Respondent's exparte application.

Non-Disclosure

To buttress his posture on the effect of non-disclosure, Mr. Berewa referred us to two cases: The Hagen 1908 — 101 All. ER 21 and The Andria 1984 ALLJI.ER 1126. In The Hagen the facts of which I find unnecessary for repetition in this judgment, Farwell LJ said at page 26:—

“In as much as the application was made exparte, the fullest disclosure was necessary, as in all exparte applications, and a failure to make a full disclosure would justify the court in discharging the full order, even though the party might afterwards be in a position to make another application.”

In the case of The Andria, concerned with an arrest of a ship on a warrant based on an affidavit filed by the plaintiffs which failed to disclose the existence of arbitration proceedings or that arbitration was actively pursued, and the defendant's protection and indemnity club furnished an undertaking to the plaintiffs that the club would pay any sum awarded to the plaintiffs in return for the ship's release from arrest, Robert Goff LJ had this to say at page 1135:—

“Though we do not for one moment suggest any bad faith on the part of the deponent, the fact is that the affidavit sworn to lead the warrant of arrest failed to disclose facts which were material to the issue of the warrant; and, as a result of the non-disclosure, the warrant was issued and thereafter the ship was arrested. It follows, in our judgment, that the invocation by the [p.14] appellants of the court's jurisdiction to arrest the ship amounted in the circumstances of the case to an abuse of process of the court and that the club's letter of undertaking must be discharged".

Exhibits “K” and “L” of the supplemental affidavit in Opposition which provides the first inkling of what transpired before the judge, though belatedly, tells the whole story. Exhibit “K” gives in detail arguments by both sides on the objection to the jurisdiction of the court to hear the Summons on the ground that the Anti-Corruption Commission was neither a court nor an adjudicating authority and therefore the court was not competent to quash the report of its findings in exercise of its supervisory powers over inferior courts and adjudicating authorities pursuant to section 134 of the 1991 Constitution. Exhibit “L” is the ruling of the judge that the Commission was neither a court nor an adjudicating authority. On the basis of these exhibits and the authorities cited, Mr. Berewa asks for the exparte order nisi given by us to be discharged.

In reply to this particular issue, Mr. Terry, Counsel for the respondent, made five submissions which I can glean from his several submissions. Three of them appear to be general on the whole issue in controversy and the others are specific to the question of non-disclosure. One submission is that once an order nisi has been granted the Court cannot listen to a complaint against the order before the substantive hearing for the order of certiorari but that it may do so at the hearing when it is sought to make the order absolute. The second is that if at all the Court can look into the complaint before the substantive hearing, the party affected by the order nisi must show that the court was wrong in making the order. The third is that a court has a discretion to set aside its exparte order but in doing so the court should hold a balance between the ordinary citizens inter se and the citizens on the one hand and the state on the other. For this submission he relies on a passage from the judgment of Kutubu CJ in the case of The State vs. Adel Osman and Others [19881] LRC (Const) 212 at 221. The fourth is that there is no obligation on the exparte applicant to make a full and frank disclosure of material facts but that all he needs to do is to show that he has a locus standi and to establish a prima facie case. For this submission he relies on the decision of the court in Harry Will vs. Attorney-General & Minister of Justice, Mis. App. No. &/99, (unreported, ruling delivered on 23 March 2000). The fifth submission is that the principle of full and frank disclosure is elementary but that it does not apply to certiorari proceedings. With due respect for the high quality of the research ability of counsel, I find nothing in the cases cited by him that supports the propositions which he posits. In particular, in the Harry Will case, Luke CJ merely stated the conditions on which an order can be made on an exparte application. Non-disclosure of material facts was not in issue and therefore the Court did not address itself to it. I will come back to the first three submissions later.

Disclosure of material facts is, to my mind, incorporated into the principle of natural justice encapsulated in the doctrine of “audi alteram partem” which is cardinal in the rule of law. No man can be condemned behind his back in respect of either his person or his property. Exparte applications are merely intended to enable a litigant to have an expeditious access to the court without notifying the other party in a matter between them when that litigant's legal right is in danger and if he is to give the other party a proper notice of his intention to go to court, delay will defeat the ends of justice. Exparte applications must, to use a feline phrase, let the cat .out of the bag. Disclosure of material facts when such an application is made in the absence of the other party, enables the court to bridge the lacuna created by the absence of the other party and to hold the scale evenly between them. This is the reason why an applicant must make a clean breast of material issues to [p.15] the court to which the application is made. It is a duty which the applicant owes to the court which I hold the respondent herein did not discharge when he made his exparte application. The proceedings before Massallly,J, in the High Court were very material to be disclosed to this Court when the Exparte Application was made. It might not have made any difference to the outcome of the Court's decision if that material fact was revealed. On that occasion, the Court might have exercised its discretion to ask the Applicant herein to take part in the exparte proceedings before it as it did in the Harry Will case.

Having said all this, I will go back to The Hagen case in which Lord Alverstone CJ articulated the point which I am making before discharging the exparte order.

"If I had felt that Hargrave Deane J., had taken all the facts into consideration and had come to a conclusion upon them, I should hesitate to interfere with his decision, but looking at the judgment I can find nothing to show that he did ... I come to the conclusion that he has not exercised his discretion, and I think it is a jurisdiction that ought to be very carefully exercised" (at page 26).

In the light of this statement of Lord Alverstone CJ., which I fully endorse, can we say that we really exercised our discretion when the full facts were not known to us? With reluctance, I apprehend that we did not.

In the cases which I have relied upon for the effect of non-disclosure, it was an Appeal Court that had to vacate an order of a lower court. In the light of this and section 122 of our Constitution, a searching question which I now pose is whether we have the power to vacate our own order. Section 126(b) of the Constitution specifically gives us that power in civil matters that have been decided by three Justices but there is no specific provision for criminal cases. Mr. Berewa urged that we can. Mr. Terry, on the other hand, did not deny that we cannot. What he submitted is that we may do so but only if the issue is raised at the substantive hearing of his application and when it is shown that we erred in law in making the order. This leads me into the field of autonomy. On binding precedent, section 122 of the Constitution enable us, as the highest court in the land, in the interest of justice, to depart from previous decisions which we take. A restrictive interpretation of a "previous decision" is a decision that has been taken in some other cause. I would not regard an order made in an interlocutory proceedings by a court to be a previous decision. Nevertheless, to my mind, this court or any other court has an inherent right to discharge any such order if justice requires it. This is where I agree with the third submission of Mr. Terry, the principle of which, I have stated, he perhaps inadvertently attributed to Adel Osman's case.

Mr. Berewa for the applicants articulates that when the judge dismissed the application before him the proper course for the applicant to have pursued was to appeal as provided for under section 63 of the Courts Act, 1965, Act No. 31 of 1965. That section provides for appeals from the High Court to the Court of Appeal from any decision of the Supreme Court in exercise of its prerogative or supervisory jurisdiction in criminal matters.

The learned Attorney-General argues that instead of appealing, the respondent herein came to us on certiorari on the same matter that the High Court has taken a decision upon [p.16] and we gave the respondent leave to proceed with the certiorari. He contends that, in the circumstances, the respondent is estopped from raising the same issue, if I may put his case so very simply. He referred us to several authorities on estoppel. I will mention here the ones I regard as relevant to the matter before us. In Foli and Others v. Agya-Atta and others [1976] 1 G.L.R. 194, the Court of Appeal of Ghana held that estoppel per rem judicatam applies where an action is dismissed if the dismissal involves a determination of any particular issue or question of fact or law. Amissah JA, in his judgment at page 200 of the report made the following pronouncement on estoppel adopting the view of Spence-Bower and Turner, on Res Judicata, second edition, 1969, page 28:—

“When an action, or motion, or application, is dismissed by a judicial tribunal after a trial or hearing, it is often a question whether anything can be said to have been decided, so as to conclude the parties, beyond the actual fact of the dismissal. The answer to this inquiry depends upon whether, on reference to the record and such other materials as may; properly be resorted to, the dismissal itself is seen to have necessarily involved a determination of any particular issue or question of fact or law in which case there is an adjudication on the question or issues; if otherwise, the dismissal decides nothing except that the party has been refuse the relief which he sought.”

In another case, Thoday V. Thoday [1964] 1 All ER 341, Diplock, LJ in the English Court of Appeal, gives two instances of estoppel that will prevent a litigant from bringing an action when a previous one has been decided by a court. One is “cause of action estoppel” and the other is “issue estoppel”. He defines “cause of action estoppel” as that

“Which prevents a party to an action from asserting or denying as against the other party, the existence of a particular cause of action the non-existence or existence of which has been determined by a court of competent jurisdiction in previous litigation between the same parties ... If the cause of action was determined to exist, i.e., judgment was given on it, it is said to be merged in the same judgment. .. If it was determined not to exist, the unsuccessful plaintiff can no longer assert that it does. This is simply an application of the rule of public policy." (at page 352)

He continues on issue estoppel.

“The second species which I will call 'issue estoppel' is, an extension of the same rule of public policy. There are many causes of action which can only be established by proving that two or more different conditions are fulfilled. Such causes of action involve as many separate issues between the parties as there are conditions to be fulfilled by the plaintiff in order to establish his cause of action; and there may be cases where the fulfilment of an identical condition is a requirement common to two or more different causes of action if in litigation on one such cause of action any of such separate issues whether a particular condition has been fulfilled is determined by a court of competent jurisdiction either on evidence or on admission by a party to the litigation, neither party can, in subsequent litigation between them on any cause of action which depends on the fulfilment of the identical condition, assert that the condition was fulfilled if the court has in the first litigation [p.17] determined that it was not, or deny that it was fulfilled if the court in the first litigation determined that it was. (at page 352)

The statement which Diplock makes refers specifically to estoppel in civil litigation. Mr. Terry argues the question of estoppel from two vantage points. One is that estoppel is not applicable to certiorari proceedings and he relies on the judgment of May LJ in R v. Secretary of State for the Environment, Ex part Hackney London Borouqh Council and another [19831] 3 All ER 358. where he said:

“In such (judicial review) proceedings there are no formal pleadings and it will frequently be difficult if not impossible to identify a particular issue which the first application will have decided. Moreover, we do not think that there is in proceedings brought under RSC ord. 53 a true lis between the crown in whose name the proceedings are brought and the respondent or between the exparte applicant and the respondent. Further, we doubt whether a decision in such proceedings, in the sense necessary for issue estoppel to operate, is a final decision; the nature of the relief, in many cases, leaves open reconsideration by the statutory or other tribunal of the matter in dispute”

In his reply to this point, Mr. Berewa referred us to the decision of the Court of Appeal when this case went on appeal but he did not elaborate. After careful perusal of the case on appeal, I found that the judgment of the Divisional Court was upheld. Dunn LJ said:—

“The Divisional Court was right to hold that the doctrine of issue estoppel cannot be relied upon in applications for judicial review although the court has an inherent jurisdiction as a matter of discretion in the interest of finality not to allow a particular issue which has already been litigated to be opened. This depends on the special nature of judicial review under RSC Ord 53, which makes it different both from ordinary civil litigation inter partes and from criminal proceedings”. ([1984]1 ALL ER 956 at 964)

I am grateful to both counsel for referring me to these two reports. For my part, I agree with the premise but not with the conclusion which Mr. Terry reached. The statements which the two lord justices made should not be taken out of context. The Hackney case should be considered with circumspection. There is another case which is linked with it in a chain of events: it immediately precedes the Hackney case in the same volume of the All England Law Reports. It is R.v. Secretary of State for the Environment, ex parte Brent London Borouh Council and another [1983] 3 All ER 321. In that case six applicants including Hackney and Camden Borough Councils applied for and obtained orders for certiorari. An issue that was decided by the court was that on a specific date “the applicants were entitled to receive (from the Secretary of State) the rate Support Grant order 1979 as thus increased; thus the decision (made on 26 January 1981) to reduce the applicants' rate support grants adversely affected not merely an expectation but a right to a substantial sums of money”. See judgment of Ackner, LJ at pp. 354, 355.

[p.18]

Two of the applicants in the Brent case, i.e., Hackney and Camden, made a further application for certiorari in the Hackney case. Their complaint was, among other things, that the Secretary of State had deferred payment on their entitlements and reduced their grants and contending that their entitlement had been fixed by the judgment and that the Secretary of State was estopped by the judgment. The Secretary of State submitted that on the previous application, which the court accepted, all that was decided was that he had failed to hear last minute representations and that the court did not hold that he could not lawfully make a decision to reduce the grant. As can clearly be seen, the issues raised in the two cases were different. May LJ pointed out the difference when he said:—

In the present case, however, we think that there are two answers to the powerful submissions on this point. (i.e. issue estoppel) made by counsel for the applicants. First, although on their face the passage from the first judgment do appear to contain a finding in favour of the present applicants on the particular issue, in our opinion, a careful reading of the context in which the passages occur, makes it quite clear that the court on the first occasion was not purporting to make the finding for which counsel for the applicants contends. In the first place, the circumstances in which and the times at which the Secretary of state was liable under the Statute to make payments of rate support were not in issue on the earlier application." (at p. 365)

Going back to the prior opinions of May and Dunn LJJ, I think they should be viewed from the peculiar nature of judicial review in which the court does not determine the validity of the order of the tribunal as between the parties but merely decides as to whether there has been excess or lack of jurisdiction. This does not mean that if a legal point arises and the court takes a decision on it, an issues estoppel cannot be eventually asserted to sustain it.

I do not find it necessary to draw a line between judicial review in England and certiorari proceedings here which the learned Attorney-General tried to make. The conclusion which I have reached will be the same if I do so.

I think that what is in issues in the case before us is actually not one directly concerned with certiorari. To my mind we should not confuse certiorari proceedings with what actually transpired before Massally, J. He did not go into the question as to whether or not the Anti-Corruption Commission acted contrary to or in excess of its statutory authority. Instead, an issue was raised in what was going to be certiorari proceedings. The identity of the Commission, the body against which the judge was to make a certiorari order was in issue and the judge decided that he could not proceed with the certiorari proceedings because the Commission was neither a court nor an adjudicating "authority. If he had proceeded with certiorari, after his decision that he lacked jurisdiction, his decision thereafter would have amounted to a nullity. See Macaulay V. Commissioner of Police (1968-69) ALR SL 9, paqe 14.

It is in this vein, to my mind, that the doctrine of estoppel should be considered.

The other plank of Mr. Terry's posture on estoppel is that the dismissal of the application before Massally J. amounts to a mere refusal based on an issue during the proceedings and that no decision was taken on the merits of the application for certiorari issue i.e., the cause of action; therefore, the respondent cannot be precluded by estoppel when he comes to the Supreme Court. If I get him right, Mr. Terry is saying that there was no final [p.19] decision on the cause of action to attract estoppel. With respect to the learned Counsel, this argument is fraught with two misconceptions. First, it suggests that estoppel per rem judicatam does not apply to a final decision on an issue in an interlocutory matter. This is "issue estoppel". Both "cause of action estoppel" and "issue estoppel" need not coincide before estoppel per rem judicatam can be raised. They are independent of each other. In reaching this conclusion, I lean heavily on the Foli and Thoday's cases herein-before mentioned and to the decision in the English Queens Bench Division case of R.v. Governor of Brixton, ex parte Osman (No.1) [1992] 1 All ER 108. This was an application for habeas corpus but the principle stated therein, in my view, applies to certiorari as well. The facts are very revealing. The applicant, Osman who was in remand at Brixton prison awaiting extradition to Hong Kong to face criminal charges made three unsuccessful applications for a writ of habeas corpus. In the third application he sought the disclosure of some official documents and he was granted. In a fourth application he sought the disclosure of nine other official documents but the court refused it on the ground of irrelevance. Osman made a fifth application in which he again sought the disclosure of the nine documents referred to in the fourth application. Thereupon, the Secretary of State moved the court for the parts of Osman's affirmations which either referred to or quoted from the nine documents to be struck out, one of the grounds being that the court's decision in the fourth application refusing further disclosure on the basis of irrelevance resulted in an issue estoppel which prevented Osman from later asserting that the documents were relevant. In the judgment of the court this was what Mann LJ said.

“The issue estoppel in this case is said to arise from the decision of this court on 20 January 1990. That was a decision on an interlocutory application. That it was a decision on an interlocutory application does not, in my judgment, disable it from an ability to give rise to an issue estoppel. I can see no reason in principle why a final decision upon an interlocutory application should not be in this regard treated as any other decision. (p. 118)

My second reason for disagreement with Mr. Terry is that it is not necessary for a court to make a final pronouncement on the merits of a case before estoppel can be invoked. If I get Mr. Terry rightly again he is referring to “cause of action estoppel” which I have held to be independent of “issue estoppel”. The jurisdictional issue that the respondents articulated before the judge pivoted on the identity of the Commission. The judge made a decision on it. This, to my mind, would give rise to issue estoppel on that issue. In taking this stance, I also derive support from the judgment of Simon Tuckey, Q.C. a deputy judge of the Queens Bench Division in Palmer & Anor v. Dunford Ford (a Firm) and Anor. [1992] 2 All ER 122, at page 128 in which he states what I regard as a correct statement of the law as follows:—

“The plaintiff contends that this was not a final decision of the court because the court did not itself pronounce on the merits of the claim. I disagree. I think that a final decision for this purpose is one which would give rise to a plea of res judicata. Such a decision is one which leaves nothing to be judicially determined or ascertained thereafter in order to render it effective.”

Mr. Berewa, in his argument, emphasizes that the cause of action was in fact decided. I apprehend, with the greatest respect, that this was not done as the judge did not go into the merits of whether the Anti-Corruption Commission acted within or outside its mandate conferred by the Act. Mr. Berewa referred us to Hines v. Birkbeck Colleqe (NO.2) [1991] [p.20] 4ALL ER 450 but Mr. Terry did not mention it to buttress his argument on estoppel not arising when a cause of action has not been decided on its merits. In this case, the plaintiff, a professor of Economics at a college in London University, issued a writ claiming that his College had wrongfully dismissed him. The judge struck out the claim on the ground that the subject matter of the claim was exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Visitor to the College. There was no hearing on any issue. Later, the Education Reform Act 1988 came into force giving the court jurisdiction over disputes concerning the appointment or termination of the appointment of a member of the University staff. The plaintiff thereupon issued a second writ in identical terms to the first alleging wrongful dismissal. The college and the University applied without success to strike out the second action on the ground, inter alia, of res judicata. This was a case of "cause of action estoppel" but it must be noted that the court refused to go into the merit in the first instance by virtue of the fact that no jurisdiction was vested in it over such matters. It is distinguishable from the Taju-Deen case before us in that the court in the instant case ruled that it had jurisdiction to supervise inferior courts or adjudicating bodies but that the Anti-Corruption Commission was neither a court nor an adjudicating body.

In my judgment, a case of "issue estoppel" could arise if it is sought to re-open the question of the identify of the Anti-Corruption Commission as a court or adjudicating authority but not a "cause of action estoppel". I am fortified on this stance by the judgment of Diplock LJ in Fidelitas Shipping v. V/O Exportchleb [1965] 2 All ER 4, 10 where he says:

"Where the issue separately decided is not decisive of the suit, the judgment on that issue is an interlocutory judgment and the suit continues. Yet I take it to be too clear to need citation of authority that the parties to the suit are bound by the determination of the issue. They cannot subsequently in the same suit advance arguments or adduce further evidence directed to show that the issue was wrongly determined. Their only remedy is by way of appeal from the interlocutory judgment."

Conclusion

This is as far as I can go on the arguments presented to us by counsel on both sides. I cannot, however, at this stage, rule whether or not estoppel applies because the application before us at present is to discharge the order nisi. I uphold Mr. Terry's submissions that the appropriate stage for a determination on estoppel is at the substantive application for certiorari and I may add, at any other proceedings which the Respondent may institute. It suffices only to hold and I so hold that the application succeeds on the ground of non-disclosure of material facts.

Messrs E. A. Halloway, S. G. Kobba, L. M. Farma for Defendants/Applicants

RULING

By Notice of Motion dated the 20th July 2004 the Defendants/Applicants seek the following orders pursuant to Rule 92 (1) of the Supreme Court Rules (PN No.1 of 1982):

[p.142]

"1. An order for enlargement of time within which to file the Defendants/Applicants case.

2. An order that the statements of Defendants/Applicants case already filed herein remain on the records of this Honourable Court notwithstanding that the same were filed out of time.

3. Any other order as the Honourable Court may deem fit and expedient in the circumstances."

The Application is supported by the affidavit of Joseph G. Kobba Senior State Counsel sworn to on the 16th day of July 2004.

The facts which gave rise to this Application were as follows:

The Plaintiffs/Applicants Issa Hasan Sesay otherwise known as Issa Sesay, Alieu Kondowa and Moinina Fofanah, had filed an Originating Notice of Motion on the 1st of December 2003 asking the Court inter alia,

"1. To declare the creation of the special Court as unconstitutional and therefore null and void and is of no legal effect.

2. To order that the arrest and detention of the Plaintiffs herein by the Special Court is unconstitutional and therefore illegal.

3. To order the immediate release of the Plaintiffs from the custody of the Special Court's detention unit.

4. Any further order or other relief as this Honourable Court may deem fit and just."

[p.143]

The said Originating Notice of Motion according to Counsel for the Plaintiffs/Respondents was served on the Defendants/Applicants, the President, the Registrar and the Prosecutor of the Special Court a few days earlier and on the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice on the 10th of December 2003 respectively.

The Application for extension of time within Rule 92 (1) was made to this Court only on the 28th July 2004, a period of over 7 months.

Under Rule 92 (1) of the Supreme Court Rules (PN No. 1 of 1982)

"(1) A defendant upon whom a Notice of Motion and a statement of the plaintiffs' case are served shall, if he wishes to contest the case, within ten days of such service, or within such time as the Court upon terms may direct, file a statement of the defendant's case which shall be signed by the defendant or his Counsel."

On the 29th of December 2003, the Ag. Registrar of the Supreme Court filed a Certificate of non-compliance by the Defendants/Applicants under Rule 92 (3) which states,

"(3) If the defendant does not file his case within the time stipulated the Registrar shall issue a certificate to that effect."

The question therefore is whether this Court can properly grant an extension of time to the Defendants/Applicants within Rule 92 (1) in these circumstances to enable them file their Case.

The Attorney-General and Minister of Justice in moving the motion relied on the supporting affidavit of Joseph G Kobba already referred to Paragraphs 7 and 8 of the aforesaid affidavit state emphatically and unequivocally,

"(7) That I did not file the Statements of the Defendants' case because the Statements of the Plaintiffs' Case was not received by me nor in the Law Officers' Department;

(8) That I, in the circumstances requested a copy of the Statement of the Plaintiffs' case from the Principal Assistant to the Registrar of the Supreme Court which he gave me to enable me to prepare and file the Statement of the Defendants' case."

It is interesting to note that he did not even say when he received the Statement of the Defendants/Applicants' Case from the Principal Assistant Registrar in the Supreme Court Registry.

Paragraph 17 of Mr. Kobba's affidavit, in my view, is very attractive and therefore merits serious consideration. It states,

"17 That in the premises aforesaid and having regard to the fact that this is a Constitutional issue of public importance the interest of justice will best be served by granting the several orders in the Notice of Motion filed herein."

In argument, Mr. Eke Halloway while re-echoing this same point also observed that it would be against the principles of natural justice - (audi alterem partem) if his clients were not heard.

Mr. Charles Margai on his part submitted forcefully that the reason for the delay in filing the Statement of Defendants' case must be cogent. He said the Defendants/Applicants had been in breach of Rule 92 (1) for a period of over seven months and they have not given any valid excuse for their conduct.

Earlier Mr. Margai had applied for leave to have Mr. Kobba cross-examined on paragraphs 4, 5 and 8 of his Affidavit in support of the motion.

We refused leave because we did not consider it necessary in view of the papers already before us especially the certificate of non-compliance (Exhibit CFM1) from the Registrar's office. We know as a matter of fact that such certificate can only be filed [p.145] Registrar's office. We know as a matter of fact that such certificate can only be filed after the affidavit of service confirming service on the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice of the Originating Notice of Motion has been effected. The affidavit of the bailiff of the Supreme Court Mr. Jefferson. Williams (Exhibit CFM2) of 10/12/04 clearly confirmed service of the Notice of Motion on the Attorney-General.

In any event, there is also the letter from the Registrar of the Special Court requesting or soliciting assistance from the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice dated 8th of December 2003. Paragraphs 1 & 2 of the said letter are very revealing.

They read,

"(1) I refer to the Application brought before the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone on 28th November 2003 by 'the Plaintiffs' Issa Sesay, Allieu Kondewa and Moinina Fofanah against the President the Registrar and Prosecutor of the special Court for Sierra Leone and the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice as defendants.

(2) As you are aware the Plaintiffs are indictees of the Special Court and are currently in the custody of the Special Court. In their Application, the Plaintiffs claim that the Special Court Agreement 2002 (Ratification) Act and the statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone contravene the Constitution of Sierra Leone. A copy of the Originating Notice of Motion is' enclosed." (emphasis)

According to that letter Mr. Joseph Kobba is the focal point for the Special Court in the Ministry of Justice.

Undoubtedly, this Court has not been treated with candour. Deponents must always remember that an affidavit is a sacred document. It must contain only statements of fact and not falsehoods.

[p.146]

The Rules of Court as observed by Lord Guest in Ratnam V Cumarasmy And Another [1964) 3 All ER at page 935 (Privy Council)

"... must, prima face, be obeyed, and, in order to justify a Court in extending the time during which some step in procedure requires to be taken, there must be some material on which the Court can exercise its discretion. If the law were otherwise, a party in breach would have an unqualified right to an extension of time which would defeat the purpose of the rules which is to provide a time limit for the conduct of litigation."

App. 1/79 (unreported); SC 3/2002, John Sahr Yambasu and 3 ors V. Hon. Ernest Bai Koroma and 5 ors. (unreported) delivered on 22nd June 2004.

But as I have already indicated, I find paragraph 17 of Mr. Kobba's affidavit very attractive. So too is the submission of the former Attorney-General and Minister of Justice Mr. Eke Halloway that because of the constitutional and international importance of the issues raised in the principal Application this Court ought to grant the extension of time sought.

That this case is of great constitutional significance it cannot be denied. As we have seen the Defendants/Applicants are seeking the interpretation of various sections of the Constitution by this Court for the first time. The liberty of the subject is very much at stake here.

Besides, there is also the international dimension. What is the status of an International Agreement such as the one that is now being challenged under our domestic or municipal law especially after ratification?.

We all know in Britain it is the Crown which has the prerogative to enter into treaties and international agreements. In Sierra Leone as well as in other Common Law jurisdictions [p.147] on the other hand, it is the Chief Executive or the Head of State who has the sole constitutional authority to conclude treaties and international agreements. Is the exercise of such executive functions unfettered? These are some of the important issues we have been invited to look into in the substantive Application. We can I believe, only do so adequately if we have the benefit of argument of Counsel on both sides.

Indeed, there has been in-ordinate delay on the side of the Defendants/Applicants in asking for extension of time within Rule 92 (1); and there has not been any satisfactory explanation for such delay.

Nevertheless, taking all the circumstances into consideration, it is our opinion that the Court ought to allow the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice an extension of time within which to file the Statement of Case for the Defendants/Applicants.

Finally, in the interest of justice this Court will accept the Statement of Defendants/Applicants' Case already filed notwithstanding the same had been filed out of time and without leave.

I order accordingly.

Costs in the cause.

JUDGMENT

RENNER-THOMAS C.J.

By an Agreement between the United Nations (herein after referred to as "the UN") and the Government of Sierra Leone (herein after referred to as "the Government") dated the 16th day of January 2002 the Special Court for Sierra Leone (herein after referred to as "the Special Court") was established "to prosecute persons who bear the greatest responsibility for serious violations of international humanitarian law and sierra Leonean law committed in the territory of Sierra Leone since November, 1996.

The UN entered into the said Agreement pursuant to Security Council resolution 1315 (2000) of 14th August 2000 and on the part of the Government under the authority of the President pursuant to powers vested in him by virtue of the provision of section 40 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, Act NO.6 of 1991 (hereinafter referred to as "the Constitution").

According to Article 1 of the Agreement the Special Court is to function in accordance with the Statute of the Special Court which Statute is annexed to the Agreement and forms an integral part thereof.

On the 29th day of March 2002 the Parliament of Sierra Leone enacted the Special Court Agreement, 2002 (Ratification) Act. No.7 of 2002 (hereinafter referred to as "the Ratification Act". In the first preambular paragraph of the Ratification Act it is recited that the Agreement is to be ratified by an Act of Parliament pursuant to by the provision to subsection 4 of section 40 of the Constitution.

[p.170]

The Special Court, acting in accordance with provisions of Part VI of the Ratification Act which deals with the arrest and delivery of persons, caused the 1st 2nd and 3rd Plaintiffs herein (hereinafter collectively referred to as "the Plaintiffs") to be arrested and detained at the Special Court Detention Centre at Jomo Kenyatta Road, New England Freetown where they are still being detained.

The Plaintiffs were subsequently indicted on various charges pursuant to the Statute of the Special Court details of which charges are contained in Exhibits CFM 21-3 respectively attached to the affidavit of Charles Francis Margai in support of the Originating Notice of Motion herein sworn to on the 28th day of November 2003 and filed herein. I need not set out the details of these charges for the purposes of this Judgment.

The Originating Notice of Motion which was filed on the 28th day of November 2003 was subsequently amended pursuant to an Order of this Court and is dated 4th March 2005. According to the amended Originating Notice of Motion the Plaintiffs relying on Sections 122 and 127 of the Constitution, seek from this Court the following:

"(A) Interpretation of Sections 122, 124, 127, 171(15), 120, 108, 40(4), 48(4), 125 and 30(1) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, Act No. 6 of 1991.

(2) Interpretation of the Special Court, Agreement, 2002 (Ratification) Act, 2002 as amended by the Special Court Agreement, 2002, (Ratification) (Amendment), Act, 2002; to wit-Article 1 (1) of the schedule and the preamble thereto, Sections 10, 11 (2) and 29 and Article 8(1) & (2) of the Statute thereof by the determination of the following questions:

(i) whether by creating the Special Court for Sierra Leone pursuant to Article 1(1) of the schedule and the preamble to the Special Court Agreement 2002 (Ratification) Act 2002 as amended by the Special Court Agreement 2002 (Ratification) (Amendment) Act 2002 is not a transgression of Sections 120(4), 30(1) and 108 of Act No. 6 of 1991?

(ii) Whether part 11/ Section 11 (2) of the Special Court Agreement 2002 (Ratification) Act 2002 as amended which provides that the Special Court shall not form part of the Judiciary of Sierra Leone" does not seek to clearly amend the Judicial framework and court structure in Sierra Leone and therefore contravenes Sections 120(4), 30(1) and 108 of Act 6 of 1991?

(iii) Whether section 29 of the Special Court Agreement, 2002 (Ratification). Act 2002 as amended, is not a contravention of section 48(4) OF Act NO.6 of 1991?

(iv)(a) whether Article (8)(1) & (2) of the said Statute to the Special Court Agreement, 2002 (Ratification) Act, 2002 as amended are not contradictory?

(iv)(b) And whether Article 8(2) of the said Statute is not in contravention of Section 125 of Act No. 6 of 1991?

[p.171]

DECLARATIONS SOUGHT.

(B) (1) A declaration that Article 1(1) of the schedule and preamble thereto of the Special Court Agreement, 2002 (Ratification) Act, 2002 as amended contravene Sections 120 & 30(1) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act NO.6 of 1991 in that it seeks to alter the Judicial framework and court structure envisaged and created by Sections 120 & 30(1) of the said Constitution Act No. 6 of 1991 and is therefore void and of no effect pursuant to Section 171(15) of Act No. 6 of 1991

(2) A declaration that Sections 10, 11 (2) and 29 of the Special Court Agreement 2002 (Ratification) Act 2002 as amended contravene Sections 120(1), 30(1) 120(4) and 122(1), 48(4) and 108 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No. 6 of 1991 and therefore void and of no effect by virtue of Section 171(15) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No. 6 of 1991.

(3) A declaration that Article 8(1) & (2) of the Statute (which is an integral part of the Act) of the Special Court Agreement 2002 (Ratification) Act as amended are not only contradictory but that Article 8(2) contravenes Sections 120(4), 122(1) 30(1) and 125 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No. 6 of 1991 and is therefore void and of no effect pursuant to Section 171(15) of Act of No. 6 of 1991.

(4) A declaration that Section 29 of the Special Court Agreement 2002 (Ratification) Act 2002 as amended is in contravention of Section 48(4) of Act NO.6 of 1991.

(C) RELIEFS SOUGHT

1. To declare the creation of the Special Court as unconstitutional and therefore null and void and is of no legal effect.

2. To order that the arrest and detention of the Plaintiffs herein by the Special Court is unconstitutional and therefore illegal.

3. To order the immediate release of the Plaintiffs from the custody of the Special Court Detention Unit.

4. Any further order or other relief as this Honourable Court may deem fit and just."

On the 10th day of December 2003 a Statement of the Plaintiffs' case signed by Counsel for the Plaintiffs was filed pursuant to the Rules of this Court together will an affidavit in verification of the Plaintiffs' case sworn to on the 10th day of December 2003 by Charles Francis Margai Esquire. Thereafter, on the 7th day of July 2004. Joseph G, Kobba, Senior State Counsel acting a Solicitor for all four Defendants entered a Conditional Appearance for the Defendants which was to stand as unconditional after ten days unless in the meantime the Defendants had applied for and obtained an order setting aside "the proceedings herein for irregularity".

[p.172]

On the same date 7th July 2004 the Solicitor for the Defendants filed what he termed a "Notice of Intention to Raise a Preliminary Objection" on the following grounds:

1. That the first Defendant, the second Defendant, the third Defendant and the Special Court for Sierra Leone as an entity are immune from any form of legal process under Article 9 and Article 12 of the Schedule of the Special Court Agreement 2002 (Ratification) Act, 2002 Act No. 7 of 2002 to wit agreement between (the United Nations and the Government of Sierra Leone on the Establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone and also section 8 (1) of the Special Court Agreement 2002 Ratification Act 2002.

2. That this Honourable Court therefore has no jurisdiction to inquire into matters raised in this motion before this court in the light of the Special Court Agreement 2002 Ratification Act No. 7 of 2002 as amended.

No application was made to this Court to set aside the proceedings within the ten days stipulated in the Conditional Appearance. Rather, on the 16th day of July 2003 the same Solicitor filed a Statement of the 1st, 2nd and 3rd Defendants' case together with an affidavit in verification of the said case. On the same date, i.e., 16th July 2003, a Statement of the 4th Defendant's case was filed by the Solicitor for the Defendants.

On the 31st day of March 2005 the 1st, 2nd and 3rd Defendant applied by Notice of Motion to this Court for an Order that their names be struck out as parties/defendants in the instant case as they were immune from any legal proceedings in any court in Sierra Leone by virtue of the following:

"a) Article 12 (1)(b) of the Agreement between the United Nations and the Government of Sierra Leone on the establishment of the Special Court for Sierra Leone signed on the 16th of January 2002;

b) The Special Court Agreement 2002 (Ratification) Act 2002 Act No. 7 of 2002;

c) Diplomatic Immunities and Privileges Act 1961 Act No. 35 of 1961;

d) Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relation 1961;

e) Section 12 of the Special Court Agreement (Ratification) Regulation of 2004 Public Notice NO.5 of 2004."

The application was supported by the affidavit of Joseph Gomoi -Vandi Kobba sworn to on the 31st day of March 2005 to which was annexed several documents including one headed [p.173] International Cooperation to the Registrar of the Supreme Court and marked as Exhibit "JGK4". By that certificate of acting Director of the International legal and Research Division of the Ministry confirmed that:

"pursuant to Article 12(1) (b) of the Agreement entered into between the Government of Sierra Leone on the one part and the United Nations in the other part signed on the 10th January 2002 and ratified by Parliament by the Special Court Agreement 2002 (Ratification) Act 2002 establishing the Special Court for Sierra Leone, the judges, prosecutors and the Registrar together with their families forming past of their households enjoy the privileges and immunities, exemptions and facilities accorded to diplomatic in accordance with the 1961. Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations"

No affidavit in opposition was filed on behalf of the Plaintiffs. The application was heard on the 26th day of April 2005 and a Ruling was delivered on the 10th day of May 2005. In delivering the Ruling of the Court I said that I was satisfied, based on the said Exhibit "JGK", that the 1st 2nd and 3rd Defendant were immune from suit.

However, for reasons which were not given at the time of the Ruling I refrained from making an Order that the names of the 1st 2nd and 3rd Defendants be struck out of the instant proceedings.

I now turn to the reasons for that decision. It is clear from Article 12(1) of the Agreement that Judges, the Prosecutor and the Registrar of the Special Court are entitled to enjoy "the privileges and immunities, exemptions and facilities accorded to diplomatic agents in accordance with the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations". In particular, they enjoy immunity from criminal, civil and administrative jurisdiction in conformity with the Vienna Convention.

The Agreement, as has been shown earlier in this Judgment, became part of the municipal law of Sierra Leone by the enactment of the Ratification Act. The relevant provisions of the Vienna Convention in Diplomatic Relations dealing with the immunity from suit of diplomatic agents is contained in Article 31 of the Convention. It expressly provides that a "diplomatic agent shall enjoy immunity from the criminal jurisdiction of the receiving state. He shall also enjoy immunity from its civil and administrative jurisdiction" subject to earlier exceptions which I hold are not relevant in the instant case.

Since the 1st 2nd and 3rd Defendants were sued in their respective capacities of Judge, Registrar and Prosecutor of the Special Court I had no alternative but to hold that they were each immune from suit.

In the light of the above finding, it is my view that the 1st 2nd and 3rd Defendants need not have submitted to the jurisdiction of this Court. But they did so and went even as far as filing a statement of their case. In the circumstances it was too late to apply for their names to be [p.174] struck out as parties/ defendant. In my view the proper course should be to dismiss the action brought against them. The action against them is accordingly dismissed.

Having thus disposed of the issue of the immunity from suit of the 1st, 2nd and 3rd Defendants I now proceed to determine whether this Court's original jurisdiction has been properly invoked to enable us to entertain the Plaintiffs' claim as against the 4th Defendant, to wit, the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice.

The Plaintiffs' contention on the face of the Originating Notice of Motion is that they are relying on sections 122, 124 and 127 of the 1991 Constitution as well as Rules 89-98 of the Rules of this Court contained a Constitutional Instrument No. 1 of 1982.

For purpose of clarity I shall set out the provisions of sections 122, 124 and 127 in so far as they are relevant to the instant case. Section 122(1) provides as follows:

"The Supreme Court shall be the final Court of Appeal in and for Sierra Leone and shall have such appellate and other jurisdiction as may be conferred upon it by this Constitution or any other law"

In my view, the expression "other jurisdiction "clearly includes original jurisdiction as well as supervisory and advisory jurisdiction. What is of relevance here is this Court's original jurisdiction. In the search for such jurisdiction one is referred to the Constitution itself or any other law. It is my considered view that only the Constitution .is relevant for the conferring of original jurisdiction in this Court to entertain the instant case.

To the extent that the Plaintiffs are seeking to have certain provisions of the Constitution enforced or interpreted this Court is vested not only with original jurisdiction but it is so vested to the exclusion of all other courts by the provisions of section 124 (1) of the Constitution which state as follows:

“The Supreme Court shall save as otherwise provided in section 122 of the Constitution, have original jurisdiction, to the exclusion of all other courts—

a) “in all matters relating to the enforcement or interpretation of this Constitution, and

b) “where any question arises whether an enactment was made in excess of the power conferred upon parliament or any other authority or person by law or under the Constitution”

The first limb of this provision dealing with matters relating to the enforcement or interpretation of the Constitution, was considered and applied by this Court in the case of Hinga Norman Vs Dr. Sama Banya and Others, (S.C 2/2005, Judgment delivered on the 31st day of August 2005, unreported) where I had this to say:

[p.175]

Dr. Sama Banya and Others, (S.C 2/2005, Judgment delivered on the 31st day of August 2005, unreported) where I had this to say:

"This subsection not only confers original jurisdiction on the Supreme Court but it also stipulates that in respect of those matters for which original jurisdiction is thus conferred no other court shall exercise original jurisdiction. What then are those matters? According to section 124(1)(a) these are "all matters relating to the enforcement or interpretation of any provision of' the National Constitution." Giving the words in this provision their plain and natural meaning, as I am obliged to do, since I perceive. no ambiguity in the provision, as long as the matter in question relates to the enforcement or interpretation of any provision of the National Constitution original jurisdiction is vested in the Supreme Court to hear and determine it.

The first test is that the Plaintiff seeking to invoke this original jurisdiction must be able to point to some provision, any provision, of the National Constitution that is to be enforced or interpreted. The next test is to show, in addition, what act or omission makes it necessary for the provision to be enforced. The third test, in my opinion, is an alternative to the second test. The Plaintiff must otherwise show that an interpretation of the particular provision of the National Constitution identified under the first test is required as a matter of law."

Applying the test in the Hinga Norman's case to the reliefs sought under A and B in the Originating Notice of Motion I can safely state that this Court has original jurisdiction to entertain the Plaintiffs' claim herein.

The Plaintiffs' are also relying on Section 127 of the Constitution. This section was also considered by this Court in the Hinga Norman case. As I stated in that case section 127 does not by itself confer any original jurisdiction upon this Court but merely lays down the procedure for the enforcement of the Constitution in certain specific circumstances. For all the above reasons I hold that this Court has original jurisdiction to entertain the Plaintiffs' claim by interpreting and enforcing the several provisions of the Constitution set out in the Originating Notice of Motion. This Court can also properly grant the declarations and orders sought under Band C in the Originating Notice of Motion under powers vested in it by section 127 of the Constitution.

[p.176]

I shall now proceed to deal with the several matters raised in the Originating Notice of Motion but not necessarily in the order in which they are presented as, with the greatest respect to Counsel for the Plaintiffs, there is a certain amount of overlap and duplication in the said presentation.

Under A(1) the Plaintiffs invite this Court to interpret the following sections of the Constitution:

(i) 122;

(ii) 124;

(iv) 127;

(v) 171(15) ;

(vi) 120;

(vii) 108;

(viii) 40;

(x) 125; and

(xi) 30 (1)

Let me repeat what I stated in the Hinga Norman case in the passage cited earlier in this Judgment, i.e., in order to invoke this Court's original jurisdiction under section 124(1) of the Constitution, the Plaintiff must satisfy this Court that the interpretation sought is required as matter of law, for example, to clarify any ambiguity or to determine the legal effect of a particular provision.

In the light of this qualification I think I need not add anything more to what I have already said about sections 122, 124 and 127 of the Constitution in the context of the instant case.

I now turn to 171 (15) of the Constitution. Again this Court had the opportunity to consider the provision of this section in the Hinga Norman case. The view this court took of section 171 (15) of the Constitution is that it is a substantive provision which declares the Constitution to be the Supreme Law of Sierra Leone and emphasizes that status by providing that any other law which is found to be inconsistent with any provision of the Constitution shall, to the extent of the inconsistency, be void and of no effect. The procedure to be adopted where it is alleged that an enactment is invalid because of the provision of section 171 (15) of the Constitution is that laid down in section 127 of the Constitution

Section 120 of the Constitution deals with the establishment of the Judiciary in Sierra Leone. It provides for various matters relating to the jurisdiction of the Judiciary, its composition, hierarchy, independence, immunity of judges of the Superior Court of Judicature and the general functioning of the Judiciary. However, section 120 (1) sets the tone and the context in which all these matters are dealt with. According to this subsection the section is dealing with the exercise of judicial power in Sierra Leone and I comprehend that to mean within the municipal or domestic context of Sierra Leone.

— such inferior and traditional Courts as Parliament may by law establish.

In my opinion any other Court in Sierra Leone exercising jurisdiction apart from those listed as constituting the Judicature cannot be considered as part of the Judiciary of Sierra Leone. So the definition of a Court in section 30(1) of the Constitution as "any court of Law of Sierra Leone other than a local Court or a Court constituted by or under service law" expressly excludes local courts from being part of the Judiciary as established under section 120 of the Constitution. This is so despite the fact that local courts are established by an Act of Parliament as envisaged by section 120(4) of the Constitution.

It is in the same manner that section 11 (2) of the Ratification Act expressly provides that the Special Court shall not from part of the Judiciary of Sierra Leone. I therefore hold that the Special Court is not part of the Judiciary of Sierra Leone as established by the Constitution.

I turn next to section 108 of the Constitution. This section deals with amendments of the Constitution. Section 108 (1) is an enabling provision vesting in Parliament the power to alter the Constitution. Section 108 (2) lays down the procedure generally for amendments of the Constitution whilst sections 108 (3) (4) (5) and (6) lay down the special procedure that must be followed where the amendment relates to the provisions of certain sections listed in section 108 (3) of the Constitution. These sections are commonly referred to as "entrenched clauses." Of particular relevance to the instant case are sections 120 and 122 of the Constitution.

It is contended on behalf of the Plaintiffs that by providing in section 11 (2) that the Special Court shall not form part of the Judiciary of Sierra Leone the Ratification Act has in fact amended section 120 of the Constitution without following the procedure laid down by sections 108(3) to (6) inclusive of the Constitution. Giving the latter provisions their plain and ordinary meaning there is no doubt whatsoever that the procedure laid down therein was not adhered to in enacting the Ratification Act.

Having said this, the next issue that comes up for determination is whether the enactment of section 11(2) of the Ratification Act constitutes an amendment of section 120 (1) and 120 (4) of the Constitution. According to the editors of Halsbury's Law of England:

"To amend an Act or enactment is to alter its legal meaning, whether expressly or by implication, express amendment may be textual, where the actual wording is altered or indirect" (see Halsbury's Laws of England, 4th edition, Vol.44 (1) paragraph 1289).

Clearly, this is not a case of an express textual amendment as the words contained in the said section of the Ratification Act do not in any way alter the wording of the two subsections of the Constitution earlier referred to. Could it then be said to be an indirect amendment? In my opinion, this contention could not be tenable for, clearly, the legal effect of the provision of section 11 (2) of the Ratification Act is to make the Special Court a separate and distinct entity operating outside the confines of the Judiciary of Sierra Leone and therefore not forming part of the internal structure or hierarchy of the Judiciary.

"Furthermore, I am obliged to discountenance any suggestion that if the amendment is not express then it must be implied because section 108 (7) of the Constitution makes it plan that no Act of Parliament shall be deemed to amend, add to or repeal or in any way alter any provisions of the Constitution unless it does so in express terms.

The next provision that the Plaintiffs are seeking to have this Court interpret is contained in section 40(4) of the Constitution which states inter alia as follows:—

" Notwithstanding any provisions of the Constitution or any other law to the contrary, the President shall, without prejudice to any such law as may for the time being be adopted by Parliament, be responsible, in addition to the functions conferred upon him by this Constitution for—

a) all constitutional matters concerning legislation; ……

b) the execution of treaties, agreement, conventions in the name of Sierra Leone;

provided that any Treaty, Agreement, or Convention executed by or under the authority of the President which relates to any matters within the legislative competence of Parliament, or which in any way alters the law of Sierra Leone or imposes any charge on, or authorizes any expenditure out of the Consolidated Fund or any other fund of Sierra Leone, and any declaration of war made by the President shall be subject to ratification by Parliament—

(1) by an enactment of Parliament; and

(2) by a resolution supported by the votes of not less than one-half of the members of Parliament"

What then is the legal meaning of this provision? To fully appreciate the legal meaning of the provision in section 40 (4) of the Constitution the section should be read as a whole. The section establishes the office of the President of Sierra Leone as, inter alia, the supreme executive authority in the country. The section then goes to outline some of the powers vested in the President in his capacity as such executive leader.

The provision then lays down certain limitations on the manner of exercise of the executive power where the action taken involves the execution of treaties, agreements and convention in the name of Sierra Leone. The limitation on the exercise by the President of the executive powers listed in the main provision of section 40(4) consists in the requirement to have the action taken by the President ratified by Parliament if the treaty, agreement or convention relates to:—

a. any matter within the legislative competence of parliament;

b. any matter which in any way alters the laws of Sierra Leone;

c. any matter which imposes any charge on; or authorizes any expenditure out of the Consolidated Fund or any other fund in Sierra Leone; and

d. the declaration of war by the President

[p.179]

The process of ratification by Parliament involves the enactment of a ratification statute (as happened in this case) or the passing of resolution supported by the votes of not less than one-half of the members of Parliament.

The question that arises for determination flowing from the legal meaning I have ascribed to the provision in section 40(4) is whether the procedure for ratification is to be read subject to the provisions of section 108(3) to 108(6) inclusive of the Constitution. Counsel for the Plaintiffs contend that where treaty, agreement or convention executed by the President in any way alters the law of Sierra Leone, and more particularly where the law that is altered happens to be one of the so-called entrenched clauses listed in section 108(3) of the Constitution then the procedure for ratification laid down in section 40(4) should be read subject to the provisions of section 108 (3) to 108(6) inclusive.

On the other hand, the learned Attorney-General submitted that there is no such requirement to be gleaned from the provision of section 40(4). He contends that as long as one or other of the procedures for obtaining Parliament's ratification laid down in the proviso to section 40(4) is followed there is nothing more to be done.

With the greatest respect to Counsel for the Plaintiffs, I cannot accept this contention for several reasons. First, there is nothing in the wording of the main provision of section 40(4) of the Constitution or in the proviso thereto which suggests that either is to be read subject to section 108.

Secondly, section 108 (3) deals with a bill for the an Act of Parliament enacting a new Constitution or altering certain provisions of the Constitution. In the case of the ratification envisaged by the proviso to section 40(4) of the Constitution there is no such restriction. The ratification envisaged could be done either by means of an enactment or by means of a simple resolution.

Thirdly, where ratification is done by means of a resolution it is expressly stated in the provision what is required for the resolution to be deemed validly passed. All that is needed is the vote of not less than one-half of the members of Parliament. This is in stark contrast to the provision of section 108(2) (b) which requires a bill for an Act of Parliament under this section of the Constitution to be supported on the second and third reading by the votes of not less two-thirds of the Members of Parliament.

For all the above reasons, I hold that for the purposes of ratification required under the provision of section 40(4) of the Constitution an enactment referred to in the said provision is to be deemed duly passed if it complies with the mode of exercising legislative power set out in section 106 of the Constitution rather than that laid down in section 108 (3) to (6) inclusive.

The next provision of the Constitution to be interpreted is that contained in section 48(4) of the Constitution. It deals with the immunity from civil and criminal process enjoyed by the President for anything done or omitted to be done by him either in his official or private [p.180] the next provision of the Constitution to be interpreted is that contained in section 48(4) of the Constitution. It deals with the immunity from civil and criminal process enjoyed by the President for anything done or omitted to be done by him either in his official or private capacity. Let me hasten to state that a distinction ought to be made between immunity from suit under domestic law on the one hand and under international law on the other hand.

A serving Head of State is entitled to absolute immunity from process brought before national courts as well as before the national courts of third States except it has been waived by the State concerned. The principle was applied by the House of Lords in the Pinochet proceedings (see R v Bow Street Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate and others, ex parte Pinochet Ugarte [2002] 1 AC 61; R v Bow Street Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate and others, ex parte Pinochet Ugarte (No.2) at [2002] 1 AC 119 and R v Bow Street Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate and others, ex parte Pinochet Ugarte (No.3) at [2000] 1 AC 147) and The Case concerning the Arrest Warrant of 11 April 2000 (Democratic Republic of Congo v Belgium before the International Court of Justice (2002 ICJ Reports). In contrast, where the immunity is claimed by a Head of State before an international court the position to be inferred from decisions of various national courts and international tribunals, and the writings of international jurists is that there exists no a priori entitlement to claim immunity particularly from criminal process involving international crimes.

It is important to make this distinction at this stage because one of the declarations being sought by the Plaintiffs is to the effect that Section 29 of the Ratification Act which provides that the existence of an immunity or special procedural rule attaching to the official capacity of any person shall not be a bar to the arrest and delivery of that person into the custody of the Special Court is in contravention of section 48(4) of the Constitution.

Suffice it to say for now that in as much as section 48(4) relates only to immunity of the Head of State before our municipal courts it is not inconsistent with the provision of section 29 of the Ratification Act which deals with immunity before the Special Court

I turn next to section 125 of the Constitution dealing with the supervisory jurisdiction of the Supreme Court over all courts and adjudicating authorities in Sierra Leone provides as follows:

"The Supreme Court shall have supervisory jurisdiction over all other Courts in Sierra Leone and over any adjudicating authority: and in exercise of its supervisory jurisdiction shall have power to issue such directions, orders or writs including writs of habeas corpus, orders of certiorari, mandamus and prohibition as it may consider appropriate for the purposes of enforcing or securing the enforcement of its supervisory powers. 11

Again, the distinction between domestic courts and adjudicating authorities on the one hand and international courts and tribunals is relevant. In my opinion, it could not have been the Intention of the legislature when it enacted that provision in 1991 that it should extend to a treaty-based tribunal such as the Special Court established for a specific and limited purpose.

Finally the Origination Notice of Motion refers to the section 30(1) of the Constitution. This section seeks to define certain words used in the context of Chapter III of the Constitution [p.181] dealing with the recognition and protection of the fundamental human rights and freedoms of the individual. The only word of relevance to the instant case is "court" which is stated to mean any court of law in Sierra Leone other than a local court or a court constituted by or under service law". In my opinion, the phrase "any court of law in Sierra Leone" could only mean any domestic court established to administer law in Sierra Leone subject to the limitation imposed by the definition itself.

The plaintiffs then seek the determination of certain specific questions in so far as they relate to certain provisions of the Agreement and the Statute of the Special Court. I shall deal with these questions in the order in which they are set out in the Originating Notice of Motion.

The first question to be answered by this Court is "whether by creating the Special Court for Sierra Leone pursuant to Article 1(1) of the schedule and the preamble to the Special Court Agreement 2002 (Ratification) Act 2002 as amended by the Special Court Agreement 2002 (Ratification) Amendment Act 2002 is not a transgression of sections 120(4), 30(1) and 108 of Act No, 6 of 1991."

In the light of what I have already said about the legal meaning of sections 30(1), 108(3) to 108(6) and 120(4) of the Constitution as well as that of section 11 (2) of the Ratification Act which expressly states that the Special Court shall not form part of the Judiciary of Sierra Leone the question must be answered in the negative.

Besides, I see nothing in the provisions of sections 30(1), 108 and 120(4) of the Constitution which detracts from the powers vested in the President by Section 40(4) of the Constitution to enter into such an agreement as that concluded with the United Nations to establish the Special Court.

The second question must also be answered in the negative as it is not much different from the first which I have just answered in the negative. Besides, earlier in this judgment I had held that the provision of section 11 (2) of the Ratification Act that the Special Court shall not form part of the Judiciary of Sierra Leone "puts beyond all doubt that the intention of Parliament was that the Special Court was to be independent of the Judiciary and its establishment could not therefore be said to have altered in any way the hierarchy and structure of the Judiciary set out in section 120(4) of the Constitution. It follows therefore that if there is no amendment of section 120(4) as a result of the enactment of section 11 (2) of the Ratification Act then the question of invoking the provisions of section 108 of the Constitution simply does not arise.

The third question is whether section 29 of the Ratification Act providing that the official status of an accused could not be a bar to criminal process before the Special Court is in contravention of section 48(4) of the Constitution which makes the Head of State of Sierra Leone immune from both civil and criminal process.

The answer lies in the distinction I had earlier sought to make between immunity from process before a municipal court and immunity from process before an international court. Indeed the wording of section 29 of the Ratification Act is not dissimilar from that dealing with the same subject-matter found in the statutes of other international courts and tribunals set up [p.182] Nuremburg Tribunal, Article 6 of the Statute of the Tokyo Tribunal, Article 7(2) of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia ("ICTY") and Article 6(2) of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda ("ICTR") which is in identical terms to Article 7(2) of the ICTY statute. But of much more direct relevance is Article 27(2) of the Rome Statute setting up the International Criminal Court ("ICC") which Statute Sierra Leone has adhered to and ratified. Like the Special Court the ICC is treaty-based and it is not surprising that the wording of section 29 of the Ratification Act and Article 27(2) of the Rome Statute is virtually identical.

The inclusion of such clause in the charters/statutes of international criminal courts from Nuremberg to the ICC has met with approval in all the relevant case law such as Pinochet in the House of Lords or in the Yarodia judgment of the ICJ. In addition a majority of academic commentary supports the view that an international criminal tribunal or court, may exercise jurisdiction over a serving head of state and that such person is not entitled to claim immunity under customary international law in respect of international crimes.

For the above reasons I hold that section 29 of the Ratification Act as amended does not contravene section 48(4) of the Constitution.

The fourth question is in two parts: first, whether Articles 8(1) and 8(2) of the Statute of the Special Court are not contradictory, and secondly whether Article 8(2) of the Statute does not contravene section 125 of the Constitution.

Article 8(1) of the Statute of the Special Court states that the Special Court and the National Courts shall have concurrent jurisdiction. Article 8(2) thereof provides that the Special Court shall have primacy over the national courts of Sierra Leone.

The concepts of concurrent criminal jurisdiction and primacy of an international tribunal over national Courts are both recent developments of international law. They first made their appearance in Articles 9(1) and 9(2) of the Statutes of the ICTY and Article 8(1) and 8(2) of the Statute of the ICTR respectively.

However, in the case of the Special Court the provision relating to the concurrent jurisdiction of the two court systems is silent on the extent of the concurrence. Whereas in the case of ICTY and ICTR the international tribunals and the national courts have concurrent jurisdiction to prosecute persons for serious violations of international humanitarian law, in the case of the Special Court, only the Special Court has jurisdiction in respect of serious violations of international law crimes and crimes against humanity and the concurrent jurisdiction shared by the national Courts of Sierra Leone with the Special Court is implication only in respect of crimes under Sierra Leone Law relating to sexual violence against children contrary to the provisions of the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, Cap 31, and malicious damage to property contrary to the provisions of the Malicious Damage Act 1861.

In contrast, the provision of Article 8(2) of the statute of the Special Court dealing with the primacy of the Special Court over the national courts and the power of the Special Court to formally request a national court to defer to its competence is almost identical to that found in Articles 9(2) and 8 (2) of the Statutes of the ICTY and the ICTR respectively.

To be able to answer the question whether the provision for concurrent jurisdiction in the Statute of the Special Court is inconsistent with the provision conferring primacy in the Special Court over the national courts one has got to examine the circumstances in which and the reasons advanced for the insertion of primacy clauses generally in the Statutes of other international tribunals such as the ICTY and the ICTR and the Special Court.

According to the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the ICTY, ICTR and the Special Court their Prosecutors may request a deferral in the following circumstances: (i) if proceedings already started in national Courts are regarded as in appropriate, e.g if an international crime is characterized as an ordinary crime; (ii) if the crimes before the national court raises questions of law or facts closely related to investigations on proceedings before the international tribunal.

As far as justification for the primacy concept is concerned in In re Tadic 1 ICTY Judicial Reports 3,19(1994) and In re Karadzic 1 ICTY Judicial Reports (1994-95) 851 the prosecutors placed special reliance upon the appropriateness of trying major war criminals in an international forum, and on the deleterious implications of simultaneous proceedings before multiple jurisdictions, on the availability of evidence and the willingness of witnesses to cooperate with the international prosecution authorities.

According to Yuval Shany in his book “The Competing Jurisdictions of International Courts and Tribunals" published by Oxford University Press at P.140:

" The bestowing of primacy upon the ad hoc tribunals may be explained through reference to the strong interest of the international community in collective law enforcement: in punishing war criminals and creating an effective deterrent against the commission of further atrocities……

In addition, there existed a perception that domestic courts in former Yugoslavia and Rwanda would be either unwilling or unable to bring war criminals to justice effectively, or might treat the defendants in a hostile and vindictive manner.

In sum I it is arguable that the prominent nature of international use criminal tribunals and their guarantees of procedure fairness and impartiality have created a presumption, which was valued at least at the point in time in which they were established that then national Courts to by war criminals.

The Statutes of the ad hoc tribunals have thus adopted what is essentially a "most-appropriate forum rule", which upheld the predominance of the international tribunals over their domestic counterparts (whenever primacy is insisted upon by the international prosecutors)".

For all the above reasons, I hold that the primacy provision contained in Article 8(2) of the Statute of the Special Court does not contradict the provision relating to concurrent jurisdiction contained in Article 8(1) of the said Statute. The final question posed by the Plaintiffs is whether Article 8(2) dealing with primacy of the Special Court does not contravene Section 125 of the Constitution dealing with the Supervisory Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. Having held that the Special Court is not part of the Judiciary of Sierra Leone it cannot be subject like other domestic courts to the supervisory jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. The primacy provision in Article 8(2) in no way detracts from the supervisory jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. Besides the request for deferral is not made to the domestic court directly but through the Attorney-General.

In my opinion, just as the power vested in the Attorney-General by section 66 (4) (c) of the Constitution to discontinue any criminal proceedings at any stage before judgment does not detract from the jurisdiction of the court before which the matter was pending a request from the Special Court for deferral by any of our national courts, if acted upon by the Attorney General, will not detract from any of the jurisdiction of the court involved.

For this reason, I hold that the provision of Article 8(2) of the Statute of the Special Court does not contravene section 125 of the Constitution.

In the light of the several negative answers given to the questions posed by the Plaintiffs I am unable to make the various declarations and the reliefs sought in the Originating Notice of Motion.

As a result the action is hereby dismissed.

I make no order as to costs.

Mr. T. M. Terry - For the Defendants/Applicants

RULING

TIMBO, C.J.

Mr. Terrence Terry Counsel for the Defendants/Applicants filed an originating notice of motion before this Court seeking among other things, an order for extension of time in [p.24] which to file Statement of Defendants case in pursuance of Rule 92 (1) of the Supreme Court Rules 1982 (P. No. 1 of 1982).

Dr. Bu Buakei Jabbi for the Plaintiffs/Respondents raised a preliminary objection to the hearing of the said motion. He argued that there had been non-compliance on the part of Counsel for Defendants/Applicants firstly with Rules 1,3,6 and 12 of Order 9 of the Sierra Leone High Court Rules 1960 which he said are mandatory and applicable to these proceedings by virtue of Rule 98 of our Supreme Court Rules 1982, and secondly with Rule 30 of Order 12 of the English Supreme Court Rules 1960 pursuant to Rule 3 of Order 52 of our High Court Rules 1960.

In short, Dr. Jabbi contended that Counsel for Defendants/Applicants had failed to comply with the above-mentioned rules. He said Mr. Terry must file an appearance whether conditional or unconditional to the originating notice of motion before he can be heard.

Counsel for the Plaintiffs/Respondents then proceeded to catalogue what he perceived are the purposes and functions of entry of appearance. He said firstly, it is evidence of recognition or submission to the jurisdiction of the court by the defendant. Secondly, it is a formal indication to the Court and the party on the other side that the Defendant intends to defend the action on the merits. Thirdly, it formally demonstrates to the Court and the other party that the Defendant desires to object to any invalidity or irregularity in the issue or service of the said originating process and the statement of claim or indeed to the jurisdiction of the Court itself with respect to the claims or reliefs sought by the Plaintiff and lastly, it shows whether the Defendant wishes to defend the action in person or to appear by solicitor.

More specifically, Dr. J abbi submitted that the procedure for actions in the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is analogous to the writs of summons procedure in the High Court. Therefore, in his submission, by virtue of Rule 98 of the Supreme Court [p.25] Rules the requirement for entry of appearance under Order 9 of the High Court Rules is also applicable to original processes in the Supreme Court.

In the result, Dr. Jabbi concluded that since the Defendants/Applicants have failed whether by themselves in person or through their solicitor to enter appearance to the Plaintiffs/Respondents' originating notice of motion, the application before us cannot or ought not to be entertained.

Mr. Terry's reply on the other hand was brief and terse. He maintained that having regard to the provisions of Rule 92 (1) it is not necessary to enter an appearance to an originating process in the Supreme Court. He said counsel for the Plaintiffs/Respondents' objection was therefore premature and must fail.

What does Rule 92 (1) say? I shall quote it verbatim because our ruling will inevitably turn on what interpretation we give to the said rule.

By this rule,

“A defendant upon whom a Notice of Motion and a Statement of the Plaintiff's case are served shall, if he wishes to contest the case, (emphasis mine) within ten days of such service, or within such time as the Court upon such terms may direct, file a statement of the defendants' case which shall be signed by the defendant or his Counsel.”

Subsection (2) of Rule 92 further specifically states,

“2 the statement of the defendant's case —

(a) shall set forth the facts and particulars, documentary evidence, or otherwise, verified by affidavit, upon which the defendant seeks to rely;

(b) shall state the names and particulars of the witnesses, if any, whom he intends to call at the hearing;

[p.26]

(c) shall state the address for service of his Counsel, where he is represented by Counsel and

(d) may also include a list of the decided cases and of the statement of law on which he seeks to rely.”

And finally by Rule 97 (1),

“The Court may after considering the statement of the Plaintiff”s case and of the defendant's case, the memorandum of agreed issues and any arguments of law, decide to determine the action and give judgment in court on a fixed date without argument or may appoint a time at which parties shall come before the Court for further hearing of the action.”

From the above, it can be seen that, our rules on the original jurisdiction of the Court are clear and specific. These have, in my view not only been expressly stated but have also been copiously and exclusively set out in Part XVI. All that a defendant who wishes to contest the matter is required to do is to file a statement of defence within the prescribed period or seek the leave of the Court for extension of time in which to do so. Rule 98 only applies where no provision is expressly made in the rules relating to the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

The procedure established by those rules under Part XVI is peculiar in my opinion to original processes in the Supreme Court and are not analogous to the ordinary civil proceedings in the High Court. We will be overstretching the language of Rule 98 were we to hold otherwise. I agree, as was stated by E. W.

Patterson in his book “Jurisprudence, Men and Ideas of Law”1953 at p 559, “law is not a frozen static body of rules, but rules in a continuous process of change and adaptation; and the judge, at the final appellate level anyway, is a part -a determinant part of this dynamic process of legal evolution.”

[p.27]

Dr. Jabbi's submission is quite novel and interesting. But I do not see the reason nor the need for us to invoke here the provisions of Rule 98 in the guise of developing the law.

We thank Dr. Jabbi for his industry and resourcefulness but I am afraid his argument and authorities referred to have not persuaded us to hold in his favour. His preliminary objection is therefore overruled.

RULING

TIMBO, C. J.

This application was made by counsel for the defendants/applicants in pursuance to rule 92(1) of the Supreme Court rules 1982 and the inherent jurisdiction of the court. The application was supported by several affidavits to which were also attached a number of exhibits.

By rule 92 (1),

“A defendant upon whom a notice of motion and a statement of the plaintiffs case are served shall, if he wishes to contest the case, within ten days of such service or [p.36] within such time as the court upon terms may direct file a statement of the defendants' case which shall be signed by the defendant or his counsel.”

The first solicitor for the defendants/applicants had failed to file the statement of defendants' case within the prescribed period; hence the present application by Mr. Terrence Terry for extension of time within which to file his clients' case.

Dr. Bu Buakei Jabbie for the respondents/plaintiffs vehemently opposed the application and contended that

(i) There are various defects in each of the Affidavits whether supporting, supplementary or additional sworn to severally by the defendants/applicants and their solicitors.

(ii) There had been willful no-compliance by the defendants/applicants with rule 92 (1)

(iii) There had been substantial and in-ordinate delay by the defendants/applicants to seek leave to extend time within rule 92 (1) which delay had not been satisfactorily explained or indeed by the arguments of counsel.

(iv) Granting the leave sought will be tantamount to an abuse of the process of the court.

Dr. Jabbie further referred us to the cases of Ratnan V. Cumarasmy (1964) 3 All E.R. 933 and Revici V. Prentice Hall Incorporated And Others (1969) 1 All E.R. 772 to buttress his submissions.

In answer to the first contention of Dr. Bu Buakie Jabbie, Mr. Terry submitted that the objection to the alleged defects in the various affidavits filed by defendants/applicants had been taken too late in the day. He said Dr. Jabbie ought to have taken the objection at the time he sought to put them in. This would have given him the opportunity to invoke the provisions of Order 22 Rule 12 of the High Court Rules in order to use these affidavits. Having failed to take the objection at the appropriate time he must not now be heard to be objecting to the several affidavits filed by the defendants/applicants. According to Mr. Terry the objection is even more unpardonable because Dr. Jabbie himself had extensively relied in his argument upon the facts deposed in the supplemented affidavit of Osman Foday Yansaneh sworn to on the 9th day of December 2002 at 4.00 0' Clock in the afternoon which said affidavit in all its essentials had constituted the pith and substance of the defendants/applicants' application for leave to file their case pursuant to the second limb of rule 92 (1). By so doing, Mr. Terry said counsel had waived any right he had to raise such objections.

Assuming without conceding that we are minded to reject the impugned affidavits Mr. Terry again submitted that the reasons advanced by Dr. Jabbie for asking that the affidavits be rejected are devoid of any merit whatsoever because such defects if they [p.37] existed at all only went to the form and not to the substance. Consequently their admission cannot properly be described as an abuse of the process of the Court.

We have considered the several arguments and submissions of counsel on both sides. We agree with Mr. Terry that once the affidavits complained of had been admitted without objection, Dr. Bu Buakei Jabbie is deemed to have waived his right to challenge their admission. In any case, we hold the view that Dr. Jabbie's complaints went only to the form and not to the substance of the affidavits.

Secondly, the cases of Ratnan and Revici cited by Dr. Jabbie, we believe,' were merely restating a rule of law that where there had been non-compliance within the rules, such non-compliance must be explained and there must be material upon which the Court can exercise its discretion.

The only material before the Court of Appeal in Ratnan was the appellants' affidavit in which he gave the reason for the delay as the hope for a compromise. Similarly, in the recent unreported case of Alhaji Bockarie Kakay, V. Clementina Yambasu, S.C. Misc.App:3/2002, we refused to extend the period in which to file his client's case because the explanation which counsel gave for failing to comply with the rules, we found, was rather flimsy. He simply said it was due to pressure of work in his chambers.

Unlike Ratman and Kakay, in the instant case, the defendants/applicants have in our opinion given sufficient reasons in their several affidavits for the cause of delay which was due to their first solicitor's negligence in failing to file their case within the stipulated period. We do not think either that the negligence of their solicitor should be visited on them. They acted, in our estimation with reasonable promptness in seeking the services of another solicitor when they discovered the previous one had failed to file their case on time.

The application is therefore allowed. The defendants/applicants shall file their case within seven days. Costs in the cause.

RULING

TIMBO, C. J.

The plaintiffs by originating notice of motion dated the 9th day of October 2002 sought among other things, the following declarations in pursuance of sections 122, 124 (1), 127, and 175 (15) of the that the constitution of the All Peoples Congress Party (A. P. C.) which was amended and [p.77] approved by the A. P.C. National Delegates Conference of 22nd to 24th March 2002 is illegal and of no effect because,

(i). It contravened articles 6 and 16 of the current 1995 A. P. C. Constitution.

(ii). It is ultra vires section 24 (1) of the Political Parties Act 2002 and (iii). It is in consistent with section 35 (2) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991 (Act No. 6 of 1991) for not conforming to democratic principles.

That it be further declared that,

(iv). The office of National Party Leader and Head of the A. P. C. Party purportedly established by the illegal constitution of 2nd April 2002, called ALPHACON 2002 does not exist in law.

(v). The 1st defendant the Hon. Ernest Bai Koroma Member of Parliament is not lawfully an incumbent of the purported office of National Party Leader and Head of the A P C Party the said office or position being itself illegal, non-existent and unknown to the All Peoples Congress (A. P. C.) party.

(vi). The Constitution of the All Peoples Congress Party (A. P. C.) dated the 5th December 1995 is the only lawful and current constitution of the All Peoples Congress party.

(vii). The highest leadership offices or positions in the All Peoples Congress party as established by the current 1995 A. P. C. Constitution are as follows:

[p.78]

(i). National Party Leader, and

(ii). National Party Chairman

(iii). National Vice Chairman

(viii). The changes in the following titles of office holders from those named above to those of National Party Leader and Head of the All Peoples Congress, National Party Chairman and National Vice Party Chairman respectively or any variance thereof, are ultra vires of section 24 (1) of the Political Parties Act

2002 the said changes having been effected after the A. P. C. National Delegates Conference of 22nd to 24th March 2002.

Lastly, the plaintiffs have asked the Court to grant permanent injunctions against the several incumbents of the newly created positions.

In the course of the hearing of the originating notice of motion the Court requested the parties to address it on the question of jurisdiction in view of the provisions of section 24 (1) of the Political Parties Act 2002 (Act No. 3) which provides:

"24 (1) Where a political party registered under section 12 intends to alter (a) its constitution;

(b) its rules or regulations, if any;

(c) the name or address of any of its founding members;

(d) the title, name or address of any office holder submitted to the Commission under subsection (2) of section 11;

[p.79]

(e) its name, symbol, colour or motto,

it shall notify the Commission of its intention and the Commission shall, within fourteen days after the receipt of the notification, cause to be published by Government Notice the intended alteration, and invite objections, if any, to anything contained in the intended alteration."

It was at this stage that one of our brothers, Warne J S C fell ill and was hospitalized for a period of nearly six months.

Immediately the Court resumed sittings in November 2003, we were confronted with yet another issue. The 1st plaintiff Yambasu through his Solicitor Mr. Biloku Sesay had filed a notice of discontinuance of the originating notice of motion seemingly against all six defendants.

We allowed counsel to address us on this point. He referred us to a document we are told, was written and filed by the 1st plaintiff. I shall quote it verbertim. It reads,

"From: Mr. Sahr John Yambasu Member A. P. C. Kono, Deputy

Leader/Chairman A. P. C. National,

[p.80]

I Sahr John Yambasu of Kono District has today declared at a meeting of A P C, Kono District and say as follows:

1. that I totally 3/11/03 unconditionally withdraw from all action at present in the matter between JOHN Yambasu against Hon. Ernest Bai Koroma in the Supreme Court in Sierra Leone.

2. That I completely dissociate myself From all Further Actions against Hon E. B. Koroma and others.

3. That I support present and future political party activities of Hon. Ernest Bai Koroma to be Leader of the A P C Party in the up coming General Elections. Any further discussions will be done in Freetown.

Mr. Biloku Sesay contended that once his client had filed his notice of discontinuance against all the defendants the entire proceedings had collapsed.

The affidavit in support of the originating notice of motion was sworn to by Sahr John Yambasu on 9th of October 2002. Therefore according to Mr. Terry since Mr. Yambasu who swore to the supporting affidavit had already indicated he was withdrawing from the proceedings, such affidavit would no longer subsist and there being no supporting affidavit to the said originating notice of motion as required by Rule 89, the current proceedings must end.

In reply Dr. Bu Buakei Jabbi for the 2nd, 3rd and 4th plaintiffs submitted that the discontinuance by the first plaintiff in his notice of discontinuance dated the 24th November 2003 applies only to the 1st plaintiff and does not affect the position of the other three plaintiffs visa vis all the defendants.

Secondly, he argued that Rules 89 and 90 require that to invoke the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court there has to be more documents of originating process than just the originating notice of motion and the supporting affidavit. There must also be filed the statement of the plaintiffs' case and an affidavit verifying same. Dr. Bu Buakei Jabbi further maintained that there is no discontinuance in law by the 1st plaintiff before this Court. He submitted that, the supporting affidavit to the [p.82] originating notice of motion remains completely unaffected by the filing of the notice of discontinuance and consequently the whole matter remains intact and properly before the Court for hearing and determination.

He also observed that since our rules do not have express provisions for the discontinuance of original actions in the Supreme Court, the Court is compelled to invoke Order 22 rule (1) of the High Court Rules 1960.

As far as is relevant, Order 22 rule (1) provides that,

"the plaintiff may at any time before receipt of the defendant's defence, or after receipt thereof before taking any other proceedings in the action (save any interlocutory application) by notice in writing wholly discontinue the action against all or any of the defendants or withdraw any part or parts of his cause of complaint, and thereupon he shall pay such defendant's costs of the action, or if the action be not wholly discontinued, the costs occasioned by the matter so withdrawn ...

Save as in this rule otherwise provided it shall not be competent for the plaintiff to withdraw the record or discontinue the action without the leave of the Court but the Court may before, or at or after hearing or trial, upon such terms as to costs, or as to any other action, and otherwise as may be just order the action to be discontinued or any part of the alleged cause of complaint to be struck out ...."

[p.83]

Counsel was quick however to concede that after receiving the defence but before taking any substantive proceedings in the matter a plaintiff can still discontinue. But here, he argued, not only have the plaintiffs received a defence but they have thereafter taken substantive steps in the proceedings and so cannot now withdraw.

He listed the substantive steps taken by the plaintiffs after receiving the defence as follows:

1. On Thursday 15/5/03 the plaintiffs commenced their case. They were given two days to complete.

2. On Thursday 29/5/03 two weeks later the plaintiffs again continued arguments.

3. On the same day the plaintiffs were asked specifically to address the Court on,

(i). The relevance and import of section 24 of the Political Parties Act 2002

(ii). The locus standi of the plaintiffs.

Shortly after, plaintiffs submitted their arguments in writing.

Dr. Jabbi finally submitted that the supporting affidavit in an original action in the Supreme Court is not personally geared to any particular deponent. Such affidavit is a formal document and so discontinuance by the 1st plaintiff would not withdraw that affidavit from the use of the Court.

I have considered carefully the submissions of counsel on both sides.

[p.84]

The first task, as I see it, is to determine whether Order 22 rule 1 of the High Court Rules 1960 has any application in these proceedings.

Rightly Rule 98 of our Rules provides that,

“Where no provision is expressly made in these rules relating to the Original and Supervisory Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, the practice and procedure for the time being of the High Court shall apply mutatis mutandis”,

As against this there are also the provisions of Rule 89 (1) to the effect that,

“89 (I) Save as otherwise provided in these Rules, an action brought to invoke the original jurisdiction of the Court shall be commenced by Originating Notice of Motion in Form 8 set out in the First Schedule to these Rules which shall be signed by the Plaintiff or his counsel.”

And by sub (2) of Rule 89,

“The Notice of Motion shall be supported by an affidavit setting forth as concisely as possible the nature of the relief sought by the plaintiff ...”

It will be recalled that in an earlier ruling on the 3rd of January 2003, in the substantive proceedings, we had held that while the entry of an appearance in proceedings begun by writ of summons in the High Court was absolutely necessary [p.85] this was not so in the case of actions in which the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is invoked. This process has its own laid down procedure. So we found Rule 98 to be totally inapplicable to the originating process of the Court. I do not therefore agree with counsel for the 2nd, 3rd and 4th plaintiffs that Order 22 rule 1 applies here by virtue of rule 98.

With respect, I do not similarly subscribe to Mr. Terry's view that because it was the 1st plaintiff who swore to the affidavit in support of the originating notice of motion his withdrawal from the action would mean the automatic end of the proceedings as there would no longer be any affidavit to support the said originating notice of motion as required by Rule 89.

From his letter of withdrawal from the suit there is no where in which it is stated that the 1st plaintiff was withdrawing with the consent of the other three plaintiffs whom he said, had authorized him to swear to the affidavit in question. Besides, the affidavit from the moment of filing it became the property of the Court and therefore part of the records which he could not withdraw. In my opinion his departure from the proceedings will not affect in any way the position of the affidavit in support of the originating notice of motion.

Furthermore, as was indicated by Dr. Bu-buakei Jabbi, apart from the affidavit in support there are also other documents required to be filed under Rule 89, such as the affidavit verifying the case for the plaintiff. It is quite significant that this document [p.86] was sworn to on 15/1 0/02 by another of the four plaintiffs - not Sahr John Yambasu .

It was done by the 3rd plaintiff Mohamed Lamin Bangura and he did it as in the case of Mr. Yambasu with the authority and mutual behalf of all four plaintiffs.

In the circumstances, as we have here, why should the discontinuance of the action by one of four plaintiffs be discontinuance by all the others without their consent or authority?

The final question is, ought the Court to allow the 1st Plaintiff to drop out of the main proceedings because of his notice of discontinuance?

I have no hesitation in holding that he should be allowed to go. I cannot agree more with that part of the ruling of my sister Wright J S C (which I have had the opportunity of reading) when she said if a litigant decides to discontinue his action the Court must not force him to proceed with such action.

The 1st plaintiff is accordingly allowed to withdraw from the substantive proceedings. The other three have every right to proceed with their action and I so order.

HON. JUSTICE DR. A. B. TIMBO

CHIEF JUSTICE

[p.87]

WRIGHT, J.S.C.

A Notice of Discontinuance dated 20th November 2003 in the above named case was filed by the 1st Plaintiff John Sahr Yambasu: I must state here that the original action started with an originating notice of motion dated 9th day of October 2002 seeking several reliefs by the plaintiff pursuant to section 122, 124(1), 127 and 175 (5) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act NO. 6 of 1991. This motion was supported by an affidavit sworn to on the 9th day of October 2002 by the 1st plaintiff John Sahr Yambasu. Later after the plaintiff's case had been filed, the Registrar of this Court filed on the 6th November 2000 a notice of non-compliance with Rule 92(1) of the Supreme Court. Counsel for the defendants filed a notice of motion dated 9th December 2002 seeking leave to file a case for the defendants. On the 30th April 2003 this Court granted the defendants leave to file their case, which was later filed.

[p.88]

The Court heard arguments by Counsel for the plaintiff Dr. B. Jabbie in support of the originating notice of motion dated 9th October 2002. At the hearing on the 29th May 2003 the Court intimated both Counsel for the plaintiff and respondents that the Political Parties Act NO.3 of 2003 may be relevant in this matter. The Court had a long adjournment because of the illness of one of the Justices presiding in this matter. At the resumed hearing on the 26th November 2003 a notice of change of Solicitor was filed for the 1st plaintiff and was replaced by Mr. Beloku Sesay.

On the 26th November 2003 Counsel for the plaintiff Mr. Beloku Sesay sought leave to discontinue the action against the defendants. Counsel for the defendants T. Terry Esq. argued that the originating notice of motion dated 9th October 2002 was supported by an affidavit sworn to by the 1st plaintiff John Sahr Yambasu as required by the Supreme Rules and since he has filed a notice of discontinuance then there is no affidavit in support of the motion which brings the matter to an end. He argued further that since the affidavit of the 1st plaintiff John Yambasu is now of no effect since the matter has been discontinued and urged the Court to strike out the originating notice of motion since the affidavit is no longer in existence.

Counsel for the 2nd, 3rd and 4th plaintiffs Dr. B. Jabbie submitted that the notice of discontinuance applied only to the 1st plaintiff and does not apply to the other plaintiffs and that affidavit of the 1st plaintiff still stands despite the notice of discontinuance. He further submitted that according to Rule 98 of the Supreme Court Rules since there are no express Rules for discontinuance then the High Court Rules 1960 applies i.e. Order 22 of the High Court Rules. He said that since the 1st plaintiff is a co-plaintiff he cannot withdraw the proceedings. He said that the affidavit is still part of the record and it has not breached the provisions of order 27(11) of the Rules of the High Court for it to be rejected by the Court.

In reply Mr. Beloku Sesay submitted in reply that the application was made in accordance with Rule 22 of the High Court Rules and that the affidavit of the 1st plaintiff goes with the notice of discontinuance and that the matter no longer exists.

Mr. T. Terry for the defendants in reply said that the issue is based on form and not on substance. He said that the notice of discontinuance of the 1st plaintiff makes the [p.89] position of the other plaintiffs fatal since there is no longer an affidavit in support of the notice of originating motion and therefore that is the end of the matter. Mr. Beloku Sesay for the 1st plaintiff adopted the submission of Mr. T. Terry for the defendants.

In my view it is never too late to discontinue an action and the Court although it has the discretion to grant leave for discontinuance must do so in a just and equitable way.

There are certain issues before this Court for resolution.

1. Whether the 1st plaintiff on the filing of the notice of discontinuance his affidavit which was filed on behalf of the other plaintiffs was withdrawn.

2. Whether the 1st plaintiff has the right to withdraw. his affidavit and effectively discontinue the action because of non-compliance with Rules 89(1) of the Supreme Court Rules when there are other plaintiffs.

To my mind he was acting as agent of the plaintiffs when he swore to the affidavit. The answers to the first and second questions are in the affirmative. I disagree with Counsel for the 2nd, 3rd, 4th plaintiffs, Dr. Jabbie that on discontinuance by the 1st plaintiff the affidavit still exists since there are other plaintiffs. Civil action are voluntarily instituted by persons and not under by compulsion. If a litigant decides to discontinue his action I do not believe the Court must force an unwilling litigant to proceed with an action. It is not necessary for me to list the effect of a refusal to grant leave to discontinue since it is not necessary for my decision. I aver that on the discontinuance of the action by the 1st plaintiff the affidavit by the 1st plaintiff is withdrawn and no longer exists.

After the affidavit of the 1st plaintiff has been withdrawn what then is the status of the action? Under Rule 89 (2) of the Supreme Court Rules Public Notice No.1 of 1982 the originating notice shall be supported by an affidavit: Therefore in the absence of a supporting affidavit the action becomes legless and in consequence the proceeding should be terminated.

Obviously, the absence of a supporting affidavit violates Rule 89(2) and there is non-compliance with this Rule. This leads me to the next question whether the [p.90] proceedings can be saved. In my view, the action was commenced by several plaintiffs and supported by a single affidavit by the 1st plaintiff. This 1st plaintiff has by withdrawal of his affidavit impliedly discontinued his action. Does the action of the other plaintiffs survive? Rule 98 of the Supreme Court Rules enables this Court to invoke the practice and procedure of the High Court mutatis mutandis. Under Order 50 of the High Court Rules the court has the power to waive non-compliance with the rule of the Court. The history of the cases under this rule was to make a fine distinction between viodable and void irregularities. Lord Denning in Re Pritchard 1963 Ch 503 made the distinction between nullity and mere irregularities. This Court undoubtedly has the discretion to waive non-compliance with any of its rules. It will be unfair to the other plaintiffs in this action to discontinue for non-compliance with Rule 89(2) when the defect can easily be remedied by the filing of another affidavit which the Court has power to grant.

My decision is re-inforced by Ex parte Atumfuwa and Another reported in 2000 SCGLR. P.72. Leave is hereby granted to the 1st plaintiff to discontinue the action against the defendants. The Court has a discretion to waive non-compliance and leave is hereby granted to file further affidavits in support of the notice of the originating notice of motion dated 9th October 2000.

Warne JSC.,

Notice of Discontinuance dated 20th November 2003 in the case of the 1st Plaintiff John Sahr Yambasu against the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th and 6th Defendants was argued in this Court by Mr. Beloku Sesay for leave to be granted for such Discontinuance.

The events preceding such an application are contained in the record of proceedings as follows: Dr. Bubuakei Jabbi on behalf of all the Plaintiffs herein filed an Originating Notice of Motion dated 9th day of October 2002 seeking several reliefs pursuant to Section 122, 124(1), 127 and 175(15) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.6 of [p.92] 1991. This Motion was supported by an affidavit sworn to by the 1st Plaintiff John Sahr Yambasu who is now seeking leave to discontinue the suit against all the defendants.

The sequence of events are as follows: On the 3rd of December 2002 Dr. Jabbi for Plaintiffs was present and said he received notice for the hearing the day before. C C B Taylor Esq., for the Defendants applied for an adjournment because Mr. Brown-Marke for the Defendants was unavailable and there was a letter from Brown-Marke seeking the adjournment, Dr. Jabbi conceded and the adjournment was granted to the 20 December 2002.

On the 10th December 2002 Dr. Jabbi appeared for the plaintiffs and T M Terry Esq., with Ms. G Thompson, 0 Kamara Esq., and C CB Taylor Esq., appeared for the Defendants as Counsel. The motion was adjourned to 20th January 2003. The record showed that on the 6th November 2002, the Registrar of the Court filed Notice on non-compliance with Rule 92(1) of the Rules of Court that 1st Defendant was a would be defendant on the 16th January 2003. T M Terry Esq., applied by Notice of Motion dated 9th December 2002 on behalf of the defendants to seek leave to file case for the Defendants. Dr. Jabbi stated that he had a preliminary objection to the motion being heard. The pith and substance of the objection is that the Defendants had failed to enter an appearance to the originating Notice of Motion. This was forcefully argued by Dr. Jabbi. He concluded that the application was not properly before the Court and should be dismissed. Mr. Terry replied that the application was made pursuant to specific rule which was Rule 92 of the S C.[p.93] Rules. Dr. Jabbi did not reply and Ruling was reserved. The Ruling was delivered on the 3rd March, 2003 and the objection was overruled.

Mr. Terry proceeded with the application pursuant to rule 92 (1) of the S C Rules, Dr. Jabbi vigorously opposed the application for leave. Mr. Terry replied with the same tenacity as Dr. Jabbi. On the 30th April 2003, Ruling was delivered by Court granting such leave to the file the defendant's case with costs assessed at Le3,500,000.

On the 15th May 2003 the Court started to hear the arguments of Dr. Jabbi in support of the Originating Notice of Motion dated 9th October 2002. During the argument, Dr. Jabbi sought leave to file certain affidavits in answer to the Defendant's case. Mr. Terry objected. The application was refused Dr. Jabbi continued his arguments. At the hearing on the 29th May 2003, the Court intimated both Counsel that the Political Parties Act, No.3 of 2003 may be relevant in this Matter.

There was a long period when the Court never sat due to the illness of (Warne JSC.) one of the Justices.

At the resumed hearing on 26 November 2003, Mr. Beloku Seisay, on behalf of the 1st Plaintiff John Sahr Yambasu sought leave to discontinue the action against all the Defendants.

[p.94]

Mr. Terry in answer to the application/submits that the application is invoking Rule 89 of the rules of this Court. He argued that the Originating Notice of Motion is not a representative action and the defendants swore to affidavit in support of their case. As regards the affidavit sworn to by the 1st Plaintiff in support of the Originating Notice of Notice that is now of no effect, because the motion has been discontinued. Counsel urged the Court to strike out the affidavit as the Originating Notice of Motion is no longer existing. Dr. Jabbi in his submission argued that the action by the 2nd, 3rd and 4th Plaintiffs still submits because they have complied with Rules 89 and 90 of the Rules of this Court. Dr. Jabbi submits that the purported Notice of Discontinuance cannot be the foundation for the matter to be dismissed and the affidavit sworn to by 1st Plaintiff is still intact.

Counsel submits that the manner in which the proceedings were set in motion has an implication on the Notice of Discontinuance and refers to Order 22(1) of the rules of the H. C. pursuant to Rule 98 of the rules of the Court.

He submits that the 1st Plaintiff is one of several plaintiffs and is severely constrained as to his wish to discontinue or withdraw out of a number of Plaintiffs.

Counsel further submits that by the nature of the claims and the reliefs sought in the Originating Notice of Motion, the 1st Plaintiff is a necessary party having subscribed to [p.95] all the claims indivisibly to the Originating Notice of Motion and he is the only plaintiff who can be personally affected by one of the principal claims.

Counsel concluded that the Notice of Discontinuance has not complied with law and practice and the affidavit in support of the Originating Notice of Motion is still part of the record and it has not breached the provisions of Order 27(1) of the Rules of H.C. for it to be rejected by the Court.

Mr. Beloku Sesay submits in reply that he has made the application in accordance with the provisions of Order 22(1) of the Rules of H.C. Counsel concluded that by virtue of 89(2) of the rules of this Court, once the affidavit of 1st plaintiff goes, the cause or matter no longer exists.

Mr. Terry, for his part, replies that the first issue is based on form not on substance-vide Order 22 (1) of H.C. Rules. Counsel submits that the Notice of Discontinuance conforms with Order 22(i) Rules of H.C. and submits that since there is no provision in the Rules of this Court, Court can rely on its inherent jurisdiction. Counsel concludes that the position of the plaintiffs is fatal because they have no affidavit in support of their case.

Can the Court grant leave to the 1st Plaintiff to discontinue the action against all the defendants? This is the issue the Court will address. I will carefully consider the Notice [p.96] of Discontinuance to ascertain if it has complied with the applicable rules. Be that as it may, the discretion of the Court to grant such leave or not is not restricted.

The Notice of Discontinuance is dated 20th day of November 2003.

Prior to this Notice of Discontinuance being filed, several other documents were filed. There is an affidavit in opposition sworn to by one Osman Foday Yansaneh who deposed inter alia, that he is the 3rd Defendant in the matter herein and exhibited as annexures to the affidavit, a Declaration by John Sahr Yambasu the 1st Plaintiff addressed to all members of the All People's Congress Party; a letter to Dr. Bubuakei-Jabbi the solicitor for all the plaintiffs instructing him to discontinue the action against defendants herein. The 3rd defendant deposed in paragraph 4 the of following that I make this affidavit in opposition to that sworn to by John Sahr Yambasu on 9th October at 10.30 O'clock in the forenoon in support of the Originating Notice of Motion dated 9th day of October 2002".

The affidavit herein referred to by Osman Foday Yansaneh is very significant. Paragraph (1) states "that I am deponent herein and authorized by all the plaintiff's herein to make this affidavit on the mutual behalf of all of us who are Plaintiffs in the matter intituled as above" The paragraph quoted is in the affidavit sworn to by John Sahr Yambasu 1st Plaintiff.

[p.97]

Having reiterated the sequence of events, I will now address the relevant provisions in the Rules dealing with Discontinuance of the action in this Court. There is no specific provision in our rules except rule 98 which provides: "Where no provision is expressly made in these Rules relating to the Original and Supervisory Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, the practice and procedure for the time being in the High Court shall apply mutantis mutandas."

I now refer to the provision in the High Court rules which is Order XXII Rule (1). It is a long rule, but I shall spell out what is relevant in the instant case. Which is: "the plaintiff may, at any time before receipt of the defendants defence, or after the receipt thereof before asking any other proceeding in the action (save any interlocutory application) by notice in writing wholly discontinue the action against all or any of the defendants or withdraw any part or parts of his cause of complaint, and thereupon he shall pay such defendants costs of the action, or if the action be not wholly discontinued, the costs occasioned by the matter so withdrawn. Such costs shall be taxed and such discontinuance or withdrawal, as the case may be, shall not be a defence to any subsequent action. Save as in this rule otherwise provided, it shall not be competent for the plaintiff to withdraw the record or discontinue the action without leave of the Court, but the Court, but the Court may before, or at or after hearing or trial, upon such terms as to costs, as to any other action, and otherwise as may be just order the action to be discontinued or any part of the alleged part of the alleged cause of complaint to be struck out …… [p.98] …….

The next part of this rule refers to the defendant.

It is quite clear that the 1st Plaintiff must needs have leave to discontinue the action. Mr. Beloku Sesay who has made the application to discontinue is not the original solicitor on record. We are not questioning his authority to file the notice of discontinuance since he filed a notice of change of Solicitor. Mr. Terry for the Defendants is urging the Court to accede to the application to discontinue as the affidavit is support of the Originating Notice of Motion having been sworn to by the 1st Plaintiff is no longer germaine to the issue before the Court. Mr. Beloku Sesay adopts the submission of Mr. Terry. Dr. Bububaki-Jabbie argued that notwithstanding the purported withdrawal by the 1st Plaintiff, the cause or action is still alive; if for no other reason than that 1st plaintiff was a necessary party to the cause or action.

The arguments of Counsel on both sides are very attractive. Be that as it may, I will consider this application of the 1st plaintiff to discontinue his action against all the defendants in the context of the proceedings up to this point. As I have said, the Court had on the 3rd of March, 2003 upheld that the defendants were not obliged to file a notice of appearance to the Originating Notice of Motion before being heard. In my view, the main purpose for the use of the due process of an Originating Notice of Motion is for the expeditious disposal of a cause or matter i.e. where the res or subject matter is perishable, [p.99] or liable to destruction. The reasons given are not exhaustive, and I will add one more which is where minors may suffer irreparable harm or damage. I subscribed to the ruling of the 3rd March 2003 that notice of appearance was not necessary. If it were, all the rules applicable to a process begun by Writ of Summons. Would have applied, such as a defence, a reply (if any) counterclaim and all that it . entails, joining of issue and entry for trial. In my view, the framers of the Rules never contemplated such a laborious process in relation to an Originating Notice of Motion.

In like manner Order 22(1) of the Rules of the High Court is not applicable to an Originating Notice of Motion. In my opinion, the application to discontinuance at this stage of the proceedings is an abuse of the due process of the court. I am not unmindful of the fact that if the court were disposed to grant the application, it will be on terms; nonetheless, in view of what I have said above, this court should not permit the abuse of its process with impunity. The applicant is therefore permitted to discontinue proceedings against all the defendants on terms.

Defendants waives costs.

JUDGMENT

TIMBD, C. J.

The Plaintiffs by originating notice of motion dated the 9th day of October 2002 sought among other things the following declarations in pursuance of sections 122, [p.101] 124 (1), 127, and 175 (15) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991 (Act NO. 6 of 1991).

(1) That the document referred to herein as "The Constitution of the All Peoples Congress (APC) Party" amended and approved by the APC National Delegates Conference of Friday 22nd to 24th March 2002, dated 2nd April 2002 is in contravention of Articles 6 and 16 of the 1995 APC Party Constitution and is ultra vires of section 24 (1) of the Political Party's Act 2002 and is therefore null and void and has no legal effect whatsoever.

(2) That the office of "National Party Leader and Head of the APC Party" purportedly established by the illegal instrument dated 2nd April 2002 referred to therein as ALPHACON 2002 is null and void.

(3) That the 1st Defendant herein Honourable Ernest Bai Koroma Member of Parliament is NOT lawfully the holder of the purported office of "National Party Leader and Head of the APC Party."

(4) That the Constitution of the All Peoples Congress (APC) Party dated 5th December 1995 is the lawful and current Constitution of the All Peoples Congress (APC) Party and has been such lawful instrument as from 5th December 1995 up until the present moment.

[p.102]

(5) That the highest leadership offices or positions in the All Peoples Congress (APC) Party at the present time are as follows:

i. National Party Chairman Leader

ii. National Deputy Party Chairman/Leader as established by Article 6. 13. 1 and 6. 13. 6 of the current 1995 APC Constitution.

(6) That the changes in the titles of office-holders namely from "National Party Chairman Leader" and "National Deputy Party Chairman/Leader" to those of "National Party Chairman" and National Deputy Party Chairman respectively are null and void and have no legal effect, the said changes having been effected immediately after the APC National Delegates Conference of 22nd to 24th March 2002 contrary to the express provisions of section 24 (1) of the Political Parties Act 2002.

(7) That the purported replacement of the lawful incumbent by the 5th Defendant Mr. Shadrack Bola Williams as Regional Chairman, Western Area for the All Peoples Congress (APC) Party is not lawful since his appointment to and /or assumption of that office is inconsistent with Articles 6 and 16 of the current 1995 APC Constitution.

[p.103]

In this judgment, I shall confine myself to the main issue raised in the substantive application i.e. which of the two rival A P C Party Constitutions, namely that of 1995 and the one amended and approved at the Delegates Conference held between 22nd and 24th March 2002 is valid?

The other interlocutory matters raised while the proceedings were in progress such as jurisdiction, locus standi, the effect of withdrawal by one of four plaintiffs from the proceedings have already been addressed in our respective rulings of the 5th March 2004 and 20th April 2004.

The Plaintiffs by their Statement of Case dated the 17th October 2002 especially in paragraphs 3 to 9 inclusive dealt in detail with the alleged unlawful introduction of a document (Exh. 3) signed by the 1st 2nd and 4th Defendants purporting to establish and to have established a new Constitution of the All Peoples Congress (APC) Party repealing and replacing the valid and existing Constitution of the All Peoples Congress Party 1995 (Exh 2).

Counsel submitted that Exhibit 3 had failed to conform to democratic principles as enshrined in sect 35 (2) of the National Constitution and section 11 (2) (a) (iii) of the Political Parties Act 2002 and that by further virtue of the forgoing the said Exh. 3 is void and of no effect.

Article 6 of Exh. 2 aforesaid sets out in extenso the internal organisation, and the leadership and administrative structures of the APC Party at all levels throughout the country; while Article 16 thereof prescribes the mode, manner, method and procedure for initiating and ultimately effecting alterations or amendments of any nature whatsoever to the .APC Party Constitution.

Dr. Bu Buakei Jabbie maintained that the said Exh. 3 had radically and undemocratically altered the internal orgnisation and leadership structures of the All Peoples Congress Party from those stipulated in Article 6 of Exh. 2 by, in particular establishing such illegal and unconstitutional titles of office as the following:

National Party Leader and Head of the APC Party

National Party Chairman

National Deputy Party Chairman

which first two illegal titles had since been assumed by or assigned to the 1st and 2nd Defendants respectively thereby failing to conform to democratic principles in contravention of section 35 (2) of the 1991 Constitution.

Counsel further contended in particular, that certain elements and provisions in the said Exh. 3 are distinctly undemocratic and autocratic, for example,

(a) Articles 5. 1. 2(d) and 6. 11. 1 (iii) thereof, Le the absolute ouster or exclusion of the national courts of law in respect of litigation against the Party or its National Delegates Conference, thus failing to [p.105] conform to democratic principles as prescribed by section 35 (2) of the 1991 Constitution.

(b) Articles 8.1. 2. thereof, in its omission or deletion of the right of a fair hearing in internal Party discipline of individual members in contrast to the parallel Article 8.1. 2. (iv) of Exh. 2 and therefore in contravention of sections 23 (2) and 35 (2) of the 1991 Constitution of Sierra Leone.

(c) Articles 6.11.2 (iii) (a), 6.12.1 (v), and 8.1. 2. thereof, as to the intensely personalised role given to the "Party Leader" in the enforcement of internal discipline.

In the Statement of Case for the Defendants, the Defendants averred in paragraph 5 thereof that indeed Exh. 3 the so-called "ALPHACON 2002" Constitution together with the amendments thereto was presented to the National Delegates Conference and was approved and endorsed therein by acclamation. Furthermore, in paragraph 6 of the Statement of Defence the 3rd Defendant averred that he did in fact submit to the National Electoral Commission the 1995 All Peoples Congress Party Constitution with the proposed amendments and this new Constitution he said had been properly approved by the National Delegates Conference of 22nd to 24th March 2002 with all its amendments.

[p.106]

I pause here for a moment and ask the question, if what the 3rd Defendant stated in paragraph 6 of the Statement of Defence is correct, why was it necessary again on the 2nd June 2003 to submit the same altered Constitution to the Commission? And more significantly, this was done only when the matter was already in Court before us. As I did ask Counsel for the Defendants, could this not have been an after-thought?

In any event, no affidavit was filed by the 3rd Defendant exhibiting the first letter alleged to have been written by him as Secretary-General of the Party notifying the National Electoral Commission of the pending alterations to the 1995 All Peoples Congress Party Constitution.

All we are left with therefore is the averment by the 3rd Defendant in paragraph 6 of the Statement of Defence that this had been done.

This is certainly not credible or sufficient evidence for us to act on.

Section 24 (1) of the Political Parties Act 2002 (No. 3 of 2002) provides that,

"1. where a political party registered under section 12 intends to alter —

(a) its Constitution

(b) its rules or regulations if any;

(c) the name or address of its founding members;

[p.107]

(d) the title, name or address of any office holder submitted to the Commission under subsection (2) of section 11.

(e) Its name, symbol, colour or motto

it shall notify the Commission of its intention and the Commission shall within fourteen days after the receipt of the notification cause to be published by Government Notice the intended alteration and invite objections if any to anything contained in the intended alteration."

And by subsection (2),

"Every alteration shall come into effect (emphasis mine)—

(a) if no objection is made to the alteration one month after the publication by the Commission of the Government Notice referred to in Subsection (1); and

(b) in any other case at such time as the Commission may determine."

We are told that as soon as the Commission received the altered Constitution (Exh. 3) on 2nd June 2003 it caused a publication thereof to be made in Sierra Leone Gazette No. 28 of Thursday 19th June 2003 in Volume CXXXIV in accordance with the provisions of section 24 (1) of the Political Parties Act 2002 giving Notice of the intended amendments to the 1995 A. P. C. Party Constitution.

[p.108]

So the issue here as I see it is very simple. Did the 3rd Defendant who is the Secretary-General of the All Peoples Congress Party submit a copy of the 1995 All Peoples Congress Party Constitution with its proposed changes to the National Electoral Commission after it had been ratified at the Delegates conference of 22nd to 24th March 2002 as required by section 24 (1) of the Political Parties Act 2002?

This unfortunately, in my respectful view, had not been done. If it had, no doubt, the National Electoral Commission would have reacted accordingly as it did when it received the notice of 2nd June 2003 from the Party's Secretary-General, Mr. Osman Yansaneh.

What has emerged clearly from this sequence of events is that the provisions of the newly approved Constitution had been invoked or implemented without first complying with or going through the legal processes laid down by section 24 (1) and (2) of the Political Parties Act 2002.

Let me now come to Mr. Terrence Terry's argument in his written submissions on section 24 (1) and (2) of the Political Parties Act. He posed the question – "if the members of the Political Parties Registration Commission have up till date not yet been appointed which is the case here, can any Party or anyone for that matter still be required to notify that particular body which till date has not been set up according to law? Mr. Terry thinks not.

[p.109]

Counsel for the Defendants further submitted that for the purposes of matters arising under the Political Parties Act 2002 "Commission" means the Political Parties Registration Commission under Part 1.

This, notwithstanding, it is my opinion that until the members of the Political. Parties Registration Commission have been duly appointed it is the National Electoral Commission which should be notified of any intended alteration of an existing Constitution of a political party registered under the proviso to section 34 (4) of the 1991 Constitution.

By this proviso the first registration of political parties after the coming into force of the 1991 Constitution was to be undertaken by the Electoral Commission.

Sending notice of intension to change the Constitution of a Political Party to the National Electoral Commission would therefore be the only sensible and proper thing to do where members of the Political Parties Registration Commission have not yet been appointed. Were it otherwise, it would mean that a Political Party would not be able to alter its Constitution and implement provisions of the new Constitution until members of the Political Parties Registration Commission have first been selected. That, I believe, will lead to absurd and grave consequences not intended by Parliament when it was enacting section 24 (1) and (2) of the Political Parties Act 2002. See S. C. No. 4/96 - Constitutional Reference - All Peoples [p.110] Congress V NASMOS and Ministry of Social Welfare, Youths and Sports delivered on 26th October, 1999 where the provisions of section 8 of Cap. 23 were applied because Parliament had not prescribed the procedure for bringing into operation section 133 of the 1991 Constitution relating to suits against the State by private individuals.

Looking therefore at both the 1995 Constitution of the All Peoples Congress Party and the one containing the proposed amendments of 2nd April 2002, it IS abundantly clear that the existing APC Constitution of 1995 had been altered.

There is also copious evidence from the various documents filed by both sides that these alterations had been invoked or implemented in contravention of section 24 (1) and (2) of the Political Parties act 2002.

In these circumstances, I hold that the 1995 all Peoples Congress Party Constitution of 2nd April 2002 is the current and only valid Constitution of the All Peoples Congress Party and that whatever was done under or in pursuance of the amended Constitution approved at the Delegates Conference held between 22nd and 24th March 2002 is illegal and void ab initio.

Consequently I will grant declarations 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 sought by the Plaintiffs.

[p.111]

I have not found it necessary to make any pronouncement on whether the changes sought to be introduced into the 1995 All Peoples Congress Party Constitution contravened section 35 (2) of the 1991 National Constitution as not conforming to democratic principles because of my finding that the proposed amendments themselves had been acted upon or implemented prematurely and are therefore of no consequence.

Costs to be taxed.

[p.112]

I have had the opportunity and privilege of reading the draft judgment of the Learned Chief Justice I entirely agree that the several declaration as prayed for be granted.

The Learned Chief Justice has started the various clauses in the Originating Notice of Motion and the relevant paragraphs in the affidavits hereof. He also referred to the verifying affidavit which referred to the plaintiff's case. I will therefore not repeat them. Be that as it may, I will like to highlight a few points of my own.

Let me here and now state the Constitution of Sierra Leone. Act No. 6 of 1991 is the basic Law of the Republic and all organs of the State derive their legitimacy there from.

There are two sections of the Constitution by which Political Parties can exist and operate. The relevant sections are 34 and 35.

Section (1) provides inter alia, "There shall be a Political Parties Regulation Committee on which shall consist of four membership appointed by the President namely

(e)……

(f)……

[p.113]

(4) The Commission shall be responsible for the registration of all political parties and for that purpose shall make such regulations as may be necessary for the discharge of its responsibilities under this Constitution."

Provided that the first registration of political parties after coming into force after the Constitution shall be undertaken by the Electoral Commission.

In my opinion Section 35 (1) and (2) are germaine to the issue before this Court.

Section 35 (1) provides “subject to provisions of this section, political parties may be established to participate in shaping the political will of the people, to disseminate information on political ideas, and social and economic programmes of a national character, and to sponsor candidates for Presidential, Parliamentary or Local Government elections”

35 (2) provides “The internal organisation of a political party shall conform to democratic principles, and its aims, objectives purposes and programmes shall not contravene or be inconsistent with any provisions of this Constitution.” (Empasis mine)

The main thrust and pith and substance of the cases and submissions of plaintiffs are that the defendants have contravened section 35 (2) of the Constitution.

Both parties have agreed that the All Peoples Congress Party is a political party according to law.

[p.114]

The Counsel for plaintiffs have strenuously submitted that the purported amendments to the party's Constitution of 1995 which was registered with National Electoral Commission are untra vires, void and of no effect - They contend that in order to compound the invalidity of the amendment, the defendants have implemented the purported amendments.

The defendants, for their part, through their Counsel have strenuously and vigorously submitted and argued that the amendments were properly made in a National Delegates Conference on 22 - 24 March 2002 by acclamation. It is dated 5th December 1995.

The question I ask myself is which of these arguments is tenable? It is pertinent to consider the 1995 Constitution of the All Peoples Congress, how it can be amended and approved. Once we have ascertained the provision, then we can address the provisions of Political Parties Act of 2002 vis-avis sections 34 and 35 of Act No. 6 of 1991.

Exhibit 2 is the 1995 Constitution of the party annexed to the verifying affidavit of Mohamed L. Bangura, the 3rd Plaintiff herein ARTICLE 16 of the Constitution clearly spells out how the Constitution can be amended.

It provides “AMENDMENTS TO CONSTITUTION

This Constitution or any part thereof maybe amended, rescinded, altered or additions made thereto, by resolution carried by a two-thirds majority motion at a National [p.115] Delegates Conference or as the case may be, by the National Advisory Committee……

The purported amendments are contained in Exhibit 3 of the said affidavit

The Constitution of All Peoples Congress is alleged to have amended and approved by the A.P.C. National Delegates Conference of Friday 22nd to Sunday 24th March 2002; and on the face of it is stated 5th December 1995. (Amended and Approved)

There is nothing in Article 16 which speaks of "by acclamation. There is a presumption that the whole process was flawed and this presumption has not been rebutted. A vote, in my view, means by show of hands, or by secret ballot.

The Plaintiffs and their counsel submitted that the Defendants failed to comply with section 34 (10) of the Political Parties Act No. 3 of 2002.

I do not think section 24 (1) of the said Act is applicable here. The party was registered under the proviso in section 34 of the Constitution Act No. 6 of 1991. When this registration took place, the Constitution submitted to the National Electoral Commission was the 1995 Constitution. Section 34 aforesaid makes a provision for the establishment of a Political Parties Registration Commission. This is the body to which any representation can be made and where political Parties can be made and where political Parties can submit any new Constitution.

WARNE J.S.C.

This is an application by a Notice of Motion for an appeal to be heard by this court. There is however, a certificate of non-compliance by the Registrar of the court pursuant to Rule 41(d) of the Supreme Court Rules (P.N. No. 1 of 1982.)

The certificate reads:—

“I hereby certify that the Appellants in the above appeal have not complied with Rule 41(b) of the supreme Court Rules (P.N. No 1982 as would be Appellants (emphasis mine). In short there is no Notice of Appeal before the Court. Counsel for the would- be Appellants filed an affidavit which I presume is in support of his Notice of Motion dated 18th May 2000. In that affidavit he deposed in paragraph 5 the following:—

"(5) That sometime after we had satisfied the conditions of appeal, I did receive a Notice from the Court that the records were ready and I did collect the records, but inadvertently I failed to file the Case for the Appellants within the time allowed by the Rules. That I did attempt to apply for an enlargement of time within which to file the case but withdrew same because of the inadequacy of the affidavit. Copies of the Motion and Affidavit are exhibited hereto and marked D 1 and D2 respectively”.

Exhibit Dl is a Notice of Motion asking for an enlargement of time within which to file case for the Appellants. The Notice is dated 28 October 2002. Exhibit D2 is the [p.22] affidavit in support of the motion. The Affidavit herein referred to was sworn to on 11th January 2003 and filed 13th January 2003. Counsel for the Appellants is urging the Court not to dismiss the appeal on the certificate of non-compliance by the Registrar. Counsel has invoked the provision of Rule 103 of the Rules of this Court.

Mr. Shears- Moses, Counsel for Respondent has submitted that in order to invoke the provision of Rule 103, there ought to be an application before this court. Counsel further submitted that this is not a proper situation where the court could exercise its discretion to grant leave.

In my view, when the Registrar has filed the certificate of non-compliance can Counsel for appellants be heard? This is the issue I will immediately address.

Rule 41(a) of the Rules herein states clearly “No party to an appeal shall be entitled to be heard by the Supreme Court unless he has previously filed his case in the appeal”. There has been an application before the full Court of five for an enlargement of time within which to file the Appellants case. Before the matter was heard, Counsel for Appellants withdrew the application, and the matter was struck out. In this hearing the Court ought not to have heard the Counsel for appellants. Be that as it may, there is no application before this court on which the Court can exercise its discretion.

The Registrar has invoked the provision of Rule 41 (d) which provides: “where the Appellant fails to file his case in accordance with the provisions of this rule, the Registrar of the Supreme Court shall certify such fact to the Supreme Court which may thereupon order that the appeal be dismissed with or without costs.”

Having said this, I shall perforce have to comply with the provision of Rule 41 (d) and dismiss the appeal. The appeal is accordingly dismissed.

HISTORY OF THE CASE

The process of law culminating in this appeal is as follows:— on the 23rd day of April [p.153] 1997 a Petition was filed in the High Court of Sierra Leone by one Sheik Abdullai A. Bin Raffah in respect of the Precious Minerals Marketing Company (Sierra Leone) Ltd. Incorporated on 15th September 1984 under the Companies Act (Cap 249).

The Petitioner is the Respondent herein.

For the several reasons stated in the Petition, the Petitioner prayed for the following orders:

“i That the Company be wound up by the Court under the provisions of the Companies Act Chapter 249 of the laws of Sierra Leone.

ii That the Petitioner may be granted such order as in the premises may be just

On the 29th day of April 1997, Notice of Intention to oppose the Petition was filed by the late Mr. Terrence Terry a Solicitor of the High Court on behalf of M.J. & J. Development Company Ltd. A contributory (Share Holder) of Precious Minerals Marketing Company (SL) Ltd. On the 13th day of May 1997 a sworn affidavit by one Max-Dixon, a clerk in the office of Mr. Terry challenging the jurisdiction of the court to hear the Petition for non-compliance with the mandatory provision of Rule 32 of the Winding-up Rules 1929. On the 23rd October 1998, there was a Ruling on the Preliminary objection by Stronge J(as he then was):

“1. That the Petition dated the 23rd day of April 1997 for the winding-up of the Precious Minerals Marketing Company (S.LO Limited be removed from the file in the Companies (Winding-up) office Registry. The effect of my order is that the Petition is struck out.

[p.154]

2. That the costs be paid by the Petitioner, such costs to be taxed. On the 24th November, 1998, Mr. D.S. Vincent, Solicitor for Respondents wherein made an application before Stronge J. (as he then was) for the Petition to be re-instated, this was opposed by Mr. F.M. Carew Solicitor for Appellants herein On the 18th May 1999 Mr. Justice Stronge dismissed the Motion for the re-instatement of the Petition.

On the 4th January 1999, the Respondent herein filed a Notice of Appeal against the Order of Mr. Justice Stronge which was dated 23rd day of October 1998.

Let me pause here and make certain observations. After the Order which was made to strike out the Petition made on 23rd October 1998, there was another Order made on 18th May 1999 dismissing the application for the re-instatement of the Petition. Be that as it may, was the Notice of Appeal within the time prescribed by the Rules of the Court of Appeal? I will address that matter in due course. It is to be noted that the Order of 23rd October 1998 was an Interlocutory decision. Let me also observe that, inter alia one of the reliefs sought in the Notice of Appeal is:

(ii) “That the Petition dated the 23rd day of April 1997 for the Winding-up of the Precious Minerals Marketing Company (SL) Limited which the Honourable Mr. Justice AN.B. Stronge ordered to be struck out on the 23rd day of October 1998 be reinstated in the Companies winding-up office registry”

There is no appeal against that Order dismissing the application for the re-instatement of the Petition. Can this relief be granted, when there is no appeal? I will also consider this in due course. Let me continue with the History of events. Proceedings in the Court of Appeal went on before a Court made up of Alhadi, (Deceased) Tolla Thompson, Gbow [p.155] J A, delivered their Ruling on 29th day of May, 2000 Alhadi and Gbow J.A. allowed the Appeal and Tolla-Thompson dismissed the Appeal.

The Grounds of Appeal

The Ruling and Orders of the Court of Appeal are dated 29th May 2000. The grounds of appeal are.

“i. That the Majority Decision/Ruling the Court is per incuriam as it failed or ignored the recognized and laid down Higher Judicial authorities on the effect of non-compliance of statutory provisions and case Law on this issue.

ii That the Majority Court's Decision/Ruling is wrong in Law in waiving the Mandatory Provisions of Rule 11(5) of the current Rules of the Court of Appeal.

iii That the Majority Decision/Ruling erred in Law in holding that the non-compliance with Rule 11 (5) by the Appellant was not willful and that the Court has inherent jurisdiction to waive the non-compliance of Rule 11(5) under the Court's Powers in Rule 66 of the Rules of the Court of Appeal.

iv. That Rule 14(4) of the West African Court of Appeal Rules 1950 were dissimilar to Rule 11(5) of the current rules of Court of Appeal.

v. That the Majority decision/ruling of the Court is unreasonable and cannot be supported by the facts and Law before the Court"

Before the Court, both Counsel were given opportunity to make their submissions.

Their main focus were on the Ruling of Mr. Justice Stronge of 23rd October, 1998. Was it a Interlocutory one? In my opinion, the Ruling was an interlocutory one. What was the issue before the Court of Appeal? It seems to me that the arguments on the Ruling of Mr. Justice Stronge was not really addressed in the Court of Appeal. The decisions in [p.156] The Court of Appeal ruled on the preliminary objection by Counsel for the appellant (herein) "That the appeal before the court was out of time and that deprived the Court of Jurisdiction".

I have already observed that the order appealed against was dated 23rd October 1998. The Appeal was filed and dated 4th day of January 1999. The relevant Rule in the Court of Appeal Rules P.N. 29 of 1985 is Rule 11 (1).

This rule provides: "No appeal shall be brought after the expiration of fourteen days in the case of an appeal against an interlocutory decision (emphasis mine) or of three months in the case of an appeal against a final decision unless the Court enlarges the time". I have held that the ruling of Mr. Justice Stronge of 23rd October 1998 was an Interlocutory decision. As a result the appeal before the Court of Appeal was out of time.

However there was this huddle that among the reliefs sought was an order for the reinstatement of the Petition. There was no specific appeal before the court addressing that order which was one subsequently made dismissing the application for the reinstatement of the Petition of 23rd April 1997.

The grounds of Appeal before the Court were:

i. The Learned Judge erred in law when he ordered that the Petition dated 23rd day of April, 1997 for the Winding-up of the Precious Minerals Marketing Company (Sierra Leone) Limited be removed from the file in the Companies (Winding up) office registry.

ii. The Learned Judge erred in law when he ordered that the said Petition be struck out".

How can reliefs be sought for a non-existence appeal. In my view, that cannot be done.

[p.157]

On this point alone, I can safely say it will be inappropriate to accept the ruling of the Court of Appeal. The Proceedings in the Court of Appeal, with respect to the Learned Justices, were unsatisfactory. There was the filing of the Appeal out of time. The notice of appeal was infelicitously worded. There was no amendment to the grounds of appeal. The Ruling was based on the Preliminary Objection of Counsel for appellants (herein). There was no decision on the grounds of appeal before the Court for what they were worth. In this situation what ought this Court to do. I will resort to the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.6 of 1991 more particularly Section 122(3) which provides the following: "For the purposes of hearing and determining any matter within its jurisdiction and the amendment, execution or the enforcement of any judgment or order made on such matter, and for the purpose of any other authority, expressly, or by necessary implication given to it, the Supreme Court shall have all the powers, authority and Jurisdiction vested in any Court established by this Constitution or any other law". As a result I am tempted to remit the matter to the Court of Appeal, but it will serve no useful purpose.

These proceedings have been prolonged for sometime. Justice demands that litigation must come to an end. I will therefore make the following orders;—

(1) The decision and the Orders made in the Court of Appeal are set aside.

(2) The Orders of the High Court made on the 23rd day of October 1998 are hereby restored.

Each party shall bear it own costs.

Berthan Macaulay Jr. Esq for Respondent

WARNE, J.S.C.:

This is an appeal against the Judgment of the Court of Appeal delivered on the 2nd day of June, 1988. It was a majority judgment in a Court made up of Navo, Thompson-Davis and Gelaga King JJA., Thompson-Davis JA. dissenting. Gelaga King JA gave the principal judgment supported by Navo JA.

There are ten grounds of appeal namely:

1. That Court of Appeal was not duly or properly constituted on the 2nd June, 1988 when the Judgment was delivered contrary to the express provisions of section 107(2) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone No.12 of 1978, in that only two (2) Justices of Appeal were present and read judgments.

2. That the Respondents herein having filed their Notice and grounds of [p.186] Appeal on the yd of April, 1987, the Court of Appeal erred in Law and acted contrary to the letter and spirit of the express provisions of Rules 9 and 11 of Court of Appeal Rules Public Notice No.29 of 1985;

(a) by allowing the Respondents to abandon six (6) out of seven (7) grounds of appeal and substituting in their place two (2) completely fresh grounds of appeal not hitherto included in the original Notice of Appeal some ten (10) months after the date of the decision appealed against, which was tantamount to bringing a fresh appeal months out of time; and

(b) by entertaining arguments from Counsel on those grounds of appeal, and © by basing the substance of their decision on those grounds of appeal.

3. That when the Learned Justice of Appeal said and so held without more that:

"The Chief Justice is the effective and only Lessor and only they can grant a lease to a non-native, as long as the District Officer endorses his consent thereon, and the relevant provisions of the Act are complied with the…… perfectly valid", the Learned Justices of Appeal erred in law in that they failed to apply [p.187] section 76(1) of the Courts Act No.31 of 1965 or to observe section 125(2) of the Constitution Act No.12 of 1978.

That in arriving at their conclusion that since the lease was by Deed, it is trite in law to say that no extrinsic evidence of the intention of the party to the Deed, from his Declarations whether at the time of executing it, or before or after that time is admissible in their absence of fraud" and

"Agreement EX"A" and the plans put in evidence speak for themselves, and, admit no extrinsic evidence for their construction"

the Learned Presiding Justices misdirected themselves on the law of the exclusion of extrinsic evidence to contradict, vary or add to documents by failing to have regard to the facts of the case to the equitable and other legal exceptions to the above rule.

5. That in their constitution of Cap. 122 of the Laws of Sierra Leone, the Learned Justices of Appeal did not construe section 1 thereof properly or at all, and in the event gave the statute an application which is based wholly on English jurispundence on the Laws of trusts and infringes the applicable customary law.

6. That in all the circumstances, to hold "Bitco" had a better right of possession and stemming from a better title, because their lease was prior in time to Rokels" instrument and that Bitco had, and still has a legal estate in the land prior in time to that created by Rokel, is an error in law in that it pre-supposes and wrongly so that Cap. 256, provides for registration not merely of instruments but of title.

7. That the award of damages of Le6,732,000.00 was wrong in Law since there was no sufficient basis to found such a claim

8. That when the Learned Presiding Justices said with reference to Ex. "T" "undoubtedly" the judge did so in error" as the document clearly contravened or did not comply with Section 3 of the Evidence Documentary Act Cap. 26 he erred in law in rejecting the said document in that he ignored or failed to observe the provisions of section 3(2) of the Act Cap. 26 or that the said Ex. "T" was addressed to the Director of Mines whose representative in court was called upon to produce the same.

9. That the Learned Justice of Appeal having correctly stated the Law of trespass then proceeded to mis-apply the same to the facts of the instant case, to contradict themselves and to ignore settled decisions of higher courts binding on them contrary to the principle of Stare Decisis, thereby arriving at an erroneous conclusion on the issue of trespass.

10. That the Learned Justices of Appeal having held that, "…… Be that as it may I do not in any case attach much weight to the map/plan in Bitco's lease since I would have some difficulty in identifying the land from it alone" ERRED IN LAW, and decided [p.189] against the weight of the evidence when they subsequently found that……." ……. it follows from the foregoing that the land was properly leased to Bitco by the Chiefdom Council and that the land leased can be identified from the deed with sufficient certainty……."

For ease of reference, the Respondents are (hereinafter called the plaintiffs) and the Appellant are hereinafter called the Defendants). The facts of the case are, the Defendants were attracted to prospect for gold in the Kafe Simiria in the Tonkolili District in the Northern Province of Sierra Leone.

As a result, they took certain preliminary steps to that end. After they had been assured that certain areas in the Chiefdom had rich gold deposits they proceeded to negotiate with the Paramount Chief and the Chiefdom Councilors and landowners for a lease of a parcel of land in the Chiefdom. The negotiations being successful, a lease was prepared which was signed by Paramount Chief and representatives of the Chiefdom Councillors. The lease was dated 31st December, 1984 and registered in the Office of the Registrar —General. Included in the lease were a plan and a schedule delineating the land conveyed to the defendants.

In arguing the grounds of appeal, Mr. Jenkins-Johnston referred the court to the issues which he submitted are contained in the case for defendants duly filed.

Among the issues Counsel argued before this Court are the following which I considered to be important in deciding the Appeal:—

[p.190]

1. 'The subject-matter of this action being leasehold land in the Provinces, can it be properly determined without having any regard to the provisions of Section 76 of the Courts Act. No.31 of 1965 but merely and wholly on concept of English Jurisprudence and English precedents.

2. (i) Having regard to the preamble to the Provinces Lands Act. Cap. 122 as well as the provisions of Section 2(i) thereof; Is it correct to say that (Land Owners' have no role to play in the granting of a lease under the province Land Act.

(ii) To whom do the phrases "Native Communities and "Men of Note" refer as used in the Act.

3. (i) Can the Court ignore clear and direct evidence that the actual area in dispute i.e. land around Kpafaia Village was never part of the land leased to "Bitco" even though the plan tendered in Court would seem to suggest that it was? Ought the Court to act in vain or to act in a manner contrary to the interest of the Native Communities mentioned in the Provinces Land Act and likely to end in a breach of the Peace?

4. ……..

5. ……..

6. (1) Is there any evidence that the Plaintiffs Bitco were ever in clear and Exclusive Possession of the area in dispute? ……

7. ……

8. ……

9. "In all the circumstances should the Court of Appeal have allowed Bitco's Appeal?"

[p.191]

Counsel contended hat Section 76 of Courts Act No.31 of 1965 was totally disregarded by the Court of Appeal and consequently the Judgment of the Court cannot stand since it was based merely and wholly on the concept of English jurisprudence and English precedents. Counsel submitted that the subject-matter of the action being a Lease of land; in the Provinces, Section 76 of the said Act should have been given due regard.

Counsel further submitted that the Court of Appeal ought to have considered the evidence of the witnesses in the High Court vis-à-vis the lands comprising the area leased to the Plaintiffs which belonged to the native communities of the five villages within which the land in dispute existed, rather than restrict itself to the Lease EX."A".

Counsel submitted that the area in dispute was never surveyed by the Plaintiffs. Indeed, the evidence of the witnesses for the Defendants show clearly that the survey plan of the plaintiffs' did not accurately reflect the agreement between the plaintiffs' and the Chiefdom Council and as such they cannot sustain any claim based on it.

Counsel referred the Court to the Provinces Lands Act Cap. 122, more specifically to section 2 of the Act and submitted that from the evidence of both plaintiffs and defendants, "men of note" in customary practice refer to the landowners or respective heads of the native communities.

Counsel contended and submitted that the Plan on EX."A" was irregular because it had no delineations and was not signed by the Director of Surveys and Lands. The Plan breached section 25 of Cap. 256 Registration of Instruments Act. Counsel submitted that even though Cap. 256 did not expressly provide the consequences of non-compliance, it ought to be regarded as obligatory with an implied nullification of whatsoever is done contrary to its provisions. The Deed Ex. 'A' therefore is voidable.

Counsel submitted further that the plaintiffs, not having properly identified the land claimed which they had leased from the Chiefdom Council and since it is always a question of fact whether or not a particular parcel of land is or is not contained in a description of land contained in a lease; there must be clear evidence to assist court to determine whether the parcels are sufficiently well defined.

1. As regards possession, Counsel submitted that the Defendants were in possession and the Plaintiffs were never in possession to enable them to ground a claim for trespass. Counsel submitted that the issue of possession was a question of fact and the Court of Appeal should have given due regard to the evidence before the High Court and the findings of the Learned Trial Judge.

2. Counsel had also argued that the Court of Appeal had ignored Ex. "T" the report of the Department of Mines on their investigation into the dispute thereby failing to properly evaluate the evidence in the High Court. In relation to Grounds 9 and 10 of the Appeal - Counsel referred to the relevant pages in the case for the Defendants .. On Ground 1 referred to S.107(2) of the Constitution of 1978 Act. No.12. Counsel abandoned Ground (2) with leave of Court.

3. Counsel finally submitted that the Court of Appeal was wrong in awarding damages to the plaintiffs since they did not strictly prove special damage.

In answer to the submissions of Counsel for plaintiffs submitted that Act No.12 of 1978 Section 107(2) refers to hearing not determination and cites specifically S.36 of Act No.31 of 1965 the Courts Act.

[p.193]

In respect of Ground iii Counsel submitted that Section 76 of the said Act. No.31 of 1965 requires considerable analysis and upon such analysis there are limitations to the application of customary law by the Courts. Counsel urged the Court to decide that Section 76(1) and (2) cannot avail the Defendants. Counsel further submitted that the Court of Appeal was correct in not applying customary law in the instant case and in not taking cognizance of landowners as being relevant in the lease.

Counsel submitted that EX."A" and Ex "X" being Deeds, extrinsic evidence will not be allowed to vary or discharge the contents thereof subject to certain exceptions.

Counsel argued that Defendants cannot impugn Ex "A" because they were not parties to Ex. "A" and cannot avail themselves of Section 25 of Cap. 256.

Counsel further submitted that Cap. 122 is a statute of specific application dealing with the granting of lease in respect of land to non-natives.

Counsel submitted that the failure to comply with section 25 of Cap. 256 cannot render a lease made under section 9 of Cap. 122 dependent on the provisions set out in Cap. 256 for registration. , Counsel submitted that the land was clearly identified in the Deed and cited several legal authorities in support of his submission and concluded that the contention that the leased land was not properly identified is not tenable.

The Defendants filed 10 grounds of appeal. However, it is my view, that for the purpose of the appeal, the issues are:—

(1) was the land leased to the plaintiffs clearly defined?

(2) were the plaintiffs in possession of the land which they claimed was trespassed upon?

[p.194]

(3) ought the Court of Appeal to have disturbed the findings of facts made by the High Court.

(4) what principles should govern the award of damages in an action for trespass?

The facts of the case are, the Defendants were attracted to prospect for gold in the Kafe Simiria in the Tonkolili District in the Northern Province of Sierra Leone. As a result they took certain preliminary steps to that end. After they had been assured that certain areas Chiefdom had rich gold deposits they proceeded to negotiate with The Paramount Chief of the Chiefdom Councillors and landowners for a lease of a parcel of land in the Chiefdom. The negotiations being successful, they secured a lease which was signed by the Paramount Chief and representatives of the Chiefdom Councillors. The ease was dated 31st December, 1984 and registered in the Office of the Registrar-General. Among the clauses in the lease were a plan and a schedule delineating the land conveyed to the Defendants. The plaintiffs then imported mining and processing equipments to the tune of $2,000,000 US Dollars. These equipments were transported to the site where they found the defendants mining on part of the area for which they had got concessions to mine for gold. The plaintiffs conceded that they saw a lease agreement of the Defendants which showed an overlap on the plaintiffs concession.

The Defendants for their part said, that in February, 1985 they secured a mining concession in Gbafayah in the Kafe Simiria Chiefdom in the Tonkolili District in the said Northern Province. They averred that the agreement for the concession was made [p.195] between their company and the Paramount Chief and the landowners. It is not in dispute that the Paramount Chief was one of the signatories of both leases. The Defendants I, testified that after the lease agreement had been signed, they were shown the area they were to mine. The boundaries were indicated as the Makoleh river. The Defendants ceased work when the plaintiffs got an injunction against them by the Court. The Defendants also testified that no one was in possession of the land when they had the concession and started to work on the land.

In a case of trespass to land, the plaintiff must prove the extent of his land with certainty and that he was in possession or had a right to possession when the alleged trespass took place.

In the instant case, the plaintiffs sought to prove the extent or delimitation of the land by virtue of the Lease Agreement which they secured from the Paramount Chief and Chiefdom Councillors. The Lease Agreement was tendered on EX."AI". It is significant that the Court of Appeal carefully considered the Lease Agreement of the Plaintiffs before making its findings. I will do the same. The Lease Agreement is in issue and the Court of Appeal held that since the lease was by Deed it trite law to say that no extrinsic evidence of the intention of the party to the Deed from his Declarations, whether at the time of executing it, or before or after that time, is admissible in the absence of fraud". "This is a bold pronouncement of the law and in my view it is very restrictive because the rule cannot be said to be absolute in the face of certain exceptions.

Extrinsic evidence may be given to show that the document does not represent the contract to which the parties agreed. There was clear evidence before the High Court that there were five villages involved in two transactions, that is to say, the Lease Agreement [p.196] with the Plaintiffs and the Lease Agreement with the Defendants. In such a situation, I think there must be led evidence to determine the true nature of the lease. The five villages involved in the Lease Agreement of the Plaintiffs and Defendants respectively are Masomri, Nonkosokoya, Maranda, Gbafaia and Fonkuma. From the evidence, there seems to have been a misunderstanding vis-à-vis what piece or parcel of land was leased to the Defendants and the portion that was leased to the plaintiffs.

The Court of Appeal in its judgment, said inter alia "Since the lease was by Deed, it is trite law to say that no extrinsic evidence of the intention of the party to the Deed, from his Declarations, whether at the time of executing it, or before or after that time is admissible, in the absence of fraud". In the instant case, the Court ignored the fact that the Lease dealt with land situated in the Provinces where Cap. 122, Provinces Land Act is applicable and provisions of Section 76 Subsections 1 and 2 of Courts Act No.31 of 1965 are very relevant.

In my opinion this is a case where extrinsic evidence was desirable to ascertain the circumstances existing at the time the Lease Agreement was made; vide the case of River Wear Commissioner V. Adamson (1877) 2 Case 743 at 763. This following passage was quoted by Lord Halsbury L.C. in ButterleyV. New Hucknall Colliery (1910) A.C. 381 at 382.

"Lord Blackburn said in the case of River Wear Commissioners V. Adamson (1877) 2 App. Cases 743 at 763 "in all cases the object is to see what is the intention expressed by the words used. But from the imperfection of language it is impossible to know what that intention is without enquiring further and seeing what the circumstances were in [p.197] reference to which the words were used what was the object appearing from those circumstances which the person using them had in view, for the meaning of words according to the circumstances in respect to which they were used."

The Court of Appeal in considering Exh."A" the lease, strictly confined its construction to the contents of the Deed and referred to the case of; Shore V. Wilson (1842) 9 CL + F.355 at 365.

This case is the locus classicus on the subject. This case was concerned with the interpretation of Lord Hewley Trusts for "poor and godly preachers of Christ's holy gospel" in which the opinion of the judges were taken by the House of Lords. In that case we have excerpts of the following judgments. Coleridge J. at PP. 525, 527 said "where language is used in a Deed which in its primary meaning is unambiguous and in which that meaning is not excluded by the context and is sensible with regard to extrinsic circumstance in which the writer was placed at the time of writing, such primary meaning must be taken conclusively to be that to which the writer used it; such meaning in that case conclusively states the writer's intention and no evidence is receivable to show that in fact the writer used it in any other sense or had any or had any other intention. This rule thus explained implies that it is not allowable in the case supported to adduce any evidence however strong, to prove an unexpressed intention varying from that which the words used import. This may be open no doubt to the remark that, though we profess to be exploring the intention of the writer, we may be led in many cases to decide contrary to what can scarcely be doubted to have been the intention rejecting which may be most satisfactory in the particular instance to prove it. The answer is, that interpreters [p.198] have to deal with the written expression of the writer's intention and Courts of Law to carry it into effect what he has written, not what it may be surmised, on however, probable grounds that he intended only to have written." So also Parke B in the case at P.565 said "No extrinsic evidence of the intention of the party to the deed, from his declaration, whether at the time of his executing the instrument, or before or after that time, is admissible, the duty of the court being to declare what is written in the instrument, not of what was intended to have been written."

Both judges are expressing similar opinions and I agree with them. However, they have not excluded circumstances existing at the time the instrument was executed from being receivable in evidence to determine the intention of the writer. I would not exclude the circumstances either.

The Court of Appeal quoted part of the judgment of Tindel C.J. in the same case Shore V. Wilson and that of Coleridge J. ibid and said: "from those authorities I apprehend that all Bitco and the Chiefdom Council agreed is to be found within the four corners of the lease. In my judgment therefore it was unnecessary to call the extinsic evidence to which the judge referred and the judge was wrong in law to have so held". In my opinion, this is a regrettable misunderstanding of the judgment in Shore V. Wilson. I say this because of the judgment of Lord Blackburn in the case of River Wear Commissioners V. Adamson (supra). In the peculiar circumstances of the lessors and the subject matter of the lease, it would have been desirable if the land owners had been called to give evidence as regards the delimitation of the land leased to Bitco, the Plaintiffs.

In my view, the Court of Appeal erred when it stated that "the extrinsic evidence of the intention of party to the deed from his declarations, whether at the time of executing it, or before or after that time, is admissible, in the absence of fraud".

The lease, in the instant case, is one leasing land in the Provinces under the Provinces Land Act Cap. 122. In such a case, the Courts should never lose sight of the fact that its jurisdiction to adjudicate is derived from section 21 of the Courts Act No.31 of 1965 which provides:" Nothing in this Act should be deemed to invest the Supreme Court (High Court) with jurisdiction in regard to

(a) any action or original proceedings;

(i) to determine the title to land situated in the Provinces other than the title to leasehold granted under the Provinces Act.

(ii) ……..……..

(iii) ……..

Having been conferred with jurisdiction, the Court ought to have regard for the provisions of section 76 of the aforesaid Act. Section 76 states (1) nothing in this Act shall deprive any Court when determining matters arising in the Provinces in its civil jurisdiction, of the right to observe and enforce the observance of or shall deprive any person of the benefit of, any customary law existing in the Provinces and not being repugnant to natural justice, equity and good conscience, nor incompatible, either directly or by necessary implication, with any Act applying to the Provinces."

[p.200]

(2) Subject to subsection (3) such customary law shall, except where the circumstances, nature or justice of the case shall otherwise require, be deemed applicable in all cases and matters where it shall appear to the Court that substantial injustices would be done to any party by a strict adherence to any law other than customary law.

(3) No party shall be entitled to claim the benefit of any customary law if it shall appear either from the express contract, or from the nature of the transaction out of which any cause or matter may have arisen that such party agreed that his obligation in connection with such transaction should be regulated exclusively by any law referred to in Section 74 or any Act of Sierra Leone; and in cases where no express rule is applicable to any matter in controversy, the Court shall be governed by the principles of justice, equity and good conscience." Subsections (1) and (2) are very relevant in the instant case. In my view, these sections were specifically enacted to address such an issue as in the instant case.

The lease was executed regarding land in the Provinces, more particularly in the Kafe Simiria Chiefdom, Tonkolili District in the Northern Province in the Republic of Sierra Leone.

The Court of Appeal took the trial judge to task in that the judge in his judgment said inter alia:

"The evidence before me clearly shows that the Plaintifft claim under a Deed of Lease which gave them a colour of title. But they are relying. only on this documentary assistance. It is my view that for them to succeed in the action they have perforce to prove their title, but this they have regrettably failed to do. They have sidestepped calling the owners of the land who granted the lease to them to come forward and say both sides of Makokeh River was part of the land leased to them".

[p.201]

In interpreting the lease, the Court of Appeal, in the majority judgment went strictly according to the wording of the lease. This in my view, was in total disregard of the provisions of Section 76 of Act 31 of 1965 aforesaid. Gelaga-King J.A. said also in his judgment "No where in the Act does the word "landowner" appear. This is not surprising having regard to the preamble to which I have already referred and the Act, itself, which in effect gives the power of landowners to the Chiefdom Council. And of course, nowhere in the Act does it say that the consent of the landowner is a sinequanon to the granting of a lease. I might say that, land owners is a relevant term in the Western Area as distinct from the Provinces so far as the granting of lease is concerned. In the Western Area, land is not vested in any Chiefdom Council". It seems to me, with respect, that the Learned Justice was approbating and reprobating. He acknowledges in one breath that the Chiefdom Council is Trustee for the landowners, and, in another breath, that the consent of the landowners is not genuine (s.i.c) to the granting of a lease to non-natives. In my view, the Learned Justice, with respect, misunderstood the concept of dealing in land in the Provinces otherwise the Court of Appeal would have been guided by the provisions of section 76 of the Courts Act No.31 of 1965. Act No.31 of 1965 hereto before mentioned. In the majority judgment Gelaga King J.A. had this to say in rejecting that part of the judgment of the Learned Trial Judge where he referred to land owners.

In resolving this issue it is pertinent to point out that a distinction must be made between the granting of a lease in the Western Area of Sierra Leone and granting of a lease in the Provinces" I entirely agree. This was why section 76 aforementioned was enacted. Nevertheless, the Learned Justice of Appeal

Gelaga-King J.A. referred to the provisions in section 2(1) of the Provinces Land Act Cap 122 in rejecting the judgment of the [p.202] Learned Trial Judge. He states, "The preamble to the Act makes it clear that, unlike the Western Area, "all land in the Provinces is vested in the Chiefdom Council who hold such land for and on behalf of the native communities concerned.

The act gives further clarification defining chiefdom council under section 2(1) as follows: "Chiefdom Council means Paramount Chiefs and their Councillors and men of note or sub-chiefs and their councillors and men of note.

"Men of note" has not been defined by any statute and as far as my research goes, the definition cannot be found in this or any other enactment. In my view, "men of note include Paramount Chiefs, sub-Chiefs, Chiefdom Councillors and landowners. I cannot envisage a situation where the Chiefdom Council will convey any land, be it a leasehold or otherwise without the consent or cooperation of the owners of the land. If the landowners are ignored, it will be a recipe for disaster and civil unrest. That all lands in the Provinces are vested in the Paramount Chief and Chiefdom Councillors who hold such land for and on behalf of the native communities concerned and connote trusteeship. If the land is held in trust, the Chiefdom Council cannot deal with such lands without resort to the landowners.

In my view, the passage in the judgment of the Court of Appeal where it says, "It seems to me, therefore, perfectly clear that so called "landowners do not have a role to play in the granting of a lease under the Provinces Land Act is a misconception". The Chiefdom Council is effective lessor and only they can grant a lease to a non-native." I regret to say that the expression 'so called landowners" is a term of derogation. In my view, the decision of the Court of Appeal, with respect, frustrated and breached. Section 76 of Act No. 31 of 1965 aforesaid. In order to buttress my view I will refer to the [p.203] evidence of P.W.3 in the High Court. He gave his name as Arnold Rayan-Coker. He said, inter alia, "pursuant to Ex. D our Company decided to meet the Paramount Chief of Kafe Simiria Chiefdom and to get his approval to obtain mining concession in the said area provided no part of the said area has been assigned, subletted or leased to any other party being indigenous Sierra Leoneans or foreigners. We were able to get the approval of the Paramount Chief, the Chiefdom Councillors and landowners (emphasis mine). The approval was conveyed in writing"

Some of the landowners named were Bassie Lakoh, Yamba Kargbo and Mayo Seisay. In the Lease EX."A" the names of Bassie Lakoh and Yamba Kargbo appeared as parties who were among those who conveyed.

In my opinion, the Learned Trial Judge was justified when he opined that none of the landowners was called to testify for the plaintiffs. I am more than surprised that the Paramount Chief as the principal trustee for the landowners was not even called as a witness. In continuing his evidence P. W. 3 said..... "our Company decided to meet the Paramount Chief of Kafe Simiria Chiefdom and to get his approval to obtain mining concession.

I see Exhibit A and the plan attached to it. It is the plan of the area I have been referring to. It is the area leased to our company. It is also the area which the Paramount Chief, Chiefdom Elders and the Landowners (emphasis mine) gave concession inExhibit 'B'. The acreage of the area is 196 plots in 4.34 sq. miles." Indeed all throughout his evidence the witness kept referring to the P.C., Chiefdom Councillors and [p.204] landowners. Under cross examination, the witness said, "The area of our concession was indicated to us by the Landowners (emphasis mine.) P.W.6, Musa Bittar, in his evidence testified, inter alia, that' According to the directive given to us by the Ministry of Mines we obtained the approval from the P.C. Alimamy Bangura II of Kafe Simiria Chiefdom, his Chiefdom Councillors and the Landowners (emphasis mine) a piece of land referred to in our lease in conformity with the submitted plan attached to the said lease." P.W.7 Abubakarr Barrie said "Before a licence is issued to a company or individual first the company or the individual has to go to the Landowners (emphasis mine) and pay their fees which we call surface rent and government receipt should be issued by the 'Chiefdom clerk ..... I know that the Defendant Company had a lease from the Paramount Chief and the Landowners (emphasis mine). “Suffice it to say the landowners have a role to play in the disposition of land in the Provinces. In the instarit case, they did play a role in the lease which was granted to the Plaintiffs. In my view, the learned trial judge expressed a legitimate opinion when he said "the owners of the land who granted the lease to them to come forward and say that Makokeh River was part of the said land leased to them". The Court of Appeal dismissed the consent of the landowners as being unnecessary in granting a lease vis-avis Provincial lands. In my opinion the Court of Appeal was misguided in its Judgment and contemptuous of local custom in the disposition of Provincial lands when the learned trial judge was taken to task for expressing a legitimate opinion.

In support of my view, to ignore the consent of the landowners would be a recipe for disaster and civil unrest, I will refer to the evidence of P.W.3 Dr. Ryan Coker where he [p.205] said "I found them in the area in dispute. I was able to identify the area where I found them as part of the area for which we had got concession to mine gold……..……

The people I found in the area I did not say anything to them but I later learnt that our agents were confronted with machetes and sticks (emphasis mine). Among our Agents confronted was Mr. Bongay and other agents I cannot now name. The people referred to the defendants and their agents”. D.W. 1 Mankeh Conteh testified, inter alia, that "we the landowners and the company agreed to a lease of the land and the rent to be paid annually. A document was prepared. I signed the document by affixing my thumbprint on it. One Momoh Kargbo also thumb printed so did one Brima Bangura. The P.C. and D.C. also signed in it.

I saw another company. They came to the same land we had given to Rokel Company. They came with machines. One Mr. Bongay was a surveyor who came with them. The company which is called Bitco. They brought their machines to Gbafaya Village. They passed through Gbafaya Village and went to where Rokel Company were working. As one of the owners I went to P.C. and reported the incident to him. The P.C. instructed that they remove their machines from the area. The machine was removed. It was after that Mr. Bongay came tosurvey the area. I asked him what was his right coming to survey our land. He said I should go and ask the P.C. not him. I asked him to leave the place immediately. He refused. I then sent for the young men in the town. The pegs he was burying were uprooted by the young men. He had to leave by force". MR. Bongay was P.W.4. The witness further said "He went and complained to [p.206] the P.C. who sent for us. My people and I went. We told him we were the ones who drove Mr. Bongay from our land for surveying our land without our consent".

This bit of evidence strengthens my view that the P.C. should have been called to testify.

In my view, the Learned Trial Judge was right in holding that the consent of the landowners was necessary and desirable before the agreement was made for the lease to the plaintiffs. No doubt, in my opinion, the Learned Trial Judge adverted his mind to 576 of the Courts Acts No. 31 of 1965, aforesaid I regret to say the Court of Appeal failed to do this. The Learned Trial Judge found that the plaintiffs failed to prove their claim for trespass. The Court of Appeal reversed this finding.

In a claim for trespass, the plaintiffs need not prove title as stated in case of Gaslyn v. Williams (1720) Fortes Rep. 378. Possession alone is indeed sufficient to sue in trespass as against a wrongdoer, but it must be clear and exclusive possession (emphasis mine).

This is an action for damages for trespass to land. Trespass to and is an entry upon or any direct and immediate act of interference with the possession of land. Trespass to land is defined in Halsburys Laws of England 3rd Edition Volume 38 at 739 Paragraph 1205 as follows:

"Every unlawful entry by one person on land in the possession of another is a trespass for which an action lies, although no actual damage is done. A person trespasses on land if he wrongfully sets foot on it, or rides or drives over it and takes possession of it or expels the person in possession or place or fixes anything on it."

[p.207]

Also in the same volume of Halsbudrys Laws of England supra at Page 744 Paragraph 1214 it is also stated as follows:—

"Trespass is any injury to a possessory right and therefore the proper plaintiff in an action for trespass to land is the person who was or is deemed to have been in possession either actual or constructive possession of the said land at the time of the trespass. The type of conduct necessary to evidence possession varies with the type of land, and to maintain an action against a person who never had any title to the land, the slightest amount of possession is sufficient."

In the instant case, the plaintiffs relied on the lease agreement of 31 December, 1984, that is to say, the title to the land in dispute. According to the Learned Trial Judge, they did not succeed. However, the Court of Appeal rejected the findings of the High Court. In rejecting the findings of the High Court, the Court of Appeal said, inter alia "from these authorities I apprehend that all that Bitco and the Chiefdom Council agreed, is to be found within the four corners of the lease. In my judgment therefore, it was unnecessary to call extrinsic evidence to which the judge referred and the judge was wrong in law to have so held." I have already adjudged that the, Learned Trial Judge was not wrong in law to have so held.

In order to buttress my judgment further, I will refer to Odgers on the construction of Statute 5th edition page 55 et seq the section where it states "The Deed must be read and interpreted as a whole in order to extract the meaning of any part or expression." How else can this be done? The author referred to the case of East Ham Corporation v. Suolen (1965) I.W.L.R. 30 at 43 affirmed (1966) A.C. 406 where Saln L.J. stated "we have been referred many well known rules of [p.208] construction. Many of these are artificial, some are contradictory and none is more than a guide, sometimes an uncertain one, for ascertaining the true" intention of the parties as expressed in the document under consideration. The principle, however, long ago laid down by Lord Ellenborough C.J. is of the greatest value the sense and meaning of the parties in any particular part of an instrument may be collected ex antecedentibus et consequentidus (i.e. from what goes before and from what follows) every part of it may be brought into action in order to collect from the whole one uniform and constant sense that may be done." In my opinion the Lease Agreement Exhibit "A" 1 does not provide that one uniform and constant sense from the whole document. The case Lord Salmon referred to by Lord Ellenborough is in Barton v. Fitzgerald (1812)15 East 530 at 541.

I will also cite the case of N.E. R1y v. Hastings (Lord) (1900) A.C. 260 at 269 where Lord Davey said, "The Deed must be read as a whole in order to ascertain the true meaning of its several clauses and that the words of each clause should be so interpreted as to bring them into harmony with the other provisions of the Deed if that interpretation does no violence to the meeting of which they are naturally susceptible."

The Court of Appeal was unable to ascertain the area of the land leased to the Plaintiffs either from the wording of the lease or the plan attached thereto; but however, found that the schedule provided sufficient proof thereof; in my view, the schedule by itself cannot be interpreted to bring it into harmony with the wording and the plan of the lease.

Be that as it may, the Court of Appeal went on to say, "What then is the area of the land in the Kafe Simiria Chiefdom leased to Bitco by the Chiefdom Council. Can the [p.109] land be identified with sufficient certainty from the Deed of Lease? Did the learned trial judge direct himself correctly on the law on this point"? The Court of Appeal then referred to a portion of the judgment of the trial judge and went on to say "But do we really need the evidence of P.W.3 and P.W.6 to identify the area or the concession in this case, or do we look for such identification in the Deed of Lease ....." In my opinion, the Court needed the evidence of P.W.3 and P.W.6 in addition to the Deed of Lease to identify the area of the concession. In support of my opinion, I will refer to certain portions of the evidence of P.W.3 and P.W.6.

P.W.3 Rayan Coker said inter alia, in cross examination, "It is correct that at the time we had the lease we did not have enough time to do proper survey by a licensed surveyor. We did not put beacons on the land to delineate the area but the area was properly delineated. We did not fence our boundaries. We did not make out the land to show that the land belonged to Bittanol. It is incorrect to say that at the time we signed the lease we did not have a correct plan of the land we were leasing. We had a proper idea of the area leased. The area was brushed to show the various demarcations or boundaries of our concessions.

Bittar P.W.6 testified, inter alia, "I am acquainted with a piece or parcel of land in Kafe Simiria Chiefdom. My company owns interest there. My company owns interest in the area for the purpose of mining gold.

According to the directions given to us by the Ministry of Mines we obtained the approval from P.C. Alimamy Bangura II of Kafe Simiria Chiefdom, his Chiefdom Councillors and the land owners for a piece or parcel of land referred to in our lease.

[p.210]

I know Kafe Simiria Chiefdom very well and particularly the area for which we had concessions. From October, 1983, to June 1986 we planned to mine an area of 1500 feet long to 300 feet wide - three feet deep, making a total of 1,350,000 cubic feet." In my view the evidence of these witnesses were necessary to comprehend the demarcation of the area contained in the lease.

Be that as it may, I will now consider the Lease itself and see if the area leased in Exh. "A" 1 is clearly defined. The Lease is EX. "A".

The Haberdum Clause states.

"The Chiefdom Council hereby demise unto the Tenants ALL THAT PIECE OR PARCEL OF LAND situate, lying and being at Kafe Simiria Chiefdom in the Tonkolili District aforesaid which piece or parcel of land and for greater dearness so as not to restrict or enlarge the description hereinbefore contained is delineated and described on the plan attached hereto and there on and specified in the schedule respectively demised for a term of 35 (thirty-five) years. (emphasis mine)". On a cursory glance it would appear that the area contains both exceptions and reservations and reservations and delimitations. What is meant by "for greater clearness and so as not restrict or enlarge the description herein contained……..

In my view, the underlined expression is not only equivocal but the delimitation on the plan and schedule is made more difficult to comprehend. I draw support for my view from the case of Dodd v. Burchell (1862) 1 Hurlstane & Collmans Reports. Where it was stated that "The quantity of land claimed by the defendant under a conveyance to him, must exactly correspond with the quantity designated by the measurement in the conveyance.

[p.211]

Held: the probability arising from the relative position of part of this land to neighboring land, that it had been conveyed by mistake, did not enable the plaintiff to show under the words be the same more or less that a similar quantity was the land conveyed."

The plaintiffs must prove its case on the strength of the evidence led in support thereof and not on the weakness of the defendants' case.

How should the court construe the underlined expression (supra). In the case of Swinburne v. Milburn (1884) 53 A.C. it is stated:" Ascertaining what the parties meant by the words used is in real function of the Court. Lord Halsburly C. laid down two rules of construction. These are now firmly established as part of our laws and may be considered as limiting those words. One is that words, however general may be limited with respect to the subject-matter in relation to which they are used. The other is that the general words shall be restricted to the same genus as the specific words that precede them."

In the instant case, I find difficulty in relating the underlined words to the plan and the schedule contained in the lease. In order that the plaintiffs may prove their claim, the area of land trespassed upon must be clearly defined. I see the Court of Appeal had difficulty in ascertaining the delimitations of the land claimed from the words of the lease and the plan attached thereto in the same manner as the High Court. However, the Court of Appeal referred to the schedule to ground a claim for the plaintiffs. In its judgment, the Court of Appeal said inter alia, "From the foregoing, there can be no doubt, and indeed there is none, that the piece of land leased to Bitco in Exh. "A" by the Paramount Chief and Councillors of Kafe Simiria Chiefdom with the approval of the District Officer Tonkolili District is more or less the same area subsequently granted to [p.212] Rokel in "Y" (emphasis mine). In my view there is no basis for such positive pronouncement, for this reason alone the claim of the plaintiffs should fail for uncertainty. The Court of Appeal, with respect ignored the evidence of B.W. 3 who said the plaintiffs had not, done a proper survey of the area by a licenced surveyor when defendants had started working the area. However, were they in possession of the land on the strength of their Title Exh. "A" 1. I do not think so. The area which they claimed had not been clearly demarcated. The comment on the habendum clause to which I have referred by the Court of Appeal makes interesting reading. It states: "I cannot help but comment that this clause is rather inelegantly worded and shows sent regard if not a woeful disregard, on the part of the draftsman to express lucidly a complete thought in words. He talks "so as not to restrict or enlarge the description herein before contained."

I agree entirely. I have already made my observation vis-à-vis this clause. Having made that comment the Court of Appeal after referring to the piece or parcel "herein before contained or not contained." Said "I dare say that if that was all the description of the land in the Deed, I would have no hesitation in summarily throwing the case out on that point". I agree. The Court of Appeal next considered the plan and said "I see a diagram drawn or superimposed on a map with the heading 2 sheet 44 and 45 Kafe Simkrka Chiefdom. "It is not signed by a surveyor. There are certain letters (AB, BC, CD, D etc) on certain points of the diagram, and then on a separate sheet of paper, those letters are referred to as for example.

44/45	LATITUDE	LONGITUDE	BEARING	DISTANCE
AB 849' 14"	11 45" 16"	315 50	4600 ft.

[p.213]

If that was all I would have some difficulty in the elucidatory evidence (notice) I have already held is not admissible in the circumstances to identify the land from the map plan and table

……..

Be that as it may, I do not in any case attach such weight to the map/plan in Bitco lease since I would have some difficulty in identifying the land from it alone."

I agree, I would also have difficulty in identifying the land from the plan.

The Court of Appeal went on to say, "I am now left with the schedule which I also hold to be part of the Deed. It tells me that the area lies on topographical sheets 44 and 45 in the Chiefdom and gives the bearings distances from stated points, in detail and even states the geographical co-ordinates. In my Judgment, the description in the schedule affords a sufficient and satisfactory identification of the land leased to Bitco."

Can the schedule provide the answer as to whether the plaintiffs have proved their case with certainty as to the area of the land they claim? I do not think so. I will refer to the case of Dunstant E. John and another v. William Stafford and others S.C.CIV.APP.1/25 unreported. In that case, Betts J.S.C. referred to the case of Riddle v. Nicol which the Court of Appeal has cited as providing the test whether a surveyor could make a plan from the record before the Court. The decision was not limited specifically to the schedule but to the whole record of the case before the Court, vide page 10. For ease of reference. I will quote the portion of the judgment as regards this issue. 'In order to resolve the uncertainties which beat the learned trial judge he followed the principle outlined.

In the case, Kondilinye v. Odu 2 W.A.C.A. 336 which states that 'the onus lies on the plaintiff to satisfy the court that he is entitled on the evidence brought before him to a declaration of title "and also the well known case of Sobanjo v. Oke 14 W.A.C.A. 593 which says "the burden is on the plaintiff to prove his right to title and other relief by independent means "After giving due consideration to the law and the facts before him. The learned trial Judge found he could not make the declaration." In the instant case, the Learned Trial Judge after seeing the witnesses and hearing their testimonies and also visiting the locus in quo, and giving due consideration to the law and facts before him found he could not make the declaration. It is a well established principle of law that an appellate court should not easily disturb the findings of fact of a trial Court. I will give my view on this point further on in this judgment.

Betts J.S.C. continued "In this case of Waiter Riddle v. Samuel Nicol (1971) the Court of Appeal (S.L) unreported, in which the case of Ate Kwadze and Robert Kwesi Adjie an appeal from the Provincial Commissioner's Court, cited in W.A.C.A. Vol. "X 274 it was held that before a declaration on title is given the land to which it relates must be ascertained with certainty, the test being whether a Surveyor can from the record produce an accurate plan of such land. There is also the case of Bitter v. Boome Tribal Authorities (1957-1960) A.L.R. S.L. 128 (R.B. Marke J.) this question follow:

"In Kwadze v. Adjei, already cited, the West African Court of Appeal laid down the test to be applied as regards the delimitations of land in dispute." Though this is an action for declaration of title the principles laid down by the Court as to the necessity for defining with certainty the area in dispute, would, in my opinion, apply to the action for ejection.

[p.215]

The Court of Appeal among other things said: "The said test is whether a surveyor taking the record could produce a plan showing accurately the land to which title had been given.

"Applying these principles to this case it seems to me that the Judge was justified in coming to the conclusion he did regarding the declaration of title."

In this instant case, the claim was for trespass based on title. In the case cited per Betts J.S.C. record has not been defined or amplified. I will therefore refer to the Rules of the Supreme Court P.N. No.1 of 1982, Part 1, under Interpretation where "Record"

Means "the aggregate of papers relating to an appeal (including the pleadings proceedings, evidence Judgments) proper to be laid before the Supreme Court on the hearing of an appeal or any application which by these Rules may be made to the Supreme Court.

The cases, having decided, that if a surveyor taking the record could produce an accurate plan of the land claimed then the claim succeeds; the Court of Appeal erred in law when it decided that "the schedule affords a sufficient and satisfactory identification of the land leased to Bitco". The schedule is only part of the record.

In this instant case, the record includes the Pleadings and evidence and the judgment.

It seems to me that the Court of Appeal came to its findings by referring to part of the evidence including the lease Exhibit "A" and the judgment of the Learned Trial Judge. It is regrettable that the Court of Appeal having referred to Clause 2 of the Lease and having held that the clause was 'inelegantly worded." failed to relate this clause to the Schedule. The Court of Appeal also specifically observed the phrase "so as not to restrict or enlarge the description herein before contained." and then went on to say "There is hardly any description hereinbefore contained because the only description we have before us, "all that piece or parcel of land, situate lying and being at Kafe Simiria Chiefdom in [p.216] Tonkolili District……... That is hardly a description for the purpose of identifying the land.

I dare say that if that was all the description of the land in the Deed I would have no hesitation in summarily, throwing the case out on that point." I find it incomprehensible that having made such a pronouncement, the Court could decide that the schedule provides a sufficient and satisfactory identification of the land leased to Bitco. With respect, the Court of Appeal was wrong in law in so holding.

In my view, the Court of Appeal made unwarranted findings of fact which disturbed the findings of fact of the learned trial judge. An appellate court ought not to disturb findings of facts of a lower court unless such findings are clearly wrong and cannot be supported in law, vide the case of Benmax v. Austin Motor Ltd. (1955) All E.R. 326.

In that case Viscount Simon held at page 327 that a distinction should be made between facts deposed to by witnesses and found by the Court and inference of facts drawn by the Court.

I will also refer to the case of Watt or Thomas V. Thomas (1947) A.C. at 484. The headnote states: "When a question of facts has been tried by a jury and it is not suggested that the has misdirected himself in law, an appellate Court in reviewing the record of the evidence should attach the, greatest weight to his opinion, because he saw and heard the witness, as and should not disturb his judgment unless it is plainly unsound. The appellate [p.217] unmistakably from the evidence that in reaching them he has not taken proper advantage of having seen and heard the witnesses or has failed to appreciate the weight and bearing of the circumstances admitted or proved."..

As I have already said, the Plaintiffs have not proved their claim.

In the instant case, the positive findings of facts were made by the Learned Trial Judge as a result of facts deposed to by witnesses. These were the findings of the Judge in the High Court. The Learned Trial Judge said inter alia "The law as I understand it is that in a claim of trespass to land coupled with an injunction particularly where portion of area said to have been trespassed upon is an open space, It is of the utmost importance that there must be clear and unequivocal evidence supporting the area being claimed. I would say we need more than the bland assertion of P.W.3 and P.W.6 in this case to establish or identify the area of their concession."

The plaintiffs can have no better right or title than the owners of the land. They are claiming that the defendants are trespassers; but assuming that they were indeed, the plaintiffs in order to evict them must show a better title and cannot succeed in doing so by canvassing a title which itself has been demonstrated to be defective as regards the area being claimed. See Alhaji Adeshaye v. Shimonike (1952) 14 W.A.C.A. 86 at p. 87 it is evident that both sides have beautiful maps, the contention between the two parties is as to the ownership of the Gbafaye side of the Makokeh River. On the evidence before me, I find myself unable to say that the plaintiffs have proved their title to the disputed place and I so hold. Having so found, I hold that the plaintiffs are not entitled to claim injunction and/or mandatory injunction to restrain the defendants, by themselves, their servants or agents or otherwise"

It seems to me that the Court of Appeal ignored the evidence in the case or did not appreciate the principles of law relating to the award of damages.

The cases cited by the Court of Appeal did not give a clear cut approach as to the award of damages where the trespass to land was unauthorized mining; Morgan v Powell speaks of "compensation was given for all injury done to the soil by digging at p.284 per Denman C.J. "How then did the Court of Appeal award the damages when the Court acknowledged that plaintiffs did not suffer any loss for any injury done to the soil. To base the damages on the estimated value of the severed gold by the defendants is not only wrong in law, it is contrary to the rules of equity. The defendants had a right to mine in the area the plaintiffs claimed to be trespassed upon. They had incurred great expenses in putting machines on the land, they had constructed roads to the mining site. They had employed substantial labour. They had paid fees to the Chiefdom Authorities and had been granted a lease of the area they mined. They had paid for and obtained mining licences. Mining was in full operation and had begun to mine gold from the area and had started to realise earnings therefrom. The plaintiffs interrupted production by securing a Court injunction preventing defendants continuing production. The defendants had suffered loss. Did the plaintiffs suffer any loss by the seeming trespass on what they claimed to be their area of the lease. Were they entitled to claim the value of the severed gold? I do not think so, until the gold was severed, no value could have been placed on it. In my view, if any award was to be made to the plaintiffs, the defendants were entitled to deduct their expenses.

[p.219]

Deduction of the cost of severing the mineral was laid down in Marttin v. Porter (1838) M & W. 357 that the value of the mineral as soon as it existed as a chattel formed the measure of damages and that no deduction could be made for the cost of severance.

There is however, a qualification on this general rule. In the case of Ward v. Modrewood (1841) 3 Q 3.4400. Parke B. directed the jury that:

"If there was fraud or negligence on the part of the defendant, they might give as damages under the Court in trover the value of the coals at the time they became chattels, on the principle laid down in Martin v. Porter; but if they thought the defendant was not guilty of fraud or negligence, but acted fairly and honestly in the full belief that he had right to do what he did, they might give the fair value of the coals as if the coalfield had been purchased by the plaintiff."

The jury found for the latter sum. I am satisfied that was a proper, correct and appropriate award. This was later applied in the Courts of Equity vide J. Jegan v. V. Vivian (1871) L.R. 6 Ch. App. (742) See also the case of Townend V. Askern Coal Company (1934) 1 Ch. 463.

In this instant case, the defendants acted honestly in the belief that they had a right to work on the area claimed by the plaintiffs. As a result, if the High Court had found for [p.220] the plaintiffs, the award would have been based on the value of the minerals after severance less the cost of severance.

The Rule in Wood v. Moorewood is applied in the following circumstances (i) where the defendant had a bona fide belief in his title to the land in which the minerals lay as in Wood v. Moorewood (ibid) itself and hi three later cases Hilton v Woodes (1867) LRA Eq. 432, Ashton v. Stock (1877) 6 Ch. D. 719: Livingstone v. Rowards Coal Co. (1880) 5 App. Cas. 25 (2) Where the defendant had inadvertently worked into the [p.221] mine of the plaintiffs, his adjoining owner, as in Re. United Merthyr, Colleries (1872) L.R. 15 Eq. 46: (3) Where there was bona fide dispute between the plaintiff and the defendant, which dispute was in course of a long litigation that was finally decided against the defendants so as to make him a wrongdoer: as in Jegen v. Vivian (ibid) (4) Where the defendant had begun work in a mine vested in trustee in the bona fide expectation that a contract would be concluded between them giving him a Licence to work the mine having given one of the trustees notice that that expectation would be immediately acted upon by an entry on the property, but no contract was afterwards entered into.

They had a right to work on the area claimed by the plaintiffs. As a result if the High Court had found for the plaintiffs the award would have been based on the value of the minerals after severance less costs of severance.

The Rules in Wood v. Moorwood is applied in the following circumstances (1) Where the defendant had a bonafide belief in his title to the land in which the minerals lay as in wood v. Moorewood (ibid) itself and in three later cases Hilton v. Woods (1867) L.R. 4 Eq. 432, Ashton v. Stock (1877) 6 Ch. D. 719: Livingstone v. Hawyards Coal Co. (1880) 5 App. Cas. 25 (2) Where the defendant had inadvertently worked into the [p.221] mine of the plaintiff, his adjoining owner, as in Re: United Merthyr Collianlens (1872) L.R 15 Eq. 46: (3) Where there was a bonafide dispute between plaintiff and the defendant, which dispute was in course of a long litigation that was finally decided against the defendants as to make him abimitio a wrongdoer; as in Jegon v. Vivian (ibid) (4) Where the defendant had begun work in a mine vested in trespass in the bonafide expectation that a contract would be concluded between them giving him a licence to work the mine having given one of the trustees notice that that expectation would be immediately acted upon an entry, on the property, but no contract was afterwards entered into and the trustees had no power to make one; as in Trotter v. Maclean (1879) 13 .H.D. 574: (5) Where the defendants had begun to work the plaintiffs mine in the bonafide expectation that an order granting permission to work would be made in their favour by the Railway and Coal Commission, the application for the order having been filed before their trespass and the expected order being subsequently made, but the defendants had given no notice to the plaintiffs that they wee to commence working the mine as they did not know who was the owner, as in Townend v. Askern Coal Co. (ibid)".

The trend of these decisions and of this dicta in them suggests that the strict rule in Martin v. Porter (ibid) will now apply only where the trespass is willful and fraudulent, And that the qualification as stated by Parke B. in Wood v. Moorehead is now to be enlarged so as to include cases of negligence.

The above quotation is to be found in Mayne and McGregor on Damages 12th Edition Pages 598,599,600 paragraphs 687,690.

It is unfortunate that the Court of Appeal made short shrift of the award of damages.

I entirely agree with the principle of law relating to the award of damage vis-à-vis a claim for trespass by unauthorized mining. I adopt the ratio decidendi in the cases cited in its entirety. It is not only good in law but also in equity.

The judgment of the Court of Appeal is flawed. I will start with the preamble to the Judgment of Gelaga King J.A. which is the principal majority judgment. In the interest of charity I will refer to the preamble in full which states; Kafe Simira Chiefdom Tonkolili District is reported to be vastly rich in gold deposits. This reputation, which stretches far beyond the confines of Sierra Leone, has the backing of reliable geologists. The findings reveal that anyone with the requisite financial support or capital to exploit the huge golden resources would reap great and the nominal rewards".

In my opinion, this is an unusual approach in pronouncing a Judgment on an appeal.

However, the learned Justice did not stop there. He went on to say: "These companies — Bittanol International Trading Company Limited (Bitco) and Rokel (Sierra Leone) Limited were attracted to Kafe Simira's gold. They had the requisite financial backing.

Both companies acted speedily. Bitco in pursuance of the objective and being a non-native took certain essential preliminary steps as they were obliged to do, after which they leased a certain area of Kafe Simira. The deed of lease was signed on the 31st day of December, 1984 between Bitco and the Chiefdom Council …….

Rokel in similar vein, for like purpose, and, I dare say with commensurate speed (emphasis mine) on the 21st day of February, 1985 signed an agreement by deed for a [p.223] certain area. They did so with Paramount Chief Alimamy Bangura of Mabonto Kafe Simira Chiefdom acting for and on behalf of the Chiefdom Council Paramount Chief

Alimamy Bangura was the same Paramount Chief who signed Bitco's lease."

In my opinion, the foregoing preamble to the judgment beclouded the views of the learned justice which led him to be selective in consideration of the evidence before the trial court. The preamble is not based on the evidence nor is an obliter dicta.

It seems to me that the learned justice is inferring that Rokel surreptionsly by fraud entered upon the land and started to mine.

The learned justice in the same vein went on to say "Rokel wasted no time in starting operations. They constructed access roads and employed about 100 people of the area. They took heavy machinery there. 208 caterpillars, washing plates, 4 pumps and w and extracted a lot of gold for which they started digging sometime in 1985'. It seems to me from the foregoing that Rokel had been on trial on criminal charged. He who avers must prove. Bitco sued Rokel for trespass, indeed trespass on a mining concession. The law requires they must prove their claim. What has the commensurate speed of Rokel in signing an agreement to work in the Kafe Simira's got to do with proof of trespass by Bitco. At the expense of prolixity, I will repeat that the plaintiff must prove his case on the strength of his own evidence not on the weakness of the defendant's case. In my opinion thee Court of Appeal was wrong in law to have disturbed the findings of facts by the Learned Trial Judge.

In order to compound the flow the majority judgment of the Court of Appeal, I will refer to parts of the judgment of Navo J.A. (as he then was). The learned justice said "The issue that was before the learned trial judge for consideration was a very simple and [p.224] straight forward and on which but for the irrelevant matters the learned judge took into consideration, the necessity to come before this court on appeal might not have arisen".

In my opinion, this approach is a clear disregard and disrespect for the points taking judgment of the learned trial judge. It has been said over the years by distinguished and learned justices that an appellate court ought to pay due regard to the judgment of the trial judge who had the opportunity of seeing and hearing the witness as and in some cases visited the locus in quo. The Court of Appeal is free to draw its own inferences, form its own view where the judgment of the trial judge is clearly wrong in law or does not support the weight of the evidence. In my view this is not the case here.

It seems to me the Court of Appeal was preoccupied with the mineral resources in thee Kafe Simira Chiefdom more than with the facts of the case. The Learned Justice went on to say, "Rokel, I can rightly infer hearing of the rich mineral resources discovered by Bitco went to the same Council barely two months after they had executed Ex, "A" and -------- them incentives like supplying Mabonto Town with electric generator to supply the town with electric energy, building or ---------- a six motor road to the disputed area, offers of scholarships to school children, employment facilities to citizens of the Chiefdom etc. which are not quite outside the requirements of Cap. 122 thereby inducing to say the least the Council to enter into an agreement purporting to be a lease on the 21st February 1985 Ex. "Y" for more or less the same area leased to Bitco. I have only to add that if it is necessary to discover a reason for a sudden volte face the Paramount Chief and Chief Council of Kafe Simira Chiefdom, it is to be found, I think in the fact that a better offer had been made by Rokel after the bargain with Bitco had been concluded."

[p.225]

In my opinion, there is no basis for the learned justice to draw this inference. There is no evidence that Bitco had discovered such mineral resources in the area. Indeed there is evidence that they had not yet done any proper survey of the area leased to them nor had they secured authority to mine nor done any work on the area. It seems to me that learned justice is saying that Rokel came by night and started to plunder and reap what belonged to Bitco. Rokel are not on trial for a criminal offence. I regret that this misconception of the whole case led thee Court of Appeal to err in law in finding for Bitco. Bitco was never in clear and exclusive possession of the land claimed nor were they in the first place able to define the area with certainty as the law requires. In view of this misconception of the facts, the appeal must needs succeed.

The appeal is allowed on the following grounds: 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10.

Ground 1 has no merit and is dismissed.

Ground 2 was abandoned with leave of the court and accordingly dismissed.

As a result I set aside all the orders of the Court of Appeal, and restore the Judgment and orders of the High Court. The costs occasioned by this appeal and in the Court below are awarded to the defendants. And such costs shall be taxed.

JUDGMENT

RENNER-THOMAS, C.J.

The Plaintiff, Samuel Hinga Norman, describes himself for the purposes of the action herein as a member of the Sierra Leone Peoples Party, the Third Defendant herein, (hereinafter referred to as "the SLPP")

"who aspires to be Presidential Candidate at the 2007 Presidential elections, but who is keenly concerned that the pristine democratic credentials and processes of the SLPP are maintained, entered and facilitated in all its internal structure, organization, operations, programmes, activities and functioning".

The First Defendant herein, Dr. Sama Banya, is described as the National Chairman of the SLPP. The Second Defendant, Dr. Prince Harding, is described as the National Secretary-General of the SLPP. The SLPP is a political party registered pursuant to the provisions of the Constitution, Act. NO.6 of 1991 (hereinafter referred to as "the National Constitution") and the Political Parties Act, NO.3 of 2002 (hereinafter referred to as the "Political Parties Act").

Apparently, sometime in July 2005 the National Executive Council of the SLPP (hereinafter referred to as 'the NEC") held a meeting in Freetown and took a decision that a Party Conference of the SLPP was going to be held in Makeni in the Northen Region of Sierra Leone on the 19th and 20th day of August 2005. Among other things, it was proposed to elect the Presidential Nominee of the SLPP for the 2007 elections who, pursuant to Clause V(2)(c) of the 1995 Constitution of the SLPP, automatically becomes the Party Leader of the SLPP after such election.

According to the Statement of the Plaintiff's Case the Plaintiff is of the view that it is too premature to choose a Presidential Nominee for the SLPP any time in 2005 for the Presidential elections due to be held in 2007. Apparently, it was the Plaintiff's dissatisfaction with the decision of the NEC of the SLPP to go ahead with the election of the Presidential Nominee of the SLPP at the Party Conference scheduled for 19th-20th August 2005 that prompted the Plaintiff to institute these proceedings.

The Plaintiff commenced this action by way of an Originating Notice of Motion dated 27th day of July 2005 invoking the original jurisdiction of this Court, according to the title of [p.268] the action, pursuant to sections 122, 124(1), 127 and 171 (15) of the National Constitution. By this action, the Plaintiff seeks from this Court several reliefs, four by way of declarations and one injunctive, the text of which I hereby set out in extenso:—

"1. A DECLARATION to the effect that the Constitution of the Sierra Leone People's Party (SLPP) dated July 1995 (hereinafter also called "the SLPP Constitution") is the authentic currently applicable Constitution of the Sierra Leone People's Party (also herein called "the Party" or "the SLPP'J for the purposes of the functioning and operation of the Party in terms of the National Constitution and the Political Parties Act, NO.3 of 2002.

2. A DECLARATION to the effect that, where an incumbent President of the Republic of Sierra Leone was originally elected thereto in compliance with the following provisions in the respective Constitutions as cited herein be/mo/, among others, to wit.

i) as to the SLPP Constitution:

a) Clause IV (A)(3)(i) thereof,

b) Clause V(1)(c) and (d) thereof,

c) Clause V(2)(c) thereof, being under the rubrics "Duties of Officers" and "Leader", and

d) Clause VI(b) and (f), and

ii) as to the National Constitution

a) section 41 (b) thereof,

b) section 42(1) thereof," and c) section 43 thereof,

then, in that case, the following interpretive conclusions are or would be, each by itself, within the spirit, intendment, contemplation, and indeed inescapable force and effect, of the said SLPP Constitution, viz:

(1) That the SLPP Constitution makes no express or specific provision for the substantive independent existence, or for the direct nomination, election, selection, choice or identification, as the case may be, of the Leader of the [p.269] SLPP as such, but, rather, that any such nomination, election, selection, choice or identification, as the case may be, of the said Leader takes place only indirectly as a consequential or derivative issue from the process of nominating, electing, selecting, choosing or identifying, as the case may be, the Party's Presidential Nominee for the next pending national Presidential election.

(2) That the position of Leader of the SLPP is not a free-standing office or status in its own right, but rather, that it is, by virtual definition, dependent upon the position of Presidential Nominee for the said party, thereby making it so intertwined or associated with the Office of State President at any time when an SLPP member holds the said Presidency as to make the two positions indivisible and inseparable one from the other at all such times.

(3) That at any time when the SLPP is In power and/or a member thereof is the lawful Incumbent President of Sierra Leone, the two positions of Leader of the party and State President mayor can only be either held together and jointly or relinquished together and jointly, and never otherwise at any such time, so that an incumbent thereof may not selectively relinquish one of them and yet hold or seek to continue holding to the other, nor may two different persons at one and the same time or simultaneously hold the two positions separately, i.e. one position to one of them and the other to the other.

(4) That the SLPP Constitution makes no express or specific provision for the Substantive independent existence of, or for any nomination, election, selection, choice or identification (as the case may be) of, a Leader of the SLPP as such, at any time when the said Party is either not in power or not Providing the incumbent President of Sierra Leone or when a national Presidential election Is not immediately due to be held.

3. A DECLARATION to the effect that, in view of the following Party and National constitutional and other legislative provisions respectively, among others, to wit:

[p.270]

a) Clause 1/(4), IV(A)(1), IV(B)(5)(b) and (c) and (i), V(2)(c) as aforesaid, and X of the SLPP Constitution;

b) Sections 6, 14(1), 24, 27 and 29 of the Political Parties Act, NO.3 of 2002; and

c) Sections 35(2) and (4), 42(1), 43(a) and (b); 46(1), 49(4), 76(1)(h), and 171 (15) of the National Constitution, then, in view thereof, the following interpretive conclusions are or would be, each by itself, within the spirit, intendment, contemplation, and indeed inescapable force and effect, of the said provisions respectively, viz:

(1) That as at the date of filing the application herein, there are or were at least two or three regular annual meetings and an unspecified number of possible special other meetings of the Party Conference of the SLPP still to be held before the Presidential and Parliamentary elections of 2007 are or were due to be held, to wit, the annual Party Conferences for the years 2005, 2006 and possibly 2007 and any other special or other meeting(s) of the Party Conference "as may be determined by the National Executive Council".

(2) That, without any prejudice whatsoever to the holding of the Party Conference (as such) slated for 19-20 August 2005 or at all otherwise in 2005. the nomination, election, selection, choice or identification, as the case may be, whether attempted or purported, of a Presidential Nominee and/or Leader of the SLPP at the said Party Conference, that is to say, almost two years before the Presidential and Parliamentary elections of 2007 are due to be held, has or would have or leads or would lead to the following interpretive consequences, viz:

(i) it and will in itself be grossly premature and incomportant with [p.271] democratic principles, for being inconsistent with and;:in contravention of the provisions in sections 35(2) and 43(a) and (b) of the National Constitution, and accordingly void and of no effect'

(ii) it is and will in practice be grossly unfair to certain individual members of the Party and potentially prejudicial to their interests vis-à-vis the Presidency and even to the wider related interests of the Party itself and the nation at large, in that;

a) it does and will tend to operate to prematurely preclude and exclude certain potential aspirants to that or those position(s) who, for reasons of present untimeliness or prematurity or otherwise, may not yet, as at 19-20 August 2005 or at any other time in 2005, have indicated their intentions or aspirations in respect thereof, but may be likely as at the due and proper time in 2006 or 2007 to make such intentions or aspirations publicly known at the appropriate time.

b) it is and will be likely to deprive the SLPP itself as a democratic national Party of a possible better quality or more popular Presidential candidate who, however, for reasons of present untimeliness or prematurity or otherwise, may not yet, as at 19-20 August 2005 or at any other time in 2005, have indicated his/her intentions or aspirations in respect thereof, but may wish as at the due and proper time in 2006 or 2007 to make such intentions or aspirations publicly known at the appropriate time; and it is also likely to deprive the said Party or a fairer and more informed choice of a Presidential Nominee or Candidate, thereby putting the SLPP at a possible electoral disadvantage vis-à-vis the Presidential candidates of other political parties and thus at the risk of losing the Presidential elections of 2007 against the said other parties;

c) it is and will be likely to deprive the entire nation itself and the people of Sierra Leone as a whole of a possible better quality [p.272] Presidential Candidate and potential ultimate President of

Sierra Leone who, however, for reasons of present untimeliness of prematurity or otherwise, may not yet, as at 19-20 August 2005 or at any other time in 2005, have indicated his/her intentions or aspirations in respect thereof, but may wish as at the due and proper time in 2006 or 2007 to make such intentions or aspirations publicly known at the appropriate time, with all the possible attendant risks of prejudice (arising from an inapt choice due to the said gross prematurity) to the prospects of good governance, peace and positive national economic and other development during the five to ten years following the next Presidential election;

(iii) it is or will, in any case, be tantamount to an amendment or attempted/ purported amendment of the SLPP Constitution, and accordingly inconsistent with and in contravention of the provisions in Clauses 11 (4), IV(B)(5)(b) and (c) and (i), and X of the said SLPP Constitution, and with an[y] of those of section 24 of the Political Parties Act 2002 and sections 35(2) and (4) and 76(1)(h) of the National Constitution, and therefore unlawful, void and of no effect

(3) That the positions of Leader and Deputy Leader of the SLPP, in the manner and to the extent that they have been and/or are being held by specified incumbents respectively over the past ten years or so, that is to say, since at least 1996 and uptil now, were and are so held in contravention of the provisions in section 14(1) of the Political Parties Act and sections 35(4) and 76(1)(h) of the National Constitution and so, as held, were and are void and of no effect

(4) That, in so far as and to the extent that the current SLPP Constitution remains and reads as it stands at the present time and at least up to 12 months hence, it is unlawful for the said Party to nominate, elect, select,. choose or otherwise identify, as the case may be, a Leader of the SLPP as [p.273] such, or to attempt/purport to so do, at any Party Conference or indeed at any time at all within the next 12 months from the date of filing this application.

(5) That, in view especially of the provisions of sections 14(1) of the Political Parties Act 2002, and 35(4) and 76(1)(h) of the National Constitution, a person who is for· the time being the President, the Vice-President, a Minister or a Deputy Minister in the Government under the provisions of the National Constitution may not and must not be, and ought not to be, either:

a) Leader of the SLPP, or

b) A member of the executive body or officers of the SLPP, whether national or otherwise, or

c) The National Secretary-General of the SLPP.

(6) That the position of National Secretary-General of the SLPP, in the manner and to the extent that it has been or is being held by a Minister of Government, to wit, by the 2nd Defendant herein over the past three year or so, that is to say, at least since around June 2002 and up until now, was and is so held in contravention of the provisions in section 14(1) of the Political Parties Act 2002 and sections 35(4) and 76(1)(h) of the National Constitution and so, as held, was and is void and of no effect since at least June 2002 up until now.

(7) That, in consequence of all the provisions and conclusions cited and recited in the current declaratory relief and its foregoing sub-items 3(1) to (6) inclusive herein, the SLPP as a Party is already dangerously left open and exposed to a present risk of disqualification and disestablishment applications to the Supreme Court, on the one hand by the relevant Commission for an order to cancel the registration of the Party and, on the other hand, by the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice after such cancellation for an order to wind up and dissolve the SLPP, pursuant respectively to sections 27 and 29 of the Political Parties [p.274] Act 2002.

4. A DECLARATION to the effect that the following provisions of the SLPP Constitution in so far as the respective aspects thereof as are indicated herein are concerned and to the respective extents thereof, to wit:

a) Clause V(2)(c) thereof, in so far as the stipulations "shall automatically become The Leader of the Party after such nomination. He shall be the political head of the Party and" are concerned and to the extent thereof,'

d) Clause V(1)(c) & (d) thereof, in so far as the mentions of "Leader" and "Deputy Leader" therein respectively are concerned and to the extent thereof,'

c) Clause V(2)(d) thereof; in its entirety; and

d) Clause VI(f) thereof, in so far as the stipulation "shall cease to be Leader and Deputy Leader respectively" is concerned and to the extent thereof,

Are, each and every one of them, inconsistent with and in contravention of the provisions in section 14(1) of the Political Parties Act 2002 and sections 35(4) and 76(1)(h) of the National Constitution and that the said inconsistent provisions are, to the extent of the said inconsistency, in each case as specified herein, null and void ab initio and of no effect.

5. A PERMANENT INJUNCTION restraining the 1st and 2nd Defendants (in their personal and official Party capacities alike) and 3rd Defendant herein, their servants, agents and privies, and in the case of the 3rd Defendant, in all its emanations and manifestations as organs, institutions, officers and members thereof, from nominating, electing, selecting, choosing or identifying, as the case may be, a Presidential Nominee and/or Leader of the SLPP in any shape or form or name or guise, or attempting/purporting so to do, or encouraging or causing or countenancing or shepherding or partaking in the doing of any such thing, at the Party Conference slated for 19-20 August 2005 or at all otherwise in 2005, but otherwise without any prejudice whatsoever to the holding of the said Party Conference as such.

6. ANY OTHER OR FURTHER RELIEF that this honourable Supreme Court would deem fit, proper and just in all the circumstances.

7. Costs of this action."

In support of the Originating Notice of Motion there is filed an affidavit of Dr. Bu-Buakei Jabbi sworn to on the 27th day of July 2005, pursuant to Rule 89 of the Rules of this Court, Constitutional Instrument NO.1 of 1982. A Statement of the Plaintiff's Case together with an affidavit in verification thereof were filed on the 3rd day of August 2005. The Defendants in turn filed a joint Statement of their case together with an affidavit in verification thereof on the 11th day of August 2005.

It should be noted in passing that the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice is not mentioned as a defendant in this action nor did he avail himself of the provision of Rule 92(4) of the Rules of this Court to file an answer to the Statement of the Plaintiff's Case.

After disposing of the Plaintiff's application for an interim injunction in the terms of tthat sought in the Originating Notice of Motion by ordering that the Defendants do give an undertaking accordingly and that the Plaintiff should give a cross-undertaking as to damages this Court ordered that oral arguments were to commence on the 17th August 2005.

Shortly after opening the case for the Plaintiff, Dr. Bu-Buakei Jabbi, with characteristic candour, conceded that the first declaration sought in the Originating Notice of Motion was not one which this Court could properly grant in its original jurisdiction. He therefore sought leave to abandon that relief which leave was granted accordingly. The application for this declaration will therefore be struck out.

In contrast, Dr. Jabbi argued strenuously that this Court has original jurisdiction, pursuant to Sections 122, 124(1), 127 and 171 (15) of the National Constitution, to grant the other four reliefs sought in the Originating Notice of Motion. For the purposes of clarity I shall set out in extenso the several provisions of the National Constitution that Dr. Jabbi argued [p.276] gave this Court original jurisdiction to grant reliefs 2 to 5 inclusive in the Originating Notice of Motion.

They are as follows:—

1. Section 122(1): "The Supreme Court shall be the final court of appeal in and for Sierra Leone and shall have such appellate and other jurisdiction as may be conferred upon it by this Constitution or any other law".

2. Section 124(1): "The Supreme Court shall, save as otherwise provided in section 122 of this Constitution, have original jurisdiction, to the exclusion of all other Courts—

(a) in all matters relating to the enforcement or interpretation of any provision of this Constitution; and

(b) where any question arises whether an enactment was made in excess of the power conferred upon Parliament or any other authority or person by law or under this Constitution",

3. Section 127(1): "A person who alleges that an enactment or anything contained in or done under the authority of that or any other enactment is inconsistent with, or is in contravention of a provision of this Constitution, may at any time bring an action in the Supreme Court for a declaration to that effect."

Section 127(2): "The Supreme Court shall, for the purposes of a declaration under subsection (1), make such orders and give such directions as it may consider appropriate for giving effect to, or enabling effect to be given to, the declaration so made."

4. Section 171 (15) "This Constitution shall be the supreme law of Sierra Leone and any other law found to be inconsistent with any provision of this Constitution, shall, to the extent of the inconsistency, be void and of no effect."

[p.277]

Mr. Eke Halloway, Counsel for all three Defendants, in answer to Dr. Jabbi's contention argued that none of the above provisions gives this Court original jurisdiction to entertain the Originating Notice of Motion and went further to contend that this Court lacked original jurisdiction to grant any of the reliefs sought. Mr. Halloway further argued that if this Court upheld his submissions on the question of jurisdiction then the action should be dismissed outright.

Let me hasten to state, with the greatest respect to Mr. Halloway, that even if this Court were to hold that it lacked original jurisdiction to entertain the several reliefs claimed in the Originating Notice of Motion the proper thing to do would be to strike out the Originating Notice of Motion as this court would not have gone into the merits of the Plaintiff's case and therefore could not summarily dismiss it. (see Buraimoh Oloriode & Others v. Simeon Oyebi and Others (1984) 5 SC1 and Otapo v Sunmonu (1987) 2 NWLR 587).

What then is the answer to the first vital question posed in this matter? Does this Court have original jurisdiction to entertain the Plaintiff's case?

Before setting out to answer this all important question I need to make certain clarifications regarding the use of the word "jurisdiction". A distinction ought to be made between two meanings frequently attributed to the word and which sometimes tend to lead to confusion. This distinction is aptly dealt with in the following dicta by Rickford L.J. in delivering his judgment in the case of Guaranty Trust Company of New York v. Hannay & Company ((1915) 2 KB 536 at 563):—

"The word "Jurisdiction" and the expression "the court has no jurisdiction" are used in two different senses which I think often leads to confusion. The first and, in my opinion, the only really correct sense of the expression that the court has no jurisdiction is that it has no power to deal with and decide the dispute as to the subject-matter before it, no matter in what form or by whom it is raised. But there is another sense in which it is often used, i.e., that although the Court has power to decide the question it will not according to the settled practice do so except in a certain way and under certain circumstances."

Barraclough v. Brown ([1897] A. C. 615) and Westbury-on-Severn Rural Sanitary Authority v Meredith (30 Ch.D. 387) are two English cases that illustrate this distinction. In Barraclough's case, there was a real want of jurisdiction. The power to decide the dispute as to the particular subject-matter had been removed by statute from the High Court as a court of first instance and transferred to another tribunal.

In the second case, the Court could decide the dispute and give the relief sought but, by a settled practice embodied in a rule, it would not do so except under certain circumstances, i.e., if the subject-matter was of the value of £10/00 or more.

In my humble opinion, therefore, in answering the question whether this court has original jurisdiction to hear and determine the matters raised in the Originating Notice of Motion, no matter in what form and by whom they are raised, I shall be addressing the issue of jurisdiction in the first, and in the words of Pickford L.J. above, "the only correct sense of the expression", i.e., whether or not this Court is vested original jurisdiction to hear and determine the dispute between the Plaintiff and the Defendants as to the subject-matter before us.

I need to make a further clarification on the issue of the original jurisdiction of this Court. As is evident from the provisions of section 122(1) of the National Constitution quoted above, it is not only the National Constitution which endows the Supreme Court with original jurisdiction. This subsection provides that this Court "shall have such appellate and other jurisdiction as may be conferred upon it by this Constitution or any other law" Two examples of other enactments that confer original jurisdiction upon the Supreme Court are the Electoral Laws Act, No.2 of 2002 and, of more relevance to the case, the Political Parties Act.

I now turn to the other provisions of the National Constitution relied on by Dr. Jabbi in his argument in support of the contention that this Court has original jurisdiction to entertain the matters raised in the Originating Notice of Motion.

First, there is section 171 (15) of the National Constitution. With the greatest respect to Dr. Jabbi, this section which is of utmost significance in the search for the source of law in this country vests absolutely no jurisdiction in the Supreme Court. Rather, it is a substantive provision which merely declares the National Constitution to be the supreme [p.278] law of Sierra Leone and emphasizes that status of the National Constitution by providing that any other law which is found to be inconsistent with any provision of the National Constitution shall, to the extent of the inconsistency, be void and of no effect.

It is true that the Supreme Court has got original jurisdiction to make a declaration to the effect that any law found to be inconsistent with any provision of the National Constitution renders the offending provision of that law null and void but that jurisdiction is vested in this Court by section 124(1) of the National Constitution, not even by section 127 which merely lays down the procedural rules for the making of such declarations.

Indeed, this brings me to the consideration of the legal effect of section 127(1) of the National Constitution. In my opinion, this section lays down the procedure for the enforcement of the National Constitution by this Court but only in certain specific circumstances. They are the following:

Where —

(1) any person alleges that an enactment is inconsistent with or in contravention of a provision of the National Constitution. That person may then invoke the original jurisdiction conferred upon this Court by section 124(1) for a declaration based on section 171(15) of the National Constitution that to the extent of the inconsistency the said enactment is null and void;

(2) any person alleges that anything contained in an enactment is inconsistent with or is in contravention of any provision of the National Constitution. That person may also invoke the original jurisdiction of this Court conferred by section 124(1) for a similar declaration as under (1) above; and

(3) any person alleges that anything done under the authority of an invalid enactment or any other enactment is inconsistent with or in contravention of the National Convention. That person may equally invoke the original jurisdiction of this Court conferred by section 124(1) for a similar declaration as under (1) and (2) above.

[p.280]

As part of his argument in support of his contention that this Court has original jurisdiction to hear and determine the present action Dr. Jabbi sought to rely on what I may call "the procedural jurisdiction" in the second sense of the word "jurisdiction" as outlined in the dicta of Pickford L.J. cited above. He contended that the several matters the Plaintiff was complaining about had been done "under the authority of an enactment", that enactment in question being the SLPP 1995 Constitution, which according to him is subsidiary legislation.

With the greatest respect to Dr. Jabbi, the SLPP 1995 Constitution cannot in any sense be considered as subsidiary legislation. It was not made pursuant to any power vested in the SLPP by the Political Parties Act or any other enactment. All the Political Parties Act lays down is a requirement that the constitution of every political party shall be one of the documents to be lodged with the Political Parties Registration Commission (hereinafter referred to as "the Commission") when a political party applies for registration. Further, neither before nor after registration is the party's constitution laid before Parliament as is required by the Constitutional and Statutory Instruments Act, No 6 of 1999, for any subsidiary legislation to have the necessary binding force of law. I shall deal with this issue more fully later in this judgment.

For all the above reasons, I hold that section 127(1) of the National Constitution does not confer any original or other jurisdiction in the Supreme Court.

I now turn to section 124(1) of the National Constitution. This subsection not only confers original jurisdiction on the Supreme Court but it also stipulates that in respect of those matters for which original jurisdiction is thus conferred no other court shall exercise original jurisdiction. What then are those matters? According to section 124(1)(a) these are "all matters relating to the enforcement or interpretation of any provision of" the National Constitution." Giving the words in this provision their plain and natural meaning, as I am obliged to do, since I perceive no ambiguity in the provision, as long as the matter in question relates to the enforcement or interpretation of any provision of the National Constitution original jurisdiction is vested in the Supreme Court to hear and determine it.

[p.281]

The first test is that the Plaintiff seeking to invoke this original jurisdiction must be able to point to some provision, any provision, of the National Constitution that is to be enforced or interpreted. The next test is to show, in addition, what act or omission makes it necessary for the provision to be enforced. The third test, in my opinion, is· an alternative to the second test. The Plaintiff must otherwise show that an interpretation of the particular provision of the National Constitution identified under the first test is required as a matter of law.

Has the Plaintiff then satisfied the first test and any or both of the other two tests? As far as the first test is concerned, the Plaintiff has indeed identified several sections of the National Constitution which, according to him, have been contravened and-are to be enforced. These he listed as sections 35(2), 35(4), 42(1), 43(a), 43(b), 46(1), 49(4), 76(1)(h) and 171(15).

However, to be able to invoke the original jurisdiction the Plaintiff needs also to' pass any one or both of the other two tests. I shall analyze the several matters raised by the Plaintiff in relation to each of the sections cited by the Plaintiff to see if the requirements of the second and/or third tests are satisfied. If I am satisfied that the matter raised in respect of the particular section of the National Constitution relates to the enforcement and/or interpretation of the provision therein contained then this Court will be deemed to have original jurisdiction in respect of the matter so raised.

First, sections 41 (b), 42(1) and 43 of the National Constitution referred to in respect of the second relief sought by the Plaintiff shall be considered together. I find as a fact that it is not being alleged by the Plaintiff either in the Originating Notice of Motion or in the Statement of the Plaintiff's case or in any of the affidavits filed on behalf of the Plaintiff that any of the provisions of these sections of the National Constitution are to be enforced as a result of something done or omitted to be done by the Defendants. The Plaintiff therefore fails the second test as far as these sections are concerned.

Is there then any legal reason, because of matters raised in respect of the second relief sought by the Plaintiff in the Originating Notice of motion, which makes it necessary to interpret any of these three sections of the National Constitution? I can find no such legal reason. In my opinion, the matters raised indicate rather a need for an [p.282] interpretation of Clauses IV(A)(3)(1), V(1)(d), V(2)(C), VI(b) and VI(6) of the SLPP 1995 Constitution. This, in my view, cannot confer original jurisdiction in the Supreme Court. I therefore hold that this Court does not have original jurisdiction to grant the second relief sought by the Plaintiff. As a result the application for this relief is to be struck out.

I now turn to the third relief sought by the Plaintiff. In addition to sections 42(1), 43(a), 43(b) and 41 (b) which I have already dealt with under the second relief the Plaintiff has identified the provisions of sections 35(2), 35(4), 49(4), 76(1)(h) and 171(15) of the National Constitution as ones to be enforced or interpreted as a result of matters raised by him in support of the third relief claimed in the Originating Notice of motion.

I shall deal with sections 35(2), 35(4) and 76(1)(h) together. I shall set them out in extenso for the purpose of clarity:

Section 35(2) — "The internal organization of a political party shall conform to democratic principles, and its aims, objectives, purposes and programmes shall not contravene, or be consistent with, any provision of this Constitution."

Section 35(4) — "No political party shall have as a leader a person who is not qualified to be elected as a Member of Parliament."

Section 76(1)(h) — "No person shall be qualified for election as a member of Parliament — if he is for the time being the President, the Vice-President, a Minister or a Deputy Minister under the provisions of this Constitution."

As far as section 35(2) of the National Constitution is concerned, the Plaintiff alleges, and this remains a mere allegation, that the decision of the NEC to hold the election for a Presidential Nominee of the SLPP during the Party Conference scheduled for 19th-20th August 2005 or any time in 2005 is contrary to democratic principles and therefore tantamounts to a contravention of the provisions of section 35(2) of the National Constitution.

I hold that this is a matter relating to the enforcement of a provision of the National Constitution and therefore this Court has original jurisdiction to hear and determine it.

Next, I propose to deal with sections 35(4) and 76(1) (h) together as, in my opinion, they should be read together. The Plaintiff's contention relating to these sections is that the SLPP 1995 Constitution makes it possible for a person who holds any of the offices of President, Vice President, Minister or Deputy Minister under the National Constitution, and therefore not qualified for election as a member of Parliament because of the provision of Section 76(1)(h) of the National Constitution to be a leader of the SLPP in contravention of section 35(4) of the National Constitution. This clearly raises a matter relating to the enforcement of a provision of the National Constitution and therefore i hold that this Court has original jurisdiction to hear and determine the matters raised in the third relief sought in the Originating Notice of Motion.

I now turn to the fourth relief sought in the Originating Notice of Motion. In this regard, the provisions of the National Constitution cited are those in sections 35(4) and 76(1)(h) and the allegation, put briefly, is that certain provisions in the SLPP 1995 Constitution are inconsistent with the said provisions of the National Constitution as well as with section 14(1) of the Political Parties Act.

For the reasons already stated above, I hold that the said allegation raises a matter of enforcement and also, I opine, a need for the interpretation of the relevant provisions et the National Constitution so as to give this Court original jurisdiction to hear and determine the matters raised in the fourth relief claimed in the Originating Notice of Motion.

Finally, under this aspect of jurisdiction, I turn to the fifth relief sought, that for an injunction restraining the Defendants from electing a Presidential Nominee of the SLPP any time before the end of 2005. In my view, this is a consequential relief flowing from the third relief referred to above. I therefore hold that the claim for this relief could be heard and determined in this Court's original jurisdiction.

The next type of jurisdiction dealt with in the dicta of Pickford L.J in the Guaranty Trust Bank of New York case is that which I have termed "procedural jurisdiction". It involves seeking an answer to the question whether this Court has jurisdiction to entertain this matter taking into account the manner in which this Court has been approached and the [p.284] locus standi or standing of the Plaintiff. This is the second hurdle the Plaintiff must surmount before this Court can go on to determine the merits or demerits of this action.

First, I shall deal with the manner in which the Plaintiff has presented his claim. The proceedings were instituted by way of Originating Notice of Motion dated 27th day of July 2005. According to Rule 89 of the Supreme Court Rules this is the correct procedure where the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is invoked. The content of the Originating Notice of Motion should correspond with that in Form 8 set out in the First Schedule to those Rules. According to that Form the reliefs are to be sought in accordance with section 104(1) of the 1978 Constitution which is ipsissima verba the provisions of section 124(1) of the present National Constitution. The Form also requires the Plaintiff to state the capacity in which he brings the action. In the instant case, this has been stated as follows:

"The Plaintiff/Applicant brings this action as a law-abiding citizen of Sierra Leone and member of the Sierra Leone People's Party(SLPP), who aspires to be Presidential Candidate for the SLPP at the 2007 Presidential elections, but who is keenly concerned that the pristine democratic credentials and processes of the SLPP are maintained, enhanced and facilitated in all its internal structure, organization, operations, programmes, activities and functioning; and that they are always consistently compliant with the valid and lawful provisions not only of its own Party Constitution, Rules, Regulations and Standing Orders but also of the Political Parties Act 2002, the national Constitution, and any other law(s) relevant and pertinent thereto .. "

It is clear from this statement that the Plaintiff brings the action in his own right and not in a representative capacity. However, Form 8 as set out in the First Schedule to the Supreme Rules makes no provision for the Plaintiff to indicate therein in what capacity the Defendant(s) are sued. However, in my opinion, this does not enable the Plaintiff to dispense with the requirement that, as a matter of practice at least, the capacity in which a defendant is sued should be indicated in the originating process. Indeed, Rule 98 of the Rules of this Court provides that where no provision is expressly made in those Rules relating to the original and supervisory jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, the [p.285] practice and procedure for the time being in force in the High Court shall apply mutantis mutandis.

Order 3 rule 4 of the High Court Rules provides that where the Plaintiff or the Defendant sues or is sued in a representative capacity the indorsement should show the capacity in which the plaintiff or defendant sues or is sued. Two factors are worth noting in respect of this rule. It is only applicable to cases where the action is commenced by a Writ of Summons. Secondly, it is the indorsement, not the title of the action, which should show the capacity of the person suing or being sued as a representative.

Both the High Court Rules and the English Rules, as contained in the 1960 Annual Practice to which according to Order 52 rule 3 one must turn in the absence of any local provision, are silent as to what should obtain where the action is commenced by an Originating Notice of Motion. In my opinion, it is sufficient, in such a case, if the capacity in which the defendant is sued is indicated either in the title of the Originating Notice of Motion or in the body of the Originating Notice of Motion or in the affidavit in support thereof.

In the instant case, an indication of the capacity in which the 1st and 2nd Defendants are sued is to be found in the body of the Originating Notice of Motion. In the fifth relief sought it is stated that the 1st and 2nd Defendants herein, Dr. Banya and Dr. Harding are being sued on their own behalf and in a representative capacity as SLPP officials. Indeed, the fifth relief is the only one that could, in the circumstances, be properly claimed against them. As a result, I hold that both the 1st and the 2nd Defendants are properly joined in this action.

The next question is whether this Court can properly grant the reliefs sought. As stated earlier the Plaintiffs seeks several declarations and an injunction. Dr. Jabbi argued strenuously that the several declarations are being sought pursuant to section 127(1) of the National Constitution and, though he did not go so far, presumably the injunction could properly be granted as a consequential relief flowing from the declarations under 127(2) of the National Constitution.

As stated above, the basis for Dr. Jabbi's contention is that the several declarations are sought pursuant to section 127(1) of the National Constitution because the 3rd Defendant has done something under the authority of an enactment, i.e. the constitution of the SLPP promulgated in 1995 certain Clauses of which, it is being alleged by the Plaintiff, contravene certain provisions of the National Constitution. Dr. Jabbi further argued that because the said SLPP 1995 Constitution was made pursuant to Section 11 (2)(a) of the Political Parties Act, it was therefore first, something done under the authority of an enactment within the meaning of section 127(1) of the National Constitution and, secondly, that it was subsidiary legislation.

With respect to Dr. Jabbi, I cannot accept either contention. Section 11 (2)(a) of the Political Parties Act does not authorize political parties to promulgate their respective constitutions. All it does is to require political parties to submit to the Commission two copies of their constitution and rules with their application for registration.

Secondly, even if the SLPP 1995 Constitution was made pursuant to the said section 11 (2)(a) of the Political Parties Act it could not be said to be in the nature of subsidiary legislation. According to section 170(1) of the National Constitution subsidiary legislation consists of "any orders, rules, regulations and other statutory instrument made by any person or authority pursuant to a power conferred in that behalf by this Constitution or any other law"

Further, sections 1 (1) and 1 (2) of the Constitutional and Statutory Instruments Act, NO.6 of 1999 provide as follows:-

1 (1) "Where in any Act, power is conferred on any person or authority to make any proclamation, regulation, order, rule, notice, by-law or any other instrument having the force of law that power shall be exercised by statutory instrument'.

1(2) "Subject to section 14 where the power referred to in subsection (1) is conferred by the Constitution or it is so required thereunder, the power shall be exercised by a constitutional instrument."

[p.287]

Section 3(1) further provides as follows:—

“In accordance with subsection (7) of section 170 of the Constitution, every Statutory instrument shall be laid before Parliament and shall be published in the Gazette on or before the date of being so laid.”

Finally, according to section 2 of the latter Act a Statutory Instrument laid before Parliament shall come into force at the end of twenty-one days from the date of being so laid unless before then it had been annulled by Parliament.

There is no suggestion that the SLPP 1995 Constitution was made by Public Notice, Statutory Instrument or Constitutional Instrument or that it was ever laid before Parliament. I hold therefore that the SLPP 1995 Constitution is not an enactment and for this reason the several declarations sought in the Originating Notice of Motion could not be made by this Court pursuant to 127(1) of the National Constitution.

Having said that, I must hasten to point out that this Court does have ample authority otherwise, acting in its original jurisdiction, to make the several declarations properly sought in the Originating Notice of Motion. Such authority is vested in this Court by Order 21 rule 4 of the High Court Rules which provision were not cited by either Counsel in this matter and which reads as follows:—

“No action or proceeding shall be open to objection, on the ground that a mere declaratory judgment or order is sought thereby, and the court may make bindina declarations of right whether any consequential relief is or could be claimed or not”.

For an exposition on the origin and ambit of the above rule which is ipsissima verba that found in the English Order 25 rule 5 as found in the 1960 Annual Practice see the case of Guaranty Trust Company of New York v Hannay and Company referred to earlier in this judgment and particularly the judgments of Buckley L.J. and Pickford L.J.

[p.288]

The Plaintiff having thus crossed the first procedural bari now turn to the second limb of the procedural test for jurisdiction contained in the dicta of Pickford L.J. in the Guaranty Trust Company of New York case cited earlier in this judgment, viz, whether this Court has any jurisdiction to deal with and determine the matter herein taking into account the capacity of the Plaintiff to bring this action before us. In short, could the Plaintiff pass the test of locus standi or standing?

This test is of crucial importance for the Plaintiff's case because where a court reaches the conclusion that a plaintiff lacks locus standi or legal capacity to institute the particular proceedings before it the court is obliged to strike out the action without going into the merits of the case.

On the issue of locus standi, Fidelis Nwadialo in his book "Civil Procedure in Nigeria" 2nd edition at page 32 under the rubric "Has the person intending to sue the locus standi" has this to say:

"The term 'locus standi" denotes legal capacity to institute proceedings in a court of law and is used interchangeably with terms like 'standing' or ' title to sue'. It has also been defined as the right of a party to appear and be heard on the question before any Court or tribunal. It is 'the right or competence to institute proceedings in a court for redress or assertion of a right enforceable law'."

According to the editors of the "Constitutional Law of South Africa", an authority cited by Dr. Jabbi, at Chapter 8 page 8.3 thereof:

"The concept of standing is concerned with whether a person who approaches the court is a proper party to present the matter in issue to the court for adjudication. The word "standing" has been referred to as "a metaphor used to designate a proper party to a court action". An inquiry into standing should thus focus on the party who brings the matter before the court, not on the issues to be adjudicated."

I cannot agree more.

[p.289]

Before conducting the inquiry into the Plaintiff's standing in the instant case, I wish to make certain clarifications as to the various sources of the law governing the concept of standing.

First, I think it is important to recognize that there is a distinction between standing at common law and the various statutory provisions relating to standing in different common law jurisdictions such as England, South Africa, Nigeria, Canada, India and, of course, locally.

Secondly, according to the authorities, a distinction ought to be made between the requirement of standing in private law litigations brought, for example, to enforce private rights in contract, tort or property on the one hand and the requirement for standing in public law litigation, particularly in the field of administrative law. An example of the latter type would be an action seeking a judicial review of administrative action. In England, in particular, the question of locus standi in actions seeking a judicial review is now governed entirely by statute, to wit, the English Supreme Court Act 1981. This is exhaustively dealt with in Chapter 2 of De Smith, Woolf & Jowell's "Principles of Judicial Review" that Dr. Jabbi relied on very heavily but which, in my opinion, is not relevant in the instant case.

I shall now deal with the position at common law. The principle in English law is that in an action to enforce a private right legal capacity to sue accrues only to a person who has a legal right or whose legal right has been adversely affected or who has suffered or is likely to suffer special damage in consequence of an alleged wrong.

In an action to assert or protect a public right or to enforce the performance of a public duty, it is only the Attorney-General, as the guardian of public interest who has the requisite standing to sue. Such proceedings can either be brought at the instance of the Attorney-General or he can consent to a private person bringing a "relator action" in the name of the Attorney-General. (See Attorney-General For New South Wales v. The Brewery Employees Union (1908)6 CLR 469 at 550-581; Gouriet v Union of Post Office Workers (1977) 3 WLR 300).

In private law litigations, whether a person has locus standi or not seldom presents any problem. However, it is in the area of public law that there has been some major developments in most common law countries. Over the years, there has been a shift from the strict common law principle of locus standi in public law litigation which has occurred in two ways.

First, the courts in some common law jurisdictions have adopted a more modern and liberal approach in conducting the inquiry as to the locus standi of the plaintiff in public law litigations. However, in all the common law jurisdictions where this change of approach has taken place the courts have not done away with the requirement that for a person to have locus standi in an action to assert a right conferred on the public at large or to enforce a duty owed to the public he must show that he has a special interest which is personal and peculiar to him and which interest has been adversely affected by the act or omission which he seeks to challenge. Invariably, what the courts have done is to take a liberal view of what constitutes the required interest.

For example, in the Canadian case of Minister of Justice of Canada v. Borowski ([1981] 2 SCR 575, the only interest alleged by the plaintiff was that he was a concerned citizen who wanted the issue in contention to be litigated. The Supreme Court of Canada granted him standing, holding that where a plaintiff is seeking a declaration that a statute is invalid, if there is a serious issue as to its invalidity, that person need only show that he is affected by it directly or that he has a genuine interest as a citizen in the validity of the legislation and that there is no other reasonable and effective manner in which the issue may be brought before the court. [See also the Canadian cases of Thorson v Attorney-General of Canada (1975) 1 SCR 138, and Nova Scotia Board of Censors v McNeil [1976] 2 SCR 265 and the Indian cases of Gupta v. Union of India, AIR 1982 SC 149; and Wadwa v. State of Bihar, AI R 1987 SC 149.)

In the case of Senator Abraham Adesanya v. The President of Federal Republic of Nigeria and others ([1981] 2 NWLR 358 the action was brought by the appellant challenging the constitutional validity of an appointment made by the President of Nigeria. The action was dismissed by the Nigerian Supreme Court on the sole ground that the appellant had no locus standi to bring the action as there were no rights peculiar or personal to him which had been infringed or injured. The Court did not even go into [p.291] the merits of the case and the issue of locus standi was taken in limine. Apparently, the decision in that case still remains the law on locus standi in Nigeria but in the later case of Fawehinmi v. Akilu ((1987) 4 NWLR 797 the Supreme Court of Nigeria departed from the narrow approach in the Adesanya case. In granting locus standi to the appellant who had sought leave to apply for an Order of Mandamus to compel the Director of Public Prosecutions to decide whether or not to prosecute Nnamani JSC had this to say about section 6(6)(b) of the Nigerian Constitution which provision is in actual fact a codification of the common law principle on locus standi:

"It is my view that in these matters which are interlined with the criminal law, our interpretation of Section 6(6)(b) of the Constitution must be approached with a true liberal spirit in the interest of Society at large. The appellant has locus to make the application he has brought to court, and if all other conditions are fulfilled, to initiate criminal proceedings. He also has an obligation which the courts must determine and protect. In the circumstances of this case, can it be seriously argued that the appellant is not on a higher pedestal than any person to whom the law has given locus in the wider interest of the society? From the affidavit filed, the deceased was in his lifetime his friend and client."

In delivering his own judgment in the Fawehinmi case Eso J.S.C. expressly conceded that the decision was "a departure from the narrow attitude of the Supreme Court of Nigeria] in the Abraham Adesanya's case and subsequent decisions."

In contrast, in the case of Nwanko v Nwanko (1995) 2 SCNJ 44 the parties were a divorced couple and the dispute was over the proprietorship of a business registered in the couple's joint names under the Nigerian Registration of Business Act 1961. The husband was a civil servant and by virtue of paragraph 2(b) of the 5th Schedule of the 1979 Nigerian Constitution, he should not, inter alia, "be engaged or participate in the management or running of any private business, profession or trade." Paragraph 15 and 17 of the said 5th Schedule set up a Code of Conduct Bureau and a Code of Conduct Tribunal to deal with any breach of the provisions set out in the said Schedule.

Mrs. Nwanko had instituted an action against her former husband claiming, inter alia, an injunction restraining the husband from interfering with the running and management of the business. The Supreme Court of Nigeria held that the provisions of the said paragraph 2(b) of the 5th Schedule of the Nigerian Constitution did not create a private right or interest for which the plaintiff could claim a relief, that the purpose of the provisions was to protect public interest and that she therefore had no locus standi to claim a relief against the husband as a result of his contravention of the said provision of the Nigerian Constitution. The Court accordingly struck out the matter.

The second method by which the strict common law principle that a private person has no locus standi in an action to assert or vindicate a right conferred in the public at large has been modified is by way of statutory intervention. This time we do not have to go very far for an example, Right here in Sierra Leone, in 1991, our Parliament by enacting the provisions contained in section 127 of the National Constitution made it possible for the first time for a private litigant to institute proceedings to challenge the constitutional validity of any enactment as well as to challenge the constitutional validity of anything done under the authority of the National Constitution or any other law without any requirement that that the person should show that he has a legal right or interest personal or peculiar to him which has been adversely affected by the act or omission which he seeks to challenge.

It is important to note that the provisions of section 127(1) of the National Constitution are only applicable in the limited factual circumstances which I have listed earlier in this judgment. In my opinion, in all other matters, whether constitutional or not, the common law principles of standing continue to apply.

This present position in Sierra Leone therefore is as stated in Halsbury's Laws of England 4th Edition Vol.1 (1) at paragraph 164 under the rubric 'Locus standi for declaratory relief':

"In an ordinary action the plaintiff claiming a declaration must have some private [p.293] legal right, or a legal interest of which the law will take cognisance and the interest must not, for example, be merely a matter of professional ethics. Except where statute otherwise provides, a private person cannot bring an ordinary action to assert a public right whether his claim is limited to declaratory relief or nor'.

This Court has recently applied this requirement of a private legal right or legal interest to ground standing in the case of Yambasu and Ors. v. Ernest Bai Koroma & Ors. (S.C.3/2002 judgment delivered on the 22nd day of June 2004, unreported)

In the judgment delivered by Wright J.S.C. she had this to say on the question of locus standi and the requirement of an interest likely to be affected:

"I disagree with learned counsel for the Defendants that the Plaintiffs do not have a locus standi in this matter. In my view, the Plaintiffs in the action do have an interest that is most likely to be affected by this action."

My understanding of that statement is that, absent such interest, the plaintiffs in that case would have lacked locus standi.

Dr. Jabbi has urged this Court to adopt the liberal approach in applying the common law principle. This would involve in effect giving locus standi to a plaintiff who claims relief not in his own personal interest but in the public interest or in the interest of a section of the public as happened in the Canadian case of Minister of Justice of Canada v. Borowski cited earlier in this judgment.

For reasons which will soon become obvious, I do not believe it is necessary in the circumstances of the instant case for me to dispose of the issue of standing on that basis and I do not desire to do. I therefore make no pronouncement on whether or not this Court should adopt the liberal approach in the inquiry for standing as advocated by Dr. Jabbi.

[p.294]

Of much greater concern to me is the question whether this Court can accord the Plaintiff locus standi in the instant case when one takes into account the several provisions of the National Constitution and the Political Parties Act dealing with the functions and powers of the Political Parties Registration Commission.

In my opinion, sections 34 and 35 of the National Constitution should be read together with virtually all the provisions of the Political Parties Act. In section 35(6) of the National Constitution it is expressly provided that subject to the provisions of the National Constitution and in furtherance of the provisions of the said section 35 Parliament may make laws regulating the registration, functions and operation of political parties. Pursuant to this provision, in 2002, Parliament enacted the Political Parties Act, No. 3 of 2002, which, according to its short title, is:

"an Act to establish the Political Parties Registration Commission for the Registration and regulation of the conduct of political parties in accordance with sections 34 and 35 of the Constitution and to provide for related matters."

The Commission was established by virtue of section 3 of the Act and section 7 designates the Administrator and Registrar-General as Secretary to the Commission. Section 6(2) of the Act then goes on to particularize the functions of the Commission. I need to highlight those stated in Section 6(2)(a), 6(2)(b) and 6(2)(e) as they are of particular relevance in the instant case. They state the Commission's functions as follows:

6(2)(a) "to monitor the affairs or conduct of political parties so as to ensure their compliance with the Constitution, this Act and with the terms and conditions of their registration."

6(2)(b) "to monitor the accountability of political parties to their membership and to the electorate of Sierra Leone;" and

6 (2)(e) "to do all such things as will contribute to the attainment of the object stated in subsection(1)."

[p.295]

These three provisions taken together invest the Commission with tremendous powers at the same time as it imposes very great responsibilities on it. The matter does not end there. The National Constitution goes on to provide in section 34(5) that in the exercise of the functions vested in the Commission it shall not be subject to the direction or control of any person or authority. I dare say that this includes even the courts provided, of course, the Commission is carrying out its functions in the manner envisaged by the National Constitution, the Political Parties Act and the general law.

Then, there is section 27 of the Political Parties Act. This enables the Commission to apply to this Court for the ultimate sanction, when all else has failed as it were, against any political party which has contravened any provisions of the National Constitution or the Political Parties Act.

In my opinion, Section 27(1) of the Political Parties Act gives the Commission locus standi to invoke this Court's original jurisdiction where a political party has contravened any provision of the National Constitution in the same way that section 127(1) of the National Constitution gives locus standi to any person, without exception, who wishes to challenge the constitutional validity of any enactment or anything contained in or done under the authority of that or any other enactment. Maybe, this was why Dr. Jabbi argued so strenuously that the Plaintiff was seeking the several reliefs in the Originating Notice of motion pursuant to section 127 of the National Constitution. The advantage of seeking relief under section 127 of the National Constitution is that, as I have already held in this Judgment, contrary to the position at common law, the plaintiff is not required to that he has a legal right or interest which he is seeking to enforce or protect.

In my opinion, it could not be seriously doubted that the locus standi given to the Commission by section 27(1) of the Political Parties Act is exclusive to the Commission.

It has not been alleged by the Plaintiff that the Commission has neglected or refused or is unable to carry out its functions under sections 6 and/or 27 of the Political Parties Act. The situation here is different from what obtained in the Nigerian case of Fawehinmi cited earlier in this judgment. In that case, it was shown by affidavit evidence that the appellant had requested the Director of Public Prosecutions to exercise the discretion [p.296] granted to him by statute and it was only after the Director of Public Prosecutions had replied that he had not come to a decision whether or not to prosecute that the appellant took out the proceedings for leave to apply for an order of Mandamus to compel the Director of Public Prosecutions to carry out his statutory functions. I say this because, in this country also, where a public officer or public body fails or refuses to carry out functions its functions or to exercise powers conferred by statute the law provides ample remedies open to a person affected thereby. This is how the law is stated in Halsbury's Laws of England 4th edition Volume 1 (1) at paragraph 163 under the rubric “Declaratory Judgments”:

“The remedy by declaration is available to ensure that a board or other authority set up by Parliament makes its determinations in accordance with the law, and this is so whether the determinations are judicial, disciplinary or administrative; nor is the remedy excluded by the fact that any determination is by statute made final.”

(See Taylor v. National Assistance Board [1957] 1 All E.R. 183 at 185, C.A. per Denning L.J.)

In the circumstances of this case and based on the available affidavit evidence, to grant the Plaintiff locus standi to maintain this action to ensure that the SLPP, a political party registered under the Political Parties Act, does not contravene any provision of the National Constitution, particularly section 35 thereof, would be, in my opinion, to preempt the Commission and, as it were, to allow the Plaintiff to usurp the powers of the Commission particularly when there is no allegation before us that the Commission has neglected or failed to carry out its statutory duties and the Commission has not even been made a party to this action. (See the Nigerian cases of Nwanko v. Nwanko supra; Ajakaiye v. Military Governor (1994) 9 SCNJ 102 at 119; Amaghizenween v. Eguamwense (1993) 11 SCNJ 27)

For all the above reasons, I hold that the plaintiff lacks locus standi to maintain the claim for the declarations sought as part of the third and fourth reliefs in the Originating Notice of Motion. The claim for these reliefs should therefore be struck out.

[p.297]

Finally, I turn to the fifth relief claimed in the Originating Notice of Motion, that for a permanent injunction. As I said earlier, in my opinion, this is a consequential relief which of necessity must flow from one of the several declarations sought. Ex facie, it is difficult to tell with which of the declarations sought this relief has a nexus. If it is to be attached to the declaration sought in the second relief in the Originating Notice of Motion then it must be struck out in view of my earlier pronouncement that the Plaintiff could not invoke the original jurisdiction of this Court to maintain an action for the second relief. The claim for an injunction ought also to be struck out for the same reason. Similarly, since I have held that despite the fact that this Court's original jurisdiction is properly invoked in respect of the third and fourth reliefs sought in the Originating Notice of Motion the Plaintiff still lacks locus standi to maintain the claim for said third and fourth reliefs and that, as a result, the claim for the said reliefs ought to be struck out, for the same reason, the claim for an injunction being a relief flowing consequentially from the declarations sought under the third and fourth reliefs in the Originating Notice of Motion ought also to be struck out.

I therefore make the following Orders:—

(1) The claims for the 1 stand 2nd reliefs in the Originating Notice of Motion are hereby struck out as they could not be granted in this Court's original jurisdiction;

(2) The claim for the 3rd and 4th reliefs in the Originating Notice of Motion are hereby struck out for want of locus standi on the part of the Plaintiff.

(3) In view of Orders 1 and 2 above the fifth relief in the Originating Notice of Motion that for a permanent injunction is struck out accordingly;

(4) The Defendants are hereby discharged from the Undertaking they gave to this Court on the 16th August 2005.

(5) The Cross-Undertaking as to damages given by the Plaintiff on the 16th August 2005 is to remain on the file until further Order;

[p.298]

(6) Each party to bear its own costs of the proceedings so far.

(7) Liberty to apply

A.R.D. RENNER-THOMAS, C.J.

[P.299]

V.A. WRIGHT

The plaintiff by originating motion dated 27th July 2005 sought declarations in pursuance of sections 122, 124(1), 127 and 171(15) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.6 of 1991 namely:

A DECLARATION to the effect that the Constitution of the Sierra Leones Peoples Party (SLPP) dated July 1995 (hereinafter also called the "THE SLPP CONSTITUTION") is the authentic currently applicable constitution of the Sierra Leones Peoples Party (also herein called (The Party) or the (("SLPP") for the purposes of the functioning and operation of the Party in terms of the National Constitution and the Political Parties Act, No 3 of 2002.

[p.300]

2. A DECLARATION to the effect that, where an incumbent resident of the Republic of Sierra Leone was originally elected thereto in compliance with the following provisions in respective Constitutions as cited herein below, among others, to wit:

(i) as to the SLPP Constitution

a) Clause IV(A)(3)(i) thereof

b) Clause V(1)(c) and (d) thereof

c) Clause V (2)(c) thereof, being under the rubrics "Duties of Officers" and "Leader" and

d) Clause VI (b) and (c) and

(ii) as to the National Constitution.

a) section 41 (b) thereof;

b) section 42(1) thereof; and

c) section 43 thereof,

then in that case, the following interpretive conclusions are or would be, each by itself within the spirit, intendment, contemplation, and indeed inescapable farce and effect, of the said SLPP Constitution, viz:

(1) That the SLPP Constitution makes no express or specific provision for the substantive independent existence, or for the direct nomination, election, selection, choice or identification, as the case may be, of the Leader of the SLPP as such; but, rather, that any such nomination, election, selection, choice or identification, as the case may be of the said Leader takes place only indirectly as a consequential or derivative issue from the process of nominating, electing, selecting, choosing or identifying, as the case may be, the party's Presidential Nominee for the next pending national Presidential election

(2) That the position of the Leader of the SLPP is not a free-standing office or status in its awn right: but rather, that is, by virtual definition, dependent of upon the position of Presidential nominee for the said party, thereby making it so intertwind or associated with office of State President at any time when an

(3) SLPP member holds the said Presidency as to make the two positions indivisible and inseparable one from the other at all such times.

(4) That at any time the SLPP is in power and/or a member thereof is the lawful incumbent President of Sierra Leone, the two positions of Leader of [p.301] the party and State President mayor can be either held together and jointly or relinquished together and jointly, and never otherwise at any such time, so that an incumbent thereof may not selectively relinquish one of them and yet hold and yet hold or seek to continue holding to the other, nor may two different persons at one and the same time or simultaneously hold the two positions separately, i.e. one position to one of them and the other to the other.

(5) That the SLPP Constitution makes no express or specific Provision for the substantive independent existence of or for any nomination election, selection, choice or identification (as the case may be) of, a leader of the SLPP as such, at any time when the said party is either not in power or not providing the incumbent President of Sierra Leone or when a nation Presidential election is not immediately due to be held.

3. A DECLARATION to the effect that, in view of the following party and National constitutional and other legislative provisions respectively, among others to wit:

a) Clause II(4), IV(a) (I), (IV) (5)(b) and (c) and (I), V(2)(c) as aforesaid, and X of the SLPP Constitution:

b) Section 6,14(1) 24, 27 and 29 of the Political Parties Act, No.3 of 2002:

c) Sections 35(2) and (4), 42(1) 43(a) and (b) 46(1), 49(4) 76(1)(h) and 171 (15) of the national constitution,

Then, in viz

w thereof, the following interpreting conclusion are or would be, each by itself, within the spirit, intendment, contemplation, and indeed inescapable force and effect, of the said provisions respectively, viz:

(1) That as at the date of filing the application herein, there are or were at least two or three regularly meetings and unspecified number of possible special or order meetings of the party conference of the SLPP still to be held before the Presidential and Parliamentary elections of 2007 are were due to be held, to wit the annual party conferences for the year 2005/2006 and possible 2007 and any other special or other meeting(s) of the Party Conference "as may be determined by the National Executive Council".

(2) That, without any prejudice whatever to the holding of the Party Conference (as such) slated for 19-20 August 2005 or at all otherwise in 2005)., the nomination, election, selection, choice or identification, as the case may be. Whether attempted or purported of a Presidential Nominee and/or Leader of the SLPP at the said Party Conference, that is to say, almost two years before the Presidential and Parliamentary election of 2007 are due to be held, has or would [p.302] have or leads or would lead to the following interpretive consequences and/or conclusions, viz:

(i) it is and will in itself be grossly premature and incomportant with democratic principles, for being inconsistent with and in contravention of the provisions in sections 35(2) and 43(a) and (b) of the National Constitution, and accordingly void and of no effect:'

(ii) it is and will in practice be grossly unfair to certain individual members of the Party and potentially prejudicial to their interest vis-à-vis the Presidency and even to the wider related interests of the Party and the nation at large, in that:

(a) it does and will tend to operate to prematurely preclude and exclude certain potential aspirants to that or those certain potential aspirants to that or those position(s) w ho, for reasons of present untimeliness or prematurely or otherwise, may not yet, as at 19-20 August 2005 or at, any other time in 2005, have indicated their intentions or aspirations in respect thereof, but may be likely as at the due and proper time in 2006 or 2007 to such intentions or aspirants publicly known at the appropriate time;

(b) it is and will be likely to deprive the SLPP itself as a democratic national Party of a possible better quality or more popular Presidential candidate who. However, for reasons of present untimeliness or prematurely or otherwise in 2005, have indicated his/her intentions or aspirations in respect thereof, but may wish as at the due and proper time in 2006 or 2007 to make such intentions or aspirants publicly known at the appropriate time; and it is also likely to deprive the said Party of a fairer and more informed choice a possible electoral disadvantage vis-a-vis the Presidential candidates of other political parties and thus at the risk of]({}sing the Presidential elections of 2007 against the said other parties.

(c) It is and will likely to deprive the entire nation itself and the people of Sierra Leone as a whole of a possible better quality Presidential Candidate and potential ultimate President of Sierra Leone who, however, for reasons, of present untimeliness or prematurity or otherwise may not yet, as at 19-20 August 2005 or at any other time in 2005, have indicated his/her intentions or aspirations in respect thereof, but may wish as at the due and proper time in 2006 or 3007 to make such intentions or aspirations publicly known at the appropriate time, with all the possible attendant risks of prejudice (arising from an [p.303] inapt" choice due to the said gross prematurity) to the prospects of good governance, peace and positive national economic and other development during the five to ten years following the next Presidential election;

(iii) it is or will, in any case, be tantamount to an amendment or attempted/purported amendment of the SLPP Constitution, and accordingly inconsistent with and in contravention of the provisions in Clause 11(14), IV(A)(1), IV(B)(5)(b) and (c) and (i), and X of the said SLPP Constitution, and with and of those of those section 24 of the Political Parties Act 2002 and sections 35 (b) and (c) and (i), and X of the said SLPP Constitution, and with and of those of section 24 of the Political Parties Act 2002 and sections 35(2) and (4) and 76(1) (h) of the National Constitution and thereof unlawfully, void and of no effect.

(3) That the position of Leader and Deputy Leader of the SLPP, in the manner and to the extent that they have been and/or are being held by specified incumbents respectively over the past ten years or so, that is to say, since at least 1996 and up till now, were and are so held in contravention of the provisions in section 14 (1) of the political parties act and sections 35 (4) and 76 (1) (h) of the national constitution and so, as held, were and are void and of no effect.

(4) That, in so far as and to the extent that the current SLPP Constitution remains and reads as its tands at the present time and at least up to 12 months hence, it is unlawful for the said Party to nominate, elect, select, choose or otherwise identify, as the case may be, a Leader of the SLPP as such, or to attempt purport to so do, at any Party Conference or indeed at any time at all within the next 12 months from the date of filling this application.

(5) That, in view especially of the provisions of sections 14 (1) of the Political Parties Act 2002, and 35 (4) and 76 (1) of the National Constitution, a person who is for the time being the President, The Vice President, a Minister or a Deputy Minister in the Government under the provisions of the National Constitution may not and most not be, and ought not to be, either:

(a) Leader of the SLPP, or

(b) A member of the executive body or officers of the SLPP, whether national or otherwise or

(c) The National Secretary-General of the SLPP.

(6) That the position of the National Secretary-General of the SLPP, in the manner and to the extent that it has been or is being held by a Minister of Government, to wit, by the 2nd Defendant herein over the past three years or so, that is to say, at least since around June 2002 and up until now, was and is so held in contravention of the provisions in section 14 (1) of the Political Parties Act 2002 [p.304] and sections 35 (4) and 76 (1) (h) of the National Constitution ans[sic] so, as held, was and is void and of no effect since at least June 2002 until now.

(7) That, in consequence of all the provisions and conclusions cited and recited in the current declaratory relief and is foregoing sub-items 3 (1) to (6) inclusive herein, the SLPP as a Party is already dangerously left open and expose to a present, risk of disqualification and disestablishment applications to the Supreme Court, on the one and by the relevant commission for an order to cancel the registration of the Party and, on the other hand, by the Attorney and the Minster of Justice after such cancellation for an order to wind up and dissolve the SLPP, pursuant respectively to sections 27 and 29 of the Political Parties Act 2002.

4. A DECLARATION to the effect that the following provisions of the SLPP Constitution, in so far as the respective aspects thereof as aee indiced herein are concerned and to the respective extents thereof, to wit.

a) Clause V(2)© thereof in so far as the stipulations" shall automatically become the Leader of the Party after such commission. He shall be the political head the Party and" are concerned and to the extent thereof.

b) Clause V(1)(c) & (d) thereof, in so far as the stipulations (shall automatically become the Leader of the Party after such nomination. He shall be political head of the Party and "are concerned to the extent thereof;

c) Clause V(2)(d) thereof, in its entirety; and

d) Clause V(f) thereof, in so far as the stipulation "shall cease to be Leader and Deputy Leader respectively" is concerned and to the extent thereof.

Are, each and every one of them, inconsistent with and in contravention of contravention of the provisions in section 14(1) of the Political Parties Act 2002 and sections 35(4) and 76(1)(h) of the National Constitution and that the said inconsistent provisions are, to the extent of the said inconsistency, in each case as specified herein, null and void ab initio and of no effect.

4. A PERMANENT INJUNCTION restraining the 1st and 2nd Defendants (in their personal and official Party capacities alike) and 3rd Defendant herein their servants, agents and privies, and in the case of the 3rd Defendant, in alt its emanations and manifestations as organs, institutions, officers and members thereof, from nominating, electing, selecting, choosing or identifying, as the case may be, a Presidential Nominee and/or Leader of the SLPP in any shape or form or name or guise, or attempting/purporting so to do, or encouraging or causing or countenancing or shepherding or partaking in the doing of any such thing, at the [p.305] Party Conference slated for 19-20 August 2005 or at all otherwise in 2005, but otherwise without any prejudice whatsoever to the holding of the said Party Conference as such.

In relation to the motion was supported by the affidavit of Dr. Bu-Buakei Jabbie sworn to on the 27th day of July 2005 interlocutary notice of motion for an interim injunction dated 4th August 2005 the 1st, 2nd and 3rd defendants/respondents gave an undertaking to this Court that the SLPP Party Conference to be held on the 19th-20th August 2005 or any other time in 2005 will not nominate or elect a Presidential Nominee or candidate and/or Leader of the Sierra Leone People's Party (SLPP) at the said Party Conference or at any other Party Conference thereafter in 2005 until the determination by this Court of the plaintiffs/applicants' substantive application contained in the originating Notice of Motion dated 27th day of July.

The Court having accepted counsel for the plaintiff/applicants offer to give a cross-undertaking undertook that the plaintiff/applicant shall abide by any order which this court may make as to damages in case this Court shall be of the opinion that the defendants/respondents shall have suffered any damages by reason of the undertaking given on the 15th August 2005 and which the plaintiff/applicant ought to pay.

The interlocutary notice of motion dated 4th August 2005 was accordingly struck out.

The plaintiff in his statement of case dated 3rd August 2005 dealt with the undemocratic principles he alleged especially paragraph 4 in which he stated that His Excellency the President, Alhaji Dr. Ahmed Tejan Kabbah, has been President of Sierra Leone since March 1996 and uptill now doubled as leader of the Sierra Lone People's Party, that the 2nd defendant herein has also been National Secretary-General of the Party for most of that period during which he held various government ministerial offices one of which he still holds. Also that the Vice President, Mr. Solomon Berewa has held the said position since June 2002 during which period he doubled as Deputy Leader of the SLPP.

He referred to Exhibit 2 which is the SLPP Constitution and stated that it was registered at the Electoral Commission in 1995 as the Constitution of the SLPP which was in compliance with section 34 and section 35 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone.

He submitted that the Leader of the SLPP is dependent upon the position of Presidential Nominee for the party thus making it interwined with the office of the President at any time when the SLPP holds the said Presidency.

He further submitted that the provisions of section 14(1) of the Political Parties Act 2002 and 34(4) and 76(1)(h) of the National Constitution that a person who is for the time being the President, the Vice President, a Minister, Deputy Minister in the Government under the Constitution may not either be a Leader of the SLPP or a member of the [p.306] executive body or officers of the SLPP, whether national or otherwise or the National Secretary General of the SLPP.

Learned Counsel for the plaintiff Dr. Buakei Jabbi also referred to Clause V(2)(c), V(1)(c), V(2)(d) and VI(f) in Exhibit 2 i.e. the SLPP Constitution

In relief of paragraph 3(1) to (7) of the Originating Notice of motion he submitted that the party may have contrived sections 11(2) (a) (iii), 14(1) and 24(1) of the Political Parties Act and also sections 35(4) and 76(1)(h) of the 1991 Constitution of Sierra Leone

The learned counsel for the plaintiff also stated that Leader or Deputy Leader referred to in Exhibit 2 i.e. SLPP Constitution are inconsistent with and in contravention of section 14(1) of the Political Parties Act and section 35(4) and 76(1)(h) of the 1991 Constitution and is therefore void and of no effect in relation to section 171(15) of the 1991 Constitution.

Learned counsel for the plaintiff submitted that only the Supreme Court had jurisdiction to determine the issue, raised in relief 3(3)(5) & (6) in the originating notice of motion in view of the provisions in sections 124(1)(a), 127 and 171 (15) among others in the 1991 Constitution since the conduct referred to in these three subparagraphs are inconsistent and incompatable with and in contravention of section 35(4), 76(1)(h) and 35(2) of the 1991 Constitution.

In relation to the defendants case learned counsel for the defendants E.K. Halloway Esq. argued locus standi jurisdiction together. He stated that there is a modern conception on locus standi in constitutional issues from common law and that locus standi was legislated for the first time in Sierra Leone in Section 127 and 171 (15) as the modem conception of local standi. He said that he relied on section 127 of the Constitution and submitted that locus standi is recognized in constitutional matters in section 171 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.6 of 1991. The learned counsel for the plaintiff E.K. Hallway Esq said that the issues raised by the plaintiff are matters primarily of political public interest.

In the case for the 1st, 2nd and 3rd defendants it was stated that the Supreme Court lacks original jurisdiction to enforce or interprete any of the provisions of the SLPP Constitution. Therefore the Supreme Court lacks original jurisdiction to hear the application or make the 1st 2nd and 3rd declaration sought in the plaintiffs originating notice of motion dated the 27th July 2005 and filed herein.

Also that the plaintiff has no locus standi to invoke the Supreme Court's jurisdiction for the 1st 2nd and 3rd Declaration sought since the plaintiff has not shown any rights or obligations personal or peculiar to him which have been infringed. In relation to the 4th Declaration sought that the plaintiff has no locus standi to invoke the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court since the appropriate body to invoke the Supreme [p.307] Courts jurisdiction on such matters is the Political Parties Registration Commission established by the Political Parties Act 2002.

Also that the application for a permanent injunction in the plaintiffs originating notice of motion dated the 27th day of July 2005 does not allege that the right of the plaintiff has been infringe.

EX. Halloway Esq for the defendants submitted that the Supreme Court lacked original jurisdiction to hear and determine the case made in the originating notice of motion under section 124 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991 Act No. 6 of 1991 or any other section of the Constitution since the matters raised in the originating notice of motion neither relates to enforcement or interpretation of the Constitution or to a question as to whether an enactment was made in excess of the powers conferred on Parliament or any other authority.

Learned counsel for the defendant E. K. Halloway Esq stated that the plaintiff cannot rely on sections 124 (1) section 127, and 171 (15) to vest in the Supreme Court original jurisdiction to hear and determine such application in the notice of originating summons, and also that section 34 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone makes provision for the establishment of the Political Parties Commission which confers certain powers and functions relating to the internal manner and structure of the Political Parties.

In relation to the prayer for the permanent injunction he said that the plaintiff has not shown that he has a personal or peculiar interest to be infringed at the Party Conference by the nomination of the Leader/Presidential Candidate.

The plaintiff seeks several declarations pursuant to section 122, 124(1) 127 and 171 (15) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.6 of 1991. I shall not set out these provisions as they have already been enumerated in the judgment of the learned Hon Chief Justice.

I will first deal with the question of original jurisdiction by the Supreme Court. This court has original jurisdiction under sections 122(1) and 124(1) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act NO.6 of 1991 and not under section 171(15) as submitted by Counsel for the plaintiff.

There appears to be some confusion in relation to section 12 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.6 of 1991. I agree with the views of the learned Hon. Chief Justice that the section only lays down the procedure for the enforcement of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.6 of 1991 in certain circumstances.

[p.308]

I will now turn to the question of whether or not this court has original jurisdiction to hear anddetern1ine matters raised in the originating notice of motion.

In Halsburg's 4th Edition Volume 10 it was stated that the declaration claimed must confer some tangible benefit on the plaintiff. There is no power to make a declaration on a subject relief in respect of which is beyond the jurisdiction of the court. There is a general power to make a declaration whether there be a cause of action or not and at the instance of any party who is interested in the subject matter of the declaration. See Guaranty Trust Co. New York vs. Hannay & Co. (1915) 2KB 536 in which it was held that the court has the power to make a declaration whether there is a cause of action or not at the interest of the party, it will, then be for the court to decide on the facts whether or not it will exercise those powers.

The plaintiff claiming a declaration must have some private legal right or legal interest of which the law will take cognizance. The plaintiff abandoned the first declaration sought legal right or legal interest of which the law will take cognizance. See Olhams Press Ltd. vs. London and Provincial Sporting News Agency (1929) Ltd. Vol.1 A E R page 217 in which it was stated that the power of the court to make declaratory judgment is a discretionary power and in every case the court must exercise its discretion on the particular case.

I do not agree with the submission of Counsel for the plaintiff that the SLPP 1995 Constitution is a subsidiary legislation since the Political Parties Act 2002, Act No.3 of 2002 states that the Constitution of every political party should be lodged with the Commission on application for registration. The definition of a subsidiary legislation is to be found in section 170(1) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.6 of 1991 and see also section 1 (1) and 1 (2) of the Constitutional and Statutory Investments Act No.6 of 1999. The plaintiff complained that sections 35(2) 35(4) 42(1) 43(a) 43(b) 46(1), 49(4) 76(1)(h) and 171(15) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.6 of 1991 has been contravened. In the 2nd relief sought by the plaintiff also referred to sections 41 (b) and 43 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.6 of 1991. The case of Guaranty Trust Company v Hannay I opine that none of these provisions are to be enforced as a result of something done or omitted to be done by the defendants all the causes IV(A)(3)(1) V(1)(c) and (d) V(2)(c), V1(b) and V1(6) in the SLPP Constitution which were raised does not give this court the original jurisdiction for the relief sought. The plaintiff has alleged that the decision of National Executive Council to hold the election for a Presidential Nominee of the SLPP during the Party Conference which should have taken place on the 19th-20th August 2005 or at anytime in 2005 is contrary to democratic principles and contravenes Section 35(2) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.9 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone section 35(2) states

"The internal originating of a political party shall conform to democratic principles, and its aims, objectives, purposes and programmes shall not contravene or be consistent with any provision of this Constitution"

[p.309]

Thus since it relates to the enforcement of a provision of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.6 of 1991 this court has jurisdiction to hear and determine it. On the plaintiff's contention relating to section 35(4) and section 76 (1)(h) that under the SLPP Constitution it is possible for a person who holds any office of President, Vice President, Minister or Deputy Minister under the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.6 of 1991 and therefore not qualified for election as a member of Parliament because of section 76(1)(h) to be a leader of the SLPP in contravention of section (4) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.6 of 1991 I opine that this court has original jurisdiction to hear and determine the matters raised in the Third relief sought since it relates to the enforcement of a provision in the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.6 of 1991.

Counsel for the plaintiff rightly clearly presented his papers under the correct procedure in accordance with Rule 89 of the Supreme Court Rules Act 1982 Public Notice No.1 of 1982.

To my mind this action should have been brought in a representative capacity and not on the plaintiff's own right, Rule 98 of the Supreme Court Rules provides that where no provision is expressly made in these Rules relating to the original and supervising jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, the practice and procedure for the time being in force in the High Court shall apply mutant's mutandis.

Then Order 3 Rule 4 of the High Court Rules provides that where the plaintiff or the defendant sues or is sued in a representative capacity the endorsement should show the capacity in which the plaintiff or defendant sues or is sued.

I am of the view that it would be sufficient if the capacity in which the defendant is sued is indicated in the title of the originating notice of motion or in the body of the originating Notice of motion.

The defendants were rightly sued in a representative capacity. In relation to the 4th relief for an injunction in restraining the defendants from electing a Presidential Nominee of the SLPP anytime before the end of 2005. I am of my view and so hold that this relief could be determined in this court original jurisdiction.

Now I turn to the question of locus standi. Has the court any jurisdiction to deal with and determine the matter taking into consideration the capacity of the plaintiff to bring this action before the Supreme Court,? Counsel, for the plaintiff referred to chapter 2 of De Smith, Woolf & Jowell's Principles of Judicial Review in which a distinction was made between the requirement of standing in private law and public law according to decided cases there is a distinction between standing at common law litigations and private law legislations Counsel for the plaintiff asked this court to adopt the liberal approach in applying the common law principle.

On the concept of locus standi is whether a person who approached the court is a proper party to present the issue to the court for adjudication see cabinet of the Transitional Government for the Territory of South West Africa VS EINS 1988 (3) S.A [p.310] 369 (A) See also Otugor Gamioba & Others VS Esezi II the Ongajie and Others 1961 2 SCN 237.

In Halsbury's 4th Edition volume 10 it was stated that the plaintiff claiming a declaration must have some private legal right or a legal interest of which the law will take cognizance. A litigant is required to demonstrate some actual or threatened injury personally suffered and that the injury can be traced to the challenged action and that the injury is redressable by a decision of the Court.

In the Nigerian Constitutional Law Reports (1981) 2 N C L R. The Chief Justice in the case of Senate Abraham Ade Adesanya vs. The President of the Fedral Republic of Nigeria the Hon. Justice Victor Ovie-Whiskey said "locus standi" denotes the legal capacity to institute proceedings in the Court of Law.

On reading the authorities cited it appears that the test of applying locus standi differ in various jurisdiction.

I have had the opportunity of reading the judgment of the learned Chief Justice on the question of locus standi. In the light of the authorities quoted in my judgment. I agree with the reasons given by the learned Chief Justice for refusing the locus standi.

Since the plaintiff did not came to court in a private capacity and not in a representative capacity but as a member of the S.L.P.P. it was for him to satisfy the court that he had a special or justifiable interest or that he will suffer some injury had the Convention been held on the 19th-20th August in choosing a Presidential Candidate.

Has the plaintiff exhausted all remedies available to him? This brings to my mind the Political Parties Act 2002 whose short title reads "Being an Act establish Political Parties Registration Commission for the registration and regulation of the conduct of Political Parties in accordance with sections 34 and 35 of the Constitution and to provide for the related matter".

Section 34 and 35 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.6 of 1991 are to be read with the Political Parties Act 2002.

Section 27 of the Political Parties Act 2005 gives the Political Parties Registration Commission the exclusive right to apply to the Supreme Court, and the Act gives aggrieved persons to make complaints to the Commission about matters listed in the provisions of the Political Parties Act 2002.

I entirely agree with this aspect of the Learned Chief Justice in his judgment.

[p.311]

I conclude with the words of UWAIS JSC in the case of Senator Abraham Ade Adesanifa vs. The President of the Federal Republic of Nigeria and the Hon. Justice Victor Ovie-Whiskey cited earlier.

"It is of paramount importance and indeed most desirable to encourage citizens to come to court to have the Constitution interpreted. However, this is not to say, with respect, that meddle-some interlopers, professional litigants or the like should be encouraged to sue in matters that do not directly concern them. In, my view, to do that is to open the flood gate to frivolous and vexatious proceedings I believe that such latitude is capable of creating undesirable state of affairs.

For reasons given the originating notice of motion is struck out.

I agree with the orders proposed by the Learned Chief Justice.

TOLLA THOMPSON, JSC

My Lords

I have had the opportunity to read the draft judgment of my brother the Honourable Chief Justice and I agree with him. However, I wish to articulate few words of mine.

On the 17th August 2005 the plaintiff Samuel Hinga Norman by an originating Notice of Motion, moved this court under sections 122, 124(1). 127 and 171 (15) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, Act No. 6 of 1991, invoking the original jurisdiction of this court for several declarations and relief against the 1st defendant Dr. Sama S. Banya National Chairman Sierra Leone Peoples party, 2nd defendant Dr. Prince A. Harding, National Secretary General Sierra Leone Peoples Party and 3rd defendant the Sierra Leone Peoples Party (SLPP).

Background

The plaintiff is a fully paid up member of the Sierra Leone Peoples Party see Ex. 1. He also intends to contest the presidential election in 2007, having already declared the intention to do so. The Sierra Leone Peoples Party is the party in government at the moment. At the National Executive committee meeting held sometime ago it was decided that the 2005 party conference be held in Makeni on the 19th and 20th August 2005 at which the agenda will include the nomination and election of national officers.

Being dissatisfied with this agenda the plaintiff came to this court to seeking certain declaration and relief.

Declaration and Relief

1. A declaration to the effect that the constitution of the Sierra Leone Peoples Party (which for the purposes of this judgment I shall henceforth refer to as the SLPP) dated July 1995 is the authentic currently applicable to the constitution of the SLPP for the purposes of the functioning and operation of the party in terms of the National Constitution and the Political Parties Act No. 3 of 2002.

2. A declaration to the effect that where an incumbent President of the Republic of Sierra Leone was originally elected thereto in compliance with the following provisions in the respective constitution as cited herein below among others to wit:

i. As to the SLPP constitution

a. clause IV A(3) (1) thereof

b. clause V(I)(c) and (d) thereof

c. clause V(2) (c) thereof being under the rubric "duties of officers and leader" and

d. clause VI (b) and (f)

ii. As the national constitution

a. section 41 (b) thereof

[p.314]

b. section 42(1) thereof

c. section 43 thereof

Then in that case, the following interpretive conclusions are or would be each by itself within the spirit, intendment contemplation and indeed inescapable force and effect of the said SLPP constitution viz:

(1) That the SLPP constitution makes no express or specific provision for the substantive independent existence or for a direct nomination, election, selection choice or identification as the case may be of the leader of the SLPP as such hut rather that any such nomination, election selection' choice or identification as may be of the said leader takes place only indirectly as a consequential or derivative issue from the process of nominating, electing, selecting choosing or identifying as the case may be the party presidential nominee for the next pending national presidential election.

(2) That the position of leader of the SLPP is not a free standing office or status in its own right, but rather that it is by virtual definition, dependent upon the position of presidential nominee for the said. party thereby making it so intertwined or associated with the office of state president at any time when an SLPP member holds the said presidency as to make the two positions indivisible and inseparable one from the other at all such times.

(3) That at any time when the SLPP is in power and/or a member thereof is the lawful incumbent president of Sierra Leone, the two position of leader of the party and state president mayor can only be either held together, or jointly or relinquished together and jointly and never otherwise at any such time so that an incumbent thereof may not selectively relinquish one of them and yet hold or seek to continue holding to the other nor may two different persons at one and the same time or simultaneously hold the two positions separately Le., one position to one of them and the other to the other.

(4) That the SLPP constitution makes no express or specific provision for the substantive independent existence or for any nomination election, selection, choice or identification (as the case may be) of a leader of the SLPP as such at any time when the said party is either not in power or not providing the incumbent president of Sierra Leone or when a national presidential election is not immediately due to be held.

(3) A declaration to the effect that, in the following party and national constitution and other legislative provisions respectively among others to wit:

a. clause IV(a)(1) IV(b)(5) and (c) and (i) Clause II(4) (c) as aforesaid and X of the SLPP constitution

b. sections 6 (14)(1) 24, 27 and 29 of the political parties Act No. 3 of 2002 and

c. sections 35(2) and (4) 42(1), 43 a and (h) 46(1) 49 (4) 76(1)(h) and 171(15) of the national constitution.

[p.315]

Then in view thereof the following conclusions are or would be each by itself, within the spirit intendment contemplation and indeed inescapable force and effect of the said provisions respectively viz:

(1) That at the date of filing the application herein there are or were at least two or three regularly annual meetings and unspecified number of possible special or other meetings of the party conference of the SLPP still to be held before the presidential and parliamentary election of 2007 are or were due to be held to within the party conference of the years 2005, 2006 and possibly 2007 and any other special or other meetings of the party conference as may be determined by the national executive committee.

(2) That without any prejudice whatsoever to the holding of the party conference (as such) stated for 19-20 August 2005 or at all otherwise in 2005 the nomination, election, selection, choice or identification as the case may be whether attempted or purported of a presidential nominee and/or leader of the SLPP at the said party conference that is to say almost two years before the presidential and parliamentary elections of 2007 are due to be held has or would have lead or would lead to the following interpretive consequences and/or conclusions viz:

i. It is and will itself be grossly premature and incomportant with democratic principles for being inconsistent with and in contravention of the provision of sections 35(2) and 43(a) and (b) of the national constitution and accordingly void and of no effect.

ii It is and in practice be grossly unfair to certain individuals, members of the party and predijucial to their interests vis-à-vis the presidency and even to the wider related interest of the party itself and the nation at large in that:

a. It does and will tend to operate to prematurely preclude, exclude certain potential aspirant to that or those position(s) who for reasons of present untimeliness or prematurely: or otherwise may not yet as at 19-20 August 2005 or any other time have indicated their intention or aspirations in respect thereof, but may be likely or at the due and proper time in 2006-2007 to make such intention or aspiration publicly known at the appropriate time.

b. It is and will be likely to deprive the SLPP itself as a democratic national party of a possible better quality or more popular presidential candidate who however for reasons at of present untimeliness or prematurely or otherwise may not yet as at 19-20 August 2005 or at any other time in 2005 have indicated his/her intentions or aspirations in respect thereof but may wish as at due and [p.316] proper time in 2006 or 2007 to make such intention or aspirations known at the appropriate time and it is also likely to deprive the said party of a fairer and more informed choice of presidential nominee or candidate, thereby putting the SLPP at a possible electoral disadvantage vis-à-vis the presidential candidates of other political parties and thus a risk of losing the presidential elections of 2007 against the said other parties.

c. It is and will be likely to deprive the entire nation itself and the people of Sierra Leone as a whole of a possible better quality presidential candidate and potential ultimate president of Sierra Leone who however for reasons of present untimeliness or prematurity or otherwise may not yet as at 19-20 August 2005 or at any other time in 2005 have indicated his/her intentions or aspirations in respect thereof but may wish at the due and proper time in 2006 or 2007 to make such intentions or aspirations publicly known at the appropriate time with all the possible attendant risk of prejudice arising from an inept choice due to the said gross prematurely to the prospect of good governance, peace and positive national economic and other development during the five to ten years following the next presidential election.

iii. It is or will in any case be tantamount to an amendment to the constitution or attempted/purported amendment of the SLPP constitution and accordingly the consent with and in contravention of the provision of clauses II (4) IV(A)(I) IVB(5)(b) and (c) and (i) and X of the said SLPP constitution and with and of those of sections 24 of the political parties Act 2002 and sections 35(2) and (4) and 76(1)(h) of the national constitution and therefore unlawful void and of no effect.

3. That the position of leader and deputy leader of the SLPP in the manner and to the extent that they have been and/or are being held by specified incumbents respectively over the past ten years or so that is to say since at least 1996 and up till now were and are so held in contravention provisions of sections 35(4) and 76(b) of the national constitution and so as held were or are void and of no effect.

4. That in so far as and to the extent that the current SLPP constitution remains and reads as it stands at the present time and at least up to the present time and at least up to 12 months hence it is unlawful for the said party to nominate, elect, select, choose or otherwise identify as the case may be a leader of the SLPP as such or to attempt/purport to do at any party conference or indeed at any time at all within the next 12 months from the date of filing this application.

(5) That in view especially of the provisions of section 14(1) of the Political Parties Act 2002 and 35(1) and 76(1)(h) of the national constitution a person who is for the time being president, vice, president and minister or deputy minister in the government under the provisions of the national constitution may not and must not be and ought not to be either.

a. leader of the SLPP or (b) a member of the executive body or officers of the SLPP whether national or otherwise, or

b. the National Secretary General of the SLPP

(6) That the position of the National Secretary General of the SLPP in the manner and to the extent it has been or is being held by a minister of government to wit the 2nd defendant herein over the past three years or so that is to say due around June 2002 and up till now was and is so held in contravention of the provisions in section 14(1) of the Political Parties Act 2002 and Sections 35(4) and 76(1)(h) of the National Constitution and so as held was and is void and of no effect since at least June 2002 up till now.

(7) That in consequences of all the provisions and conclusions cited and recited in the current declaratory reliefs and its forgoing sub items 3-6 inclusive herein the SLPP as a party is dangerously left open and exposed to a present risk of disqualification and disestablishment applications to· the Supreme Court on the one hand by the relevant commission for an order to cancel the party and on the other hand by the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice-after such cancellation for an order to wind up and dissolve the SLPP pursuant respectively to Section 27 and 29 of the Political Party Act 2002.

(4) A declaration to the effect that the following provisions of the SLPP constitution in so far as the respective aspects thereof as here indicated herein are concerned and to the respective extent thereof to wit.

a. V(2)(c) thereof in so far as the stipulation shall automatically become the leader of the party after such nomination and shall be the political head of the party and are concerned and to the extent thereof

b. clause V(1)(c) and (d) thereof in so far as the mentioning of "leader" and deputy leader therein respectively are concerned and to the extent thereof.

c. clause V(2)(d) thereof its entirety and

d. clause VI(f) thereof in so far as the stipulations shall cease to be leader and deputy leader respectively" is concern and to the extent thereof

Each and everyone of the inconsistent and in controventive of the [p.318] provision of 14(1) of the Political Parties Act 2002 and Sections 35(4) and 76(1)(h) of the National Constitution and that the said inconsistent provisions to the extent of the said inconsistency in each case as specified herein null and void.

(5) A permanent injunction restraining the 1st and 2nd defendants (in their personal and official party capacities alike) and the 3rd defendant herein their servant, agents and privies and in the case of the 3rd defendant in all its emanation and manifestation as organs, institution, officers and members thereof from nominating, electing, selecting, choosing or identifying as the case may be a presidential nominee and/or leader of the SLPP in any shape or form or name or guise or attempting/purporting so to do or encouraging or causing or countenancing or shepherding or partaking or the doing of such thing at the party conference stated for 19-20 August 2005 or at all otherwise in 2005 but otherwise without prejudice whatsoever to the holding of the said party conference as such.

As regards the first declaration, both sides agreed that Ex 2 is the authentic document applicable to the SLPP. As regards the rest of the declaration, on a close scrutiny it is obvious that they revolve around the contravention of the Political Parties Act 2002 and the National Constitution 1991 in particular sections 6 and 14(1) of the Political Parties Act and Sections 34, 35(2) and (4) 42(1) 43, 46 and 76(1)(h) of the National Constitution by the SLPP Constitution.

Argument

I shall briefly state the argument and submission of the plaintiff on the 1st declaration refers to Sections 35 and 76(1)(h) and submitted that the combined affect of these two Sections is that anybody who is president, vice president, minister or deputy minister in government is barred from holding the position as leader of the SLPP. Reference was also made to the Political Parties Act 2002.

That the Supreme Court is the only court which has the jurisdiction to hear and determine the issue. In this connection he refers to Section 124(1) (a) 127 and 171(15) of the National Constitution.

On the 3rd declaration learned counsel for the plaintiff submitted that it is premature to elect a leader in 2005 when the contemplated period of vacancy is sometime in 2007. If the election is held in 2005 he will bowl out aspirant.

On the 4th declaration learned counsel submitted that certain clauses of the SLPP Constitution pertaining to the leader and deputy leader are inconsistent with Sections 14(1) of the Political Parties Act 2002 and Sections 35(4) and 76(1)(h) of the National Constitution. Therefore the clauses are null and void and of no effect.

[p.319]

On the issues of jurisdiction and locus standi, Dr. Jabbie submitted that the plaintiff did not sue in a representative capacity and further said that his case is built around the modem concept of locus standi on constitutional issues and submitted that the modem concept of locus standi was legislated for the first time in Sierra Leone in Section 127 of the National Constitution.

Finally he submitted that the issues raised are matters of public political interest as expressed by the National Constitution and the Political Parties Act 2002.

Mr. E.A. Holloway learned counsel for the defendants in reply submitted that the Supreme Court lacks the jurisdiction to hear and determine the matter under, Section 124 of the National Constitution 1991 or any other Sections of the constitution as the matters raised do not relate to the (a) enforcement of any provision of the constitution (b) to question as to whether an enactment was made in excess of the powers conferred by parliament or any other authority.

The contravention of Section 34, 35 of the National Constitution and Sections 6 and 14 of the Political Parties Act 2002 by the SLPP Constitution cannot be the subject of a declaration under Section 127 of the National Constitution.

On the issue of lack of locus standi by the plaintiff, Mr. Holloway submitted that the plaintiff cannot rely on Sections 124, 127 and 171(15) to vest the Supreme Court with jurisdiction to hear and determine the matter.

He further submitted that according to Section 27 of the Political Parties Act 2002 only the political party commission can apply to the Supreme Court.

I think at this stage it is pertinent for me to say that usually (though not imperative) the related issues of lack of jurisdiction and locus standi are raised at the earliest opportunity by way of an objection to the proceedings. If it is raised at the earliest opportunity the court should not proceed to hear the matter on its merit see Macfoy v UAC 1961 AER 1169. In this case however the defendants made these issues answers to the plaintiff case, which necessitated a full blown argument by the plaintiff of his case.

In this connection, therefore it left the door open for me to consider the plaintiff case on its merit

Having said this, I shall start with the issue of jurisdiction and say the question raised by this action is whether the Supreme Court has jurisdiction to grant the declaration prayed for in the plaintiff originating notice of motion. Dr. Jabbie's contention is that the Supreme Court has. Mr. Halloway on the other hand submitted that the Supreme Court does not.

[p.320]

Jurisdiction

Jurisdiction, with reference to a country's judicial system, simply means the authority which a court has within that system to decide on matters litigated before it. It is usually conferred by the constitution of that country or statute. Therefore if a constitution of a country states that the court has no jurisdiction in certain matters it is impossible for the court to assume jurisdiction on such matters see Ohene More v Akassa Taye 2 WACA 43. But when jurisdiction is given or assumed, the court must deal with factual or real question.

In this connection I recall the words of Lord Summer in Russian Commercial and Industrial Bank v British Bank 1921 AC 438. He said inter alia at page 452:

"The question must be real not theoretical. The person raising it must have a real interest to raise it and must be able to secure a proper opponent i.e., someone presently existing who has the true interest to oppose the declaration sought"

On a close scrutiny of the above dicta the necessary criteria for a court to assume jurisdiction on any matter are:

i. there must be a real or factual question to be determined

ii. the person raising the question must have interest in the question

ii. he must also secure an opponent i.e., someone with interest in the question i.e., declaration

There is also the point of exclusion or ouster of jurisdiction. This is the removal from the court of its power to hear and determine the issue. In some jurisdiction, the exclusion clause is incorporated in the constitution of the country for example Section 94(2) of constitution forbids any act done under the rules of parliamentary procedure "shall not be inquired into by any court". In some case the jurisdiction of the court is excluded by statute or by decree. See Anisminic v Foreign Compensation Commission 1969 AC 147. Din v Attorney General of the Federation of Nigeria 1988 4 NWLR 147 a case dealing with the forfeiture of asset by the Federal Military Government. The Supreme Court held that the powers exercised by the Federal Military Government of Nigeria are not changeable.

However where a constitution or statute seeks to exclude the jurisdiction of the courts to determine certain matters it must do so in clear and unambiguous words. See Section 94(2) of the Sierra Leone Constitution Supra. Also in this connection, I shall reach the words of Viscount Simmonds in the House of lords case of Pyx Granite Co Ltd v. Ministry of Housing and local Government and Others 1960 AC P. 200, referring to the jurisdiction of a court, he said:

"It is a principle not by any means to be whitted down that the subjects recourse to her Majesty's court for the determination of his right not to be excluded except by clear words that is a fundamental rule from which I would not for my part sanction any departure"

[p.321]

I am persuaded by the above dicta and I shall adopt the principle in this case. With this principle in mind I shall now proceed to consider the issue raised.

Briefly put, the plaintiffs complaint is the contravention of Section 35(2) (4), 43 and 76(1)(h) of the National Constitution and Section 6 and 14 of the Political Parties Act 2002 by some clauses of the SLPP constitution.

I shall here under reproduce the provisions in the national constitution:

Section 35:

(2) States:

The internal organization of a political party shall conform to the democratic principles and its aims and objective purposes and programmes shall not contravene or be inconsistent with any provision of this constitution.

(4) States:

No political party shall have as a leader a person who is not qualified to be elected as a member of parliament.

Section 76:

(1) No person shall be qualified for election as a member of Parliament.

(h) If he is for the time being the President, the Vice-President a Minister, Deputy Minister under the provision of this constitution.

Section 6: Of the Political Parties Act 2002 relate to the function of the political parties commission and section 11(1) & (2) deals with the registration of political parties and what should accompany such registration. Section 14 (1) deals with the qualification of the founding member, leader of the party or member of the executive body. They must be qualified to be elected as members of parliament

The offending clauses of the SLPP Constitution 1995 are IV(3)(1) which deals with the agenda which include nomination of candidate for the Presidential Election by the party conference. VI(c) and (d) states who the national officers of the party should be included. The Leader (Presidential Nominee) and the Deputy Leader Vice Presidential Nominee) V(2) (c) and (d) relate to the determination of the Presidential nominee at party conference who shall automatically become leader of the party and his choice of the vice presidential nominee who shall become the deputy leader in consultation with National Executive Council. VI(b) deals with the national executive council's responsibility to ensure that the Party Conference nominate a candidate for the presidential election. As a result of these infractions, the, plaintiff has invoked the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under sections 122, 124 (1) (a), 127 and 171 (15) of the national constitution to ventilate his grievance by seeking the several declarations and a permanent injunction in his originating notice motion.

[p.322]

I shall now go on to ascertain whether this court has jurisdiction to entertain the originating notice of motion under the several provisions of the constitution referred to. I shall start with Section 122(1) of the National Constitution.

Section 122(1) states:—

"The supreme court shall be the final court of appeal in and for Sierra Leone and shall have such appellate and other jurisdiction (emphasis mine) as may be conferred upon it by this constitution or any other law"

I shall also refer to section 170(1) of the constitution — chapter XII

The laws of Sierra Leone:

It states:

The laws of Sierra Leone shall comprise:—

(a) The constitution

(b) Laws made by under the authority of Parliament as established by this constitution

(c) Any orders, rules regulation and other statutory instrument made by any person or authority pursuant to a power conferred in that behalf by this constitution or any other law

(d) The existing law

(e) The common law

Reading these two provisions together it seems to be that Section 122(1) merely tells us that jurisdiction can only be conferred by the constitution and any other law within the context of Section 170 examples Sections 124, 127 and 28 of the constitution, see 27(1) of the Political Parties act 2002. In my humble opinion Section 122 does confer original jurisdiction on this Supreme Count.

I now move on to Section 127 of the Constitution.

Sub Section 1 states:

"A person who alleges that an enactment or anything contained in or done under the authority of that or any other enactment is inconsistent with or is in contravention of a provision of this constitution may at any time bring an action in the Supreme Court for declaration. "

The question here is whether the plaintiff can come for a declaration when he is not challenging the validity of an act.

The section is clear the act done must be under an enactment or under the authority of an enactment. In this regard I refer to chapter XIII of the constitution in particular see 171(1).

[p.323]

This section defines "law" to include "any instrument having the force of law made in exercise of a power conferred by law". It also gives the meaning of "statutory instrument" as any proclamation, regulation, order, rule or other instrument (not being an act of Parliament) having the force of law. I am sure it was this sort of legislation the drafters of the national constitution had in mind, when they framed Section 127 of the constitution in the way they did i.e. to accommodate subsidiary and delegated legislation.

Dr. Jabbie however submitted that this provision can be extended to include the SLPP Constitution. I profoundly disagree. If this court were to do this it will be acting as a legislature. In this regard I shall here recall the words of Livesey Luke C.J. deceased in Chanrai vs. Co. Ltd. v Palmer 1970 -71 ALR SL 391 at 405 he said inter alia:

"In my judgment if the words used in a statute are plan and unambiguous the court is bound to construe them in their ordinary sense having regard the context"

I shall adopt this dicta and say this court cannot interfere by way of extending the provision of Section 127 to include the SLPP constitution. Worst still if the court were to interfere in the manner suggested by Dr. Jabbie it will certainly be an infraction of Section 127 of the national constitution the very reason why Dr. Jabbie is here.

In the result I hold that Section 127 does not confer original jurisdiction on the Supreme Court.

Dr. Jabbie also invoked Section 171(15) to confer jurisdiction on the Supreme Court.

Section 171 (15) states:

"This constitution shall be the supreme law of Sierra Leone and any other law found inconsistent with any provision of the constitution shall be to the extent of the inconsistency void and of no effect"

The short but important point here is that the constitution of Sierra Leone Act N. 6 of 1991 is the grundnorm of Sierra Leone in other words it is the fundamental law of the land and Section 171(15) being a substantive enactment gives fillip to the constitution by emphasizing that the constitution is the supreme law of the land.

With respect this provision does not confer original jurisdiction on the Supreme Court.

I now come to Section 124 of the national constitution.

Section 24(1) states:

"The Supreme Court save as otherwise provided in Section 122 of the constitution have original jurisdiction to the exclusion of all other court.

(a) in all matters relating to the enforcement or interpretation of any provision of this constitution

[p.324]

(b) any question arises whether an enactment was made in excess of the power conferred upon parliament or any other authority or person by law or under this constitution.

No doubt this provision gives exclusive original jurisdiction the Supreme Court on all matters relating to the enforcement and interpretation of the constitution and questions as to whether parliament, any other authority or person when making an enactment has exceeded his powers.

My brother the learned Chief Justice has exhaustively dealt with this provision in the leading judgment. It only left for me to say that Dr. Jabbie's complaint with regard to the contravention of Section 35(2 & 4) the internal organ of the political party shall conform to the democratic principles and its aim etc. shall not contravene or be in consistent with any provision of the constitution. A person who is not qualified to be elected a member of parliament cannot be a leader of a political party.

Section 76(2) — the president, vice president and minister and deputy minister are not qualified to be members of parliament.

These are matters which can be eminently taken under the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court pursuant to Section 124 of the constitution.

I shall now go on to the next big issue i.e., the locus standi of the plaintiff.

Locus standi or legal capacity

Earlier on when I reviewed the argument of Dr. Jabbie and Mr. Halloway, I stated the two contending positions on this issue. Locus standi simply means standing or the legal capacity of a person to institute an action court. In this case that person is the plaintiff, Samuel Hinga Norman. At page 7 of his original notice of motion, he tells us in what capacity he brings this action and I quote;

"The plaintiff/applicant brings the action/application as a law abiding citizen of Sierra Leone and member of the SLPP who aspires to be presidential candidate for the SLPP at the 2007 presidential election but who is keenly concern that the pristine democratic credential and the processes of the SLPP are maintained, enhanced and facilitated in all the internal structure, organization, operation, programmes, activities and functions and they are always consistently complaint with the valid and lawful provision not only of his own party constitution, rules, regulations, standing order but also of the Political Parties Act 2002, national constitution and any other laws relevant and pertinent thereto and that they are always consistently compliant with the valid and lawful provisions not only its own Party Constitution Rules Regulations standing orders, but also of the Political Parties Act 2002 National constitution and any other laws relevant and pertinent there of.

It is clear from this expose that the plaintiff brought this action in his personal capacity he should now demonstrate to us that he has the legal capacity to institute the action in other words he has the interest in the outcome of the action. This interest I dare say has ranged [p.325] from personal, sufficient, to public interest. In Senator Abraham Ade Adesanya v the President of Nigeria 1981 2 NWLR. It was stated that the interest must be personal. On the other hand, the Ghana Supreme Court adopted a different approach and in the case of Sam V. Attorney General of Ghana GLR. 300 Atuguba JSC said.

"As the plaintiff is a citizen of Ghana , suffices to enable him bring the personal action and I need not consider the question of locus standi in a wider dimension. Once a citizen".

Dr. Jabbie urged the court to adopt the liberal approach and stated that the plaintiff interest is public. In my view, while not agreeing with Dr. Jabbie, I think there should be a dichotomy between private rights on the one hand. and public/constitution right on the other and I opine that when public/constitutional right are involved a liberal approach should be adopted, in view of Section 127 of the National Constitution which vests locus standi on any person irrespective of personal sufficient or public interest if and when there is infraction of the provisions in the National Constitution. In this regard, I am incline to adopt a liberal approach to this question.

The plaintiff is a Sierra Leonean and a fully paid up member of the SLPP. He is. an aspirant for the Presidential election in 2007. In my humble view, I think this is enough to vest the plaintiff with standing and I so hold. However there is this matter of the Political Parties Act 2002, which in my view cannot be treated under the locus standi of the plaintiff. Has he exhausted all his remedies before coming to us? I opine not. The infraction of the SLPP constitution is intertwined with the Political Parties act and the National Constitution and therefore Section 6(2)(d) and Section 27 (1) of the Political Parties 2002 come into play.

Section 6(2)(d) and 87(1)

Section 6(2) (d) states:

"Without prejudice to the generality of sub section the function of the commission when approach by the persons or parties concerned, to mediate any conflict or dispute between or among the leadership of any Political Party or between or among political parties ".

There is no evidence that the plaintiff ever approached the commission either orally, writing or otherwise in accordance with this section, if he had done, it· would have been a different matter.

Again Section 27(1) of the Political Parties Act 2002 states:

Section 27(1)

"Without prejudice to any other penalty prescribed by this Act or any other enactment the commission may apply to the Supreme Court for an order to cancel the registration of the Political Party which has contravened any provision of the constitution or other act".

[p.326]

In whatever circumstance, I do not think that the plaintiff should have bypassed the commission and come straight. He should have exhausted his remedy if only for the record. If the commission failed to act there should be evidence to that effect.

Conclusion

In conclusion, I would like to record certain observation, and that is the national constitution came who operation in 1991, and included in its provision, the promulgation of a political party act. This act only came into effect in 2002, some 11 years after the national constitution. This clearly demonstrates tardiness on the part of those responsible for such matters. I say no more.

Having said this, I shall return to the judgment and say the originating notice of motion ought to be struck out, that is not to say it lacks merit on the contrary on the face of it there are merits in the points raised in the originating notice of motion, but the court did not go into the matter.

In the result the originating notice of motion is struck out.

SGD.

HON MR. JUSTICE M.E. TOLLA-THOMPSON J.S.C.

MURIA J A:

This case turns on two issues, namely whether the Supreme Court has jurisdiction to hear and determine the plaintiff's claims as contained in his Originating Notice of Motion, and secondly, if the Supreme Court has jurisdiction, whether the plaintiff has the locus standi to invoke that jurisdiction. By his Originating Notice of Motion, the plaintiff has sought four declarations and a permanent injunction against the defendants. He brings this action in his personal capacity as a member of SLPP ("the SLPP").

The Background of the Case

The background circumstances to this case are set out in the judgment of His Lordship the Chief Justice. I need not rehearse them here. I need only say that the plaintiff is a fully paid-up member of the SLPP and an aspirant to be nominated a Presidential nominee for the national Presidential Election in 2007. Until March 2003 when he was arrested and detained before the Special Court of Sierra Leone, the plaintiff was a Minister of Internal Affairs in the SLPP — led Government. He is presently standing trial before the Special Court for alleged war crimes. He continues, however, to be a full-pledged member and supporter of the SLPP.

[p.329]

As a result of the planned SLPP Conference which was to be held on the 19-20 August. 2005 to, among other things, choose a Presidential Nominee and/or a Leader of the Party, the plaintiff instituted these proceedings, seeking declaratory and injunctive orders against the defendants. As it will become apparent, these discretionary orders of the Court are dependant on the plaintiff establishing, not only that this court has jurisdiction in the matter, but that he has the standing to invoke the court's jurisdiction. That is the common law position, and one which is applicable to the circumstances of Sierra Leone. I will return to this aspect of the case later in this judgment For now, I turn to the first issue of jurisdiction of the Court.

Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court·

The starting point in ascertaining the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991 ("the National Constitution"). Part II of Chapter VII of the National Constitution sets out the provisions for the establishment and power of the Supreme Court. For our present purpose, section 124 of the National Constitution is directly relevant for our consideration. However, before I turn to that provision, let me first refer to section 122(1) of the National Constitution. That provision states:

"122(1) The Supreme Court shall be the final court of appeal in and for Sierra Leone and shall have such appellate and other jurisdiction as may be conferred upon it by this Constitution or any other law:

Provided that notwithstanding any law to the contrary, the President may refer any Petition in which he has to give a final decision to the Supreme Court for a judicial opinion. (Emphasis is mine).

There are three aspects to this provision. Firstly it expressly states that the Supreme Court is the apex of the Judiciary in Sierra Leone and as such it is the final Court in the land that any person, citizen or non-citizen, can appeal to. Secondly, the provision provides that the Supreme Court shall also have "other jurisdiction" in addition to its appellate jurisdiction conferred on it by the Constitution or any other law. These "other jurisdiction" of the Supreme Court can be found in other provisions of the Constitution, such as Sections 28 (enforcement of protective provisions), 124 (original jurisdiction on the Interpretation of the Constitution), 125 (Supervisory jurisdiction) and 127 (Enforcement of the Constitution). Thirdly, Section 122(1) confers advisory jurisdiction to the Supreme Court which can give a judicial opinion on a matter upon Petition by the President. The provision of such advisory jurisdiction on the court is not unique to Sierra Leone. The Constitution of PNG confers power on the Supreme Court of that country to give advisory opinion. There are jurisdictions whose constitution do not conferred advisory power on the Courts, for example, the US Supreme Court, although invested with judicial review power, can adjudicate only actual cases and disputes: Marbury -v- Madison (1803) 1 Cranch 137 (USSC); Chicago -v- Wellman 12 (US) Supreme Court Reporter 400. See also Baker -v- Carr (1962) 369 US 186.

[p.331]

I briefly mention section 127 of the National Constitution which is also relied upon by the plaintiff. Dr Bu-Buakei Jabbi contended that section 127 contains the Modern Law of Locus Standi. If Counsel's argument here is to buttress his case that under this section, the Supreme Court also has original jurisdiction to hear and determine the plaintiffs claims, then it cannot be accepted. Section 127 does not confer jurisdiction on the court. However, what it does is to give a right or standing on "a person" to bring an action in the Supreme Court to challenge the constitutionality of an Act of Parliament. It will be observed that the right to bring the action is in respect of an allegation that "an enactment or anything done under the authority of that enactment" is inconsistent with or contravenes the National Constitution. This is a Constitutional requirement to be fulfilled by an applicant who seeks to rely on section 127. It is not necessarily a modern version of the test of standing as urged by Counsel.

In the present case the plaintiff is not challenging the validity or constitutionality of an Act of Parliament, rather he is challenging the validity of the provisions of the SLPP Constitution. In this regard, the plaintiff cannot take shelter under section 127 of the National Constitution. In short, section 127 does not apply in the present case.

Counsel sought to persuade this Court to enlarge the meaning of "enactment" in section 127 so as to cover the SLPP Constitution. Political Parties Constitutions do not have the elements or nature of an "enactment." Counsel's contention is clearly untenable and I reject it.

[p.332]

I return to Section 124 of the National Constitution of Sierra Leone which, as I have said earlier, is relevant here. Mr. Halloway, vehemently argued that the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction, original or otherwise, to hear and determine the plaintiffs Originating Notice of Motion in this case. I set out the provisions of section 124 and as it will be clear from the wording of that section, I cannot accede to Counsel's contention. Section 124(1) states:

"124(1) The Supreme Court shall, save as otherwise provided in section 122 of this Constitution, have original jurisdiction, to the exclusion of all other Courts—

(a) in all matters relating to the enforcement or interpretation of any provision of this Constitution; and

(b) where any question arises whether an enactment was made in excess of the power conferred upon Parliament or any other authority or person by law or under this Constitution."

Under this constitutional provision, the Supreme Court has exclusive original jurisdiction "in all matters" relating to the enforcement or interpretation of any provision of the National Constitution. Apart from its strict constitutional jurisdiction in the enforcement or interpretation of any provision of the National Constitution, the Supreme Court is also clothed with an added power under this section. This power is what is commonly described as judicial review jurisdiction" and this is clearly borned out by the language of paragraph (b) of section 124(1). This power is more aptly described as constitutional review since it is exercised within the framework of a written constitution, conferring [p.333] power on the Supreme Court, the highest court of Sierra Leone, to rule legislative enactments invalid or unconstitutional. It is in this sense of the review jurisdiction of the Supreme Court that the expression "judicial review" is used in this judgment.

The other instance where the power of judicial review is manifested is where the courts exercise their power of review in respect of decisions of a judicial nature, of administrative bodies and inferior tribunals as in National Joint Council for Dental Technicians, ex parte Neate [1953], QB 704. We are not concerned with this second aspect of the review power of the courts in the present case.

The plaintiff seeks a number of declarations together with an injunction. The learned Chief Justice has dealt with them in his judgment. I need not go into them here, save to say that I agree with all that his Lordship has said and determined in respect of the orders sought by the plaintiff. Among the relief sought by the plaintiff in his Originating Notice of Motion, are orders to declare that certain provisions of the National Constitution, such as sections 35(2) and (4), 43(a) and (b) and 76(1)(h), had been contravened. These are matters to which section 124(1) of the National Constitution apply. This Court is invested with the power to hear and determine such claims of noncompliance with the National Constitution. The National Constitution of Sierra Leone established the Supreme Court and invested it with the jurisdiction to deal with complaints "in all matters" relating to the enforcement and/or interpretation of the National Constitution, such as those raised by the plaintiff. The Court cannot, therefore, deprive itself of that jurisdiction. The Court has jurisdiction under section 124(1) of the [p.334] National Constitution to hear and determine those matters relating to the enforcement or interpretation of the provision of the National Constitution. Whether or not the Court exercises that jurisdiction, is another matter. It is to that aspect of the case that I now turn.

The Plaintiff's locus standi

The plaintiff's contention is that, he has the standing to invoke the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to hear and determine his claims as set out in his Originating Notice of Motion. The plaintiffs standing, Dr Bu-Buakei Jabbi of Counsel submitted, is based on his claim that he is a fully-paid up member of SLPP, an aspirant Presidential Nominee for 2007 Presidential Elections, and that he is a Law-abiding citizen who is keenly concerned to see that SLPP upheld the democratic principles and processes in its organization and functioning, ensuring compliance with the SLPP Constitution, Political Parties Act 2002 and the National Constitution. Mr. Halloway, on the other hand, submitted that the plaintiff has no locus standi to invoke the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in the present case. Counsel contended that the plaintiff who had already made known that he was an aspirant to be Presidential Nominee at the scheduled SLPP Conference, suffers no disadvantage over and above the other aspirants for the same position, nor did he has any right or interest peculiar to himself which could be said to be threatened by the holding of the said Party Conference and choosing of Presidential Nominee and/or Leader of the Party. Counsel relied on the case of Odhams Press Limited v London and Provincial Sporting News Agency (1929) Limited [1936] 1 All E.R. 217. In my respectful opinion, it is on this question of standing to invoke the jurisdiction of the Court that [p.335] presents the plaintiff with an obstacle which he must overcome. He must establish his standing to sue.

It is sometimes assumed that the Courts' jurisdiction can be invoked in a matter provided such jurisdiction exists. But as Stein pointed out in his work on locus standi; L.A. Stein (ed) Locus Standi (1979)3:

"Although the very existence of Courts as an institutional mechanism for dispute settlement might suggest that anyone could require that an issue be considered by the appropriate court, rules have been enunciated by Courts which confine the right to those persons possessing a certain interest in the issue."

In other words, a person seeking to invoke the power of the court to hear him must show his interest in the matter before the court. The court has no jurisdiction, inherent or otherwise, over any person other than those properly brought before it as parties:

Brydges -v- Brydges and Wood [1909] P 187 CA.

The plaintiff is here seeking to invoke the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court Rules 1982 do not expressly provide in what capacity a person is entitled to seek such relief from the Court. Rule 98, however, provides that in the absence of such rule, the High Court Rules shall apply. We must therefore turn to the High Court Rules.

[p.336]

O.21, r.5, of the High Court Rules permits this Court to make declaratory orders which are properly sought before the Court. The Rule provides;

"No action or proceeding shall be open to objection, on the ground that a mere declaratory judgment or order is sought thereby, and the court may make binding declarations of right whether any consequential relief is or could be claimed or not".

However, a party seeking such orders must still place himself properly before the Court. He must have the legal basis for doing so. See Guaranty Trust Company of New York v Hannay and Company (1915) 2 KB 536.

In the light of the abovementioned rule, what is the appropriate test of locus standi in Sierra Leone? The authorities are varied. They range from the traditional approach to standing which depended on the type of relief sought as found in the cases of Boyce -v- Paddington Borough Council, [1903] 1 Ch. 109; Pynx Granite Co. Ltd -v- Minister of Housing and Local Government [1960] A.C. 260; R -v- Thames Magistrates' Court; Ex parte Greenbaums (1957) 55 LGR 129; R -v- Cotham [1898] 1 QB 802; R -v- Guardians of Lewisham Union [1897] 1 QB 498; R -v- Electricity Commissioners, ex parte London Electricity Joint Committee Co. (1920) Ltd [1924] 1 KB 171 to the new and more liberal approach based on the test of "sufficient interest" as stated in Inland Revenue Commissioners -v- National Federation for the Self-employed and Small Business Ltd [1982] AC. 617 ("the National Federation Case"). Thus prior to 1978 when, in England, the new Rules of the Supreme Court were made, the courts had used different tests of standing in cases of judicial review of the decisions of administrative bodies. These tests [p.337] are framed in various forms such "an aggrieved person" (as in the National Federation case) the term sometime used interchangeably with "an adversely affected person" (as in R -v- Guadians of Lewisham Union), or "a person who suffers or at a risk of suffering particular harm over an above all the rest of the public" (Boyce -v- Paddington Borough Council). The position now contended for by Counsel for the plaintiff in the present case is that this Court ought and should adopt and apply the liberal test of "sufficient interest" which was expressly laid down in O.53 r 3 (7) of English Supreme Court Rules and Section 31 (3) Supreme Court Act 1981 and now widely applied, not only by the English Courts, but by the Courts in other common law jurisdictions.

Long before the new O.53 of English Supreme Court Rules and Supreme Court Act 1981 came into existence in England, in the Australian case of Crouch -v- The Commonwealth (1948) 77 CLR 339 the High Court of Australia held that the claim by the plaintiff that his business was adversely affected by the need to obtain permits under an allegedly invalid law constituted sufficient interest entitling him to sustain the action. Unlike in the present case, the plaintiff in Crouch case challenged the validity of an Act of Parliament, the Defence (Transitional Provisions) Act 1946 which purported to control the disposition of cars by requiring the plaintiff to have permits to buy cars and to sell them only to persons who had permits to purchase cars.

In the Nigerian case of J.S. Olawoyn -v- A.G, Northern Region [1961] 2 SCNLR 5 the Court refused to grant a declaration because the plaintiff had not shown that he had an interest in the subject matter. The Federal Supreme Court of Nigeria dismissed the [p.338] plaintiffs appeal, holding that he had no sufficient interest in the matter to entitle him to seek a declaration from the Court. In the Papua New Guinea case of PNG Air Pilots -v- Director of Civil Aviation [1983] PNGLR 1, the Court found that the applicants had sufficient interest because they had a "real interest" in the matter (based on the PNG Air Pilots Association objectives) which involved economic, contractual and other interests affecting their livelihood and day to day working lives.

In the present case, if this Court were to accept the liberal approach to the test of standing urged upon it by Dr Bu-Buakei Jabbi, the plaintiff must show, not only that he has a sufficient interest in the matter that he brings to the court, but that this liberal test of "sufficient interest" is the appropriate test to be adopted in Sierra Leone when invoking the Court's power under Section 124(1) of the National Constitution. No case decided by our Courts here had been cited by Counsel on this issue. However, when looking at the cases on the test of standing from other jurisdictions, it is clear that the position is not uniform. Thus, the Courts in Sierra Leone, in particular, the Supreme Court, will have to decide the path to follow on the standing of a party who seeks to invoke the review jurisdiction of the Court in Constitutional, as well as in administrative law disputes. The Court must do so based on legal grounds. My searches in the National Constitution, Statutes and Rules of Courts have not shown any express legislative formula in this jurisdiction for the liberal approach to standing as urged by Counsel.

Apart from the clear limited test to invoke the Courts jurisdiction under section 28 of the National Constitution, where an alleged contravention of the protective provisions of [p.339] the National Constitution "has been, is being or is likely to be in relation to him" (applicant), and the specific conferring of standing on the President under section 122(1) also of the National Constitution, the only other provision that is suggestive of standing is section 127(1). However, the application of section 127(1) is limited to challenging the validity or constitutionality of an enactment or things done under such enactment. The allegations raised by the plaintiff in the present case do not come within the bounds of section 127(1). It is therefore difficult to see the basis for the liberal approach to the test of standing as urged by Counsel.

Having said that, and in view of the nature of the complaints raised by the plaintiff in his originating Notice of Motion, the general tenor as to the approach to be taken by the Courts in Sierra Leone in such a case is one where the applicant must show that he has an interest in the subject matter before the court. That interest must be one that is personal to himself, and one in which he has been adversely affected by the actions complained of. A general interest which the applicant possesses, as in the present case, in common with all members of the public or in common with other members of a section of the community cannot confer standing on him.

The position is similarly found in Nigeria, as expressed in Senator Adesanya -v- President of Nigeria [1981] 2 NCLR 358; in the United States of America, in Massachusetts -v- Melon (1923) 262 US 447; and in India, in Dwarkadas -v- Sholapur Spinning Co. (1954) S.C.A 132, and A.I.R. (1954) S.C. 119; and Charanjit Lal -v- Union of India, A.I.R. (1951) S.C. 41. In another American case of Ex parte Levitt, 302 [p.340] US 633, the Court held that a citizen, though a member of the bar of the Supreme Court of the United States, had no standing to challenge the validity of an appointment of a Justice to the Supreme Court of the United States.

I come to this conclusion having regard to the provisions of the National Constitution and Rules of, both the Supreme Court and High Court, and in the absence of any express legislative formula in support of a liberal approach to standing in Sierra Leone. In this regard, I joined Bello JSC in his cautionary stand on this question when he said Senator Adesanya -v- President of Nigeria, at 381:

"I prefer to be on the side of caution and consequently, in my view, the question of standing ought to be decided on the very narrow compass it has been canvassed before us. I endorse the method of gradual approach in constitutional matters so that each case will be decided on its particular facts and circumstances and after the issues involved have been ventilated by the parties to their disputes".

Further, I do not loose sight of the fact that in this case the plaintiff has come to this court in his own private capacity as a member of the SLPP seeking the various declaratory orders and an injunctive order against the defendants. It is therefore all the more incumbent on him to satisfy the Court that he has a justiciable interest which may be affected by the action of the defendants in holding the planned Party Conference and conducting the businesses of the Party during that conference or that he will suffer injury [p.341] or damage as a result of the defendants' action. Of course, whether the plaintiff has sufficient justiciable interest or has suffered damage or injury as a result of the action of the defendants depends on the facts and circumstances of the case. See Bengal Immunity Co. -v- State of Bihar (1965) 2 SCR 602; Frothingham -v- Mellon (1925) 262 US 447.

In the case now before us, the plaintiff is a fully paid-up member of the SLPP. He has made known to the Party that he is an aspirant to be Presidential Nominee and/or a Leader of the Party. He comes to this court in his personal capacity to seek the various declarations and an injunction against the defendants. What legal or equitable rights or justiciable interest does he have or suffer as a consequence of the defendants' action to entitle him to invoke the original jurisdiction of this court in the matter now before the Court? In my judgment and in the light of the authorities discussed in this judgment, the plaintiff does not have any right, legal or equitable, nor any justiciable interest to be protected so as to entitle him to the orders, declaratory or injunctive, which he seeks against the defendants. He therefore has no standing in the circumstances of the present case to invoke the jurisdiction of this Court under Section 124(1) of the National Constitution.

In passing I simply wish to add that when sections 34 and 35 of the National Constitution are read together with sections 6 and 27 of the Political Parties Act 2002, it should become obvious to the plaintiff as to the proper procedure of invoking the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court if he wishes to ensure that the SLPP which is a Party registered under the Political Parties Act and of which he is a member, does not contravene the provisions [p.342] of the National Constitution. I say no more. The learned Chief Justice has dealt with this aspect in his judgment with which I entirely agree. I wish only to add that one of the fundamental rules in administrative law in relation to judicial review is the question as to whether the applicant has exhausted other remedies provided by law. Generally, the judicial review jurisdiction will not be exercised if other remedies available have not been exhausted. See R -v- Epping & Harlow General Commissioners; Ex parte Goldstraw [1983] 3 ALL ER 257. The provisions of the Political Parties Act mentioned above, in my view, provide an aggrieved person such as the plaintiff, with the statutory machinery to deal with his complaints against the defendants over the organization, operation, functioning or conduct of the SLPP under its Constitution. The plaintiff has not done that in this case. Further, there was no suggestion that the available alternative administrative remedy under the provision of the Political Parties Act was inadequate nor was it dispositive. It may well be viewed as an abuse of process to allow the plaintiff to first exhaust judicial remedies and then revert to explore the alternative administrative remedy. This is a factor also relevant to the exercise of the Court's discretion.

Thus even if I were to find that he has standing to come to this court, I would have refused the orders he sought in the exercise of the Court's discretion under the doctrine of Exhaustion.

In the light of all that I have said, I hold that the Supreme Court has jurisdiction to hear and determine the plaintiff's claims in so far as they relate to the alleged contravention of the provisions of the National Constitution. However, the plaintiff has no standing to [p.343] invoke that jurisdiction in the circumstances of the present case. Consequently, the originating Notice of Motion must be struck out.

I agree to the orders proposed by the learned Chief Justice.

SIR JOHN MURA, JA.

[p.344-345]

KAMANDA JA:

In light of all that has been said before me, and in the interest of time, mine must of necessity be a short judgment. My Lords, I have had the advantage of reading in draft the judgments of the Learned Chief Justice, Hon. Dr. A.R.D. Renner-Thomas, and those of the other Hon. Justices of this Court. In view of the exhaustive analysis of the law and facts by the Hon. Chief Justice, with whom I agree, there is not much I can usefully add without running the risk of being repetitious. I, nonetheless crave indulgence to add a few words of my own.

[p.346]

The Plaintiff has come to this Court on two grounds: firstly, seeking an interim injunction restraining the 1st 2nd and 3rd Defendants from nominating, electing, selecting, choosing or identifying a Presidential Nominee and/or Leader of the Sierra Leone Peoples Party (SLPP) at their party convention scheduled for 19th to 20th August, 2005 pending the determination of a suit instituted through an originating notice of motion.

Secondly, the plaintiff by the said originating notice of motion is seeking relief in the form of Declarations to be made by this court on a number of issues, and an injunction in the terms I have referred to above. The matter of the said interim injunction has been mutually settled through the provision of an undertaking and cross-undertaking by the Defendants and the Plaintiffs respectively.

On the substantive matter instituted through the originating notice of motion, the Plaintiff has relied on several provisions of (i) the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991, (ii) The Political Parties Act No. 3 of 2002, (iii) The Constitution of the Sierra Leone People's Party. He has also cited case law and a number of text book authorities. All of these have been forcefully canvassed with great erudition and meticulous detail by Dr. Bu-Buakei Jabbie on behalf of the Plaintiff.

[p.347]

In my judgment, the subject matter of this action hinges on the answers to the following questions:

1. Does the Plaintiff have locus standi (or 'standing') in instituting this action before this court in its original jurisdiction?

2. Does this court have original jurisdiction to entertain the plaintiffs action?

It should be pointed out that the entire case of the Defendants is built on two limbs:

1. That the Plaintiff has no standing to institute this action, and

2. That this court lacks original jurisdiction in entertaining this action, and cannot therefore grant the reliefs sought by the Plaintiff.

For the reasons given by the Hon. Chief Justice regarding how the issue of standing and jurisdiction apply to each relief, it has not been necessary for me to delve into the merits of the plaintiff's case.

I will accordingly, and in agreement with the Hon. Chief Justice and other Hon.

Members of this court, strike out the originating notice of motion.

SGD.

JUDGMENT

JOKO SMART, J.S.C.

I have had the advantage of reading the draft judgment of Warne J.S.C and I agree with his conclusion. However, bearing in mind the nature of the case and a difference of approach, I deem it fit to put in a few comments of my own.

The Plaintiff was elected a Member of Parliament for the Peoples Democratic Party in a Parliamentary General Election held in February 1996. He was sworn in as a Member of Parliament on 2 April 1996. On 8 April 1996, he was nominated by his Excellency the President for appointment as a Minister of Development and Economic Planning. Section 56(2)(c) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991(the Constitution) requires the nomination to be approved by Parliament. At a preliminary meeting of the Parliamentary Committee responsible for the interview of Ministerial nominees, it was decided, among other things, that the Plaintiff should furnish to the Committee at its substantive meeting on 10 April 1996, a letter of his resignation from Parliament. He was informed of this decision by the Clerk of Parliament. Accordingly, the Plaintiff wrote the letter of resignation as follows:—

"The Hon. Speaker of Parliament 10th April 96

Parliament Building

Tower Hill

Freetown.

Dear Mr. Speaker,

Following the announcement of my nomination by His Excellency the President as Minister of Planning & Economic Development and in compliance with the Provisions of the Constitution, I hereby tender my resignation from parliament as a Member of Parliament with immediate effect.

With sentiments of highest esteem.

Yours faithfully,

Hon. S. G. Bangura"

The Committee interviewed the Plaintiff on 11 April 1996 and did not recommend his approval to the full Parliament. Consequently, Parliament did nod not approve his nomination as required by section 56(2)(c) of the Constitution.

On 11 November 1996, the Plaintiff filed an originating Notice of Motion seeking the following reliefs pursuant to section 124(1) of the Constitution, namely:

1. For the following questions to be determined:—

(a) Whether upon the proper interpretation of section 56 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991 the resignation of a member of Parliament from that body is a condition precedent to the consideration of his nomination for appointment as a Minister pursuant to the said section 56.

(b) Whether the Plaintiff/ Applicant is required under the provisions of section 56 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991 or any other law to resign from his seat in Parliament before his nomination for appointment as a minister could be considered for approval by Parliament

2. The Plaintiff further seeks the following declarations:—

(a) That upon the proper interpretation of section 56 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991, the resignation of a member of Parliament from that body is not a condition precedent to the consideration of his nomination for appointment as a Minister pursuant to the said section 56.

[p.40]

(b) That upon the proper interpretation of section 56 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991 the Plaintiff was not obliged to resign his seat in Parliament before his nomination for appointment as Minister of Development and Economic Planning could have been considered for approval by Parliament.

The real questions for determination in this application are (1) whether “nomination” and “appointment” as used in section 56 of the Constitution have the same or different meanings. (2) whether a member of Parliament's resignation of his Parliamentary seat is a condition precedent to the consideration of the Member's approval by Parliament. (3) What is the stage at which a Member of Parliament who is considered for a Ministerial position should resign his/her seat in compliance with the Constitution.(4) What is the effect of the Plaintiffs resignation on 10 April 1996.

To answer these issues it is necessary to look at the relevant provisions of the Constitution.

Section 56(1) reads:

“There shall be in addition to the office of Vice-President such other offices of Ministers and deputy Ministers as may be established by the President

Provided that no Member of Parliament shall be appointed a Minister or Deputy Minister.”

Section 56(2)(c) states:

“A person shall not be appointed a Minister or Deputy Minister unless - his nomination is approved by Parliament.”

Section 77(1)(j) provides:-

“A Member of Parliament shall vacate his seat in Parliament – if he resigns from office as a Member of Parliament by writing under his hand addressed to the Speaker, or if the office of Speaker is vacant or the Speaker is absent from Sierra Leone, to the Deputy Speaker."

Section 94(2) stipulates:—

“Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in this Constitution or in any other law contained, no decision, order or direction of Parliament or any of its Committees or the speaker relating to the rules of procedure of Parliament, or to the application or interpretation of such rules, or any act done by Parliament or by the Speaker under any rules of procedure, shall be inquired into by any court.”

[p.41]

Let me first dispose of the proviso of section 56(1). It can have only one interpretation which is that a Member of Parliament must resign his seat before he can be appointed as a Minister or Deputy Minister. What the proviso contemplates is that a member of Parliament cannot retain his seat and accept an appointment as Minister or Deputy Minister but not a taking away of the right to serve his country in the Executive arm of government. Prior to the 1991 Constitution, Ministers and Deputy Ministers were appointed from Members of Parliament and they served in the dual capacity as members of the Executive and the Legislature. To ensure that there is complete separation of powers, the 1991 Constitution now requires a Member of Parliament to vacate his seat before he can be appointed to the Executive arm of Government.

Question 1.

Mr. Metzger argues strenuously that “nomination” and “appointment” as used in section 56 must be given the ordinary and popular meanings; accordingly the two words cannot be synonymous and are different. He refers to dictionary meanings of the terms. I have carefully looked at some of these dictionary meanings and have not found them helpful in resolving the difference as they seem to show that the two words are synonymous. Webster' s Dictionary defines nomination as “an act of appointing to an office” . The American College Dictionary says that nomination is “an act of appointing”. The Readers Digest Universal Dictionary defines the verb “nominate” as “designate or appoint to an office”. In my considered view, nomination for a position is only a proposal for that position whereas an appointment to it is an offer of the position to the nominee and an acceptance of it by him with or without other formalities as the case may be. In this respect, the two words are different.

Having said this, I agree with Counsel for the Plaintiff that nomination and appointment must be given their ordinary and popular meaning but with the proviso that the meaning is clear and precise. This is a well known canon of construction of statutes. But as is pointed out by Sowa C.J. in the Ghanaian case of Tuffor v.A.G [1980] GLR. 637 at 647-648,

“A written Constitution such as ours is not an ordinary Act of Parliament.

The Constitution has its letter of law. Equally, the Constitution has its spirit. Its language, therefore, must be considered as if it were a living organism capable of growth and development. A broad and liberal spirit is required for its interpretation. It does not admit of a narrow interpretation. A doctrinaire approach would not do. We must take account of its principles and bring that consideration to bear, in bringing it into conformity with the needs of the time.”

Indeed, it was the spirit and intendment of the 1991 Constitution to break away from the past and make the appointment of Ministers and Deputy Ministers a [p.42] bipartite process between the President and Parliament. The President nominates; the nomination is approved by Parliament after which the President appoints. I think that if the framers of the Constitution had contemplated the difficulty which nomination and appointment as used in section 56 would cause they would probably have used such adjective like “effective” before “appointment” and I so hold. In doing so, I am bound to construe section 56(1) ex visceribus actus with section 77(1) (j).

I am fortified in this conclusion by the judgment of Megaw J. in Tradax S.v. Volskwagenwerk [1969] 2 All E.R 144. This was a case of arbitration. The simple facts are as follows:— According to a clause in a charterparty between the parties, the plaintiffs were to appoint their arbitrator within three months of final discharge of their cargo. The final discharge took place on 15 December 1963. The defendants contended that the Plaintiff's claim was statute-barred since they had not appointed their arbitrator before 15 March 1964. On 27 January 1964, the Plaintiffs, had by telex informed the defendants that they were nominating Mr. Chesterman as their arbitrator. Mr. Chesterman learnt of his nomination from one Clyde nominated by the defendants. On 24 July 1964 the Plaintiffs wrote to Chesterman "we have taken the liberty of appointing you as our arbitrator". On 14 August 1964 Mr. Chesterman wrote back to the Plaintiffs saying "I thank you for your letter of the 24th July, and am pleased to accept appointment as your arbitrator". The issue was whether there was an appointment of Mr. Chesterman before 15 March 1964 or only on 24 July 1964. This was how Megaw J. resolved the question:—

"The word "appoint" has many different meanings in different contexts. In the context of this Controcon arbitration clause, I am satisfied that "appointed connotes "effectively appointed". A mere nomination, unknown to the appointee, is not an appointment of him. It does not become an "appointment" merely by being communicated to the other side. It becomes an "appointment" of him as arbitrator only when he is effectively in the position of an arbitrator, clothed with the duties and authority of such. That stage of effective appointment is not reached before he has been told that it is desired to appoint him in a particular matter and he has indicated his willingness to act in that matter."

There is no gainsaying the fact that the appointment of a Minister becomes effective only when he subscribes to the oath of office.

Question 2.

Mr. Farmah, Counsel for the Defendant, submits that resignation is a condition precedent before a Member of Parliament who has been nominated for a ministerial position can appear before the Parliamentary Committee for Approval. He argues that if the Member of Parliament does not resign his/her seat, the Member will be sitting as a member of a body to approve his/her own [p.43] appointment which, in his view, contravenes the principle of natural justice that a man cannot be a judge in his own cause. I see no breach of that principle in this case because there is no evidence that the candidate for approval sits as a member of the Committee nor does he vote for the approval of his candidature when the Committee's report is presented to the full Parliament.

Question 3.

As I have already held, an appointment is effective when the appointee has subscribed to the oath of office. Resignation should be contemporaneous with the swearing in ceremony. In order to ensure that there is no time lapse between the resignation and the swearing it is necessary that the clerk of Parliament should be present at the ceremony to whom the appointee should present his letter of resignation immediately followed by the oath of office. I propose the following guidelines for the transition from a parliamentarian to a minister:—

(i) Nomination by his excellency the President.

(ii) Appearance of the nominee before Parliament.

(iii)Approval of the nomination.

(iv)Resignation from Parliament immediately preceding the oath of office as Minister.

(v) Oath of office.

Question 4.

In his letter of resignation the reason given by the Plaintiff is that he has been nominated by the President for the position of Minister of Planning & Economic Development and that he is complying with the provisions of the Constitution. But in his affidavit of 4 February 1997, he deposed that his resignation came as a result of an information by the Clerk of Parliament that it was a requirement of the Constitution. Still, in his affidavit of 4 November 1997, the Plaintiff revealed that Mr. Metzger, his solicitor, advised that he was not required by the Constitution to resign at the time that he did. Much that I am in sympathy with the Plaintiff for this voluntary act of his, if he had consulted his solicitor and taken the appropriate action before he resigned, his seat in Parliament might not have been lost. He came to court too late. Granted that according to section 94(2) of the Constitution, this court cannot enquire into any act done or purporting to have been done by Parliament or by the Speaker under any its rules of procedure. But is the interpretation of the Constitution a question of the rules of procedure of Parliament.? It is definitely not. Duster of a court's jurisdiction is not a matter of course. For the court's jurisdiction to be ousted it must be clearly shown that a particular action falls within the ouster clause. This is not the case here. As I have said earlier,if the Plaintiff had come to court and sought a declaration or an order of certiorari, mandamus or prohibition immediately when he was confronted by [p.44] the Parliamentary Committee with an interpretation of the Constitution that was palpably wrong, there would have been a different story to tell. Parliament is not a court of law and has no power to interpret the Constitution as it purported to do in this case. In this regard I respectfully agree with the views of Kabazo Chanda J. in M'membe v. Speaker [1996] 1 LRC 584, 593 when faced with a similar situation in Zambia he said:

"My position is that this purported ouster of courts' jurisdiction only refers to matters which belong purely to the internal arrangements of Parliament, such as the date the House adjourns, cost-saving measures, power to remove strangers from the House, and a myriad of other internal administrative functions. Even here, however, the courts may intervene to settle a dispute between Parliament and any aggrieved individual who claim to have suffered grave injustice caused to him by Parliament."

[p.46]

WARNE J. S. C.

This is an application by an Originating Notice of Motion for the following reliefs pursuant to Section 124 (1) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991. Namely:

1. (a) whether upon the proper interpretation of Section -56 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991 the resignation of a Member of Parliament from that body is a condition precedent to the consideration of his nomination of appointment as a minister pursuant to the said Section 56.

(b) Whether Plaintiff/Applicant was required under the provisions of section 56 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone or any other law to resign from his seat in Parliament before his nomination appointment as a Minister could be considered for approval by Parliament.

[p.46]

2. For the following Declarations:—

(a) that upon the proper interpretation of Section 56 of the Constitution of Sierra . Leone 1991, the resignation of a Member of Parliament from that body is not a condition precedent to the consideration on his nomination as a Minister pursuant to said section 56.

(b) that upon a proper interpretation of Section 56 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991 the Plaintiff/Applicant herein was not obliged to resign his seat in Parliament before his nomination for appointment as Minister of Development and Economic Planning could have been considered for approval by Parliament.

(Both parties filed their cases according to the provisions of the Rules of the Court)

The motion is supported by the affidavit of the plaintiff sworn to on the 8th day of November 1996.

Both sides have made submissions to the Court, which I will now consider.

Mr. Metzger, Counsel for the Plaintiff has repeated in his submission what is in the Motion and the case filed, that is to say - is the resignation by a member of parliament a condition precedent to his appointment as Minister by the President of the Republic? I will address this issue shortly. Counsel has invited the Court to consider the facts on Page 4 paragraph 5 of the record which states: that the said Committee required me to produce inter alia the following documents condition precedent to the said interview to wit:—

(a) “My letter of resignation from the office of member of Parliament. This was intimated to me by the Clerk of Parliament.”

Counsel again referred to Page 115 of the. Record- this is the statement of defendants/Respondents Case; and to Page 61 of the said record -This is an affidavit sworn to by the plaintiff/Applicant dated 18th day of November 1997.

[p.47]

Counsel submits that nomination and appointment do not mean the same thing. In support of his submission Counsel has referred to Craies on Statute Law 7th edition page 96 and rules in Raydon's case on Statute Law Page 97 and several other local authorities Taylor v Sherif 1968/69 A.L.R (S.L.) Page 35 at 44.

Among the other authorities Mr. Metzger referred to are section 76 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone and section 77 of the said constitution; He also refers to sections 94, 120 and 124 of the said Constitution and finally the case of Tradex S - A. V Volkswagen Work 1968 A.E.R. 144 at 149.

In answer to the submission of Counsel for Plaintiff, Mr. Farmah, Counsel for the defendant urges Court to see Section 56 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone. Counsel submits that there is no law requiring the applicant to resign before his nomination is considered. He further submits that the applicant was required to resign his seat before appearing before the body for his appointment to be confirmed. Counsel submits that an M. P. under Section 56 is prohibited from being appointed to the office of a Minister vide Section 56 (1); appointment includes nomination and approval, he added. Counsel further submits that immediately after approval, he appointment is deemed to have taken effect. Counsel has urged on the Court that the applicant M. P. was under the provisions of section 56(1) and 56(11) and was not required to remain an M. P. – section 56 (1) would have been contravened.

Counsel submits, secondly, that the Plaintiff must resign before his appointment, because he was a member of a body, which was vested with a constitutional duty, to scrutinizing all nominees of the President for approval as- Minister. Counsel added that the duty that the constitution places upon Parliament shall be read under section 56 (2) (c) - that duty shall be discharged fairly and Parliament cannot approve it self.

[p.48]

Counsel went on to submit that in the circumstances where the appointment would have been made, an M. P., were he to appear before that body to be confirmed as a Minister would infringe natural justice.

In reply Mr. Metzger submits that appointment takes effect when the President administers the oath and issues the warrant. Counsel concluded that natural justice does not arise in this case and refers to the cases of San Med Co v Sparkman (1943) Z A. E. R. 337 at 343; Prapeye v Morgan 1968 – 69 A. L. R. 1 at 4, 11-18; Wilson v S.L. Ports Authority, 1968-69, AL R. 68-9. Supreme Court Rules 91.

This Originating Notice of Motion is supported by an affidavit sworn to by the plaintiff on the 8th November 1996.

In it the Plaintiff deposed in Paragraphs 2, 4, 5 the following:

“2 that I was elected a member of Parliament for the peoples Democratic Part (Sorbeh) in the General Parliamentary Elections held on the 26th and 27th of February 1996. A true copy of the notice of election issued by the Interim National Electoral Commission is exhibited here and marked S.G.B. 1.

3. that I was sworn in as a member of Parliament on the 2nd April 1996 and thereafter took my seat in Parliament.

4. that I was nominated by President for appointment as Minister of Development and Economic Planning on the 8th of April 1996 and thereafter invited to submit myself for an interview by the Appointments Public Service Committee of Parliament.

5. That the said committee required me to produce inter alia the following documents as condition precedent to the said interview to that:—

[p.49]

(a) My letter of resignation from the office of Member of Parliament: this was intimated to me by the Clerk of Parliament."

These Statements in the affidavit are supported by exhibit. Exhibit S. G. B. 1., which speaks for itself. Inter Alia it reads

"In accordance with Section 12 of the Electoral Provision Decree 1995, the Interim National Electoral Commission hereby notifies you, that as a result of the votes cast in favour of the List of Candidates put up by the People's Democratic Party (P D P) Sorbeh in the Parliamentary Election held on the 26th and 27th February 1996, and having regard to the position of your name on the list you have been elected as an Ordinary Member of Parliament".

There after, this exhibit attaches to the affidavit – Exhibit S G B 2 dated 10th April 1996, which is:

"The Hon. Speaker of Parliament

Parliament Building

Tower Hill

Freetown

Dear Mr. Speaker

Following the announcement of my nomination by His Excellency the President as Minister of Planning and Economic Development and in compliance with the provisions of the Constitution, I hereby tender my resignation from Parliament as' a Member of Parliament with immediate effect.

[p.50]

With sentiments of highest esteem

Yours faithfully

Hon. S. G. Bangura."

Let me here and now consider how a Member of Parliament vacates his seat in Parliament. This is provided for in section 77.

(I) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No. 6 of 1991. There are several reason by which he can vacate his seat, inter alia

(a) if he resigns from office as a Member of Parliament ,by writing under his hand addressed to the Speaker, as if the office of the Speaker is vacant or the Speaker is absent from Sierra Leone, to the Deputy speaker."

The matter does not end here. The Constitution must be viewed as a whole to use if there is any provision by which a Member of Parliament can vacate his seat.

The Plaintiff has given a reason in his letter of resignation why he is vacating his seat. He states since it was announced that His Excellency the President has nominated him as Minister of Planning and Economic development, he was resigning his seat in Parliament in compliance with the Constitution. Is there any such provision? Section 56 (1) and (2). of the said Constitution makes provision for the President to appoint Ministers,

Section 56 (1) provides:

"There shall be, in addition to the office of Vice-President, such other offices of Ministers and deputy Ministers as may be established by the President."

[p.51]

Provided that no Member of Parliament shall be appointed a Minister or Deputy Minister."

In spite of the proviso to Section 56 (1) the Plaintiff was nominated for appointment as Minister.

Under section 56. (2) "A person shall not be appointed a Minister or Deputy Minister unless:—

(a) ……..…….

(b) ……..

(c) his nomination is approved by Parliament."

In this section two words have been used by the Legislature as if they are synonymous they are nomination and appointment. In my view they are not. It is quite clear, that since the nomination is to be approved by Parliament there cannot be an appointment by the President as a matter of course. What then is the position of the Plaintiff?

He was a Member of Parliament when he was nominated to be appointed a Minister. His nomination did not contravene the proviso to section 56 (I) of the Constitution. How Parliament conducts its business is not a matter to be investigated by the Courts. This is provided for by the Section 94 (2) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone No. 6 of 1991 "Section 94 (2) Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in this Constitution or in any other law contained, no decision order or direction of Parliament or any of its Committees or the Speaker, relating to the rules of procedure of Parliament, or to the application or implementation of such rules, or any act done or purporting to have been done by Parliament or by the Speaker under any rules of procedure, shall be enquired into by any Court."

[p.52]

This subsection is quite clear and unequivocal. This brings me to paragraph 5 of the aforesaid affidavit of the Plaintiff - At the expense of prolixity, I shall repeat the paragraph.

"5. That is said committee require me to produce inter alia the following documents:

(a) My letter of resignation from the office of Member of Parliament; this was intimated to me by the Clerk of Parliament."

Let me here and now say that it is immaterial by what means the Committee sought to conduct its business. The Courts are precluded from inquiring into any such matter. This not a question of interpreting Section 94 (2). The provision is mandatory - i.e. "shall be inquired into by any Court".

Having said this I must now deal formally with the two questions raised in the Originating Notice of Motion.

In answer, to question (a) the resignation of a Member of Parliament from that body is not a condition precedent to the consideration of his nomination for appointment as a Minister pursuant to the said Section 56.

In answer to question (b) the Plaintiff was not required under the provision of section 56 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991 or any other law, to resign from his seat in Parliament before his nomination for appointment as a Minister could be considered for approval by Parliament.

In this circumstance, I will grant the declarations prayed for.

[p.53]

The letter of resignation of the Plaintiff as a Member of Parliament is well within his competence. The declarations which have been granted do not, in my view, affect the resignation by the plaintiff of his seat in Parliament.

This, I opine, is an incontrovertible fact.

Judgment accordingly.

[p.159]

RULING

MURIA JA

The applicant, Tamba Brima, is one of those among a number of indictees charged with crimes against international humanitarian law and Sierra Leonean law committed during the armed conflict in Sierra Leone on various occasions between 1997 and 1999. Two other Special Court indictees are Issa Hassan Sesay aka Issa Sesay and Moinia Fofanah who have now instituted proceedings in this Court, in SC.No.1/2003 against the establishment of the Special Court. These two indictees have also being indicted for crimes against international humanitarian law and Sierra Leonean law committed during the said armed conflict. The applicant now asks that he also be added as a plaintiff in the action S.C. No.1/2003.

The reasons for bringing this application were contained in the applicant's affidavit in support sworn to and filed with the application. It is a very scanty affidavit and basically it says that it is in his interest that he, the applicant, ought to be made a party as any decision of this Court would have impact on him. Ms. Thompson of Counsel for the applicant sought to rely on O.12 r1 of the High Court Rules and Rule 89(5) of the Supreme Court Rules. I accept that where matters are brought before the Supreme Court and no provision has been [p.160] expressly made to deal with such matters, Rule 98 of the Supreme Court Rules 1982 permits resort to the High Court Rules.

Respectively the two provisions relied on by Counsel are as follows:

“O.12, r1 — All persons may be joined in one action as plaintiffs in whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same transaction or series of transactions is alleged to exist whether jointly, severally, or in the alternative, where if such persons brought separate actions any common question of law or fact would arise.”

and

“Rule 89(5) — The Court may at any time on its own motion or on the application of a party, order that any other person be made a party to the action in addition to or in substitution for any other party”.

0.12, r1 of the High Court Rules follows closely the old English Rules 0.16 r 1 which permits a person to be joined as a plaintiff "in whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same transaction or series of transactions is alleged to exist." The power to order such a joinder is, of course, discretionary. No automatic right to be joined as a plaintiff is conferred on a person in the circumstances described in 0.12 r 1 of the High Court Rules or its predecessor

R.S.C. 0.16 r 1 as pointed out by Scrutton LJ in Horwood v New Statesman Pub. Co. Ltd 141 L.T. 57.

Thus the power to add a party in an action exists under 0.12, r1 of the High Court Rules and it is discretionary. As it is not an automatic right to be added as a party, it must be shown that the person to be added is a necessary party for the [p.161] determination of the issues before the Court. To use the words of Blackburn J in De Hart v Stevenson (1876) 1 QBD 313 at 314, it must be shown that “the presence of the other plaintiffs is necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate and settle the questions involved in the action.”

0.12, r 11 is similarly worded. It provides, that:

“the names of any parties whether plaintiffs or defendants who ought to have been joined, or whose presence before the Court may be necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the cause or matter be added.”

The question that must be asked is: Is it necessary that the applicant be joined as a party in the matter intituled SC. No.1/2003 between Issa Hassan Sesay a.k.a. Issa Sesay, Allieu Kondowa and Moinia Fofana (Plaintiffs) and Defendants who are the respondents in this application? There has been divergence of views on the construction of what was then 0.16 r 11 of the English Supreme Court Rules 1961 which is 0.12 r 11 of our High Court Rules. The cases of Amon v Raphael Tuck and Sons Limited [1956] 1 All ER 273; [1956] 1 QB 357 and Fire Auto and Marine Insurance Company Limited v Greene [1964] 2 QB 687 had taken a narrow construction of the Rule. On the other hand the Courts in Gurtner v Circuit [1986] 1 All ER 328 and Re Vandervell Trusts [1969] 3 All ER 496 have taken a more liberal view of the Rules on who should be added as a party to an action. However, despite' the divergence of views as to the application of the rule, it is, clear from the cases that the legal principles [p.162] applicable to parties to an action have not changed with regard to the necessity for having before the Court the proper parties necessary for the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate and settle the question involved in the action: See Att. Gen. v. Pontypridd Waterworks Co. [1908] 1 Ch. 388; see also Long v Crossley (1879) 13 Ch.D. 388.

To return to the question posed earlier, it is important for the applicant to show not only that he has an interest in the matter now pending before the Supreme Court in S.C No.1/2003, but that his presence before the Court as a party is necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to determine the issues now before the Court. As stated by Devlin J in Amon's case, [1956] 1 All ER. at p. 287; [1956] 1 QB at p.380:

"The only reason which makes it necessary to make a person a party to an action is so that he should be bound by the result of the action, and the question to be settled, therefore, must be a question in the action which cannot be effectually and completely settled unless he is a party."

Each case, however, must be decided on its own facts. It is not desirable to propound general propositions in matters such as this, beyond what is necessary for the determination of the particular case, as observed by Lord Diplock in Gurtnar v Circuit, at p.336. In that case the Motor Insurer's Bureau were added as a party (defendant) because the rules of natural justice demanded that "all those who will be liable to satisfy the judgment are given an opportunity to be heard", and the Bureau were clearly such persons in that case. It was therefore necessary that the Bureau be added as a party.

[p.163]

In Re Vandervell Trusts (above) the Court also applied the wide construction of O.15 r6 which was substantially the same terms as the old O.16 r 11. Lord Denning MR said at 499:

"We will in this Court give the rule a wide interpretation so as to enable any party to be joined whenever it is just and convenient to do so."

The necessity to join the Commissioners of Inland Revenue in that case was obvious. There were issues of surtax, estate duty and stamp duty which arose and must be determined as between the executors and commissioners of Inland Revenue. These issues necessitated the addition of the Commissioners as a party. As Sachs, LJ pointed out, at p.501:

"It would indeed be no tribute to our legal system if those issues could not be determined in the course of a single set of proceedings as between the executors, the trustees and the Commissioners."

Surely, as the Court found in that case, it must be just and convenient to add the Commissioners as a party in the circumstances obtained in that case.

Bearing in mind the principles stated in the authorities cited, is the addition of the applicant as a party in SC,No.1/2003 necessary to effectually and completely decide the issues raised in that case? Is it just and convenient to add him as a party? Should he be added as a party under the rules of natural justice? There [p.164] are no issues raised by the applicant against the respondent. Presumably he relies on the same issues as those raised by the plaintiffs in S.C. No. 1/2003. He simply wishes to be a party (obviously upon advice) since he was one of the detainees at the Special Court of Sierra Leone.

In those circumstances, even on the authorities of Gurtner v Circuit or Re Vandervell Trust, it would be difficult to say that the applicant is a necessary party and that he ought to be joined in the case now pending before the Supreme Court in SC NO.1/2003. His presence in Court in the case is, in any judgment, not necessary to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in that case. In fact the applicant's interest in the matter will be sufficiently represented by the plaintiff's in the case, since they have the same interest particularly in the outcome of the case. In such a situation De Hart v Stevenson (above) says that another party, such as the present applicant, will not be added.

Although rule 1 of 0.12 permits a party to be added, the requirements under rule 11 of that Order must also be satisfied. The power to add a party in a case or matter before the Supreme Court is that provided under rule 89(5) of the Supreme Court Rules 1982. That power is discretionary and the Court may refuse to add a party whose presence in Court is not necessary. The present application is such a case where the discretion-of the Court can be so exercised. [p.165]

In the circumstances of the present case, the applicant cannot be said to be a necessary party and his application to be joined as a party (plaintiff) must be refused.

Counsel for the Appellants is asking this Court to deliver a ruling on a preliminary objection, which was not made, before this Court. Is this Court competent to deliver such a ruling? In answer to this question, I will refer to the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act. No 6 of 1991. The Supreme Court is a creature of statute and its composition and jurisdiction are spelt out by the said Constitution, We are well aware that the Supreme Court is the most senior Court in the State and its decision, binds all other inferior Courts We certainly do not have to be reminded that it is the highest Court in the Land. Be that as it may, I will consider some of the relevant sections of the Constitution of Sierra Leone touching and concerning the Supreme Court.

Composition Section 120 (1) provides:—

(a) The Chief Justice

(b) Not less than four other Justices of the Supreme Court and

[p.228]

(c) Such other Justices of the Superior Court of Judicature or of the Superior Courts in any State practising a body of laws similar to Sierra Leone not being more in number of Justices of the Supreme Court sitting as such as the Chief Justice may for the determination of any particular case or matter by writing under his hand request to sit in the Supreme Court may specify or until the request is withdrawn (emphasis mine)

2. The Supreme Court shall save as otherwise provided in paragraph (a) of Sub-section (6) of section 28 and section 126 of this Constitution be duly constituted for the dispatch of its business by not less than three Justices thereof" (emphasis mine)

These provisions are very clear and unequivocal. In my view who requests who sits in the Supreme Court at any time? It is the Chief Justice.

This Court has been requested to hear and determine the appeal Se. CIV. App 6/2000. Counsel for the Appellants is urging the Supreme Court to give a ruling on a preliminary objection on certain grounds of appeal. This Court as composed, is not competent to give a ruling on a matter of which it is not seised neither was the preliminary objection argued before it? Practice Directions not withstanding Counsel has quoted several legal authorities but are they relevant to the present issue? I say no. With respect r am of the view that the whole exercise has been an academic excursion.

Litigation must come to an end. The Respondents cannot be deprived of the decision of the Court of Appeal in definitely. I hasten to observe that this exercise in my opinion is an abuse of due process, This, the Supreme Court ought not to encourage and will not encourage I therefore order that the appeal shall proceed.

V. A. D. WRIGHT J.S.C

On the 17th March 2005, A. J. Goading Esq, stated that at the last hearing on the 2nd February 2002 this case was adjourned for ruling pursuant to a preliminary objection dated 1st August 2002 after being argued by both sides.

N.B. Browne Marke Esq. said that he was before the court for the appeal to be argued to which A. J. Gooding replied that this court is not properly constituted to proceed with the pending appeal since this preliminary objection was heard by a panel of five judges who adjourned the preliminary objection proceedings for a ruling. The original panel has been reduced by the retirement of two judges and a new panel of five judges including three judges of the original panel has been empanelled to proceed with the appeal. He submitted that even though one or two of the Judges no longer sit on the panel of the court that was dealing with a particular matter so long as the arguments have been completed the Supreme Court has jurisdiction to deliver the judgment or ruling. He further said that the consensus of the authorities is that in the Appellate Court the diminution of the panel by death or otherwise ought not to prevent the delivering of judgment/ruling. He cited a list of authorities including Hallam 1930 47 TLR 207 Re Leslie 1883 23 CLD P.559 and the ruling dated 23rd .March 2005 in S C. CIV.APP.5/2000. In the matter of Precious Mineral Marketing (Sierra Leone Ltd.) and Minerals Marketing Company (S.L.) Ltd unreported to establish that a judgment/ruling can be given by three Judges even though a panel of five judges heard the arguments.

N. B. Browne-Marke Esq. for the Defendants submitted that the panel of three remaining judges cannot deliver the ruling.

[p.230]

Learned Counsel further referred the Court to sections 122(2) and 126 of the Constitution 1991 Act NO.6 of 1991 and stated that all five justices should deliver the ruling. He also referred to section 120 of the Constitution and stated that the Supreme Court can depart from its own previous decision.

To my mind the question that is to be resolved is whether the present panel is properly constituted to proceed with the appeal without the resolution of the preliminary objection proceeding.

The preliminary objection dated 2nd July 2000 was argued before the original panel on various dates and adjourned for ruling. Since Ruling had yet to be delivered it is a pending interlocutory matter which needs to be resolved.

The relevant sections of the Constitution that have been referred to during the argument, these are sections 121(2), section 122(3) and 26(a) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991 (Act No. 6 of 1991).

It is not uncommon for the machinery of Justice to experience break down by death resignation and removal. In the absence of specific provisions in the Rules of the Supreme Court: to cater for such eventualities resort will have to be made to other sources to enable us to resolve the issue.

From the authorities cited the death or otherwise of one of the members of the panel ought not to prevent the delivering of judgment/ruling. This is re enforced by section 40 of the Interpretation Act 1973, Lord Robert Megarry in a chapter under the rubric "a unanimous Dissent", in his book A second Miscellany-at-Law exhaustively dealt with the issue of death, resignation, elevation and retirement of members of a panel in Court.

He said "The difficulty of ascertaining whether a written judgment represents the judge's final views will not normally apply where the judge has not died but merely resigned: and in one such case after the retirement of Hill J. his reserved judgment was by consent, read by Lord Merriva1e P. See Hallam vs. Hallam (1930) 47 T.L. 207 and Re Leslie (1883) 23 Ch D 552 at page 559 where Pearson adopted as his own judgment of Fry. who had became L.J.

In Volume 10 3rd Ed Halsburys Laws of England paragraph 830 under the rubric death of a judge 2nd paragraphs reads — where one of the members of an appellate Court dies after the hearing but before judgment has been delivered, it would seem that a Judgment written by his deceased members before death may be adopted by one of the other members as his own, if it is to stand as part of the decision of the Court.

I have considered sections 121 (2), 122(3) and 126 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No. 6 OF 1991. In the case of CV. APP. 5/2000. In the matter of Precious Mineral Marketing Company (Sierra Leone) Ltd and Precious Minerals Marketing Company (Sierra Leone) Ltd. unreported in which a panel of five judges heard the arguments and [p.231] the panel was reduced by the the death of the late Hon. Justice Adophy and the retirement of the Hon. A.B. Timbo yet the ruling was delivered by the remaining three judges.

I therefore do not see any reason for this court to depart from its previous decision when this matter is similar to this one.

I am re-enforced by the decision in Hallam v Hallam cited above. I am further strengthened by SC. Civ. App No4/88 Rokel Resources (S.L.) Ltd. vs. Bittanol International Trading Company and Associates delivered on the 31st May 2005 unreported, in which two of the five judges are dead, and a retired judge concurred to the judgment.

For the reasons given I hold that the remaining judges in the original panel could deliver the ruling. Let me however state that in my opinion had Counsel for the defendants asked the Court to withdraw the preliminary objection before the appeal is heard then, the question of delivering a ruling would not have arisen.

RULING

My Lords,

I have had the opportunity and the privilege of reading the draft ruling of my Lord the Chief Justice. I agree with him. I only wish to add a few words of my own.

This application came before us by notice of motion dated 16th day of July, 2004 for the following orders:

1. An enlargement of time within which to file the statement of the defendant's case.

2. That the statement of the defendant case already filed, herein remains on the record of this Honourable Court notwithstanding that the same were filed out of time.

3. Any other orders as this court may deem fit and expedient.

This application is supported by the sworn affidavitly by Joseph Gomoi Vandi Kobba and filed therein. In answer the respondent filed a sworn affidavit by Charles Francis Margai opposing the application.

The application is brought before this court pursuant to Rule 92(1) of the Supreme Court Rules.

The Argument

Mr. Eke Halloway the then Learned Attorney General for the applicants in his argument submitted that he relies on the affidavit in support of the application in its entirety, he further went on to submit that the substantive motion brought to this court by the plaintiff/respondent is a constitutional issue with an international connotation. It is therefore in the public interest for this court to adjudicate on it.

Mr. C.F. Margai Learned Counsel for the plaintiff/respondent opposing the application submitted that the Learned Attorney General in his affidavit has failed to advance cogent reasons for the delay and referred to the affidavit in opposition to support his submission. He urges this court to refuse the application.

Allow me to digress a little to make two preliminary observations. The first is that the Learned Attorney General omitted to apply for leave for enlargement of time on the notice of motion. The second is that in perusing the affidavit in support and in opposition I detect some degree of negligence in the preparation and compilation of these documents. For example the affidavit in support was not properly numbered; the numbering came from paragraphs 5 to 8 leaving out numbers 6 and 7. In the affidavit in opposition one of the exhibits “CFM2” - affidavit of service is dated 10th December 2001 instead 10th December 2003.

It must not be forgotten that the Supreme Court is the ultimate court in the hind and those who choose to come to it should thoroughly go over their papers before presenting them. Having said this I shall continue.

[p.150]

The Issue

This application brings into focus the courts power under rule 92(1) of the Supreme Court Rules 1982.

Rule 92(1) states:

“A defendant upon whom a notice of motion and statement of the plaintiffs case are served shall if he wishes to contest the case within ten days of such service or within such time as the court upon terms may direct file a statement of the defendants case which shall be signed by the defendant or his counsel”.

The sentence in the above rule pertinent to this application is “within such time as the court upon terms my direct”. For this sentence to have any meaning and escape from any ambiguity, I will be right to say it is a directory provision indicating the courts power to enlarge time within which to comply with Rule 92(1) on condition stipulated by the courts. It follows therefore that an applicant seeking to invoke the courts power under Rule 92(1) has to give reasons for his failure to file the statement of the defendant case within ten days as stipulated by Rule 92(1), He has now come to the court asking for more time by giving reasons in the various avernments in his affidavit in support of the application.

It is a general rule that a court will grant a “Time Order” when it appears just to do so. It will appear just to do so after due consideration of the evidence and the circumstances of the case. Will J. in interpreting the expression “just” in re. an application under the solicitors Act 1843 (1899) 80 LT p.720 had this to say.

“It must mean that which is right and fitting with regard to the public interest”.

This principle is founded upon good sense and justice. I am persuaded by it.

I have considered the submissions of Learned Counsel. I have also perused the affidavit in support and in opposition to the application.

It is obvious to me that there is tardiness on the part of the applicant in filing the statement of the defendant's case considering the eye catching importance of the substantive motion taken out by the respondents herein.

Generally, delay ought not to be countenanced if there are good reasons for such a delay as it will be compensated by the payment of cost. The court will however refused an application for the extension of time where such delay will cause irreparable hardship to the other party. See Attwood vs. Chichester 3 P. BD. p728.

I agree with Mr. Margai cogent reason must be advanced to explain the delay. This onus is not only confined on the applicant it is also the law that in objecting to an application cogent reason must also be advanced. See Sabrah v. Governor 1957-60 ALR (SL) 728.

I now turn to the affidavit in support of this application. The avemments which I think are Germane to this application can be found in Paragraphs 4,8,12 and 17.

[p.151]

Paragraph 4 states:

“That on or about the 25th of June 2004 the Principal Assistant to the Registrar of the Supreme Court informed me and I verily believed that the statements of the defendants case have not been filed”.

Paragraph 8 states:

“That in the circumstances I requested a copy of the statement of plaintiff case from the Principal Assistant to the Registrar of the Supreme Court which he gave me to enable me to prepare and file the statement of the defendant case”.

Paragraph 12 states:

“That I see a letter dated 8th December 2003 requesting the office of the Attorney General's assistance in the action herein - a Photostat copy of the said letter is now produced and shown to me marked exhibits “JGK 5”

Paragraph 17 states:

“That in the premises aforesaid and having regard to the fact that this is a constitutional issue of public importance the interest of justice will best be served by granting the several orders in the notice of motion filed herein.

I see a significant inconsistency in the avernments in paragraphs 4, 8 and 12. The duty of the Registrar of the Supreme Court in matters of this kind is clearly defined in Rule 91 of the Supreme Court Rules. In my judgment the avernments in paragraph 4 and 8 are of no moment. Indeed the applicant denied that he was not served by the respondent. He should have been put on his inquiry by paragraph 12 of his own very affidavit exhibiting “JGK5” the letter dated the 8th December from the 1st 2nd and 3rd applicants.

I therefore find it reluctant to justify the applicant delay in filing the statement of the defend case. However I shall consider this application in the light of the avernment in paragraph 17 of the affidavit in support.

I agree the substantive motion raises constitutional issue with an international connotation. In this regard I think this application ought to be granted.

In the result I grant the Orders prayed for in the notice motion.

TIMBO C.J.

At the hearing of the Originating Notice of Motion dated 28 June 2002 (SC.2/2002) Mr. Berthan Macauley Jnr. sought leave to use a supplemental affidavit filed on the 7 October 2002 further verifying the statement of Plaintiff's case. Attached to the said Affidavit are copies of Government Notices No.316, 217 & 396 published in the Sierra Leone Gazette Nos. 49 and 53 dated Tuesday 6 August 2002 and Wednesday 28 August 2002 respectively and marked YHW. 5A & B.

Dr. Ade Renner Thomas for the 2nd Respondent opposed the application on the ground that what Counsel for the Plaintiff was seeking to do was infact to amend the statement of the Plaintiff's case. If he was correct in his contention then Mr. Berthan Macauley Jnr. should have applied under rule 93 of the Supreme Court Rules (P.N. No.1 of 1982) to do the necessary amendments. By this rule "A Notice of Motion or Statement of the Plaintiffs case or the Defendant's case, as the case may be may at any time with the leave of the Court be amended on such terms as the Court may determine"

In reply, Mr. Berthan Macauley Jnr. submitted that the two documents he sought leave to use referred to acts done by His Excellency the President on the 24 May 2002. He contended that such acts only came to his knowledge after they had been published in the [p.9] gazette on the 6 and 28 August respectively by which time he had already filed the Notice of Motion together "with the Statement of the Plaintiff's case and the verifying affidavits. He could not therefore have known the existence of those facts until their publication in the gazette. And as they form part of the Plaintiff's case, he should be allowed to use them.

We here considered the submission of both we are of the opinion that Counsel for the Plaintiffs seeks to effect here is an amendment of the Plaintiff case within rule 93.

In these circumstances we will refuse the application and it is accordingly refused,

JUDGMENT

TIMBO, C.J.

By Notice of Motion dated the 28th day of June Two Thousand and Two the Plaintiff sought the following reliefs pursuant to sections 122, 124 (1) (a) and 127 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone (No 6 of 1991)—

[p.55]

(1) The interpretation of sections 56, 57, 58, 59, 60 (1) and 64 (1) and (2) of the aforesaid Constitution, more specifically to determine,

(i) Whether the appointment to the office of the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice referred to in section 64 (1) and (2) is subject to the provisions of section 56 (2) of the Constitution.

(ii.) If the answer to (i) is Yes what is the effect of an appointment to such office without the approval of Parliament?

(iii.) Whether the provisions of section 56 (2) - (5) inclusive of the Constitution are applicable to the said office of the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice referred to in section 64 (1) and (2) of the Constitution.

The Plaintiff also asked for among other things,

(1) A Declaration to the effect that section 56 (2) - (5) inclusive of the Constitution apply to the office of Attorney-General and Minister of Justice referred to in sections 64 (1) and (2) and in particular,

(2) A Declaration that the appointment of the 2nd Defendant on or about the 27th May 2002 as Attorney-General and Minister of Justice without the prior approval of Parliament as stipulated in section 56 (2) of the Constitution contravened the said provision of the Constitution and is consequently null and void and of no legal effect.

[p.56]

The Plaintiff's application was supported by the affidavit of Mr. Yada Hashim Williams, Barrister and Solicitor who is also member and the Secretary-General of the Sierra Leone Bar Association, the Plaintiff herein, sworn to on the 28th day of June 2002.

By paragraph 2 of the said affidavit Mr. Williams stated that the Plaintiff is a Company limited by guarantee incorporated under the Companies Act 1960 (Cap 249) and that the Plaintiff brings the said action in its corporate name. As the name suggests the Plaintiff is the association of legal practitioners in Sierra Leone.

Clauses 3 (a) and 3 (e) of the Memorandum and Articles of Association state the objects of the Company as being,

(a) To support and protect the character status and interest of the legal profession in Sierra Leone.

(b) To originate, promote, oppose and campaign for the improvements amendments reform and interpretation of the laws of Sierra Leone and to institute, prosecute, defend, support or oppose legal proceedings aimed at achieving the same.

In the particulars of the Statement of its Case, the Plaintiff said inter alia,

“The office of the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice is of paramount importance to members of the Sierra Leone Bar Association in the exercise of their profession more so that,

[p.57]

(a) The Attorney- General and Minister of Justice is the titular Head of the Bar.

(b) The Attorney-General and Minister of Justice is a member of the Rules of Court Committee established by section 22 of the Courts Act, (No. 32 of 1965).

(c) The Attorney-General and Minister of Justice is a member of the General Legal Council established by the Legal Practitioners' Act, 2000 (No. 15 of 2000) which said body is the governing authority with regard to the legal profession in Sierra Leone.

(d) The Attorney-General and Minister of Justice is the nominal Defendant in respect of actions brought against the Government of Sierra Leone under the State Proceedings Act, 2000 (No. 14 of 2000) and the person upon whom prior notice is to be given before the commencement of action under the said Act;

(e) The Attorney-General and Minister of Justice has a very important role to play in criminal proceedings under the laws of Sierra Leone by virtue of sections 64 (3) and 66 (6) to (8) inclusive of the Constitution."

For these reasons the Plaintiff submitted that it is of the utmost importance that the validity or otherwise of the appointment of the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice on or about the 27th May, 2002 be determined by this Court.

Paragraphs (xi) and (xii) of the Plaintiff's Case are significant and I shall quote them verbatim.

[p.58]

Paragraph (xi). This avers that,

"On or about the 27th May 2002 it was announced on radio 98.1 that the 2nd Defendant, among others, had been nominated by His Excellency the President to the office of Attorney-General and Minister of Justice as a Minister subject to parliamentary approval."

More especially, the release said,

"RELEASE FROM THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT"

"It has pleased His Excellency the President to make the following Appointments which according to Section 56 (2) are subject to the approval of Parliament.

MINISTERS

1. Ministry of Finance

Minister - Mr. Joseph B. Dauda

2. Ministry of Foreign Affairs and International Cooperation

Minister - Mr. Momodu Koroma

3. Attorney-General and Minister of Justice

Minister - Mr. Eke A Halloway

4. Minister of Development and Economic Planning

Minister - Mr. Mohamed B. Daramy;"

[p.59]

Paragraph (xii). By this, the Plaintiff maintained that,

“In 1996, the then Attorney-General and Minister of Justice was appointed Attorney-General and Minister of Justice after his nomination as Attorney-General and Minister of Justice had been approved by Parliament. That since 1996 to date there has not been any alterations to sections 56 and 64 of the Constitution.”

Counsel for the Plaintiff further argued that, in construing sections 56, 57, 58, 59 and 60 (1) and 64 of the Constitution the Court should give the words of these sections their natural and ordinary meaning. He also invited us to look at the entire Constitution when interpreting section 64.

Much of the argument of Plaintiff’s counsel had centred around the issue whether or not the 2nd Defendant was a Minister. In Mr. Berthan Macaulay's view the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice is clearly a Minister like any other Minister of State that there is no separate or specific provision in the Constitution relating to the oath of the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice other than the one taken by all other Ministers under section 57 which provides,

“57 A Minister or a Deputy Minister shall not enter upon the duties of his office unless he has taken and subscribed the oath for the due execution of his duties as set out in the Third Schedule.”

[p.60]

In his amended Statement of Case counsel for the Plaintiff again drew our attention to the following salient facts,

(xiii) That in Government Notice No 316 published in the Sierra Leone Gazette (Extraordinary) Volume cxxxiii No. 49 dated the 6th of August 2002 it was stated that His Excellency Alhaji Dr. Ahmed Tejan Kabbah, President, had appointed Eke Ahmed Halloway Esq. the 2nd Respondent herein, to the office of Minister in exercise of the powers vested in him by subsection (1) of section 56 of the Constitution on the 24th day of May 2002.”

(ix) That in Government Notice. No 317 published in the Sierra Leone Gazette (Extraordinary) Volume cxxxiii No. 49 dated the 6th August 2002, it was stated that His Excellency Alhaji Dr. Ahmed Tejan Kabbah, President, had appointed Eke Ahmed Halloway Esq., the 2nd Respondent herein, to be a member of the Cabinet in exercise of the powers vested in him by subsection (1) of section 59 of the Constitution on the 24th of May 2002.

(x) That in Government Notice, No. 396, published in the Sierra Leone Gazette (Extraordinary) Volume cxxxiii No. 53 dated the 28th of August 2002, it was stated that His Excellency Dr. Ahmed Tejan Kabbah, President, had appointed Eke Ahmed Halloway Esq. the 2nd Respondent herein to be Attorney-General and Minister of Justice in exercise of the powers vested in him by subsection (2) of section 64 of the Constitution on the 24th day of May 2002. That the said [p.61] Government Notice No. 396 also stated that it had cancelled Government Notices No. 316 and 317 referred to above.”

Mr. Berthan Macaulay Jnr. submitted that notwithstanding the fact that Government Notice No. 396 stated explicitly that Government Notices No. 316 and 317 had been replaced, this did not derogate from the facts alluded to in those Government Notices.

As a result, in his respectful submission, the Court is still bound to determine the legality of the appointment of the 2nd Respondent as there is no doubt that from the documents filed by the 2nd Respondent in support of his Case his appointment was made without the prior approval of Parliament.

Dr. Ade Renner- Thomas, in reply submitted that by his own admission, counsel for the Plaintiff had himself conceded that there is nothing in the entire Constitution which expressly states that section 64 (2) of the Constitution is to be read subject to the provisions of section 56 (1) and (2); and that if section 64 (2) is to be read subject to section 56 (1) and (2) at all, this can only be done by necessary implication.

On the question whether the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice is a Minister, Dr. Ade Renner Thomas had no hesitation in conceding that he is a Minister. But his contention is that the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice is very much more than a Minister. He argued that his office is 'sui generis' or unique in the sense that,

[p.62]

(a) It is established by the Constitution - unlike other Ministers, whose Ministries are created by the President under section 56 (1) in his absolute discretion. He can reduce, add to or abolish any of these portfolios. On the contrary, he cannot do this in the case of the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice.

(b) The Attorney-General and Minister of Justice quite unlike other Ministers, must have certain professional qualifications. Under section 64 (2) he must be a person qualified to hold office as a Justice of the Supreme Court. The qualifications of a Justice of the Supreme Court are set out in section 135 (3) of the Constitution; whereas other Ministers may not have any specialist qualification. For e.g., the. Minister of Health need not be a medical practitioner nor does the Minister of Agriculture necessarily have to be an agriculturist.

(c) Of all the Ministers of Government the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice is the only person apart from the President and Vice-President who is guaranteed a seat in the Cabinet - sections 64 (2).

(d) Throughout the constitutional history of Sierra Leone since Independence in 1961 there has always been a separate and distinct constitutional provision dealing with the office and appointment of the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice.

[p.63]

Dr. Renner-Thomas also referred the Court to Paragraph 75 of the National Constitutional Review Commission Report. published in March 1991, which he said had been heavily relied upon by the Plaintiff to show the "mischief', if any, which Parliament wished to cure when it enacted sections 56 and 64.

According to Mr. Macaulay Jnr., the "mischief" was to stop people from being appointed to ministerial positions and many other important offices without being vetted by the Legislature thereby providing checks and balances in the governance of the State.

Dr. Ade Renner- Thomas submitted that not every important public office was to be affected by the suggested change any way but only "a number" of them and this in his submission does not definitely include the office of Attorney-General and Minister of Justice.

Counsel for the 2nd Defendant further contended that the main concern of the Commission as exemplified in paragraphs 79 and 80 was the matter of separation of the joint or composite office of the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice. These paragraphs state as follows:

"79 As a matter of policy, we have refrained from interfering with Ministerial appointments. However, the post of Attorney-General and Minister of Justice appears in the present Constitution. In the light of [p.64] our recent experiences we believe that the potential for conflict between the Chief Justice and this Minister, who being also Attorney-General has a right to appear before the Chief Justice from time to time is very great.

80. Our recommendation therefore is that the post of Attorney General should be retained in Cabinet, and that, if His Excellency considers it necessary to appoint a Minister of Justice he should appoint some other person."

However, by enacting section 64, the recommendation to split the office of the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice had been clearly rejected.

I have carefully and painstakingly considered the several points canvassed by counsel on both sides. They all seem attractive but as I see it, the answer to the questions posed will inevitably turn in the main on the interpretation we give to the provisions of sections 56 and 64 and more importantly, whether section 64 is to be read subject to section 56.

Section 56 says,

(1) "There shall be. in addition to the office of Vice-President, such other offices of Ministers and Deputy Ministers as may be established· by the President:

[p.65]

Provided that no Member of Parliament shall be appointed Minister or Deputy Minister.

(2) A person shall not be appointed Minister or Deputy Minister unless—

(a) he is qualified to be elected as a Member of Parliament; and

(b) he has not contested and lost as a candidate in the general election immediately preceding his nomination for appointment; and

(c) his nomination is approved by Parliament."

Section 64 on the, other hand stipulates that,

"(1) There shall be an Attorney-General and Minister of Justice who shall be the principal legal adviser to the Government and a Minister.

(2) The Attorney-General and Minister of Justice shall be appointed by the President from among persons qualified to hold office as a Justice of the Supreme Court and shall have a seat in the Cabinet."

What does the expression "nomination" for "appointment" mean in section 56 (2) (b)? Do these words mean one and the same thing?

Webster's Dictionary explains the word "nomination" as an act of appointing to an office. The Readers Digest Universal Dictionary on its part defines the verb "nominate" as, [p.66] designate or appoint to an office and by the Oxford Dictionary of Current English (New Edition) "nominate" means to propose (a candidate) for election; appoint to an office. The American College Dictionary similarly defines "nomination" as an act of appointing.

I do not find these definitions particularly helpful in the case before us. As used in section 56 (2) (b) the phrase "nomination" for "appointment" must connote two different things. The context in which they are used in this subsection clearly shows that they are not interchangeable and cannot therefore be synonymous. There is a presumption that words in a statute are not used unnecessarily or without meaning or that they are tautologous or superfluous. See Halsbury's Laws of England 3td Edition Volume 36, Paragraph 583. A difference in terminology should not therefore be regarded as accidental. A change of language usually indicates a change of intention - Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, 9th Edition page 324.

As I perceive it, under section 56 (2) (b) there must first be a nomination of the person proposed for the appointment and it is only after the Legislature has approved his candidature or his suitability for the post that such person is finally appointed to the designated position by the President..

It has been said,

"A broad and liberal spirit should inspire those whose duty it is to interpret it (the Constitution); but this does not imply that they are free to stretch or [p.67] pervert the language of the enactment in the interests of any legal or constitutional theory or even for the purpose of supplying omission or correcting supposed errors."

Similarly as was stated by Kania C. J. in Gopalan V. State of Madras [1950]. S C J at page 191,

"Where the fundamental law has not limited, either in terms or by necessary implication, the general powers conferred upon the Legislature, we cannot declare a limitation under the notion of having discovered something in the spirit of the Constitution which is not even mentioned in the instrument. It is difficult upon any general principles, to limit the omnipotence of the sovereign legislative power by judicial interposition, except so far as the express words of a written Constitution give that authority."

This same point was re-echoed and empasised by the Indian Supreme Court in another case Keshava Menon V. State of Bombay [1951] S. C. R 228 at page 232 when it observed,

"an argument founded on what is claimed to be the spirit of the Constitution is always attractive for it has a powerful appeal to sentiment and emotion; but a Court of law has to gather the spirit of the Constitution from the language of the Constitution. What one may believe or think to be the spirit [p.68] of the Constitution cannot prevail if the language of the Constitution does not support that view."

Therefore, the duty of the Court is to find out the expressed intention of the Legislature. This it can only do from the words of the enactment itself.

So, it is not at liberty to give —

"a speculative opinion as to what the Legislature probably would have meant, although there has been an omission to enact it. In a Court of Law or Equity what the Legislature intended to be done, or not to be done can only be legitimately ascertained from that which it has chosen to enact either in express words or by reasonable and necessary implication." Vide Salomon V. Salomon [1897] A. C. 22 at page 38.

In other words, when the meaning of the words used by the Legislature are precise and unambiguous, as we have here, it is not the business of the courts to busy themselves in finding out what the supposed intentions of the framers were.

A cardinal principle of statutory interpretation is that a Constitution must be read as a whole with a view to determining the intention of each section. This is what is commonly referred to as the principle of harmonious construction. Its aim is no doubt, to reconcile different provisions of the Constitution.

This is not to say, however, that undue weight should be attached to any section except to the extent that it legitimately and expressly limits the other.

Thus in State of Madras V Champakan [1951] S C R 525 and Qutreshi V State of Bihar [1958] S. C. 731 the Indian Supreme Court decided that the Directive Principles of State Policy incorporated in the Constitution have to be interpreted and applied in a manner that will not abridge or take away the basic rights of the individual. In the same way the Court ruled in State of Bombay V. Bombay Education Society [1955] S. C. R 568 that even though Hindi is the lingua franca and Article 351 of the Indian Constitution makes especial provision requiring the State to promote the Hindi language such object cannot be achieved by any means which infringe the protection of the interests of minority groups guaranteed under Articles 29 and 30.

As agreed by counsel on both sides there is nowhere in the Constitution in which it is said categorically that section 64 (1) is to be construed subject to the provisions of section 56 (1) and (2). That being the case why should this Court either on its own volition or be urged to hold that it was the intention of Parliament that both sections shall be read side by side?

When Parliament in its wisdom had deemed it necessary that parliamentary approval should be sought for appointment to certain public offices it had not scrupled to say so. This, it had done in no less than ten different places in the Constitution.

[p.70]

Let us take for instance the office of the Director of Public Prosecutions. By subsection (2) of section 66, Parliament did not only unequivocally enact among other things that, the Director of Public Prosecutions shall be appointed by the President but it also added expressly that such appointment shall be subject to the approval of Parliament.

In section 65, which creates the office of Solicitor General on the other hand, the words used in section 66" and subject to the approval of Parliament" are completely avoided. Nobody has ever canvassed or suggested that the Solicitor-General should be vetted by Parliament before appointment.

Why should it be different when it comes to the appointment of the Attorney- General and Minister of Justice under section 64, which has similarly eschewed the use of the said phraseology?

This is especially so as sections 64 and 65 come immediately before section 66. Can this be said to be an oversight on the part of Parliament? With respect, I do not think so. It must have been a deliberate decision of Parliament that the appointment of the Attorney General and Minister of Justice as well as the Solicitor-General, his principal assistant shall not be subjected to parliamentary screening or investigation as long as both have otherwise fulfilled the professional qualifications stipulated in sections 64 (2) and 65 (2) respectively.

[p.71]

As a matter of law the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice need not be a registered voter or a citizen of the Republic of Sierra Leone unlike the other Ministers or Deputy Ministers nominated and appointed under the provisions of section 56 where the nominee must first be on the register of voters in order to qualify to be appointed as a Minister or Deputy Minister. This difference to me further strengthens the contention of counsel for the 2nd Respondent that the office of Attorney-General and Minister of Justice is sui generis and completely distinct from that of other Ministers in section 56,

Another example of the difference in the two positions is to be found in section 115 (4) of the Constitution. While section 115 (1) deals with the remuneration of the President and certain other public officer generally, section 115 (4) specifies the offices to which section 115 (1) applies. These offices are named therein as offices of the President, Vice President, Attorney-General and Minister of Justice, Ministers, Deputy Ministers etc.

If the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice were the same person as any other Minister of State, there would certainly have been no need to name him separately in this subsection.

The fact that the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice incidentally also takes the same oath of office like the other Ministers of Government appointed under Section 56 makes no difference whatsoever. It is indisputable that the oath set out in the Third Schedule is not confined to Ministers alone. It is the same oath that Members of [p.72] Parliament and nearly all other senior public officers subscribe to including Judges, the Secretary to the President, the D. P. P., the Solicitor-General and so forth ...

There is no better illustration in my opinion, of the uniqueness of the position of the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice than what is contained in the provisions of section 66 (7) and (8) of the Constitution that,

"(7) The powers conferred upon the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice by this section shall be vested in him to the exclusion of any other person or authority.

(8) In the exercise of the powers conferred upon him by this section the Attorney General and Minister of Justice shall not be subject to the direction or control of any other person or authority."

Which other Minister of State, may I ask, is vested or conferred with such extensive or what one might be tempted to describe as absolute power under the Constitution? By section 66 (7) and (8) he is not even subject to control by the President, the highest executive authority in the land, in the execution of his duties. Constitutionally all the Head of State can do if he is not satisfied with his performance is to remove him but he cannot tell him how to perform those functions. Can this be said of other Ministers?

Certainly not.

It is indeed true as has been submitted by Mr. Berthan Macaulay Jnr, that Section 64 unlike section 56 is not entrenched and can be amended with much more ease. But the fact that up to the present it has not been so amended indicates, by and large, acceptance of the provisions of that section. Why should we therefore import into section 64 the words, "and subject to parliamentary approval." when Parliament since the enactment of the Constitution in 1991 had not thought it fit to do so? In my view, this is the only competent authority which can do this, being the supreme legislative body and the embodiment of the representatives of the people.

We cannot in the guise of judicial interpretation introduce something into the Constitution that cannot be found there. Section 66, as we have seen in the case of the D. P. P. clearly states that parliamentary sanction is required. On the other hand, sections 64 and 65 (for the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice and for the Solicitor-General respectively) made no such requirement a prerequisite to appointment to those offices.

We have been reminded by Mr. Berthan Macaulay Jnr. that the immediately preceding Attorney-General and Minister of Justice now the Vice-President went to Parliament for approval before finally being appointed. He further argued that the previous announcements in the two editions of the Sierra Leone Gazette Nos. 316 and 319 made reference to parliamentary approval. In my respectful opinion, that anomaly had been cured by the subsequent publication in the Sierra Leone Gazette cancelling the earlier statements.

[p.74]

I do not see anything wrong or improper either in law or in principle in the Government correcting an error previously made as a result of some mistaken view of the law.

I now come to the specific questions posed by counsel for the Plaintiff i.e.

(i). Whether the appointment to the office of the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice referred to in section 64 (1) and (2) is subject to the provisions of section 56 (2) of the Constitution.

(ii). If the answer to (i) is Yes, what is the effect of an appointment to such office without parliamentary approval?

(iii). Whether the provision of sections 56 (2) - (5) inclusive are applicable to the said office of Attorney-General and Minister of Justice.

My straight-forward answer to the first question is that the appointment to the office of the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice referred to in section 64 (1) and (2) of the Constitution is not subject to the provisions of section 56 (2) of the Constitution.

From this it follows that the appointment of the 2nd Defendant on or about the 27th May 2002 as Attorney-General and Minister of Justice without parliamentary approval does not invalidate or nullify the said appointment.

[p.75]

On the third and last question, it is my considered view that the provisions of section 56 (2) - (5) inclusive, of the Constitution are not applicable to the office of Attorney-General and Minister of Justice referred to in section 64 (1) and (2) of the Constitution.

Consequently, the several Declarations sought by the Plaintiff are hereby refused.

Before I end, I wish to thank counsel on both sides for their industry and resourcefulness in the preparation and presentation of their Case. I however deeply regret the delay in concluding this matter which has been due largely to the incapacitation followed by prolonged periods of hospitalization of one of our brothers.

I make no order as to cost.

RULING

WARNE JSC

[p.99]

This is an application by way of Notice of Motion dated 18th September 2006 for an Order of certiorari to remove to the Supreme Court the Order of the Court of Appeal dated the 13th day of July 2006. IN THE MATTER Civil Appeal 60/2005 for the same to be quashed.

Before the Motion could be heard, Mr. E. Pabs-Garnon, Counsel for the 2nd respondent, raised a preliminary objection which had been filed; that the Court lacked jurisdiction to entertain the Motion. In his argument, he referred to the definition of certiorari as per Jowitt English Dictionary, 2nd Edition, page 307.

He submitted that an inferior court does not include the Court of Appeal, which is the 1st Respondent. In support of this submission, he referred to the following sections 123, 125, more particularly, 120 subsection (4),Counsel further submitted that the Court of Appeal as defined in 120(4) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No. 6 of 1991 is a superior Court not an inferior Court and is not subject to an Order of Certiorari.

Counsel submitted that the order is normally sought in the High Court. He argued that a matter of this nature, is normally on appeal. Counsel conceded that this Court has supervisory jurisdiction over all other Courts: However that jurisdiction is limited to its appellate jurisdiction, he argued. Counsel cited several authorities in support of his submissions.

Counsel submitted that there is a defect in the Order being sought, that is to say, that the Court must be seised of the proceedings of the Court of Appeal.

Finally, Counsel submitted that Section 125 is only limited for the purpose of the Supreme Court exercising its supervisory powers under Rule 88 of Supreme Court Rules No. 1 of 1982.

[p.100]

In the interest of coherence I will now consider the submissions of Mr. E. Roberts for the 1st, 4th and 6th Respondents and that of Mr. C. Taylor for the 3rd Respondent.

Mr. Roberts submitted that he relies on the submission of Mr. Pabs-Garnon and that the full and entire procedure to be applied, is to be found in Order 59 of the White Book 1960.

Mr. Taylor, for his part, also relied on the argument of Mr. Pabs-Garnon. He would wish to address Section 125 of the Constitution. Counsel cited Section 120 of Act No. 6 of 1991 and Section 74 of the Courts Act No. 31 of 1965 and added that the Common Law of England applies in Sierra Leone.

Mr. Serry-Kamal submitted that by Section 122(1) of the Constitution the Supreme Court is the final Court of Appeal and Section 125 of Act No. 6 of 1991 gives the Supreme Court supervisory jurisdiction over all other Courts in Sierra Leone. He submitted that Rule 88 gives the Court additional power of supervision over all other Courts.

Counsel further submitted that the fact that they could have appealed cannot be a basis for an objection but only a factor whether the Court could grant the relief. In support of his submissions Counsel has cited Halsbury's Laws of England 3rd Edition Vol. 11 at page 130 and the case of the King v Postmaster General exparte Carmichael (1928) 1 KB 291 at 297.

Counsel finally submitted that the Order of the Court of Appeal was a nullity and an excess of jurisdiction.

The submissions of Mr. Roberts and Mr. Taylor did not advance the submissions of Mr. Pabs-Garnon beyond the issue of lack of jurisdiction of this Court to entertain the Notice of Motion. Be that as it may, I will consider all the submissions for what they are worth.

[p.101]

I believe the starting point of this Ruling turns on the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court which is to be found in Section 122(1) of the Constitution Act No.6 of 199l, which provides:

"The Supreme Court shall be the final Court of Appeal in and for Sierra Leone and shall have such appellate and other jurisdiction as may be conferred upon it by this Constitution or any other law".

The Motion before this Court is being prosecuted pursuant to section 125 of the Constitution herein mentioned Section 125 is a further jurisdiction conferred by this Constitution, vide Section 122(1) Section 125 provides "The Supreme Court shall have supervisory jurisdiction over all other Courts in Sierra Leone and over any adjudicating authority; and in exercise of its supervisory jurisdiction shall have power to issue such directions, orders or writs including writs of habeas corpus, orders of certiorari, mandamus and prohibition as it may consider appropriate for the purposes of enforcing or securing the enforcement of its supervisory powers".

Unlike the jurisdiction of the High Court which is provided for in Section 134 of the Constitution Act No. 6 of 1991:

The High Court of justice shall have supervisory jurisdiction over all inferior and traditional Courts in Sierra Leone and any adjudicating authority, and in the exercise of its supervisory jurisdiction shall have power to issue such directives, writs and orders, including writs of habeas corpus, and orders of certiorari, mandamus and prohibition as it may consider appropriate for the purposes of enforcing or securing the enforcement of its supervisory powers",

The Supreme Court has supervisory jurisdiction over the Court of Appeal; Section 125 is clear and unequivocal. The fact that the matter is appealable does not detract from the powers conferred on the Court. In my view, the preliminary objection is a mixture of a preliminary issue and issues touching and concerning the merits of the Motion.

[p.102]

I have no doubt that by virtue of Section 122(1) and Section 125, this court has jurisdiction to entertain the motion, Rule 88(1) is irrelevant to the motion.

The amplitude of the supervisory power of the Supreme Court as conferred by Section 125 is-as wide and far-reaching as to cover any matter which is property before the Court.

Vide; "In the matter of the SC Misc. App. 6/2000

Anti Corruption Act 2000

And in the matter Between Exparte Muctaru Ola Taju Deen

Respondent and

Commissioner of the Anti Corruption Commission 1st Applicant

And the Anti Corruption Commission 2nd Applicant

And the State; This is an exparte Notice of Motion where the Supreme Court granted leave to the applicant for an Order of Certiorari to issue pursuant to Section 125 of the Constitution, Act No. 6 of 1991.

The leave having been granted the Motion for the Order of Certiorari to issue was subsequently heard by the full Supreme Court. (Unreported)"

Albeit, this was a Motion concerning an Order made by the High Court. The Court of Appeal is subordinate to the Supreme Court and by virtue of Section 125 herein before mentioned, has supervisory jurisdiction over it.

The objection is untenable.

Let the Motion be heard.

JUDGMENT

RENNER-THOMAS, C.J

This is an action commenced by an Originating Notice of Motion dated 14th September, 2006 invoking the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone pursuant to Sections 124(1) and 127(1) of the Constitution, Act. No.6 of 1991

The reliefs claimed by the Plaintiffs are the following:—

"(1) A Declaration that any Election for the Office of Paramount Chief as provided for in Section 72(5) of the Constitution, IS A PUBLIC ELECTION, the conduct and supervision of which is the responsibility of the 5th Defendant herein, as provided by Section 33 of the said Constitution of Sierra Leone.

(2) A Declaration that the Election for the Office of Paramount Chief of BIRIWA CHIEFDOM, Bombali District in the Northern Province of the Republic of Sierra Leone conducted by the 1st and 2nd Defendants on the 12th August 2006 as a result of which the 3rd Defendant was purportedly declared to be Elected as the PARAMOUNT CHIEF of BIRIWA CHIEFDOM was conducted in contravention of Section 72(5) and Section 33 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, and is therefore INVALID, NULL AND VOID.

(3) Consequent upon (2) above, FOR A Declaration that the Office of Paramount Chief of BIRIWA Chiefdom, Bombali District, in the Northern Province of Sierra Leone IS VACANT.

(4) (i) A Declaration that by Native Law and Custom and by tradition, any person who does not belong to a Ruling House is not eligible to contest for and be elected as Paramount Chief of any Chiefdom in Sierra Leone.

(ii) A Declaration that DR. ISSA M. SHERIFF not being a member of any of the Four(4) Established Ruling Houses of BIRIWA Chiefdom, Bombali District, Northern Province of Sierra Leone is not eligible to contest for the Office of Paramount Chief of the said BIRIWA Chiefdom.

[p.80]

(5) For An Order that an Election to the office of Paramount Chief of BIRIWA Chiefdom, Bombali District in the Northern Province of the Republic of Sierra Leone shall be conducted and supervised by the 5th Defendant In accordance with Section 33 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone on a date to be determined by the 5th Defendant herein.

(6) For Any Further or other Orders or directions as may be considered giving effect to, or enabling effect to be given to the declarations and orders heretofore made.

(7) That the Costs of this Action shall be paid by the 1st, 2nd and 3rd Defendants, such Costs to be taxed."

In addition to the affidavit of Dr. Sorie Kennedy Conteh, the first Plaintiff herein, sworn to on the 14th day of September, 2006 and filed together with the Originating Notice of Motion Counsel for the Plaintiff was given leave by the Court to rely also on the joint affidavit of the second to sixth Plaintiffs inclusive sworn to on the 6th day of October 2006 and filed herein.

On the 29th day of September 2006 the Statement of the Plaintiffs Case was filed together with the affidavit as required by Rule 90 (2) of the Rules of the Supreme Court, Constitutional Instrument No.1 of 1982. On the 10th day of October 2006, Osman Kanu, State Counsel as Solicitor for all the five Defendants herein filed a Statement of the Defendants case accompanied by the requisite affidavit pursuant to Rule 92 (2) of the said Rules of the Supreme Court.

A date was fixed for the hearing and arguments commenced on the 19th day of October 2006 and were concluded on the 20th day of October 2006. Though both the Plaintiffs and the Defendants did give an indication that they might be calling witnesses at the hearing no such witnesses were called.

Put briefly, the case for the Plaintiffs, as I understand it; is

[p.81]

(1) that any election for the office of a Paramount Chief is according to Section 33 of the Constitution, Act No.6 of 1991 is a public election should therefore be conducted and supervised by the fifth defendant, the National Electoral Commission.

(2) that as the election held by the first and second Defendants, the Minister of Local Government and Community Development and the Provincial Secretary, Northern Province, on the 12th August 2006 as a result of which the third Defendant, Dr. Issa M. Sheriff, was elected to the Office of the Paramount Chief of Biriwa Chiefdom in the Bombali District in the Northern Province of the Republic of Sierra Leone was not conducted in accordance with the provisions of the said Section 33 of the Constitution, the said election should be declared invalid, null and void and the office of the Paramount Chief of the said Biriwa Chiefdom should therefore be declared vacant.

The Plaintiff also challenged the eligibility of the third defendant to be a candidate in the said election and seek an Order of the Court directing the fifth Defendant thereafter to conduct the said elections in accordance with Section 33 of the Constitution.

The short answer of the Defendants to the Plaintiffs' case, as could be gleaned from the Statement of the Defendants' Case is first, that the election of a Paramount Chief is not a public election as envisaged by Section 33 of the Constitution and that the conduct of such an election is not governed by Sections 33 and 72(5) of the Constitution. Though not raised as part of their case, during the course of his argument, the Attorney-General on behalf of the five Defendants contended that this Court could not grant the several reliefs sought in the Originating Notice of Motion in its original jurisdiction.

He was allowed to raise this issue which was outside the Case for the Defendants as filed because this Court is of the view that the question as to whether the original jurisdiction had been properly invoked is one which even if not canvassed by any of the parties the Court, suo moto, can properly raise and dispose of as a matter of law.

Indeed, in my view, this issue of the original jurisdiction is one which must be dealt with as a preliminary issue because if the Court-comes to the conclusion that it lacks original jurisdiction to grant the several reliefs, sought it would-not even go into the merits of the case no matter how convincing the arguments in favour may be ex facie. (See Issa Hassan Sesay & Ors v. The President of the Special Court for Sierra Leone, SC 1/2003, judgment delivered the14th day of October 2005 and Hinga Norman v. Sama Banya, SC 2/2005, judgment delivered the 31st day of August 2005, both unreported)

The procedure adopted by this Court in the Issa Sesay v. Special Court for Sierra Leone case was to examine each relief prayed for by the plaintiff separately and individually with a view to establishing whether there was any basis for invoking the Courts original jurisdiction to grant the said relief. Where the Court comes to the conclusion that it lacks jurisdiction the proper course is not to dismiss the whole action but to have the action struck out to the extent that the Court lacks jurisdiction to grant some or all of the reliefs sought.

I am still convinced that this is the right approach and for reasons which will soon become apparent I intend to adopt it in the instant case.

In the instant case, the Plaintiffs seek to rely on sections 124(1) and 127(1) of the Constitution as the basis for invoking this courts original jurisdiction. In the Hinga Norman case (supra) this Court made a distinction between the legal effect of the provisions of section 124(1) and those of section 127(1) of the Constitution. The essential distinction is that whereas the provisions of section 124(1) are substantive vesting exclusive original jurisdiction in the Supreme Court in matters [p.84] of interpretation and enforcement of the Constitution those of Section 127(1) are purely procedural setting out the requirements for and manner in which the Constitution may be enforced by this Court.

The test to be applied where the original jurisdiction is invoked to interpret or enforce provision of the Constitution was thus stated by me in my Judgment in the Hinga Norman case (supra).

"The first test is that the Plaintiff seeking to invoke the original jurisdiction must be able to point to some provision any provision of the National Constitution that is to be enforced or interpreted. The next test is to show in addition, what act or omission makes it necessary for the provision to be enforced. The third test in my opinion, is an alternative to the second test. The Plaintiff must show that an interpretation of the particular provision of the National Constitution identified under the first test is required as a matter of law."

In the Issa Sesay case when dealing with the test for invoking the original jurisdiction of this Court for the purposes of interpretation of a substantive provision of the Constitution I cited the above dicta and reemphasized my view in the following words.

"Let me repeat what I stated in the Hinga Norman case in the passage cited earlier in this judgment i.e. in order to invoke this Court's original jurisdiction under Section 124(1) of the Constitution the plaintiff must satisfy this Court that the interpretation sought is required as a matter of Law, for example, to clarify any ambiguity or to determine the legal effect of a provision"

I may add that this Court will not allow its original jurisdiction to be invoked to interpret a provision of the Constitution in a purely hypothetical case or where [p.85] original jurisdiction to try the subject matter of the dispute is vested in some other Court and there is only a likelihood that the need for interpretation might arise in the course of the trial in that other Court. In the latter case, the jurisdiction of the other court to try the matter is not ousted merely because a question of interpretation of a provision of the Court is likely to arise in the course of the trial.

Section 124 (2) of the Constitution expressly provides for such a situation by stipulating that where a question of interpretation or even enforcement of a provision of the Constitution arises "in any proceedings in any Court, other than the Supreme Court that Court shall stay the proceedings and refer the question of law involved to the Supreme Court [not in its original jurisdiction I may add] for determination;"

I now turn to the test to be applied where the original jurisdiction of this Court is invoked to enforce compliance with a provision of the Constitution. The factual circumstances in which this could be done are spelt out in three separate sections of the Constitution. First, there is Section 28 which allows this Court's original jurisdiction to be invoked where it is alleged that there has been a violation of Sections 16 to 27 inclusive of the Constitution. Next, pursuant to Section 171 (15) the original jurisdiction of this Court could be invoked where it is alleged that any enactment is inconsistent with any provision of the Constitution. Thirdly, the original jurisdiction of this court could be invoked pursuant to Section 127 (1) where it is alleged that a statute or its content or any thing done under the authority of that or any other statute is in contravention of a provision of the Constitution.

Clearly, Sections 28 and 171 (15) are not applicable in the instant case and are not invoked by the Plaintiffs herein. In contrast, the Plaintiffs rely squarely on the provisions of Section 127(1) and by implication on those of Section 127(2) for the declarations sought in the Originating Notice of Motion.

[p.86]

For purposes of clarity I shall reproduce Section 127 of the Constitution in full. It states as follows:—

"(1) A person who alleges that an enactment or anything contained in or done under the authority of that or any other enactment is inconsistent with, or is in contravention of a provision of this Constitution, may at any time bring an action in the Supreme Court for a declaration to that effect.

(2) The Supreme Court shall, for the purpose of a declaration under subsection (1), make such orders and give such directions as it may consider appropriate for giving effect to, or enabling effect to be given to, the declaration so made.

(3) Any Person to whom an order or direction is addressed under subsection (1) by the Supreme Court shall duly obey and carry out the terms of the Order or direction.

(4) Failure to obey or to carry out the terms of an order or direction made or given under subsection (1) shall constitute a crime under this Constitution".

In the Hinga Norman case (Supra) I stated that it is important to remind oneself that the provisions of Section 127(1) of the Constitution are only applicable in the limited factual circumstances which I set out as follows:—

"Where—

(1) any person alleges that any enactment is inconsistent with or in contravention of provision of the Constitution [that] person may then invoke the Original jurisdiction conferred upon this Court by Section 124(1) for a declaration based on Section 171(15) of the Constitution that to the extent of the inconsistency the said enactment is null and void;

[p.87]

(2) any person alleges that anything contained in an enactment is inconsistent with or is in contravention of any provision of the Constitution. That person may also invoke the original jurisdiction of this Court conferred by Section 124(1) for a similar declaration as under (1) above; and

(3) any person alleges that anything done under the authority of an invalid enactment or any enactment is inconsistent with or in contravention of the Constitution. That person may equally invoke the original jurisdiction of this Court conferred by Section 124(1) for a similar deduction as under (1) and (2) above."

Thus, in the case of Ngandi T.A. Sokoyama v. The Attorney-General and Minister of Justice (SC 1/2005, judgment delivered the 6th day of September 2006, unreported) this Court held that its original jurisdiction had been properly invoked to enable it grant a declaration that the provision contained in the Provinces Act, Cap 60 of the Laws of Sierra Leone, 1960, as amended which required a plaintiff to seek the consent of the Attorney-General before bringing an action to challenge the validity of an election of a Paramount Chief was inconsistent with Section 133 (1) of the Constitution and was therefore null and void. Section 133(1) of the Constitution provides that:

"Where a person has a claim against the Government that claim may be enforced as a right by proceedings taken against the Government for that purpose, without the grant of a fiat or the use of the process known as petition of right".

Having thus set out the circumstances in which the original jurisdiction of this Court could be invoked I shall now proceed to examine the several reliefs claimed by the Plaintiffs in the instant case to ascertain whether they could properly be granted by this Court in its original jurisdiction.

The first relief sought is a declaration that any election for the office of Paramount Chief as provided for in Section 72(5) of the Constitution is a public election; the [p.88] conduct and supervision of which is the responsibility of the fifth defendant herein as provided by Section 33 of the said Constitution.

To be able to decide whether or not this relief could properly be granted by this Court in its original jurisdiction it is in my opinion necessary as a matter of law and based upon what I said above first to decide whether this Court ought to interpret Sections 33 and 72(5) of the Constitution and secondly based on the outcome of such interpretation determine whether the factual circumstances of this case is covered by the provisions of Section 127 (1) of the Constitution

For the reasons already stated above, I hold that this Court cannot properly refuse to exercise its original exclusive jurisdiction to interpret the provisions of Section 33 and 72(5) of the Constitution in the circumstances of the instant case and I shall now proceed to do so.

Section 33 of the Constitution provides as follows:—

"Subject to the provisions of this Constitution, the Electoral Commission shall be responsible for the conduct and supervision of the registration of voters for, and of, all public elections and referenda and for that purpose shall have power to make regulations by statutory instrument for the registration of voters the conduct of Presidential Parliamentary or Local Government elections and referenda, and other matters connected therewith including regulation for voting by proxy."

Counsel for the Plaintiffs urged this Court to hold that as long as an election could properly be defined as a public election it becomes the responsibility of the Electoral Commission to conduct and supervise that election. Based upon the definition he culled from the Oxford Concise Dictionary he urged this Court to conclude that any election for the office of Paramount Chief is a public election and therefore to be conducted and supervised by the Electoral Commission.

On the other hand, the Attorney-General, on behalf of the Defendants contended that the term "public election" in Section 33 of the Constitution cannot possibly be referable to the election of Paramount Chiefs as this was not the intention of the legislature which, in contrast to the express reference to Presidential Parliamentary, Local Government Election and referenda, made no reference to elections of Paramount Chiefs. He went on to argue that such elections are governed by customary law and usage as provided for in Section 5 of the Provinces Act, Cap 60 of the Laws of Sierra Leone, 1960 as amended.

As stated above, Counsel for the Plaintiffs made reference to the Concise Oxford Dictionary to ascertain the meaning of the term "public". I must here state that whereas recourse may properly be had to a dictionary or other work of reference to ascertain the meaning of a term used in an enactment the dictionary cited should be "well-known and authorized" (see Marquis of Camden v IRC [1914] 1KB 641 of 647, CA per Cozens-Harding M.R). Besides, the Court remains free to reach its own conclusion as to the legal meaning of a word based on other considerations.

Indeed, it is most essential in "the process of statutory interpretation to bear in mind the fundamental distinction between the literal meaning of a term or an enactment and its legal meaning. This distinction between literal meaning and legal meaning according to Benion on Statutory Interpretation "lies at the heart of the problem of statutory interpretation" (see Statutory Interpretation by Francis Benion, 3rd edition at p.343) The function of the court as interpreter of an enactment is to determine the legal meaning of the enactment, that is the meaning that correctly conveys the legislative intention. Therefore, the main object in construing an enactment is to ascertain the intention of Parliament as expressed in the enactment considering it as a whole and in its context. For this reason, the legal meaning may or may not correspond to the grammatical or literal meaning.

How then do we arrive at the legal meaning? According to Halsbury's Laws of England the legal meaning:

“is arrived at by applying to the enactment taken with any other relevant and admissible material, the rules, principles, presumptions and canons which govern statutory interpretation. These may be referred to as the interpretative criteria or guides to legislative intention". (See Halsbury's Laws of England, 4th edition, vol. 44(1), para. 1373)

In the next paragraph it is stated further that:

"If on an informed interpretation there is no real doubt that a particular meaning of an enactment is to be applied, that meaning is to be taken as its legal meaning. If there is a real doubt, it is to be resolved by applying the interpretative criteria" (Halsbury's, supra para 1374).

In the instant case, each party is contending for a different legal meaning of the enactment contained in Section 33 of the Constitution. As it is put in Halsbury's Laws of England "when the relevant interpretative factors do not all point one way it is necessary for the Court to assess their respective weights and determine which of the opposing constructions, on balance, it favours" (Halsbury, supra, para 1378) (see also dicta of Lord Reid in Mansell 1 v Olins [1974] 1 All E.R 16 at 18, [1974] 3 WLR 835 at 837, HL, and those of Donalson M.R in Nancollas v Insurance Officer [1985].

In the light of the facts of the instant case what then are the relevant interpretative criteria applicable and what are the guides or interpretative factors weighing in favour or against such application.

The first criteria applicable in my view is what is commonly referred to in the authorities as the plain meaning rule. According to Counsel for the Plaintiffs the word "public" used to define election is capable of one meaning only i.e. the opposite of private affecting the community as a whole or a portion of the community. Based on this definition Counsel for the Plaintiffs contended that an [p.91] election for a Paramount Chief is a public election and therefore falls within the category of elections envisaged by Section 33 of the Constitution.

Let me hasten to say that there are several factors which raise a real doubt in my mind as to whether that meaning of the word public is the one intended by the legislature when it enacted section 33 of the Constitution. First, the opening words or Section 33 i.e. "subject to the provisions of this Constitution" point to the fact that the Section should not be read and construed in isolation but in the light of any other related provisions of the Constitution that may narrow or limit its meaning and operation. In my view, this is exactly what Section 72 of the Constitution does particularly Section 72(5) which provides that:

"Subject to the provisions of this Constitution and in furtherance of the provisions of this Section Parliament shall make laws for the qualification, election, powers, functions, removal and other matters connected with Chieftaincy".

The clear intention of Parliament, in my opinion, to be gleaned from Section 72(5) is that Parliament is to enact special provisions dealing inter alia with the elections of Paramount and other Chiefs. In contrast, if it was the intention of Parliament that the regime established by Section 72 was to be read together with or be dependent on that to be found in Section 33, which deals with other public elections named therein, the draftsman would have used appropriate wording such as "without prejudice to the provision of Section 33" to qualify the provisions of section 72.

Another interpretative criteria which is applicable to the instant case is that relating to the construction of general and particular enactments. Prima facia, a general enactment should receive a general construction. Thus "public elections" in Section 33 of the Constitution should cover all elections that fit into that category. However, the fact that general words are used in an enactment is not in itself conclusive reason why every case falling literally within them should be [p.92] governed by those words and the context may indicate that they should be given a restrictive meaning.

In the instant case, Section 33 is a general enactment whereas Section 72 is a particular enactment dealing only with Chieftaincy matters. According to Halsbury's Laws of England:

"Whenever there is general enactment in an Act which, if taken in its most comprehensive sense would overrule a particular enactment in the same Act, the particular enactment must be operative, and the general enactment must be taken to affect only the other parts of the Act to which it may apply properly", (supra, para 1486).

This distinction is also recognized in the maxim generalia specialibus non derogant.

Another interpretative criteria that is relevant in the instant case is the linguistic canon which states that expressio unis est exclusio alterius (to express one thing is [by implication] to exclude another). This principle is applied in particular where a formula, such as "public elections" in the instant case, which in itself may or may not include a certain class is accompanied by words of extension or exception naming only some members of that class the remaining members of the class being taken to be excluded from the formula. In this case, I hold the view that words Presidential, Parliamentary, Local and referenda are words of extension accompanying the formula 'public elections" utilized by the draftsman without any specific definition of the same and thus by implication excluding others of the same or similar class..

Finally, the fact that Parliament reserved to itself in Section 72(5) the right to make laws for the qualifications, election, powers, and other matters connected with Chieftaincy as opposed to leaving it to the Electoral Commission to regulate the conduct and supervision of Chieftaincy election by statutory instrument as [p.93] under section 33 leaves me in no doubt that Parliament did not intend to have paramount Chieftaincy elections subsumed within the category of public elections dealt with in the context of Section 33 of the Constitution.

Having reached this conclusion, I do not think it is necessary for me to go further and consider whether this Court could properly make the declaration sought as the first relief in the Originating Notice of Motion.

The declaration sought as the second relief is as follows;

"that the Election for the Office of Paramount Chief of BIRIWA CHIEFDOM, Bombali District in the Northern Province of the Republic of Sierra Leone conducted by the 1st and 2nd Defendants on the 12th August 2006 as a result of which the 3rd Defendant was purportedly declared to be Elected as the PARAMOUNT CHIEF of BIRIWA CHIEFDOM was conducted in contravention of Section 72(5) and Section 33 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, and is therefore INVALID, NULL AND VOID"

I shall deal first with the contention that the conduct of the said election by the first and second Defendants was a violation of Section 33 of the Constitution. Having held that the said election was not a public election within the meaning of that Section it follows that it should not have been conducted and supervised in accordance with the provisions of the said section which stipulates inter alia that the Electoral. Commission was to be responsible for the conduct and supervision of the registration of voters and vested it with powers for that purpose to make regulations not only for the registration of voters but also for the conduct of elections mentioned therein I take judicial notice of the fact that the Electoral Commission has never made any regulations, by statutory instrument or otherwise for the registration of voters or the conduct of Paramount chieftaincy elections. From the affidavit evidence before this Court it is common ground that the person responsible for the revision of the list of Chiefdom Councilors who are the electors in such election is the Provincial Secretary.

For all the above reasons I am unable to hold that the conduct of the said election by the first and second Defendants was in contravention of section 33 of the Constitution. The declaration sought could therefore not be granted by this Court in its original jurisdiction.

Though it is apparently not the case, I am obliged to consider whether the allegation that conduct of the said election by the first and second defendant was indeed in contravention of Section 72(5). This is so because if it could be established that there was a violation of any provision of the Constitution involved in the process then the Plaintiffs could properly invoke the provisions of Section 127(1) to have this Court declare the said election is invalid, null and void.

I shall once more set out the exact words of Section 72(5) of the Constitution for emphasis and clarity. The Section merely provides that:

"Subject to the provisions of this Constitution and in furtherance of this Section, Parliament shall make laws for the qualification, election, powers, functions removal and other matters connected with Chieftaincy".

With the greatest respect to Counsel for the Plaintiffs, I fail to see how the first and second Defendants could be said to have acted in any way in contravention of the above provision. The present position of which this Court is obliged to take judicial notice is that since the enactment of the Constitution no law has been made by Parliament as stipulated by Section 72(5). Even if such law had been enacted by Parliament and the conduct of the Defendants complained of in the instant case had been a contravention of the provisions of such law it would not have been tenable to argue that they would thereby have violated the provisions of Section 72(5) of the Constitution so as to invoke the original jurisdiction of this Court to deal with the said contravention…

[p.95]

For the above reason, the declaration sought as the second relief could not be made by this Court. Since the declaration sought as the third relief is a consequential one dependent on the second declaration which this court has already declined to make, it follows that it could not properly be made and the invitation to make it is hereby declined.

I now turn to the two declarations sought as the fourth relief in the Originating Notice of Motion which read as follows:

"(i) A Declaration that by Native Law and Custom and by tradition, any person who does not belong to a Ruling House is not eligible to contest for and be elected as Paramount Chief of any Chiefdom in Sierra Leone.

(ii) A Declaration that DR. ISSA M. SHERIFF not being a member of any of the Four(4) Established Ruling Houses of BIRIWA Chiefdom, Bombali District, Northern Province of Sierra Leone is not eligible to contest for the Office of Paramount Chief of the said BIRIWA Chiefdom."

Counsel for the Plaintiffs has not been able to point to any provision of the Constitution which would serve as the basis for the making of these declarations by this Court in its original jurisdiction. Indeed, this is not surprising because it is not the Constitution that governs the question of eligibility to contest for and be elected as a Paramount Chief of any Chiefdom in Sierra Leone. It is a matter that is governed partly by customary law and partly by statute, the relevant statute being the Provinces Act Cap 60 as amended. This, until such time as Parliament acts in accordance with its mandate contained in Section 72(5) of the Constitution by enacting a new law to govern the question of eligibility. There is nothing in Cap 60 which makes it incumbent-on this Court to ensure compliance with its provisions by invoking its original jurisdiction. I hold that the said declarations sought as part of the fourth relief in the Originating Notice of Motion could not be made by this Court in its original jurisdiction.

Finally, the fifth relief is for an Order that an election to the office of Paramount Chief of Biriwa Chiefdom shall be conducted and supervised by the 5th defendant in accordance with Section 33 of the Constitution on a date to be determined by the defendant herein.

Before proceeding to examine the question whether or not this Order ought to be made as a matter of law I wish to examine the state and effect of the available affidavit evidence. This discloses that the 5th Defendant was at some stage invited by the Permanent Secretary of the Ministry of Local Government and Community Development, according to the express words contained in Exh "M" attached to the affidavit in support of the Originating Notice of Motion sworn to by the first Plaintiff, to "put in place modalities for the said elections". This request was declined for reasons stated in the said Exh "M" signed by the chairperson, Chief Electoral Commissioner.

I need not enquire into the validity of the reasons advanced by the Electoral Commissioner because, based upon the conclusion I reached above after a proper construction of Section 33 of the Constitution, I am of the view that the Electoral Commission was under no constitutional duty to be responsible for the conduct and supervision of the said election. There is no doubt that based on the available evidence the Commission has a role to play in the process of electing Paramount Chiefs. I am not sure what is the legal basis of this role but I am satisfied it does not derive from the provisions of Section 33 of the Constitution.

This situation could be contrasted with that relating to the presidential election. Apart from Section 33 which makes the Electoral Commission expressly responsible for the conduct and supervision of such an election there is Section 45 which not only designates the Chief Electoral Commissioner the Returning Officer for the election of a President but the Section also expressly vests original jurisdiction in this Court to hear and determine any question which may arise relating to the conduct of the said election.

[p.97]

In the instant case, I am of the view that this Court cannot make the said Order sought in its original jurisdiction for the same reasons that it cannot make the declarations sought that the election of the third Defendant is void or that the office of Paramount Chief of Biriwa Chiefdom is vacant or that the third Defendant was not eligible to contest the said election. In short, this is not the appropriate forum to have these matters determined. I hereby decline to make the Order sought.

In view of this Court's lack of original jurisdiction to make the several declarations and Order sought in the Originating Notice of Motion for the reasons stated above, I hereby make the following Orders:

That the Originating Notice of Motion herein dated 14th September 2006 is hereby struck out;

Each party is to bear its own costs of this action.

SEABOARD WEST AFRICA LIMITED — RESPONDENT

A.F. SERRY-KAMAL Esq. for the Appellant

A. Tejan-Cole Esq. with him M.B. Michael Esq. for the Respondent

DELIVERED THE 11TH DAY OF OCTOBER 2006

JUDGMENT

RENNER-THOMAS C.J.

This is an appeal by Eric James (carrying business as James International Enterprises) (hereafter referred to as the Plaintiff/Appellant) against a decision of the Court of Appeal for Sierra Leone dated 12th

January 2001 setting aside a Judgment of the High Court given in favour of the Plaintiff/Appellant on the 2nd day of August 1986.

[p.106]

In his statement of claim the Plaintiff/Appellant pleaded inter alia as follows:—

a. By an agreement dated the 27th day of June 1985 between the defendant company of the one part and the plaintiff of the other registered as number 126/85 in volume 38 at page 105 in the Book of Miscellaneous Instruments kept in the office of the Registrar General for Sierra Leone the defendant appointed the plaintiff as Distributor of its "Life Flour" in Sierra Leone on the following terms:

"(1) Seaboard appoints James sole Distributor of "Life Flour" in Sierra Leone and hereby undertakes not to sell "Life Flour" to any other person at anytime during the currency of the agreement subject to the terms and conditions hereafter set forth ".

"(2) Seaboard shall sell an initial number of 100,000 bags of 50 pounds each of "Life Flour" to the Distributor during the currency of this agreement and the Distributor agrees to buy the first 100,000 bags of such flour milled by Seaboard after [the] date hereof".

"(3) Seaboard shall sell "Life Flour" at the government approved price to the Distributor and the Distributor shall pay 3 U.S. dollars as the price per bag based on the current official exchange rate to a bank account as designated by Seaboard the remainder of the price shall be paid in Leones as directed by Seaboard".

"(4) The distributor shall take delivery and collect daily from Seaboard's premises Cline Town the bags of flour in such quantities as Seaboard shall from time to time mill".

"(5) The distributor shall pay to Seaboard the price herein before mentioned in the manner hereinbefore described on or before it collects and takes delivery of the bags of flour from Seaboard".

[p.107]

"(6) Upon the request of the distributor made at any time before the distributor shall have taken delivery and paid for ninety thousand bags of "Life Flour" Seaboard agrees to sell to the distributor a further one hundred thousand bags of flour on the same terms and conditions as the original one hundred thousand bags of flour after the distributor has taken delivery and paid for one hundred and ninety thousand bags since the inception of this contract, Seaboard will discuss with the distributor if the distributor so desires the sale of and additional quantity of flour under the terms and conditions as se herein ".

"(7) Any variation of the terms of this agreement shall be valid provided such variations is made in writing and mutually agreed to by the parties".

"(8) If any dispute or difference shall arise between Seaboard and the distributor with regard to this agreement then in every such case the dispute shall be referred to an Arbitrator in the case of the parties mutually agreeing on one otherwise three Arbitrators are to be appointed one by each party and the third who shall be chairman appointed by the two appointees of the parties the award of the Arbitrator or Arbitrators shall be binding on both parties ".

"(9) This agreement shall be governed by the laws of Sierra Leone ".

"(10) Either party shall have the right to terminate this exclusive arrangement upon any default by the other party not cured within ten days or by written notice ".

b. That sometime in 1986 the said agreement was varied to allow the parties to agree to the price of flour to be paid in leones or dollars.

[p.107]

c. That the Defendant, the Respondent in this appeal, in breach of the agreement proceeded to recruit other distributors. The Plaintiff/Appellant elected to keep the agreement alive and agreed to accept in lieu a commission paid by the Respondent for all flour produced and sold through various distributors.

d. That subsequently on or about September 1992 the Respondent stopped supplying flour to the Plaintiff/Appellant and refused to pay the Plaintiff/Appellant any further commission.

In his prayer the Plaintiff/Appellant claimed:—

I. Arrears of commission already earned before the breach of the revised contract;

II. Loss of commission or profit from September 1992 until payment;

III. That an account be taken of all bags of flour sold by the Defendant since the revision of the contract;

IV. Specific performance of the revised agreement;

V. Any further of other relief; and

VI. Costs.

In the defence filed on behalf of the Respondent it was contended inter alia that:—

a) The Plaintiff/Appellant in fact breached the agreement by failing to pay U$3.00 per bag of the flour as required by clause 3 of the agreement and by failing, to pay in advance for flour supplied to the Plaintiff/Appellant by the Respondent as required by clause 5 of the agreement;

b) That there was never any variation of the agreement as alleged or at all;

c) "As regards paragraph 4 of the statement of claim, the defendant denies that the said Mr. Leslie Thompson acted in breach of the agreement as [p.108] alleged and will contend that the said Leslie Thompson was led to continue to pay commissions to the Plaintiff because he was led to believe that there was a variation of the original contract in the terms indicated to him by the plaintiff and did so only out of abundance of caution, but when he discovered that no variation (though suggested) was accepted by the defendant, he stopped paying commissions ";

d) "The primary consideration for concluding the said contract was to afford foreign exchange to the defendant and by failing to do so, the very basis of the said contract was destroyed by the plaintiff";

That Plaintiff/Appellant joined issue with the Respondent on the several contentions raised in the defence.

On the 24th day of March 1995 the Respondent was granted leave to amend the defence filed by adding new paragraphs 10 and 11 which read as follows:—

"10. The Defendant will aver that as a result of the sale of an initial number of 100,000 bags of 50 pounds each life flour to the Plaintiff as provided for in Clause 2 of the agreement and the sale of a further 100,000 bags of flour as provided for by Clause 6, the Defendant had discharged his obligations under the said Agreement.

11. Further and in the alternative that as a result of several breaches of the agreement on the part of the Plaintiff, the Defendant was exonerated from further performing any of his obligations under the said Agreement by reason of the said breaches.

[p.109]

PARTICULARS OF BREACHES OF THE AGREEMENT

a. The Plaintiff failed to pay the U$3 (Three United States Dollars) of the price per bag as required by clause 3 of the Agreement.

b. The Plaintiff failed to pay to the Defendant on or before it collected and took delivery of the bags of flour for the Defendant as required by Clause 5 of the Agreement. Further that the Plaintiff on several occasions paid to the Defendants cheques which were not honoured by the Plaintiff's Bankers.

c. That the Plaintiff failed to take delivery and/or to collect the bags of flour from the Defendant".

It was on the basis of the above pleadings that the matter proceeded to trial.

During the course of the trial the Plaintiff/Appellant gave evidence as PW4 he having been interposed during the cross-examination of PW3, Frederick Chrispin Jones. During the cross-examination of the Plaintiff/Appellant by Counsel for the Respondent the learned trial judge recorded the following responses:—

"As Eric James carrying on business as James International Enterprises I had no staff.

So Cole was never employed by Eric James carrying on business as James International Enterprises but he was working for J.I. enterprises Ltd.

I now say that in fact there were three entities i.e.

(1) ERIC JAMES CARRYING ON BUSINESS AS JAMES INT. ENT.

(2) JAMES INT. ENT.

(3) JAMES INT. ENT (LTD).

I was involved in all three of them.

[p.110]

James Int. Ent. was a business name.

It has now been incorporated into James Int. Ent. Ltd.

In fact, there are now only two of these entities because James Int. Ent. has now ceased to exist. It ceased in 1985. It was registered in 1974. I do not know whether the registration has been cancelled.

It was a business name used by several business including James Int. Ent. Ltd.

Eric James carrying on business as James Int. Ent. was registered in Germany in 1970.

It was never registered in Sierra Leone ".

These answers were in fact given on the 31st January 1995. Thereafter, the case for the Plaintiff was closed. The case for the Defendant was opened on 5th May 1990 and closed on 12th January 1996. One of the witness called by the Defendant was Esther Massallay who gave evidence as DW4 on the 15th November 1995 and had this to say:—

I am a clerk at the Administrator and Registrar-General's office. Some of my duties are to keep record of registered documents. I am also custodian of documents relating to business registration.

I was served with a subpoena dated 6th day of November, 1995. I was asked to produce the record of business registration of Eric James carrying on business as JAMES INTERNATIONAL ENTERPRISES, [emphasis mine]. I do not have the record that I was requested to produce, I searched for it but I found no record. "

[p.111]

Counsel for the Defendant, the Respondent in this appeal, commenced his address on 31st January 1996. During the course of this address, Counsel for the Defendant had this to say:—

"I submit that there was no entity known as Eric James carrying on business as James International Enterprises in Sierra Leone. Easter Massallay then also said that she never found any business known as Eric James carrying on business as James International Enterprises.

I would ask the court to draw the inference from the evidence that Eric James purported to carry on business under the business name of James International Enterprises and in doing so he acted illegally and in breach of the business name registration Act. "

On 11th March 1996, to be precise, a Motion was filed on behalf of the Defendant seeking leave to amend the amended defence filed on 24th March 1995 by adding the following new paragraph 12:—

"That the contract which is the subject herein cannot in law be enforced"

On 21st March 1996 the learned trial judge gave a Ruling refusing the application to amend and eventually, as stated above, gave judgment for the Plaintiff/Appellant.

As part of his judgment the learned trial judge held that the words "carrying on business of James International Enterprises" added to the name Eric James of the Plaintiff/Appellant did not constitute a business name which ought to be registered under the Business Names Registration Act, Cap 257.

[p.112]

As a result, in the amended Notice of Appeal to the Court of Appeal the Defendant contended as follows:—

"That the learned trial judge failed to consider sufficiently or at all the submissions that James International Enterprises Limited and Eric James (Carrying on Business as James International Enterprises) were separate and distinct entities in law.

The learned trial judge was wrong in law in:—

(a) holding that Counsel for the plaintiff ought not to have addressed them on the non-registration of the plaintiffs/respondent's business.

(b) His interpretation of the Business Names Registration Act Cap. 257 of the Laws of Sierra Leone 1960.

(c) In refusing the Plaintiff/Appellant's (defendant's application to amend their defence by Notice of Motion dated 11th March, 1996.

(d) Holding that James International Enterprises is not a business name and consequently wrong in failing to consider the effects of non registration thereof under the Business Names Act Cap. 257 Laws of Sierra Leone 1960.

In dealing with these grounds of appeal Alhadi J.A. delivering the judgment of the Court of Appeal, had this to say:—

"It is not in dispute that the plaintiff/respondent were [sic] carrying on business in this country as a sole proprietor under the name of the title of the action herein. There is evidence the business was not registered as [p.113] required in the statute. The agreement, exhibit "A" was entered into by the plaintiff/respondent by that name ".

He continued by asking:—

"What then is the effect of non-registration? It cannot be doubted that a party who is guilty of a breach of a statutory provision which is mandatory cannot recover any benefit arising from transaction entered into in that business name. For such proprietor lacks the legal status or capacity to institute any such proceedings. For he suffers the full impact of the maxim ex turpi causa non oritur and all the remedies in law are denied to him.

The position will be otherwise were an individual carrying on business in a name or style other than his own when he could be sued in his own name followed by the words "trading as A.B. or in his business name followed by the words ("a trading name") see Mason & Sons v. Mogridge (1892) 5TLR 805.

In this case the Plaintiff/Respondent was under a legal obligation to register the business under Cap 257 in the manner provided for in Sections 3, 4, 5 and 6. Non-compliance is punishable on summary conviction to [sic] a fine. Since a violation of these statutory provision is attendant with criminal sanctions any transactions conducted by it in that name is tainted with illegality (emphasis mine) and therefore unenforceable since the court will not lend its aid to it. "

[p.114]

The learned Justice of Appeal then cited the case of Nabieu Amadu v Aiah Sidiki (1972-73) ALR (SL) 421 in which the Privy Council held that possession of diamond by the Plaintiff/Appellants in contravention of Section 67 of the Minerals Act, Cap 196 of the Laws of Sierra Leone 1960 was an illegality which deprived the Plaintiff/Appellant of a claim for either the return of the diamond or for the payment of the proceeds of its sale without relying on the illegal possession. According to the Board "in these circumstances the fact that the illegality was not pleaded not argued at this trial is of no consequence". Alhadi J.A. also cited the case of Strongman (1945) Limited v. Incock (1955)2 QB in which Denning M.R. expressed the view that the plaintiff could not sue on a contract for work done which was done in contravention of the Defence Regulations 56A as it was a work carried out without proper license which makes it a criminal offence.

These two cases, according to Alhadi J.A., were similar to the instant case in that violation of statutory provision was made a criminal offence punishable with imprisonment or fine.

Alhadi J.A. then went on to refer to the refusal of the learned trial judge to allow the Defendant to amend its defence ''by pleading non-registration of the plaintiff/respondent pursuant to the above provision of the law".

He continued by stating that:

"The issue therein raised was of a fundamental nature as it goes to the jurisdiction of the court to adjudicate on the matter before it. For this was a non-compliance with mandatory statutory provisions which renders the proceedings void and a nullity. Also this was an opportunity for the judge to have adjudicated [p.115] on this all important issue instead of abdicating his responsibility by holding that the words "(carrying on business as James International Enterprises)" are descriptive of Eric James where there is glaring evidence that the words represent a business name used in all the business entities set up by him ".

The learned Justice of Appeal finally had this to say about the refusal of the leave to amend by the learned trial judge:—

"In my view if the amendment had been granted, which I am of the view ought to have been the plaintiff/respondent would have availed himself of his undoubted right to lead evidence of registration of the business, an attempt which was unsuccessfully made before us to tender fresh evidence of such registration and was refused by us that the issue of non-registration was already a Ground of Appeal in these proceedings. The learned trial judge ought to have allowed amendment. His refusal in my view was wrong. The Appeal on this ground is allowed".

In the Notice of Appeal to this Court against the decision of the Court of Appeal the Plaintiff/Appellant canvassed several grounds of appeal but none against the findings of the Court of Appeal that the learned trial judge should have allowed the application of the defendant to amend his defence so as to raise the issue of non-compliance with the Business Names Registration Act, Cap 257 of the Laws of Sierra Leone 1960.

Despite this apparent concession on the part of the Plaintiff/Appellant it is pertinent to note that the Respondent did not avail itself of the opportunity afforded it during the hearing of this appeal to apply for leave to amend the defence to raise the issue of non-compliance with Cap 257.

[p.116]

Indeed, it was strongly contended by Counsel for the Respondent before this Court that non-compliance with the relevant provisions of Cap 257 not only rendered the agreement in the instant case unenforceable but rendered it illegal and therefore a nullity. Counsel for the Respondent submitted that the Court must take notice of any illegality in a contract on which the Plaintiff/Appellant is suing, if it appears on the face of the contract or from the evidence brought before it by either party; although the Respondent did not specifically plead it.

Counsel for the Respondent relied on the following cases:—

Gedge v. Royal Exchange Assurance (1900) 2 QB.214

North-Western Salt Co v. Electrolytic Alkali Co (1914) A.C. 461

Re Robinson's Settlement Grant v. Hobbs (1912) 1 Ch. 724; and

Lipton v. Powell (1921) 2 K.B. 5

He also relied on passages to be found in Chitty on Contract, 22nd [sic] Edition paragraph 845 at page 368 under the rubric ''Contract illegal or void by statute — statutory voidness distinguished from common law voidness"

Before reviewing the relevant authorities and expounding on the state of the law governing unenforceable contracts I think this is a convenient stage to set out the provisions of the Business Names Registration Act, Cap 257 of the Laws of Sierra Leone 1960. The relevant provisions are contained in Sections 3, 4, 5, 7 and 12 of the Act and are expressed as follows:—

"3. The following proprietors and firms shall be registered in the manner directed by this Act—

(a) every proprietor having a place of business in Sierra Leone and carrying on business under a business name which does not consist of his ordinary name without any addition thereto;

(b) every firms having a place of business in Sierra Leone and carrying on business under a business name which does not consist of the ordinary names of all the partners in the firm -without any addition thereto;

(c) every proprietor or firm having a place of business in Sierra Leone who or a partner in which has either before or after the coming into operation of this Act changed his name, including any proprietor or partner who, being a woman, has changed her name in consequence of marriage;

Provided that—

(i) where any addition to the ordinary name of proprietor or the ordinary names of the partners in a firm carrying on any business merely indicates that the business is carried on in succession to a proprietor or firm formerly carrying on the same business that addition shall not of itself render registration necessary;

(ii) where two or more partners have the same surname the addition of the letter "s " at the end of that surname shall not of itself render registration necessary; and

(iii) where the business is carried on by a receiver or manager appointed by any Court, registration shall not be necessary.

4. Every proprietor or firm required under this Act to be registered shall furnish to the Registrar General a statement in writing in the prescribed form signed by [p.118] the proprietor or by all the partners in the firm and containing the following particulars—

(a) the business name of the business in respect of which the proprietor or firm is required to be registered;

(b) the general nature of the business;

(c) the principal place of business;

(d) all other places at which the business is carried on;

(e) the usual residence and any other business occupation of the proprietor, or of every partner in the firm, and where the proprietor or any of the partners in the firm has either before or after the commencement of this Act changed his name, or, being a woman, has changed her name in consequence of marriage, any name by which the proprietor or partner was formerly known;

(f) If the business is commenced after the coming into operation of this Act [sic] Ordinance, the date of commencement of the business.

5. The particulars required to be furnished under this Act shall in the Act comes into operation be furnished within fourteen days after the commencement of the business, which this Act comes into operation, within three months from that date…….

7. If any proprietor or firm fails to comply with any of the provisions of section 4 or section 6 the proprietor or every partner in the firm, as the case may be, shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine of five pounds for every day during which the default continues, and the Court by which the offender is tried shall order a statement of the required particulars to be furnished to the Registrar General within such time as may be specified in the order.

[p.119]

12. Where any proprietor or firm required under this Act to furnish a statement of particulars or of any change in particulars makes default in so doing the rights of the proprietor of firm under or arising out of any contract made or entered into by him or it or on his or its behalf at any time while he or it is so in default, in relation to the business in respect of which the statement of particulars is required, shall not be enforceable by action or other legal proceedings either in the business name under which the business is carried on or otherwise:

Provided that—

(a} the proprietor or firm in default may apply to the High Court for relief against the disability imposed by this section, and the Court, on being satisfied that the default was due to accident or inadvertence or that on other grounds it is just and equitable to grant relief, may grant the relief applied for either generally or as respects any particular contract and on such conditions as the Court impose;

(b) if any action or proceeding shall be commenced by any other part) against the proprietor or firm in default to enforce the rights of that other party in respect of the contract, nothing herein contained shall preclude the proprietor or firm from enforcing in that action or proceeding by way of counter-claim, set-off or otherwise, such rights as he or it may have against the other party in respect of the contract. "

The above provisions of Cap 257 are very similar to, if not identical with, the provisions contained in the English Business Names Act 1916. Cases decided by the English Courts in which the latter statute has been interpreted and applied are [p.120] therefore of great assistance in interpreting the provisions of Cap 257 that I have cited above.

One such case is Hawkins and Another v. Duche (1921) K.B.D. in which Section 8 of the 1916 Act, in the same terms as Section 12 of Cap 257, was considered by McCardie J. who was in that case dealing with the circumstances under which the Court could grant relief to a defaulting proprietor or firm as stipulated in the proviso to Section 8 of the 1916 Act and S.I 2 of our Cap 257. He compared and contrasted the provisions in the English Statute of Frauds 1688 and section 4 of the English Sale of Goods Act 1893 on the one hand and Section 8 of the 1916 Act on the other and then went on to state as follows:—

"The Statute of Frauds and Section 4 of the Sale of Goods Act 1893 give no power to any Court to grant relief against non-compliance with those provisions. Here the question is as to the extent of the wide relieving power given by the Act of 1916 itself. 1 point out also that s. 4 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, says that the "contract" shall not be enforceable, whereas s. 8 of the Act of 1916 says that the "rights" of the defaulter under the contract shall not be enforceable. The contract itself is in no way invalidated by the Act of 1916 [emphasis mine] and subheads (b) and (c) of the first proviso are well worthy of attention. "

I am also of the opinion that a contract entered into whilst one of the party continues to be in default of the relevant provisions of Cap 257 is in no way invalidated by Section 12 of that Act, and I so hold.

The effect of non-compliance with the provisions of Section 12 of Cap. 257 is to be distinguished from that of non-compliance with the provisions of certain other [p.121] statutes such as the Minerals Act, Cap. 196 which was dealt with in Nabieu Amadu v. Aiah Sidiki (supra) or the English Money Lenders Act 1900 (see In Re Robinson's Settlement (supra); Lipton v. Powell and another (supra); of London and Harrowgate Securities Ltd. v. Pitts (1975) QBD). The distinction is that in the cases relied on by Counsel for the Respondent and cited above the statutes make non-compliance with the requirement for a license or registration illegal and provide no relief in the event of non-compliance with the relevant statutory provision.

Not only does Section 12 of Cap. 257 make it possible for a defaulting party to apply for relief against the disability imposed by the Section but by virtue of proviso (b) to Section 12 the defaulting party may maintain any rights he may have against the other party in respect of the contract "by way of counter-claim, set-off or otherwise ". In the light of such express provision I fail to see how it could be said, as the Court of Appeal held, that non-compliance with the provision of Section 12 of Cap 257 rendered the contract in the instant case illegal, void and of no effect. I disagree and hold that despite the criminal sanction imposed by Section 7 of Cap 257 the Act could not operate to invalidate a contract made in violation of the relevant provisions of the Act. (see Chitty on Contracts 28th edition, vol. 1, paragraph 1-041 under the rubric: "Unenforceable Contracts"; see also Cope v. Rowland (1836) 2 M+W 452; Food Products Inc. v. Units Shipping Co. Ltd. [1939] A.C. 277; and Yin v. Sam [1962] A.C. 304).

What then is the effect where a party to a contract is in default as provided for in Section 12 of Cap. 257? In what circumstances must the court give effect to the sanctions provided by Section 12(1) of the Act?

First, it must be emphasized that the default envisaged by Section 12(1) is non-compliance with the provisions of either Section 4 or Section 6 of the Act. The latter Section is clearly not relevant in the instant case. In my view, what is relevant here is Section 4. This Section imposes an obligation on any person or firm required by Section 3 of the Act to register a business name under the Act to "furnish to the Registrar-General a statement in writing in the prescribed form signed by the proprietor or by all the parties in the firm " and containing the particulars listed in Section 4 of the Act.

Clearly, these particulars are required to enable the Registrar-General register the business name. However, this registration process must be distinguished from that required under the provisions of the Business Registration Act, No. 13 of 1983. A proprietor or firm that is not required by Section 3 of Cap 257 to register a business name and as a consequence need not furnish the particulars set out in Section 4 of Cap. 257 still needs to be registered in accordance with the Business Registration Act, No. 13 of 1983. In the latter case there is no exemption.

Further, according to Section 5 of Cap 257 there is a grace period for the furnishing of the particulars required by Section 4 of the Act. For those businesses which were in existence at the time Cap 257 came into effect in November 1954 the requirement must be fulfilled within three months from that date. In the case of a business commenced after November 1954 the required particulars are to be furnished "within fourteen days after the commencement of the business", (emphasis mire).

Upon a proper construction of Section 7 and 12 of Cap 257 it is only after these periods have elapsed that the criminal liability envisaged by Section 7 and the [p.123] civil sanction envisaged by Section 12 could be suffered by the defaulter. Indeed, for the purposes of Section 12, it is possible for a proprietor to commence business and enter into a contract before the end of the grace period under Section 5 without first furnishing the particulars required under Section 4 and without attracting the sanction envisaged by Section 12.

For a party to a contract to attract the sanction envisaged by Section 12 of Cap 257 it must be shown that:—

1. There was a requirement to register a business name under Section 3 of the Act;

2. That the relevant grace period under Section 5 had elapsed; and

3. The contract must have been entered into by or behalf of the party to suffer the sanction whilst that party was in default of furnishing the particulars required by Section 4 of the Act.

In my considered opinion these are materials fact which must be pleaded in one way or the other and there must be evidence led in proof of these fact before there could be said to be default under Section 12 of the Act. Positive evidence is required here not just facts from which an inference could be drawn.

It is clear from the following cases where the English Registration of Business Names Acts 1916 and 1927 were considered that the defendant who wished to invoke sanctions similar to the one envisaged by Section 12 of Cap 257 had pleaded the fact. In Watson v. Park Royal (Caterers) Limited [1961] QBD in considering the question of relief under Section 8 of the 1916 Act, which is more or less, identical to Section 12 of Cap. 257 Edmund Davies J. had this to say:—

[p.124]

"It has already been demonstrated by the correspondence and other documents that from the outset and long before these proceedings were begun, the defendants were taking the point that there had been no registration and were giving due notice of their intention to rely on that plea [emphasis mine] were any proceedings instituted which they in due course did. The plaintiff must therefore be held to have been amply warned and fully aware of the statutory requirement. "

In one of the correspondence referred to in the above and relied on by Edmund Davies J. the defendant's Solicitor had this to say:—

"I have caused enquiries to be made from which I am satisfied that the name of "Brays" is not registered pursuant to the provisions of the Registration of Business Names Act, 1916, and I respectfully submit that 'this fact alone provides the defendants with a complete defence to this action ".

In Hawkens and another v. Duche (supra) one of the defences to the action was that the M and B Taper to whom the goods were sold was not a partnership consisting of Mayer and Bernard but was Mayer trading alone under the style of M. and B Taper; that Mayer had neglected to register his business name as required by Section 1 of Registration of Business Names Act, 1916; and that as he was in default the plaintiffs were precluded by Section 8(1) of that Act from enforcing Mayer Taper's rights under the contract by action,

McCardie J. in dealing with the issue of how wide is the discretion given to the Court to grant relief in case of such default as alleged in that case had this to say:—

[p.125]

"... that the fair administration of justice as between party and party require a construction of the Act which gives the High Court a power to grant relief as well after as before action. It would, I feel, be deplorable if at the very close of a long and costly litigation a defendant should manage to elicit a trivial and inadvertent breach by the plaintiff of the [1916] Act and thereby defeat the whole action which was well founded".

(See also JH Cook & another v. Alban Expanded Metal and Engineering Company Limited [1969].)

Finally, on this issue I hold that it was incumbent on the defendant to plead reliance on the fact of non-compliance with the express provisions of section 12 (1) of the Act and to have ensured that there was clear and positive evidence of such default. I find that the available evidence is not conclusive of the fact of non-registration of the business name of the plaintiff as opposed to the non-registration of the business carried on under the business name.

Secondly, I share the view of Alhadi J.A. that if the defendant had sought and obtained leave to amend as the Court of Appeal had rightly held they were entitled to this would have availed the Plaintiff/appellant of "his undoubted right to lead evidence of the registration of the [business name]."

Thirdly, although the Plaintiff/Appellants also failed to renew their application to lead fresh evidence of registration this could not be held against them as the issue of non-registration of the business name had not been satisfactorily raised by the Respondents herein.

[p.126]

The next question to be determined is whether the Respondent has acted in breach of the agreement which, according to the contention of the Plaintiff/Appellant, had been varied so as to entitle him to receipt of commission for all flour produced and sold by the Respondent. The breach complained of was the summary termination of the relationship between the parties and the refusal to make any further supplies of flour or pay any outstanding or further commission to the Plaintiff/Appellant.

The Respondent denies that there was any variation of the agreement, Exh A, as alleged by the Plaintiff/Appellant or at all. In paragraphs 4, 5, 6 and 7 of the amended defence it contends as follows:—

"4. As regards paragraph 4 of the statement of claim, the Defendant denies that the said Mr. Leslie Thompson acted in breach of the agreement as alleged and will contend that the said Leslie Thompson was led to continue to pay commission to the Plaintiff because he was led to believe that there was a variation of the original contract in the time indicated to him by the Plaintiff and did so only out of an abundance of caution, but when he discovered that no variation (though suggested) was accepted by the Defendant, he stopped paying commissions.

5. The Defendant further contends that the primary consideration for concluding the said contract was to afford foreign exchange to the Defendant and by failing to do so, the very basis of the said contract was destroyed by the Plaintiff.

6. As regards paragraph 5 of the statement of claim, the Defendant asked (he Plaintiff in March 1992 to vacate the office of the Defendant, since the Plaintiff has no further business with the Defendant to justify the occupation of the Defendant's premises but the Defendant never stopped supplying flour to the Plaintiff, provided the Plaintiff paid in advance for the flour before taking delivering thereof.

7. As regards paragraph 6 of the statement of claim, the Defendant contends that the Plaintiff has never acted in accordance with the agreement and that there was no variation to the said agreement. "

It is common ground that the agreement tendered by PW1 as Exh "A" was dated 27th June 1985 which presumably was the date it came into effect. The acts of the Defendant which the plaintiff claimed constituted a breach of contract occurred sometime in August 1992. What transpired in the interval is of great significance for the outcome of this appeal.

The evidence relied on by the Appellant for the contention that the agreement was varied is both oral and documentary. As to what took place in the few years after the execution of the agreement we have first the evidence of the Plaintiff himself PW4.whose testimony was interposed whilst PW3, Frederick Chrispin Jones was still giving evidence.

After testifying as to me circumstances that led to the signing of the agreement, that is, the dire need of the Defendant/Respondent for foreign currency which risked crippling its business he deposed that he made an initial payment of U$250,000.00 to the Defendant/Respondent. He then continued as follows:—

[p.128]

"It was after that we entered into this agreement Exh "A ".

This agreement was entered into on the 27th of June 1985. I signed this document myself I can see my signature at page 2. The agreement was prepared by Wright and Jusu-sheriff who acted for both of us'. The agreement was implemented. The Defendant supplied me with flour according to the agreement until sometime mid-way 1990. [emphasis mine]

In this exhibit "A" I was described as Eric James carrying on business [as] James International Enterprises. Under this title I carried on business as an entrepreneur. It was a one man business. I was the same person.

My address on Exh "A" is 28 Savage Street. That was where I was living and operating the business.

I subsequently incorporated this enterprise into a private limited liability company, [emphasis mine]

According to the available evidence this incorporation took place very early in the relationship with the Defendant. The Certificate of Incorporation, part of bundle of documents marked as Exh "T" and tendered by PW3, is dated 22nd July 1985. It is not surprising therefore that PW3 whose evidence is crucial for this aspect of this judgment testified after tendering Exh "T" under cross-examination by Counsel for the Defendant as follows:—

"I haven't got the Registration Certificate of Eric James carrying on business as James International Enterprises.

I was not the General Manager of the firm i.e. Eric James carrying on business as James International……We have a Company called [p.10] James International Enterprises Limited which is a Company registered under the Companies Act. I am the General Manager of this Company.

I am not aware of the firm named Eric James carrying on business as James International.

I am also not aware of a firm by the name Eric James carrying on business as James International Enterprises ".

The further evidence of PW4 is to the effect that sometime after the implementation of the agreement, Exh "A" and, in my view, certainly after the incorporation of the sole proprietorship the nature of the business relationship with the Defendant changed. This is how PW4 put it:—

"The payment for the flour by me was made on a day to day basis. They would supply us the flour and we would pay for it.

Both the M/D Sea Board and I consulted each other and then agreed on the selling price which changed from time to time. The price at which I sold to the public was also agreed upon by me and the M/D of the Defendant Company.

We continued this modus operandi up to the arrival of Mr. Leslie Thompson in April 1991".

After the arrival of Mr. Leslie Thompson further changes took place. Some of these changes, are evidenced in a series of correspondence between PW3 on behalf of James International Enterprises Limited and the Defendant Company. These include the following:—

1. Exh "B" — letter dated 25th February 1992 from Leslie Thompson to "Mr. Eric James Principal James International Enterprises Limited";

[p.130]

2. Exh “C” — letter dated 3rd march 1992 from Leslie Thompson to Eric James;

3. Exh "H" — letter dated 28th February 1992 from PW3 to Mr. Leslie Thompson;

4. Exh "J" — letter dated 6th March 1992 from PW3 to Leslie Thompson; and

5. Exh "M" — letter dated 11th August 1992 from Leslie Thompson to "Eric James, Chairman, James International Enterprises Limited".

In my opinion, what can be gleaned from this series of correspondence is that the business of sale of flour produced by the Defendant Company and the payment of a commission was by 1992 being conducted with James International Enterprises Limited, the company, and not with Eric James, the sole proprietor, carrying out business as James International Enterprises.

My view of this change is reinforced by the testimony of PW3 in the following words:—

"Exh "H" was written by me on behalf of my Company, James International Enterprises Limited. So were [exhibits] J, L, O, R, S. All the flour that was bought from Seaboard was by James International Enterprises Limited. What was paid by Seaboard [in respect of] the flour was paid to James International Company Limited, the Company ". [Emphasis mine]

What then is the inference to be drawn from the above evidence as to the change in the relationship between the parties to the original agreement? What is the legal effect?

[p.131]

Counsel for the Appellant contends that it was a mere variation of the original agreement as a result of which the Company, James International Enterprises Limited, was merely acting as the agent of Eric James, the sole proprietor. On the other hand, Counsel for the Respondent contends that the original agreement had been discharged by performance (though such performance had not been quite satisfactory on the part of the Plaintiff/Appellant) and had not been varied.

Before I deal with the legal effect of the incorporation of the sole proprietorship in July 1985 on the business carried by Eric James, prior to that date I wish in passing to say a few words about the legal effect of the changes in the nature of the business relationship of the Respondent whether with the Company on its own behalf or with the Company as agent of Eric James as contended by and/or on behalf of the Appellant.

Did the changes tantamount to a variation of the agreement on Exh "A" as contended by the Plaintiff/Appellant? In order to answer this question in the context of the instant case it must be pointed out that there is a distinction between variation and novation.

In the case of variation, the parties to the contract agree to modify or alter its terms. The agreement which varies the terms of an existing agreement must be supported by consideration. In many cases consideration can be found in the mutual abandonment of existing rights or the conferment of new benefits by each party on the other. The main feature of a variation is that the original contract continues to exist but in an altered form.

The distinction between a variation and a novation is thus explained by the editors of Chitty on Contracts, 28th edition, Volume 1 at paragraph 23-031 under the rubric: "Novation":

[Novation is a generic term which signifies] "that there being a contract in existence, some new contract is substituted for it, either between the same parties (for that might be) or between different parties: the consideration mutually being the discharge of the old contract. In particular, r[sic] it denotes the recission of one contract and the substitution of another in which the same acts are to be performed by different parties ",

Novation may thus be used to describe a species of transfer of rights and obligations where two contracting parties agree that a third, who also agrees, shall stand in relation of either of them to the other. There is a new contract for which the consent of all the parties is required. According to Chitty (supra) at paragraph 20-085/6:

"Most of the reported cases in English law have arisen either out of the amalgamation of companies, or of changes in partnership firms, the question being whether as a matter of fact the party contracting with the company or the firm accepted the new company or the new firm as the debtor in the place of the old company or firm. The acceptance may be inferred from acts and conduct, but ordinarily it is not to be inferred from conduct without some distinct request……

It should, however, be noted that the effect of a novation is not to assign or transfer a right or liability, but rather to extinguish the original contract and replace it by a new one ".

In the instant case, from the totality of the evidence, one can safely conclude that by the conduct of the parties they did effect a complete extinction of the first and original agreement evidenced in Exh "A", and did not merely effect an alteration which left that original agreement subsisting. The changes went to the very root of the contract. As a result, I hold that there was not a mere variation but a novation that ensued soon after the execution of the original agreement.

The next and crucial question is whether there was a valid consideration for this new agreement and whether the Plaintiff/Appellant was a party thereto.

The Court of Appeal took the view that there was no consideration for this new agreement nor was it made under seal. In that Court's view the basis of this new agreement was contained in Exh "B" dated February 1992. With respect to the learned Justices, this does not correctly reflect the state of the evidence. The new agreement arose partly by conduct when the Respondent agreed to supply its products to the new Company on terms different from that contained in Exh "A" i.e. the payment of US3.00 per bag before delivery. Under the new agreement there was the sale of flour in leones leaving a margin for the distributor on the one hand and on the other hand the purchase of produce by the Company with money advanced by the Respondent to generate foreign currency for the Respondent as evidenced in Exh "C". This arrangement was of mutual benefit to both parties and that constituted valuable consideration. (See Currie v Musa (1875) LR 10 Ex 153) (Williams v Roffey Bros & Nicholls (Contractors) Ltd [p.134] [1991] 1 Q.B, 1 at 23) (Guinness Mahon & Co Ltd v Kensington & Chelsea Royal B.C. [1998] 2 All E.R. 272)

The second question to be answered is this: who were the parties to the new agreement? The contention of the Plaintiff/Appellant is that he continued to be the contracting party throughout the relationship with the Respondent and that James International Enterprises Limited was merely his agent. In my considered opinion, implicit in that contention is an admission that performance of the obligation due to the Respondent was by James International Enterprises Limited but the benefit of the agreement was that of the Plaintiff/Appellant.

Such a relationship between "vicarious performance" and "agency" is considered in paragraph 20-082 of Chitty (supra) in the following passage:—

"…… in the case of vicarious performance the original contracting party remains liable on the contract. There is nothing to prevent a person contracting on such terms that he is entitled either to perform the contract himself, or to secure performance by making a new contract with a third party as agent of the other contracting party".

But in the instant case was James International Enterprises Limited merely an agent of the Plaintiff/ Appellant or was it in fact the real contracting party?

Since as far back as 1897 when the House of Lords pronounced its decision in the all too familiar case of Solomon v. A. Solomon & Co Limited [1897] AC. 22 (H.L) it has been generally accepted as trite law that once a company is legally incorporated it must be treated like any other independent person with its rights [p.135] and liabilities separate to itself. According to Lord Herschell in Solomon's case "the motives of those who took part in the promotion of the Company are absolutely irrelevant in discussing what these rights are ".

Like Mr. Eric James, Mr. Solomon had converted his one man business into a limited liability company. When the company failed it was sought to make Mr. Solomon liable for some of its debt by arguing that the company was Mr. Solomon in another guise, that he had used the company as an alias and had employed the company as its agent. In dealing with the legal effect of incorporation of an existing business in the Solomon case Lord Macnaghten stated in this oft-quoted passage that:—

"The company is at law a different person altogether from the subscriber to the memorandum and, though it may be that after incorporation the business is precisely the same as it was before, and the same persons are managers, and the same hands receive the profits, the company is not in law the agent of the subscribers or trustee for them ".

In the same case, on the issue of agency, Lord Halsbury LC, at page had this to say:—

"I observe that the learned Judge (Vaughan Williams J) held that the business was Mr. Solomon's business; and no one else's; and that he chose to employ as agent a limited company; and he proceeded to argue that he was employing that limited company as agent, and that he was bound to indemnify that agent (the company). I confess it seems to me that the very learned judge becomes involved by the very argument in a very singular contradiction. Either the limited company was a legal entity or it was not.

[p.136]

If it was, the business belonged to it and not to Mr. Solomon; If it was not there was no person and nothing to be an agent of at all; and either that there is a company and there is not".

I adopt the above passages for the purposes of the instant case and hold that based on the totality of the evidence, particularly the testimony of PW3 cited earlier, Mr. Eric James, the sole proprietor is not and could not have been a party to the new agreement for the simple reason that the sole proprietorship had ceased to exist since July 1985 and had been superceded by the new Company. A fortiori, the Company could not therefore have been acting as agent of the Plaintiff/Appellant as contended on his behalf.

In view of the above, I hold that the Respondents could not be liable in the circumstances for the alleged breaches as contained in the statement of claim and as set out above. As the action has been brought in the name of the wrong plaintiff 1 do not feel compelled to go on any further in this judgment to consider whether there was in fact any breach of contract for which the Respondent may be liable and whether it is in fact under any obligation to render an account as prayed for by the Plaintiff/Appellant.

Before I conclude I must state for the purpose of completeness of this judgment that I have adverted my mind to the provisions of Order XII, particularly Rules 3 and 11 of the High Court Rules to see whether it could be of any assistance to the Plaintiff/Appellant even at this late stage. The Rules states as follows;

"Where an action has been commenced in the name of the wrong person as plaintiff, or where it is doubtful whether it has been commenced in the name of the right plaintiff, the court may, if satisfied that it has been so commenced [p.1037] through a bona fide mistake, and that it is necessary for the determination of the real matter in dispute so to do, order any other person to be substituted or added as plaintiff upon such terms as may be just"

Taking into account the circumstances of the instant case and upon a proper construction of the above provision I have come to the conclusion that this provision could not be of any assistance to the Plaintiff/Appellant for the following reasons:—

First, Unlike Rule 11 of Order XI1 which enjoins the court to ensure suo moto the joinder or substitution of any non-party whose presence is necessary before the court for the purpose of adjudicating on the matters in dispute between the parties before it Rule 3 of that Order envisages an application by the party who wishes to substitute or add a new plaintiff. The court cannot do it suo moto as under Order XII Rule 1 because under Rule 3 the applicant, inter alia, needs to satisfy the court that the mistake was bona fide. In the instant case there was no such application at the trial nor before the Court of Appeal nor before this Court and this despite the fact that the need for such an application should have been obvious to Counsel for the Plaintiff/Appellant after the answers given under cross-examination by PW3, Mr. Jones Besides, throughout the trial the issue of the entitlement of the Plaintiff/Appellant to sue had been made an issue in one form or another. (See Performing Rights Society Limited v. London Theatre of Varieties Limited [1924] A.C. 1)

Secondly, I doubt whether an application to this Court to substitute or add the Company as plaintiff would have succeeded as the authorities all seem to establish that the court would be reluctant to allow a new plaintiff to be substituted or added where the action if commenced at the date of the order to substitute or add would have been statute-barred under the relevant provision of the enactment governing limitation of the particular type of action before the [p.138] Court (See Attorney-General v. Pontypridd Waterworks Company [1908] 1 Ch 388; Mabro v. Eagle Star [1932] 1KB 485).

For the above reasons the Appeal cannot succeed and is therefore dismissed. For entirely different reasons I would uphold the orders made by the Court of Appeal in setting aside the Judgment of the High Court. I order that each party bears its own costs of this Appeal.

DELIVERED ON THURSDAY 25 MAY 2006

RULING

WARNE JSC

Counsel for the Appellant Mr. Serry Kamal filed a Notice of Motion dated 30th March 2005 praying for certain orders to wit:

(1) An interim stay of execution of judgment of the High Court dated the 14th day of February 1995 and all subsequent proceedings thereto pending the hearing and determination of this application.

(2) An order granting a stay of execution of the judgment of the Court Dated 14th day of February 1995 and all subsequent proceedings thereto pending the hearing and determination of the Appellants appeal to the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone.

[p.4]

(3) Such further or either order as the court shall deem fit. The application is supported by an affidavit sworn to by one Elizabeth Parkinson on the 30th day of March 2006 together with exhibits annexed and filed herein.

At the hearing of the Notice of Motion on the 9th day of May, 2006 Mr. Serry Kamal sought leave to amend the aforementioned Notice of Motion of 30th March 2006. The amendment is underlined in red that is to say:

(1) An order granting an interim stay of execution of the judgment of the High Court dated the 14th day of February 1995 and the Order of the Court of Appeal dated the 14th day of November 2004 and all subsequent proceedings thereto be stayed pending the hearing and determination of this application.

(2) An order that the judgment of the High Court dated the 14th day of February, 1995 and the order of the Court of Appeal dated 24th day of November, 2004 and all subsequent proceedings thereto be stayed pending the hearing and determination of the appeal. This amended Notice of Motion is dated 11th day of April 2006. Leave was accordingly granted by the Court for the hearing of the amended Notice of Motion theirs being no objection by Counsel for the Intervener.

Mr. Serry-Kamal, Counsel for the applicant submitted that the motion is supported by the affidavit of Elizabeth Parkinson sworn to on the 30th day of [p.5] March, 2006 with particular reference to paragraphs 6 and 7. Counsel further submitted that if the application is not granted, the appeal will be rendered nugatory. Counsel further relies on paragraphs 4, 6, 7, 8 of the said affidavit and said they afforded special circumstances why stay should be granted. The application is made pursuant to Rule 60 of the Supreme Court Rules No. 1 of 1982.

Mr. Berthan Mcaulay Jr. Counsel for the Intervener, is opposing the application for the orders prayed for. He has referred to the affidavit sworn to by himself on the 25th day of April. Counsel has submitted that the affidavit of Elizabeth Parkinson in support of the application is made in her name but not on behalf of the appellant.

He submits that the applicant is Evelyn Ayo Pratt, Administratrix of the estate of Betsy Rogers Parkinson, and it is clear she comes to the court in a representative capacity, as Administratrix of the estate of Betsy Rogers Parkinson. Counsel further submitted that the affidavit in support of the application is not sworn to by the Appellant Evelyn Ayo Pratt. Counsel also submitted that the averment in paragraph 4 of the affidavit of Elizabeth Parkinson is not supportive of the application. Counsel also referred to paragraph 7 of the said affidavit and submitted that being occupants of the property in no way made them parties to the appeal.

[p.6]

Counsel went on to submit that the appeal to this court is by Betsy Rogers Parkinson by her Administratrix — The appeal. Counsel submitted is made in the name of Betsy Rogers Parkinson who has no locus standi in this court.

Counsel finally submitted that there are no special circumstances disclosed to warrant this court to grant the application.

Mr. Serry Karnal replied.

The application of Serry Kamal is seriously flawed in many respects. The purported Notice of Motion dated 11th April 2006 is not a Notice of Motion but a Notice. The Court granted leave that it can be entertained in the proceedings; however, the order sought does not bear any relationship to the Exhibits EP1 and EP2 respectively referred to in the affidavit of Elizabeth Parkinson sworn to on the 30th day of March 2006.

There is no supplemental affidavit in support of the Notice which contained the amendment sought, nor is there any notice on the purported Notice dated 11th day of April, 2006 that the affidavit of Elizabeth Parkinson sworn to on 3rd March 2006 was intended to be used at the hearing of the amended Notice. In order to exacerbate the short comings in the application to the court by Mr. Serry Kamal the title of the interlocutory application is not the same as that on the order of the Court of Appeal dated 24th day of November 2004 sought to be stayed. In the interest of clarity the Order sought to be stayed is Intituled.

There has been no application for a substitution of parties pursuant to Rule 37 Rules of the Supreme Court No.1 of 1982 neither does the affidavit of Elizabeth Parkinson sworn to on 30th day of March 2006 aver that she had authority to swear to the affidavit on behalf of the several persons named therein nor has she exhibited the death certificate of the parties who had died.

To compound the defect in the application, there is no Letters of Administration exhibited that Elizabeth Parkinson is the Administratrix of the estate of Betsy Rogers Parkinson.

In my opinion, there is no merit in the application and it must needs dismissed and I dismiss it with costs assessed at Le 350,000 to be paid by the applicant to the intervener/Respondent.

WRIGHT, J.S.C.

This is an appeal from the judgment of the Sierra Leone Court of Appeal delivered on the 20th day of May 1993.

[p.25]

The grounds of appeal are as follows:—

1. "That the learned Justices of Appeal erred in law when they held that the allegations of cruelty by the appellant were not grave and weighty to amount to legal cruelty and that the absence of independent evidence adversely affected the appellant's case with regard to her allegations of cruelty;

2. That the learned justices of Appeal erred in law in substituting a decree of dissolution of the marriage in place of a decree of judicial separation;

3. That there is no legal ground for the granting of a "decree of Divorce by the learned Justices of Appeal;

4. That as the law stands, a decree of Divorce cannot be granted unless prayed for the learned Justices of Appeal had rejected the prayer of the respondent for dissolution of the marriage and the appellant had not prayed for dissolution of the marriage;

5. That it is not a legal ground for the granting of a decree of Divorce that the court thinks it would be better that the relief to be granted for a dissolution and judicial separation;

6. That the irretrievable breakdown of the marriage is not a legal ground for the granting of a decree of Divorce in this jurisdiction;

7. That the concept of public policy as a ground for the dissolution of a marriage is not recognized by the Matrimonial Laws in this Jurisdiction;

8. That the learned Justices of Appeal having correctly stated the Law relevant to the exercise by the Court of its discretion in favour of the respondent inspite of his own adultery with the woman named [p.26] and decided not to exercise its discretion then proceeded to consider matters in the discretion statement filed by the respondent in arriving at its decision to grant a decree of divorce;

9. That the learned Justices of Appeal erred in Law in allowing the Appellant 12% share of the current price of the property in question as her beneficial interest when there was no sufficient or any basis, for such a computation;

10. That having regard to the evidence and the law applicable the Judgment is unsatisfactory";

BACKGROUND

The appellant and the respondent in the court below hereafter called:

"the deceased" were married in England on the 7th day of January 1961. After the marriage the parties lived at divers addresses. There were no children of the marriage. The appellant petitioned the High Court on the 30th June 1992 for a dissolution of marriage and that she be granted a half share in the land and premises known as 14 Spur Loop, Wilberforce. On the 10th September 1982 an order was granted to the appellant amending her prayer in the petition for a dissolution of marriage to read "that she may be judicially separated from the respondent".

On the 21st February 1990 the High court granted a judicial separation between the parties and that the property at 14 Spur Loop, Wilberforce in Freetown of the Republic in Sierra Leone was the joint property of the parties. The Justice of Appeal granted a dissolution of marriage between the parties and awarded the appellant [p.27] 12% share in the property at W14 Spur Loop Wilberforce for which the appellant has appealed to the Supreme Court.

Counsel for the appellant was given leave to argue ground 9 because he conceded that because of the death of respondent Reginald Howarth Eleady-Cole (hereinafter called the "deceased") the cause of action, the basis for grounds 1-8 of this appeal abated.

Learned Counsel for the appellant stated that the learned trial judge was right in deciding that the appellant was entitled to a 50% share in the property at W14 Spur Loop Wilberforce citing Rimmer vs Rimmer (1952) 2 AER 863. He said that the issue in dispute in this appeal was the quantum to which the appellant was entitled.

Counsel for the respondent submitted that the Court of Appeal was right in awarding 12% of the value of 14 Spur Loop on the evidence before the court. He stated that the appellant did not make any contribution towards the building of the house and that there was not enough evidence to support a resulting trust. (See Gissing v Gissing (1970) 2AER 781.

It was ordered by this Court on the 6th April 2006 that Magnus Koso-Thomas one of the Executors of the estate of the deceased be substituted as respondent in this appeal in place of the deceased who died on the 9th October 1997.

Before arguments were closed the Court referred to the affidavit of Yada Hashim Williams sworn to on the 3rd March 2006 which was supported by a [p.28] Motion dated 3rd March 2006 in which the deceased purported to convey the property to Jean-Pierre Eleady-Cole and the Court declined to make orders in this motion because firstly, Jean Pierre was not a party to the proceedings and secondly because it was agreed by both sides that the appellant had a share in the property but the extent of that beneficial interest was not certain.

I now turn to ground 9 in these grounds of appeal referred to earlier. The evidence is clear that the land on which the house in dispute was built was State land leased by the deceased by the Government of Sierra Leone and was in the deceased's name. The architectural plan was drawn in the name of both the appellant and deceased to which the deceased had no objection. Both parties to the marriage opened a joint account into which both parties paid in money for the purpose of constructing a house on the said land which was to be matrimonial home.

From the above evidence it is clear that it was the intention of both parties right from the beginning that they were to have a joint interest in the matrimonial home.

However, the parties never lived in the house as it was later rented to pay a loan given to the deceased by Barclays Bank under a gentleman's agreement though no formal document was drawn out the appellant had produced her title deeds in respect of other properties in which she had interest as collateral to secure the loan from the bank. It is not possible to ascertain precisely the amount paid to the savings account by each party because there is no evidence as to the respective quantum paid in by both parties.

[p.29]

The appellant paid for the cleaning of the site and bought some fittings for the house. There was unchallenged evidence that the Le 1,000.00 which was paid to the appellant as compensation for her damaged car was received by the deceased and used for decorating the deceased surgery. The deceased admitted receiving the sum of Le700.00 from the appellant while the building was under construction which he gave to the contractor. The contractor deposed that the appellant was often at the site.

There is substantial evidence of the common intention. I now quote from the evidence of the appellant at page 142 of the for the record of appeal:

"When the land was about to be purchased my husband and I had a joint account at Siaka Stevens Street, Freetown. The purpose of the account was to save up for the building of the house at Spur Loop Wilberforce. Our intention was that the house was to be out[sic] matrimonial home I never lived in the house because we leased it to the manager of Barclays Bank. I surrendered my title deed for the land at Aberdeen Road land at Mudge Farm Aberdeen Road, Freetown land at Tengbeh Town, my share of land at Hamy's Farm Congo Cross, my own share of property at Howe Street Freetown and my share of 19A Garrisson Street Freetown as collaterals to the bank. I have with me the joint saving pass books in the name of Dr. and Mrs. Eleady-Cole. I made a list of all the properties I was surrendering to the bank and the bank accepted it. My husband signed the Mortgage Deed".

The appellant also said at page 143:

"My husband applied for a building permit and obtained it in the name of Dr. and Mrs. R. Eleady-Cole. I now produce and tender it marked Exh. E. the permit is in respect of a dwelling house off Wilberforce Spur Loop. It was this house I told the Court I contributed to financially. Quite apart from the financial contribution I made I bought some fittings. I also paid for the hiring of two loader for clearing the site. I bought the fittings in London and sent them by ship. I have never received any share of the rents paid in respect of the house".

In page 157 the deceased is recorded as saying:

"When the house was under construction my wife had her own share of the rents from the jointly owned property. Her share was Le700.00. She gave me Le700.00 which I gave the builder. "

Both Counsel for the appellant and the 1st respondent agreed that the appellant was entitled to a share in the property in dispute.

From the above what is not clear is whether they were to have equal shares or some other proportion.

What is the test in determining the proportion to which the appellant is entitled? Romer, L.J. in Rimmer v Rimmer (1952) AER said:

"cases between husband and wife ought not to be governed by the same strict consideration, both at law and in equity as are commonly applied to the ascertainment of the respective rights as strangers [p.31] when each of them contribute to the purchase price of property and the old fashion doctrine that equity leans towards equality is peculiarly applicable to dispute of the character of the present one, where the fact, as a whole, permit its application".

In Jansen v Jansen (1965) 363 AER Lord Denning said:

"agreements such as these, as I say are outside the realin[sic] of contract altogether. The common law does not regulate the firm of agreement between spouses. Their promises are not sealed with seals and sealing war. The consideration that really obtains for them is that natural love and affection which counts for so little in those cold court".

To my mind the test to be applied in such cases is the intention of both parties to the marriage. Was there an agreement between the parties express or implied as to how the property was to be held? Could the conduct of the parties reveal their intention and was there a constructive or resulting trust on the property.

In the case of Pettitt v Pettitt (1969) 2 AER 411 a freehold of a cottage had been purchased entirely out of moneys provided by the wife and the property stood in her name. The husband undertook internal decoration work and built a wardrobe in it. He also laid a lawn and constructed a wall and side wall in the garden. It was held that the husband was not entitled to an interest in his wife's property merely because he had done in his own leisure time jobs which husbands normally did.

Lord Diplock said in this case:

"How does the court ascertain the "Common Intention" of spouses as to their respective proprietary interests in a family asset when at the time it was acquired or improved as a result of contributing in money or moneys worth by each of them they failed to formulate it themselves? It may be possible to infer from their conduct that they did in fact form an actual common intention as to their respective proprietary interests and where this is possible the court should give effect to it".

"In numerous judgments of the court of Appeal during the last 20 years this branch of the law of property has undergone considerable developments. The cases start with Re Rogers question and end with Gissing v Gissing 1 AER 1043" and I may add that we now have Miller vs Miller and McFarlane vs McFarlane which was decided in the House of Lords on the 24th May 2006.

In Jones vs. Maynard (1951) 1 AER 802 it was decided that where there is a joint purse between husband and wife whatever comes out of that joint purse or pool is the joint property of both parties.

Vaisey J. in that case said;

"Plato said that equality was a sort of justice, that is to say, if in such a matter as this one I cannot find any other bass[sic], equality is the proper basis. I think that it is principle which applies here. When moneys were taken out of the joint account for the purpose of making an investment the intention which I attribute to the parties is equality and not some preparation to be ascertained by an inquiry as to the [p.33] amount which were respectively contributed by the husband and the wife common purse ".

The conduct of the parties may give rise to some other inference as to their common intention (see Ulrich v Ulrich and Felton, 1968 (AER 67.

This case can be distinguished from Gissing v Gissing (Supra) in which the purchase price and mortgage payments were paid by the appellant. The respondent provided furniture and equipment for the house and for improving the lawn. At no time was there any express agreement as to how the beneficial interest in the matrimonial home should now be held. It was held that on the fact it was not possible to draw any interference that the respondent should have any beneficial interest in the matrimonial home.

At page 782 Lord Reid said:

"if there has been no discussion and no agreement or understanding as to sharing in the ownership of the house and the husband has never evinced an intention that his wife should have a share then the crucial question is whether the law will give a share to the wife who has made those contributions without which the house could not be bought. I agree that depends on the law of trust rather than on contract so the question is under what circumstances does the husband become trustee for his wife in the absence of any declaration of trust or agreement on his part. It is not disputed that a man can become a trustee without making a declaration of trust or evincing any intention to become a trustee. The facts may impose on him and implied constructive or resulting trust".

[p.34]

At page 784 Viscount Dilhorne concurred and said:

"/ agree with my noble and learned friend Lord Diplock that a claim to a beneficial interest in land made by person in whom the legal estate is not vested and whether made by a stranger, or spouse or a former spouse must depend for its success on establishing that it is held in a trust to give effect to the beneficial interest of the claimant as cest que trust. Where there was a common intention at a time of acquisition of the house that the beneficial interest in it should be shared, it would be a breach of faith by the spouses in whose name the legal estate was vested to fail to give effect to that intention and the other spouses will be held entitle to a share in the beneficial interest".

As I have said above it is clear from the evidence in the cases cited that there was a common intention that the property was to be held jointly by the appellant and the deceased.

According to the circumstances of this case and the evidence I hold that the legal estate of the property the subject of this action is held in trust for the appellant whether constructive or resulting trust.

To give effect to the common intention of the parties I hereby declare that though the legal estate was at all material times vested in the deceased it was held in trust constructive, resulting or otherwise, as to the beneficial interest in equal shares for himself and the appellant.

The appeal therefore succeeds.

JUDGMENT

WARNE J.S.C.:

This is a claim by way of Originating Notice of Motion seeking the following reliefs:

1. An Order that Section 5(4) of the Provinces Act Cap 60 of the Laws of Sierra Leone is inconsistent with Section 133(1) of Sierra Leone Constitution Act No. 6 of 1991 and therefore null and void.

2. That the letter dated 7th June 2005 from the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice refusing the Plaintiffs right to sue in the High Court to question the validity of the election of the Paramount Chief of Sandor Chiefdom is ultra vires the Constitution of Sierra Leone and therefore null and void.

[p.10]

(3) That in the light of the State Proceedings Act 2000 the provision in Section 5(4) of the Provinces Act 1960 Cap 60 of the Laws of Sierra Leone as amended is ultra vires the Constitution of Sierra Leone and therefore null and void.

Background

There was an election at the Sandor Chiefdom in the Kono District in the Eastern Province of the Republic of Sierra Leone. This election was to fill the vacancy created by the death of Paramount Chief Nyghaquee Fasuluku Sonsiama. Several Candidates vied for vacancy. Only one candidate was declared eligible to contest the election. He was duly elected. The Plaintiffs in this case were the other candidates. They were disqualified from contesting the election as being ineligible. Being disqualified, and the election having being held, and the sole candidate declared the winner, they sought the consent of the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice to commence proceedings in the High Court to challenge the validity of the said election. The Attorney-General refused to give his consent. The Plaintiffs have therefore invoked the jurisdiction of this court pursuant to Sections 124, 171 (5) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No. 6 of 1991 (hereinafter called the Constitution) and the Provinces Act Cap 60 of the Laws of Sierra Leone as amended by the Provinces Amendment Act No.4 of 1991 (hereinafter called the Provinces Amendment Act.)

Mr. Serry-Kamal Counsel for the Plaintiffs filed an affidavit sworn to by Tamba M. Mondeh Tengbessa one of the Plaintiffs on the 14th day of June 2005. This affidavit is in support of the Originating Notice of Motion. During the hearing, Counsel filed another affidavit sworn to again by Tamba M. Mondeh Tengbassa on his and on behalf of the other Plaintiffs herein on the 17th day of May 2006.

Mr. Serry-Kamal, in support of the various documents filed made the following submissions: that the grounds on which the Plaintiffs rely are those in Exhibits TMMT4 and TMMT5. He referred to the provisions in the Provinces Amendment Act No.4 and No.49 of 1961. Those Sections (1) (2), 4(2) and 7(1) of the State Proceedings Act No. 14 of 2000 are inconsistent with the provisions of Section 133(1) of the Constitution.

That the case for the Plaintiffs is that set out in their cases dated 21st June 2005. That the only requirement that must be fulfilled to seek any of the reliefs as set out in Section 5(4) of the Provisions Act Cap.60 as amended are contained in Section 6. The application must be in writing addressed to the Permanent Secretary, Ministry of Internal Affairs and made within 30 days of the irregularity complained of, he added. Counsel went on to address the Court on the series of events prior to the refusal contained in Exhibit TMMT5 which are Election was held on the 13th May 2005, application the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice made on the 19th May 2005 and copies addressed to the Permanent Secretary, Ministry of Local Government and the Ministry of Internal Affairs. Counsel submits that the refusal of the Attorney-General is contrary to Section 133(1) and Section 171(15) of the Constitution. That having provided the requirements, Section 5(4) of the Provinces Act Cap.60 as amended is ultra vires the Constitution and consequently any Law which is inconsistent with the Constitution is null and void.

That Section 5 Subsections (4) to (7) are inconsistent with Section 133(1) of the Constitution and as such, null and void:

That Section 133(1) of the Constitution gives unlimited access to the Court and refers also to Section 171(15) of the Constitution. In support thereof Counsel refers to the State Proceedings Act No. 14 of 2000 and more particularly to Section [p.12] 2 and the case of A.P.C. vs. Nasmos SC No.4 of 1966 of 29th October 1999 (unreported).

That the Petition of Rights Act No.23 of the Laws of Sierra Leone is ultra vires the Constitution as a result of the foregoing submissions.

That the dicta of Wright JSC. In the Nasmos case states that Sections 3, 4 and 5 of the Petition of Rights Act Cap 23 are inconsistent with the Constitution. That the scheme in the Provinces Amendment Act is similar to the provisions in Sections 2, 3, 4 and 5 of Act No.23 of the Laws of Sierra Leone. In section 4 of Act No.23, there is the requirement of the Attorney-General's Fiat with this difference, that by the provision in Section 5(7), the jurisdiction of the court is ousted. In fact, Counsel has urged on the Court that Sections 5(3) 4(5) and (7) of Act No. 23 appear to oust the jurisdiction of the Court and this is in contravention of Section 171(15) of the Constitution. Counsel submits that he is challenging the validity of the election and this is a claim against the Government and a claim means a right to sue. The above submissions were made in support of ground (1) of the claim. Counsel submits that he was adopting his submissions on ground (1) for the reliefs sought on grounds (2) and (3).

In order to buttress his case further, Counsel submits that if his submission, on ground (1) are not tenable, then exhibit TMMT5 dated 7th June 2005 is inconsistent with Section 133(1) of the Constitution. He submits that the refusal contained in the letter is a violation of section 133(1) of the Constitution.

In a further argument on ground (3) Counsel submits that in the light of the provisions of Sections 5(4) (6) and (7) of the Provinces Act as amended, the refusal of the Attorney-General to grant his consent is ultra vires the Constitution. Finally [p.14] Counsel sought leave to be granted that a declaration be made in ground (1) that section 5(4) of the Provinces Act as amended instead of an order.

The Court granted the leave accordingly.

Mr. L.M. Farmah Counsel on behalf of the defendant submits that he had filed Defendant's case on the 5th March 2006 and wishes to adopt his argument in his case. That would have sufficed, in view of the fact that he had mentioned the authorities he relied on. However, he went on to make some interesting submissions. That the Provisions Act Cap 60, more particularly Section 5(4) is not in conflict with section 133(1) of the Constitution. The reason being that the Statute and Section 133(1) deal with two subject matters and each provide a different regime, he added. Counsel further submits that section 133(1) deals with a claim against the Government. He submits that the claim against Government in Section 133 is for damages and compensation and not for actions of elections particularly Paramount Chiefs elections. That in order to enforce a claim under Section 133 (1) one should invoke the provisions which are contained in the State Proceedings Act Sections 5 and 6.

Counsel submits that any irregularities that may arise out of a Paramount Chief election the manner in which an action can be instituted is by the Provinces Act and the Provinces Act is an existing legislation.

Counsel further submits that Section 72 of the Constitution has nothing to do with Section 133(1) of the same Constitution and Section 72(3) upholds and preserves the Provinces Act Cap.60. Counsel submits that the repeal of Petition of Rights Act Cap 32 does not affect the existence of the consent requirement under section 5(4) of the Provinces Act Cap 60. Counsel finally submits that Chieftaincy election under the Constitution together with the Provinces Act provides the process by [p.15] which claims can be instituted and this is quite different from claims under Section 13(1). The latter of which is in Part 11 of the State Proceedings Act.

In the instant case the Plaintiffs claim that they have been restrained from instituting proceedings in the High Court to test the validity of the election of the Paramount Chief held on 13th May 2005. The law which gives the Attorney-General power to restrain them from instituting proceedings appears to be inconsistent with that provided by Section 133(1) of the Constitution, consequently the amended Section 5 of the Provinces Act may be inconsistent with the provisions of Section 133(1) of the Constitution and therefore null and void.

Section 133(1) of the Constitution provides:—

“Where a person has a claim against the Government, the claim may be enforced as of right by proceedings taken against the Government for that purpose, without the grant of a fiat or the use of the process known as Petition of Right".

The Plaintiffs are persons within Section 133(1) who claim that their rights have been contravened. Mr. Farmah has argued strenuously that claim against Government in section 133(1) is one for damages or compensation for wrong against the individual. There is no qualification in section 133(1) as to the claim, which may be enforced as of right, Counsel urged on the Court to make a distinction which ought to be made or enforced as of right in relation to damages or compensation against the Government for wrongs against a person and a claim against Government vis a vis an election more particularly a Paramount Chieftaincy election.

As I have said, there is no qualification in Section 133(1) as to what right, which has been, contravened that may be enforced without the grant of a fiat or the process known as Petition of Right, with respect to Counsel for the defendant.

That Section 72 of the Constitution which deals with the institution of Chieftaincy has no relation to Section 133(1) of the Constitution. Counsel urged on the court that Section 72 creates a separate regime. The submission again is contrary to the Constitution being one and an indivisible document. This is the basic law. No doubt the drafters of the Constitution were wise to ensure that the institution of Chieftaincy is preserved but to my mind they had no intention to isolate it from the rest of the Constitution or to put it above the supremacy of the Constitution, (vide Section 72(5) :—)

5. "Subject to the provisions of this Constitution and in furtherance of this section, Parliament shall make laws for the qualifications, election, powers, functions, removal and other matters, connected with Chieftaincy".

This is clearly indicative of the intention of the drafters of the Constitution that Section 72 shall be part of the Constitution and subordinate thereto.

Let me now address the submission of Mr. Farmah that this claim is not sustainable against the Government. It is necessary to ascertain the definition of Government. In the Interpretation Act, No.8 of 1971, section 4(1) "Government means the Government of Sierra Leone (which shall be deemed to be person) and includes, where appropriate, any authority by which the executive power of the State is duly exercised in a particular case". Having said this, I hold that the Plaintiffs have a right to institute proceedings against the Government; the Government being a person.

[p.17]

Does Section 72 of the Constitution create a separate regime irrespective of Section 133(1) of the same Constitution? I do not think so: I am fortified in my view by the provision in section 170(1) of the Constitution which state, the Laws of Sierra Leone. Shall comprise:—

(a) This Constitution

(b) The Laws made by or under the authority of Parliament as established by this Constitution.

(c) any orders, regulations and other statutory instruments made by any Person or authority pursuant to a power conferred in that behalf by this Constitution or any other Law.

(d) the existing law; and

(e) the common law

2. The Common Law of Sierra Leone shall comprise the rules of law generally Known as the common law, the rules of law, generally known as the doctrines of equity, and rules of customary law including those determined by the Superior Court of Judicature.

3. For the purpose of this Section the expression "Customary Law" means the Rules of law which by custom are applicable to particular communities in Sierra Leone."

I hold that Sections (2) and (3) are particularly applicable in the instant case since "Customary Law" is germane to the issue. I concede that we are [p.18] not here dealing with the merits regarding the validity of the election in the Sandor Chiefdom, yet we are bound to acknowledge that Section 72 of the Constitution is part of the Constitution and should be considered as such.

The documents that precipated these proceedings are contained in the affidavit of Tamba M. Mondeh Tengbessa sworn to on the 17th day of May 2006 on his and on behalf of the other Plaintiffs. The exhibit TMMT4 which is a letter dated 19th May 2005 written by the Solicitor of the Plaintiffs to the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice seeking his consent to institute proceedings in the High Court to challenge the validity of the election of Sheku Amadu Fasuluku as Paramount Chief of Sandor and our disbarment from contesting the said election"; and exhibit TMMT5 which is a reply by the Attorney-General dated 7th June 2005 refusing his consent to institute such proceedings. Both exhibits are part of this Judgment. They are exhibit TMMT4 and exhibit TMMT5. I have included these two exhibits in this Judgment in the following pages.

FREETOWN.

Dear Sir,

RE: CHIEFTAINCY ELECTIONS IN THE SANDOR CHIEFDOM KONO DISTRICT

We represent Mr. Gandi Tamba Amadu Sukuyama and others aspirants who were disbarred from contesting elections held at Kayima Sandor Chiefdom on the 13th May 2005.

On behalf of our clients we intend to command CIVIL Proceedings in the High Court to challenge the validity of the election of Sheku Amadu Tejan Fasuluku as Paramount Chief of the Sandor Chiefdom and our disbarment from contesting the same elections.

Pursuant to Section 6(4) of Provinces Act Cap.60 as amended by Act No.4 and 49 or 1961 we write to seek your consent to commence those proceedings.

Yours faithfully

Dear Sir,

RE: CHIEFTAINCY ELECTION IN THE SANDOR CHIEFDOM KONO DISTRICT

I refer to your letter dated 9th May 2005 seeking my consent to enable you Commence proceedings in Court in response of the above mentioned Paramount Chief Election conducted in Sandor Chiefdom Kono District.

Having considered the facts and circumstances leading to the elections and Recognition of Paramount Chief Sheku Ahmed Tajan[sic] Fasuluku of Sandor Chiefdom, I am unable to grant to you and your client my consent required by Section 5 Subsection 4 of the Provinces Act Cap 60 of the Laws of Sierra Leone 1960 as amended.

Yours faithfully,

F.M. Carew Attorney-General & Minister of Justice.

This letter was copied to the Secretary to the President and the Minister of Local Government and Community Development.

For ease of reference the Provinces Amendment Act No.49 1961 is part of this Judgment in the following Pages.

[p.21]

A.410 No.49 Protectorate Amendment (No.2) 1961

"(3) No proceedings shall be brought in any Court to retain or suspend or in any way to interrupt the election of a Paramount Chief

(4) No proceedings shall be brought in any court without the consent in writing of the Attorney-General

(a) to assert the validity of the election of any person as a Paramount Chief or to declare any person to be the duly elected Paramount Chief of any Chiefdom;

(b) or to question in any way the validity of the election or, or to unseal or replace, any Paramount Chief or to retain him in any way in the exercise of any of the rights, duties, privileges or functions conferred upon, or enjoyed by him by virtue of his office; or to

(c) assert or question in any way the validity of any installation deposition or recognition of a Paramount Chief

(5) For the purpose of this section the expression "proceedings" means any action or proceedings whatsoever and shall include without prejudice to the general of this definition any proceedings for the issue of prerogative writs or orders.

(6) Application for the consent of the Attorney-General required by Subsection (4) shall be made in writing and notice of such application shall be served upon the Permanent Secretary of the Ministry responsible for Internal Affairs and the Attorney-General shall not give his consent unless the person seeking to bring proceedings has made his application within thirty days after the irregularity or breach of which the complains first occurred.

(7) The decision of the Attorney-General in granting or refusing such Consent shall be final and shall not be enquired into in any Court.

J.W.E. DAVIES

for Clerk of the House of Representative

[p.22]

Mr. Serry-Kamal has applied to the Court for a hearing pursuant to provisions of Section 124 of the Constitution which states:

"The Supreme Court shall save as otherwise provided in Section 122 of this constitution, have original jurisdiction to the exclusion of all other courts

(a) in all matters relating to the enforcement or interpretation of any provision of this Constitution ".

In spite of the several submissions of Mr. Serry-Kamal I believe that what the Court is required to consider, is whether pursuant to Section 124(1) (a) of the constitution, in Section 5(4) of the provinces Act 1960 is in consistent with section 133(1) of the Constitution and therefore null and void? The Court can make such Declaration pursuant to Section 171(15) of the Constitution, which provides that—

"This constitution shall supreme Law of Sierra Leone and any other Law found to be consistent with the provision of this Constitution shall to the inconsistency, be void and of no effect".

In the interest of clarity, the Section complained of is Section 5(4) of the Province Act, 1960 which provides that "No proceedings shall be brought in any Court without the consent in writing of the Attorney-General". Section 133(1) of the Constitution is clear and unambiguous. At the expense of the repetition it states:—

"Where a person has a claim against the Government that Claim may be enforced as of right by proceedings taken against the Government for that purpose, without the grant of a fiat or the process known as petition of Right".

I therefore hold that Section 5(4) of the Provinces Act, 1960 is inconsistent with the Provisions of Section 133(1) of the Constitution and rendered void and of no effect to that extent pursuant to section 171(15) of the Constitution herein before mentioned.

In my view, the Plaintiffs had the right pursuant to Section 133(1) of the Constitution to enforce such right against the Government.

There was no need to seek the consent of the Attorney-General to institute proceedings against the Government. I have already found that the [p.23] Government is a person according to law (vide Section 4 of the Interpretation Act, No. 8 of 1 971).

I therefore declare that Section 5(4) of the Provinces Act, Cap. 60 of the Laws of Sierra Leone 1960 as amended is inconsistent with Section 133(1) of the Constitution Act No. 6 of 1991 and therefore null and void

There is no doubt that the election for the Paramount Chieftaincy of Sandor Chiefdom was conducted by Mr. Samura, the Provincial Secretary of the Northern Province of the Republic of Sierra Leone. He was a representative and acting as an agent of the government. (Vide Section 4 of the Interpretation Act, No. 8 of 1971)

Assuming that the action contemplated by the plaintiffs was against the said Provincial Secretary who conducted the election as an agent of the Government the contemplated action would have tantamounted to a claim against the Government. Such a claim, pursuance to Section 133(1) of the Constitution Act No. 6 of 1991, may be enforced as or right without the need for a fiat or consent.

Consequently it was unnecessary for the plaintiffs to seek the consent of the Attorney-General: as such, it will be inappropriate for me to make a pronouncement on the second declaration sought.

Finally, I refuse to make any pronouncement regarding the third declaration sought because the issue of consent is irrelevant to the question of compliance with the State Proceedings Act, No. 14 of 2000.

RULING

WARNE, JSC.

Mr. Margai for the Plaintiffs submitted that the 4th question for interpretation by this Court, whether the continuous presence by the trial Judge Mr. S.A. Ademosu is not a violation of Section 136(2) (3) (6) and Section 137(2)(3) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.6 of 1991, can be judiciously heard by the panel as constituted with the exception of Justice Umu Hawa Tejan Jalloh the other four Justice Sydney Warne, Justice E.C. Thompson-Davis. Justice Virginia Wright and Justice A.N.B. Stronge being retirees. He submitted further that 4th issue is of such fundamental importance that it ought to be addressed.

I have fully considered the submission made by Learned Counsel for the plaintiffs and carefully examined section 136 sub-section 5(2)(3) and (6) and section 137 sub-sections" [p.2] (2) and (3) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, Act No.6 of 1991, raised by Counsel, and I find no merit in the submission.

In my view, the whole submission is impugning the integrity of the court as duly constituted.

I therefore order that the proceeding shall commence.

JUDGMENT

MURIA JSC:

So far as we know, Samuel Hinge Norman (the plaintiff in the present case) is the same person and plaintiff in the previous action, Samuel Hinge[sic] Norman v Dr. Sama S. Banya (National Chairman, SLPP), Dr. Prince Harding (National Secretary-General, SLPP) and The Sierra Leone People's Party, (SLPP) S.C. No.2/2005 ("SC.2/05"). The first defendant in the present proceedings is the same political party, Sierra Leone People's Party ("SLPP") and third defendant in SC.2/05. The present second and third defendants are the National Chairman and National Secretary-General respectively, of the SLPP and they replaced Dr. Sama S. Banya and Dr. Prince A.

[p.38]

Harding who were, respectively, the first and .second defendants in SC.2/05. The parties in both cases are the same, save for the addition of the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice in the present proceedings.

The factual background

To appreciate the circumstances of the present case, S.C. No. 3/2005 (SC.3/05), it would be useful to ascertain the background leading to the present proceedings. It is important to note that the primary facts giving rise to the present case are the same as those in SC. 2/05.

In July 2005 the National Executive Council ("NEC") of the SLPP held a meeting in Freetown and decided that a Party Conference of the SLPP be held at Makeni in the Northern Province of Sierra Leone on 19th and 20th of August 2005. The SLPP is one of the political parties in Sierra Leone registered under the provisions of the national Constitution ("the National Constitution") and the Political Parties Act 2002, No.3 of 2002 — ('''the Political Parties Act"). One of the purposes of the Party Conference was to elect the Party's Presidential Nominee for the 2007 elections, who under clause V (2) (C) of the 1995 Constitution of the SLPP ("the SLPP Constitution"), automatically becomes the Party Leader after such election.

The plaintiff was of the view that it was too early to choose a Presidential Nominee for the Party anytime in 2005 for the Presidential Elections in 2007. Being unhappy with the Party's National Executive Council's decision to proceed with the election of the Presidential Nominee of the SLPP at the Party Conference scheduled to be held on 19th-20th August 2005, the plaintiff commenced the proceedings in SC.2/05 seeking a number of declarations and a permanent injunction against the 1st, 2nd and 3rd defendants who are the same three defendants (in their official capacities) in the present action. The defendants by their Counsel gave an undertaking that the Party would not proceed with the proposed Party Conference and election of the Party's Presidential Nominee until the matter had been determined. The plaintiff by his Counsel gave a cross-undertaking as to damages.

The plaintiff’s action in SC.2/05 was heard on 17th August 2005 and determined by this court on 31st August 2005, striking out the plaintiff’s action for want of locus standi. Thereafter the SLPP proceeded with the Party Conference at Makeni on 3rd and 4th September 2005, at which occasion the incumbent Vice President, Solomon Ekuma Berewa was elected Leader and Presidential Nominee for the SLPP for the 2007 Presidential Elections defeating three other rivals, namely Joseph Bandabla Dauda, Charles Francis Margai and Julius Maada Bio.

As an aspirant to be Presidential Nominee for SLPP, the plaintiff is again renewing his same challenges to the actions taken by the Party. He commences these proceedings again as a private individual citizen and "in the general interest of maintaining and upholding the National Constitution" and keenly concerned that his Party (the SLPP) maintains its pristine democratic credentials and tradition consistent with the National Constitution and the rule of law generally, the same footing upon which he commenced his action in SC.2/05.

By an Originating Notice of Motion dated 27 October 2005, the plaintiff claims a number of declarations. I set out these declarations so as to appreciate the resemblance of the present action to that of SC.2/05. The declarations and orders sought are:

1. A DECLARATION to the effect that the nomination, election, selection, choice, or adoption, as the case, may be, by the 1st Defendant herein, on 4th September 2005, at its Party Conference held at Makeni on 3rd and 4th September, 2005, of Solomon Ekuma Berewa as the Leader (Presidential Nominee) for the Sierra Leone People's Party (SLPP), whilst, at the self-same material, the said Solomon Ekuma Berewa was the Vice-President of Sierra Leone under the provisions of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991, was and is inconsistent and incompatible with and in contravention and violation of subsections 35(4) and 76(1)(h) of the said National Constitution of Sierra Leone, and was and is accordingly [p.40] unconstitutional, illegal, undemocratic, invalid or null and void, and so of no lawful effect whatsoever.

2. A DECLARATION to the effect that the acceptance, assumption, holding and incumbency of the position or post of Leader (Presidential Nominee) for the Sierra Leone People's Party (SLPP) by Solomon Ekuma Berewa, with effect from 4th September 2005 and up until now, whilst the said Solomon Ekuma Berewa was and has been throughout the self-same material time the Vice-President of Sierra Leone under the provisions of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991, was and is inconsistent and incompatible with and in contravention and violation of subsection 35(4) and 76(l)(h) of the said National Constitution of Sierra Leone, and was and is accordingly unconstitutional, illegal, undemocratic, invalid or null and void, and so of no lawful effect whatsoever.

3. A DECLARATION to the effect that the nomination, election, selection, choice, or adoption, as the case may be, by the 1st Defendant herein as aforesaid, of Solomon Ekuma Berewa as the Leader (Presidential Nominee) for the Sierra Leone People's Party (SLPP), whilst, at the self-same material time, the said Solomon Ekuma Berewa was the Vice-President of Sierra Leone under the provisions of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991, and that the acceptance, assumption, holding and incumbency of the said post or position of Leader (Presidential Nominee) for the SLPP by the said Solomon Ekuma Berewa whilst he was and still is effectively Vice-President of Sierra Leone as aforesaid, being both separately and jointly inconsistent and incompatible with and in contravention and violation of subsections 35(4) and 76(1)(h) of the said National Constitution as aforesaid, are both separately and jointly tantamount to a suspension, alteration or repeal by implication, presumptive conduct or otherwise of the said provisions in subsections 35(4) and 76(1)(h) thereof "other than on the authority of Parliament" in terms of subsections 108(8) and (9) of the said National Constitution.

4. A DECLARATION to the effect that, by offering or allowing himself to be nominated, elected, chosen, or adopted into, and/or by having ostensibly accepted, assumed, held or occupied and continued to hold or occupy up until now since 4th September 2005, or at all, as the case may be, the position or post of Leader (Presidential Nominee) for the Sierra Leone People's Party (SLPP), whilst he was and still is effectively Vice-President of Sierra Leone under the provisions of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991, such item(s) of conduct being inconsistent and incompatible with and in contravention of the provisions in subsections 35(4) and 76(1)(h) of the said National Constitution, and by virtue thereof, Solomon Ekuma Berewa, in his capacity as Vice-President of Sierra Leone as aforesaid, has committed and is still committing a violation of the Constitution of Sierra Leone by thereby failing or refusing or neglecting to "support, uphold and maintain the Constitution of Sierra Leone as by law established" to wit, by thereby failing or refusing or neglecting, in respect of the said provisions, to comply with the oath of Vice-President as set out in the Third Schedule to the said National Constitution, which said oath he did "take and subscribe" before entering upon the duties of the said office under the provisions of subsections 54(4) of the said National Constitution.

5. A DECLARATION to the effect that the position or post of Leader (Presidential Nominee) of the Sierra Leone People's Party (SLPP) for the purposes of the 2007 national Presidential elections has, in law, stood vacant with effect from 4th September 2005 and that, in law, it still remains vacant as at the time of making this declaratory order by reason of the constitutional violations and contraventions which are the subject of the foregoing declarations herein.

6. A PERMANENT OR FINAL INJUNCTION restraining the 1st Defendant herein in all its emanations and manifestations as organs, institutions, officers, members, sessions, meetings or operations thereof, the 2nd and 3rd Defendants herein, in their respective official capacities, and the servants, agents, operatives, [p.43] privies and successors-in-office of the 1st, 2nd and 3rd Defendants, as may variously be applicable, from nominating, electing, selecting, choosing, or adopting any or the incumbent Vice-President of Sierra Leone under the provisions of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991, at all events during any time when subsections 35(4) and 76(1)(h) of the said National Constitution and the relevant provisions of the Constitution of the Sierra Leone People's Party (SLPP) dated July 1995, are still in force in their, present form and text, as Leader (Presidential Nominee) for the said SLPP whilst the said incumbent was or still is effectively Vice-President of Sierra Leone as aforesaid.

7. AN ORDER OF MANDAMUS commanding the 4th Defendant herein, in his/her official capacity, duties and functions as the Honourable Attorney-General and Minister of Justice, to ensure that any or the incumbent Vice-President of Sierra Leone under the provisions of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991, at all events during any time when subsections 35(4) and 76(1)(h) of the said National Constitution and the provisions of the Constitution of the Sierra Leone People's Party (SLPP) dated July 1995 are still in force in their present form and text, is properly and best advised not to (and in fact, does not) offer or allow himself /herself to be nominated, elected, selected, chosen, or adopted into, nor to accept, assume, hold or occupy, as the case may be, the position or post of Leader (Presidential Nominee) for the said SLPP whilst the said incumbent was or still is effectively Vice-President of Sierra Leone as aforesaid.

The plaintiff further seeks any other or further relief as the Court may deem just, together with costs of the action.

Questions for determination

At the hearing on 7th December 2005, the Court in the exercise of its powers under Rule 98 of the Supreme Court Rules as read with 0.52 r 3 of the High Court Rules and 0.34 r2 of the English Supreme Court Rules as contained in the 1960 Annual Practice, ordered [p.43] two questions of law, arising out of the action (SC No.3/05) to be first determined. The two questions are:

(a) Whether in the circumstances of the instant case this court can properly invoke the provisions of section 122(2) of the Constitution, Act No. 6 of 1991, to depart from its decision in the matter entitled S.C.No.2/2005; as to hold that the plaintiff has capacity to bring the action herein and is not deprived of such capacity because of lack of locus standi and/or his failure to exhaust other remedies available to him? and

(b) Whether in the event that the court were to hold that this is not a proper case to invoke the provision of section 122(2) of the Constitution, Act No.6 of 1991, to depart from its previous decision as aforesaid, this court is not bound to apply its decision in SC.2/2005 and ought not to strike out the Originating Notice of Motion herein because of lack of capacity of the plaintiff to maintain the action herein for the same reasons as contained in its decision in SC 2/2005, thus depriving this court of jurisdiction to hear and determine the matter on its merit.

In order to facilitate the proper consideration of the questions posed for the court's determination, the court ordered further written submissions in addition to the case for the parties, with supporting case and statute laws on the matter. Counsel for the plaintiff prepared and filed the plaintiff's further written submissions on 24th January 2006.

Before I deal with the arguments as contained in the statement of the plaintiffs case and in Counsel's further written submissions, and the arguments relied on by the defendants, it is pertinent to point our[sic] that this court is the final arbiter of any question of law in Sierra Leone, as mandated by the Constitution. Thus the court has the onerous task of setting the path to follow on important legal issues such as [p.44] those with which we are concerned in this case. In this regard, I re-echo what I said in SC No.2/2005 that:

".... the courts in Sierra Leone, in particular the Supreme Court, will have to decide the path to follow on the standing of a party who seeks to invoke the review jurisdiction of the court in constitutional, as well as administrative law disputes. The court must do so based on legal grounds."

In the final analysis, the position which this court takes in the present case, will result in what I have indicated above, that is, to set a path to follow on the question of locus standi of the party who seeks to invoke the jurisdiction of the court in constitutional law disputes, and how this court should exercise its power under section 122(2) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone. Having said that, I now turn to the submissions of Counsel for the parties.

Submissions by Counsel

From the outset, Dr Jabbi contended that the Supreme Court has the mandate to depart from its previous decisions where it is right to do so. There can be no question that this court possesses the power to depart from its previous decision.

The authority to do so is section 122(2) of the Constitution which provides:

"(2) The Supreme Court may, while treating its own previous decisions as normally binding, depart from a previous decision when it appears right so to do and all other courts shall be bound to follow the decision of the Supreme Court on question of law." (Emphasis added)

A similar position also exists in the English House of Lords. As Dr. Jabbi of Counsel for plaintiff puts its, there is a close" textual affinity" in the statements of [p.45] the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in Section 122 of the Sierra Leone Constitution and that of the House of Lords in the Practice Statement (Judicial Precedent) [1966] 3 All ER 77 HL (UK). As with section 122(2) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, I also set out the House of Lords Practice Statement:

Their Lordships regard the use of precedent as an indispensable foundation upon which to decide what is the law and its application to individual cases. It provides at least some degree of certainty upon which individual can rely in the conduct of their affairs, as well as a basis for orderly development of legal rules.

Their Lordship nevertheless recognize that too rigid adherence to precedent may lead to injustice in a particular case and also unduly restrict the proper development of the law. They propose, therefore, to modify their present practice and, while treating former decisions of this House as normally binding, to depart from a previous decision when it appears right to do so.

In this connection, they will bear in mind the danger of disturbing retrospectively the basis on which contracts, settlements of property and fiscal arrangements have been entered into and also the especial need for certainty as to the criminal law.

This announcement is not intended to affect the use of precedent elsewhere than in this House. "

I will return to this Practice Statement and section 122(2) of the Constitution later in this judgment. For the moment, I need only say that having discovered the baseline for the authority to depart from the court's previous decision, the onus is [p.46] on the plaintiff to establish the justification for such departure as was done in Miliangos v George Frank (Textiles) Limited [1975] 3 All ER 801.

In his submissions, both written and oral, Dr. Jabbi of Counsel for the plaintiff argued that the majority decision of the court on the issue of locus standi was grievously wrong and as such it was a grave denial and miscarriage of justice. Thus to "nip" in the bud any suspicion of an inherent trend lurking towards any form of attempted constituticide," Counsel submitted that the court should depart from its decision in SC.2/05 soonest possible. In support of his quest for the court to change its mind on the issue of locus standi, Counsel relied on his 51 page statement of the plaintiff's case and the detailed 31 page further written submission, as well as his oral submission in Court.

As I understand it, Dr. Jabbi's main contention is that the court failed to decide on the issue of locus standi and that all that were said on the issue in SC.2/05 were obiter dicta. Counsel quoted the following passage in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice in support of his contention:

"For reasons which will soon become obvious, I do not believe it is necessary in the circumstances of the instant case for me to dispose of the issue of standing on that basis and I do not desire to do (SIC). I therefore make no pronouncement on whether on[sic] not this court should adopt the liberal approach in the inquiry for standing as advocated by Dr. Jabbi. "

That passage and the remarks by the other members of the court, on the issue of locus standi were effectively "reduced to mere dicta" argued Counsel.

Not content with the above line of contention, Counsel presented his alternative stance. He suggested that-even if the views expressed by the members of the court were not mere dicta, there were serious reservations about the court's decision on the plaintiffs standing. It appears from the submissions that [p.47] according to Counsel for the plaintiff, four justices misapprehended the issue of locus standi and only one espoused the correct concept of the locus standi.

Counsel, in this regard, relied on the following passage in the judgment of His Lordship, Tolla-Thompson JSC:

"In this regard, I am inclined to adopt a liberal approach to this question. The plaintiff is a Sierra Leonean and a fully paid-up member of SLPP. He is an aspirant for the Presidential Election in 2007. In my humble view, I think this is enough to vest the plaintiff with standing and I so hold. "

In an attempt to further buttress his client's case, Dr. Jabbi went on to contend and sought to demonstrate that the views expressed by Tolla-Thompson JSC and those of my own were "diametrically" opposed to each other. Counsel quoted the following passage from my own judgment to support his contention:

In the present case, if this Court were to accept the liberal approach to the test of standing urged upon it by Dr Bu-Buakei Jabbi, the plaintiff must show, not only that he has a sufficient interest in the matter that he brings to the court, but that this liberal test of "sufficient interest" is the appropriate test to be adopted in Sierra Leone. No case decided by our courts here had been cited by Counsel on this issue. However when looking at the cases on the test of standing from other jurisdictions, it is clear that the position is not uniform. Thus, the courts in Sierra Leone, in particular the Supreme Court, will have to decide the path to follow on the standing of a party who seeks to invoke the judicial review jurisdiction of the Court. The Court must do so based on legal grounds. My searches in the National Constitution, Statutes and Rules of Courts have not shown any express legislative formula in this jurisdiction for the liberal approach to standing as urged by Counsel.

Apart from the clear test to invoke the Courts jurisdiction under section 28 of the National Constitution, the general feeling as to the approach to be taken by the Courts in Sierra Leone is one where the applicant for a judicial review in the nature here claimed, the applicant must show that he has an interest in the subject matter before the court. That interest must be one that is personal to him, and one which has been adversely affected by the action complained of. A general interest which the applicant possesses in common with all members of the public or in common with other members of a section of the community cannot confer standing on him.

As to the other two members of the court, Wright JSC and Kamanda JA, Counsel contended that they simply agreed to the learned Chief Justice's decision on the issue of locus standi. Counsel then contended that in the light of the lack of unanimity of views held by the members of the court in SC.2/05 on the issue of locus standi, this is also justification for the Court to depart from its previous decision.

On the other hand, Mr. Eke Halloway of Counsel for the first, second and third defendants submitted that as in SC.2/05, the plaintiff lacks capacity or standing to maintain the action in SC.3/05 for the same reasons as contained in the decision of the court in SC.2/05 which was not given per incuriam.

In addition, Mr. Halloway pointed to the fact that following the court's decision in SC2/05 the defendants proceeded to hold their Party Conference and regulate the affairs of their Party including holding elections of all the offices of the Party.

For those reasons, Counsel for the first three defendants submitted, it would not be right for the court to depart from its earlier decision made in SC.2/05, relying on the House of Lords Practice Statement (Judicial Precedent).

[p.49]

Issues

In the light of the submissions by Counsel for the parties, it seems obvious that three issues emerged for the court to determine: the first is whether the decision of the court in SC.2/05 was wrong, thereby justifying departure from it; secondly, whether SC.2/05 can be distinguished from the present case; thirdly, whether the court will follow its earlier decision i.e. whether the court should refuse to depart from its decision in SC.2/05.

Whether the decision in SC.2/05 was wrong.

The onus is on the plaintiff to persuade the Court that its decision in SC.2/05 was wrong, justifying a departure from it. There are numerous cases to support the proposition of law that where a previous decision of the court is shown to be erroneous, the court is permitted to depart from it. See Distributors (Baroda) Pvt and Limited v Union of India (1988) (1985) AIR 1585; R v Shivpuri [1986] 2 All AER 334; Federal Civil Service Commission v Laoye (1990) LRC (Const.) 443 SC (Nigeria); O'Brien v Mirror Group Newspapers Limited [2000] 1ESC 70 (25 October 2000); Pendakwa Raya v Tan Tatt Eek & Anor. (2005) MYFC 2 (3 February 2005).

The action SC.2/05 came before this Court in August 2005 and the question before the court was whether the plaintiff (the same plaintiff in the present action) had the locus standi to invoke the jurisdiction of the court. The main judgment was delivered by His Lordship, the Chief Justice who having exhaustively considered the arguments from both parties, concluded at pp 30-31 of His Lordship's judgment:

"In the circumstances of this case and based on the available affidavit evidence, to grant the plaintiff locus standi to maintain an action to ensure [p.50] the SLPP, a political party registered under the Political Party Act, does not contravene any provision of the National Constitution, particularly section 35 thereof, would be, in my opinion to pre-empt the Commission and, as it were to allow the plaintiff to usurp the powers of the Commission particularly when there is no allegation before us that the Commission has failed to carry out its statutory duties and the Commission has not even been made a party to this action. (See the Nigerian Cases of Nwanko v Nwanko supra; Ajakaiye v Military Governor(1994) SCNJ 102 at 119; and Amaghizenween v Eguanwense (1993) 11 SCNJ27).

For all the above reasons, I hold that the plaintiff lacks locus standi to maintain the claim for declarations sought as part of the third and fourth reliefs in the Originating Notice of Motion. The claim for this relief should be struck out".

Turning to the fifth relief sought namely that of a permanent injunction, and His Lordship continued:

"As I said earlier, in my opinion, this is a consequential relief which of necessity must flow from one of the several declarations sought. Ex facie, it is difficult to tell with which of the declarations sought this relief has a nexus. If it is to be attached to the declaration sought in the second relief in the Originating Notice of Motion then it must be struck out in view of my earlier pronouncement that the Plaintiff could not invoke the original jurisdiction of this Court to maintain an action for the second relief. The claim for an injunction ought also to be struck out for the same reason. Similarly, since I have held that despite the fact that this Court's original jurisdiction is properly invoked in respect of the third and fourth reliefs sought in the Originating Notice of Motion the Plaintiff nevertheless lacks locus standi to maintain the claim for said third and fourth reliefs and as [p.51] a result the Claim for the said reliefs ought to be struck out, for the same reason, the claim for an injunction as a relief consequential to the declarations sought under the third and fourth reliefs in the Originating Notice of Motion ought to be struck out. "

His Lordship, the learned Chief Justice, then pronounced the orders of the court as follows:—

"(1) The claims for the 1st and 2nd reliefs in the Originating Notice of Motion are hereby struck out as they could not be granted in this Court's original jurisdiction.

(2) The claim for the 3rd and 4th reliefs in the Originating Notice of Motion are hereby struck out for want of locus standi on the part of the Plaintiff.

(3)In view of Orders 1and 2 above the fifth relief in the Originating Notice of Motion that for a permanent injunction is struck out accordingly.

(4) The Defendants are here discharged from the Undertaking they gave to this Court on the 16th August 2005.

(5) The Cross-Undertaking as to damages given by the Plaintiff on the 16th August 2005 is to remain on the file until further Order.

(6) Each party to bear its own costs of the proceedings so far.

(7) Liberty to apply.

The above orders of the court were unanimously agreed to by all the members of the court. There were no dissenting judgments made by any of the members of the court. The Court held that as the plaintiff who has brought the action admittedly in his private capacity was asserting a public right, he lacked the locus standi to do so.

[p.52]

Secondly, in the circumstances of the case, the proper person or body with the standing to seek the remedies which the plaintiff sought in SC.2/05 would be the Political Parties Registration Commission, against whom remedies are open to an aggrieved person, should it failed or refused to perform its public functions.

It is incorrect for Counsel for the plaintiff to assert that the court was not unanimous in its decision that the plaintiff had no locus standi in SC.2/05. Clearly the tenor of Counsel's written and oral arguments on the issue of the plaintiffs locus standi in the matter, has been in part, swayed by the fact that there are three varying views on the approach to locus standi expressed by his Lordship, the Chief Justice, His Lordship Justice Tolla Thompson JSC and myself. Consequently, it led counsel to contend that the issue of locus standi was obiter in SC.2/05. Quite the contrary, the central question unanimously agreed to by all the members of the court was that the plaintiff had no locus standi to maintain his claims' for the alleged breaches of the provisions of the SLPP Constitution, Political Parties Act and National Constitution (ss.35 (2) and (4); 42(1); 43(a) and (b); 46(1), 49(4); 76(i) (h) and 171(15)).

It is difficult to follow the rationale of Counsel's contention that the issue of locus standi did not form the basis of the ratio decidendi of the court's decision in SC.2/05 when, central to the plaintiffs case, in the first place, was to establish his legal capacity or standing to invoke the jurisdiction of the court, and the court having heard the parties, unanimously ordered the plaintiffs claims to be struck out for want of locus standi. But, I am not surprised at all at counsel's approach to the issue, since he dissectively chose to use obiter remarks made by their Lordships in their reasoning as to the approach on the question of locus standi in the case.

Consequently, Counsel lost focus on the distinction between whether or not the issue of locus standi should be given liberal approach by the courts in Sierra Leone and whether the plaintiff has locus standi in the case before the court. The former is general, while the latter is specific. The varying views of the members of the court relate to the approach to the question of locus standi. In so far as the standing of the [p.53] plaintiff in the case (SC.2/05) was concerned, there can be no room for doubt that the court was unanimously firm that he had no standing to invoke the jurisdiction of the court. That is the firm decision of the court and unless it is justified and "appears right to do so", departure from it ought not to be done readily. See Pendakwa Raya v Jan Tatt Eek & Anor. (above); SCR No. 2 of 1982, Re Opai Kunangel Amin [1991] PNGLR 1.

One such justification for a departure, is that the plaintiff must show that the decision in SC.2/05 was wrong; (See the cases already cited earlier in this judgment; See also R v Kansal [2001] UKHL 62 (29 November 200l) or that the decision in SC.2/05 is calculated to produce injustice (Hinks v R [2000] UKHL 53 (26 October 2000); [2000] 3 WLR 1590.

Apart from the assertion that the decision of the court in SC.2/05 was "seriously wrong", Counsel for the plaintiff offers very little to convince this court that its decision was wrong and that it ought to be departed from. The voluminous written submission of Counsel merely took the court through the history and the various other circumstances in other comparable jurisdictions as to the nature and variety of possible factors enabling the courts to exercise their powers to review and reconsider their decisions such as through the exercise of the court's power of self-review, as in Eperokun v University of Lagos (1986) NWLR 162, Oduye v Nigeria Airways Limited (1987) 2 NWLR 126 and R v Shivpuri (above); instant self-review where it is done at the instance of a person affected, as in In re Transferred Civil Servants (Ireland) Compensation (1929) AC 242 PC (Ireland); Exp. Pinochet Ugarte (No. 2) [1999] 1 LRC and Pepcor Retirement Fund v Financial Services Board and Registrar of Pension Funds (30 May 2003) Supreme Court of South Africa, Case No. 198/2002; voiding self-review or setting aside own void decision, as in Coker v Coker (1950-56) ALR SL 130, Seif v Forfie (1958) 3 WALR 274 PC (Ghana) and. Mosi v Bagying (1963) 1 GLR.3 . The Court is, indebted to Counsel for the plaintiff for his painstaking research in those areas on the court's power to review and reconsider their decisions. On the other hand, there is nothing contained [p.53] in the submissions and the cases cited by Counsel under those areas which points to the claim by the plaintiff that this court's decision in SC.2/05 was seriously wrong. That is the first hurdle which the plaintiff must overcome before he can assert that it is right for this court to depart from its earlier decision.

There is an aspect of the present case which counsel for the plaintiff sought to rely on to persuade the court to accord the plaintiff locus standi, thereby effectively reconsidering and departing from its previous decision in SC.2/05. Counsel now suggests that the issues now raised in the present action SC.3/05 are different from those raised and determined in SC.2/05. These include alleged violations of section 35(4), 76(1)(h), 108(8) & (9), 54(4) of the National Constitution, alleged vacancy in the Office of Leader (Presidential Nominee) of the SLPP, an injunction against the 1st, 2nd and 3rd defendants from electing any incumbent Vice-President as Leader (Presidential Nominee) of SLPP, and mandamus against the 4th defendant to command him to give proper advice to the Government so as to avoid contravening section 35(4) and 76(l)(h) of the Constitution. Obviously Counsel relies on these "new" issues also to support his counter-argument on the question of estoppel per rem judicatum raided by counsel for the defendants.

In my judgment, for our present purpose, the issue of estoppel per rem judicatum, is of no moment here. It does not arise and I need not consider it. I am content to decide this case on the issue of locus standi and whether this court should depart from its earlier decision on this aspect of the case.

On the contention that the new issues ought to enable this court to change its mind on the locus standi of the plaintiff, I need firstly to say that apart from the allegation of breach of section 108(8) and (9) of the National Constitution and the claim for an order of mandamus, the other provisions referred to by counsel had already been considered in SC.2/05. They are not new issues. In reality what Counsel is how saying is that, these alleged breaches of the same provisions of the National Constitution have now been made again as a result of the SLPP Conference at [p.55] Makeni on 3rd and 4th September. 2005, suggesting that the circumstances had changed from those existing up to 31st August 2005, the date of the SC.2/05 decision. In this case, and on the facts as presented to the court, I am of the firm view that the circumstances, particularly, the factual circumstances giving rise to SC.2/05 and SC.3/05 have not changed. The facts, the issues and the parties are basically the same. The addition of the 4th defendant in SC.3/05 makes no difference as to the factual basis of these two cases which in reality are one and the same case rebound and clothed with a different colour. On that view of the facts of the two cases, it would be difficult for the plaintiff to satisfy this court that it should change its mind and depart from its previous decision on the status of the plaintiff.

However, even if, for argument's sake, new issues, namely, the alleged breach of section 108 and that of mandamus, the locus standi of the plaintiff does not depend on those 'new' allegations, rather .his locus standi is determined by the factual circumstances of the case upon which he stands. A mere change of issues along the way does not confer standing on the plaintiff. The case of Senator Abraham Adesanya v The President of Federal Republic of Nigeria & Others [1981] 2 NCLR 358, at p. 390, supports this proposition where the court said:

"The fundamental aspect of locus standi is that it focuses on the party seeking to get his complaint before the court, not on the issues he wishes to have adjudicated".

See also the Constitutional Law of South Africa at chap. 8.2 where it is stated:

"The concept of standing is concerned with whether a person who approaches the court is a proper party to present the matter in issue to the court for adjudication. The word 'standing' has been referred to as 'a metaphor used to designate a proper party to a court action'. An inquiry into standing should thus focus on the party who brings the matter before the court, not on the issues to be adjudicated"

[p.56]

In the present case before us, there is no evidence whatsoever that the factual background of the plaintiff has changed from that which pertained on 31st August 2005. His status, and therefore, his standing, in my judgment, remains the same as it was in SC.2/05 as in the present SC.3/05.

Then, there is one further aspect of the case that undoubtedly affects the plaintiffs standing in this matter. It will be observed that following the decision of this court on 31st August 2005, the first three-defendants proceeded to hold the postponed Party Conference at Makeni on 3rd-4th September 2005. On 1st September 2005, the plaintiff issued a statement in writing (Exhibit 8 to the affidavit in support of the case) addressed to the people of Sierra Leone. In that statement, the plaintiff decided not to participate in the SLPP political affairs and activities during the Conference or ever. He requested all his relatives, friends, well-wishers, sympathizers and supporters, in and outside of Sierra Leone, not to attend the Party Conference with any intention of pursuing his political interest.

That is a clear demonstration that the plaintiff is severing his very interest which he purports to represent in this action, inter alia, as "a conscientious and active member of the SLPP who is keenly concerned that the Party maintains and enhances its pristine democratic credentials; and a person aspired to be elected Leader and a 2007 Presidential Nominee" Therefore, the only capacity in which he is pursuing these proceedings is, in his own words, "as a public-spirited, law-abiding and constitution-compliant citizen of Sierra Leone ... in the general interest of maintaining and upholding the National Constitution". That was the capacity in which he came before the Court in SC.2/05, when the Court found him to be lacking locus standi in such circumstances. The finding of the Court in the present proceedings remains the same.

[p.57]

There can be no suggestion here that the plaintiff can bring an action under the National Constitution in the general interest of the public, as he purported to do, unlike the position in South Africa. Under section 38 of the Constitution of South Africa, those who can bring actions under that provision for breaches of fundamental rights are specified. They include:

a. anyone acting in their own interest;

b. anyone acting on behalf of another person who cannot act in their own name;

c. anyone acting as a member of, or in the interest of, a group or class of persons;

d. anyone acting in the public interest; and

e. an association acting in the interest of its members.

Notably, there is a provision under the Constitution of South Africa entitling a person to bring an action in the public interest or in the interest of others for alleged breaches of fundamental rights. In the present case, the plaintiff cannot bring himself within such constitutional entitlement because there is no constitutional sanction for public interest litigation by a public spirited litigant under the Constitution of Sierra Leone for alleged breaches of fundamental rights.

The two" Gate-ways"

Dr. Jabbi of Counsel for the plaintiff has helpfully referred to two jurisdictions -Sierra Leone and Solomon Islands, in his submission on this aspect of the plaintiff's case. The 'two gate-ways' (to use the expression in Ulufa 'alu v Attorney General & Others [2002] 4 LRC 1, and referred to by Counsel for the plaintiff), to invoke the jurisdiction of the court to enforce the provisions of a constitution is common to many of the common law jurisdictions with written Constitution. The case of Ulufa 'alu v Attorney General had gone to the Court of Appeal of Solomon Islands which confirmed the High Court judgment: Ulufa 'alu v Attorney General [2004] [p.57] SBCA 1; (2nd August 2004) CA CAC 015 OF 2001. The two gateways under the National Constitution of Sierra Leone are sections 28(1) and 127(1). I set out these two provisions. 28(1) provides:

"Subject to the provisions of subsection (4), if any person alleges that any of the provisions of sections 16 to 27 (inclusive) has been, is being or is likely to be contravened in relation to him by any person (or, in the case of a person who is detained, if any other person alleges such a contravention in relation to the .detained person), then without prejudice to any other action with respect to the same matter which is lawfully available, that person, (or that other person), may apply by motion to the Supreme Court for redress. " [underlining added] and Section 127(1) says:

"A person who alleges that an enactment or anything contained in or done under the authority of that or any other enactment is inconsistent with, or is in contravention of a provision of this Constitution, may at any time bring an action in the Supreme Court for a declaration to that effect. "

The equivalent provisions under the Constitution of Solomon Islands are sections 18(1) and 83(1) respectively, which Counsel for the plaintiff referred to.

A person's standing under the section 28(1) "gateway" presents no qualm at all. He has to show that the alleged breach was "in relation to him", as in the case of section 18(1) of the Constitution of Solomon Islands. See Ulufa 'alu v Attorney General (above); Dow v Attorney General [1992] LRC (Cons.t) 623 (Botswana). We are not concerned with this "gate-way" in the present case.

If I may add, sections 38 (Enforcement of Rights under the Bill of Right-provisions) " and 172 (Powers of Courts in Constitutional Matters) also provide the two "gateways" under the Constitution of South Africa. Apart from section 38 (set out above), [p.59] subsection (2)(d) of section 172 provides that any person or Organ of State with a sufficient interest may appeal, or apply, directly to the Constitutional Court to confirm or vary an order of constitutional invalidity made by a court.

Dr. Jabbi likened the second "gate-way" under -section 83(1) of the Constitution of Solomon Islands to that of Section 127(1) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, and urges this court to give section 127(1) unrestricted construction so as to confer locus standi on any person, including the plaintiff, who alleges breaches of the provisions of the Constitution, to challenge such breaches before the court. Implicit in that submission is the contention that there is no need for such a person to show that he has an interest which is being affected or likely to be affected by the alleged breach or that he need not show that he is a proper party, before he could invoke the jurisdiction of the Court. It is appreciated that the width of section 127(1) is couched in the words "a person who alleges" which words are seemingly wide in their purport. However, to accept Counsel's contention without more would be grossly flawed for a number of reasons. First, the case law authorities show that such words do not necessarily confer limitless boundaries in their application. If it were so, the courts would be flooded with frivolous and vexatious litigations, even by "mere busy-bodies", a situation which the courts must guard against. See R v Inland Revenue Commissioners; exparte National Federation of Self-Employed and Small Businesses Ltd [1982] A.C. 617 (the Federation of Self-Employees Case). Secondly, it does not accord with the construction given to similar provisions in other common law jurisdictions with written constitutions where a citizen, although has the right to challenge the constitutionality of a statute or things done under it, must show that he has sufficient interest to bring the challenge in the Court. See SCR 4 of 1980; Re Petition of Michael Somare [1981] PNGLR 265; Anderson v The Commonwealth (1932) 47 C.L.R. 50; Trethowan v Peden (1930) 3 S.R. (NSW) 18; Harris v Adeang [1998] NRSC 1 (Supreme Court of Nauru); Dow v Attorney General of Botswana (above). Thirdly, although section 127 (1) gives no express guidance as to the ambit"' of the words "a person who alleges" used in that provision, the language of the section does not inhibit the power of this court, as the ultimate court of final appeal, [p.60] to insist on the requirement that a person who wishes to bring a constitutional challenge before the court must be a "proper party," since the standing to bring a matter before the court is the first procedural criteria that a person must accomplish before he can be heard on any issue he may wish to raise, however so pressing such issue may be.

The position, both in SC.2/05 and the present case, is that the plaintiff is alleging that a political party and its officers have contravened the provisions of the SLPP Constitution as well as those of the National Constitution. The law provides the statutory machinery under section 27 of the Political Parties Act which grants the Political Parties Registration Commission the right (and so, the standing) to invoke the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. There has been no evidence, whether before or after 31st August 2005, that the Commission had exercised its power under that section, nor is there any evidence to show that it had refused or neglected or failed to exercise its power under the Act. It would, therefore, be difficult to accord the plaintiff standing in those circumstances. He would not be the proper party to invoke the jurisdiction of the Court under section 127(1) of the National Constitution in this case.

The Supreme Court being clothed with the power to guard, interpret and apply the National Constitution of Sierra Leone, is entitled to provide guidance as to the operation of the provisions, such as section 127(1) of the National Constitution. In doing so, the court can only exercise its power over a person who is a proper party before it. The court has no jurisdiction, inherent or otherwise, over any person other than those properly brought before it as parties: Brydges v Brydges and Wood [1909] P. 187 CA. After all, if the court were to declare that the actions complained of were unconstitutional, it would only be doing so in the exercise of its duty which it owes to the person whose rights have been established, whether such person comes before the Court through section 28(1) gate-way or section 127(1) gate-way.

In the circumstances, the court was correct in coming to the decision that the plaintiff had no locus standi to maintain his claims in SC.2/05. The plaintiff has not shown otherwise, in the present case, to warrant a departure from it.

Whether SC.2/05 can be distinguished from SC3/05.

I have already stated that the factual background giving rise to SC.2/05 and SC.3/05 are the same, save perhaps, for the reframing or the repetition of the issues already dealt with in SC.2/05 and adding "new" ones, after the events of 3rd and 4th September 2005. The re-raising of those issues and adding the so-called 'new' ones do not and cannot accord the plaintiff locus standi since the factual foundation of the standing of the plaintiff to sue remains unchanged. In those circumstances there is no distinction between the factual basis of SC.2/05 and SC.3/05 sufficient to persuade the court to alter its position on the standing of the plaintiff. Counsel for the plaintiff referred to R v Shivpuri (above), where the learned law lords were able to distinguish the case of Anderton v Ryan [1985] 2 All ER 355, and applying the 1966 Practice Statement, departed from Anderton v Ryan. The House of Lords was there able to distinguish the two cases since they were founded on different facts giving rise to different legal issues in the cases. The case of R v Shivpuri concerns the appellant being charged and convicted of two counts of attempting to commit offences relating to drugs whereas in Anderton v Ryan the appellant was charged with attempting to handle stolen goods. The goods were not stolen, so the appellant was acquitted. One of the distinguishing factors between the two cases was that in Anderton v Ryan as Lord Bridge stated,

"The concern of the court was to avoid convictions in situations which most people as a matter of common sense, would not regard as involving criminality ".

That, regretted Lord Bridge, was not in line with the new law, Criminal Attempts Act 1981. There was a change in the situations of the two cases which warranted a departure from Anderton. That is not the position in our present case where the [p.62] plaintiff, as in SC.2/05, is still the same plaintiff and an aspirant to be Presidential Nominee for SLPP, who is again renewing his same challenges to the actions taken by the Party, commencing these proceedings again as a private individual citizen, and a public-spirited law-abiding citizen with the general interest of maintaining and upholding the National Constitution.

For my part I cannot find any justification for, nor do I accept any suggestion that material basis for the standing of the plaintiff has changed in SC.3/05 so as to accord him a change of status in the present proceedings. The findings of this court in SC.2/05 were based on those same material facts which remain unchanged in the present proceedings. See Goodharth, "Determining the Ratio Decidendi of a Case," Essays in jurisprudence and the common Law (1931) 1.

Application of the doctrine of exhaustion

In his submission both written and oral, Counsel for plaintiff contended that the doctrine of exhaustion had no relevance in SC.2/05 and by resorting to it, the court was distorting the law by "mere judicial fiat." With respect to Counsel, in applying the principles of the doctrine of exhaustion in SC.2/05, there was not a stint of judicial Fiat exerted by this court. The difficulty which Counsel faces is that, he is dissectively labouring on this issue of exhaustion as though it was an isolated aspect of the case. If it can be put in blunt terms: the doctrine of exhaustion is applicable, not only in administrative actions but also in constitutional matters. It is a relevant factor for the exercise of the court's discretion whether in administrative law or constitutional law actions on the question of whether to grant or refuse locus standi. In Re Petition of Michael Somare 's case (cited earlier), although the petitioner was granted locus standi, the Supreme Court of Papua New Guinea had not lost sight of the qualification to the general view of standing, namely, that a court should have a discretion to refuse standing where the applicant has not exhausted other methods of achieving the same thing.

At p.30 of His Lordship the Chief Justice's Judgment in SC.2/05 clearly point out:

[p.63]

"It has not been alleged by the Plaintiff that the Commission has neglected or refused to carry out its functions under sections 6 and/or 27 of the Political Parties Act. The situation there is different from what obtained in the Nigerian case of Fawehinmi case cited earlier in this judgment. In that case it was shown by affidavit evidence that the appellant had requested the. Director of Public Prosecutions to exercise the discretion granted to him by statute and it was only after the Respondent replied that he had not come to a decision whether or not to prosecute that the appellant took out the proceedings for leave to apply for mandamus. I say this because, in this country also, where a public officer or public body fails or refuses to carry out its functions or to exercise powers vested in it by statute the law provides ample remedies open to a person affected thereby ".

In my own judgment at page 16, I said:

"The provisions of the Political Parties Act mentioned above, in my view, provide an aggrieved person such as the plaintiff, with the statutory machinery to deal with his complaints against the defendants over the organization, operation, functioning or conduct of the SLPP. The plaintiff has not done that in this case. Further, there was no suggestion that the available alternative administrative remedy under the provision of the Political Parties Act was inadequate nor was it dispositive. It may well-be viewed as an abuse of process to allow the plaintiff to first exhaust judicial remedies and then revert to explore the alternative administrative remedy. This is a factor also relevant to the exercise of the Court's discretion ".

His Lordship Tolla-Thompson JSC had this to say:

''Has he exhausted all his remedies before coming to us?

[p.64]

I opine not. The infraction of the SLPP constitution is intertwined with the Political Parties Act and the National Constitution and therefore Section 6(2) (d) and Section 27(1) of the Political Parties 2002 come into play.

……

"There is no evidence that the plaintiff ever approached the commission either orally, writing or otherwise in accordance with this section. If he had done, it would have been a different matter. "

……

In whatever circumstance, I do not think that the plaintiff should have bypassed the commission and come straight. He should have exhausted his remedy if only for the record. If the Commission failed to act there should be evidence to that effect. "

The sum total of the opinions just cited makes it quite plain that the principles of the doctrine of exhaustion are genuine factors which the court is entitled to take into consideration on the question of whether or not a person should be allowed to invoke the jurisdiction of the court, be it in constitutional or administrative action. No error can be gleaned from the application of the doctrine of exhaustion by the court in SC2/05 and this court is not prepared to depart from what it said in that case.

Whether the court should depart from its previous decision.

In so far as I can gather from the authorities on the point, the decisions taken by the courts to depart or follow previous decisions were influenced by both law and judicial policy, and so, in my view, they should be. This will enable the courts, more particularly the Supreme Court to ensure certainty and consistency in the establishment and applications of authoritative declarations of the state of the law on an issue. Prior to the 1966 Practice Statement, the English Courts had been taking a somewhat very restrictive approach to disturbing previous decisions of the [p.65] courts as can be seen in some of the old cases. In Tommey v White (1850) 3 HL Cas. 49, at p.69, Lord Truro L.C. said:

"It appears that judgment — a complete and final judgment — has been pronounced by your Lordship's House in this case. That judgment can only be vacated by a special Act of Parliament to enable the parties, if injustice can be proved to have been done, to be again heard. "

Again, some years later in Thellusson v Rendlesham (1859) 7 HL Cas. 429, at p.529 Lord St. Leonards had this to say:

"I protested against what I thought might be hereafter quoted as a dangerous precedent, of calling in question a deliberate decision of the House of Lords. "

Much the same was held in London Tramways v London County Council [1898] A.C 375 where the House of Lords determined that despite instances of individual hardship that might result in it being bound to follow its own decisions, it was thought that it was better that the door to specific legal issues be closed once and for all by the highest court. On the other hand, the High Court of Australia has, as early as 1914, in The King -v- The Commonwealth Court of Conciliation and Arbitration and the President Thereof and the Australian Tramway Employees Association. [1914] 18 CLR 54, not adopted such rigid rule. Griffith CJ at p.58, laid down the rule as:

"In my opinion, it is impossible to maintain an abstract proposition that Court is either legally or technically bound by previous decisions. Indeed, it may, in a proper case, be its duty to disregard them. But the rule should be applied with great caution, and only when, the previous decision is [p.66] manifestly wrong, as, for instance, if it proceeded upon the mistaken assumption of the continuance of a repealed or expired Statute, or is contrary to a decision of another Court which this Court is bound to follow; not, I think, upon a mere suggestion that some or all of the members of the later Court might arrive at a different conclusion if the matter was res integra. Otherwise there would be grave danger of want of continuity in the interpretation of law".

Since 1966 the English Courts have taken a less strict approach on the application of stare decisis. However, to show the firm adherence to judicial precedents by the English Courts, it is not until 1986 in R v Shivpuri (above) that the 1966 Practice Statement had been applied to a decision that was only a year old, that is, the Anderton v Ryan case. I venture to suggest that in the .case of the courts in the United Kingdom and other countries that have firmly established and developed their laws for hundreds of years, the effect of their highest courts departing from their previous decisions may further enhance and strengthen the development of their laws. The same may not be the case in jurisdictions such as Sierra Leone and other .developing jurisdictions that are still at their embryonic stage of developing their laws and legal system. It is in this sense that I would urge this court and in my view it should adopt the approach taken by the courts in other developing common law jurisdictions when it comes to applying the provisions of section 122(2) of National Constitution.

Provisions such as section 122(2) are not automatic doors into the field of legal adventure, rather they are visionary guides to the courts of final resort to declare and steer the development of the law with certainty, and comity.

When one turns to cases in other developing common law jurisdictions, the views which I have expressed here find support. In the Papua New Guinea case of Re [p.67] Opai Kunangel Amin; SCR No.2 of 1982 [1991] PNGLR1, Kapi DCJ (as he then was) had this to say on the question of judicial precedent:

Counsel for the Public Prosecutor in his submission questioned the-correctness of the decision Re Joseph Auna. The case was decided by a five-Member Bench in December 1980. With the exception of one Member of that Court, this Bench is made-up of different judges. As a matter of practice, care should be taken when questioning the decisions of the Supreme Court in such a short time with different judges. If this is encouraged then the parties may be led to challenge the decisions of the Supreme Court before a bench composed of different judges in a short period of time. This could lead to a degree of some uncertainty of the principles of law pronounced by the Supreme Court. This is not desirable. However, where the principles of law pronounced by the Supreme Court are clearly wrong, they should be challenged as the opportunity arises, as the Supreme Court is not bound by its own decisions.

Like the Supreme Court of PNG, the Federal Court of Malaysia shares the caution against departing from an earlier recent decision of the court in Tunde Apatira & Ors. V Public Prosecutor (2001) 1 MLJ 259. In that case the Federal Court of Malaysia was asked to depart from its earlier decision in Mohammed bin Hassan v PP [1998] 2 MLJ 273. The court has this to say also:

"With respect, we are unable to accept the learned deputy's invitation to depart from Muhammed bin Hassan for three reasons. In the first place, Muhammed bin Hassan is a very recent decision of this court. It is bad policy for us as the apex court to leave the law in a state of uncertainty by departing from our recent decisions. Members of the public must be allowed to arrange their affairs so that they keep well within the framework of the law.

[p.68]

They can hardly do this if the judiciary keeps changing its stance upon the same issue between brief intervals. The point assumes greater importance in the field of criminal law where a breach may result in the deprivation of life or liberty or in the imposition of other serious penalties. Of course, if a decision were plainly wrong, it would cause as much injustice if we were to leave it unreversed merely on the ground that it was recently decided. In a case as the present this court will normally follow the approach adopted by the apex courts of other Commonwealth jurisdictions as exemplified by such decisions as R v Shivpuri [1986] 2 All ER 334.

The second reason is closely connected to the first. It also has to do with certainty in the law. The decision in Muhammed bin Hassan has been affirmed by our courts (see, PP v Ong Cheng Heong [1998] 6 MLJ 678) and convictions have been quashed by this court acting on its strength. See, for example Haryadi Dadeh v PP [2000] 4 MLJ 71. If we accept the learned deputy's invitation to depart from Muhammed bin Hassan, it will throw the law into a state of uncertainty and cast doubt on the accuracy of the pronouncements made in those cases that have so recently applied the interpretation formulated in that case. It is bad policy for us to keep the law in such a state of flux especially upon a question of interpretation of a statutory provision that comes up so often for consideration before the court.

Lastly — and this is the most important reason — we agree with the interpretation placed by the learned Chief Judge of Sabah and Sarawak on s 37(da) of the Act. The logic and reasoning for interpreting that subsection in the way in which it was done in Muhammed bin Hassan appear sufficiently from the judgment in case. It requires-no repetition.

[p.69]

For the foregoing reasons, we reject the argument of the respondent to the effect that Muhammed bin Hassan was wrongly decided and ought no longer to be applied. "

In another Malaysian case of Dalip Bhagwan Singh v Public Prosecutor (1998) MLJ1, the Federal Court of Malaysia said:

"In our local context, the Federal Court is to be substituted for the House of Lords with regard to the matter under discussion.

……

The rule of judicial precedent in relation to the House of Lords was stated in London Tramways v London County (1898) AC 375 that it was bound by its own previous decision in the interests of finality and certainty of the law, but a previous decision could be questioned by the House when it conflicted with another decision of the House or when it was made per incuriam, and that the correction of error was normally dependent on the legislative process.

……

In Malaysia, the Federal Court and its forerunner, i.e. the Supreme Court, after all appeals to the Privy Council were abolished, has never refused to depart from its own decision when it appeared right to do so.

Though the Practice Statement (Judicial Precedent) 1966, of the House of Lords is not binding at all on us, it has indeed and in practice been followed, though such power to depart from its own [p.70] previous decision has been exercised sparingly also. It is right that we in the Federal Court should have this power to do so but it is suggested that it should be used very sparingly on the important reason of the consequences of such overruling involved for it cannot be lost on the mind of anybody that a lot of people have regulated their affairs in reliance on a ratio decidendi before it is overruled. In certain circumstances, it would be far more prudent to call for legislative intervention. On the other hand, the power to do so depart is indicated (subject to a concurrent consideration of the question of the consequences), when a former decision which is sought to be overruled is wrong, uncertain, unjust or outmoded or obsolete in the modern conditions. "

I bear in mind, of course, that such judicial declarations by the courts of final appeal on the doctrine of precedent, do bear great weight on the state of the laws in a particular jurisdiction. This court will do the same because it has been given the power to do so under section 122(2) of the National Constitution, a provision that has "constitutionalised the doctrine of precedent" as so described by Odoki CJ in the Uganda case of Ssemogerere v A.G. [2005] 1 LRC 50, referring to art. 132(4) of the Constitution of Uganda, and which is in similar terms to our section 122(2) of the National Constitution.

It is also worth noting the remarks made by the Privy Council in the Attorney-General of Ontario v. The Canada Temperance Federation [1946] 50 C.W.N. 535 where it was said:

[p.71]

"Their Lordships do not doubt that in tendering humble advice to His Majesty, they are not absolutely bound by previous decisions of the Board, as is the House of Lords by its own judgments. In ecclesiastical appeals, for instance on more than one occasion the Board has tendered advice contrary to that given in a previous case, which further historical research has shown to have been wrong. But on constitutional questions it must be seldom indeed that the Board would depart from a previous decision which it may be assumed will have been acted upon both by Governments and subjects." (Emphasis added).

Being mindful of our own local context and the need to develop our law firmly, this Court will not lose sight of the wisdom imparted by the eminent judicial minds in the various cases on the doctrine of precedent. I need only refer to a couple of these cases before concluding this judgment. In Miliangos v George Frank Textiles) Limited (above) the House of Lords departed from its earlier decision in re United Railways of the Havana and Regla Warehouses Limited [I960] 2 All ER 332 (the Havana Railway case). Lord Wilberforce, referring to the 1966 Practice Statement said:

"Under it, the House affirmed its power to depart from a previous decision when it appears right to do so recognizing that too rigid adherence to precedent might…… ad to injustice in a particular case and unduly restrict the proper development of the law. My Lords, on the assumption that to depart from the Havana Railways case would not involve undue practical difficulties, that a new and more satisfactory rule is capable of being stated, I am of opinion that the present case falls within the terms of the declaration. To change the rule would, for the reasons already explained, avoid injustice in the present case. To change it [p.72] would enable the law to keep in step with commercial needs and with, the majority of other countries facing similar problems".

In the Irish case of O 'Brien v Mirror Group Newspaper Limited [2000] IESC 70 (25 October 2000), the court was there asked to depart from its earlier decision in De Rossa v Independent Newspapers PIC, (30th July 1979) Supreme Court, (Unreported). Keane CJ, declining the invitation to depart from De Rossa, said at pp 21-22 of his judgment:

"We are being asked to hold that not merely is the carefully considered and reasoned view of Hamilton CJ wrong: we are being asked to hold that it is so 'clearly wrong' that there are now "compelling reasons" why it should be overruled and that, indeed, justice requires that it be overruled.

The court, moreover, was invited to overrule the decision less than a year after it was pronounced. There is, of course, no guarantee whatever that, were it to be so overruled, within a relatively short period of time the court might not be persuaded that this decision in turn was 'clearly wrong' and must itself be overruled. The stage would have been reached at which the doctrine of stare decisis in this court would have been seriously weakened and the certainty, stability and predictability of law on which it is grounded significantly eroded. "

I find the guidance contained in the judgment of Henchy J. in Mogul of Ireland v Tipperary (NR) County Council [1976] IR 260 at p. 272 (which Keane CJ referred to in O Brien v Mirror Group Newspapers) very instructive. Declining the invitation to overrule the case of Smith v Cavan and Monaghan County Council [1949] IR 322, Henchy J said at p.272:

[p.73]

"A decision of the full Supreme Court... given in a fully argued case and on a consideration of all the relevant materials, should not normally be overruled merely because a later Court inclines to a different conclusion. Of course, if possible, error should not be reinforced by repetition or affirmation and the desirability of achieving certainty, stability, and predictability should yield to the demands of justice. However, a balance has to be struck between rigidity and vacillation, and to achieve that balance the later Court must, at the least, be clearly of opinion that the earlier decision was erroneous. "

The case of Mogul of Ireland also supports the proposition that even if the later court is of the opinion that earlier decision was wrong, it may decide that in the interests of justice not to overrule it if it has become inveterate and if in a widespread or fundamental way, people have acted on the basis of its correctness to such an extent that greater harm would result from overruling it than from allowing it to stand. In such cases the maxim communis error facit jus applies.

One of the obvious features of the present case is that it is based on the same factual circumstances as those in SC.2/05. This Court had fully considered the various constitutional provisions, including section 127(1), as well as the provisions of the Political Parties Act, in SC.2/05, in the light of those same factual background with which we are also concerned here. In such a situation I respectfully adopt the words of Henchy J. in Mogul of Ireland where, referring to the case of Smith v Cavan and Monaghan County Councils [1949] IR 322 which the Court was asked to overrule, he said:

"There are no new factors, no shift in the underlying considerations, no suggestion that the decision has produced untoward results not within the range of [the] court's foresight. In short, all that has been suggested to justify a rejection of that decision is that it was wrong. Before such a volte-face could be [p.74 justified it would first have to be shown that it was clearly wrong. Otherwise the decision to overrule it might itself become liable to be overruled. In my opinion, counsel for the applicants have, at most, established no more than that the interpretation for which they contend might possibly be preferred to that which commended itself to the court in Smith's case. That is not enough. They should show that the decision in Smith's case was clearly wrong and that justice requires that it should be overruled. They have not done so. I would therefore decline the invitation to overrule the decision in Smith's case. "

I have taken the liberty to quote extensively from these various case authorities in order to show the guiding thoughts and principles to be applied when an issue has been taken as to whether or not the court should depart from its previous decisions on a particular point. Unlike in the present case before us in SC3/05, all the authorities that I have been able to access involved different parties and different factual circumstances, although the issues for determination might be similar. Even where the cases involved were only a short period apart, the parties and material particulars were different save for the case of Ex parte Pinochet Ugarte (No.2) (above) where the period between the first Pinochet case and second one was only about three weeks. However, the basis for the quick-review of the court's earlier decision in that case was due to the fact that the court was not properly constituted. One of the members of the majority Law Lords in the Panel was a director and Chairperson of Amnesty International Charity Limited, an organisation connected to Amnesty International who was the Intervener in the proceedings before the House of Lords in the earlier hearing. The reasons for the setting aside the earlier order was due to the fault on the part of the court subjecting the petitioner to an unfair procedure. The circumstances in that case are different to those in the present case.

In the present case, I am not persuaded that the decision of the Court in SC2/05 was wrong. The interpretation and application of section 127(1) of the National Constitution in so far as it applies to the plaintiff in the circumstances of SC2/05 was [p.75] correct in law. Those circumstances have not changed and continue to apply to the plaintiff in the present case.

Nor do I think that SC.2/05 can be distinguished from SC.3/05 in the manner advanced by Dr. Jabbi of Counsel for the plaintiff. The distinction sought to be made and relied upon here stems from the fact that following the court's decision in SC.2/05, the SLPP proceeded to hold the Party's Conference and conducted other affairs of the Party. In my view, to confer locus standi on the plaintiff based on that distinction is not only artificial, but it will lead to endless arguments as to the standing of the plaintiff based on the distinction between the events before and after 3rd and 4th September 2005. Such an exercise may well be futile and ought not to be encouraged.

Simply because the members of the court in SC.2/05 were at variance in their reasoning on question of whether or not the approach to locus standi should be liberal, the fact remains that the court was nevertheless unanimous in the result of the case that the plaintiff had no locus standi to maintain his action in SC.2/05. The issue of the locus standi of the plaintiff was fully considered by this court in SC.2/05 and now, in this case SC.3/05 and decided upon it. As Henchy J said in Mogul of Ireland, the question was fully argued and answered; there are no new factors, no shift in the underlying considerations and no suggestion that the decision has produced untoward results. In fact the parties in this case (at least the defendants), have acted and conducted the affairs of their political Party acting on the correctness of the decision of the Court in SC.2/05. All that has been suggested to justify a departure from the decision in SC.2/05 is that it was wrong. That is not enough. Before such a volte-face could be justified, the plaintiff must first have to show that the decision of the Court in SC.2/05 was clearly wrong. In my opinion, he has not done so. I would therefore decline the invitation to depart from the decision in SC.2/05.

Conclusion and Order

In view of the number of issues raised and the voluminous painstaking research put into the case by Counsel for the plaintiff, I felt obliged to give due consideration to those [p.76] issues and the arguments (both written and oral) before coming to the conclusions, based on law, as I have done in this case. Thus, having done so, I answer the questions posed as follows:—

Question 1 In the circumstances of this case, the Supreme Court cannot and ought not to invoke section 122(2) of the National Constitution so as to depart from its earlier decision in SC.2/05. Therefore, I hold that the plaintiff lacks the capacity to maintain this action because he lacks locus standi.

Question 2 Having thus held that this is not a proper case to invoke section 122(2), this court declines to depart from its previous decision in SC.2/05 and is therefore bound to apply it in the present case. Consequently, the Originating Notice of Motion herein (S.C. No. 3/05) ought to be struck out because of lack of capacity of the plaintiff to maintain the action herein for the same reasons as contained in its decision in S.C. No. 2/2005.

The Originating Notice of Motion herein, S.C. No.3/2005, is hereby struck out for the reasons set out in this judgment.

It only remains for me to thank Counsel for the plaintiff for his usual acumen in the manner in which he presented the plaintiffs case, not only in this case but also in SC.2/05. The court is most grateful and is greatly assisted by the painstaking research and submissions (written and oral) presented to the court.

This is an application for an order of certiorari to remove to this court the order of the Court of Appeal dated the 13th day of July 2006 in the matter civil appeal numbered 60/2005 between Alhaji Abdulai Bangura (Appellant) and Toufic Huballah, Sierra Leone National Petroleum company Limited, Umaru Sawaneh Mohamed Kamara (Respondents) for the same to be quashed. The application is made pursuant to leave of this court given on the 8th day of September 2006.

FACTS

In civil suit numbered CC151/1996 in the High Court, Toufic Huballah, obtained judgement on the 8th day of June 2005 against the Sierra Leone National Petroleum Company Limited; Umaru Bah Sawaneh; Mohamed Kamara (the 2nd 3rd and 4th Respondents herein) and Alhaji Abdulai Bangura (the Applicant herein) Subsequently an application was made on behalf of Mr. Bangura to the High Court [p.198] Judge, the Honourable Mr. Justice A.S. Raschid, to set aside his judgement of the 8th day of June 2005 in default of appearance. A preliminary objection to the application was raised on behalf of the Sierra Leone National Petroleum Company Limited. The Judge upheld the objection by his order given on the 12th October 2005. Mr. Bangura was dissatisfied with the judge's order and as a consequence a Notice of Appeal dated the 25th day of October 2005 was filed on the same date, the 25th day of October 2005. On or about the 4th day of July, 2006, Mr. Serry-Kamal, of counsel, for Mr. Bangura, received a summons to settle the records for the appeal filed on behalf of Mr. Bangura. While the appeal processes were going on, the Court of Appeal on an application made on behalf of Mr. Huballah, struck out the appeal numbered 60/2005 which was the appeal filed on behalf of Mr. Bangura to set aside the judgement of the High Court given on the 8th day of June 2005. The Court of Appeal that struck out the appeal was comprised of Honourable Ms. Justice U.H. Tejan-Jalloh — Presiding; Honourable Mr. Justice P.O. Hamilton (Justice of Appeal) and Honourable Ms. Justice S. Koroma (Justice of Appeal)

GROUNDS

Mr. Bangura was dissatisfied with the striking out order of the Court of Appeal, thus resulting in this application invoking the supervisory powers of this court, and which said application is premised on the following grounds

1 The Court of Appeal exceeded the limits of its powers by striking out the said appeal

2. The Court of Appeal by striking out the said appeal acted ultra vires

3. The Court of Appeal had no power to strike out a duly constituted appeal on which another panel of the same court had granted a stay of execution and a summons had been issued to settle records

4. The Court of Appeal has no power to hear an interlocutory application to set aside a duly constituted appeal.

[p.199]

ARGUMENTS OF COUNSEL

Mr. Serry-Kamal, counsel for the Applicant, in argument, states that the appeal numbered 60/2005 which was struck out by the Court of Appeal was duly constituted and filed within time. He states that the striking out order of the Court of Appeal exhibited as "AFSK 18" to his affidavit in support of the application sworn to on the 4th August, 2006, was made on the 12th day of October 2005. Whereas the appeal against the striking out order exhibited to his said affidavit as "AFSK 19" was filed on the 25th October 2005 — less than one month after the striking out order appealed against. He points out that the period allowed for appealing is three months plus one month extension of time. Mr. Serry-Kamal contends that the procedure employed in the application to have the appeal struck out is not prescribed by or known to the Court of Appeal Rules, 1985. He further contends that the application made for the striking out of the appeal is in the nature of a preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal when properly set down for hearing, and the procedure to be employed for such an objection is specifically set out in rule 19 of the Court of Appeal Rules. Mr. Serry-Kamal buttresses his argument by submitting that the Court of Appeal isa creature of statute and can only exercise the powers accorded it by the creating legislation, the Courts Act and the rules that govern the Court. He concludes by submitting that the Court of Appeal acted completely outside its powers.

Mr. Pabs-Garnon, counsel for the 2nd Respondent, draws the court's attention to the striking out order of the 12 October 2005 appealed against and also the final judgement of the High Court given or the 8th day of June 2005 and exhibited to the said affidavit in support as "AFSK 13", He posits that there is no appeal against the judgement of the 8th June 2005. He argues that the appeal filed on the 25th October 2005 is a purported appeal against an interlocutory order and refers the court to section 56 of the Courts Act which deals with appeals against interlocutory orders and final judgments. He further draws the court's attention to rule 10 (1) of the Court of Appeal Rules and argues that the appeal filed on the 25th October 2005 is incompetent because no leave to file same was sought and obtained. Finally, he argues that there was no appeal properly before the Court of Appeal and submits that the only appeal that could have been brought before the Court of Appeal was against the judgement of the 8th day of June 2005.

Mr. C.C. Taylor, counsel for the 3rd Respondent, adopted the arguments of Mr. Pabs. Garnon. However, he further argues that since the relief being sought in this application is the restoration of the struck out appeal, this honourable court, if it were to restore the appeal by the quashing of the striking out order, would be acting in vain as the said appeal was incompetent, and the court does not act in vain. He also argues that the Court of Appeal suo-moto could have raised objection to the hearing of the struck out appeal.

Mr. O Kanu, counsel for the 1st Respondent, adopts the arguments of Mr. PabsGarnon and that of Mr. C.C.V. Taylor. He further argues that the Court of Appeal did not act in excess of jurisdiction in striking out the appeal.

THE ISSUES

I have formulated the following issues:

Did the Court of Appeal have the authority or jurisdiction to strike out Mr. Bangura's appeal filed on the 25th October 2005 against the order of the 12th October 2005? If not, what are the consequences.

THE REASONING

There is no dispute as to the material facts and the dates of the relevant order and judgement. This being so it is indisputable that the appeal against the striking out order was within the stipulated appeal period of three months, that is, if the appeal was in fact an appeal against a final order or judgement. What is not in doubt is that the appeal was filed and was being processed like any ordinary appeal, such as, the parties being summoned to settle the record.

Counsel for the respective Respondents concentrate in arguing that the appeal struck out was an interlocutory appeal and, therefore, leave was required for it to be filed, failed of neglected to focus their attention on the Notice of Motion and the supporting affidavit exhibited to the said affidavit of Serry-Kamal as "AFSK 28" [p.201] praying for the striking out of civil appeal numbered 60/2005. The orders prayed for in the Notice of Motion are reproduced hereunder for ease of reference and clarity.

"1. That the appeal Civ. App 60/2005 be struck out for irregularity upon the following grounds

a) That the above ... mentioned appeal was filed after the expiration of three months as prescribed by rule 11 of the Rules of the Court of Appeal

b) That the Appellant did not apply for enlargement of time as prescribed by rule 11 (6) of the Court of Appeal Rules

2) That the costs of and occasioned by this application be costs in the cause

3) Any further or other relict" (emphasis provided)

For the same purpose as in the reproduction herein of the orders prayed for in the Notice of Motion, I hereunder reproduce the numbered paragraphs of the affidavit in support of the Notice of Motion sworned to by Ms. Mariama Dumbuya, of counsel, namely:

"1. That I am a partner in the firm of Renner-Thomas and Co solicitors and I am duly authorized to make this affidavit on behalf the above 1st Respondent (2nd Respondent herein)

2. That judgment was delivered in the High Court in matter CC 151/96 1996 H No 3 on the 8th of June 2005. Copy of the said judgment is hereby produced shown to me and marked "MD 1"

3. That even though the Appellant herein the 4th Defendant in the High Court entered a conditional appearance on the 9th day of August 2005 [p.202] 2 (two) months after the said judgment was delivered he failed and/or neglected to appeal against the said judgment within the time prescribed by the Rules of the Court of Apoe.al. Copies of the Memorandum and Notice of Conditional Appearance are hereby produced shown to me and marked "MD2" and "MD3" respectively.

4. That even after the expiration of 3 months the Appellant herein did not apply to the court for an enlargement of time within which to appeal against the said judgment.

5. Notwithstanding the above the Appellant on the 25th day of October 2005 filed in the Court of Appeal a Notice of Appeal without seeking an enlargement of time. A copy of the said Notice of Appeal stamped by the Appeal Court on the 25th day of October 2005 is hereby produced and shown to me and marked "MD 4".

6. That I make this affidavit in support of the application herein to strike out the appeal of the appellants as it is irregular and does not conform to the rules of the Court of Appeal"

(bracketed words and emphasis provided)

It can be clearly seen from the cited Notice of Motion and the facts attested to in the supporting affidavit that the application to strike out to the Court of Appeal was not referable to the order of the Court of Appeal made on the 12th October 2005. The application on the face of the Notice of Motion was for the appeal numbered 60/2005 to be struck out for irregularity. The irregularities complained of are:

a. filing same outside the three months prescribed by the Court of Appeal Rules

b. filing same outside the stipulated period without first seeking an enlargement of time.

[p.203]

Quite clearly the above alleged irregularities cannot and do no apply to the appeal filed on the 25th October 2005 numbered 60/2005 against the striking out order of the12th October 2005 which shows only a period of 13 days from the date of the said order to the date of the filing of the appeal against the said order. Paragraphs 2, 3, and 4 of the affidavit in support makes manifest .the misapprehension in the application that civil appeal numbered 60/2005 filed on the 25th October 2005 was against the judgment of the 8th day of June 2005. It is telling that the 25th October 2005 is just over three months from the date of the judgment of the 8th June 2005. The 25th October 2005 is over three months in relation to the judgment of the 8th June 2005 and not to the order of the 12th October 2005 against which the appeal was directed. There was never any appeal against the judgment of the 8th June 2005. However, paragraph 5, coming on the heels of paragraphs 2, 3, and 4 of the affidavit, makes it clear that Mr. Huballah and his counsel wrongly believed that the appeal filed on the 25th October 2005 was against the judgment of the 8th June 2005.

In the circumstances, it is my firm view, that as a matter of fact, there was no application before the Court of Appeal to strike out the appeal numbered 60/2005. The counsel for Mr. Huballah, based on the facts on the face of the Notice of Motion and the affidavit in support, in effect, were asking the Court of Appeal to strike out a non existent appeal. Furthermore, the facts deposed to cannot and do not justify the striking out of the appeal numbered 60/2005.

I am in agreement with the contention of Mr. Serry-Kamal that the application was in the nature of a preliminary objection to the hearing of an appeal and aught to have been made pursuant to rule 19 of the Court of Appeal Rules. Rule 19 set down certain condition precedent to the hearing of a preliminary objection, that is, the serving of the notice of preliminary objection three clear days before the hearing of the appeal. In the instant case this was not done. Counsel for the Respondents argue that the Court of Appeal could have acted suo-moto on the basis of rule 19. There is no evidence that the Court of Appeal so acted, and if it were so disposed to act the court, in my view, could not have raised and served a notice of preliminary objection. At best, the court could only have struck out the appeal at the hearing.

[p.204]

In the premises, I am of the firm view that the Court of Appeal had no authority or jurisdiction to strike out the appeal numbered 60/2005, and I so hold.

CONCLUSION

Counsel for the respective Respondents in their arguments seem to be urging this court not to grant the application, as to do so would have the effect of restoring the appeal numbered 60/2005, which in their thinking, is incompetent and thereby having the unsalutary effect of this court's act being in vain. But are counsel not asking for the impossible? Jurisdiction is fundamental to the judicial process; a defect or lack of it renders the entire proceedings a nullity, and orders or decisions, flowing from such proceedings, cannot legally stand for want of jurisdictional underpinning. This is so no matter how well the proceedings are conducted. That is why it is sometimes said that there is no need to move a court to set aside a decision/order made without jurisdiction but it is generally done out of abundance of caution and what is colloquially called "playing it safe". Counsel fell into error in misapprehending the facts supporting the application to strike out the appeal numbered 60/2005 filed on the 25th October 2005 against the order made on the 12th October 2005 by the High Court by stating or presenting facts that relate to and are relevant only vis-à-vis the judgment by the High Court made on the 8th June 2005. With all due respects, the Court of Appeal also fell into the same error as the court's decision was based on the erroneous presentation of the facts in the said Notice of Motion to strike out the said appeal and the affidavit in support. If this court were to accede to the prayer of counsel for the respective Respondents not to quash the order of the Court of Appeal dated the 13th July 2006, this court would fall into error. Clearly this court has no authority or power to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Appeal (or any court for that matter) where there is none. See State Vs Onagornwa (1992) 2NWLR at Page 49, para D-F. per UWAIS J.S.C. (as he then was). Accordingly, the order of the Court of Appeal in civil appeal numbered 60/2005 dated the 13th day of July 2006, photo-copy of which is exhibited to the said affidavit of Mr. Serry-Kamal as "AFSK 29", is hereby set aside with costs for the Applicant.

AHMAD T. ALGHALI	—	RESPONDENT
COUNSEL: E. P ABS-GARNON ESQ	—	FOR APPELLANT
J.B. JENKINS-JOHNSTON ESQ	—	FOR RESPONDENT

SEMEGA-JANNETH J.S.C

Ahmad T. Alghali (Respondent herein} was employed by the Bank of Sierra Leone (Appellant herein and hereinafter referred to as "the Bank") as a junior banking official and was given, a letter of appointment dated the 26th March 1993. He rose through the ranks and was Section Head, Currency Management, at the time his employment was dispensed with by a letter dated the 18th April 2000.

Preceding the termination of Mr. Alghali's employment, the Bank mounted an 'investigation into an alleged twice encashment of a Union Trust Bank Cheque in [p.148] the sum of Le.80,000,000.00 (Eighty Million Leones) which allegedly resulted in the Bank's loss of Le.80,000,000.00 (Eighty Million Leones). The Bank suspected some of its officials including Mr. Alghali of being involved in the transactions leading to the loss to the Bank of the.80,000,000.00 (Eighty Million Leones).

On the 17th April 2000, the Bank by its Director of the Human Resources Department, Mrs. A.A.M. Mahdi, wrote to the suspected Bank officials, including Mr. Alghali requesting each one of them to state why disciplinary action should not be taken against them for their involvement in the exercise in accordance with the Bank's Staff Rules and Regulations and demanded a reaction not later than 2.00p.m. that day, Monday the 17th April 2000. Mr. Alghali, like the other suspected officials, complied and replied that same day.

"REPAYMENT OF CHEQUE NO.319606 FOR LE.80,000,000.00 ON THE 11TH AUGUST 1999

Further to our enquiry into the above transaction that took place on the 19th August 1999, we have been able to obtain the input of several staff members which we are enclosing for your reaction.

Kindly ensure that you submit your written reaction to us not later than 12.00 noon today, 18th April 2000"

Mr. Alghali again complied and, replied on the same day, 18th April, 2000 by memorandum (Exhibit "N") "thus:

"REPAYMENT OF CHEQUE NO.319606 FOR LE.80,000,000.00 ON 11TH AUGUST 1999.

[p.149]

I refer to your memorandum CF:583 dated 18th April, 2000 submitting input from several staff members for my reactions and wish to state the following.

With reference to the response from Mr. A.L. Gegbai, I could not recall walking over to him with the cheque, as it is not usual for cheque of this nature to come directly to me when payment is required.

I cannot agree with Mr. J.C.H. Abu that the cheque was presented to Currency Office by the bank's representative already referenced and authorized since the bank's representative is usually asked by the Currency Office to present the cheque to Banking Office for referencing and to go and wait at the Receiving Bay to receive payment. After referencing and authorization the cheque is presented by Banking Office to the Vault Operator at the Currency Office or down the vault. There is also nothing in the snap books, bin cards or the Treasury book to show that the denominations stated by Mr. Abuwere paid from the vault or cosigned by the panel A key holder.

The Input of Mr. Roxy Edwards is very much nearer to what transpired at Banking Office on the above date.

Sgd: A.T. ALGHALI"

Mrs. Mahdi on the same day, the 18th April 2000 wrote to Mr. Alghali terminating his employment with the Bank. The letter (exhibit "E") reads

"Dear Sir

TERMINATION OF SERVICE

[p.150]

You are hereby informed that in accordance with Rule 10.1 of the Staff Rules and Regulations, Management has reached a decision that your services with the Bank be terminated with effect from 1st August 2000. Accordingly you will be paid 3 (three) months salary in lieu of notice. You need not report for duty with effect from tomorrow, 19th April 2000.

Enclosed is a copy of the breakdown of your, final benefits and our Cheque No.331657 being final settlement of your benefits as at 31st July 2000

You are to hand over all Banks' properties in your possession including the Bank's Identity Card.

Your former Head of Department is informed accordingly.

Yours faithfully

For BANK OF SIERRA LEONE

SGD:

A.A.M. MAHDI (MRS)

Director, Human Resources

Encls."

Mr. Alghali subsequently wrote to the Governor of the Bank appealing for the review of the decision terminating his services and stating grounds why this should be done. There was no reply to his letter.

After short exchanges of letters between the Solicitor of Mr. Alghali and that of the Bank, Mr. Alghali caused a Writ endorsed with, a Statement of Claim to issue claiming the following reliefs.:

"(1) A Declaration that according to the records of the Defendant Bank [p.151] the Plaintiff became due to retire from the services of the Bank on 7th July 2000 and entitled to a Pension, he having reached the retirement .age of 55 years.

(2) A Declaration that the purported termination of the Plaintiffs services with effect from 1st August 2000 (after his effective retirement date) was unlawful; null and void and of no effect.

(3) A Declaration that the Defendant Bank's right to grant an extension of tenure of office to staff beyond the age of 55 Years WAS NOT properly exercised in this case where,

(a) the recipient of such extension was never so informed;

(b) the recipient of such extension had not requested such extension;

(c) Such extension was of no beneficial interest to the defendant bank.

(d) Such extension was not made "bona fide".

(4) An Order that .the Plaintiff be granted all his entitlement under the Bank's Pension Scheme, of which he has· been deprived of by the purported Termination of his services after the date of his retirement.

(5) Aggravated Damages for Breach of Contract

(6) The Costs of the Action"

[p.152]

The Bank counterclaimed, giving PARTICULARS OF SPECIAL DAMAGE being loss of Le.80,000,000.00 wrongly paid out as a result of negligence and/or willful default of Mr. Alghali for:

"1. Damages

2. Interest on such damages at such rate and of such period as the Court shall think just.

3. Further or other Relief.

4. Costs."

The matter went on trial in the High Court before the learned trial judge L.A.E Marcus-Jones J, who, on the 3rd October 2002, gave judgment dismissing both claim and counterclaim.

On the 19th March 2003, Mr. Alghali being dissatisfied with the judgment of L.A.E. Marcus-Jones J, appealed to the Court of Appeal, on the following GROUNDS OF APPEAL (without the particulars) as follows:

1. That the Learned Trial Judge totally failed, and/or neglected, and/or omitted to properly or adequately consider the case for the Plaintiff notwithstanding the evidence led, before her, the submission, of Counsel and the several authorities cited, leading her to the erroneous conclusion that, "....On the evidence I cannot grant relief claimed by Plaintiff....."

2. That the Learned Trial Judge failed to properly evaluate the evidence led before her including the exhibits tendered, but rather merely repeated the contents of the pleadings, the evidence and some submissions of Counsel in almost the whole of her said Judgment excepting the last page thereof.

3. That the Learned Trial Judge did not consider AT ALL whether or not the Plaintiff was entitled to or qualified to receive a pension from the [p.153] Defendants after twenty-seven (27) years service according to the Defendant's own records, which was a major and substantial part of the Plaintiffs case.

[p.154]

The Bank being dissatisfied with the decision of the Court of Appeal Appealed to this Court by a Notice of Appeal dated and filed on the 12th January 2005 :—

The Grounds, without the Particulars, are as follows:—

1. That the Court of Appeal failed to consider and give due weight to the available written and oral evidence particularly that of the Plaintiff PW1 when it held that there was no evidence to support the contention that the Appellant had not been guilty of any misconduct.

2. That the Court of Appeal erred in law when it held that specific charges must be drawn up against the, Respondent and proven before disciplinary measures are taken.

3. The Court of Appeal erred in law when it held that, having, regard to the circumstances of the case the Appellant had not complied with the terms of the Staff Rules and Regulations and that the termination of the Respondent was thus illegal.

At this juncture it is convenient to state that about 14 days prior to the Letter of Termination to Mr. Alghali, he received a memorandum ("Exhibit "D") dated the 4th April 2000 from the Bank concerning his impending retirement.

I reproduce the memorandum hereunder for its import and effect. The Memorandum is in the following terms:—

RETIREMENT

According to our records you are due to retire from the services of the Bank on 7th July 2000. Our records also indicate that prior to your retirement date you would have earned a total of 15 (fifteen) proportionate leave days for the year 2000. You are therefore to proceed on leave prior to retirement on 16th June, 2000 to ensure that you utilize your total leave days.

Action will be taken to pay all benefits due you. We will in due course schedule an appointment for you to pay a courtesy call on the Governor before you finally proceed on retirement.

In view of the above you are requested to return to the Director, Human Resources your Bank of Sierra Leone identity card and any of the Bank's properties you may have in your possession on or before 6th July 2000 which is your last working day.

It is my pleasure to extend to you on behalf of the board of directors and Management profound appreciation for your services to the Bank and to wish you the best in all your future endeavours.

We have no doubt that the link forged over the years will remain strong.

Sgd: E.V. Smith (Mrs.)

pp. Director Human Resources"

The Retirement Memorandum has been given different and opposing meanings by counsel on both sides. I shall deal with the memorandum later on in the judgment to show what, in my view, is true import and meaning.

In the Appellants' statement of case, it is stated that:

"The principal issue which calls for determination by the Supreme Court [p.156] is whether the Court of Appeal having correctly referred to the relevant case of Gitten-Stronge v. S.L. Brewery Limited (17th December 1980) S.C. CIV.APP. 7/1979 did correctly apply the principles stated there in the instant matter.....

.....

The principles set out in the said case are as follows:

1) If an Employer gives notice for the prescribed period under the Contract of Employment or pays the equivalent salary in lieu of such notice the termination is lawful and the employee had no remedy in law.

2) The motive of the employer in terminating the employee is irrelevant so long as he complies with the terms of the Contract of Employment."

The Appellant's counsel argues that the Court of Appeal did not properly apply to the facts disclosed by the evidence the principles laid down in the judgment delivered by Livesey-Luke CJ in Gittens-Stronge v Sierra Leone Brewery (17th December 1980) S.C. CIV. App. No.7/1979 (Unreported). The Appellant's counsel further argues that as a result the Court of Appeal failed to properly adjudicate upon the matter. He contends that the Bank was not obliged to give Mr. Alghali any reason for terminating his employment. He further contends that the termination of Mr. Alghali was lawful in that it was effected in accordance with the contract of employment by the payment of the benefits Mr. Alghali was entitled to, and payment in lieu of, notice. He argues that the Court of Appeal misdirected itself when it held the termination unlawful after holding that the correct benefits were paid upon termination and that the correct payment In lieu of notice had also been paid. In effect, he argues the termination was in accordance with the terms and conditions of the contract of employment and therefore not wrongful. Counsel for the Respondent did not [p.157] formulate any issue for determination but proceeded to argue the Grounds of Appeal. He essentially repeats his arguments in the Court of Appeal and submits that the Termination Letter was invalid as it came after the retirement letter, which in his thinking, was a Notice of Termination, validly given and withdrawn, and also because the Termination Letter purported to take effect on a date more than three (3) weeks after Mr. Alghali retirement date of 7th July 2000 according to the Retirement letter He further argues that the Bank could not by the Termination Letter give Mr. Alghali a "valid" three months notice as he had only 2 months and 18 days left in the Bank's employment as per the Retirement Letter acted in breach of the contract of employment.

Counsel for the Respondent apparently reserved his arguments on the issue formulated in the Appellant's statement of case for his closing and he responds by quoting copiously verbatim the judgment of Muria J.A. at pages 6-8, 9-12, 13-15 of the judgment and reflected respectively at pages 146-148, 149-152, 153-155 of the record of appeal to demonstrate that 'the Court of Appeal did not fail as contended by the Appellant's counsel to properly adjudicate upon the appeal before it and submits that the Court of Appeal dealt with "the appeal fully, exhaustedly reached the right conclusion in dismissing the appeal."

An issue formulated in an appeal must derive from and bear relationship to one or more of the Grounds of Appeal; it cannot stand in splendid isolation from the Grounds of Appeal. The Appellant has formulated an issue which I find relates to the Grounds of Appeal. The Respondent has not formulated an issue and he is presumed to accept the issue formulated by the Appellant. I have formulated an issue which embraces the issue formulated by the Appellant and is as follows:—

ISSUE

Was Mr. Alghali's employment terminated in accordance with the terms of his contract of employment and

[p.158]

(a) if so what are the consequences and

(b) if not what are the effects

In considering the above issue one has to determine the purport anq effect, among others, of:—

(1) The Retirement Letter and

(2) The Termination Letter against the backdrop of the Staff Handbook (Exhibit "T") and the Staff Rules and Regulations (Exhibit "U") and the general law.

Mr. Alghali and the Bank, agree that the employment relationship was guided by the Staff Handbook and the Staff, Rules and Regulations. This is disclosed in the pleadings where in paragraph 1 of the Statement of Claim it is stated:

The Plaintiff will further aver that at the time of his employment his conditions of employment were as stated in the Staff Handbook of April 1971 and in the Staff Rules and regulations of January 2000 at the time the cause of Action herein arose,"

And in the Defence wherein paragraph (1) it states:—

"The Defendant admits the averments contained in paragraphs 1 and 2 of the Statement of Claim."

It can be seen from the quoted pleadings that Mr. Alghali and the Bank Were of one mind that the terms and conditions of employment of Mr. Afghan were as contained in the Staff Book and the Staff Rules and Regulations and therefore the contractual relationship was governed by them.

[p.159]

Both the Staff Handbook and the Staff Rules and Regulations laid down a disciplinary procedure by which a Staffs services can be ended by reason, inter alia, of breach of the Bank's Regulations. The disciplinary procedure and measures are set out in Chapter 6 — Regulations 44 and 45 in pages 14 and.15 of the Staff Handbook and in respect of the Staff Rules and Regulations in Regulations 9 and 10 — 10.3 of pages 13, 14 and 15.

In my view the disciplinary procedure and measures set out respectively in the Staff Handbook and Staff Rules and Regulations, are not mutually exclusive but are complimentary and supplementary of one and another

It is pertinent to note at this juncture that termination or separation of service in normal and ordinary circumstances are also provided for in both the Staff Handbook and the Staff Rules and Regulations.

In the Staff Handbook headed TERMINATION OF SERVICE in Chapter 2 at page 3 provides:

"10.1 — For the purpose of termination of or resignation by a permanent member of the staff, the period of notice or payment in lieu thereof by either side will be:

a) three months for officers above the Rank of Banking Officer Grade A equivalent, and

b) One month for officers of the rank of Banking Officer Grade A and below or equivalent.

Provided that:

[p.160]

i. This condition will not apply in case (SIC) or dismissal in terms of regulation 4.3:

ii In the case of Resignation the period of Notice or pay in lieu thereof maybe reduced or waived at the discretion of the Governor."

The Staff Rules and Regulations similarly under Regulation 11 under the overall heading SEPARATION FROM SERVICE provides:

"The service of staff with the Bank is severed by any of the following:

a) Resignation

b) Termination

c) Retirement

d) Death."

And in what Interests us here, Regulation 11 further provides:

(b) Termination by Notice

i) The bank reserved the right as employer to terminate the service of an employee at any time and need not assign any reason for such termination.

ii) The bank shall give staff notice of termination or payment in lieu of such notice in accordance with their rank as follows:—

· Probationary employees — fourteen calendar days.

Employees below the rank of Section head- one calendar month

· Section Head and above — three calendar months

(iii) Staff terminated who have served a maximum of 5 years shall be entitled to all earned benefits up to the time of termination."

In the instant case the Bank opted to employ the disciplinary procedure and measures provided in the Bank's Regulations and imposed termination on Mr. Alghali as a disciplinary measure and paid him three months salary in lieu of Notice and other terminal benefits excluding his pension rights.

It is on this basis and because of these payments that counsel for the Appellant argues that since the payments accord with the provisions provided the termination was not wrongful and, therefore, there was no breach of the employment contract.

In support of his argument learned counsel for the Appellant relies on the GITTENS-STRONGE case (supra) and formulates in the Applicant's case what he regards to be the principles laid down in the case there said principles are stated above.

It is with due respect to 'counsel for the Appellant that I say I find the argument fallacious in so far as the argument represented an incomplete picture and effect of that portion of the judgment from which the formulated principles are derived must say that I am in complete agreement with the learned judge of the Court of Appeal, Muria J.A, when, in his well written and well reasoned judgment at page 12 and reflected at page 152 of the record of appeal, he said:—

"the case of GITTEN-STRONGE vs Sierra Leone Brewery Limited (above) cited by Counsel for the Respondent does not support the proposition he contended for and it would be incomplete description of the ratio in that case to say that termination of employment is lawful as long as the required notice on payment in lieu thereof has been made. As well as the requirement of proper notice of termination, [p.162] the common law recognizes that the employer must also act in accordance with the terms of the contract of employment. Only when the employer acts in accordance with the terms of the contract of employment will he be protected. The requirement of giving notice is only. one of them.

It Is helpful for a better appreciation of the argument and discourse that the passage in issue in the judgment at page 26 by Livesey-Luke CJ be reproduced in full hereunder:—

"… the defence of the company was that they acted in accordance with the Service Agreement by paying two months salary in lieu of notice into the account of the appellant. If they had made the payment at the time due, that plea would have succeeded and the appellant's claim would have failed. This is the strict common law position. According to the common law if an employer gives notice for the prescribed period under contract of employment or pays the equivalent salary in lieu of such notice, the termination is lawful and employee has no remedy in law. Similarly in case where no period of notice is prescribed in the contract, if the employer gives what the court considers to be reasonable notice in the circumstances or pays salary in lieu thereof, the termination is lawful and the employee has no remedy in law. It does not matter how unfair or nigh handed the termination was, or for how long the employee had served the employer. If the employer acts in accordance with the terms of the contract of employment he is protected ....."

(Emphasis added)

[p.163]

Learned counsel for the Appellant seems to limit his view of the cited passage in the GITTEN-STRONGE CASE in the ordinary and normal common law master and servant relationship where the usual three elements are present, namely

1) Appointment

2) Salary

3) Notice period to terminate or

4) Non-notice to terminate in which case, the common law would imply reasonable notice.

In such an employment scenario the employer is protected if he gives notice to the employer which the employee would have to work through or, in the alternative, pays salary for the requisite notice period in lieu of notice or in a situation where no period of notice is stipulated, the employer gives the employee reasonable notice which again the employee would have to serve out but the employer may choose to pay salary in lieu for the period the law considers reasonable notice depending on the circumstances of each case. The situation is different in more complex situations such as, where other terms are included in the contract of employment, An instance is where there are laid out procedures to be followed before an employee can be terminated for committing certain disciplinary offences. In such a case the employer is not protected if he purports to act on the basis of the laid out procedure but in fact refuses or fails to correctly follow the procedure or steps laid out. The result is that the employer would be in breach of the employment contract and thereby liable in damages. It is telling to note that judgment was given to the Appellant/Employee in the GITTEN-STRONGE CASE supra because the court found that the Respondent (Employer) failed to act in accordance with its own provision for notice by not crediting the account of the employee with two months salary in lieu of notice contemporaneously with his termination.

Let me now return to the instant case to examine whether the Bank acted in accordance with its own Regulations.

[p.164]

In the Termination Letter the Bank purported to act under Regulation 10.1 of the Staff Rules and Regulations. The Regulation stipulates the offences and penalties and provides:

"10.1 DISCIPLINARY MEASURES

Staff who commit a breach of any of the regulations of the Bank or who displays negligence inefficiency or indolence or who knowingly do anything detrimental to the interests of the Bank or in conflict with its instruments or commit a breach of discipline or is guilty of any other act of misconduct or who are convicted of a criminal offence, shall be liable to any of the following penalties:

i) Reprimand in Writing

ii) Fines/Recoveries

iii) Suspension

iv) Interdiction

v) Termination

vi) Dismissal"

And Regulation 10.2(v) which is one of the penalties available to the Bank if an employee is found guilty states:

"TERMINATION

In the case of termination, the Bank shall give staff notice or payment in lieu of such notice and the employee shall be entitled to gratuity (where he/she is qualified) and other emoluments up to the time of termination"

Regulation 10.1 of the Staff Rules and Regulations stipulates the breaches or causes that can trigger a disciplinary process and specifies the penalties at the option of the employer presumably, depending on the gravity and circumstances of the breach or offending act and Regulation 10.2 of the Staff Rules and Regulation defines or gives [p.164] the effect of termination. However Regulation 10.1 and 10.2(v) of the Staff Rules and Regulations are not the end of the matter.

The Bank would have firstly to identify the disciplinary offence, go through the disciplinary procedure or steps, and if at the end of the process the employee is found guilty (or at fault) then the Bank shall be in the position to decide on and impose the appropriate penalty in Regulation 10.1 of the Staff Rules and Regulations. In the embarkation of such course, Regulation 9 of the Staff Rules and Regulation and Regulation 44.2 in chapter 6 of the Staff Handbook are relevant.

Regulation 9 of the Staff Rules and Regulation is captioned: STAFF'S RIGHT TO DEFEND and provides:

"Staff who are alleged to have breached any of the Regulations of the Bank shall be informed of the specifics of the allegation by a superior Officer, or by the Governor in the case of Head of Department/Unit.

The concerned staff shall be given an opportunity to justify why disciplinary action should not be taken against him/her"

(Emphasis added)

And sub-Regulation 44.2 of the Staff Handbook states as follows:—

"No employee shall be subject to penalties (b), (c) and (d) in sub Regulation 1 of the Regulation except by an Order in writing Signed by the Governor in the case of Heads of Department or Secretary in the case of other employees. No such order shall be passed without the charge being formulated in writing and given to the said employee so that he shall have reasonable opportunity to answer them in writing or in person and in the latter case his defence shall be taken down in writing and read to him. In every case when all or any of the requirements of this sub-Regulation are waived, the reason for so doing shall be recorded in writing"

[p.166]

(Emphasis mine)

One can see that both the Regulation and sub-Regulation cited above required that the employee be given the specifics of the allegation or a charged framed. In my view "given specifics" or "charge framed" are not different in nature or function. The purpose of both is to give the concerned employee a reasonably clear picture of the offence he is alleged to have committed so that he can properly answer the charge.

The charge or specifics of the offence must be clear and unambiguous and be specifically referable to a particular Regulation or Regulations so that the person concerned has a fairly good idea of what he is faced with. It is only then that he would be in the position to properly defend himself for it stands to reason that one can't properly defend oneself if one is not sure of what one faces. The formulation of a charge or complaint in relation to a disciplinary offence is not required to have the same or similar kind of formality or specificity or particularization or employ similarly legal or precise wording as in a criminal charge. But what is expected as in the instant case is a formulation and, particularization that relates to and clearly identifies disciplinary offence in question and state the substance of the complaint or commission of the offence so as to give the employee a fair idea' of what he is accused of so as to enable him better defend himself in line with the principle of fair hearing.

The Memorandum, Exhibit "J", dated the 17th April 2000 that Mrs. Mahdi wrote on behalf of the Bank to Mr. Alghali requesting him to state why disciplinary action should not be taken against him shows clearly that investigation was still being carried on and that Mr. Alghali was being asked to assist further In the Investigation. I hereunder reproduce the Memorandum (Exhibit "J"):

PAYMENT OF CHEQUE No.319606 FOR LE.80,000,000 IN THE 11TH AUGUST 1999

[p.167]

You would recall that on 11th August 1999 the above cheque No.319606 for the sum of Le.80,000,000.00 drawn by the Union Trust Bank Limited was paid over the counter in the Banking Office.

The explanation put forward that you cannot now remember who gave you the cheque was paid, is found to be unsatisfactory and it has hindered further progress in the investigation into the loss the Bank has suffered.

Consequently, you are being given another opportunity to reflect more seriously on the matter and let us have any further Information you may think may throw Light on how , you received this cheque.

In view of your said involvement in the said exercise which has caused loss to the Bank, you are hereby requested to state why disciplinary action should not be taken against you in accordance with the Bank's Staff Rules and Regulations.

Please ensure that we receive your reaction not later than 2.00 p.m. today, Monday 17th April, 2000.

(Emphasis provided)

Mt Alghali replied by Memorandum (Exhibit "K") dated the 17th April 2000. In these terms:—

"PAYMENT OF CHEQUE NO. 319606 FOR LE. 80.000.000.00 ON 11th AUGUST 1999

With reference to your memorandum CF:583 dated 17th April 200b in respect of the above subject, I wish to state that it is not usual for a cheque of this nature to come directly to me when payment is required. What I could recalled is that the lady who [p.168] came and collected the payment was asked to wait in my office while the cheque was being processed.

This processing involved the paying cashier stamping the cheque with his receiving stamp and passing it to the verifying office who reference it. The cheque was then presented to the Division Head, Banking Operations who authorized the payment.

I was called by the supervising cashier to open Vault IV in order for him to supply the money for effecting the payment. Since the request by the Union Trust Bank was specifically for new notes, the supervising cashier discovered that though he had sufficient new notes to accommodate the cheque he could not supply the money. according to the specific request of the Bank and therefore asked the cashier to requisition the money based on the available new notes in Vault IV which could cover the cheque. This necessitated the making of the second analysis on the cheque by the cashier. The money was supplied from Vault IV to the cashier who effected the payment to the lady".

In my view, one can discern or deduce from the two Memoranda, Exhibit "J" and Exhibit "K" and the subsequent memorandum, Exhibit "M1", that investigations were still going on and no charge or an allegation of a breach of the Bank's Regulation was being proffered at this stage; Mr. Alghali was merely being required to help the investigation as a witness. The memorandum is too general and vague and fails to make any specific allegation of breach or commission of a disciplinary offence. In my considered opinion nothing in the memorandum — Exhibit "M1" — amounts to a charge or specifics of an allegation of a breach of the Bank's Regulations as contemplated in the Staff Handbook and the Staff Rules and Regulations, and I so hold. It is not surprising that there was no charge or specifics of any allegation given to Mr. Alghali since in his case being a Section Head it was the Governor who could have informed him of the charge specifics of the allegation in compliance with Regulation 9 of the Staff Rules and Regulations. The Governor did not do so. Thus the Bank again failed to comply with its own Rules and Regulations. See Gitten-Stronge's case, supra, for consequences in [p.169] respect of failure to comply with procedure in a disciplinary process in the context of a contract of employment. The result is that the Bank is in breach of the Contract of Employment. Thus, I agree with and hold that Muria J.A. is correct when in the judgment of the Court of Appeal he states:—

"…….In present case, no specific charge of misconduct or breach of title regulations had been put to the Appellant so that he could answer it. One would have expected that in order to comply with Regulations 9. 10.1 and 10.2, the Respondent, following its investigation and gathering of information from its staff members, would have drawn up specific charge or charges against the Appellant and accord him the opportunity to respond to the charge or charges A decision would have to be taken on the charge(s) whether they were established and that the Appellant had committed the breach(s) alleged."

The Staff Handbook and the Staff Rules and Regulations also required the Bank to give Mr. Alghali an opportunity to justify why disciplinary action should not be taken against him. Since a charge or the specifics of an allegation of a breach of the Bank's, Regulation was not given to Mr. Alghali in my view, he was not in the position to know what disciplinary offence he allegedly committed. The situation was such that it cannot, in my view, be properly said that Mr. Alghali was given the opportunity to defend himself in accordance with the Bank's Regulations.

Let me assume for a moment that the memorandum, Exhibit "J", was intended to give opportunity to Mr. Alghali to defend himself. Can it be rightly .said that the mere invitation to state why disciplinary action should not be taken against him was to constitute an opportunity to defend. I think not. Proper opportunity to defend entails more. Proper opportunity is inextricably linked to fair hearing which implies that the Person knows:—

1) the case which is made against him

2) what evidence has been given and

[p.170]

3) What statements have been made affecting him.

And must be given

4) a fair opportunity to correct or contradict them

5) adequate time to prepare his defence.

These are in line with what Lord Denning stated in the Privy Council case of Kanda v. Government of Malaya (1962) A. V. 332 at 337 and adopted by the Supreme Court of Nigeria in Garba v University of Maidugurl (1986) 1 N.W.L.R. (PT 18) 550,at 618 as follows:

"If the right to be heard is to be a real right which is worth anything it must carry with it the right in the accused man to know the case which is made against him. He must know what evidence has been given and what statements have been made affecting him; and then he must be given a fair opportunity to correct or contradict them."

See ADEDEJI & POLICE SERVICE COMMISSION (1988) NMLR 102 at 107 per Ademola CJN.

In my considered view, Mr. Alghali was not given the opportunity to defend himself; he was not given adequate time to prepare his defence and he was not given a fair hearing. In the memorandum, Exhibit "J", Mr. Alghali was given a deadline to reply not later than 2.00p.m. The same day and in the Memorandum, Exhibit "M1" the deadline was 12.00 noon the same day. There is no evidence as to the time in the morning the Memoranda were respectively given to Mr. Alghali. One thing that is certain is that in both cases he was not given, in my view, adequate time to respond. In the circumstances, even if it could be said Mr. Alghali was given a hearing, it could not, in my considered view, be a fair hearing in accordance with the relevant Regulations in the Staff Handbook and the Staff Rules and Regulations In the result, the Bank breached the contract of employment, and so hold.

It must be noted that in the context of contract of employment the application of the principle of fair hearing is nota right except where it is provided for in the contract as in the Instant case. The principle is not only applicable to criminal trials but also to civil trials and other hearings where the parties concerned have a right to be heard. In the instant case, Mr. Alghali has a contractual right to a fair hearing.

A big issue is made of the Bank's refusal or failure to inform Mr. Alghali of the reason for the termination of his employment. The Bank seeks cover for its refusal or failure under Regulation 11(b) (i) where it reserves the right to terminate the service of an employee without assigning any reason for such termination. In my considered opinion the Bank cannot find cover under this Regulation. Where the termination of the employee is inflicted as a penalty resulting from a disciplinary process under Regulation 10, the refusal to give a reason after completion of the disciplinary process and the imposition of a penalty without assigning a reason is a fundamental contradiction with the disciplinary process and in conflict with the principle of fair hearing and underlines the integrity of the appellate process in Regulation 10.3. Again how can an employee have a fair appeal or hearing if he is denied knowledge of the very reasons he needs for his appeal? The refusal or failure to inform Mr. Alghali of the reasons for the termination of his employment is a further denial of his right to defend himself and a breach of the employment contract, and I so hold. In my view if the Bank terminates normal and ordinary circumstances and not after resorting to the disciplinary process, terminates as a consequence of that process the Bank may then rely on Regulation 11 (b)(i) and not otherwise.

Let me at this stage deal with the Retirement Memorandum on which the Respondent in a large part based his claim for pension, in that, counsel for the Respondent argues, being a notice to terminate, it could not be unilaterally withdrawn or overridden by the Termination. Letter, which in effect, was null and void.

[p.172]

In my opinion the Retirement Memorandum is neither the same as a notice to terminate nor analogous to a notice to terminate. A notice to terminate is an option exercisable by either the employer or the employee to bring the employment to an end. Once a notice issues the termination process commences and ends at the effluxion of the period given. Without the notice the employment continues unless ended by other means. Retirement, however, occurs when the employee reaches his 55th birthday except in the Case of voluntary retirement where the employee serves a stipulated number of years or, at or after a stipulated birthday, requests for an early retirement from his employee.

It seems to me, therefore, that the idea that the Retirement Memorandum constitutes notice which cannot unilaterally be withdrawn or overridden does not arise at all except perhaps if one were to argue that since the Bank reserves the right to extend Mr. Alghali tenure, the Retirement Memorandum constituted an implied notice that the Bank would not exercise its option to extend the tenure and that Mr. Alghali would be retired oh the 6th July 2000 — a day before his 55th birthday. In the Pension Scheme TRUST DEED AND RULES — Exhibit "DD2' a Pension date" means in relation to any member the day preceding the fifty-fifth anniversary of his birth." The argument was not urged upon the Court and I do not see the need to determine the issue here.

There is dispute as to when the termination of Mr. Alghali's employment took effect Counsel for the Appellant argues that the Termination Letter makes the termination date 1st August 2000 but that in law the effective termination date is 19th April 2000 — the day 1 following the date of the Termination Letter. The Respondent's counsel on the other hand argues that the termination purports to extend the employment beyond the retirement date of the 7th July 2000 to the 1st August 2000 but that the letter itself was null and void and of no effect.

My understanding of the Termination Letter is that the Bank Intended to give and did give Mr. Alghali three (3) months notice to terminate his employment effective 1st August 2000 and then paid him three months salary in lieu of that notice. Some support for this [p.173] can be found, not only in the arguments of counsel before this Court (and also the Court of Appeal), in paragraph (4) of the Defence which states.

"(4) As regards to paragraph 5 thereof the Defendant will contend that it did not expressly invoke. Rule 11(c)(ii) of the said Rules and Regulation but the alledge extension of the plaintiffs' services as provided for in the said Rule arose by necessary implication when the Plaintiffs services were duly terminated with three months notice as required by the said Rules"

In answer to the dispute as to the effective date of the termination of Mr. Alghali's employment, I cannot do better than quote the learned authors of CHITTY ON CONTRACTS — SPECIFIC CONTRACTS, 27TH EDITION, para 37-114 page 787 at 788 where it is stated.

".....The question also arises of the time at which the termination of the contract takes effect. The view of such payments as liquidated for breach seems to require the view that termination is immediate upon the ending of actual employment. The view of such arrangements as involving a waiver of the right to the services to the employee may result in an extension of the date of termination to the date at which notice in lieu of which payment is made would have expired. The former of the two views seems to be currently preferred except in the special case where there are two distinct operations of (living notice and making "payment in lieu of that notice" (Emphasis provided)

In the context of the instant case, I am of the considered opinion that the exception underlined is applicable, and I so hold.

Let me for a moment accept the argument of Counsel for the Appellant that the, termination took effect on the 19th April 2000. This conform with the first view expressed in the quoted passage above which makes the payments made to Mr. [p.174] Alghali in lieu of notice liquidated damages of all the remuneration and entitlements he would have enjoyed during the period of notice. In Mr. Alghali's case, his remuneration and entitlements during the period of notice except his pension rights were paid. In my view his pension rights, which are contractual and binding on the Bank, matured on the 6th July 2000 during the period of notice and therefore he is entitled to his pension payments in accordance with the Pension Scheme, and I so hold.

The discourse relating to the Termination Letter/the issue of the notice to terminate and the decisions or holdings made by me assumes that the notice to terminate was legally effective and not null and void. But is the notice to terminate in the circumstances valid and legally effective? I am of the firm view that it is not. Mr. Alghali was a Section Head at the time that the termination letter was delivered, and as at that time, he was clearly, entitled to three calendar months notice if his services were to be lawfully terminated by notice as evidenced in Regulation 11(b)(ii) of the Staff Rules and Regulations reproduced earlier herein. Mr. Alghali was entitled to retirement on reaching the age of 55 years by virtue of Regulation 11(c){ii) which states:

"All staff will be retired by the Bank on attaining the age of 55.

However, the Bank reserves the right to grant an extension of tenure of office to staff beyond the age of 55, but such extension not to exceed the age of 60 years."

(Emphasis provided)

Mr. Alghali, after serving 27 years, was due for retirement on the 7th July 2000, on attaining the age of 55 years. In fact, he was given a letter (Exhibit 'D') advising him of Impending retirement. Shortly after, on the 18th April 2000, Mr. Alghali's service, were terminated by letter (Exhibit E) with effect from 1st August 2000 and he was then paid three months salary in lieu of notice. The termination date and the period of notice for which payment was made in lieu exceeded the retirement date for Mr. Alghali. In my judgment, the said period of notice which was beyond the said retirement date was intended to comply with the requisite three calendar months [p.175] notice, that is to say, the months of May, June and July 2000. A calendar month means any month in the usual 12 months calendar.

To justify giving a notice that goes beyond the retirement age/date of Mr. Alghali, counsel for the Bank comes up with the ingenious and clever argument that inherent in the termination letter was an implied extension of the tenure of office of Mr. Alghali. This argument, in my view, is not tenable. The Termination Letter was dealing specifically with termination of service and not extension of tenure of office: the two, in my view, are mutually exclusive. This fact is reflected by both the heading of the termination letter and its content. Furthermore, significant matters as the extension" of tenure of office I conclude, must be specifically raised and dealt with, and not made by implication. However, in my judgment, the staff concerned must be aware of the issue and. wants an extension of tenure of office to which the Bank may accede to.

In Regulation 11(c) (ii) "the Bank reserves the right to grant extension of tenure of office". In my view, what the Bank retains (or reserves) to itself is the discretion to accede to a request or wish by a staff for an extension of tenure of office. The Shorter Oxford English Dictionary, 5th edition, volume 2, defines the verb grant as follows:

1. Consent to a request; agree to do

2. Agree to; promise, undertake; consent to do

3. Accede to; consent to fulfill (a request etc.)

4. Concede as an indulgence; bestow as a favour; allows (a person) to have

5. Give or confer (a possession, a right, etc.) formally; transfer (property) legally

6. Yield, give up

7. Admit, acknowledge. Now usually concede (a proposition) as a basis for argument.

I have quoted the full and varied definition of the verb so as to provide a broad set of [p.177] choices for the application of a meaning in the context the verb is used in the said Regulation. In my view, the definitions mentioned in numbers 1 — 4 are appropriate choices, particularly numbers 1 and 3. If the Bank had intended to arrogate to itself the power to unilaterally extend a staff tenure of office without regard to the staff wishes, the verb "grant" would not have a place in the said Regulation. The Bank could have simply stated "it reserves the right to extend a staff tenure of office beyond the age of 55". The selected definitions, in my view, are consistent with and in support of my understanding of the cited phrase in the ;regulation. In the circumstances, I am of the firm view that the notice contained in the Termination Letter is in breach of Regulation 11(b)(ii) and was invalid because it did not fall within .the period of the Mr. Alghali's employment before his services would have come to an end pursuant to Regulation 11(c)(ii) of the Staff Rules and Regulations.

I will deal briefly with the issue of negligence: I firstly take note that allegations of negligence were never made against Mr. Alghali before this matter came to Court. However in defence to Mr. Alghali's claim in the High Court, in paragraph 6 of lieu Statement of Defence, the Bank alleged misconduct against him thus:

"(6) Further and/or in the alternative and before the alleged breach the plaintiff misconducted himself in the service of the Defendant by performing his duties in such a grossly negligent and inefficient manner that led to the Defendant losing a considerable amount of money.

PARTICULARS OF NEGLIGENCE

(1) Causing a cheque for Le.80,000,000.00 drawn on the Defendant Bank to be paid contrary to laid down procedure and practice resulting in the loss of the said amount to the Defendant.

(2) Facilitating the conversion of the proceeds of the said cheque by a person or persons unknown.

(3) The Defendant will further rely on the doctrine of "res ipsa Loquitur".

The Particulars of Negligence seem to imply fraud and the evidence adduced also seem to imply fraud and/or conspiracy to defraud but that is not to say there is evidence to warrant a finding of fraud and/or conspiracy to defraud. Yet the allegation is that of negligence. In his opening address in the High Court Page 27 Line 16-20 of the record Counsel (as he then was) for the Appellant said:

" ... that by way of counter claims the Deponent will be seeking damages from the plaintiff for his gross negligence and for facilitating what we will contend tantamount on (sic) a fraud on the Bank which caused the Bank to Jose 80 million Leones."

In my view, the same facts cannot be seen to support both fraud and negligence by the same person at the same time. The two are at the opposite ends of a pole and are diametrically opposed. The acts and/or failures to act alleged to have been in furtherance of a conspiracy to defraud and/or fraud, in my view, cannot in the same breath be characterized as negligence vis-a-vis the same person.

In the circumstances, hold that paragraph 6 of the Defence and, in particular, the Particulars of Negligence are not indicative of gross negligence, and that the evidence adduced does not prove gross negligence or negligence against Mr. Alghali. As regards whether Mr. Alghali has been involved in fraud or conspiracy to defraud the Statement of Defence relied on negligence and for this reason. I refrain from determining the issue.

I have already held that the contract of employment has been breached in more than one point. Mr. Alghali has been paid all his remuneration and benefits up to the 1st [p.178] August 2000. The question of damages is no longer an issue, except his pension rights. which, for him is the one outstanding issue.

Let me now deal with the issue of Mr. Alghali's pension rights. In my view Mr. Afghali is entitled to pension. The Bank's Pension Scheme was set up for the benefit of its staff and every staff was obliged to become a member on confirmation and upon attaining the age of twenty years. See Regulation 12.1 of the Staff Handbook which states:

12."A member of the staff will join the pension scheme which is non contributory, on confirmation and on attaining the age of twenty years"

Mr. Alghali was a confirmed staff and had attained the age of twenty years while in the employment of the Bank. The rights of staff under the Bank's Pension Scheme are contractual and the Bank is bound by tho.se terms. This is so because the entitlement to the pension rights is grounded in the Staff Handbook and the Staff Rules and Regulations which, as I have already shown, govern the employment relationship between the Bank and Mr. Alghali. In claim for damages for wrongful dismissal, the employee, apart of loss of earnings, may be entitled to other benefits including pension rights if the employer is contractually bound as in this case. See Aklam v Sentinel Insurance Co. Limited (1959)2 Lloyds Rep. 683; Bold v Borough, Nicholson and Hall Limited [1963] 3 All. E.R.849. The loss of Mr. Alghali's pension rights was a foreseeable .result of and flows naturally from the breach of contract. See Hadley v Baxendale (1854) 9 Exch. 341 per Baron ALDERSON at p. 465 (All E.R. 1843-1860). In my view, Mr. Alghali's rights to pension matured on the 6th July 2000, the day preceding his 55th birthday, and is entitled to pension payments from the 7th July 2000. Support for this is found in rule 7 sub-rule (1) of the TRUST DEED AND RULES of the Bank of Sierra Leone Pension Scheme which provides:

"7 (i) A member who having completed ten year's pensionable service [p.179] ceases to be in service at pension date shall be entitled to a pension commencing on the day following such cessation and continuing subject as hereinafter provided during the remainder of his life".

Mr. Alghali has been paid his salary and emoluments up to the 1st August 2000. In the circumstances he can only be paid pension from the 1st August 2000 and in a manner that accords with the Pension Scheme Rules and I so hold.

In the premises I affirm the judgment of the Court of Appeal, and, accordingly, dismiss the appeal with costs.

SGD.

JUSTICE G. SEMEGA-JANNEH, JSC

[p.180]

V.A. WRIGHT. JSC:

The Respondent brought an action against the Appellant that the purported termination of the Respondent's services with effect from 1st August 2000 as stated in the letter of termination was unlawful, null and void since the Appellants right to grant an extension of tenure of office to the staff beyond the age of 55 years was not properly exercised.

The Respondent had been employed by the Appellant for 27 years and at the time of his termination of employment he was section Head, Currency Management. On the 4th April 2000 the Appellant wrote to him informing him of his retirement due on the 7th July 2000. The Respondent claimed that although he was given his entitlements he was not given his pension which was due him on his retirement.

[p.181]

The grounds of Appeal are:

(1) That the Court of Appeal failed to consider and give due weight to the available written and oral evidence particularly that of the Plaintiff P.W.1 when it held that there was no evidence to support the contention that the Appellant had not been guilty of any misconduct.

(2) That the Court of Appeal erred in law when it held that specific charges must be drawn up against the Respondent and proven before disciplinary measures are taken .

(3) The Court of Appeal erred in law when it held that having regard to the circumstances of the case the Appellant had not complied with the terms of the Staff Rules and Regulations and that the termination of the Respondent was thus illegal.

(a) That the judgment of the Court of Appeal be reversed.

(b) Any further or other relief as to the Supreme Court may seem fit.

By a Writ of Summons dated the 9th day of August 2000 issued by the Respondent against the Appellant claiming inter alia a declaration that the termination of employment by the Appellant was null and void and that he should be granted entitlements owed to him under the Banks Pension Trust Scheme.

The Respondent gave evidence that he had worked for the Bank since 1973 and that he was supposed to proceed to retirement after serving the Bank [p.182] for 27 years. A Defence and Counterclaim to the action was filed on behalf of the Appellant alleging negligence on the part of the Respondent thus causing the Appellant loss to the value of Le80,000,000.00 and contending that termination of the Respondent was lawful, thereby claiming the same amount by way of counterclaim.

The matter was heard and on the 3rd October 2002 by the Learned High Court Judge who gave judgment as follows; "That on the evidence I cannot grant reliefs claimed by the plaintiff. I also find evidence insufficient evidence to allow the counterclaim of the Defendant excepting this. I give judgment for the defendants. Each party will pay it costs".

Learned Counsel for the Respondents appealed to the Court of Appeal and the grounds of Appeal were as follows:

(1) That the Learned Trial Judge totally failed, and/or neglected, and/or omitted to properly or adequately consider the case for the Plaintiff Notwithstanding the evidence led before her, the submissions of Counsel and the several authorities cited, leading her to the erroneous conclusion that "....On the evidence I cannot grant relief claimed by Plaintiff"

(2) That the Learned Trial Judge failed to properly evaluate the evidence led before her including the exhibits tendered, but rather merely repeated the [p.183] contents of the pleadings, the evidence and some submissions of Counsel in almost the whole of her said judgment excepting the last page thereof.

(3) That the Learned Trial Judge did not consider AT ALL whether or not the Plaintiff was entitled to or qualified to receive a pension from the Defendants after twenty-seven (27) years service according to the Defendant's own records, which was a major and substantial part of the Plaintiff's case.

(4) That the judgment was against the weight of the evidence.

Judgment was delivered on the 19th day of November upholding the Appeal of the Appellant.

By Notice of Appeal dated the 12th day of January 2005 the Appellant appealed to the Supreme Court.

At the hearing Counsel for the Appellant relied on the dicta of Livesey Luke J. in 7/79 C.A. Gittens-Stronge Vs. Sierra Leone Brewery unreported, said "that if the Employer gives notice for the prescribed period under the contract of Employment or pays the equivalent salary in lieu of such notice the termination is lawful and the employee will have no remedy in law".

He said that the Appellant made payment due to the Respondent in accordance ith section 11(b) of Staff Rules and Regulations, and that the investigation was carried out on the payment of the (Le80,000,000.00) eighty million cheque from Union Trust Bank. The junior officials in the Bank thought this was irregular as [p.184] payments to Bank were not usually made over the counter. This same cheque was paid again not knowing that another payment had been made. After the investigation and based on these facts the respondent was terminated. The motive of the employer in terminating the employee is irrelevant so long as he complies with the terms of the contract of Employment. The employer need not give reasons for his termination as in section 11 in the Staff Rules Regulation. He said that since the Respondent was terminated in April, when he was not yet 55 years he was not entitled to pension.

Counsel for the Respondent on the other hand contended that although the Appellant reserves the right of the Appellant to grant an extension of tenure of office to Staff beyond the age of 55 years, it was neither proper nor lawful for the Appellant to grant such an extension of tenure to the Respondent. When the Appellant informed the Respondent in writing to proceed on retirement on the 7th July 2000 he Appellant never informed the Respondent that he had been granted an extension of tenure.

Learned Counsel for the Respondent strenuously argued that the same query was not addressed only to the Respondent but also to others. He contended that he should have been queried separately and be given the right to defend his action in accordance with Rule 9 of the Staff Rules and Regulations which was not done.

[p.185]

An employer gives notice for the prescribed period or pays the equivalent salary in lieu of such notice the termination is lawful and the employee has no remedy in law. The plaintiff cannot raise the question of notice, proper or otherwise.

In this matter, the Appellant included a cheque representing the salary and other entitlements of the Respondent for three months in Exhibit D which the Respondent accepted and did not return.

The letter of termination stated as follows:

"You are hereby informed that in accordance with rule 10.1. of the Staff Rules and Regulations management has reached a decision that your service with the Bank be terminated with effect 1st August 2000. Accordingly you will be paid three months salary in lieu of notice. You need not report for duty with effect from tomorrow 19th April 2000. Enclosed is a copy of the breakdown of your final benefits and one cheque No.331657 being final entitlement of your benefits as on 31st July 2000."

Learned Counsel for the Respondent contended that since the Respondent had served 27 years in the employment of the Appellant and having reached the age of 55 years while still in the employment of the Bank he was entitled to receive a pension from the Bank. Therefore he had been willfully deprived of his said pension by the unlawful termination of his services after the date of retirement.

[p.186]

Counsel for the Appellant however stated that the Respondent was not in the employment of the Appellant on the date of his retirement and was therefore not entitled any pension. The termination was lawful and in accordance with Rule 11 of the Staff and Regulations and no notice need to be given for the termination.

I shall refer to the Staff Rules and Regulations Rule 10(1) which was referred to in the Letter of Termination.

Rules 10(1) states:

Staff shall have a right of appeal against any disciplinary measures meted out to them. Such appeal which must be in writing, and shall be addressed to the Board of Directors and copied the Governor in the case of Head of Directors and copied the Governor in the case of Head of Departments and Division Heads. In the case of all other employees which appeals shall be addressed to the Governor through the Director, Human Resources such an appeal shall be made within one month.

This brings to mind Rule 11 headed separation from service. The service of Staff with the Bank is severed by any of the following:

(a) Registration

(b) Termination

(c) Retirement

(d) Death

(b) Termination of Notice

(1) The Bank reserves the right as employer to terminate the service of an [p.187] employer to at any time and need not assign any reason for such termination.

(11) The Bank shall give staff notice of termination in lieu of such notice in accordance with their rank as follows:

- Probating employees. Fourteen calendar days.
- Employees below the rank of section head one calendar month
- Section Head and above three calendar months.

(111) Staff Terminated who have served a maximum of 5 years shall be Entitled to all earned benefits up to the time of termination.

Later on in my judgment I shall deal with the question of when the letter of termination should took effect.

In SC.Civ.App.7/97 Gittens Strange V. Sierra Leone Brewery Limited unreported, livesey Luke C.J. when dealing with a similar case said "whether such cessation is called "termination" or "dismissal" is of no importance in this context. If the "termination" is unlawful if it gives rise to an action for wrongful dismissal" similarly if the dismissal is unlawful it gives rise to an action for wrongful dismissal".

Before the written letter by the Appellant informing the Respondent of his retirement the Appellant and other employees were queried to explain in writing about their involvement in the matter following the report of the shortage of Le80,000,000 from the banking vault.

There are three different dates in the termination letters. Exhibit E, 1st August 2000 which was actually stated as the termination date; 19th April 2000, on which date the Respondent was told not to return to work and 31st July 2000 up to when final settlement of benefits were calculated. The Appellant informed the Respondent of his termination and made payment of full settlement of his benefits and at the same time unnecessarily gave notice of three months. It is apparent that Exhibit E was badly written.

I have no doubt in my mind that inspite of the badly drafted letter of termination the" date the Appellant stopped work on the orders of the Respondent was 19th April 2000, and the fact that in the letter of termination was enclosed a cheque representing the calculated salary of three months and other benefits due the Plaintiff, the termination was lawful. Livesey Luke C.J. in his judgment in Gittins-Stronge v. Sierra Leone Brewery Limited (Supra) had this to say.

'if according to the terms of the employment, termination must be written notice or salary in lieu of notice such notice or such payment of salary must, in my opinion, be contemporaneous with the act of termination."

Let me here state that I found that the letter of the 4th April 2000 from the Director of Human Resources of the ……relating to the Appellants imminent 'employment was a reminder that the Appellant was due to retire on the 7th July 2000.

[p.189]

Rule 11 (C) (11) of Exhibit U the Staff Rules and Regulations states that Although the staff will be retired by the Bank on attaining the age of 55 years the Bank reserves the right to grant an extension not exceeding the age of 60 years. Therefore if the Appellant did not exercise such right in favour of the Respondent I do not see how he could have complained about it. See dicta of Livesey-Luke in the case of Vincent Vs. S.P. (Sierra Leone Limited SC.CIV.APP.2/81 delivered on the 3rd day of April 1984.

I find that Exhibit "D" which is the memorandum dated 4th April 2000 from the Director of Human Resources to the Appellant relating to the Appellants imminent retirement does not have the same legal effect as Exhibit E and this could be easily distinguished from a notice of termination as highlighted in the judgment of Beccles-Davies JSC in the case SC.CIV.APP. 5/80

Freetown Cold Storage Limited Vs. Ignatius Guildford Reffell unreported Judgment delivered on 14th July 1982 and dealt with in the case of Harris & Russell Limited Vs. Slingsby (1973) ALL E.R. 31, Decro-Wall International S.A. Vs Practioners in Marketing (1971) 1 WLR 3611 and Riordan Vs. The War Office (1959) 3 ALL E.R. 522.

I shall now deal with Exhibit J which is a letter of query for the payment of cheque No.31960 for Le80,000,000 on the 11th August 1999. However on the same date similar letters of query had been served on other members of staff including the Respondent who had been involved in the payment of the cheque. The replies from other members of staff implicated the Plaintiff. The [p.190] Respondent was asked to show why disciplinary action should not be taken against him in accordance with the Staff Rules and Regulation to which he complied. He was also asked to reply to the comments of the other members of staff to which he replied.

D.W.1 Grahe Oladi Hassan Division Head of procurement Department and Stores General Services Department said that after April 1999 she had cause to carry out investigation because of discrepancy in the Book. There was an outstanding amount of Le80,000,000 against the Bank. She said that they discovered the cheque for Le80,000,000 was paid twice; and she interviewed P.W.1, Ahmed Tafsir Alghali P.W.2 Bintu Sesay, Mr. Roxy Edwards and Mr. Gebai Supervising Cashier they went on to say that payment on cheques for large sums is effected at the receiving Bay and not Banking Hall. She said that the Plaintiff should be aware of this and she concluded that because of the breach of this procedure cheque Exhibit Y was paid twice; and the Bank was not able to receive the Le80,000,000.

In cross examination by Counsel for the Respondent she said that there was record that cashier No.4 paid out Le80,000,000 on cheque No. 319606 on the day, it was drawn on Union Trust Bank. The second time the cheque was paid was at the Banking Hall. The first time it was paid was at the Receiving Bay. Looking at the foot of the cheque nothing tells her it was paid at the Receiving Bay.

From the answers given by the Appellant some of which were envisaged e.g . in Exhibit N (page 154) in answer to Gegbais allegation that he handed over the cheque, he said he could not recall.

The other issue was whether the Rules and Regulations, pursuant to which action was taken to have the, Plaintiffs service terminated. The implementing Rule 10(1), rule 9 has to be taken into consideration. Great play was made on the phrase "specifics" of the allegation" both by the Learned Sir John Muria JA as he then was and by Counsel for the Respondent in his address. I hold the view that the Appellant discharged that obligation by bringing to the Respondent's notice the details of any breach of the regulation, or any "display of negligence in general or anything detrimental to the interests of the Bank".

The other limb of rule 9 is that staff should be given an opportunity to make a defence to justify why disciplinary action should not be taken against him or her.

I disagree with the learned Judge in his view that a charge has to be laid against the member of staff. I hold that the allegation of negligence was clearly made and the respondent was given ample opportunity as where other staff members under investigation to defend themselves and to justify why disciplinary action should not be able taken against them Exhibits J.K, M2, M4, M6 and N were all about the investigation carried out by the Defendant. Obviously the respondents replies to queries were not acceptable and the Appellant chose the penalty of [p.192] termination as an option against the Respondent There is no evidence that inspite of the fact that the matter was speedily resolved that the Respondent was not given every opportunity to make a defence against the allegation levied by the Defendant.

It is not necessary for charges to be laid out as is done in criminal cases so long as the misconduct was adequately brought to the notice of the employee and he was given the opportunity to respond to the allegation contained therein.

From the above it is clear that the Appellant was given ample opportunity to exonerate himself contrary to what was contended by Counsel for the Respondent; and I disagree with the finding of the Court of Appeal on this point.

I find also that there is abundant evidence of negligence on the part of the Respondent He had been negligent in his duty.

One of the main questions to be determined was whether after the Letter of Termination had been issued the Respondent was still in the employment of the Appellant as contained in the Staff Rules and Regulations (Exh. U).

I will first of all deal with when the letter of termination took effect. Let me again say that this letter was badly written Exhibit "E" states you need not report for duty with effect from tomorrow 19th April 2000.

On a strict interpretation of Rule 10 (1). Rule 10 (2) (V) and Rule 11(b) (iii) Exhibit "U" (Staff Rules and Regulations) I opine that the effective date of [p.193] termination of the employment was the 18th April 2000, because after paying the respondents three months salary and their benefits in lieu of notice there was no need to give any notice. Even Learned Counsel for the Respondent in his case filed on page 9 in the penultimate paragraph said "The Appellant indeed has served the Bank for more than 10 years if he had not been terminated he would have reached the age of 55 years on 7th July 2000.

I shall here state that I find that Exhibit "E" as contended by the Counsel for the Respondent did not make the action taken by the Appellant there on in valid. The Appellant paid the Respondent three months salary in lieu of notice.

See Gittens Stronge Vs. Sierra Leone Brewery Limited (supra) in which Luke JSC said:

"According to Common Law if an employer gives notice for the prescribed period or pays the equivalent salary in lieu of such notice the termination is-lawful and the employee has no remedy in law ……If the employer acts in accordance with the terms of the contract of Employment he is protected", See Volta also Aluminum Co. Limited Vs. Tetteh Akuffo Baddoo volume 2 2003-2004 Supreme Court Ghana Law Report page 1163 and Bannerman Mason v. Ghana Employer's Association 1996-1997 SC.GLR (Ghana Reports).

In the Judgment of S.U. Anu.JSC. In Gidfrey Vs. Isievwore (2002) of S.C.N.J. (Supreme Court Nigerian Judgments page 33 he said:

[p.194]

Pensionable employment does not mean for life or until normal retirement age as stated 'in Chitty on Common Law Sense Volume 2. 24th Edition page 101. To become "eligible" to something may mean "legally qualified" to it as pointed out by Lord Chelmsford in Baker Vs. Lee (1880) 8 H.L. Cas. 495 at page 522.

Reference has been made to the Staff Handbook 1971 where it is provided in Clause 12 as follows:

PENSIONS

1. Will join Pension scheme which is not on confirmation and on attaining the

2. Members of the staff will become eligible for pension after continuous service of ten years or on voluntary retirement at or after the age of fifty years.

According to the records the date on which the Appellant legally qualified for pension was on the 7th july 2000, but he was terminated before that date.

The Appellant was not bound to keep the Respondent in employment after the age of 55 years and I disagree with the Learned Justices of Appeal that the termination was unlawful,

As already opined I cannot say that the Respondent was in the service of the Appellant on the date of retirement and I hold that the Re9Pondent was lawfully terminated on the 18th April 2000. That being the case he cannot be entitled to pension and I so hold. The Appeal therefore succeeds. Each party

RENNER-THOMAS C.J.

The proceedings herein which Were consolidated by an Order of this Court made on the 26th day of July 2007 arose out of the nomination of the 1st Defendant herein, Solomon Ekuma Berewa, (hereinafter referred to as "the 1st Defendant"), the incumbent Vice President of the Republic of Sierra Leone, as the candidate of the Sierra Leone People's Party (SLPP) for the Presidential Elections due to be held on the 11th August 2007.

Subsection 1 of section 32 of the Electoral Laws Act, No.2 of 2002 (hereinafter referred to as the Electoral Laws Act 2002) directs the Chairman of the Electoral Commission who is the Returning Officer for the Presidential Election to publish by Government Notice details of the nominations for the said election immediately after the time prescribed by section 30 of the Electoral Laws Act 2002 for delivery of the nomination papers.

Subsections 2, 3 and 4 of section 32 of the 2002 Act expressly provide as follows:

"(2) The Government Notice referred to in subsection (1) shall direct that any citizen of Sierra Leone may lodge an objection, if any, against the nomination of a presidential candidate but that such objection shall be lodged with the Supreme Court within seven days of the publication of the Government Notice.

(3) An objection against the nomination of any presidential candidate shall be heard by the Supreme Court made up of three Justices whose decision shall be given within thirty days of the lodging of the objection.

(4) Where the Supreme Court uphold an objection against any nomination, it shall declare the presidential candidate concerned to be disqualified from contesting the presidential election."

Relying on the aforesaid provisions and pursuant to Supreme Court Practice Directions No.2 of 2007, Public Notice No. 98 of 2007, (hereinafter referred to as "Practice Directions No.2 of 2007") Abubakarr Conteh of 2 Foulah Street Freetown, the Plaintiff in SC 1/2007 (hereinafter referred to as "the 1st Plaintiff') who describes himself as a concerned citizen of the Republic of Sierra Leone took out an Originating Notice of Motion on the 16th day of July 2007 by which he sought, inter alia, a declaration that the 1st Defendant is ineligible to contest the presidential election scheduled for the 11th August 2007.

The grounds relied on by the 1st Plaintiff are that:

"(a) the nomination of the 1st Respondent is inconsistent with section 14(1) of the Political Parties Act No. 3 of 2002 as amended, section 35(4), 41 (d) and 76(1) (h) of the Constitution, Act No. 6 of 1991, and section 29(2) (d) and 30(3) of the Electoral Laws Act No. 2 of 2002 as amended including paragraph 13 of the form contained in the Fourth Scheduled to said section 30(3) ".

[and]

(b) the nomination of the 1st Respondent is also inconsistent with section 76(1)(b) and section 115(2)&(4) of the Constitution, Act No. 6 of 1991".

On the same day, 16th July 2007, Charles Francis Margai of 20 Old Railway Line, Signal Hill, Freetown (hereinafter referred to as "the 2nd Plaintiff') who described himself as a Sierra Leonean and a registered voter also filed an Originating Notice of Motion seeking a declaration that:

"the 1st Defendant/Respondent herein is disqualified from contesting the Presidential Elections scheduled for 11th August, 2007 on the grounds that his nomination is inconsistent with section 14(1) o/the Political parties Act No. 3 of 2002 as amended, sections 35(4), 41 (d), 76(1) (b) & (h), 115(2) & (4) and 171(1) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, Act No. 6 of 1991, and section 29(2)(d) of the Electoral laws Act, No.2 of 2002 as amended".

As required by Practice Direction No. 2 of 2007 the Originating Notice of Motions of both the 1st and 2nd Plaintiffs were accompanied by a Statement of their respective Case. Unfortunately, instead of advancing legal arguments in support of the several contentions on the face of their Motion cited above both Statements merely repeated the said contentions by adopting

"in its entirely the Application filed, the reasons preferred and the authorities cited therein, all of which are self-explanatory."

On the 20th day of July 2007 the 1st Defendant filed a Statement of his Case in both matters. Briefly put, the 1st Defendant submitted that he was qualified in every respect to contest the said presidential election as he had satisfied all the requirements in sections 41 and 75 of the Constitution, Act No. 6 of 1991 (hereinafter referred to as "the Constitution") and that it was not section 76(1)(h) of the Constitution or any of the other provisions which the plaintiffs [p.92] alleged he was in contravention of which determined whether or not a candidate for the presidential election was disqualified from contesting.

The Chief Electoral Commissioner was joined as 2nd Defendant in these proceedings and on her behalf L.M. Farmah Esq., Principal State Counsel, entered an Appearance to the two Originating Notices of Motion. On the 23rd day of July 2007 Counsel for the 2nd Defendant purported to file a Statement of Case on her behalf which consisted mostly of an account of the statutory role of the 2nd Defendant in the nomination process.

This is not surprising as neither Plaintiff made out a case against the 2nd Defendant and I doubt whether she should even have been joined as a Defendant at all especially taking into account paragraph 3 of Practice Direction No.2 of 2007 which provides that immediately after commencement of any proceedings relating to an objection to the nomination of a presidential candidate the originating process should be served on the Chairman of the Electoral Commission.

The redundancy of the 2nd Defendant in these proceedings is even more obvious when, pursuant to an Order of the Court made on the 25th day of July 2007; the parties in both actions filed an agreed memorandum of issues to be tried in these proceedings. According to the said memorandum the sole issue to be tried by this Court was:

"whether or not the 1st Defendant/Respondent as Vice President of the Republic of Sierra Leone is qualified to be nominated as the Presidential Candidate for the Sierra Leone People's party (SLPP) having regard to sections 35(4), 76(1) (h), 76(1)(b), 41 (d), 115(2) and (4) and 171 (1) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, Act No. 6 of 1991, section 14(1) of the Political Parties Act No.3 of 2002 as amended and section 29(2) (d) and 30(3) of the Electoral Laws Act, No.2 of 2002 as amended as well as sections 41, 42(1), 43(a), 46(1) and 75 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone aforesaid".

As a result, when the matter came up for hearing on the 27 day of July 2007 this Court directed that it no longer wished to hear from Counsel for the 2nd Defendant and released him from further participation in the proceedings. Indeed, it is my considered opinion that neither Plaintiff has made out a case against the 2nd Defendant.

In the circumstances, the purported claim against the 2nd Defendant in both matters is hereby dismissed. I shall address the question of costs at the end of this Ruling.

I now revert to the respective Cases put forward by the Plaintiff in both matters. Counsel for the Plaintiff in SC1/2007 attempted, but later abandoned the attempt, to clarify or add to the Statement of Case filed with the Originating Notice of Motion and at the hearing was confined to the several contentions contained therein. In contrast, Mr. Fofanah, Counsel p.93] for the Plaintiff in SC2/2007 was given leave by this Court to rely on a document filed on the 24th July 2007 headed "Matters of Clarification on the Agreed Triable Issue in the joint Memorandum signed by the parties thereto". For clarity, I reproduce the content of this document in extenso. It states:

"That pursuant to the originating notice of motion filed herein dated 16th July 2007, together with its supporting Affidavit and Case Statement, the Plaintiff/Applicant seeks· a declaration that the 1st Defendant/Respondent, as "the Vice president of the Republic of Sierra Leone", disqualified from contesting the Presidential Elections scheduled for 11th August, 2007 on the grounds that his nomination is, firstly, inconsistent with section 14(1) of the Political Parties Act No. 3 of 2002 as amended, sections 35(4), 41 (d), 76(1)(h) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, Act No. 6 of 1991 and sections 29(2)(d) and 30(3) of the Electoral Laws Act, No.2 of 2002 as amended (emphasis added).

And secondly, that pursuant to the said originating notice of motion and its supporting documents, the Plaintiff/Applicant similarly seeks a declaration that the 1st Defendant/Respondent, as a "Public Officer" under section 115(2) & (4) and 171 (1) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone aforesaid, is disqualified from contesting the Presidential Elections scheduled for 11th August 2007 on the grounds that his said nomination is in consistent with section 76(1)(b) of said constitution."

This was how the matter stood when it came up for hearing on the 27th July 2007.

What in fact was the issue or were the issues to be determined in these proceedings? I resist using the expression "to be tried" because clearly this wag not a trial.

I start by dealing with what was not in issue. In my considered opinion, it was not being disputed that the 1st Defendant had satisfied the requirements of sections 41 and 42(1) of the Constitution, which incidentally are identical, if not ipsissima verba, with those of section 29(1) and (2) of the Electoral Laws Act, No.2 of 2002 and by extension paragraphs (c) and (d) of section 75 of the Constitution.

I shall therefore only reproduce here sections 41, 42(1) and 75 of the Constitution. First, section 41 states that:

"No person shall be qualified for election as President unless he—

[p.94]

(a) is a citizen of Sierra Leone;

(b) is a member of a political party;

(c) has attained the age of forty years; and

(d) is otherwise qualified to be elected as a Member of Parliament".

This is followed by section 42(1) which provides that "A presidential candidate shall be nominated by a political party."

Thirdly, section 75 provides, inter alia, that

"Subject to the provisions of section 76 any person who—

(a) Is a citizen of Sierra Leone (otherwise than by naturalization); and

(b) Has attained the age of twenty-one years; and

(c) Is an elector whose name is on a register of electors under the Franchise and Electoral Registration Act, 1961, or under any Act of Parliament amending or replacing that Act; and

(d) is able to speak and to read the English Language with a degree of proficiency sufficient to enable him to take an active part in the proceedings of Parliament, shall be qualified for election as such a Member of Parliament:"

The uncontroverted evidence before this Court is that the 1st Defendant

- is a citizen of Sierra Leone otherwise than by registration;

- is a member of a political party, the SLPP

- is not less than forty years of age;

- is otherwise qualified to be elected as a Member of Parliament in that, in accordance with section 75(c) and (d) of the Constitution,

- he is an elector whose name is on a register of electors under the Electoral Laws Act, No.2 of 2002; and

[p.95]

- is able to speak and to read the English Language with a degree of proficiency sufficient to enable him to take an active part in the proceedings of Parliament; and that an accordance with 42(1) of the Constitution:

- he was nominated by a political party, the SLPP."

In view of the above, it would appear safe to conclude that the 1st Defendant has complied with all the Constitutional requirements for nomination as a candidate for the presidential election due to be held on August 11th 2007 and that the objections to his nomination should not, without more, be upheld.

Indeed, from the perspective of both Plaintiffs the matter does not end there. They contend, and in my view, that is the issue to be determined, that the 1st Defendant is disqualified because his nomination is inconsistent with various other provisions of the Constitution, of the Electoral laws Act 2002 and of the Political Parties Act, No 3 of 2002. I shall therefore proceed to address the several contentions seriatim.

First, both the 1st Plaintiff and the 2nd Plaintiff contend that the nomination of the 1st Defendant is inconsistent with the provision of section 35(4) of the Constitution which states that:

"35(4) No political party shall have as a leader a person who is not qualified to be elected as a Member of Parliament".

Counsel for the Plaintiff in SC 1/2007 argued that this provision should be read together with section 76 of the Constitution which lists various factors which could disqualify a person from being elected as a Member of Parliament. He seems to have equated being a presidential candidate of a political party with being a leader of that party. I cannot agree with this contention. In view of the requirements listed above for qualification as a presidential candidate there is no basis for contending that being a leader of a political party, the SLPP in the instant proceedings, and not being qualified to be elected as a Member of Parliament, without more, should disqualify the 1st Defendant from being nominated as a presidential candidate of the said SLPP and I so hold.

The arguments of Counsel for the Plaintiff in SC 2/2007 on this ground of disqualification of the 1st Defendant as a presidential candidate was more or less along the same lines as those canvassed by Counsel for the 1st Plaintiff. I shall therefore not bother to repeat them but for the same reasons stated above they are hereby rejected.

I next turn to the provision of 14(1) of the Political Parties Act, No.3 of 2002, which states that:

[p.96]

"A political party shall not have as a founding member or as a leader of the party or a member of its executive body, whether national or otherwise, a person who is not qualified to be elected as a Member of Parliament under the Constitution".

Again in my opinion the contention canvassed by Counsel on behalf of both Plaintiffs that the 1st Defendant's nomination as a presidential candidate of the SLPP is inconsistent with the above provision hinges on the fact that, in their respective submissions, the 1st Defendant is, disqualified from being elected as a Member of Parliament by certain provisions in section 76 (1) of the Constitution.

Again, this contention is untenable for the simple reason that even if one were to hold that the 1st Defendant was disqualified to be elected as a Member of Parliament under any provision of section 76 of the Constitution the fact that he is a founding member of the SLPP or a member of the executive body whether national or otherwise is irrelevant when one comes to consider the requirements for nomination as a presidential candidate under sections 41, 42(1) and 75 of the Constitution, or sections 29(1) and (2) of the Electoral laws Act 2002 as set out above.

For the above reason I hold that this ground of objection to the nomination of the 1st Defendant as a candidate for the forthcoming presidential election also fails and is hereby rejected.

I shall next deal with sections 43(a) and 46(1) of the Constitution together. Section 43(a) provides for the circumstances that would dictate the holding of presidential elections and simply states that:

"A Presidential election shall take place—

(a) Where the office of President is to become vacant by effluxion of time and the President continues in office after the beginning of the period of four months ending with the date when his term of office would expire by effluxion of time, during the first three months of that period.

Section 46(1) of the Constitution provides that:

"no person shall hold office as President for more than two terms of five years each whether or not the terms are consecutive."

In my opinion it is pretty obvious on a reading of section 43(a) of the Constitution that the contention that the 1st Defendant's nomination for the forthcoming presidential election is [p.97] Inconsistent with this provision lacks any merit. I have no hesitation in holding that it has no relevance to the question of whether or not the 1st Defendant is disqualified from being nominated as a presidential candidate of the SLPP in the forthcoming 2007 presidential election and so hold.

Section 46(1) of the Constitution play well be relevant when one comes to consider the implication and legal effect of section 76(1)(h) of the Constitution but by itself it does not affect the issue of whether or not the 1st Defendant is disqualified from being nominated as a presidential candidate of the SLPP for the 2007 presidential elections. This is so because all the available evidence in the instant proceedings point to the fact, and one can safely take judicial notice of that fact, that the 1st Defendant has never before held office as President. There is no way therefore that his nomination could be said to be inconsistent with the provision of section 46(1) of the Constitution and I so hold.

Probably the most attractive argument canvassed by Counsel for both the 1st Plaintiff and the 2nd Plaintiff is that which revolves around the legal effect of section 76 of the Constitution to which I shall now turn my attention. Let me hasten to state that for present purposes even more important than the legal meaning of the several provisions of section 76 of the Constitution relied on by Counsel for the Plaintiffs is the question whether the provisions governing the requirements for nomination as a presidential candidate to be found in section 41 and 42 of the Constitution cited above are all to be read subject to the provisions of section 76 of the Constitution.

During the course of the oral arguments both sides made great play of the appropriate rule or capon of interpretation to be utilized in construing the meaning of the provisions of sections 76(1)(b) and 76(1)(h) of the Constitution. It is my considered view that it would be futile to engage in such an exercise if at the end of the analysis which follows one were to come to the conclusion that these provisions of section 76 dealing with disqualification for elections as a Member or Parliament were in fact inapplicable to the issue of a candidate's eligibility for nomination for a presidential election.

My First observation is that looking at the Constitution as a whole as I am obliged to do in these circumstances there is nothing therein that expressly states that the disqualifications listed in section 76 of the Constitution are to be applied to a candidacy for a presidential election.

Could it then be said to be implied? There is no doubt that it could be argued that section 76 is so applicable by implication. The basis for such argument is the introductory and qualifying words to be found in section 75 of the Constitution, to wit, "subject to the provisions of section 76" before the listing of the four qualifications for election as a Member of Parliament two of which contained in paragraphs (c) and (d) of section 75 of the Constitution clearly apply in considering the issue of qualification for presidential election. This is by virtue of paragraph (d) of section 41 of the Constitution which requires a [p.98] elected as a Member of Parliament thus making it necessary to import the provision of those two paragraphs of section 75 into section 41 of the Constitution.

Indeed, it is contended by Counsel for both Plaintiffs that because section 75 is to be read subject to section 76 of the Constitution the importation so to speak of the provisions of paragraphs (c) and (d) of section 75 into section 41 of the Constitution to complete the requirements for candidacy of a presidential election means that the whole of section 41 should be read subject to section 76 of the Constitution.

It is clear that if this was the intention of Parliament the drafts man failed to express that intention clearly. Could it be said that the draftsman left such an important qualification to be implied? Or could it be said that there was an omission on the part of Parliament to deal at all with the question of disqualifications for a candidacy for presidential elections?

There is no easy answer to these questions based on a mere reading of the Constitution as enacted. However, based on the post-enacting history of section 410f the Constitution, I am inclined to the view that, in fact, it was not the intention of Parliament to make section 41 subject to section 76 of the Constitution but rather there might have well been an omission to address the issue of possible disqualifications of a candidacy for a presidential election.

I am fortified in this view when I come to consider the provisions of section 29 of the Electoral Laws Act 2002 which, as I have said earlier, are virtually identical, if not ipsissima verba the provisions of sections 41 and 42(1) of the Constitution.

According to Benion, Statutory Interpretation, (3rd ed, 1997 at page 541),

"Where a later Act is in pari materia with an earlier Act, provisions in the later Act may be used to aid construction of the earlier Act..... The principle underlying the treatment of Acts which are in pari materia is based on the idea that there is continuity in legislative approach in such Acts, and common terminology. A later Act may thus throw light on some aspect of an earlier Act. "

What light then does the Electoral Laws Act 2002 throw on the question of whether section 41 of the Constitution should be read subject to section 76 of the Constitution? First, section 29 of the Electoral Laws Act 2002 which is a later statute makes no direct reference to section 76 of the Constitution. The reason for this becomes obvious when we come to consider the provision of the next section of the Electoral Laws Act 2002 for it is in subsection (3) of section 30 of that Act that Parliament chose to deal directly and not by implication with the question of disqualifications for election as a President.

However, for some strange reason, instead of dealing with these disqualifying provisions in the main body of the Electoral Laws Act 2002 as in the case of section 76 of the Constitution dealing with disqualification for election as a Member of Parliament, the draftsman chose to set out the disqualifying provisions in the Fourth Schedule to the Electoral Laws Act 2002 and as part of a statutory declaration to be made by a presidential candidate and that should be filed together with his nomination papers under section 30(3) of the Act.

The question then arises as .to the legal effect of those matters dealt with in the Fourth Schedule of the Electoral Offences Act 2002. There is no doubt that a Schedule to an Act is to be constituted, by virtue of the functional construction rule,-as .an adjunct to the main body of the Act but nevertheless fully a part of it. According to Benion (supra at page 3) whether material is put in a section or a Schedule is usually a matter of convenience. In A-G v. Lamlough (1878) 3 Ex. D 214 at 229) Brett LJ had this to say:

"A schedule in an Act is a mere question of drafting, a mere question of words. The schedule is as much part of the statute, and is as much an enactment, as any other part."

Normally, the Schedule is used to set out some provisions which are too long or detailed to be put in the body of the Act. Another common use of the Schedule is to set out in it some document which is referred to in the body of the Act. In the instant case, the document happens to be a statutory declaration which according to the inducing words in subsection 3 of section 30 of the Electoral Laws Act 2002 Act must accompany the nomination papers of presidential candidate.

Having thus established that the statutory declaration in the Fourth Schedule of the Electoral Laws Act 2002 is very much a part of that statute one must examine it more closely to ascertain what is the legal effect of its contents. The first observation I wish to make is that some of the statements to be made by the presidential candidate in the Statutory Declaration are simply matters of fact such as whether he has made arrangements satisfactory to the appropriate authority for the payment of his taxes; others are matters of mixed fact and law such as whether he has been convicted for an offence involving fraud and dishonesty; and yet others are matters of strict law such as whether he is otherwise disqualified from standing for the election by any law in force in Sierra Leone which could only be conclusively dealt with in the circumstances by this Court.

What is most significant however for present purposes is that virtually all the disqualifications for membership of Parliament found in section 76 of the Constitution are dealt with in the statutory declaration. Thus, the disqualifications in paragraphs (b), (c), (d), (e), (f) and (g) of section 76(1) of the Constitution are reproduced in paragraphs 11, 5, 6, 8, 12 and 7 respectively of the statutory declaration in the Fourth Schedule of the Electoral Laws Act 2002. Even the disqualifications listed in sections 76(2) and (3) of the Constitution are listed in paragraphs 6 and 10 of the statutory declaration. However, of the two [p.100] disqualifications relied on by the Plaintiffs in these proceedings only that contained in section 7 6(1) (b) of the Constitution is reproduced as paragraph 11 of the statutory declaration. That contained in section 76(1) (h) 6fthe Constitution relating to the ineligibility of the President, Vice President, Ministers and Deputy Ministers for election as Members of Parliament is significantly omitted.

Having thus ascertained the legal effect and content of the Fourth Schedule of the Electoral Laws Act 2002 it is my considered view that for several reasons one can safely conclude that it could not be properly be contended that the provisions of section 76(1)(h) should apply to candidacy for a presidential election. First, as the Electoral Laws Act 2002 is a later statute than the 1991 Constitution Parliament is deemed to be aware of the provisions of the Constitution when it enacted the later Act. Secondly, the fact that the latter enactment deals expressly and specifically with the issue of disqualifications for presidential elections it is to be preferred to those provisions of section 76 of the Constitution which as I have held earlier could only be said to qualify section 41 of the Constitution only by implication. Thirdly, the omission of the disqualification in Section 76(1) (h) from the list of disqualifications in the Fourth Schedule of the Electoral Laws Act 2002 which is otherwise in pari materia with those dealt with in section 76 of the Constitution necessarily means that the principle of interpretation expressio unius est exclusio alterius could properly be applied in the circumstances. I therefore hold that it could not have been the intention of Parliament that the disqualification contained in section 76(1) (h) of the Constitution should apply to a candidacy for presidential election and the objection on that ground to the 1st Defendant's nomination for the forthcoming presidential election is hereby rejected.

Unlike the ground of disqualification in section 76(1) (h) of the Constitution that contained in section 76(1)(b) of the Constitution is incorporated in the Fourth Schedule of the Electoral Laws Act 2002 as paragraph 11. In the said paragraph 11 the candidate is required to declare that he is not:

"a member of any commission established by the Constitution, or, member of the Armed Forces of the Republic, or a public officer, or an employee of a corporate body established by an Act of Parliament or out of funds appropriated by Parliament. I have not been in any of the foregoing capacities during past twelve months."

As stated earlier, this wording of paragraph 11 of the statutory declaration is ipsissima verba that of section 76(1) (b) of the Constitution. It is the contention of Counsel for both Plaintiffs that the 1st Defendant is a public officer within the meaning of sections 115(2) and (4) and 171(1) of the Constitution because the emoluments attached to his office of Vice President are paid directly from the Consolidated Fund or directly out of moneys provided by Parliament.

Although the arguments canvassed by Counsel on behalf of both Plaintiffs were referable only to section 7 6(1)(b) of the Constitution if this Court were to hold that such arguments were tenable then that would suffice to disqualify the 1st Defendant from contesting the forth coming presidential election because his declaration in paragraph 11 of the statutory declaration would have been wrong as a matter of law.

The issue that remains to be determined therefore is whether the Vice-President is a public officer. If he is held to be so, failure to resign from such office twelve months prior to presenting himself as a candidate for the forthcoming presidential election would invalidate his candidature.

Section 171(1) of the Constitution is the section that deals with interpretation of words and phrases used in different parts of the Constitution. Apart from the definition of "public office" referred to above the section also defines a "public officer" as meaning a person holding or acting in a public office. A related term also defined in the said section is "public service". According to the section 'public service' means,

"subject to the provisions of subsections (3) and (4) service of the government of Sierra Leone in a civil capacity and includes such service in respect of the Government prior to the twenty-seventh day of April 1961."

It is my considered view that the three terms "public officer" "public office" and "public service" have the same connotation and are inextricably linked. Thus, based on this premise, one can properly state that a public officer is a person who holds a public office in the public service of the Government of Sierra Leone.

In light of the above, I am also of the view that one cannot properly answer the question whether the 1st Defendant is a public officer without adverting one's mind to section 171(4) of the Constitution which expressly states that:

"In this Constitution "public service" does not include service in the office of President, Vice-President, Speaker, Minister, Deputy Minister, Attorney-General and Minister of Justice, Deputy Speaker, Member of Parliament....."

Applying the above express and unambiguous provision to the facts in the instant proceedings the only conclusion I can reach is that the 1st Defendant as incumbent Vice President of the Republic of Sierra Leone is not a public officer within the meaning of section 171 of Constitution and as referred to in paragraph 11 of the statutory declaration in the Fourth Schedule of the Electoral Laws Act 2002. I therefore hold that the disqualification contained in paragraph 11 of the statutory declaration in the Fourth Schedule of the Electoral Laws Act 2002 does not apply to the 1st Defendant in both matters. This ground of objection therefore fails.

[p.102]

In the circumstances, since all the grounds of objection have been rejected in this Ruling I cannot make the several declarations prayed for in the Originating Notice of Motion filed by both Plaintiffs and I therefore make the following Orders:—

1. The Originating Notice of Motion in SC1/2007 is hereby dismissed.

2. The Originating Notice of Motion in SC2/2007 is hereby dismissed.

Counsel will hereafter address this Court on the question of costs.

U.H TEJAN-JALLOH

On the 7th day of July, 2007, Solomon E. Berewa Esq., the 1st Defendant /Respondent presented his nomination paper for Presidential candidate for the forth coming election to the Chairman of the Electoral Commission, who is the Returning Officer. The nomination form is pursuant to section 30 and the Third Schedule to the Electoral Laws Act 2002 — Act No.2 of 2002. This was accompanied with two statutory declarations' by virtue of sub-section 3 and the Forth schedule to the aforementioned Act.

Charles Francis Margai Esq. and Mr. Abu Bakarr Conteh objected to the provisional nomination by Originating Notice of Motion dated 16th day of July, 2007 and on this Court issued practice directions which is published as Government Notice No.98 of 2007 dated 5th July, 2007. The Chief Electoral Commissioner was made 2nd Defendant/Respondent and was represented by the learned Attorney General and Minister of Justice. He later sought the consolidation of the two Motions — to which the Court gave its consent on the 26th July 2007. On the 24th day of July 2007, the three counsel for the Plaintiffs/Applicants and those of the 1st and 2nd Defendant/Respondent respectively signed a memorandum on agreed issues to be tried by the Court. It reads as follows;

"Whether or not the Defendant or Respondent as Vice President of the Republic of Sierra Leone is qualified to be nominated as the Presidential candidate for the Sierra Leone Peoples' Party (SLPP) having regard to sections 35 (4), 76 (1) (h), 76 (1) (b), 41 (d), 115 (2) and (4) and 17 (1) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.6 of 1991 Section 14 (1) of the Public Political Parties Act No. 3 of 2002 as amended and section 29 (2) (d) and 30 [p.106] (3) of the Electoral Laws Act No. 20/2002 as amended as well as section 41, 42 (1), 43 (a), 46 (1) and 75 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone aforesaid".

We accordingly gave our consent and heard arguments on the 27th July, 2007 and Counsel for Plaintiffs/Applicants presented additional case statement of the same date i.e. 27th July 2007.

The agreed issues involve the interplay of certain provision of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, 1991 — Act No.6 of 1991, the Political Parties Act 2002 the Electoral Laws Act 2002 Act No.3 of 2002 Act 2002. For the first Act, reliance is placed on section 35 (4), 76 (1) (h), 76 (1) (b); 41 (d), 115 (2) and (4), 171, 41, 42(1) 43(a), 46 (1) and 75; for the Second Act, section 41(1) and the Third Act, section 29 (2) (d) and 30 (3), Before I proceed to discuss the relationship of these provisions to the objection that the 1st Defendant/Respondent as Vice President is not qualified to be nominated for the candidature of President, I remind myself that our national constitution is our basic document and must be given purposive interpretation. It is not intended to be interpreted as an Act of Parliament or enactment and not all the canons of interpretation apply.

A second point, which ought to be made is that Parliament in enacting the constitution has tried as humanely possible to separate the three arms of government. Thus the provisions of the executive are to be found in chapter 5, those of the Legislature in chapter 6 and the Judiciary in chapter 7 of the Constitution. Its intention is to provide a separation of powers between those three arms, emphasizing the case of Hinds v The Queen (1977) AC 195 (Privy Council).

In the instant case, what we have to consider and determine is whether the 1st Defendant/Respondent Solomon E. Berewa as Vice President is precluded by the Constitution and/or by any enactment in force from being nominated as Presidential candidate in a Presidential election as contended by the Plaintiffs/Applicants. I think there is agreement that the nomination of 1st Defendant/Respondent is that of President nothing else; and what should primarily be borne in mind are the attributes, qualifications or disqualifications of that position.

Section 35 (4) provides that a political party cannot have a person who is the leader if he is not qualified to be elected as a Member of Parliament. With respect, this sub-section in it ordinary, natural and grammatical sense deals with an election of a Member of Parliament and has no relevance to that of a President. This section is a requirement which must be complied with by Political Parties and not as I understand it by someone seeking nomination as President.

The next section of the Constitution canvassed by the Plaintiffs/Applicants is 76 (1) (h) and 76 (1) (b) I propose to deal with section 76(1)(b) first which ought to be considered with section 115 (2) and section 171 (1) of the Constitution. The combined effect is that the 1st Defendant/Respondent is a Public Officer, his salary and allowances paid from the consolidated fund. It is conceded that the 1st Defendant/Respondent receives his remuneration from the consolidated fund and therefore qualifies as a Public Officer under section 76 (1) (b), but the consequence of such a situation is that a Vice President who is seeking election as a Member of Parliament would be disqualified for election as a Member of Parliament. This is not so when an incumbent seeks or is seeking for election of the office of President. And therefore the sub-section do no apply.

Regarding the contention under section 76(1)(h) of the Constitution, it mentions the office of Vice President, a position for the time being held by the 1st Defendant/Respondent. It is clear from the marginal notes and on normal, ordinary and literal construction of the section that the disqualification is meant and means election for membership of Parliament and not in the case before us of that of the office of president. It appears to me that there is a misconception on the part of the Plaintiffs/Applicants in their attempts to incorporate these sections meant for election for membership of Parliament, when their complaint is an objection to nomination of the office of President. Perhaps, such an exercise should have been justified if there is no express provision in the Constitution or any enactment dealing with qualifications for the office of President.

[p.108]

I now proceed to section 14 (1) of the Political Parties Act — Act No.3 of 2002 as amended by section 29 (2) (d) and 30 (3) of the Electoral Laws Act, No.2 of 2002.

These are set out in extenso:—

"Section 14 (1) reads — A Political Party shall not have as a founding member of its executive body, whether national or otherwise, a person who is not qualified to be elected as a Member of Parliament under the Constitution ".

"Section 29 (2) (d) — read: A person is not qualified to be nominated as a candidate in a Presidential election unless he is — (a) otherwise qualified to be elected as a Member of Parliament".

And

"Section 30 (3) — the nomination papers of Presidential candidate shall be delivered by the candidate to the Returning Officer on such day and at such time and place as may be prescribed by the Returning Officer by order published by Government Notice and shall be accompanied with two statutory declarations in the form prescribed in the fourth schedule made separately by the Presidential candidate designated by law for the office of Vice President",

On examination of these three sub-sections, I feel that there is prohibition that a Political Party shall not have as a foundling member a leader of a Political Party, who is not qualified to be elected as a Member of Parliament under the Constitution. In my view this is an internal matter for the Political Party concerned and there is no evidence before us that there is any breach of the provision. Instead, I take judicial notice of the fact that the authorized authority, the Political Parties Commission, has registered the Party of the 1st Defendant/Respondent. In addition the disqualification is not in respect of the office of the President, but that of a Member of Parliament.

As regards, section 29 (2) of the Electoral Laws Act, it is the same as section 41 (d) of the National Constitution, which I will deal with later. The difference is that the Electoral Laws Act talks about nominating of a candidate in Presidential election and the National Constitution refers to electing of President. I take nomination as a step before election and they both relate to Presidential election.

Sub-section 30 (3) of the Electoral Laws Act — Act No.2 of 2002 is also cited to support the objection of the Plaintiffs/Applicants and I have examined it and I find it harmless and irrelevant to the issue before us. It is a requirement that must accompany the form prescribed under section 30(1) of the Act. Its rightful place is with section 41 of the Constitution which deals with the qualification of the· President.

I have earlier in this ruling mentioned the purposive approach and the literal approach, assigning the former to the interpretation of a written Constitution as ours. The latter rule of interpretation is that the intention of Parliament must be found in the ordinary and natural meaning of the words used. If those words interpreted literally, are capable of alterative meanings, the literal rule clearly cannot be applied. I find on analysis of the section discussed above the words used are capable of only one literal meaning, thus this meaning must be applied even if it appears unlikely.

Furthermore, it must be remembered that no two Constitutions are the same, hence their interpretations must to that extent also differ and in interpreting the provisions of our national Constitution, I have and I must not put any gloss or interpretation from any other Constitution or Statute. I remind myself also that similar provision in other Constitutions or Statutes are only of persuasive effect arid in no way binding on our courts. In this respect, I refer to sub-section 122 of the Constitution, which among other things provides that the Supreme Court may, while treating its own previous decisions as normally binding, depart from previous decisions, when it appears right so to do. I caution Counsel that technical objection on Constitutional matter must be available as much as possible and it is discouraged by the Court. This brings me to the other section of the National Constitution relied upon by the Plaintiffs/Applicants — namely sections 41, 42(1), 43 (a), 46 (1) and 75. It is beyond any shadow of doubt that when the 1st Defendant/Respondent presented his nomination form on the 7th July 2007, he satisfied himself that he had fulfilled the tests for qualifications for the office, as President, under sections 41, 42 (1) and 43 (a).

This is evidenced in writing by the form prescribed in the Third Schedule to the Electoral Laws Act and the two statutory declarations in the form prescribed in the Fourth Schedule to the same Act see section 30 of the Act. It is also in compliance with section 42 (1) of the National Constitution as he was nominated by his political party. Furthermore, the National Electoral Commission by power vested on it had declared a date for nomination and invitation for President in compliance with sections 43 and 49 of the Constitutions as well as section 28 of the Electoral Laws Act 2002 — Act No.2 of 2002. These sections pertain to a Presidential election and are to my mind clear, plain and unambiguous. They are in express terms and must prevail over any ingenious attempt to override them by analogous Constitutional or Statutory Provisions dealing with another office or establishment in the Constitution. They are sections dealing with election of President simpliciter unlike sections 35(4), 76(1)(h), 76(1)(b) of the Constitution which are applicable to the election of Membership of Parliament.

Reference is also made to section 46 (1) and 75 of the Constitution. I don't find any useful help or use of the sub-section 46(1) as it has no relevance to the election of a President. It isa caveat that no President must hold office for more than two terms of five years each whether or not the terms are consecutive. The fact that an incumbent sought such an office without an objection is not a precedent to be followed or released for a sitting Vice president, who is seeking office as President. Such reference should be deprecated I will ignore it

Last but not least is the reference to section 75 of the Constitution, which deals with qualification for membership of Parliament. It application is that it is subject to section 76 which deals with disqualification of Members of Parliament. My earlier argument on section 76 (1) (h) and section 76 (1) (b) apply and is not relevant to the issue before us.

[p.111]

In the circumstance and for the above reasons, I. find that 1st Defendant/Respondent's nomination is valid and I so hold.

Both Motions are accordingly dismissed with Costs

JUSTICE U.H. TEJAN-JALLOH, JSC

[p.112-114]

SEMEGA-JANNEH JSC

Again, this court has to deal with a matter of great constitutional significance, and for this reasons members of the panel feel obliged to contribute some insights in individual Ruling. I have had the privilege of reading in draft the lead Judgment by my learned brother, Or Ade Renner-Thomas, Chief Justice. With characteristic insight and erudition he dealt with the issues of these suits. I am in agreement with him in almost all his conclusions especially the final and deciding conclusion. In particular, I need to empress my agreement with his treatment of the statutory declarations made pursuant to subsection (3) of section 30 of the Electoral laws Act, 2002, submitted to the Returning Office by the 2nd Defendant — Solomon Ekuma Berewa — in relation to section 76 of the Constitution 1991. However, I am of the [p.115] considered view that since the Constitution, 1991, contains the qualifications in respect of Members of Parliament (see sections 75 and 76) and that of the Speaker (see section 79 subsections (1) and (3), not to mention lesser offices, it is preferred that the disqualifications for the Office of the President be given the status of being included in the Constitution, 1991.

Let me now proceed with my Ruling.

Suit numbered 1/2007 and suit numbered 2/2007 were both filed on the 16th July 2007. On the 26th July, the two actions, on the application of the Electoral Commissioner, 2nd Defendant in both actions, were consolidated by this court and suit 1/2007 made the lead action.

When the consolidated suits came up for hearing on the 27th July 2007, this court deemed it unnecessary to further hear from the Electoral Commission and relieved her from further participation.

For convenience and the purposes of the consolidated actions, the court, on the 27th July 2007, decided that the Plaintiff in suit 1/2007 is to be referred to as the "1st Plaintiff" and the Plaintiff in suit 2/2007 as the "2nd Plaintiff" and the 1st Defendant and the 2nd Defendant being so designated in suits 1/2007 and 2/2007 respectively to retain the same respectively in the consolidated actions.

Pursuant to the court's Order of the 24th July 2007, the Parties filed a Memorandum on Agreed Issues on the 24th July 2007. The Memorandum deals with a one issue and is, for ease of reference, reproduced as follows:

".....Whether or not the 1st Defendant! Respondent as Vice President of the Republic of Sierra Leone is qualified to be nominated as the presidential candidate for the Sierra Leone [p.116] People's Party (SLPP) having regard to sections 35(4), 76(1) (b), 41(d), 115(2), and (4) and 171(1) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, Act No. 6, of, 1991, section 14(1) of the Political Parties Act No. 3, of 2002, as amended and section 29(2) (d) and 30(3) of the Electoral Laws Act, No. 2 of 2002 as amended as well as section 41, 42(1), 43(a), 46(1) and 75 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, aforesaid",

The respective cases of the Defendants and the arguments of their respective counsel are very similar, if not the same, and, as for the objective of the respective suits, they can be said to be identical. I will deal with this matters raised without reference to any particular counsel except instances I deem appropriate.

The suits are brought in response to the Government Notice given pursuant to subsection (2) of section 32 of the Electoral Laws Acts, 2002, which provides:

"(2) The Government Notice referred to in subsection (1) shall direct that any citizen of Sierra Leone may lodge an objection, if any against the nomination of the Presidential candidate but that objection shall be lodge with the Supreme Court within seven days of the publication of the Government Notice",

The suits being based on an objection, it is appropriate that the Originating Notice of Motion should contain on its face or body the distinct ground or grounds of the wording in subsection (4) of section 32 which states:

"(4) Where the Supreme Court upholds on objection against any nomination, it shall declare the Presidential candidate concerned to be disqualified from contesting the presidential election".

[p.117]

The Originating Notice of Motion in suit 1/2007 contains several declaratory reliefs that could have been appropriately framed as the grounds of the objection followed by a clear and concise statement of the obvious relief being sought. The Originating Notice of Motion in suit 2/2007 is well framed even though it might have been better to have the ground of objection in a separate paragraph from the relief being sought.

Let me now proceed to deal with the contention of counsel that the nomination of the 1st Defendant — Solomon Ekuma Berewa — as a Presidential candidate is inconsistent with the various statutory provisions set out in the Memorandum.

Section 14(1) of the Political Parties Act, 2002, provides that:

"14(1) A political party should not have as a founding member or a leader of the party or a member of its executive body, whether national or otherwise, a person who is not qualified to be elected as a Member of Parliament under the Constitution".

Clearly, the subsection deals with the qualification of a founding member, a leader and a member of the executive of a political party. There is absolutely nothing in it germane or relevant or related to the issue in the Memorandum and, more significantly, to section 32, particularly, subsection 2 of the Electoral Laws Act, 2002 from which the consolidated suits derived. Subsection (4) of section 35 of the Constitution 1991 states:

"(4) No political party shall have as a leader a person who is not qualified to be elected as a Member of Parliament".

The subsection deals executively with the qualification of a leader of a political party.

This subsection in effect is re-enacted in subsection (1) of section 14 of the Political Parties Act, 2002. What I have said in respect of subsection (1) of section 14 is equally correct and applicable to subsection (4) of section 35 of the Constitution 1991.

[p.118]

Both subsections prohibit a political party having a party leader who is not qualified to be a Member of Parliament. The subsections and the argument of counsel are irrelevant to the issue and ordinarily ought not to be entertained. However by the time I conclude this Ruling I expect some light to be shed on these subsections and to engender a better understanding of the meaning of the phrase "a person who is not qualified to be elected as a Member of Parliament".

In my considered view, to resolve the issue whether the 1st Defendant — Solomon Ekuma Berewa - is qualified to be nominated as the Presidential candidate of the Sierra Leone People's Party (SLPP), the requisite qualifications for the Office of President have to be identified and determined. In the Constitution 1991, section 41 provides the qualifications for Office of President for the Republic of Sierra Leone as follows:

"41 No person shall be qualified for election as President unless be—

(a) is a citizen of Sierra Leone;

(b) is a member of a political party;

(c) has attained the age of forty years; and

(d) is otherwise qualified to be elected as a Member of Parliament.

(emphasis added)

Section 41 (b) requires that the qualifications for Membership of Parliament be looked at. The qualifications are found in section 75 of the Constitution, 1991, and it provides:

"75. Subject to the provisions of section 76, any person who—

(a) is a citizen of Sierra Leone (otherwise than by naturalization); and

(b) has attained the age of twenty-one years; and

(c) is an elector whose name is on a register of electors under the Franchise And Electoral Registration Act; and

[p.119]

(d) is able to speak and to read the English language with a degree of proficiency sufficient to enable him to take an active part in the proceedings of Parliament.

shall be qualified for election as such a Member of Parliament.

Provided that a person who becomes a citizen of Sierra Leone by registration by law shall not be qualified for election as such a Member of Parliament or any local authority unless he shall have resided continuously in Sierra Leone for twenty-five years after such registration or shall have served in the Civil or Regular Armed Services of Sierra Leone for a continuous period of twenty-five years"

A comparison of section 41 and section 75 shows that there are some qualifications in section 75 that are not in section 41 and some that are common in both sections but with minor differences either by the presence of qualifying words or in the figures. By virtue of section 41 (d) one is obliged to include in the qualifications of section 41 the qualifications in section 75 that are not present in section 41 and rationalise the said minor differences. The result is section 75(c), (d) and the Proviso are or become part of the qualifications for the Office of President. Section 41 (a) in effect is qualified by the phrase "otherwise than by naturalization" and section 75(b) the age of (21) twenty-one years, being lesser, is subsumed in the greater figure of forty years required in section 41 (c).

In the result the requisite qualifications for the Office of the President of the Republic of Sierra Leone are that the person

1. is a citizen of Sierra Leone (otherwise than by naturalization);

2. is a member of a political party

3. has attained the age of forty years

[p.120]

4. is an elector who name is on a register of elections under the Franchise and Electoral Registration Act, 1961, or under any Act of Parliament amending or replacing that Act; and

5. is able to speak and to read the English language with a degree of proficiency sufficient to enable him to take an active part in the proceedings of Parliament

Provided that a person who becomes a citizen of Sierra Leone by registration by law shall not be qualified for election as President unless he shall have resided continuously in Sierra Leone for twenty-five years after such registration or shall have served in the civil or regular Armed services of Sierra Leone for a continuous period of twenty-five years.

The word "otherwise" in section 41 (d) is referable to the preceding clauses, that is, sections 41 (a) (b) and (c) and, in my view, it means" other than" the said preceding clauses. Subsection (2) of Section 29 of the Electoral laws Act 2002, is a re-enactment, in all material particulars, of section 41 of the Constitution. Subsection (2) (d) of section 29 contains the phrase "otherwise qualified to be elected as a Member of Parliament" which is also contained in section 41 (d) of the Constitution. It is telling to note that the word "otherwise as contained in the phrase only appears in section 41 (d) of the Constitution, 1991, and subsection 29 (2) (d) of the Electoral Laws Act, 2002, and in virtually all other cases where possession of the qualifications for Membership of Parliament is required, whether phrased in positive or negative terms, there is a noticeable of the word "otherwise". In my view, there is a reason for this, and the reason, clearly, is the contextual absence of the preceding clauses or requirements contained in both section 41 (a) (b) and (c) of the Constitution, 1991, and subsection 29 (2) (a) and (c) of the Electoral laws Act, 2002. The Oxford Advanced Learner's Dictionary Of Current English defines "Otherwise" and the Shorter Oxford English Dictionary defines "Otherwise", among others, - "(1) in my view the definitions given are not inconsistent with the interpretation above, and are supportive.

A serous flash point of dispute are subsections 76 (1) (b) which provides:

[p.121]

"76 (1) No person shall be qualified for election as a Member of Parliament

(b) if he is a member of any Commission established under the Constitution or a member of the Armed forces of the Republic, or a public officer, or an employee of a public corporation established by an Act of Parliament, or has been such a member, officer or employee within twelve months prior to the date on which he seeks to be elected to Parliament;

(emphasis added)

(h) if he is for the time being the President, the Vice President, a Minister or a Deputy Minister or a Deputy Minister under the provisions of this Constitution"

The inclusion of section 115 (2) and (4) and 171 (1) of the Constitution, 1991, in the Plaintiffs' case is clearly for the purpose of establishing that the office of the Vice President is a public office and that the 1st Defendant — Solomon Ekuma Berewa — is a public officer. Subsection (4) shows the officer whose salaries are charged to the Consolidated Fund by virtue of subsection 2 and the list includes the President, Vice President, Justices and Judges of the Superior Courts among others. In section 171 (1) "public office" is defined as including an office the emoluments attaching to which are paid directly from the Consolidated Fund or directly out of moneys provided by Parliament and "public officer" is defined as a person holding or acting in a public office.

I am of the firm view that the persons, for the time being, holding the offices mentioned in section 76 (1) (b) are not included in section 76 (1) (h) for the simple reason that it is unnecessary to include them twice over for the same purpose. More significantly section 171 (3) which states:

"(3) In this Constitution unless otherwise empressly provided "the public service" includes service in the office of Chief Justice, a Justice of the Supreme Court, Justice of Appeal, Judge of the High [p.122] Court or of the former Supreme Court or in the office of a Judge of any other court established by Parliament being an office the emoluments attaching to which are paid out of the Consolidated Fund or any other public fund of Sierra Leone, and service in the office of a member of the Sierra Leone Police Force.

(emphasis added)

Includes certain categories of officers not named in section 76 (1) (b). And section 171 (4) which states:

"(4) in this Constitution "the public service" does not include service in the office of President, Vice President, Speaker, Minister, Deputy Minister, Attorney-General an Minister of Justice, Deputy Speaker, Member of Parliament, or of any member of any Commission established by this Constitution, or any member of any Council, board, panel, Committee or other similar body (whether incorporated or not) established by or under any law, or in the office of the Paramount Chief, Chiefdom, Councilor or member of a Local Court"

(emphasis added)

Includes offices named in section 76 (1) (h). All offices not included in "the public service" are broadly political appointments, short term appointments and of bodies not being part of the general administration of Government. In my view, the proper persons to be included in "public office" in section 76(1)(b) are those named in section 171 (3) and not those named in section 171 (4). The President, the Vice President, a Minister or Deputy Minister — political appointees — need not be disqualified from membership of Parliament for twelve months after leaving office but only during their respective tenure in office. In my Judgment, this was the clear intention of the Legislature and, in any [p.123] event, whether the Vice President is included in the phrase "public office" in section 76 (1) (b) or not, it has no impact or effect on the nomination of the 1st Defendant Solomon Ekuma Berewa's — nomination for the forth coming Presidential election scheduled for the 11th August, 2007, and I so told.

It is clear even from a cursory reading of sections 75 and 76 of the Constitution, 1991, that section 76 consists of disqualifications for Membership of Parliament in contrast to section 75 which contains the qualifications for Membership of Parliament. The side notes to section 75 and 76 makes it even clearer. In addition to that, the word "disqualification" is used in the Proviso" in subsection (2) and the word "disqualified" is used in subsections (4) and (5) of section 76. All these are clear indications that section 76 does not form or become part of the qualifications for Membership of Parliament. "Disqualification" is distinct from qualification; there cannot be a disqualification where there is no qualification;

Counsel for the respective plaintiffs by reason of section 75 of the Constitution, 1991, being subject to the provisions of section 76, in their arguments, import the provisions of section 75, thereby, erroneously making them qualifications for Membership of Parliament. Therein lies the mischief!! In my view the phrase "subject to the provisions of section 76" found in section 75 does not have the effect of importing the provisions of section 76 into section 75; the phrase simply means that a person shall be disqualified from standing for Parliamentary elections not withstanding that he possesses the qualifications to stand for such elections. Perhaps section 79 (1) which deals with the election of a Speaker can be illustrative of the point. For clarity and ease of reference, the section is reproduced hereunder:

"79 (1) the Speaker of Parliament shall be elected by Members of Parliament from among person who are Members of Parliament or are qualified to be elected as such and who are qualified to be appointed Judges of the Superior Courts of Judicature or have held such office.

Provided that a person shall be eligible for election as Speaker of Parliament not withstanding that such person is a public officer or a Judge of the court, a Justice of the Court of Appeal or a Justice of the Supreme Court and such person, if elected, shall retire from the public service on the day of his election with full benefits"

The public officer or Judge or Justice of the Superior Courts who is elected Speaker is elected only by reason of the fact that he possesses the qualifications for Membership of Parliament as contained in section 75 of the constitution, 1991, as the disqualification (s) is accordingly removed. A public officer or Justice of the Superior Courts who lacks the qualifications contained in section 75 cannot be elected speaker even where the disqualification is removed because he or she would not be "qualified to be elected as such" Member of Parliament. Non Sierra Leonean's public officers or Judges or Justices on technical assistance are perhaps, perfect examples.

The requirement that the public office or Judge or Justice of the Superior Courts who is elected Speaker shall resign goes, not to the removal of a disqualification but to the separation powers. It is the same reason — separation of powers — that section 76 (1) (h) disqualifies the President, the Vice President, a Minister or Deputy Minister (Members of the Executive) from standing for parliamentary elections whilst in office.

It seems to me there are no provisions for disqualifications in respect of the Office of the President (Vice President) unlike Membership of Parliament; and appropriate provisions of section 76 of the Constitution, 1991, have not been made applicable to section 41. This I regard as a wide lacuna in the Constitution, 1991, and needs to be plugged or remedied.

In the premises I hold and declare that the 1st Defendant — Solomon Ekuma Berewa — is not disqualified from contesting the forth coming Presidential election scheduled for the 11th August, 2007.

[p.125]

Accordingly, I hereby dismiss both suits with costs.

COUNSEL: A.F. SERRY-KAMAL ESQ AND E.E.C SHEAR-MOSES.ESQ AND MS. V.M. SOLOMON FOR APPELLANT

PATRICK LAMBERT ESQ FOR RESPONDENT

SEMEGA-JANNEH J.S.C.

The background to the case is as follows: On the 11th October 1996, Mohson Tarraf took out an insurance through an Insurance broker, Roland J. Hamilton. The same date Mr. Tarraf filled the proposal forms (Exhibits "G1" and "G2") of the National Insurance Company Limited, (the N.I.C.) paid the premium and was issued with a receipt (Exhibit "A") by Mr. Hamilton in these terms

[p.127]

"RECEIPT

I Raland J. Hamilton RJH Insurance Broker, 139 Circular Road, Freetown receive the sum of USD 460.00 (Four Hundred And Sixty Dollars Being overseas Insurance (Fire And Burglary) Premium for the period 11th October 1996 to 11th October 1997 that was duty signed".

The insurance was for stock in trade against burglary and fire. Nothing happened until on the 2nd December when Mr. Mohson was handed the Cover Note (Exhibit "B") by Mr. Hamilton. Mr. Tarraf retained the Cover Note. Again nothing happened until the night of the 26th May 1996 at about 2 a.m. when Mr. Tarraf received a phone call that his store, Ashobi store, has been burgled. He visited the store on the 27th May 2'007 and found it completely empty. On the 6th October 1997, Mr. Tarraf reported the matter to the police and was subsequently issued with a report (Exhibits "C"). He tried contacting Mr. Hamilton and then the N.I.C without success. He eventually made a claim on the N.I.C. through his solicitors who wrote three letters (Exhibits D1, D2 and D3) to the N.I.C and a reply (Exhibit "E") was received. The reply was not satisfactory to Mr. Tarraf and, as a result, a writ was caused to issue in which Mr. Tarraf claims:

1. The sum of US$ 40,000/00

2. Interest on the said sum of US$ 40,000/00 at such rate as the court thinks fit from the 21st day of May 1997 to the date of Judgment

3. Further or other relief

4. Cost

The insured value of the goods in the burglary proposal form (Exhibit G1) is US$ 40,000/00.

[p.128]

In the High Court, the matter was heard by AB. Strange J (as he then was) and he, after considering the evidence, held in his Judgment that Mr. Tarraf was bound by the terms of the Cover Note. He further held that N.I.C led no evidence to show that when the peril occurred there was a civil war which directly or indirectly caused the loss and, for this reason, he further held that the N.I.C could not avail themselves of the Exclusion Clause in the Cover Note. He also held that the award should be limited to US $ 20,000/00. In the result, he gave Judgment to Mr. Tarraf as follows:

A. Loss suffered: US$ 20,000/00 or its equivalent in Leones at the rate of exchange effective on the date of judgment.

B. Rate of Interest at 12% (Twelve Percent) as from 26th November 1997 to date of Judgment

C. Defendants (N. I. C) to pay the costs of the action, such costs to be taxed.

(bracketed initials provided)

Against this Judgment the N.I.G filed a Notice of Appeal to the Court of Appeal on grounds as follows:

1. That the learned trial Judge erred in finding that though the cover note was a contract between the plaintiff (Mr. Tarraf) and Defendant the exclusion clause was not part of the contract and so the Defendant cannot rely on the said exclusion clause (bracketed words added)

2. The learned trial Judge failed to consider the "War and Civil War Exclusion Clause" in the circumstance of 26th May 1997

3. The Learned trial Judge failed to consider adequately or at all the defendant's documentary evidence tendered in court and evidence [p.128] on behalf of the defendant but preferred to rely on the oral evidence of the plaintiff.

4. The learned trial judge erred in ordering the exchange rate to be as at the date of Judgment.

5. The trial Judge had no basis for ordering 12% percent in foreign currency"

The Court of Appeal, after hearing exhaustive arguments of counsel for the N.I.C and Mr. Tarraf, gave judgment, delivered by S.C.E. Warne, JSC (as he then was). in favour of Mr. Tarraf, varying the award of US $ 20,000/00 to US $ 40,000/00 and ordering that: .

1. The Appellant (the N.I.C) shall pay the Respondent (Mr. Tarraf) the sum of USD 40,000/00 being insurance claim. (bracketed words added)

2. The Appellants shall pay the Respondent interest at the rate of 12% per annum, from the date of the Judgment delivered on the 7th day of April 2000.

3. The Appellants shall pay the costs occasioned by this appeal and the costs below to the Respondent.

Clearly the N.I.C (the Appellant herein) was dissatisfied with the Judgment and filed a Notice of Appeal on grounds (without the particulars) as follows

1. The learned Justices erred in holding that the proposal forms were the contract of insurance but failed to state the terms and conditions shown

2. The learned Justices erred in law and in fact by ignoring the cover note as a contract between the appellants and the respondent.

[p.130]

3. The learned Justices were mistaken in holding that there was no evidence of any of the event in the exclusion clause and went on to say there was no evidence of war or a civil war when the matter concerned usurped power.

4. The learned Justices failed to consider whether the Appellants were agents for an overseas insurer and went on to hold that the receipt was not with anything when in fact it was the basis of the contract and contains all the necessary elements.

5. The learned Justices erred in ignoring the terms and conditions in the Cover Note as those of the contract of insurance between the Appellants and Respondent.

6. The learned Justices erred in law in varying the award from US $ 40,000/00 to US $ 20,000/00 when there was no notice for variation of Appeal before them.

7. The learned Justices failed to state on what evidence they decided on the figure of US $40,000/00.

8. The learned Justice erred in Law in arbitrarily awarding interest at 12% without any evidence of the rate of interest applicable in the case of foreign currency having held that the interest being claimed was on foreign currency.

The facts of the case are not in dispute and the decision of the trial Judge did not turn on his belief or disbelief of the witnesses. If the case turns on the veracity of the witnesses the appellate court should not lightly reject the trial court's assessment of the evidence. The appellate court should always bear in mind the advantage of the trial court in hearing and seeing the witnesses and watching their demeanour. See Powell Vs Stratham Manor Nursing Home (1935) AC 243 at 249-251. The appellate court should therefore only set aside the Judgment if the Appellant satisfies the court that the decision is wrong and should have gone the [p.131] other away. But where the case turns not on belief in the witnesses but on the inferences to be drawn from the fact and/or documents then the appellate court is in as good a position as the trial court. Thus the Court of Appeal was in order when after quoting LINDLEY MR. in Coghlam Vs Curberland (1898)1 ON 204, it proceeded to review the materials before it and drawing its own inferences. Like the Court of Appeal, I will proceed on the basis of the principles restated above.

On the basis of the Grounds of Appeal, I draw up for consideration the following issues.

1.Was there a contract of insurance between Mr. Tarraf and the N.I.C? If so what was the nature of the insurance

2. What is the status and effect of the Cover Note?

3. Is Mr. Tarraf entitle to judgment and if so, on what terms;

Counsel for N.I.C. E.E.C. Shear-Moses Esq., in oral argument contends that the contract is one of overseas insurance between Mr. Tarraf and a disclosed principal, Harris and Dixon Insurance Brokers, and the N.I.C being mere agents. I find the contention bemusing and untenable. The contention cannot find support in the Defence filed in the trial court. The relevant paragraphs 3 and 4 of the Defence state:

"3 In answer to paragraph 3 of the statement of claim the Defendants through their reinsurers issued Cover Note No. TR 963063 G to cover fire and burglary/ theft and the latter covered loss of US$ 20,000/00 and not US$ 40,000/00 as alleged. Further the said Cover Note is subject to certain terms and conditions, limitations, exclusions and warranties"

"4 the Defendants deny the allegations contained in paragraph 5 of the Statement of Claim and will state further that it is not responsible for payment of the sum of US $ 40, 000/00 or at alias the Cover Note [p.132] issued to the Plaintiff indemnifies the Defendants from any liabilities under the War and Civil War Exclusion Clause (MMA 464). Further the Plaintiff is fully aware of the indemnity on the part of the Defendants 11.

It seems to me, notwithstanding the poor preparation of the Defense, that the N.I.C was averring an insurance between themselves and Mr. Tarraf, and a reinsurance cover of their risk in the unlying Insurance. This is so because they aver to have issued the Cover Note through their insurers and that the Cover Note will indemnify them of any liabilities under the War and Civil War Exclusion Clause. If they were agents for Harris and Dixon (disclosed principals) how could they be indemnified under the Cover Note? Surely they expect indemnification because they were reinsured. It is noteworthy that ground 2 of the Grounds of Appeal refers to the Cover Note as a contract between the N.I.C and Mr. Tarraf.

In my view, overseas insurance, reinsurance and local insurance are different. With overseas insurance the contract is with an insurer overseas, usually transacted through a local insurer or broker who as agent places the risk with the overseas insurer. Reinsurance involves the insurer taking out insurance to cover the risk or part thereof that it/he/she, as the case maybe, has undertaken to cover in another insurance. E.R. IVAMY, in his authorative book: Personal Accident, life and Other Insurance, at page 305, discussing reinsurance, has this to say:

"The business of insurance is not restricted to the making of contract of insurance between the insurer and the outside would.

Both of the contracting parties may be insurers by profession, the object of the contract being to indemnify the insurers taking the place of the assured in an ordinary contract against loss which they themselves sustain in their capacity as insurers under another contract of insurance.

Where there is the case, the contract is termed a contract of reinsurance".

[p.133]

I will add that a contract of re-insurance can be made within the same country or town and does not have to involve a foreign based insurer/re-insurer.

The learned writer of Chitty on Contract: specific contracts 27th edition, para 39-081, at page 937, dealing with the general characteristics of reinsurance has this to say:

"An insurer may take out insurance in respect of the risk covered by the original insurance. Such a. contract of reinsurance is quite separate from the underlying contract of insurance, so that there is no privities of contract between the insured and the reinsurer, though the contract of reinsurance will often provide (by the use of general words such as "all terms, clauses and conditions as original") for the terms and conditions of the underlying insurance to be incorporated into the reinsurance".

The local insurance is the same as the ordinary insurance which is a contract between the insurer and the insured and the transaction is carried out within the same country.

I have gone to this length in dealing or treating the above different insurances because I have formed the view that the. N.J.C is either confused as to the purposes and functions of the said insurances or that they feel constrained by the manner the transaction with Mr. Tarraf was conducted.

FORMATION

Mr. Tarraf filled the proposal forms and duly paid the premium to the insurance brokers. It has not been specifically stated in the evidence of the status of the insurance brokers and as to whether they were agents of Mr. Tarraf or the N.I.C even though, ordinarily; the brokers are the agents of the insured. In Chitty on contract: specific contracts, supra, paragraph 39-037, at page 908, the learned authors in describing the status and role of the brokers, has this to say:

[p.134]

"BROKER. Persons seeking insurance frequently engage brokers, whose services are usually remunerated on commission basis by the insurer but who nonetheless are agents of the assured, though they may act for the insurer as well, in which case conflicts of interest may well arise. The broker must act with reasonable care and skill, and if for example, he fails to arrange a contract of insurance as instructed, it is no defence that the insurer could have escaped liability if the contract had been made, if as a matter of business the insurer would not have refused payment".

And in Halsbury's Laws of England, third edition, paragraph 382, at page 201, the learned authors have this to say as regards insurance brokers and insurance agent:

"If a person, wishing to obtain insurance of a non-marine character employs an insurance broker as distinct from going direct to the insurers or their agents, the broker is his agent and the ordinary law of agency governs the responsibility of the person for the acts and omissions of the broker. If negotiations for such insurance are conducted on behalf of the insurers by an insurance agent, the responsibility of the insurers for the act and omissions of the agent is similarly governed by the general law of agency"

Mr. Tarraf, in his evidence in chief at page 41 of the record, states that when he had the transaction with Rowland J. Hamilton, whom he knew as an insurance broker, he "asked him to arrange for the insurance of the goods" in his store. It appears from the evidence that the brokers were agents of Mr.

Tarraf in respect of the insurance. (See page 43 of the record — evidence of Mr. Tarraf in cross examination). This may not affect the outcome. It is not in dispute that the insurance premium was paid and the proposal forms filled by Mr. Tarraf and received by the N.I.C.

After receipt of the proposal forms and the premium, the insurers ordinarily should have provided a preliminary protection by way of a cover note but this was not done. It was only on or about the 2nd December 1996 that Mr. Tarraf was issued with the Cover Note – Exhibit "B" and it was for a fixed period covering 12 months from the 11th October 1996; the exact period that Mr. Tarraf required an insurance cover for.

It is the contention of counselor for Mr. Tarraf that the Cover Note does not affect Mr. Tarraf's insurance with the N.I.C. as the Cover Note is effected by the N.I.C with Harris and Dixon Insurance Brokers for their benefit in providing cover for their risk in the underlying insurance between Mr. Tarraf and the N.I.C. I am in agreement with counsel in so far as the Cover Note is a cover for the risks undertaken by the N.I.C. in the underlying insurance. I will deal with issue of the Cover Note shortly in the Judgment.

The contract of insurance came into effect when the proposal forms were filled and the premium paid and the forms were handed over to and accepted, without demur or qualification, by Mr. Tarraf. The proposal forms, even though being the forms of the N.I.C. constitute an offer from Mr. Tarraf. In the result there was offer, Consideration and acceptance.

THE COVER NOTE

"Once the contract is complete the insurer is bound to issue and the proposer to accept a policy in accordance with the stipulations of the proposal". See Halsbury, supra, para 389, page 206. A proposal form usually incorporates the usual terms and conditions of the insurer. The same applies to a cover note: it normally incorporates the terms and conditions of the insurer's standard form of policy either by direct reference or by reference to the signed proposal which usually incorporates the standard forms. "As in contract generally, one person may be taken to have contracted on terms of which he was only constructively aware, and generally the insurer's proposal form, which the assured uses to give the insurer particulars of the risk, contains express reference to the [p.136] insurer's terms and conditions". See Chitty on Contract; specific contracts supra, para 39-039, at page 910. In the instant case, the N.I.C. issued the Cover Note to Mr. Tarraf in place of a policy. Normally, a cover note gives interim protection or insurance pending the issuance of a policy; it is usually for a short duration, and is a contract in its own right, independent of the policy. In respect of the Cover Note, however, the period is not interim at all but covers the entire period that Mr. Tarraf wanted the insurance to cover as reflected in the receipt Exhibit A, also at page 47 of the record and paragraph 3 of the statement of claim, at page 2. In the peculiar circumstances of the instant case, counsel for Mr. Tarraf aptly described the insurance cover as "cover note/insurance policy".

The counsel for Mr. Tarraf contends that the Cover Note — Exhibit 'B' — is in fact reinsurance cover issued by Harris & Dixon Insurance Brokers Limited to the N.I.C and that the same is admitted by the N.I.C in the statement of Defence. I agree with Counsel. However, it is not in dispute that Mr. Tarraf received the Cover Note on or about the 2nd December 1996 (see page 3 of the record,) and continued to have it in his possession and that he never complained about or protested against it (see page 43 the evidence of Mr. Tarraf under cross- examination). It seems very clear to me that Mr. Tarraf adopted and accepted the Cover Note as the insurance cover note/insurance policy as representing the contract of insurance which reflect the terms and conditions. I am further confirmed in this view by the letters (Exhibits 'D1', 'D2' and 'D3') that emanated from Mr. Tarraf's solicitor, particularly Exhibit D2 — the letter dated the 26th November 1997 and predicated with the phrase "Without prejudice". The letters were tendered in evidence by Mr. Tarraf.

The number given to the cover note referred to in the letters is the, same and the correct number of the Cover Note tendered in evidence and pleaded in the Statement of Defence. The number given to the Cover Note in paragraph 3 of the Statement of Claim, deleted by amendment, is not the actual number; the actual number is: (C/N No.) TR963063 G shown clearly at the top of the front page and the second page of the Cover Note — Exhibit "B". The number deleted is found in the second page and it incorporates the actual number; and given its placing, it [p.137] obviously serves another purpose. In any event, I am in agreement with the trial judge in that, I am of the view, its deletion is of no consequence in the trial. Even with the deletion of the number by way of an amendment, what cover note is being referred to in paragraph 3 of the statement of Defence in the context of the pleadings and evidence if not the Cover Note — Exhibit 'B' — tendered in evidence? The answer, in my view, is non other than Exhibit 'B'.

The period of cover in the Cover Note coincides with the period of cover required by Mr. Tarraf. It contains several terms and conditions relevant to the type of insurance in issue and the sum insured. The Cover Note was received and retained without protest or complaint. Even if it can be argued that Mr. Tarraf did not adopt or accept the Cover Note I am of the firm view that he ought to be deemed, in the circumstances, to have accepted the Cover Note. I have already held that the Cover Note was issued to the N.I.C. as a protection cover of the risk which represents the insurable interest of the N.I.C. in the underlying or original insurance. In the circumstances of this case, I have no hesitation in holding that the terms and conditions of the Cover Note — Exhibit "B"— ought to be implied into the contract of insurance/oral policy "since, excepting marine insurance, an oral contract of insurance, though rare, is perfectly valid and may indeed also be described as a policy" See Chitty on Contract: specific contracts, para 39-001, at page 886; Re Norwich Equitable Fire (1887) 57 L.T. 341; Forsikringsaktieselsrabet National V Attorney General (1925) A.C. 639; and treat the Cover Note — Exhibit 'B' — as a policy. See Halsbury's Laws of England, supra, para: 395, at page 209; Re Norwich Equitable ire Assurance Society, Royal Insurance Co's Claim (1929) 1 Ch.262 at P. 269 per ROMER J; Forsikringsakt National (of Copenhagen) VA-G., (1925) A.C. 639, H.L., at p. 642 per Lord CAVE, C. And I, therefore, hold that the Cover Note forms a part of the contract of insurance between Mr. Tarraf and the N.I.C.

Since the Cover Note –Exhibit 'B' — is the operative policy, it is in order to consider the contention of counsel that it introduces new terms in the contract of insurance [p.138] that are not contained in the proposal form Exhibit "G1" — or by varying the terms of the proposal form.

The proposal form — Exhibit 'G' — does not seem to contain much terms, if at all. It ought to have contained the usual terms and conditions in the standard form of the N.I.C and this could have been done by "incorporation by reference" in the proposal form but this clearly was not done. What was done was to make the proposals and declaration contained in the proposal form the basis of the contract and, this is clear in the statement in the proposal form, I quote:

"I/We hereby declare that the above statements are true and complete and that I/We have not concealed anything material to be known to the company and I/We hereby agree that this Proposal and Declaration shall be the basis of the contract between me/us and National Insurance Company Limited."

The proposal form is dated 11th October 1996 and signed by the proposer, Mr. Tarraf. One may not be certain whether the terms and conditions contained in the Cover Note — Exhibit "B" — are the usual terms and conditions contained in the standard form of policy of the N.I.C. or not. But I am clear in my mind that the major terms and conditions in the Cover Note are glaringly absent in the proposal form, exhibit "G1", particularly the one in respect of 1st loss, in the sum of US$20,000-00, which is half the amount of the insured sum.

With the introduction of new terms into the contract, Mr. Tarraf clearly had the option to send it back (See Chitty on Contracts; general principles, Volume 1, 28th edition, para: 2-032, at p.104, under the rubric: ONE PARTY'S "USUAL CONDITIONS") unless he had committed to himself to taking it; if he did nothing, his tacit acquiescence by itself could probably not be construed as an approval. However, any positive step taken by which the insured recognizes, or seeks to enforce the policy, will amount to an affirmation or approval of it. See Baker V Yorkshire Fire and Life Assurance Co., (1892) 1 QB 144 at p. 145, per Lord COLFRIDGE, CJ; Newcastle Fire Insurance Co. V Macmorran & Co (1815), 3 [p.139] DOW 255, HL. The law or the issue is clearly stated in Halsbury's Laws of England, supra, para 390, at page 207, thus—

"In general, the policy amounts to a final indication by the insurers of the sense in which, if it operates at all as an acceptance the proposal is being accepted. If the proposer does not like it, he may send it back unless he has committed himself to taking it, if he does nothing, his tacit acquiescence by itself will probably not be construed as an approval; but any positive action by which he recognizes, or seeks to enforce, the policy will amount to an affirmation of it and once he has made such an affirmation, he cannot thereafter seek to set it aside". (Emphasis added)

The suggestions in Re Bradley and Essex and Suffolk Accident Indemnity Society, (1912) 1 KB 415 CA at p.430 per FARWELL, L.J. that the assured or insured can affirm the policy without being bound by the new terms seems, in my view, inconsistent with the authorities, namely, Macdonald V Law Union .Insurance Co. (1874), L.R. 9 QB 328; British Equitable Assurance Co. Ltd V Bailey, (1906) A-C 35 H.L; Dawsons Ltd V Bonnin (1922) 2 A.C. 413, H.L. I am incomplete agreement with the view expressed by MOULTON, L.J., in the same Re Bradley case, (1911-13) ALL ER (Reprint), at page 450 when he said ".....this is not a case in which the insured is disclaiming the policy as not being in accordance with that which he intended to enter into. He is himself claiming under the policy, and he cannot be allowed to claim under the policy and yet contend that he is not bound by its terms". This statement, in my view, accords more with the authorities and the law as expressed in the statement emphasized in the quotation above from Halsbury's Laws of England, supra. One should note that the issue in the Re Bradley's case, supra, did not turn on the said suggestions or statements.

Counsel for Mr. Tarraf places reliance on the case of Olley V. Marlborough Court Limited (1949) 1 KB 532. In my considered view the ratio decidendi of the Olley's case, a case of contract simpliciter, is distinguishable from and is in fact different from an insurance case such as the instant one. In the Re Bradley's case, the term [p.140] of the agreement was placed in the hotel room and the customer only knew of the term after he entered his room which was after the contract was made. In an insurance contract there is a relationship between the proposal form and the policy, and the assured had the option of rejecting the policy well before same usually well before the event insured against occurs. Mr. Tarraf clearly had the option of rejecting or affirming the Cover Note/Policy well before the event insured against. In short, the natures of the two contracts are significantly different.

Had Mr. Tarraf taken any positive action resulting in affirmation of the Cover Note/Policy? Yes; in my view he had. The letters — Exhibits "D1", "D2" and "D3" — constitute such action. A more significant action is this very suit. Clearly, the suit is based on the Cover Note/Policy as earlier discussed. See the Statement or Claim in its entirety with particular attention to paragraphs 3 and 4. In my judgment, Mr. Tarraf is bound by the terms and conditions of the Cover Note/Policy and is so hold.

WAR AND CIVIL WAR EXCLUSION CLAUSE

The War and Civil War Exclusion Clause provides as follows:

"Notwithstanding any thing to· the contrary contained herein this Policy does not cover loss or damage directly or indirectly occasioned by, happening through or in consequence of war, invasion, acts of foreign enemies, hostilities (whether war be declared or not), civil war, rebellion insurrection, military or usurped power or confiscation or nationalization or requisition or destruction of or damage to property by or under the order of any government or public or local authority".

The trial court was said by counsel, Mr. E.E.C. Shears-Moses, for N.I.C. in the court below to have held that the Exclusion Clause was not part of the contract (See page 94 of the record). The trial court never said such a thing. At page 67 of the record the learned judge, in respect of the Exclusion Clause, said "on the face of it, this is the peril against which this plaintiff effected the insurance. When the assured has proved a prima facie case of loss within the contract of [p.141] insurance, the insurers are entitled to show that the loss falls within the exception — Hurst V Evans (1917) 1KB 352. The burden of proving, that the loss was caused by an excepted peril lies upon, the insurers". He proceeded to review the case of: Total Broadhurst Lee Co V London and Lancashire Fire Insurance Co. (1908), The Times, May 21 and quoted Justice BINCHAM in his summing up to the Jury when he said inter alia “.....And, finally, you must remember that this is what is called an exception in the policy and it is for the insurers to satisfy you that the exception has which excuses them. They must not leave your minds in any reasonable doubt about it, because if they do, they may have not discharged the burden which is upon them". Then the trial judge expressed his own views thus: “The Insurers must produce affirmative evidence of facts supporting their contention, and such evidence, must be sufficient. If they fail to produce such evidence they have not discharged the onus of proof, and the assured, accordingly succeeds in his claim". The trial judge then reproduced the War and Civil War Exclusion Clause in the Policy/Cover Note and in reference to the CONTRA PROFERENTEM principle cited the case of Cornish Accident Insurance Co, (1889)23 QB D 453 per Lord Justice LINDLEY, at page 456, that—

".....in a case of real doubt, the policy ought to be construed most Strongly against the insurers; they frame the policy and insert the exceptions. But the principle ought only to be applied for the purpose of removing a doubt, not for the purpose of creating a doubt, or magnifying an ambiguity, when the circumstances of the case raise no real difficulty".

The trial Judge then went on to say "the defendants (the N.I.C.) rely on the above clause (meaning the Exclusion Clause) for exemption from liability; particularly civil war. The defendants led no evidence to show that when the peril occurred there was a civil war which directly or indirectly caused it" (Bracketed words and emphasis added) and he then went to state "I hold that the defendants cannot avail themselves of the exclusion clause ....."

[p.142]

Given the background leading to this statement which is the subject of the query mentioned earlier, I cannot imagine by any stretch of the language (or imagination) how this could be interpreted and understood to mean that the said Exclusion Clause is not part of the contract. The trial Judge's statement of the law, in my View, is correct and I so hold. I will, however, go further. In the oral argument counsel for the N.I.C. argues that there was a military coup on the 25th May 1997 and that this was a notorious fact. Counsel further argues. That the Police Report (Exhibit "C") confirms his statements. He also relies on the letter of Mr. Tarraf to the reinsurers, Harris & Dixon Insurance Brokers Limited, in which he stated that the goods in his shop were looted. A party to a suit may rely on the evidence adduced by his opponent or otherwise in support of his case but it is his primary responsibility to adduce evidence in support of his case. The evidence referred to in both the Police Report and the letters are insufficient evidence. Even Mr. Tarraf was not present when the shop was allegedly looted. It is true that both the Police Report and the letter were tendered by Mr. Tarraf. One expected counsel to have cross-examined Mr. Tarraf on the issues raised, including his sources, and asked direct questions with a view of eliciting evidence that would show a causal connection, a nexus, between the alleged looting and the coup of the 25th May 1997. For the same purpose, one would have expected evidence from witnesses showing the general state of affairs, particularly, in the area of Mr. Tarraf's shop, and how it impacted on people, homes and business premises. Primarily, the evidence ought to have been directed to show that the loss resulted .directly or indirectly from the events alleged — usurped or civil war etc. — that the N.I.C. was relying upon. In Spinneys (1948) Ltd, Spinneys Centres S.A.L. and Michel Doumet, Joseph Doumet and Distributors and Agencies S.A.L. V Royal Insurance Co. Ltd (1980) 1 Lloyds Law Reports 407 extensive evidence of the situation in Lebanon was given, including the interrelationship of events and the relevant actors and players. A vivid picture was painted and evidences were given to show causal connections. In reading the evidences of the state of affairs in Lebanon during the relevant period stated in a narrative by Mr. Justice MUSTILL but based on the evidence adduced by witnesses, I had the impression of reading a detailed [p.143] historical paper. In the instant case, there is lack of sufficiency of the evidence and, in particular, lack cogent evidence showing the nexus between the alleged state of affairs and the loss, directly or indirectly. In the circumstances, I am of the firm view that the N.I.C has not proved any of the exceptions in the Exclusion Clause, and, in the circumstances, I have no option but to hold, quoting the trial Judge, that the N.I.C. "cannot avail themselves of the exclusion clause" and so hold.

VARIATION OF THE AWARD BY THE COURT OF APPEAL

There was no cross appeal by Mr. Tarraf and he did not seek variation of the award of US $ 20,000-00 by the High Court, by filing a notice of contention that the judgment be varied pursuant to Rule 18 (1) of the Court of Appeal Rules. Notice of Motion for enlargement of time was filed but it was never heard by the court, below. In my view rule 18 (1) which is reproduce hereunder:—

"18 (1) It shall not be necessary for the respondent to give notice of motion by way of cross-appeal; but if a respondent intends upon the hearing of the appeal to contend that the decision of the Court below should be varied, he shall within one month after service upon him of the notice of appeal, cause written notice of such intention to be given to every party who may be affected by such grounds on which he intends to rely and within the same period shall file with the Registrar four copies of such notice, one of which shall be included in the record and the other three copies provided for the use of the Court" is mandatory and rule 18 (2) reproduced below:

"18 (2) Omission to give such notice shall not diminish any of the powers of the Court but may in the discretion of the Court be a ground for postponement or adjournment of the appeal upon such terms as to costs or otJ1erw;se as may be just" merely allows the court in its discretion to postpone or adjourn the appeal to allow for the filing of the Notice of Contention to vary. Since the Court of Appeal did not act to vary the award on the basis of a cross-appeal or rule 18 (1), one may ask on what basis did it act? Rules 31 and 32, in my view, are not applicable in the circumstances. The Court of Appeal could have acted under rule 9(6) which states.

[p.144]

"9(6) notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this rule, the Court; in deciding the appeal shall not be confined to the grounds set forth by the appellant:

Provided that the Court shall not rest its decision on any ground not set forth by the appellant unless the parties have had sufficient opportunity of contesting the case on that ground.

But in such a case the Court of Appeal is obliged to afford the parties sufficient opportunity of contesting the case on that specific ground. From the record this was clearly not done and the court in the judgment failed or neglected to explain the legal ground for its intervention in varying the award. It is my firm view that in the circumstances the Court of Appeal was wrong in varying the award, and I so hold.

1st Loss — A LIMITATION CLAUSE

Since I hold that the Cover Note is the operative document, I have to look at the 1st loss limitation. The 1st loss is the same as the excess in motor vehicle insurance; The insurer can only be liable for the sum in excess of the US$20,000-00 being the 1st loss. In the result the N.I.C.is liable only for the US$20,000-00 over the 1st figure of US $ 20,000-00, and I so hold See Halsbury's Laws of England, supra, para: 531 page 268

PROOF OF LOSS

Counsel for N.I.C. raised the issue of the proof of loss before the Court but on the objection of counsel for Mr. Tarraf that it was not appealed against both in the court [p.145] below and this court, counsel for the N.I.C. sought to amend but withdrew the application in the face of Strenuous objection and in the belief that the issue was raised in ground 7 of the Grounds of Appeal. I agree with the counsel for the N.I.C. on this. Ground 7 is a follow up to ground 6 which deals specifically with the varying of award and, it is in that light that ground 6, should be seen. Counsel's complaint in ground 6 is in the context of and in view of Justice WARNE's decision that Mr. Tarraf was not bound by the Cover Note (See page 128, 131 and 136 of the record) and it was therefore irrelevant to the issues. In answer to ground 1, ,in the given circumstances, it would appear that the evidence on which the learned Justice decided on the figure of US$40,000-00 is the proposal form — Exhibit "G" where it is stated the insured sum is US$40,00-00.

I am in agreement with counsel for Mr. Tarraf that the appeal was not fought before the court below and this court on the basis of lack of proof of loss but on the Exclusion Clause, among others. However, I would like to draw attention to counsel for the N.I.C's reference, in oral argument, to the absence of stock books and other records. In this regards, I would like to draw attention to the proposal forms and to note that questions on stock and sale books are included therein. I take it there is good reason for these questions. If these important books are kept in the premises insured, is it not likely that these could be lost in the event of fire, and thus deprive insurers of valuable evidence? Perhaps, there should be a requirement by insurers for these books and similar documents of potential evidential value to be kept in different and secure places. Another striking fact is, that Mr. Tarraf was never questioned in respect of these, confirming in my mind,' that the N.I.C., in the trial, exclusively, but unwisely, focused on the Exclusion Clause which, to their utter surprise, I presumed, mutated into a mirage!

INTEREST ON FOREIGN CURRENCY AWARD

In the written address kindly provided by counsel for Mr. Tarraf, the point raised in ground 8 of the Grounds of Appeal was conceded. Counsel now urges the court either to remit the case to the High Court to hear evidence on the interest rate on [p.146] the relevant currency or, alternatively, for the court to strike out that part of the judgment dealing with the rate of interest on the foreign currency, in which case, Mr. Tarraf would only be entitled to the statutory interest pursuant to the Judges Act of 1883, a statute of general application, applicable pursuant to section 170(1) of the Constitution, 1991, and section 74 of the Court Act, 1965.

In the premises, I set aside the judgment of the Court of Appeal in its entirety and:

(1) Affirm the judgment of the trial court in respect of paragraph A and give judgment to Mr. Tarraf in the sum of US$20,000-00 payable in Leones at a rate of exchange effective as at 7th April 2000 — the date of the judgment given by the trial court.

(2) The matter has been in the court for too long. This court will not remit the case to the High Court for it to hear evidence on the interest rate on the relevant foreign currency. Paragraph B of the relief granted by the trial court is hereby set aside and the court makes no order as to the interest payable on the foreign currency.

(3) Due to the unhelpful manner in which the parties conducted their respective cases in the High Court and the court below, parties shall bear their respective costs in the said courts and also in this court. If costs have been paid same to be refunded.

RULING

WARNE JSC

This Notice of Motion has been before this Court for some considerable time. The important issue before this Court is for the interpretation of section 137 (2)(a) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, Act No. 6 of 1991 in so far as it relates to the Honourable Mr. Justice S.A. Ademosu who is the trial Judge in the case of The State vs. Omrie Golley and two others in the High Court: Mr. C.F. Margai, Counsel for the Applicants has submitted that since the present Coram consists of Warne, Thompson-Davis, Wright JJSC and Strange JA are affected by 0 4 (b) in the declaration sought, the interest of justice will be served by the four Justices herein before mentioned rescuing themselves from these proceedings. 0 4 (b) states "Where a Justice of Appeal retires after attaining the compulsory retiring age of sixty five (65) years as provided by section 137 (2) (b) of the Constitution but is retained as a Judge [p.2] relying on section 136 (2) of the said Constitution, was it the intention of the Legislature that the latter appointment should be indefinite"?

On the 6th April 2006, the Court ruled that the submission had no merit and that the proceedings should commence.

When proceedings commenced on the 2nd May 2006, Mr. Margai informed the court that he had another Notice of Motion dated 23rd April, 2006 seeking an order that the present members of the panel save Justice TeJan-Jalloh recuse themselves from hearing the motion with regard to the interpretation of the fourth Order concerning Mr. Justice Ademosu sitting as judge notwithstanding his retirement in 1998.....

.....
.....

No doubt this submission affects the four justices named above. The Court, even though not seiged of this motion, adjourned the matter sine die to give the learned Chief justice an opportunity to appoint a panel consistent with the request of Mr. Margai. The Chief Justice wrote a letter to Mr. Margai that he will fix the date for the hearing when a panel can be constituted.

Be that as it may, the present Coram decided to resume hearing. They said Constitution is quite clear vis-a-vis a criminal matter before our Court — vide section 23 (1) of the said Constitution Act No.6 of 1991, which provides as follows whenever any person is charged with a criminal unless the charge is withdrawn, be afforded a fair hearing within a reasonable time by an independent and impartial court established by law" (Emphases is mine).

Fully conscious of this provision, notices were sent out to Counsel for the Applicants and the applicants themselves and the Law Office in order to commence hearing as the Court ordered on the 6th April 2006. At the hearing of 11th January, 2007 the Court was informed that the applicants had been [p.3] brought from Prison the Court ordered that they be brought up and they appeared in the dock. Mr. Margai observed that the letter from the Chief Justice did not refer to this matter. Whether it referred to this matter or not, the Court was concerned with the compliance of the Order made on the 6th April 2006 Mr. Margai for his part maintains his position that he cannot proceed before this Court.

This position cannot be maintained ad infinitum I have no alterative but to strike out the Notice of Motion and it is struck out accordingly.

The above Ruling was going to be delivered on the 16th January 2007 but Mr. Margai observed that the applicants were not in court and in the interest of justice; he applied that they be brought to court. The Court granted the application. The matter was adjourned to Wednesday 17th January 2007.

On the 17th January 2007 the applicants were present and the Ruling was delivered striking out the Notice of Motion.

RENNER-THOMAS C.J.

These proceedings were commenced by way of a Notice of Appeal filed in the Supreme Court Registry: on the 18th day of January 2007. The Notice of Appeal was filed on behalf of the People's Movement for Democratic Change (PMDC) and the Secretary-General of the PMDC (both hereinafter referred to as "the appellants"). The Sierra Leone People's Party (SLPP) and the Chairman of the SLPP (both hereinafter [p.20] referred to as "the respondents") were named as respondents. The Notice of Appeal opens as follows: —

"TAKE NOTICE that the Appellants/Petitioners being dissatisfied with the decision more particularly stated hereunder contained in the decision of the Political Parties Registration Commission dated 21st day of July, 2006, and pursuant to section 35 sub-section 7 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991, Act No.6 of 1991, doth hereby appeal to the Supreme Court upon the grounds set out in paragraph 3 hereof and will, at the hearing of the appeal, seek the relief set out in paragraph 4"

There then follows several paragraphs, the first of which dealing with the decision , complained of states that the complaint of the appellants was against a decision contained in a letter from the Political Parties Registration Commission (PPRC) dated the 21st day of July 2006 in reply to a communication from the Interim Secretary of the PMMC.

To understand the complaint of the appellants it is necessary to set out at this stage and in extenso the communication (hereinafter referred to as "the Petition") from the Interim Secretary of the first appellant herein, the PMDC, addressed to the Chairman of the PPRC on the 16th day of June 2006 as follows:

"The Chairman

Political Parties Registration Commission C/o Roxy Building

Walpole Street,

Freetown.

Dear Mr. Chairman,

Re: Petitioning under Sections 6(1)(2a) 2(e), 14(1) and 27(1) (b) of the

Politica1 Parties Act No.3 of 2002 (as amended) and Sections 35(4)

and 76(1)(h) of Act No.6 of 1991

On the behalf of the People's Movement for Democratic Change, I hereby petition the eligibility of Mr. Solomon Ekuma Berewa as Leader of the Sierra Leone People's Party whilst holding the office of Vice President of the Republic of Sierra Leone.

[p.21]

Section 6(1) of Act No.3 of 2002 (as amended) provides:—

"The object for which the Commission is established is the registration and supervision of the conduct of Political Parties in accordance with the Constitution and this Act."

Section 6(2a) provides:—

Section 6(2) — without prejudice to the generality of subsection (1), it shall be the function of the Commission—

(a) "to monitor the affairs or conduct of Political Parties so as to ensure their compliance with the Constitution, this Act and with the terms and conditions of their registration ".

(b) "to do .all such things as will contribute to the attainment of the object stated in subsection (1)".

Section 14(1) of the Political Parties Act No.3 of 2002 (as amended) provides:—

"A Political Party shall not have as a founding member or as leader of the party or a member of its executive body whether national or otherwise, a person who is not qualified to be elected as member of Parliament under the Constitution ".

Section 35(4) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.6 of 1991 provides:—

"No Political Party shall have as a Leader a person who is not qualified to be elected as Member of Parliament ".

Section 76(1) of the constitution of Sierra Leone, Act No.6 of 1991 provides:—

No person shall be qualified for election as a Member of parliament—

Section 76(1) (h) “if he is for the time being the president, the vice president, a Minister or a Deputy Minister under the provisions of this Constitution"

The Sierra Leone People's Party (SLPP) is a registered Political Party in Sierra Leone

The People’s Movement for Democratic Change (PMDC) is a registered Political Party in Sierra Leone.

[p.22]

The Leader of the Sierra Leone People's Party is Mr. Solomon Ekuma Berewa who incidentally is the Vice-President of the Republic of Sierra Leon, and was such when on the 4th day of September, 2005 he was elected leader of the said party at a convention held in Makeni.

This petition seeks to have determined whether in the light of the aforesaid pro visions of Section 14(1) of the Political Parties Act No.3 of 2002 (as amended) and sections 35(4) and 76(1) (h) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, Act No.6 of 1991, Mr. Solomon Ekuma Berewa as Vice-President of the Republic of Sierra Leone and Leader of the Sierra Leone people's Party (SLPP) is not contravening the aforementioned provisions.

It is further submitted that if the answer to the preceding paragraph is in the affirmative, then, your petitioner requests that immediate steps be taken to invoke the provisions of section 27(1)(b) of Act No.3 of 2002 (as amended) in ,conformity with the spirit and intendment of section 6(1), (2a) and (2e) of the said Act.

Section 27(1)(b) of Act No.3 of 2002 (as amended) provides:

"without prejudice to any other penalty prescribed by this Act or any other enactment, the Commission may apply to the Supreme Court for an Order cancel the registration of any Political Party where that Party has contravened any provision of the Constitution or this Act".

Faithfully submitted,

[Sgd]ANSU B. LANSANA

INTERIM SECRETARY -GENERAL (PMDC)"

The reply of the PPRC dated 21st day July 2006 which is quoted in full in the Notice of Appeal is in the following terms:

"As an ordinary citizen Solomon Ekuma Berewa is qualified to become a Member of Parliament. But while serving as Vice President of the Republic of Sierra Leone, he cannot become a Member of Parliament at the same time.

[p.23]

This is so because of the existence of the separation of powers,' as no one individual citizen can become a member of any two or all three arms of Government simultaneously, that is,

1. The Legislature which comprises the Speaker and Member of Parliament.

2. The Executive comprising the President, Vice President and Cabinet.

3. The Judiciary comprising the Chief Justice and members of the Superior Court of Judicature.

Because of the aforementioned, the Political Parties Registration Commission is of the view that Solomon Ekuma Berewa is qualified to contest for the Office of the Presidency of the Republic of Sierra Leone ".

The Notice of Appeal also alleges the following particulars of misdirection and errors of law respectively:

"1. That Commission erred in considering Mr. Solomon Ekuma Berewa's Response dated 28th June 2006 purportedly made in response to the Appellants/Petitioners Petition dated 16th June 2006 as a response from the Respondents.

2. That the Commission, in its deliberation and hence decision, failed to appreciate that section 75 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991, Act No.6 of 1991 aforesaid, should have been read subject to section 76(1) (h) of the said Constitution

3. That the Commission, in its deliberation and conclusion, misconceived the spirit and intent of section 76(1) (h) of the said Constitution".

The grounds of appeal relied on by the appellants are:

"That in the light of the provisions of sections 34, 35, 75 and 76 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991, Act No.6 of 1991 in particular sections 35(4) and 76(1)(h) of the said Constitution as well as [p.24] the provisions of sections 6(1) and (2) (a-e), 14(1) and 27(a) and (b) of the Political Parties Act 2002, Act No.3 of2002 (as amended), the Political Parties Registration Commission, in its decision of 21st day of July 2006, failed to address the crucial and all-important question contained in the Appellants/Petitioners' Petition of 16th June 2006 as to "whether in the light of the aforesaid provisions of section 14(1) of the Political Parties Act No.3 of 2002 (as amended) and sections 35(4) and 76(1 ((h) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, Act No.6 of 1991, Mr. Solomon Ekuma Berewa as Vice President of the Republic of Sierra Leone and Leader of the Sierra Leone 's People's party (SLPP) is not contravening the aforesaid provisions.

That notwithstanding the provisions of section 5(3) and (4) of the Political Parties Act 2002 aforesaid, the Commission, in proceeding to determine the said Petition in the absence of its Chairman, deprived itself of the necessary Judicial' oversight that the Chairman’s presence would have brought to bear on it decision.

That the Political Parties Registration Commission determined the Appellants/petitioner’s Petition and reached a decision on it without a Response from the Respondents.

That the aforesaid decision of the Political Parties Registration Commission is against the weight of the Petition filed by the Appellants/Petitioners."

The Reliefs sought from this Court in the Notice of Appeal are that the decision of the PPRC be set aside for the reasons aforesaid and that there be substituted one in favour of the "appellants/petitioners" together with such further or other relief to the appellants/petitioners" as the Justice of the case requires.

It will be observed from the Notice of Appeal that the instant appeal is said to be filed pursuant to Section 35 (7) of the Constitution, Act No.6 of 1991, (hereinafter referred to as "the Constitution"') which provides as follows:

"Any association aggrieved by a decision of the Political Parties Registration Commission under this section may appeal to the Supreme Court and the decision of the Court shall be final".

[p.25]

Normally, civil appeals to the Supreme Court are instituted pursuant to section 123 (1) of the Constitution, which provides that "an appeal shall lie from a judgment, decree, or order of the Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court—

(a) as right in any civil cause or matter ..."

Procedurally, such appeals from a decision of the Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court are governed by the Supreme Court Rules 1982, Constitutional Instrument No.1 of 1982. However, those rules make no express provision for civil appeals to the Supreme Court which as in the instant case, are not from a judgment, decree or order of the Court of Appeal.

However, Rule 5(2) of the Supreme Court Rules provides as follows:

"Where no provision is expressly made by these Rules regarding the practice and procedure which shall apply to any appeal or application before the Supreme Court, the Supreme Court shall prescribe by means of practice directions such practice and procedure as in the opinion of the Supreme. Court the justice of the appeal or application may require ".

No doubt with this rule in mind, by Notice of Motion dated 25th day of January 2007, the appellants sought to have the Supreme Court prescribe, by means of practice directions, the practict9and procedure to govern the appeal they had filed. Even before the application was heard, on the 30th day of January 2007, the Supreme Court relying on rule 5 of the Supreme Court Rules did prescribe by way of Practice Direction No.1 of 2007 that the practice and procedure to apply to appeals filed in the Supreme Court pursuant to section 35(7) of the Constitution Act shall thenceforth be those contained in the Supreme Court Rules, Constitutional Instrument No.1 of 1982, obviously with necessary modifications to suit any peculiar requirements of any such appeal.

Thus, when the Motion dated 25th January 2007 came up for hearing on the 31st January 2007 this Court drew the attention of the parties to the instant appeal to the said Practice Direction No.1 of 2007 and further ordered that for the purpose of compliance with the said Supreme Court Rules the instant appeal should be deemed to have been filed on the 31st day of January 2007.

After the Order the Appellants having filed their case on the 9th day of March 2007 followed by that of the Respondents on the 4th day April of 2007 the appeal came up for hearing before this Court on the 5th day of June 2007.

[p.26]

I now revert to consider more fully the circumstances leading to the filling of the Notice of Appeal by the appellants in the instant case. To be able to understand the background to the present appeal one has got to start with a closer look at the petition from the Interim Secretary of the first appellant herein, the PMDC, addressed to the Chairman of the PPRC on the 16th day of June 2006. Since it is the appellants' dissatisfaction with the reply of the PPRC to the petition which gave rise to the instant appeal I think it is necessary to deal briefly with the legal import of the petition.

There are several connotations of the word "petition." According to the Shorter Oxford English Dictionary in legal usage a petition is defined as a formal application in writing made to a Court—

(a) For judicial action concerning the matter of a suit then pending before it;

(b) For something (which lies in the jurisdiction of the Court without an action as a writ of habeas corpus, etc; and

(c) In some forms of procedure initiating a suit or its equivalent most common legal usage is to describe the originating process in divorce, winding-up or election petition matter.

Upon a perusal of the petition addressed to the PPRC it becomes clear that it was not intended to originate any legal process. In my view, it is more consistent with a petition in the non-Legal usage of the word defined in the Shorter Oxford Dictionary as:

"a formally drawn-up request or supplication addressed to a superior, or to a person or body in authority, soliciting some favour, right or mercy, or the redress of some wrong or grievance".

Clearly, the petition in the instant case was a request addressed to a body in authority, the PPRC, to redress some wrong or grievance i.e. the non-compliance by the SLPP with certain provisions of the Constitution.

Focusing further on the petition addressed to the PPRC, in order to avoid any misconception that the outcome of these proceedings may engender, it is important for me to deal at this stage of my judgment with the issue of whether the petitioner had any legal right to address such a petition to the PPRC.

[p.27]

A perusal of the content of the petition reveals that it was calling upon the PPRC to carry out one of its many oversight responsibilities in this case of ensuring compliance by the SLPP, a registered political party, with certain relevant provisions of the Constitution and of the Political Parties Act, No.3 of 2002. This was being done it was said with a view to "triggering" the exercise by the PPRC of the power vested in it by section 27(1) of the Political Parties Act, No.3 of2002.

Though the petitioner chose not to adopt a formal legal process to compel the PPRC to , carry out its duty and exercise its power set out in the Constitution and the Political Parties Act the question of the standing of the petitioner to raise the matters contained in the petition merits due consideration by this Court. Clearly, the petitioner in the instant case could be said to have an interest in the outcome of any action taken by the PPRC in consequence of the petition. Indeed, any person or group of persons, even ones without any direct interest in its outcome, could have addressed such a petition to the PPRC.

After all, one should not be oblivious to the fact that the PPRC is a public body set up by Parliament to carry out certain statutory functions in the interest of the public in general and of registered political parties in particular. Thus, any concerned citizen or public-spirited individual could well have addressed such a petition to the PPRC. Of more serious concern for the purposes of this appeal is the answer to the question; what, if any, remedies are open to a petitioner who is dissatisfied with the outcome of his petition.

It follows, therefore, that one must focus on the position the PPRC took viz-a-viz the petition. As stated earlier the reply of the PPRC was contained in this letter dated 21st day of July, 2006 addressed to the Interim Secretary-General of the PMDC and reproduced here for emphasis:

"The Interim Secretary-General

People's Movement for Democratic Change

9A Hannah Benka-Coker Street

Freetown

Dear Sir,

Re: Petitioning the Eligibility of Mr. Solomon Ekuma Berewa as Leader of the Sierra Leone People's Party whilst holding the Office of Vice President of the Republic of Sierra Leone

[p.28]

As an ordinary citizen Solomon Ekuma Berewa is qualified to become a Member of Parliament. But while serving as Vice President of the Republic of Sierra Leone, he cannot become a Member of Parliament at the same time.

This is so because of the existence of the separation of powers; as no one individual citizen can become a member of any two or all three arms of Government simultaneously that is—

1. The legislature which comprises the speaker 'and members of parliament.

2. The executive comprising the President, Vice President and Cabinet.

3. The Judiciary comprising the Chief Justice and members of the Superior Court of Judicature.

Because of the aforementioned, the Political Parties Registration Commission is of the view that Solomon Ekuma Berewa is qualified to contest the Office of the Presidency of the Republic of Sierra Leone.

Dated at Freetown this 21st Day of July, 2006

Signed: R.A. Caesar, Commissioner

Signed: M.B. Williams, Commissioner

Signed: C.A Thorpe, Commissioner

Clearly, this was not the outcome that the petitioner expected. The petition had called upon the PPRC to make a "determination" regarding the issue of the breach by the SLPP of certain provision of the Constitution and of the Political Parties Act, No.3 of 2002. This was to be followed, in the event that the PPRC was of the same opinion as the petitioner, by action being taken by the PPRC to invoke its powers vested by section 27(1) of the Political Parties Act, No.3 of 2002.

The appellants contend that the PPRC failed to make the "determination" it was invited by the petition to undertake. Whatever view one takes of the reply of the PPRC it is clear that the PPRC was not willing to go along with the petitioner that section 27(1) of the Political Parties Act, No.3 of 2002) was to be invoked.

[p.29]

It is not surprising therefore that the PMDC was dissatisfied with the reaction of the PPRC to the petition as contained in the reply from the PPRC. The question that then comes up for determination at this stage is what remedies, if any, were open to the petitioner. As a result of this dissatisfaction, did the appellants become entitled, as they contend, to bring, their grievance to this Court by way of an appeal pursuant to section 35(7) of the Constitution?

The appellants themselves did raise the issue of this Court's jurisdiction to entertain, the instant appeal in paragraph 20 of their case in the following terms:

"The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to entertain the Appellants' Appeal filed here in is derived from section 35(7) of the National Constitution, which states as follows:

"Any association aggrieved by a decision of the Political Parties Registration Commission under this section may appeal to the Supreme Court and the decision of the Court shall be final".

However, in the course of the oral submissions made by Counsel for the appellants the issue of whether this Court had jurisdiction pursuant to section 35(7) of the "Constitution or any other law to entertain the instant appeal was not taken any further.

As far as the respondents were concerned they did not deal with the issue to this Court's jurisdiction to entertain the instant appeal as part of their case nor did they deal with the issue as part of the oral submissions by their Counsel before this Court.

However, at the end of the oral presentation made on behalf of both the appellants and the respondents, because of the importance of the question of jurisdiction of this Court to entertain the instant appeal it was thought necessary to invite Counsel for both sides to address the Court further on the issue of the Court's jurisdiction generally and in particular on the legal capacity of the appellants to bring the appeal.

Mr. Margai, Counsel for the appellant, stood his ground and insisted that he was relying on the several contentions in the appellants' case and in the oral submissions, to this Court. On the other hand, though Counsel for the respondents, probably taking the cue from the bench; did attempt to counter the contentions put forward on behalf of the appellants, with the greatest respect to Counsel for the respondents, this was not of much help to this Court as his answers to the questions put by the bench on this all important issue of jurisdiction were not particularly helpful.

[p.30]

At this stage, I think I need to repeat an important clarification I made about the connotation of the word "jurisdiction" in the case of Hinga Norman v. Sama Banya and Ors (S.C 2/2005 judgment delivered the 31st day of August 2005, unreported) The Hinga Norman case is one of the cases cited and relied on by the appellants in their written submission. Though I was in that case dealing with the original jurisdiction of this Court as opposed to its appellate jurisdiction which is at issue in the instant appeal the clarification is still pertinent. This is what I said:

"A distinction ought to be made between two meanings frequently attributed to the word [jurisdiction] and which sometimes tend to lead to confusion. This distinction is aptly dealt with in the following dicta by Rickford L.J. in delivering his judgment in the case of Guaranty Trust Company of New York v. Hannay & Company ((1915) 2 KB 536 at 563):—

"The word "Jurisdiction" and the expression "the court has no jurisdiction "are used in two different senses which I think often leads to confusion. The first and, in my opinion, the only really correct sense of the expression that the court has no jurisdiction is that it has no power to deal with and decide the dispute, as to the subject-matter before it, no matter in what form or by whom it is raised. But there is another sense in which it is often used, i.e., that although the Court has power to decide the question it will not according to the settled practice do so except in a certain way and under certain circumstances."

Barracloug v Brown ([1897] A. C. 615) and Westbury-on-Severn Rural Sanitary Authority v Meredith (30 Ch.D. 387) are two English cases that illustrate this distinction. In Barraclough's case, there was a real want of jurisdiction. The power to decide the dispute as to the particular subject-matter had been removed by statute from the High Court as a court of first instance and transferred to another tribunal. In the second case, the Court could decide the dispute and give the relief sought but, by a settled practice embodied in a rule, it would not do so except under certain circumstances, i.e., if the subject-matter was of the value of £10/00 or more.

In my humble opinion, therefore, in answering the question whether this Court has original jurisdiction to hear and determine the matters [p.31] raised in the Originating Notice of Motion, no matter in what form and by whom they are raised, I shall be addressing the issue of jurisdiction in the first, and in the words of Pickford L.J above, "the only correct sense of the expression", i.e., whether or not this Court is vested original jurisdiction to hear and determine the dispute between the Plaintiff and the Defendants as to the subject-matter before us."

In my opinion, the first question to be resolved is whether this Court has jurisdiction in the first and only correct sense referred to in the Hinga Norman case, i.e. whether it can entertain the instant appeal having regard to the subject matter of the said appeal. In other words, does the instant appeal fall within the category of appeals envisaged by Parliament when it enacted the provision of subsection 7 of section 35 of the Constitution?

However, before setting out to answer the question I have posed I feel obliged to say a few words more about the issue of jurisdiction, as this Court has found itself in the position in the recent past where it had been obliged to strike out important constitutional matters either because it found that it had no jurisdiction to entertain the matter or because its jurisdiction has been improperly invoked.

The first point I wish to make is that absence of jurisdiction in the first sense of the word cited above is not a matter of a mere technicality or procedure. It is a fundamental issue touching on the power of the court to act. Where a court has no jurisdiction to entertain a matter any proceedings and decision given thereon is a nullity no matter how well conducted the proceedings were. Judicial power is inextricably tied up with jurisdiction and justiciabilty. A court can only exercise power to entertain a matter where it has jurisdiction.

In the Nigerian case of Uzouckwu v. HRH Ezeonu II ((1991) 6 NWLR pt 200, p 708 at 758 Nasir PCA put it thus:

"Where a court lacks jurisdiction, that is the end of the matter, and any exercise of power by the court in embarking on a trial will be futile and null. This is because jurisdiction is so radical that it forms the foundation of adjudication."

In another Nigerian case of The State v. Onagoruwa ((1993) 2 NWLR Pt 221, p33 at 48 Uwais, JSC as he then was had this to say:

"The Issue of jurisdiction is fundamental, and its being raised in [p.32] the Course of proceedings cannot be too early nor premature, nor too late. This is because, if there is want of jurisdiction the proceedings of the court will be affected by a fundamental vice and would be a nullity no matter how well conducted the proceedings might otherwise be."

Want of jurisdiction in the proper sense of the word cannot therefore be waived since acquiescence resulting from the other party failing to raise the issue cannot confer jurisdiction.(see Dr. Braithwaite v. Grassroots Democratic Movement [1998] 7 NWLR 307; and Okoro v. Nigerian Army Council [2000] 3 NWLR77.) Indeed, submitting to the jurisdiction of a court is no answer to want of jurisdiction for total want of jurisdiction cannot be cured by the consent of the parties. If the court does not possess an initial jurisdiction over the subject matter, it is not possible that the consent of the parties could confer such jurisdiction. It follows therefore that the issue of want of jurisdiction can properly be raised by the court suo motu.

I now turn to examine the subject matter of the instant appeal with a view to determining whether this Court has jurisdiction to entertain it under the provisions of subsection (7) of section 35 of the Constitution as contended by the appellants. The main grievance of the appellants as I understand it is that the PPRC failed to make the determination it was invited to make by the petitioner. Indeed, this was the gravamen of the first ground of appeal so ably argued by Mr. Fofanah on behalf of the appellants. From the perspective of the appellants, what gave rise to this appeal was the failure and or refusal of the PPRC to make a determination that the respondents had violated the Constitution, which determination should have triggered action by the PPRC in accordance with the provisions of section 27 (1) of the Political Parties Act, No.3 of 2002 seeking an order from this Court for the cancellation of the registration of the SLPP, the first respondent herein.

To be able to answer this question it is necessary that section 35 (7) of the Constitution be construed so as to ascertain its true meaning and effect.

My first comment is that subsection 7 should not be construed in isolation from the rest of the subsection of section 35. This is so because the right granted by the subsection to an "an aggrieved association" to appeal to the Supreme Court is in relation to a decision of the PPRC made under the said section 35. To be able to take advantage of the right of appeal a prospective appellant must be able to point to a decision taken by the PPRC under one of the subsections of section 35 of the Constitution which had given rise to its grievance. The appellant's Notice of Appeal in the instant appeal is silent on this point. Rather than citing the particular decision which led to their grievance the appellants merely reproduced in the Notice of Appeal [p.33] the entire content of the PPRC's reply to the Petition as being the decision with which they are dissatisfied. This, in my view, does not help the appellants much as the PPRC did not state in its reply whether in making the several assertions contained in its reply to the petition it was acting pursuant to any subsection of section 35 of the Constitution. It is therefore left with this Court to examine the PPRC's reply to the petition to ascertain whether it does in fact constitute a decision under any provision of section 35 of the Constitution within the meaning of subsection (7) of section 35.

It is clear that the provisions of subsections (1) to (4) inclusive of section 35 of the Constitution do not involve the making of any decision by the PPRC. In my opinion, and I so hold, the only subsection of section 35 which involves the making of a decision by the PPRC is subsection 5 which relates to the refusal to have an association registered allowed to operate or to function as a political party if the PPRC was satisfied that—

"(a) membership or leadership of the party is restricted to Member of any particular tribal or ethnic group or religious faith; or

(b) The name, symbol, colour or motto of the party has exclusive or particular significance or connotation to members of any particular tribal or ethnic group or religious faith; or

(c) the party is formed for the sole purpose of securing or advancing the interest and welfare or a particular tribal or ethnic group: Community, geographical area or religious faith; or

(d) the party does not have a registered office in each of the Provincial Headquarter towns and the Western Area".

At this stage, reference ought to be made to subsection (6) of section 35 of the Constitution which' "provides that Parliament "may make laws regulating the registration, functions and operation of political parties." It is pursuant to this subsection that Parliament did enact the Political Parties, Act No.3 of 2002, sections 16 and 17 of which substantially reproduce the provisions of subsections (5) and (7) of section 35 of the constitution relating to the power of the PPRC to refuse to register an association as a political party for almost the identical reasons as those of subsection 5 of section 35 of the Constitution and the right of an association aggrieved by a decision of the PPRC to appeal to the Supreme Court.

[p.34]

Sections 16 and 17 of the Political Parties Act, No.3 2002, provide as follows:

"16. Pursuant to subsection (5) of section 35 of the Constitution, the Commission shall refuse to register as a political party any association by whatever name called if the Commission is satisfied that—

(a) the membership or leadership of the association—

(i) is restricted to members of any particular tribal or ethnic group or religious faith; or

(ii) includes a non-citizen or a person prohibited from membership or leadership of a political party under the constitution or this Act;

(b) the name, symbol, colour or motto of the association has exclusive or particular significance or connotation to members of any particular tribal or ethnic group or religious faith; or

(c) the association is formed for the sole purpose of securing or advancing the interests and welfare of a particular tribal or ethnic group, community, geographical area or religious faith; or

(d) the association does not have a registered office in each of the provincial headquarters-towns and the Western Area; or

(e) the association concerned has contravened any provision of the Constitution or this act regarding its formation or application for registration as a political party.

"17(1) Any association aggrieved by a decision of the Commission refusing its application for registration may appeal to the Supreme Court made up of three justices whose decision shall be given within thirty days of the hearing or the appeal.

[p.35]

(2) An association may, instead of appealing directly to the Supreme Court under subsection (1), apply to the Commission to reconsider its decision not to register the association as a political party.

(3) If the Commission refuses the application 'made to it under subsection (2) or fails to register the association as a political party within seven days of that application, the association may then appeal to the Supreme Court and subsection (1) shall apply, mutatis mutandis. "

In my view, whereas subsection (7) of section 35 of the Constitution deals with the right of appeal in general terms section 17 of the Political Parties Act, No.3 of 2002 expresses the right in more precise terms.

In view of what I have said above relating to legal effect and meaning of section 35 (7) of the Constitution especially when read together with section 17 of the Political Parties Act, No.3 of 2002, it is my considered view that the appellants do not have a right of appeal to this Court because of any grievance they might have felt as a result of the PPRC's reply to the petition and I so hold.

Inextricably linked with this question of the jurisdiction of this Court to entertain this: appeal pursuant to subsection (7) of section 35 of the Constitution is the question whether the appellants themselves have the legal capacity to exercise the right of appeal granted by the said subsection.

As far as the issue of the legal capacity of the appellants to bring this appeal before this Court is concerned, again, the appellants did raise the issue in paragraphs 21 to 24 inclusive of their case. Counsel for the appellants did make several submissions in the course of his oral arguments contending that both appellants do have capacity to bring the instant appeal.

As far as the first appellant is concerned it was contended by Counsel for the appellants that the PMDC was legally qualified to bring this appeal because it was "an association registered as a political party pursuant to section 12(1) of the Political Parties Act, No.3 of 2002" As to the capacity of the second appellant, the Secretary General of the PMDC it was contended that as Secretary-General of the party he is "an interested party to the Petition, having in fact petitioned the Respondents [sic] herein for and on behalf of the first appellant."

[p.36]

The respondents did not counter or challenge these various contentions in any way whether by way of written submissions in their case and during the oral arguments by their Counsel before this Court.

Before making any pronouncement on this point I think it is necessary to say a few words on the nature and legal effect of the right of appeal granted by subsection (7) of section 35 of the Constitution.

The first thing to note is that the right of appeal we are dealing with here is in the nature of a judicial review of an administrative action. According to the editors of Gamer's Administrative Law (8th edition, at pages 150 to 151), in most cases, the conduct of an administrative body causing a sense of grievance may give rise to one of the ordinary causes of action recognized by the courts. However, in circumstances where the gravamen of the complaint cannot be brought within the terms of one of the ordinary course of action, the citizen may nevertheless have a remedy in the courts in the following situations:

"(a) where [as in the instant case] a statute expressly confers a right of appeal to a named court; or

(b) where the complainant can invoke the inherent supervisory jurisdiction of the High Court to review the conduct of persons or bodies purporting to exercise public functions, to ensure that they remain within the confines of their legal (usually statutory) powers (intra vires), and do not stray beyond the limits of that authority (ultra vires); and also to ensure that duties owed by them to the public lire' duly performed."

Dealing further with the situation where a right of appeal is granted the editors of Garner's Administrative Law (supra, at p 152) emphasize that rights of appeal

"are creatures of statute; there are no, inherent, common law, rights of appeal. Such conferment by statutes of rights of appeal has not, however, followed any very logical or set pattern. Provision, if any, has been made as has been thought appropriate in each particular instance. Moreover, the incidence of rights to appeal to courts must not be overstated. In many situations where the actions of the administration affect an individual no right of appeal to a court will be provided at all".

Most importantly, for our present purposes, the same learned editors make clear (supra at page 158) that:

"to succeed in any of the various kinds of statutory appeals the appellant must not only be able to satisfy the appropriate court on such points substance as it is the jurisdiction of that court to consider, he must also satisfy any prescribed procedural requirements. The most important of such requirements relate, first, to time limits within which the right of appeal must be exercised, and second, to limitations on the classes of persons eligible to exercise the right of appeal..... As regards standing to sue (locus standi) the point to note is that the intending applicant must be able to satisfy the court that under the terms of the particular statute conferring the right of appeal he is entitled to be an appellant."

Ordinarily, in conferring such a right of appeal the expression used by most statutes to describe the intending appellant is "a person aggrieved" or "a party aggrieved". These expressions have themselves given rise to some difficulty in interpretation with the courts adopting differing approaches over the years, most recently construing the expression most generously. Thus, we may contrast the much quoted statement of James L.J. in Re Sidebotham, ex parte Sidebotham ((1880) 14 Ch.D 458 at 463, C.A.) that:

"It is said that any person aggrieved by an order of the court is entitled to appeal But the words 'person aggrieved' do not really mean a man who is disappointed of a benefit which he might have received if some other order had been made. A person aggrieved' must be a man who has suffered a legal grievance, a man against whom a decision has been pronounced which has wrongfully deprived him of something or wrongfully refused him something, or wrongfully affected his title to something",

(a statement quoted with approval by Salmon J in refusing to entertain the appeal in Buxton v. Minister of Housing and Local Government ([1961] 1 QB 278))

With that of Lord Denning in the Privy Council case of A-G of Gambia v. Njie ([1961] 2 All ER 504 at 511 PC) stating that the definition adopted by James LJ in the Sidebotham case should not be regarded as exhaustive because:

"the words ''Person aggrieved" are of wide import and should not be subjected to a restrictive interpretation. They do not include of course a [p.38] mere busybody interfering in things which do not concern him but they do include a person who has a genuine grievance because an order has been made which prejudicially affects his interest."

However, the expression that Parliament has used in the case of section 35 (7) of the Constitution and which this Court has to construe in the instant appeal is "an association aggrieved" as opposed to "a person or party aggrieved." First, I shall attempt to construe the word "association". In doing so, this Court must pay heed to the context in which the word is used. In this regard, subsection 8 of section 35 of the Constitution is relevant. The subsection makes reference to two terms "association" and "political party" stating that for the purposes of section 35 of the Constitution the expression "political party means an association registered as a political party as prescribed by subsection (5)."

In my opinion, the legal effect of this definition of a political party is that before registration the group or body of persons seeking registration as prescribed by subsection (5) of section 35 of the Constitution is referred to as an association simpliciter. After registration the association becomes a registered political party and could no longer refer to itself as an association simpliciter. However, where the PPRC refuses to register the association its designation does not change and being aggrieved by the refusal to be registered it could properly refer to itself as "an association aggrieved" for the purposes of the right of appeal conferred by subsection (7) of section 35 of the Constitution.

I am reinforced in this view by the wording of subsection (1) of section 17 of the Political Parties Act, No.3 of 2002 which statute, as I have held earlier, is one enacted j pursuant to the proyisions of section 34 and subsection (6) of section 35 of the Constitution and is a fuller re-enactment of subsection (7) of section 35 of the Constitution that the appellants are relying on for legal capacity to bring the instant appeal. The wording of subsection (1) of section 17 of the political Parties Act, No 3 of 2002 puts it beyond any doubt that the right of appeal granted is limited to an association which has been aggrieved by a decision of the PPRC refusing its application for registration.

The is no doubt that the appellants may be aggrieved by the refusal of the PPRC to act in accordance with their suggestion in their petition to invoke the provisions of section 27(1)(b) of the Political Parties Act, No.3 of 2002 which provides that:

"Without prejudice to any other penalty prescribed by this Act or any other enactment, the Commission may apply to the Supreme Court [p.39] for an order to cancel the registration of any political party where that party has contravened any provision of the Constitution or this Act."

However, this does not give the first appellant a right of appeal to this Court under subsection (7), of section 35 of the Constitution if for no other reason but for the fact that the PMDC, the first appellant herein is a registered political party and not an association. This is, made crystal clear by the assertion to be found at page 2 of the petition that:

"The People’s Movement for Democratic Change (P.M.D. C.) is a registered Political Party in Sierra Leone."

As far as the second: appellant is concerned, an official of the first appellant who does not even purport to act in a representative capacity, by no stretch of imagination could he be considered as an association within the meaning of subsection (7) of section 35 of the Constitution or howsoever otherwise.

As the PMDC is a registered political party and not an association seeking to be registered I hold that it cannot therefore be on an "association aggrieved" within the meaning of section 35(5) and (35(7) of the Constitution.

To sum up, I hold that the expression "association aggrieved" as used in section 35(7) of the Constitution only confers a right of appeal upon a limited group or class of persons and not on any political party or individual who may properly be aggrieved because of the failure of the PPRC to make a determination as requested by the petitioner in the instance case and by the consequent failure or refusal of the PPRC to exercise the power vested in it by section 27(1) (b) of the Political Parties Act, No.3 of 2002.

As I said earlier, such an aggrieved individual or political party may be entitled to seek some other redress or relief from the courts but in my view such redress or relief may not be obtained by way of an appeal direct to this Court and I so hold.

For the above reasons I hold that not only does this Court lack subject-matter jurisdiction to entertain the instant appeal but I also hold that as neither the first appellant nor the second appellant could be described as "an association aggrieved" within the meaning and context of subsection (7) of section 35 of the Constitution they both lack legal capacity to bring the said appeal.

[p.40]

In the circumstances, I have held that this Court lacks jurisdiction to entertain this appeal for the reasons I need not go into the merits or demerits of the several grounds of appeal canvassed by the appellants.

I therefore order that the appeal herein is struck out. I also order that each party is to bear its own costs.

The Political Parties Act 2002 was enacted by Parliament on the 21st February 2002 and it is Act No.3 of 2002 amended by the Political Parties (Amendment) Act No.6 of 2002 which was made retrospective on the 21st February 2002. The latter is to confer power on the Commission to enlarge time. However, it is not relevant to the issue before this Court.

It happened that on the 16th day of June 2006, the Interim Secretary-General of the first Appellant I addressed a petition to the Chairman of the Political Parties Registration Commission. Its thrust is the eligibility of Solomon Ekuma Berewa as leader of the Sierra Leone Peoples Party when he holds the office of Vice President of the Republic of Sierra Leone. It cited sections 6(1), 6(2a) and 6(2e), 14 of the Political Parties Act, sections 76(1) and 76(1) (h) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991 — Act No.6 of 1991 in support of the said petition and requested the Commission to determine whether Mr. Solomon Ekuma Berewa had contravened the aforementioned statutory and Constitutional provisions.

In its reply dated 21st July 2006 the Commission advised that qua ordinary citizen Mr, Berewa is qualified to become a Member of Parliament, but while serving as Vice President, he cannot become [p.42] a Member of Parliament it is clear from subsequent events that the appellants were dissatisfied with the reply and intended to test the issued in a Court of law.

It therefore on the 18st of January 2007 filed a Notice of Appeal to the Supreme Court requesting the following reliefs, namely

1. To set aside the decision of the Political Parties Registration and to substitute one in favour of the Appellant/Petitioners and

2. Such further or other relief to be granted to the Appellants/Petitioner — as the justice of case requires.

However, realizing or entertaining some doubt as to the practice and procedure governing the application of such an issue to the supreme court, the appellant/petitioners by a notice of motion dated 25th January 2007 invoked rules 5 (2) of the supreme Court Rules asking for directions from this court as to the practice and procedure of the application. We then ruled by way of practice Direction No. 1 of 2007 that the practice and procedure regarding appeals from court of appeal to the supreme court apply pursuant to section 35(7) of the national constitutional of Sierra Leone Act No. 6 Supreme of 1991 shall be those contained in constitutional instrument No. 1 of 1982 which states as follows

"Any association aggrieved by a decision of the Political Parties Registration Commission under this section may appeal to the Supreme Court and the decision of the Court shall be final".

It is pertinent to mention that when the notice of motion dated 25th January 2007 was being heard on the 31st January 2007 the attention of the parties was drawn to the Notice of Appeal of 18th January 2007 regarding Practice, direction No.1 of 2007 and the Court ordered that the notice of appeal would be deemed to have been filed on the 31st January, 2007, and in compliance with the Supreme Court Rules.

The Appellants/Petitioners and the Respondents filed their case on the 9th day of March and 4th April, 2007 respectively.

Speaking for myself, the relief sought require the determination of certain preliminary issues. Firstly, the status of the Political Parties Registration Commission. I find from sections 6(1) and 6(2) that its function which word includes its power, primarily are the registration and supervision of the conduct of Political Parties, but it requires that it must be in accordance with the Constitution and this Act. Sections 6(2) (a) as 6(2)(d) provide monitoring the affairs or conduct of the Political Party so as to ensure their compliance with the Constitution and this Act and the mediation of any conflict or disputes by persons or Parties. Secondly, reference in the Act is made to the Constitution in sections 11, 14(1) section 16 and section 27(1)(a). Thirdly, there is an interrelationship between the Supreme Court and the Commision and this can be found in sections 17 and 27 of the Political Parties Act, 2002. Furthermore, there are other functions of the Act of the Commission, which justify its classification as a very important body. Its functions smack of constitutionality and in my opinion rank more than an administrative body. I regard an act of an administrative agency as purely administrative or executive in character, or it may be of a legislative or of a judicial nature. Courts review an administrative Act on a different number of grounds, all of which mayor may not be relevant to the facts on any particular case or within the term of a particular statute. Administrative Act depends on the governmental functions the particular exercise of which the Court is asked to review and provide some remedies certiorari are available only if the function in question is judicial or quasi-judicial. Apart from express statutory provisions review by the Court of a decision of an administrative agency is based on allegation that the agency has acted ultra-vires.

[p.43]

The Supreme Court is an appellate Court and not a reviewing Court and may only review its own decision in exceptional circumstances. In my considered view, I would regard and consider the Commission as a body with attributes greater than that of an administrative agency and for the absence of a better appropriate word will call it an administrative body with quasi-judicial powers in , terms of section 125 of the constitution Act, No.6 of 1991.

Having held that the status of the Political Parties Commission may be likened to that of a quasi-judicial body, it is pertinent at this stage to examine the Political Parties Act 2002 to ascertain whether there is provision for it to entertain the petition of the Appellants/Petitioners. The relevant provision of the Act is in section 6 which reads as follows:

"6(1) the object for which the Commission is established is the Registration and supervision of the conduct of Political Parties in accordance with the Constitution and this Act.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of subsection (1), it shall be the function of the commission-

(a) To monitor prejudice or conduct of Political Parties so as to ensure their compliance with the constitution this Act and with the terms and conditions of their registration;

(b) To monitor the accountability of Political Parties to their membership and to the electorate of Sierra Leone;

(c) To promote political pluralism and the spirit of constitutionalism among Political Parties;

(d) When approached by persons or parties concerned to mediate any conflict or disputes between or among the leadership of any Political Party or between or among Political Parties; and

(e) to do all such things as well contribute to the attainment of the object stated in subsection (1)".

The petition of the Appelant/Petitioner is the eligibility of Mr. Berewa as leader of the Sierra Leone, Peoples Party while he is vice President of the Republic of Sierra Leone.

It certainly, in my opinion, does not fall within the ambit of section 6 of the Act and therefore the Commission was not competent to offer the advice. It ought to have disabled itself and declined the request. Indeed section 76(1) and 76(1)(h) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone, Act No.6 of 1991 were included in the petition the interpretation and enforcement of the Constitution have received judicial interpretation and is uncalled for in the case before us. The authority for such an interpretation and/or enforcement of the provision of the Constitution is squarely at the door step of the Supreme Court see sections 124 and 127 of the Constitution.

There is express relationship between the Commission and the Supreme Court and they share a common feature in that both are creatures of statute. It follows that the jurisdiction in what ever sense that nomenclature might be based, must be express and in writing.

Thus there is the express right of appeal from the Court of Appeal to this Court and in the absence of express provision the Court cannot by itself assume, confer power or jurisdiction on itself nor can [p.44] parties before it do so to it. This is even so not withstanding the provision to secure protection of the law as is provided in subsections 2 and 3 of section 23 of the Constitution. Access to the Court is a constitutional right which the executive cannot in law abrogate unless it is specifically so permitted by Parliament. On the other hand it is not the responsibility of the Court to update the laws in the country; that secred or sacrosanct responsibility is that of the executive and legislative.

This brings me to the issue as to whether having held that the Appellants/Petitioners cannot use the Political Party Commission, to vindicate whatever rights they may have in their petition, they can invoke the provisions of the Supreme Court if such rights involve the interpretation or enforcement of the constitution, then it is the responsibility of the Supreme Court. But I have already held and still hold that the interpretation or enforcement of the Constitution does not appear to exist in the present appeal.

It appears to me that the relevant constitutional provision that touches and concerns it is subsection 4 of section 35 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone which reads:

"35(4) no Political Party shall have as a leader a person who is not qualified to be elected as Member of Parliament".

Other provisions, although not mentioned in the appeal and which need consideration are sections 16, 17 and also section 27 of the Political Parties Act 2002. Taking them serially, and first section 16 deals with powers of the commission to refuse registration of Political Parties, section 17(1) deals with any association aggrieved by a decision of the Commission refusing its application, such an association may appeal to the Supreme Court. Two observations must be made. Firstly, it is the refusal of registration and secondly the right is that of the association and not a Political Party. Admittedly, this is not defined in the Political Parties Act, but subsection 8 of section 35 of the Constitution makes it abundantly clear i.e. the difference between an association and a Political Party. They are two distinct entities. The first Appellants/Petitioners are a Political Party and not envisaged in subsection 17(1) of the 2002 Act.

Section 17(2) permit an association instead of appeal to the Supreme Court may apply to the Commission to reconsider its decision not to register the association as a Political Party Again the emphasis is on an association as opposed to Political Parties and it is in respect of refusal of registration. Lastly, section 27 of the Act of 2002 deals with cancellation of the registration of any Political Party, whereas by subsection 5 of section 35 of the Constitution or section 16 of the Act of 2002 it is not allowed to operate or continue to operate or function as a Political Party.

I find no legal basis expressly or impliedly to accommodate subsection 4 of section 35 of the Constitution and that subsection 5 of section 35 of the Constitution and sections 16, 17 and 27 of the 2002 Act relate to refusal and/or cancellation of Political Parties. In the circumstance the Supreme Court cannot lawfully adjudicate on the appeal which is not properly before it.

I suspect a lacuna in the law, which cannot be filled by regulation under section 32(1) of the Political Parties Act 2002, the provision reads:

"32(1) the Commission may make such regulation as may appear to it to be necessary or expedient for giving effect of this Act".

On the other hand, Parliament may wish to extend the provision of subsection 6 of section 35 of the Constitution which reads:

"Section 35(6) subject to the provision of this Constitution and in furtherance of the provisions of this section, Parliament may make laws regulating the registration, functions and operations of political Parties".

[p.45]

Section 35 of the Constitution is not an entrenched provision and can be amended without a referendum and may be extended to confer power on the Commission and/or the Supreme Court to hear and determine such issues or matters.

The result is that this Court lacks jurisdiction to determine the appeal. The appeal is accordingly struck out and each party to bear its costs.

HON. MS. JUSTICE U.H. TEJAN-JALLOH, JSC

[p.46-47]

SEMEGA-JANNEH J.S.C.

I have had the opportunity of reading in draft the leading Judgment by my learned brother, Ade Renner-Thomas, Chief Justice. I agree with him on the reasoning and conclusions reached on the issues of locus standi of the Appellants and jurisdiction of this Court in respect of the appeal. The appeal relates to significant constitutional issues, and I therefore consider it important and useful to give our individual perspective of the Judgment of this Court.

The Sierra Leone Peoples Party, (S.L.P.P.) at its Party Conference held on the 3rd and 4th September, 2005, at Makeni, on the 4th September, 2005, nominated Mr. Solomon Ekuma Berewa, who was and continues to be the Vice President of the Republic of Sierra Leone, the Party's candidate for the Presidential Elections under Clause VI (b) of its Constitution which reads:

“The party Conference shall nominate a candidate for the Presidential Elections.”

As a consequence, Mr. Berewa became the Leader of the SLPP by virtue of Clause V2c of the Party's Constitution which states:

"There shall be a Presidential Nominee of the Party whose nomination shall be determined at the Party Conference. He shall automatically become the Leader of the Party after such a nomination. He shall be the political head of the party’s and shall at future presidential elections be the party's Presidential candidate with discretion to choose his running mate as his Vice President, in consultation with the National Executive council. He shall up-hold the constitution of the party."

The people's Movement for Democratic Change (P.M.D.C.) by letter of its Secretary General dated Friday 16th June 2006 to the Political Parties Registration [p.48] Commission (P.P.R.G.) petitioned the eligibility of Mr Berewa as Leader of the S.L.P.P. whilst holding the Office of Vice President

The Petition in essence alleged that Mr. Berewa as Vice President of Sierra Leone and at the same time being the Leader and Presidential Nominee of the S.L.P.P. for the forthcoming Presidential Elections contravenes the provisions of the Political Parties Act No.3 of 2007 and the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991 (Act No.6 of 1991), namely:

Section 14(1) of the Political Parties Act, 2002 (as amended) which provides:

"A Political Party shall not have as a founding member as a Leader of the Party or a member of its executive body, whether, national or otherwise, a person who is not qualified to be elected as a member of Parliament under the Constitution."

Section 35(4) of the Constitution, 1991, provides:—

"No political Party shall have as a Leader a person who is not qualified to be elected as a Member of Parliament."

And Section 76(i) (b) which provides no person shall be qualified for election as a Member of Parliament.

"If he is for the time being the President, the Vice President, a Minister or a Deputy Minister under the provisions of this Constitution"

The determination of the question, in my view, involves interpretation and construction of the relevant statute~ relative to the aforesaid provisions. The question that arises as a result is whether the P.P.R.C. has the jurisdiction (or mandate) to perform such a task. I have carefully perused the Political Parties Act 2002 and find nothing empowering the P.P.R.C. to determine the question or such other questions. This is hardly surprising since, if the contrary were the case, such provisions would be in conflict with Section 124(1) (a) of the Constitution, 1991. For clarity, the whole of Section 124 is reproduced hereunder as follows:—

[p.49]

"124(1) The Supreme Court shall, save as otherwise provided ill Section 122 of this Constitution, have original jurisdiction, to the exclusion of all other Courts—

(a) in all matters relating to the enforcement or interpretation of any provisions of this Constitution and

(b) where any question arises whether an enactment was made in excess of the power conferred upon Parliament or any other authority, or person by law or under the Constitution.

(2) Where any question relating to any matter or question as is referenced to in subsection (1) arises in any proceeding in any court, other than the Supreme Court shall stay the proceedings and refer the question of Law involved to the Supreme Court for determination; and the Court, it which the question arose shall dispose of the case in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court."

Clearly, the Constitution, 1991, by the aforesaid Section, gave the Supreme Court the jurisdiction in all matters relating to the enforcement and interpretation of the provisions of the Constitution, 1991, to the exclusion of all other courts — not to speak of bodies that have no judicial or adjudicating powers. In short, the Petition required the P.P.R.C. to perform a task that it has no power in law to perform.

A distinction must be, made between a situation where, as in the instant case, the P.P.R.C. is required to delve into complex issues of interpretation of constitutional and other statutory clauses" Juxtaposing sections of the Constitution 1991 with sections in the Political Parties Act 2002 to arrive at and give a determination of the constitutional issue in question for all and sundry and a situation where the P.P.R.C., in performing its routine function, has to make a finding of fact or make a decision as to the fact, by which process there is an implicit or explicit expression of a view of the constitutional position.

[p.50]

It is unfortunate; that the language of the Petition is couched in such a manner that required the PPRC to give a determination of the meanings and effect of the cited sections of the Constitution 1991 and the Political Parties Act, 2002, for all. An approach to the P.P.R.C alleging a breach or a contravention of a matter contained in subsection (1)(a)(b) or (c) of Section 27 of the Political Parties Act, 2002, and requesting the PPRC to inquire into the matter and act pursuant to Section 27(1) is appropriate. After a reasonable period elapses and the PPRC takes inappropriate action or fails to act at all, it should be open to the concerned party to consider and decide on what legal step or process if any to take in order to have the P.P.R.C. take appropriate action.

The use of the word "Petitioners" in the title of this appeal, is a clear indication, in my view, that the Appelant's/Petitioners intended, the petition to be understood and taken as in a legal usage.

It is abundantly clear, in my considered view, that the P.P.R.C. is not a court or a tribunal or adjudicating body. The Political Parties Act, 2002, has not clothed the P.P.R.C. with the attributes of a Court Tribunal or adjudicating body.

If the above views are correct, is there a proper basis for the Petition?

For the purpose of dealing with the question posed, let us first examine the establishment and functions of the P.P.R.C.

The Political Parties Act, 2002, was enacted pursuant to Sections 34 and 35 of the Constitution, 1991. The Political Parties Act 2002 gave effect to the intendment of the provisions of Sections 34 and 35 of the Constitution, 1991, by establishing the P.P.R.C and bestowing it With its functions. The functions are broadly stated and are contained in Section 6 of the Political Parties Act 2002 and it provides:—

"6(1) the object for which the Commission is established is for the registraiion and supervision of the conduct of political parties in accordance with the Constitution and this Act.

[p.51]

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of subsection (1) it shall be the function of the Constitution

(a) to monitor the affairs or conduct of political parties so as to ensure their compliance with the Constitution, this Act and with the terms and conditions of their Registration;

(b) to monitor the accountability of political parties to their membership and to the electorate of Sierra Leone;

(c) to promote political pluralism and the spirit of constitutionalism among political parties;

(d) When approached by the persons or parties concerned, to mediate any conflict or disputes between or among the leadership of any political party or between or among political parties; and

(e) to do all such things as will contribute to the attainment of the object started in subsection (1)"

It can be seen from the cited functions above that it is not a function of the P.P.R.C. to determine questions posed, such as that raised by the Petition, which requires it to determine the interpretation of provisions of the Constitution, 1991, which as stated earlier, the Supreme Court has jurisdiction to the exclusion of all other courts in accordance with Section 124(1)(a) of the Constitution, 1991, re-produced above.

The P.P.R.C, on its Part, replied to the Petition by a letter stated 21st July 2006 in these words:

"As an ordinary citizen Solomon Ekuma Berewa is qualified to become a member of Parliament. But while serving as Vice President of the; Republic of Sierra Leone, he cannot become [p.52] a Member of Parliament at the same time.

This is because of the existence of the separation of powers, as no one individual citizen can become a member of any two or three arms of Government simultaneously, that is,

1. The Legislature which comprises the Speaker and Members of Parliament.

2. The Executive comprising the Vice President and Cabinet.

3. The judiciary comprising the Chief Justice and members of Superior Court of Judicature.

Because of the aforementioned the Political Parties Registration Commission of the view that Solomon Ekuma Berewa is qualified to contest for the Office of the Presidency of the Republic of Sierra Leone."

The P.M.D.C and its secretary-General (Appellants herein) being dissatisfied with the above quoted view (or "decision") of the P.P.R.C. appealed to this Court. The Sierra Leone People's Party (S.L.P.P.) and the Chairman were made Respondents in this appeal.

It seems to me this Court has to settle two questions and can only proceed to hear the appeal if both answers are in the affirmative. The questions are as follows:—

1. Has the P.M.O.C. approach to the P.P.R.C. for the determination of the question raised by the Petition any or proper basis in law?

2. Are the Appellants properly before this Court?

It has already been shown that the P.P.R.C. is not competent to determine the question in that it has no jurisdiction to interpret the provisions of the Constitution 1991; original [p.53] Jurisdiction in all matters relating to the enforcement or interpretation of any provisions of the Constitution, 1991, is the exclusive preserve of the Supreme Court by virtue of Section 124(a) of the Constitution,1991.

The written statement of the Appellants case indicates that the Petition was made pursuant to sub sections (1) and 2 of Section 6 of the Political Parties Act 2002 and at the hearing of this appeal on Tuesday the 5th June 2007, in answer to a question from this Court, the Appellants' learned Counsel answered that the basis on which the Petition was brought is Section 6 of the Political Parties Act 2002 which provides the functions of the P.P.R.C. With due respect to learned Counsel, I disagree. In my considered view there is no provision in Section 6 of the Political Parties Act, 2002, that gives the PPR.C. jurisdiction in matters relating to the interpretation of the Constitution, 1991 or provides a basis upon which the P.MD.C. could bring the Petition.

In the circumstances, I am of the view, and I so hold that the answer to the first question is: No.

In respect of the second question, the written statement of the Appellants case at page 11 of the Record, states that "the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to entertain the Appellants Appeal filed herein is derived from Section 35(7) of the national Constitution .....". Subsection (7) of Section 35 states as follows:

"Any association aggrieved by a decision of the Political Parties Registration Commission under this section may appeal to the Supreme Court and the decision of the Court shall final"

It appears clear to me that the decision referred to must relate to matters arising out of the provisions of Section 35 of the Constitution, 1991. In my considered opinion, Sections 16 and 17 of the Political Parties Act, 2002, are substantially a re-enactment of Section 35 and more specifically subsections (4)(5) and (7) of the Constitution, 1991. For clarity and ease of reference, I hereunder reproduce the section in full. Section 35 of the Constitution is as follows:—

[p.54]

"35(1) Subject to the provisions of this section, political parties may be established to participate in shaping the political will of the people, to disseminate information on political ideas, and social and economic programmes of a national character, and to sponsor candidates for Presidential, Parliamentary or Local Government elections.

(2) The internal organization of a political party shall conform to democratic principles, and its aims, objectives, purposes and programmes shall not contravene, or be inconsistent with, any provisions of this Constitution.

(3) A statement of the sources of income and the audited accounts of a political party, together with a statement of its assets and liabilities, shall be submitted annualy to the Political Parties Registration Commission, but no such account shall be audited by a member of the political party whose account is submitted.

(4) No political party shall have as a leader a person who is not qualified to be elected as a Member of Parliament.

(5) No association, by whatever name called, shall be registered or be allowed to operate or to function as a political party if the Political Parties Registration Commission is satisfied that—

(a) membership or leadership of the party is restricted to rnembers of any particular tribal or ethnic group or religious faith; or

(b) the name, symbol, colours and motto of the party has exclusive or particular significance or connotation to members of any particular tribal or ethnic group or religious faith; or

(c) the party is formed for the sale purpose of securing or advancing the interests and welfare of a particular tribal or ethnic group, [p.55] community, geographical area or religious faith; or

(d) the party does not have a registered office in each of the Provincial Headquarter towns and the Western Area.

(6) Subject to the provisions of this Constitution, and in furtherance of the provisions of this section, Parliament may make laws regulating the registration, functions and operation of political parties.

(7) Any association aggrieved by a decision of the Political Parties Registration Commission under this section may appeal to the Supreme Court and the decision of the Court shall be final.

(8) For the purposes of this section the express—

"association" includes any body of persons, corporate or incorporate, who agree to act together for any common purpose, or an association formed for any ethnic, social, cultural occupational or religious purpose: and

"political party" means any association registered as a political party as. prescribed by subsection (5)."

And Section 16 of the Political Parties Act, 2002, states:

"16 Pursuant to subsection (5) of Section 35 of the Constitution the Commission shall refuse to register as a political party any association by whatever name if the Commission is satisfied that—

(a) the membership or leadership of the association—

(i) is restricted to members of any particular tribal or ethnic group or religious faith; or

[p.56]

(ii) includes a non-citizen or a person prohibited from membership or leadership of a political party under the Constitution or this Act;

(b) the name, symbol, colour or motto of the association has exclusive or particular significance or connotation to members of any particular tribal or ethnic group or religious faith; or

(c) the association is formed for the sole purpose of securing or advancing the, interests and welfare of a particular tribal or ethnic group, community, geographical area or religious faith; or

(d) the association does not have a registered office in each of the provincial headquarters - towns and the Western Area; or

(e) the association concerned has contravened any provision of the Constitution or this Act regarding its formation or application for registration as a political party.

Section 17 of the Political Parties Act, 2002, which states as follow—

17.(1) Any association aggrieved by a decision of the Commission Refusing its application for registration may appeal to the Supreme Court made up of three justices whose decision shall be given within thirty days of the hearing of the appeal.

(2) An association may, instead of appealing directly to the Supreme Court under subsection(1), apply to the Commission to reconsider its decision not to register the association as a political party.

(3) If the Commission refuses the application made to it under subsection (2) or fails to register the association as a political party within seven days of that application, the association may [p.57] then appeal to the Supreme Court and subsection (1) shall apply, mutatis mutandis."

deals with appeals against any decision of the P.PR.C refusing an application by an association for registration as' a political party by reason of matters arising out of the provisions of Section 16.

I am of the firm view that a decision by the P.P.R.C. under subsection 7, of Section 35 of the Constitution, 1991, must be confined to a refusal to register an association as a political party, as in Section 16 of the Political Parties Act, 2002, and the aggrieved association may then take action under subsection 7; and de-registration. By virtue of section 17(1) of the Political Parties Act, 2002, only an association that is refused registration can appeal to the Supreme Court against the decision of the P.P.R.C. refusing to register the association. The P.M.D.C. is a political party by registration under the provisions of subsection 12(1) of the Political Parties Act, 2002 and not an association. The Secretary-General who is the 2nd Appellant is simply an individual. Since the terms "political party" and "association" are not defined in the Political Parties Act, 2002, and since sections 16 and 17 are re-enactment of Section 35 of the Constitution, 1991, resort for their respective meaning could be found in subsection (8) of Section 35 of the Constitution, 1991, which states:

"(8) For the purposes of this Section the expression—

"association" includes any body of persons, corporate or incorporate, who agree to act together for any common purpose, or an association formed for any ethnic, social cultural or Religious purpose; and "political party" means any association registered as a political party as prescribed by subsection (5)"

The combined effect, in my view, of these definitions in subsection (8) is that once an association is registered as a political party, it ceases to refer to itself or be referred to as an association Support for this view can be found in the use and effect of the two respective expression in various sections, in particular, subsections 11 (1), 12(1) and 13 [p.58] (3), section 16 and subsections 18(1) (2) and (4) of the Political Parties Act, 2002. The result is that the Appellants. Respectively, not being an association cannot bring an appeal under section 17 of the Political Parties Act, 2002, or subsection 7 of Section 35 of the Constitution 1991.

However, in the case of cancellation of a registration, the P.P.R.C. would have to apply to the Supreme Court for an order to cancel the registration of any political party under the provisions of Section 27 of the Political Parties Act, 2002, which provides as follows:—

"27 (1) without prejudice to any other penalty prescribed by this Act or any other enactment, the Commission may apply to the Supreme Court for an Order to cancel the Registration of any Political Party where that party;

(a) is by virtue of subsection (5) of section 35 of the Constitution or section 16 not to be allowed to operate or continue to operate or function as a political party;

(b) has contravened any provision of the Constitution or this Act or;

(c) Submits any statement to the Commission, including any declaration made under section 20 or 21, which is false in any material particular.

(2) The Supreme Court shall give its decision on an application under subsection (1) within thirty days of the filing of the application by the Commission.

(3) Where the application for the order under subsection (1) is granted by the Supreme Court, the Commission shall cancel the registration of the political party and thereafter, no person shall—

(a) summon a meeting of members or officers of the political party;

[p.59]

(b) attend or make any person attend a meeting in the capacity of a member or officer of the political party;

(e) publish a notice or advertisement relating to a meeting;

(d) invite persons to support the political party;

(e) make a contribution or loan to funds held or to be held by or for the benefit of the political party or on behalf of the political party; or

(f) give a guarantee in respect of any funds referred /0 in paragraph (e).

(4) Any person who contravenes subsection (3) commits an offence and shall be liable on conviction to fine not exceeding Le.5000,000.00 or to a term of imprisonment not exceeding one year or to both such fine and imprisonment."

It seems to me that provision for an aggrieved political party in respect of a deregistration of the concerned political party by the P.P.R.C. are not provided for in the Political Parties Act 2002 for the simple reason that the P.P.R.C. itself has to apply to the Supreme Court for an order for cancellation of the registration of any political party and can only cancel a political party's registration if the Supreme Court granted an Order to that effect. It can safely be assumed the Supreme Court will grant such an Order only after exhaustive enquiry upon proper basis.

In the same vein, I do not think there is provision in either the Political Parties Act, 2002, or the Constitution, 1991, for an aggrieved party, association or political party, to appeal to the Supreme Court against a refusal (or failure) by the P.P.R.C. to apply to the Supreme Court for the cancellation of the registration of an alleged offending political party pursuant to Section 27(1) of the Political Parties Act, 2002. In the case of refusal (or failure) by the P.P.R.C to apply for cancellation of registration of a political party, any [p.60] party or association of political party should consider and decide what course of action, if any, to take to compel the P.P.R.C. to act pursuant to subsection 27(1) of the Political Parties Act, 2002.

The answer to the second question, in my view, is: No. In the premises, I conclude and hold that this Court has no jurisdiction to hear the appeal and, accordingly, the appeal is hereby struck out.

Parties to bear their respective costs of the proceedings.

SGD.

HON. MR. JUSTICE G.B. SEMEGA-JANNEH

[p.61]

V.A. WRIGHT. JSC:

The Appellants by a petition dated the 16th day of June 2006 address to the Political Parties Registration Commission pursuant to section 6(1)(21) of the Political Parties Act No.3 of 2002 as amended questioned the eligibility of the 1st Respondent to have as its Leader and Presidential Nominee Mr. Solomon [p.62] Ekuma Berewa while he was serving as the Vice President of the Republic of Sierra Leone in contravention of section 14(1) of the Political Parties Act No.3 of 2002 as amended as well as sections 35(4) and 76 (1)(h) of the constitution of Sierra Leone, Act No.6 of 1991.

On the 25th June 2006 the Leader and Presidential, Nominee Mr. Solomon Ekuma Berewa and who is still Vice President responded to the petition by letter. The 2nd Appellant sent a reply to the response of Mr. Solomon Ekuma Berewa.

The Political Parties Commission proceeded to hear the petition in the absence of the Chairman who was out of the country on medical grounds and subsequently delivered its decision on the 21st July 2006 dismissing the petition on the following terms:

"As an ordinary citizen Solomon Ekuma Berewa is qualified to become a Member of Parliament. But while serving as Vice President of the Republic of Sierra Leone, he cannot become a member of Parliament at the same time".

This is so because of the existence of the separation of powers; as no one individual citizen can become a member of any two or all three arms of Government simultaneously, that is:

1.The legislature which comprises the speaker and members of Parliament

2. The Executive comprising the President, Vice President and Cabinet.

[p.63]

3. The Judiciary comprising the Chief Justice and members of the Superior Court of Judicature.

Because of the aforementioned the Political Parties Registration Commission is of the view that Solomon Ekuma Berewa is qualified to contest for the office of the Presidency of the Republic of Sierra Leone.

The Appellant being dissatisfied with the decision appealed under section, 35(7) of the National Constitution to the Supreme Court on the 18th January 2007.

The grounds of appeal are as follows;

1. That in the light of the provision of sections 34, 35, 75, and 76 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 2992. Act No.6 of 1991 in particular sections 35(4) and 76(1) (h) of the said constitution as well as the provisions of sections 6(1) and (2) (a-e) 14(1) and 27(a) and (b) of the Political Parties Act 2002 Act No.3 of 2002 (as amended) the Political Parties Registration Commission, in its decision of 21st day of July 2006 filed to address the crucial and all important question contained in the Appellants/Petitioner Petition of 16th June 2006 as to "whether in the light of the aforesaid provision of section 14(1) of the Political Parties Act No.3 of 2002 (as amended) and sections 35(4) and 76(1)(h) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.6 of 1991 Mr. Solomon Ekuma Berewa as vice President of the Republic of Sierra Leone and Leader of [p.64] the Sierra, Leone People's Party (SLPP) is not contravening the aforesaid provision.

2. That notwithstanding the provisions of section 5(3) and (4) of the Political Parties Act 2002 aforesaid the Commission in proceeding to determine the said petition in the absence of the Chairman deprived itself of the Judicial oversight that the Chairman's presence would have brought to bear its decision.

3. That the Political Parties Registration Commission determined the Appellants/Petitioners Petition and reached a decision on it without. A Response from the Respondents.

4. That the aforesaid decision of the Political Parties Registration Commission is against the weight of the petition field by the Appellant/Petitioners.

The reliefs sought from the Supreme Court are;

1.To set aside the decision of the Political Parties Registration Commission for the aforesaid reasons and to substitute one in favour of the Appellant/Petitioners.

2. Such further or other relief to be granted to the Appellants/Petitioners as the justice of the case requires.

On the 31st day of January 2007 the Supreme Court ruled that the instant Appeal be governed by the Rules of the Supreme Court Act No. 1 of 1982 relevant to Civil Appeals from the Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court and that [p.65] for the purposes of compliance with the provision of these rules as far as the, instant appeal is concerned the same shall be deemed to have been filed and duly served on the 31st January 2007.

At the hearing M.P. Fofanah Esq., for the Appellant argued ground 1 and stated that section 35 (7) of the Political Parties Commission Act gives jurisdiction to this court, and that the 2nd Appellant who is secretary general of the 1st Appellant is an interested party to the petition having in fact petitioned the Respondent for an on behalf of the Appellant. He stated that the Appellant had a special interest of which their case will be affected citing Civ.App.SC.2/2005 Samuel Hinga Norman V. Sam a Banya and others unreported and the Nigerian case of Morehbishe and 2 others vs. Lagos State House Assembly (2002) 3 134.

He submitted that both sections 35(4) and 76(h) of the National Constitution should be read together. The product of that joint reading or construction should be further construed together with section 14(1) of the Political Parties Act No.3 of 2002 and section 35(2) of the National Constitution. Also that section 75 should be read subject to the provisions of the section 76 of the National Constitution, including section 76(1) (h) thereof.

On ground 2 Counsel for the Appellant Charles Margai Esq., concluded that notwithstanding the provisions of section 5(3) and (4) of the Political Parties Act 2002 the Commission in proceeding to determine the said Petition in the absence of its Chairman deprived itself of the necessary "Judicial" oversight that the [p.66] Chairman's presence would have brought to bear on its decision. He submitted that the qualification for a Chairman as defined in the Act was not the same as the Acting Chairman and that the decision would have been different had it been given by the chairman.

On ground 3 Counsel for the Appellant said that the Political Parties Registration Commission determined the Appellant's Petitioners' Petition and reached a decision on it without a response from the Respondents. He submitted that the purported response from "Solomon Ekuma Berewa was contained in a letter 28th June 2006 written on the letter head of the Vice President and signed as Vice President and Leader of the SLPP.

On ground 4 he said that the decision of the Political Parties Registration Commission was; against the weight of the Petition filed by the Appellants/Petitioners. "

Counsel for the Respondents on ground 1 stated that Solomon Ekuma Berewa is qualified to be a member of Parliament in accordance with section 75 of the Constitution Act No.6 of 1991 and Leader of the Party and does not in any way offend Section 76(1)(h). He reiterated that the limitation alleged by the Appellants on the office of President, if intended to be part of the Constitution would have expressly stated as part of section 46 alongside subsection (2) of that section which states the office which the President must "relinquish or vacate" upon his election. Also that section 76(1) (h) of the Constitution could not have been intended to operate as a general disqualification provision since [p.67] the function is contained in the conditions of qualification under section 75 of the constitution. Therefore the person referred to in section 35 is not determined by section 76(1)(h) but rather by section 75.

Counsel for the Respondent in reply said that ground 2 was without merit. On ground 3 Counsel for the Respondent said that the Respondent were not obliged to respond and that the Political Parties Commission could have given their decision without any response from the Respondent.

On ground 4 he adopted the arguments on ground 1 & 3 and that the petition was based on the erroneous interpretation given to section 76(1)(h).

Since the question of jurisdiction was never raised by Counsel for the appellants, the Chief Justice the presiding Justice posed several questions to Counsel on both sides on the question of whether this court had jurisdiction to hear this matter. Charles Margai Counsel for the Appellants stated that he relied on the Appellants case, and what was said at the hearing.

Having listened to the arguments of the case on both sides the first question posed in my mind is whether the Political Parties Commission as established by Statute the Political Parties" Registration Act No.3 of 2002 referred to in section 34(1) of the Constitution is a tribunal or a quasi tribunal. The meaning of a Tribunal was defined in Garner's Administrative Law page 375 as any statutory body which comprises most of the following characteristics.

(i) It is independent of the administration and decides cases impartially as between the parties to it. This feature serves to distinguish "The tribunal remedy" [p.68] from what that of the internal administrative review" of a decision which, may sometimes be offered by a department.

(ii) It reaches a binding decision in relation to the case heard. This serves to distinguish tribunals from inquiries.

(iii) Its decision will usually be reached by a "panel" or bench of tribunal Member is rather than a one adjudicator.

(iv) It will adopt a procure akin to rather simpler and, more flexible than, that of a Court of law.

(v) It will have a permanent existence the tribunal have been established specifically to deal with a particular type of case or with a number of closely related types of case. See Garner's Administrative Law page 375.

The powers given to the Political Parties Commission are contained in section 12, 16, 17 and 27 of the Political Parties Act No.3 of 2002 (as amended). Section 12 reads:

Subject to sections (2) and (3) on the expiration of sixty days after the Date of the publication of the Government Notice referred to in sub Section (3) of section 11, the Commission shall if satisfied that all the provisions of the Constitution and this Act with respect to registration have been complied with, register the association as a political party.

(2) Where within sixty days period referred to in subsection (1) any [p.69] Objection has been brought to the notice of the commission it shall not register the association until the objection has been disposed of sot of the satisfaction of the commission.

(3) If (a) The Commission upholds the objection referred to in subsection (2) or

(b) Enquiries made under subsection (5) of section 11 disclose that any of the particulars submitted with the application for registration is false or incorrect for the commission shall refuse to register the association and cancel the provisional certificate issued to the association under subsection (3) of section 11.

(4) The commission shall upon registering an association as a political party issued to that association a final certificate of registration which shall be evidence that the provisions of the Constitution and this Act with respect to registration have been complied with.

(5) No Political Party shall organize or hold any public meeting unless it has been issued with the final certificate of registration by the Commission under subsection (4).

Section 16 reads:

[p.70]

"Pursuant to subsection (5) of section 35 of the constitution the commission shall refuse to register 'as a political party an association by whatever name called if the commission is satisfied that:

(a) The membership or leadership of the association:

(i) is restricted to members of any particular tribal or ethnic group or religious faith or

(ii) includes a non-citizen or a person prohibited from membership or leadership of a political party under the constitution of this Act.

(b) The name, symbol, colour or motto of the association has exclusive or particular significance or connection to members of any particular tribal or ethnic group or religious faith or the association is formed for the sole purpose of securing or advancing the interest and welfare of a particular tribal or ethnic group, community, Geographical area or religious faith or

(c) the association does not have a registered office in each of the provincial headquarters towns and the western area or

(d) the association concerned has contravened any provision of the Constitution or Act regarding its formation or application for Registration as a political party".

Section 17 reads

"Any association aggrieved by a decision of the commission refusing its [p.71] Application for registration may appeal to the Supreme Court made up of three justices whose decision shall be given within thirty days of the hearing of the appeal.

Section 27 reads:

Without prejudice to any other penalty prescribed by this Act or any other Enhancement the Commission may apply to the Supreme Court for an order to cancel the registration of any Political Party where that party;

(a) is virtue of subsection (5) of section 35 of the constitution or section 16 not be allowed to operate or continue to operate or function as a Political Party.

(b) has contravened any provision of the Constitution or this Act or

(c) submits any statement to the Commission including any declaration made under section 20 or 21, which is false in any material particular.

Reading these above sections 12, 16, 17 and 27 together I am of the opinion the political Parties Commission is a quasi tribunal.

The Political Party Registration Commission can be subject to a judicial review. When a statute confers jurisdiction for "Powers" on an agency to be executable in certain defined circumstances questions of law can arise as to actual conditions [p.72] i.e. interpretation of the statute and questions of fact may also arise whether those factual preconditions exist. Jurisdictional questions must be determined.

The Supreme Court has original jurisdiction to grant reliefs under sections 122(1), section 124(1), 127(1), 127(2) and 171(16) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No.2 of 1961.

Let me turn my mind as to whether this court has jurisdiction to hear this matter under section 35 (7) of the National Constitution as stated in the case for the Appellants. The Appellants contended that the Political Parties Registration Commission did not give a determination on the matter. As far as, the Political Parties Commission are concerned they never gave a decision on the points raised in the petition by the Appellants. In reality looking at the petition could the Political Parties Commission give a decision legally on all the points raised? Since I am not going into the merits of the appeal I will not make any pronouncement on this point. The Appellants are asking this court to cancel the registration of the SLPP the Respondents herein by an appeal to this court.

Challenging on jurisdictional grounds is where a statute has conferred a power not "at large" but rather to be exercisable only in certain defined circumstances. The meaning of jurisdiction has been defined in many authorities see SC.No.2/2005 Samuel Hinga Norman and Sama Banya [p.73] and others and the SLPP dated 31st August 2005 unreported. In re. Moshiehene of Kumasi Abdulrahman Abubaki 1 Ghana Law Report 1999 2000 p. 189 Acquah JSC. Said: "an Application for a review founded on want of jurisdiction is obviously one falling within the ambit of exceptional Circumstances resulting in a miscarriage of justice. For jurisdiction is so fundamental in the adjudication of any dispute that whenever it is that an adjudicating authority had no jurisdiction in the matter it purported to determine, its proceedings and judgment can be quashed.

Section 35(7) of the Political Parties Registration Act 3 of 2002 states "any association aggrieved by the Political Parties Registration Commission under this section may appeal to the Supreme Court and the decision shall be final The act goes on to define association and political party. As I earlier said the Political Parties Registration Commission did not give a decision on all the points raised and the appeal to the Supreme Court by the Appellants never stated the precise grievance they were complaining about and section 35(5) of the Constitution does not help the Appellants in my view. It is my submission that section 35 (7) and section 17 of the Political Parties Act No.3 of 2002 be read together where a clear distinction could be found! Section 17 already referred to states that a person aggrieved by a decision of the commission refusing its application for registration may [p.74] appeal to the Supreme Court; made up of three Justices. The Appellant could not have come under this section since five Justices sat on the matter. From the legal definition of a political party section 35 subsection 8 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone defines "association" includes any body of persons corporate or incorporate, who agree to act together for any common purpose, or an association formed for any ethic, social, cultural occupational or religious purpose and "Political Party" means an association registered as a political party as prescribed by subsection 5. A Political Party is an association before registration and becomes a Political Party after registration and this ceases to bear according to the interpretation of section 35(5) of the National Constitution. On refusal this is buttressed by section 11 (1) 12(1) and 3, section 16 and 18(1) (2) and (4) of the Political Parties Act. On the failure of Commission to register the association to become a political party, then that association could be seen as "an association aggrieved for the purpose of the right to appeal by subsection 7 of section 35. The Appellants in this case cannot be an aggrieved party, since they had become a political party after registration. When this section 35(7) is raised together with section 17 of the Political parties Act it is seen clearly, that it is limited to an association which has been aggrieved by a decision of the PPRC refusing application for registration. Neither the first or second Appellant is deemed to be an association within the meaning of [p.75] section 35(7) of the Constitution and therefore could not avail themselves under this provision.

Learned Counsel for the appellants in their case and arguments stated that they had the legal capacity to bring this action, because it was an association registered as a political party pursuant to section 12 of the political parties. Act No.3 of 2002 and that the 2nd Appellant was an interested parties to the petition having petitioned the Respondents for and on behalf of the 1st Appellant. It is worthy to note that the respondents were silent on this issue throughout the proceedings.

It is obvious' that both the 1st and 2nd Appellant lacked legal capacity to sue under the provisions since they came to the Supreme Court not as association aggrieved within the meaning of section 35(7) of the constitution but as a political party.

The Appellants could not even invoke section 27(1)(b) of the Political Parties Act No. 3 of 2002 since it is the Commission who could apply to the Supreme Court for an order to cancel the registration of any political where that party has contravened any provision of the Constitution.

I also hold that section 35(7) confers a right of appeal on a class of persons, and that the Appellants could not come directly to this court by way of appeal.

[p.76]

In the circumstances I hold that this court lacks jurisdiction to entertain this appeal and therefore cannot go into the merits of this case.

The appeal is struck out.

No order as to costs.

TOLLA THOMPSON J.S.C.

I have had the opportunity of reading the judgment of my Lord the Chief Justice and my learned brothers and sisters. I concur in their reason and conclusion. I will merely add my own view and treat the matter this way which I think is supplementary to what they had said.

This appeal is against the "decision" of the Political Party Registration commission: which I shall call for the purpose of this judgment "the commission" given on the 21st July 2006. Pursuant to a petition brought before the commission, by the appellant on the 16th June 2006.

Brief Background

The 1st appellant is a political party registered by the commission as the People's Movement for Democratic Change PMDC on the 16th June 2006 1st appellant through the 2nd appellant petitioned the commission pursuant to sections 6(1) (2a) (2e), 14(1) 27(1) of the Political Parties Act No 3 of 2002 (as amended) which I shall call for the purposes of this judgment the Act and sec.35(4) and 76(1)(11) of the Constitution 1991 Act No. 6 of 1991 which again I shall call for the purposes of this judgment the Constitution) about the eligibility of Mr. Solomon Ekuma Berewa as leader of the Sierra Leone People’s Party whilst holding the office of the Vice President of the Republic of Sierra Leone.

The respondent also is a political party, registered political party under the name and title Sierra Leone Peoples Party (SLPP). On the 14th September 2005 the respondent held a convention in Makeni in which the Vice President Mr. Solomon Ekuma Berewa was elected leader and presidential candidate of the said party.

It seems to me that it was the election of the vice President as leader of the SLPP which precipitated the appellant petition to the commission. The petition was on these lines:

The Chairman

Political Party Registration commission

C/o Roxy Buildings

Walpole Street

Freetown

Dear Mr. Chairman

Re: Petitioning under sec. 611(2a), (2e), 14(1) and 27(1) of the Political Parties Act No. 3 of 2003 (as amended) and sec 35(4) and 76 l(h) of Act No. 6 of 1991

On behalf of the People's Movement for Democratic Change I hereby petition the illegibility of Mr. Solomon Ekuma Berewa as leader of the Sierra Leone Peoples Part whilst holding the office of Vice President of the Republic of Sierra Leone.

Sect 6 (1) of the Act No. 3 of 2002 as amended provides the object for which the constitution is established is the registration and supervision of the conduct of political parties in accordance with the constitution and this Act.

Sec 6 (2) provides without prejudice to the generality of sub section (1) it shall be the function of the Constitution

[p.79]

(a) to monitor the affairs or conduct of political parties so as to ensure their compliance with the constitution, the Act and with the terms and conditions of their registration

(b) to do all such things as well contribute to the attainment of the object stated in sub section (1)

sec 14(1) of the Political Parties Act No. 3 of 2002 as amended provides:

a political party shall not have as a founding member or as a leader of the party or a member of the executive body whether national or otherwise; a person who is not qualified; to be elected as a member of parliament under the Constitution sec 35 (4) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No. 6 of 1991 provides:

"no political party shall have as a leader a person who is not qualified to be elected as a member of parliament"

76 (1) of the Constitution of Sierra Leone Act No. 6 of 1991 provides:

No person shall be qualified for election as a member of parliament.

Sec 76 (1) (h)

If he is for time being the president, vice president, a minister or a deputy minister under the provision of this Constitution.

The Sierra Leone Peoples Party (SLPP) is a registered political party in Sierra Leone.

The Peoples Movement for Democratic Change (PMDC) is a registered political party in Sierra Leone.

The leader of the Sierra Leone Peoples Party is Mr. Solomon Ekuma Berewa who incidentally is the Vice President of the Republic of Sierra Leone and was such when on the 4th September 2005 he was elected leader of the said party at a convention held in Makeni.

The petition seeks to have determined whether in the light of the aforesaid provisions of sec. 14 (1) of the Political Parties Act No. 3 0[2002 (as amended and sec. 35 (4) and 76 (1) (h) of the constitution of Sierra Leone Act No. 6 of 1991, Mr. Solomon Ekuma Berewa as vice President of the Republic of Sierra Leone and leader of the Sierra Leone Peoples Party (SLPP) is not contravening the aforementioned provisions

It is further submitted that the answer to the preceding paragraph is in the affirmative then you petitioner request that immediate steps be taken to invoke the provision of section 27 (I) (b) of Act No. 3 of 2002 as amended in conformity with the spirit and intendment of sec. 6 (1) (2) (a) and (2) (e) of the said Act.

Sec. 27 (1) (1) of Act No. 3 of 2002 as amended provides without prejudice to any other penalty prescribed by the Act o/any other enactment the commission may apply to the Supreme Court for an order to cancel the registration of any political party where that party has contravene any provision of the constitution or the Act.

Yours faithfully

Ansu B. Lansana

Interim Secretary-Ceneral (PMDC)

[p.780]

It is obvious that Appellant was bringing to the notice of the Commission the purported violation of the Constitution and the act, and was asking the Commission to invoke its powers.

Based on this petition, the Commission gave a decision which is the subject of the appeal before us. I shall hereunder reproduce the decision and I quote:

"As an ordinary citizen Solomon Ekuma Berewa is qualified to become a member of parliament but while serving as Vice President of the Republic of Sierra Leone he cannot become a member of parliament at the same time".

This is so because of the existence of the separation of powers as no one individual citizen can become a member of two or all three arms of government simultaneously that is:

1. The Legislature which comprise the Speaker and Members of Parliament

4. The Executive comprising the President, Vice President and the Cabinet

5. The Judiciary comprising the Chief Justice and Members of the Superior Court of Judicature.

Because of the aforementioned, the Political Parties Registration Commission is of the view that Solomon Ekuma Berewa is qualified to contest for the office of the Presidency of the Republic of Sierra Leone."

The Appeal

It was the above decision of the Commission that precipitated the appeal to this court by the 1st and 2nd Appellants.

Particulars of misdirection and error of law respectively

1. That the commission erred in considering Mr. Solomon Ekuma Berewa response dated 28th June 2006 purportedly made in response to the appellant/petitions dated 16th June 2006 was a response to the respondents.

2. That the commission in its deliberation and hence decision failed to appreciate that sec. 75 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991 Act No. 6 1991 aforesaid should have been read subject to sec 76 (1) (h) of the said Constitution.

3. That the commission in its deliberation and conclusion misconceived the spirit and intent of sec. 76 (1) (h) of the said Constitution.

Grounds of appeal

1. That in the light of sec. 34, 35, and 76 of the Constitution of Sierra Leone 1991 Act No. 6 of 1991 in particular section 35 (4) 76(1) (h) of the said constitution as well as the provision of sec. 6(1) and (2) (a-e) 14 (1) and 27 1(a) and (b) of the Political Parties act 2002 Act. No. 3 of 2002 as amended the Political Parties Registration Commission in its decision of the 21st day of July 2006 failed to address the crucial and all important question contained in the appellant/petitioners petition of the 16th June 2006: as to whether in the light of the aforesaid provisions of sec. 14 (1) of the Political Parties Act No, 3 of 2002 (as amended) and 35 (4) and 76 (1) (h) of the Constitution, of Sierra Leone Act. No. 6 of 1991. Mr. Solomon Ekuma Berewa as vice President of the Republic of Sierra Leone and leader of the Sierra Leone Peoples Party (SLPP) is not contravening the aforementioned provision.

2. Notwithstanding of sec 5 (3) and (4) of the Political Parties Act 2002 aforesaid the commission in proceeding to determine the said petition in the absence of its [p.81] Chairman deprived itself of the necessary judicial oversight that the chairman's presence would have brought to beer on its decision

3. That the political Parties Registration Commission determined the appellant/petitioner petition and reached a decision on it without a response from the respondents.

4. That the aforesaid; decision of the Political Parties Registration Commission is against the weight of the petition filed by the appellant/petitions.

Reliefs sought from the Supreme Court are:

1. To set aside the decision of the Political Parties Registration commission for the aforesaid reason and to substitute one in favour of the appellant/petitions

2. Such further or other relief to be granted as the justice of the case requires.

I note by the petition, the appellant is calling on the Commission to interpret the Constitution, as in my view there cannot be any determination of the issue without interpretation of the Constitution which will set the Commission at collusion course with the Supreme Court — whose function it is to interpret the Constitution — Sec 124 of the Constitution.

General powers of the Supreme court to entertain an appeal is spelt out in sec. 123 (1) and (2) of the constitution and rule 6(1) of the Supreme Court Rules 1982 P.N. No. 1 of 1982.

Sec. 123 (1) states:

An appeal shall lie from the judgment decree or order of the Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court:

(a) As alright in any civil cause or matter

(b) As of right in any criminal cause or matter in respect of which a n appeal has been brought to the court of Appeal from a judgment decree or order of the High Court of Justice in the exercise of its original jurisdiction

(c) With leave of the Court of Appeal in any criminal course or matter where the Court of appeal is satisfied that the case involves a substantial question of law or it is of public importance

Also: In pursuance of rule 5 (2) of the Supreme Court Rules the Supreme Court prescribed by means of practice direction No 1 of 1007 the practice and procedure applicable to this appeal and in order to comply with the Supreme Court rules the appeal is deemed to have been filed on the 31st January 2007 instead of 18th January 2007. However the appeal herein is by Notice filed in pursuant of Sec. 35(7) of the Constitution and the appellant has asked the Supreme Court to exercise to reverse the decision of the Commission.

This appeal however the notice filed is in pursuant to sec. 35 subsection 7 of the Constitution with respect to the activities, supervision and control of political parties sec. 35 (6) of the Constitution was enacted.

Sec. 35(6) enacts thus

"subject to this provision of the constitution and in furtherance of the provision of this section, parliament may make laws regulating the registration function and operation of political parties"

[p.82]

I will not be wrong to say that in consequence of the provision above the Political Pal1ies Act No. 3 of 2002 was belatedly enacted. The title of the Act is as follows:

"Being an act to establish the Political Parties Registration commission for the registration and regulation of the conduct of political parties in accordance with sec. 34 and 35 of the Constitution and to provide for related matters".

JURISDICTION/LEGAL CAPACITY

The Supreme Court by this appeal has been asked to exercise its appellate jurisdiction — the power vested in the Supreme Court to correct the legal errors of the commission if there is one and if possible to reverse the decision accordingly. However before addressing the issues in the appeal, there are serious preliminary points which call for this courts attention.

The appellants in their case at page 11 of the record contend that the Supreme Court has jurisdiction to entertain this appeal and that the appellant appeal is derived from sec 35 (7) of the constitution. Mr. Fofana, learned counsel for the appellant submitted that the commission failed to address their complaint and as the Supreme Court has the jurisdiction to hear the appeal they have come to seek redress.

As I said in the case of Hinga Norman v. Sierra Leone Peoples Party (SLPP) and others Se. 2/2005 that "with reference to a country's judicial system jurisdiction simply means the authority which the court has within that system to decide on matters litigated before it. It is usually conferred by the constitution of that country or statute. Therefore if a constitution of a country states that court has no jurisdiction in certain matters; it is impossible for it to assume jurisdiction". In my humble opinion the principle of law holds good and it makes no difference whether the court sits on a matter in its original or appellate jurisdiction.

It is usually the case that when a court is confronted with litigation it is of the ought most importance, for the court to ascertain whether it has the jurisdiction to entertain the suit — see Central Bank of Nigeria v. Barclays Bank 1976: 6sc 179 page188. However a court ought not to decline jurisdiction in a specific case if in doing so it will defeat the purpose for which it was set up, provided in the circumstance of the specific case its assumption of jurisdiction does not amount to a violation of its jurisdiction, but can rather be logically deduced as a necessary adjunct of the jurisdiction under which it operates. I hasten to add here that this does not apply to this case under my pen.

The point on jurisdiction will not be complete if no mention is made of competence, of the court as jurisdiction is in some cases inextricable linked with competence of the court. Indeed in the opinion of some jurist the two are sometimes interchangeable. In Adeigbe v. Kinshino 1965 a ALL N.L.R. 249 the Supreme Court of Nigeria inter alia held "that a court is competent when it has lawful authority to hear and determine the proceedings before it"

The appellant in its case dealing with locus standi contends that they are legally qualified to petition the respondent herein as well as appeal against the decision of commission on the grounds stated in their notice of appeal; by virtue of the fact that the 1st appellant is an association registered as a political party pursuant to sec. 12 of the Act and was presented with a final certificate. Mr. Fofana in his submission said the 1st appellant is a political party registered under sec.2 (1) of the Act. The 2nd appellant is the secretary general of the 1st appellant and has a special interest in the petition.

Since the issue of locus standi-legal capacity to some extent is linked with the court jurisdiction to entertain the matter it follows therefore that if the appellant in this case has no locus standi to come before us this court will have no jurisdiction to entertain the matter.

What then should be the outcome of a matter whenever the twin juggernaut plea of jurisdiction and capacity is successfully raised in the lower or in the appeal court by the defendant/respondent or the court suo motu?

Buraimoh Oloriode and Lothers vs Simeon Oyebe & others 1984 Sc. I and RTEAN V NURTN 1992 NWLR 381 AT 391 are instructive on this point.

In Buraimoh Oloriode and others v Simeon Oyebi and others supra the Supreme Court of Nigeria held that where a Plaintiff has no locus standi the action should be struck out and not be dismissed since the action has not been tried. And in RTEAN V NURTN supra. The Supreme Court stated the reason for striking out instead of dismissing such an action. The court said:—

"When a court hold that a plaintiff has no locus standi in respect of a claim the consequential orders to be made is striking out of such claim and not a dismissal of the claim. The rational is that the holding that a plaintiff has no locus 'standi goes to the jurisdiction of the court before which such an action is brought when the question that the plaintiff has no locus standi to institute an action arises, all that is being said in effect is that the court before which such an action is brought cannot entertain the adjudication of such an action. The court cannot dismiss the merit of which it is not competent to enquire into.

A dismissal presumes that the court looked into the claim and found it wanting on merit. But it can only so look into the claim if the claim falls within the court jurisdiction.

A dismissal postulates that the action was properly constituted."

ISSUES

I shall now go in to consider whether this court has jurisdiction to hear the appeal pursuant to Sec. 35 (7) in view of the capacity of the Appellants.

Let me say the issue before the court does not touch or fall under section 16 and 17 of the Act as both sections concern the refusal of registration of an Association to register as a political party.

A political pal1y cannot invoke sec. 12 of the Act to register and by extension a political party cannot avail itself of the provisions under sec. 16 and 17 of the Act. It will not be out of place if I say a little about this. There is no dispute or disagreement the 1st Appellant — People Movement for Democratic Change is a political party registered pursuant to Sec.12 of the Act. Indeed the 2nd Appellant in the Petition to the Commission stated that the 1st Appellant is a political party. There is also no dispute that the Commission was established for "registration and regulation of the conduct of political parties" in accordance with section 34 or 35 of the Constitution: the 1st Appellant is one of such parties. I dare say 1st Appellant was right to petition the Commission on the purported infraction of the Constitution by the Respondent. Before I continue let me digress a little and say a few words about the Commission as an administrative body. Much play has been made of tile function and powers of the Commission. I therefore pose the question whether it has got authority to act within the legal frame work of the Constitution or is it a mere administrative body as a watch dog so to speak over the activities of political parties? The short title of the Act is to establish the Commission to register and regulate the conduct of political parties. The object is enacted under 6 (i) as follows:—

"The object for which the Commission is established is for the Registration and supervision of the political parties in accordance with the constitution" and Sec. 6 (2) went, on to state the function of the Commission, which are:—

(a) To monitor the affairs or conduct of the parties so as to ensure their compliance with the Constitution.

(b) To monitor the accountability of political parties to their membership and electorate of Sierra Leone

(c) To promote political pluralism and the spirit of constitutionalism among political parties.

(d) When approached by the persons or party concerned to mediate any conflict or dispute between or among the leadership of any political party or between or among political parties.

(e) To do all such things as will contribute to the attainment of the object stated in sub Section 1.

It seems to me that from the title, object and function, the Commission cannot be looked upon as a decision making entity as it does not possess the requisite authority; it is not a judicial or quasi judicial tribinal, if anything it is an administrative body charged with the responsibility to supervise, monitor and control the activities of political parties.

Section 11 makes it mandatory for an Association wishing to function as a political party to apply to the Commission for Registration. If the Commission is satisfied with the Association, the Association will then be registered after sixty days as a political party. As evidence of registration a certificate will be issued to the new political party. See Sec. 12 of the Act.

Sometimes the Commission can refuse to register — and the reasons for such refusal is contained in Sec. 16 of the Act.

It states:—

Pursuant to sub section 5 of Sec. 35 of the Commission shall refuse to register as a political party if the association by whatever name called if the Commission is satisfied that

(a) The membership or leadership of the association

(i) is restricted to members of any party, tribal ethnic group or religion or

(ii) includes a non citizen or a person prohibited from membership or leadership of a political party under the constitution or this Act;

[p.85]

(b) The name, symbol, colour or motto of an association has exclusive or partly Significant or connotation to member of any particular tribe or ethnic group or religious faith

(c) The Association is formed for the sole purpose of securing or advancing the interest and welfare of a political tribal or ethnic group, community, geographical area or religious faith;

(d) The Association does not have a registered office in each of the Provincial Headquarter towns in the Western Area or

(e) The association concerned has contravened any provision of the constitution of the Act regarding its formation or application for registration.

On a close scrutiny of section 35 (5) of the Constitution it is plain and clear to me that Section 16 and 17 of the Act is a reinvention or carbon copy of section 35 (5) of the Constitution.

Under Section 17 an Association which has been refused registration of the provision under Sec. 16: May appeal to the Supreme Court pursuant to Sec. 17 sub section 1. It states:

"Any Association aggrieved by the decisions of the Commission refusing its application for registration may appeal to the Supreme Court made up of three Judges whose decision shall be given within 30 days of the hearing of the appeal."

This is a provision by which an association can appeal against the refusal of the Commission to register a political party it has no relevance to any other infraction of the act.

The main issue concerns section 35 (7) of the Constitution which I think is the pivot of the appeal.

The vehicle by which the appellant has invoke our jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. The appellant says that the Commission has failed to address its complaint about an infraction of the Constitution — To be precise the eligibility of the Vice President Mr. Solomon Berewa Vice President of the Republic of Sierra Leone leader of the S.L.P.P. and want to determine such eligibility in the affirmative. It urges the Commission to apply to the Supreme Court for an Order to cancel the certificate of the Respondent. The Commission failed to act accordingly. That is why the appeal is before us.

Sec. 35 (7) states:—

"Any association aggrieved by the decision of the Political Party Commission under this section may appeal to the Supreme Court and the decision of the Court shall be final."

Section 35 (8) states:—

"For the purposes of this section the expression Association include anybody of person corporate or incorporate who agree to act together for any common purpose or an association formed for any ethnic, social, cultural occupational or religious purpose and "political party means by association registered [p.86] as a political party as prescribed by sub section 5."

I note a Political party carries the same meaning both in the act and the Constitution. See Section 1 of the Interpretation Section of the Act and Section 35 (8) an interpretation section for the purposes of sec. 35. The indication here is that a political party has to be an association before registration and on registration it becomes a political party. This same process applies to section 18 of the Act. On merging the political parties revert to an association and on registration it becomes a political party once more.

At the latter stage of the proceedings Mr. C. F. Margai learned Counsel for the Appellants in his usual eloquent forceful and yet jocular style was adamant in his submission that section 35 (7) sub section 7 is the right vehicle, by which to ground this appeal: My reaction to this submission is that learned counsel will want the court to invoke logic to accommodate the appellant under sec. 35 subsection 7 and say if the association includes corporate or incorporate body or person and that political party means an association, then a political party will mean corporate and incorporate body. With the greatest respect I cannot accord that intention to the legislature. Plainly and succinctly political party means an association after registration under sec. 12 of the act.

The Association appealing under this section must be aggrieved by the decision of the Commission. Does the Appellant fall into the category of aggrieved association? But first let me caution myself that in interpreting the expression an "aggrieved association" I should not put any interpretation on it that would work injustice, hardship or inconvenience unless it is clear that such was the intention of the legislature.

In a dictionary of legal terms the expression "aggrieved party means one who has been injured or has suffered a loss, a person aggrieved by a judgment, decision or decree whenever it operates prejudicially and directly upon her property monetary or personal right and it is used almost exclusive in a legal context". — The meaning will be clearer if I refer to the dictum of Lord lames in Re Sidebottom exparte Sidebottom 1880 14 Ch P.459. He put it this way..... "That a man aggrieved means "a man who had suffered a legal grievance, a man against whom a decision has been pronounced which has wrongfully deprived him of something or wrongfully refused him something or wrongfully affected his title to something."

I am incline to adopt Lord lames definition and apply it to an aggrieved association with the context of sec.35 (5).

CONCLUSION

In view of what I have said I do not think that the Appellant can avail itself of the provision of sec. 35(7) to appeal to this court. This provision is exclusively applicable to an aggrieved association which presupposes that the association has not yet been registered as a political pasty under sec.12 of the Act. In any case I do not consider the appellant an aggrieved association — It does not fall within such category as it is not qualified under section 35 (7) to be so described."

With regard to sec. 27(1) of the Act I agree that the appellant can urge the Commission to invoke the above section; that is, if the Appellant comes properly before the Commission on matters contained in the fact, the Commission may apply to the Supreme Court. But if the Commission fails or refuses to apply to the Supreme Court the Appellant cannot seek redress by way of appeal to Supreme Court. The application to the Supreme Court under sec.27 (1) of the Act is the preserve of the Commission.

[p.87]

In the result I hold that this court has no jurisdiction to entertain this appeal brought by the Appellant. The appeal is struck out.

No order as to cost.

AMADU KOROMA ESQ. FOR THE APPELANT

MRS. J. KING FOR THE RESPONDENT

RENNER-THOMAS, C.J.

This is an appeal against the judgment of the Court of Appeal dated the 21st day of April 2004 in favour of Sorie Mansaray, the Plaintiff in the High Court. The said Plaintiff died before the determination of this Appeal and was ordered to be substituted by the Respondent herein. Thus all references to the Respondent herein include, where the context so permit one to the Plaintiff in the High Court. By the said-Judgment the Court of Appeal set aside that of the trial judge in favour of the Defendant (hereinafter referred to as "the Appellant") dismissing the claim of the Respondent and made the following orders:

"1.A declaration that the title to all that piece or parcel of land and hereditaments situate lying and being at 43 Will Street, Freetown in the Western Area of Sierra Leone vests in the Plaintiff

2. Damages for trespassing onto the plaintiff's land at 43 Will Street, Freetown in the sum of Le69,000.00 be paid to the plaintiff by the defendant.

[p.5]

3. An injunction restraining the defendant, by himself, his servants, agents, or howsoever otherwise from continuing their trespass onto the said land by remaining thereon or in any way dealing with the said land.

4. Costs of the proceedings in the court below and this appeal be costs to the plaintiff/appellant to be taxed if not agreed."

The Respondent's claim was for the following reliefs contained on the statement of c1aim:—

(1) A declaration of title of all that piece of parcel of land and hereditaments situate lying and being at 43 Will Street, Freetown in the Western Area of the Republic of Sierra Leone.

(2) Damages for wrongfully entering the plaintiffs land at 43 Will Street, Freetown, destroying property beacons and his fruit trees.

(3) An injunction restraining the said defendant, by himself, his servants. agents or howsoever otherwise from continuing their trespass upon the said land, by remaining thereon or in any way dealing with the said property.

For reasons which will become more apparent later in this judgment it is important to set out in extenso the particulars of the Respondent's claim as indorsed in the Writ of Summons and the defence filed by the Appellant herein in answer to the Respondent's claim.

The particulars of claim are as follows:—

"The Plaintiff is and was at all material times the owner and entitled to possession of a piece or parcel of land and hereditaments situate lying and being at 43 Will Street Freetown in the Western Area of the Republic of Sierra Leone a description whereof is as follows:—

"Starting from beacon marked FC591/80 on an bearing of 119°24' for a distance of 92.96 feet to beacon marked FC592/80 on a bearing of 221°01' for a distance of 147.0 feet to beacon marked FC593/80 on a bearing of 312°15' for a distance of 49.0 feet to beacon marked FC942/79 on a bearing of 22°43' for a distance of 134.0 feet to beacon marked FC591/80 which is the point of commencement thus enclosing [p.6] an area of 0.2247 acre or thereabout as is delineated on the Survey Plan numbered L.S. 694/80 dated 30th April 1980".

(1) The Plaintiff became seised of this said piece of parcel of land by means of a Statutory Declaration dated 17th December 1982 by the Plaintiff supported by Sorie Turay and Santigie Sesay registered as No.222 of page 30 in volume 22 of the Books of Statutory Declaration kept in the office of the Administrator and Registrar General Freetown.

(2) The predecessor in title of the plaintiff being his father Langima Mansaray (Deceased) had been in full, free and undisturbed possession of the said land for a considerable period of time preceding the date of the said Statutory Declaration as is evidenced therein.

(3) On or about May 1992 the defendant and his agents wrongfully and without any proper or lawful right or title entered the plaintiff's land removed plaintiff's beacon and destroyed his fruit trees. Thereafter the defendant set himself up as owner of the said property to the detriment of the plaintiff and his heirs.

(4) By reasons of the matters aforesaid the plaintiff has been subjected to humiliation and has suffered great mental anguish and stress and he has been deprived of the use and enjoyment of part of his said land and has suffered loss and damage.

PARTICULARS OF SPECIAL DAMAGE

(a) Two beacons destroyed at 2,500.00 each	=	Le5000.00
(b) Three pear trees at Le6,000.00 each	=	Le18, 000.00
(c) Four Guinea Mango trees at Le10,000. 00 each	=	Le40,000.00
(d) Banana Trees destroyed	=	Le6,000.00

Le69.000.00

(5) Despite repeated requests and demands by the plaintiff and his Solicitor to the Defendant to vacate the plaintiffs land he has still failed refused or neglected to do so and threatens and intends unless restrained by' an injunction from this honourable Court to continue in occupation of the said land and to trespass thereon. "

The defense filed on behalf of the Appellant stated as follows:—

[p.7]

"The Defendant cannot admit or deny paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 of the particulars of claim but will aver that the Will Street to which the same relate is not the same place or Street as "Off Morgan Street".

(1) The Defendant as to paragraph 4 of the particulars of claim will aver that he is the owner of a piece of parcel of land, situate, lying and being OFF MORGAN STREET, Freetown, by virtue of a conveyance of sale dated 17th January, 1989, registered as No. 71, at Page 99 in Volume 422 in the Book of Conveyances kept in the Office of the Registrar-General in Freetown, bounded.

(2) The Defendant will further aver as to paragraph 4 of the particulars of claim that neither the Defendant not his agents did the several acts complained of on the Plaintiff's land.

(3) The Defendant as to paragraph 5 of the particulars of claim will aver that the Defendant by his Solicitor fixed appointments on at least 2 occasions with the Plaintiff through his Solicitor to visit both the Plaintiff's land and the Defendant's land to ascertain any encroachment if any with the assistance of Surveyor but that the plaintiff failed to turn up as arranged. Further the Defendant will aver that if the plaintiff suffered as alleged in paragraph 5 of the particulars of claim, he the Defendant is not responsible or in anyway liable for same.

(4) As to paragraph 6 of the particulars of claim, the Defendant repeats paragraph 4 of this defense.

(5) Save as is hereinbefore specifically admitted, the Defendant denies each and every allegations of fact as if the same were set forth and denied seriatim ".

A reply was filed on behalf of the Respondent in the following terms:—

"(1) Save that the Plaintiff admits that "Will Street" is not the same as "Off Morgan Street", the Plaintiff denies paragraphs one (1) and two (2) of the Defence herein and repeats that he is the owner of the land and premises situate lying and being at [p.8] Will Street and numbered 43 Will Street for Municipal purposes".

(2) Paragraph three (3) and four (4) of the said Defence is categorically denied, the contents thereof being false, and the Plaintiff avers that locus was not visited by the Solicitors aforesaid because the Defendant failed to turn up on the appointed day as he had taken a Surveyor to the said land on the previous day.

(3) Save as is hereinbefore specifically admitted, the Plaintiff joins issue with the Defendant on his defense".

Based on the pleadings as set out above the Appellant, in my view, was not resisting the claim of the Respondent for a declaration that he was the owner of the piece or parcel of land described in paragraph (1) of the particulars of claim

I must hasten to state however that notwithstanding the fact that the Appellant did not resist the Respondent's claim for such a declaration the Respondent must satisfy the Court that he is entitled to such a declaration before it could be properly made.

In giving judgment in favour of the Appellant the learned trial judge found as a fact that the Respondent had failed to establish with any degree of certainty that the land the subject-matter of the Statutory Declaration relied on by the Respondent as proof of his title was indeed the same land that was allegedly being trespassed on by the Appellant. He went to state that this view was buttressed by the evidence of PW3, DW2, and DW3 to the effect that the two pieces of land were separate and distinct.

The learned trial judge concluded as follows:—

"It seems clear to me from the evidence of the aforementioned witnesses that two completely different parcels of land are involved. I am inclined to believe the evidence of these three witnesses. They impressed me as witnesses of truth. Moreover, DW3 is a Staff Surveyor attached to the Ministry of Lands and Housing. I would regard him as an independent witness.

[p.9]

I find as a fact that the defendant is and was at all material times of this act the fee simple owner [sic] and in possession of the entire land he occupies ". [emphasis mine]

When the matter came before the Court of Appeal that Court did not expressly upset the findings of the learned trial judge referred to above as to the location of the Respondent's land relative to that of the Appellant.

Indeed, Muria J.A. (as he then was) in delivering the reasons for the Judgment of the Court of Appeal on the 21st day of April 2004 had this to say:—

"The plaintiff claims title to his land, and which is not disputed by the defendant. In his defense the defendant neither admitted nor denied the plaintiff's claim. He simply relies on his claim of title to his land. The plaintiff's land is at 43 Will Street while the defendant's land is off Morgan Street. They are two separate lands, and are about 150 feet apart ".

He continued:—

"As to plaintiff's claim for declaration of title, the Court finds that the trial Judge erred in failing to make the declaration as claimed. The evidence puts it abundantly clear that the plaintiff's title to his land is incontrovertible. Exhibit A, the certified copy of which is Exhibit B, (Statutory Declaration) has never been challenged at all".

With the greatest respect to the learned Justice of Appeal it is not sufficient for a plaintiff s claim for a declaration of title to a piece of land to be supported by uncontroverted evidence simpliciter to entitle that plaintiff to such a declaration.

In a long line of cases reviewed by this Court in Macauley v Stafford and Ors (S.C Civ App No.l/73,judgment delivered the 13/7/76, unreported) and in the leading authority of Seymour Wilson v. Musa Abbess (Sup Ct Civ App 5/79, judgment delivered 17/6/81, unreported) it has been established that in action for a declaration of title the plaintiff must succeed on the strength of his title and not on the weakness of the defendant's title.

In other words, as stated by Webber C.J. in delivering the Judgment of the West African Court of Appeal in Kodolinye v. Odu [1935] 5 W ACA 336 at p.337-338)

[p.10]

"The onus lies on the plaintiff to satisfy the court that he is entitled on the evidence brought by him to a declaration of title. The plaintiff in this case must rely on the strength of his own case and not on the weakness of the defendant's case. If this onus is not discharged, the weakness of the defendant's case will not help him and the proper judgment is for the defendant. Such a judgment decrees no title to the defendant, he not having sought the declaration ".

This passage was cited with approval by Livesey Luke C.J. in the Seymour Wilson case (supra).

What then must a plaintiff who claims or a defendant who counterclaims for a declaration of title prove to be entitled to same?

In this regard, a distinction should be made between a documentary or paper title and a possessory title. In the Western Area of Sierra Leone, which used to be a Crown Colony before combining with the Protectorate of Sierra Leone to become the unitary State of Sierra Leone at independence in 1961, in theory at least, the absolute or paramount title to all land was originally vested in the Crown (in the same way as in England, the largest estate a person deriving title from the Crown can hold being the fee simple). After independence such absolute title was deemed vested in the State as the successor in title of the Crown. According to the State (formerly Crown) Lands Act, No. 19 of 1960, all grants of such title made by the Crown and later the State were said to be made in fee simple (see section 2 of the State Lands Act, No. 19 of 1960). Thus, a declaration of title in favour of a plaintiff without more is a shorthand for saying that plaintiff is seised of the said land in fee simple.

For a person relying on a paper title he must be able to trace his title to some grant by" the Crown or the State. This is how Livesey Luke" puts it in the Seymour Wilson case (supra).

"But in a case for a declaration of title the plaintiff must succeed by the strength of his title. He must prove a valid title to the land. So if he claims alee simple title he must prove it to entitle him to a declaration of title. The mere production in evidence of a conveyance in fee simple is not proof of a fee simple title. The document may be worthless. As a general rule the plaintiff must go further and prove that his predecessor in title had title to pass to him. And of course if [p.11] there is evidence that the title to the same land vest in some person other than the vendor or the plaintiff, the plaintiff would have failed to discharge the burden upon him. "

In the instant case, there is no question of making such an enquiry as all that the plaintiff relies on to establish his title is a Statutory Declaration, Exhibit "A". It is trite law that a Statutory Declaration is not a document of title. At best is might said to be an attempt to record evidence of how a person came to claim possessory title to a piece of land. It does not by itself establish the fact of a possessory title to entitle a person basing his claim thereon to a declaration of title. (See Bright v. Roberts (1964-66) ALR (S.L) 156).

A plaintiff who relies on the fact of possession by himself or his predecessor in title must prove more than just mere possession. It is true that proof that a claimant was in possession before the defendant is prima facie evidence of his having a better title than the defendant and that such prior possession raises a presumption that the claimant is seised in fee. As it is some times put colloquially "possession is nine-tenths of the law". However, if I may continue in that vein, to be entitled to a declaration of title he must prove that he has a better title not only as against the defendant but that there is no other person having a better title than himself.

How then can he prove this? He can do this by showing that the title of the true owner has been extinguished in his favour by the combined effect of adverse possession and the limitation statute. The nature of the root of possessory title is thus explained by Megarry and Wade:

"Limitation is thus not per se a mode of transferring property from one person to another. But it may operate as such when combined with the principle that adverse possession gives a title. If S (squatter) wrongfully takes possession of land belonging to O (owner), O immediately acquires a right action against S for recovery of the land. If O takes no action in twelve years (normally) his right of action becomes barred and his title extinguished by limitation. Scan no longer be disturbed by O, and as against the rest of the world S is protected by the fact of his possession. Possession by itself gives a good title against all the world except someone having a better legal right to possession".

In the instant case, apart from the Statutory Declaration admitted in evidence the Respondent did not adduce any independent evidence to show that he and those through whom he claims have extinguished the title of the true owner or that they have possessed the land for a time sufficient to exclude any reasonable probability of a superior adverse claim. In my opinion, for this reason alone, the Respondent cannot be said to be entitled to the declaration of title as claimed in the Writ of summons and I so hold. As a result, I would set aside the first order made by the Court of Appeal and to that extent the present appeal succeeds.

I now turn to the next claim which is for damages for trespass. It would appear that the learned trial judge did not direct his mind to the fact that though damages for trespass are frequently claimed together with a declaration of title to the land allegedly trespassed on the two claims must be considered as separate and distinct issues. For one thing, as has been established earlier in this judgment, a claim for a declaration of title demands a much higher degree of proof (see Dunstant E. John & Reuben L. Macauley vs. William Stafford & ors, (supra.)

In a case for trespass all the plaintiff has to prove is a better right to possession than the defendant. One way to do this is to show that he has a better title to the land. According to Livesey Luke in Seymour Wilson case (supra):

"But better title in the context of an action for trespass is not necessarily "valid" title. In a case for trespass the court is concerned only with the relative strengths of the titles or possession proved by the rival claimants. The party who proves a better title or a better right to possession succeeds, even though there may be another person, not a party, who has a better title than he ".

Thus, in the instant case, though the Evidence adduced by the Respondent may not be sufficient to entitle him to a declaration of title there was some evidence before the learned trial judge that he was in possession of a piece or parcel of land that he alleges that the Appellant was trespassing on. The Plaintiff in the Court below himself gave evidence that as far back as 1945 he had been in possession of the land in question. Apart from using the land for the purpose of growing fruit trees he also built a structure made of zinc and started to pay City Rates for the same. He then had this to say in support of his claim:

[p.13]

"The defendant first challenged my title in 1985. He started working in my land. I protested. Both of us reported at the Criminal Investigation Department (C.I.D.). At the C.I.D. they looked at our respective documents and conclude that mine is numbered 43 Will Street and the defendant property is situate at Morgan Street. Later C.I.D. personnel visited the same ……..

We made indications to the C.I.D personnel. When the defendant was asked about his claim to the land he said that some one sold to him. Therefore the defendant ceased to go to the land. Subsequently the defendant re-entered the said land. As a result I went to one Mr. Barber a Law Officer. An invitation was then sent to the defendant. Both of us appeared before the said Mr. Barber. It was revealed that my land was registered. He gave both of us his advice. Thereafter the defendant ceased going to the land. After a period of three years he re-entered the said land".

This evidence was never challenged or controverted in any way. The defendant never gave evidence at the trial. It is true that acts of possession on the part of the Appellant in respect of the land that the Respondent also claims could be inferred from the fact that he started to build a house thereon some time in 1985. Apparently, subsequent to 1985, a survey plan dated 6th December, 1988 was produced in his name and a Conveyance, Exhibit "B" executed in his favour in January 1988.

Based on the above evidence alone one might be tempted to conclude that the Respondent had a prior and therefore better right to possession.

But unfortunately, that was not all the evidence led at the trial. Further evidence led by both sides tended to raise some doubt as to the exact location of the Appellant's and the Respondent's land respectively.

Before going further to deal with this issue of the identity of the land the subject-matter of the alleged trespass it must be emphasized that it was agreed all round that both parties were claiming possession to some land or the other in the area of Will Street and Morgan Street respectively

In answer to a question put to him under cross-examination the Plaintiff, P.W.2, stated thus:

[p.14]

"It is true that Will Street is not Morgan Street. The Defendant lives at Morgan Street. It is true that the Defendant has land at Morgan Street ".

The licensed Surveyor, F.D. During, who gave evidence on behalf of the Plaintiff as P.W.3 prepared an encroachment plan which he tendered as Exhibit "H." Referring to Exhibit "H" he had this to say:

"On Exhibit "H" I can see the properties of the Plaintiff and the Defendant. The property of the Plaintiff is situate off Will Street and that of the Defendant is situate off Morgan Street",

Another licensed Surveyor, J.M. Samura, testified on behalf of the Defendant as D.W.2. He tendered what he described as an encroachment plan as Exhibit "M". I fail to see how this witness could describe Exhibit "M" as an encroachment plan when it clearly depicts the two properties in question at a distance from each other. He confirmed this in his oral testimony as follows:

"The property of the Defendant is situated off Morgan Street. The property of the Plaintiff is situated off Will Street. Will Street is not the same as Morgan Street. "

Under cross-examination D.W.2 went on further to testify as follows:

"It is true that the Plaintiff's land is not where it should be. [Emphasis mine] It is true that from the documents shown to me the two lands are apart".

A third surveyor gave evidence at the trial. This witness, R.A. Sandy, was not a licensed Surveyor but "a staff Surveyor who claimed that he was a Civil Servant attached to the Ministry of Lands and Housing". He gave evidence that the plans in Exhibit "B" and Exhibit "D" depicting the lands claimed by the Respondent and Appellant respectively were charted in Cadastral Sheet and that they did not overlap.

However, under cross-examination by Counsel for the Plaintiff he stated referring to Exhibit "H" the encroachment plan tendered by P.W.3;

"It appears correct to me"

[p.15]

He gave this answer despite the fact that like most of the other witnesses he had maintained that Morgan Street and Will Street are two different Streets and are about one hundred feet apart.

In my opinion, the apparent doubt about the exact location of the respective properties claimed by the Plaintiff and the Defendant, which seemingly was the basis for the trial judge's dismissal of the Plaintiff's claim, could have been cleared if P.W.3, D.W.2 and D.W.3, the three surveyors who testified at the trial, had accompanied the Court on the visit to the locus in quo.

Unfortunately, the only Surveyor present at the locus and who took measurements of the land in dispute was a certain Mr. Coker who never testified at the trial before or after the visit to the locus.

In the light of the above analysis of the available evidence what conclusion can this Court, as a Court of rehearing, reach as to the location and identity of the subject-matter of the trespass by the Appellant as alleged by the Respondent?

In this regard, it is my considered opinion that I can safely rely on the oral and documentary evidence adduced by P.W.3, Mr. During, and the short answer of D.W.3 relating to the correctness of Exhibit "H" given under cross-examination. Mr. During visited the land in dispute armed with both Exhibit "C" and Exhibit "D" copies of the Statutory Declaration and Conveyance of the Plaintiff and Defendant respectively. Armed with these documents he was able to produce Exhibit "H," an encroachment plan clearly showing the land claimed by the Defendant delineated on Survey Plan No. LS 2658/88 virtually overlapping that claimed by the Plaintiff delineated on Survey Plan No. LS 694/80. I say virtually overlapping because the extent of the encroachment is 0.0798 acre out of the total area of 0.0846 acre claimed by the Defendant in Exhibit "D". This is in contrast with a total of 0.2247 acre claimed by the Plaintiff in Exhibit "B".

P.W.3 also testified that the said properties are described as being off Will Street and off Morgan Street respectively as opposed to actually being on Will Street and Morgan Street respectively.

As stated earlier, neither the oral nor the documentary evidence adduced by P.W.3 relating to the alleged encroachment by the Appellant on the Respondent's land to the extent of 0.0798 acre as shown on Exhibit "H" was challenged or controverted in any significant way by the Defendant's [p.16] witnesses or his Counsel. Indeed, in the excerpt from his evidence quoted above D.W.3 acknowledged that Exhibit "H" the encroachment plan produced by P.W.3 appeared "correct" to him".

Indeed, if the learned trial judge had properly evaluated the evidence of P.W.3 and D.W.3 the only conclusion he could have arrived at was that there was an encroachment, if not an overlapping, in respect of the land claimed by the Appellant vis-a-vis that claimed by the Respondent. As a result I hold that the Appellant is indeed liable to the Respondent for trespass as claimed in the Writ of Summons.

The Court Appeal having found the Appellant so liable went on to order damages in the sum of Le69.000/00 without more. This award has not been challenged in any way. Suffice it to say I see no reason for interfering with it. I would therefore uphold the second order made by the Court of Appeal and to that extent the present appeal fails.

I shall now deal with the claim for an injunction. Before I do so, I must observe that the Plaintiff did not, as he could well have done, claim for recovery of possession of the land encroached upon by the Defendant. Instead the Plaintiff sought to obtain as it were the same objective by seeking a perpetual injunction in the following terms:

"restraining the said Defendant by himself, his servants, agents or howsoever otherwise from continuing their trespass upon the said land by remaining thereon or in any way dealing with the said property"

I say this because I read in the Case for the Appellant that the Appellant had been evicted from the property in dispute. This was not made an issue in this appeal But for what it is worth I can only say in passing that none of the orders made by the Court without more could be the basis of such eviction.

It is trite law that an injunction, unlike a claim for recovery of possession which is a remedy at law, is an equitable remedy and therefore could be granted and rejected at the discretion of the court.

As to the principles governing the grant or refusal of an injunction in a case such as the instant one the following passage to be found in Clerk and Lindsell on Tort is quite instructive:

"The grant of an injunction being an equitable remedy is always discretionary and this discretion belongs to the trial Judge: an p.17] appellate court may not substitute its own views on the merits of the case but may interfere only "if the Judge misdirected himself in law, took into account irrelevant matters or failed to take into account relevant matters ". The principles governing the exercise of the discretion differ according to the nature of the injunction sought. Where an injunction is sought to restrain the continuation of a wrongful act which interferes with the claimant's rights and is prohibiting in substance as well as in form, then in the absence of special circumstances, the claimant is entitled to his injunction "as of course", The most that a defendant can hope for is a suspension of the operation of the injunction to enable him to take steps to bring the nuisance (as it usually is) to an end". (18th ed; page 1639)

In this case, though the injunction was granted by the Court of Appeal it was in effect exercising the powers vested in the trial judge. Applying the principle stated in the passage just quoted from Clerk and Lindsell I see no grounds for interfering with the exercise of the said discretion by that Court. The injunction sought was a prohibitory one to restrain the continuation of a wrongful act, trespass by the Appellant on the Respondent's land. Having analysed the totality of the evidence I hold that there is evidence that unless restrained therefrom the Appellant by himself his agents or howsoever wise intend to continue the said trespass upon the said land by remaining thereon. In the absence of any special circumstances in the instant case I hold that the injunction was properly granted as of course.

Having said that in order to aid the Appellant/Defendant comply with the terms of the injunction the same should be worded more precisely and unambiguously. The finding relating to the trespass by the Defendant relates only to 0.0798 acre of the Plaintiffs land not the whole land which is imprecisely described simply as being at 43 Will Street Freetown. A more precise description of the land to which the injunction relates is as is contained in Exhibit "H" the encroachment plan produced and tendered by P.W.3. I shall vary the third order made by the Court of Appeal accordingly.

In the circumstances the appeal partly succeeds and I make the following orders:

(1) The first order of the Court of Appeal granting a declaration of title in favour of the Respondent herein is hereby set aside.

[p.18]

(2) The Order of the Court of Appeal awarding damages for trespass to the Respondent is hereby upheld.

(3) In lieu of the injunction granted by the Court of Appeal an injunction is hereby decreed restraining the Defendant, the Appellant herein, by himself, his servants, agents or howsoever otherwise from continuing to trespass on that portion of the Respondent's land measuring 0.0798 acre and delineated in the encroachment plan tendered herein and marked Exhibit "H".

(4) Each party to bear its own costs of the proceedings in this Court and in the Courts below.

On the first of November 1965, Standard Chartered Bank Sierra Leone Limited (Appellant herein and hereinafter referred to as "the [p.207] Bank") employed John Augustus Forewa (Respondent herein and hereinafter called "Mr. Forewa") as a clerk. He rose through the ranks and as at the time his services were terminated by letter dated the 23rd October 1992 (Exhibit C-1") he had reached the rank of manager and was aged forty-three (43) years old. The termination letter alleged that the Bank's investigation of Mr. Forewa revealed that he was negligent in his duties and guilty of misconduct; as a result his services were terminated with immediate effect.

The investigations referred to were in respect of allegations that Mr. Forewa during his tenure as manager of the Bank's Makeni branch had suppressed cheques instead of following the Bank's procedure in respect of the processing of cheques. The termination letter is the result of the investigations. Mr. Forewa was, at the time of his termination, paid one month's salary in lieu of notice and given his terminal benefits. Mr. Forewa protested the termination by a letter dated the 30th November 1992 (Exhibit 'D') and when he received no response he instructed his solicitor.

The solicitor caused a Writ to issue in which Mr. Forewa claims the following reliefs:

"a. The salary he would have earned up to and including the retiring age of 60 years (he being 43) years at an annual salary of Le.2,682,819.00 (Two Million Six hundred and eighty-two thousand eight hundred and nineteen Leones) with prospect of a salary increase to wit for 17 years.

b. Leave pay for 17 years at 15% of the Plaintiffs basic annual salary

AND

c. Rent subsidy for 17 years at 10% of the plaintiff's yearly basic salary.

d. Lunch allowance of Le.25,000.00 (Twenty-five thousand Leones) monthly

e. Monthly car allowance of Le.25,000.00 (Twenty-five thousand Leones). He also claims general damages

[p.208]

The learned Judge of the High Court, A.B. Raschid, J, after reviewing the evidence concluded that the Bank had breached the contract of employment in that the Bank, amongst others, failed to give Mr. Forewa a fair opportunity to defend himself and, therefore, gave judgment to Mr. Forewa. In his judgment, he concluded that since no contractual term for notice to terminate the employment was in evidence he would resort to the common law principle of reasonable notice and, after taking into account the circumstances "including the nature of the employment and the difficultly of getting such another or a like one", held that twelve months notice was reasonable. He accordingly awarded Mr. Forewa the following:

Eleven month's salary	—	Le.2, 459,250.08
Eleven month's car allowance	—	275,000.00
Eleven month's lunch allowance	—	275,000.00
Rent allowance of 11 months	—	368,887.00
Total	—	Le.3, 378,137.69

The Bank being dissatisfied with the judgment appealed to the Court of Appeal on the following grounds:

"1. That the learned Judge misdirected himself on the evidence when he held that there was no agreement relating to the notice to be given by the Defendants (the Bank) before terminating the Plaintiffs (Mr, Forewa's) employment. (Bracketed words added).

2. That the learned trial Judge erred in law in holding that in the absence of an agreement the Plaintiff was entitled to 12 months salary in lieu of notice of termination of his services.

3. That the judgment is against the weight of the evidence."

[p.209]

From the Grounds of Appeal it is clear that the Bank did not appeal the decision of A.B. Raschid.J that the Bank breached the contract of employment with Mr. Forewa by the manner the termination was carried out. Notwithstanding the fact that the breach of contract was not an issue in the appeal and that as a matter of fact the issue was not argued before the Court of Appeal, F.C. Gbow J. dealt with the issue and, rightly, without making any determination. The thrust of Counsel's arguments centered on what period of notice was applicable on the facts of the case.

The Court of Appeal in the judgment of F.C. Gbow J. examined the evidence and came to the same conclusion as the trial court that there was no acceptable evidence of a contractual term of notice. The court held that in the circumstances the Common Law principle of reasonable notice was the applicable yardstick and allowed twelve months as reasonable, with V.AD. Wright J.S.C. dissenting on this point, thus confirming the judgment of A.B. Raschid J. In the result, the Appeal was accordingly dismissed.

Once more the Bank was dissatisfied and appealed to this Court. The grounds, without the particulars, are as follows:—

(1) That the Court of Appeal failed to consider and give due weight to the available oral evidence given by P.W.1, P.W.2 and D.W.2 at the trial as to the quantum of notice required to terminate the Plaintiffs employment.

(2) The Court of Appeal erred in law in holding that twelve months' notice was reasonable in the circumstances of this case.

(3) The Court of Appeal erred in law when it held that the Appellants/Defendants were obliged to produce a copy of the Respondent! Plaintiff's Letter of appointment after Notice to produce was served on them.

[p.210]

This Court is now being asked to determine more or less the same issues raised in the hearings below, that:

1. There were some evidences to support a decision that there was a contractual term of one month notice to terminate the employment or payment of one month's salary in lieu.

2. If in the event the common law principle of reasonable notice applicable, whether twelve months notice is reasonable in the circumstances of the case.

The third ground of appeal is linked to the issue of a contractual term of notice and, in that regard, I will deal with the question in the course of this judgment.

Mr. Forewa's case is that the available evidence on contractual notice to terminate employment of the Bank's staff relates to one month's notice or one month's salary in lieu of notice but that this affects only non managerial staff below supervisory level. This is reflected in the collective agreement between the Bank and the Clerical Insurance Bank, Accounting, Petroleum, Industrial, and Commercial Employers Union (Exhibit "E") — the only written document evidencing a period for notice to terminate in evidence. This fact is confirmed by the evidence of the Bank's witness (DW2) and paragraph 4 of the statement Defence, Mr. Forewa also gave evidence that he was subsequently given a document (Exhibit 'F') which dealt with terms and conditions of Senior Staff. Exhibit 'F' apparently did not contain provision as to notice to terminate, Besides Exhibit 'F', Mr. Forewa was given in 1998 a pamphlet covering the terms and conditions of Service of Senior Staff. As in the case of the appointment letter, Mr. Forewa could not find the document.

The Bank's case is that by the contract of employment Mr. Forewa's "employment was terminable at any time at the discretion of either party by giving one month's notice or payment of one month's salary in lieu thereof", He relies on the evidence of P,'N. 1 (the Plaintiff), P.VV.2 and D.W.2.

Counsel for tile Appellant's argument that the evidence of P.W.1, P.W.2 and D.W.2 supported the Bank's contention that the requisite notice for the termination of Mr. Forewa's employment was rejected by both the trial court and the Court of Appeal. The evidence of Mr. Forewa (P.W.1) in page 42 lines 1 — 2 in which he says that the Bank's management never informed him that either side could give one month's salary in lieu of notice, and his evidence in the same page 42 lines 24 — 27 that as a permanent staff he could have left his employment by given one month's notice are not inconsistent or in conflict contrary to the submission of Counsel for the Appellant. In the first instance Mr. Forewa made a statement of fact hat he was not informed and in the second instance he felt he could terminate his employment by giving a month's notice. His two statements can equally be correct without being contradictory. This is not to say that the second statement was correct. One is not sure at what point in time Mr. Forewa was referring in response to a question from the Bank's Counsel in the trial court. The bank had permanent staff below supervisory level and thereby subject to exhibit "E". I am of the view that Mr. Forewa was merely expressing an opinion and not a matter of fact or law. In the event Mr. Forewa was wrong in his opinion or statement, does mere expression of that opinion or statement make it a fact of the employment relationship? The issue of notice is a question of fact evidenced by agreement and not by what one of the party thinks the agreement is.

The evidence of P.W.2, Albert Binga Bayoh, a Senior Employment Officer, Department of Labour, Bo, was called by the Plaintiff. I am not sure as to why he was called as a witness but I am certain that his evidence is not helpful at all in determining the issues. Under cross examination he speaks of an ordinary monthly paid worker giving one month's notice to terminate his employment and the employer being able to terminate the worker's employment for minor offence by giving him a month's salary in lieu. He also states that were there is no specific provision for termination that a month's notice is required on either side and where there is a specific contract the general law does not apply. What was the purpose of this cross-examination in eliciting such, answer? It appears the purpose was to tell the trial court what the law is. I am sure the witness had no [p.212] pretensions of knowing the law better than the trial court. His evidence in Chief was just as unhelpful. His evidence in chief was in effect telling the trial court that a vital element was missing in exhibits 'F' that is, provision for the termination of an employee's services. This is evidence that PW1 has already given and, of course, the trial court could know that by reading exhibit 'F'. I have spent time discussing the evidence of the witness only to illustrate the need for counsel to consider well the purpose of calling a witness or what counsel wants to elicit under cross-examination if it is all necessary to cross-examine.

The evidence Ayodele Randal. Head of Human Resources Division of Bank, does not further the Bank's counsel argument that either the Bank or Mr. Forewa could give the other ode month's notice or one month's salary in lieu. The witness's statement that "according to the terms and conditions of service either party can terminate by the giving of a salary in lieu" gives the impression or imply that there was a written document agreement containing terms and conditions of Mr. Forewa's employment. There is no such document in evidence to support counsel's contention. On the other hand if the witness wants it understood that the terms and conditions were given orally one would expect him to give evidence of the circumstances in which the said terms and conditions were given. One would also have expected her to say whether she was present at the time and, if not the source of the information. I conclude that she was only giving evidence as Head of Human Resources of the Bank and could not give any basis for the piece of evidence in issue. The piece of evidence seems to have been snatched out of the air as it has no basis and is not rooted into the ground. Such is the work of magicians who conjure up things from nowhere and not for witnesses who appear before the courts whose concerns are of facts and reality.

In my view the Court of Appeal (and the trial court before it), after due consideration of the evidence was right in coming to the conclusion that there was no plausible evidence of the period of notice that Mr. Forewa was contractually entitled as a Manager. I am of the considered opinion that ground one of the Grounds of Appeal has no basis and, therefore, fails.

[p.213]

In my considered view it is now settled law that in the absence of expressed stipulation or agreement on notice for the determination of the employment contract, a requirement of reasonable notice would be implied by the Common Law, and any termination of the employment contract by either party without reasonable notice being first given to the other or payment in lieu thereof, would be a breach of contract. See Payzu Ltd Vs Hannaford (1918) 2 K. B. 348; and Richard Vs. Koefod (1969) 3 WLR 1264. There is no predetermined yardstick of what constitute reasonable notice; decided cases may serve as a useful guide but each case depends on its peculiar circumstances, such as the nature of the job; the length of service; the age of the individual etc. The list is inexhaustible.

The real bone of contention between the Bank and Mr. Forewa is the question of quantum of damages. I have already stated that the finding of breach of contract by the trial court has not been appealed against and the issue that stands out now to be dealt with is the quantum of damages.

The Court of Appeal and the trial court before it resorted to the Common Law principle of reasonable notice and after due consideration reached the conclusion that twelve months was reasonable in the circumstances. Ground 2 of the Grounds of Appeal complains that twelve months in all the circumstances was wrong. I will now consider the issue. Mr. Forewa, a man of not much formal education, rose through the ranks from a clerk to the position of manager at the time he was wrongly dismissed after serving the Bank for 27 years. At the time of his dismissal there were only a few banks in the country. There was the very strong likelihood of word spreading in the small banking community of the actual reason for the banks dismissal of Mr. Forewa. There was also the likelihood of any potential employer, and in tile case of a Bank, certainty, requiring references. He was trained as a banker and moving into other job areas was going to be difficult.

The Court has not been provided with cases that dealt with the issue of reasonable period of notice in respect of dismissed bank employees. There are [p.214] a plethora of cases on printers dealing with reasonable notice. The case of Grundy and Sun Printing and Publishing Association (1916) 3 T.L.R 77 is one of them. The period of notice in these cases range from six months to twelve but the determination of the period of notice usually turned on the custom of the trade. I am inclined to follow the case of MASON v MAYOR, Alderman, Councilors and Citizens of Freetown — 1950-1956 — ALR SL 138 which by analogy, I think,. is closer to the instant case. In Mason case the employee was a waterworks man. He had worked for the Council and its predecessor for 19 years. He was not the Head of Department but the second in command, and was engaged in work for which there were only very few employers in the country (i.e. Sierra Leone) and he might have considerable difficulty in finding other suitable employment. In the Mayor's case Smith, CJ stated that "A reasonable notice therefore depends on the particular job and the particular circumstance of the employment" and after describing the circumstance as given above, considered six months notice reasonable and not the one month's payment of salary in lieu of one month's notice.

I have already given the inhibiting circumstances in Mr. Forewa's case and they all indicate that Mr. Forewa would have found it extremely difficult, as in fact happened, in finding other suitable or comparable employment. In the circumstances of this case I am of the view that six months notice should have been given, and I so hold. The measure of Mr. Forewa's damages is the difference between the six months salary in lieu of notice which he might have received and the one month's salary in lieu that had been paid to him including his entitlements as claimed over the five months period.

The arithmetic works out as follows:—

Five months salary	—	Le.1,117,841.20
Five months car allowance	—	125,000.00

[p.215]

Five months lunch allowance	—	125,000.00
Five months rent allowance	—	167,675.00
TOTAL	—	Le.1,535,516.20

Mr. Forewa is entitled to the sum of Le.1,535,516.20 in damages, and I so hold.

I the premises I give judgment in the sum of Le 1,535,516.20 to Mr. Forewa. If the judgment sums given in the Court of Appeal have been paid, the difference is to be refunded by the estate of Mr. Forewa.

JUDGMENT

BODE RHODES-VIVOUR, J.S.C

The facts in this case are fortunately refreshingly clear, but only a few of the facts thereof are germane to the points in this appeal. I will not set out all the facts but will be content with such facts as are relevant for the purpose of highlighting the points in this appeal which are material to the issues in the judgment. The respondent as plaintiff, on the 3rd day of June 1998 took out an Originating Summons against the Appellant, as Defendant asking the High Court of Sierra Leone to determine the following:

1. That the Deed of Conveyance dated the 25th day of August, 1992 and expressed to be made between Alhaji Tejan Sowe therein referred to as the Vendor of the one part and Sahr Samuel Nyandemoh and Aiah Momoh therein referred [p.2] to as Purchasers of the other part conveying ALL THAT PIECE OR PARCEL OF LAND together with the Building(s) situate lying and being at No.37 Malama Thomas Street, Freetown in the Western Area of the Republic of Sierra Leone and registered as number 909/92 at Page 139 in Volume 463 in the Record Books of Conveyances kept in the Office of the Administrator-General, Roxy building, Walpole Street, Freetown aforesaid jointly owned by the Plaintiff and the Defendant may be partitioned between them.

2. That the Deed of Partition be settled in accordance with draft to be prepared by an Independent Surveyor jointly appointed and approved by both parties.

3. Alternatively, that the aforementioned property be sold by public Auction or by Private treaty to the highest bidder at a price not below the reserve price to be set by an independent Valuer such price to be sanctioned by the Court.

4. The sale and distribution between the Plaintiff and the Defendant would be more beneficial to the parties than a division of the property between them.

5. That the Plaintiff do have the conduct of the sale and the Plaintiff and the Defendant execute the Deed of Conveyance. In default of either party signing the said Deed, that the Master and Registrar do execute the same on behalf of the default party.

6. That either party be at liberty to bid at the said sale and in the event of the Plaintiff being Purchaser thereof the Deed of Conveyance to be executed by the Defendant or the Master and Registrar.

7. That an account of the rents and profits of 37, Malama Thomas Street, Freetown in the Western Area of the Republic of Sierra Leone, collected or received by the Defendant as the Plaintiffs Agent and payment of what shall be found due on taking such account.

8. That the costs of this application be borne by the Defendant, such costs be taxed.

The following affidavits were filed in support of the Originating Summons:—

(a) Affidavit of Nasiru Deen Tejan-Cole sworn on 30/9/98

(b) Affidavit of Sahr S. Nyandemoh sworn on 6/10/98

(c) Affidavit of Fawaz Ayoub sworn on 15/10/98

(d) Affidavit of Ola Thomas sworn on 6/11/98

(e) Affidavit of Raymond Awoonor-Renner sworn on 22/9/99

In opposing the Originating Summons the defendant relied on the following affidavits:—

(a) Affidavit of Aiah Momoh sworn on 3/7/98

(b) Affidavit of Man so Dumbuya sworn on 11/7/98

(c) Affidavit of C.F. Edwards Esq. sworn on 20/10/98

(d) Affidavit of Sallieu Kamara sworn on 22/10/99.

On 22/11/99, the learned Trial Judge, The Honourable Mr. Justice A.M. Stronge heard Counsel and read all the affidavits. Thereafter this is what His Lordship had to say:—

"…… It is considered that there is a dispute as to fact and that the best expeditious and economical disposal of the proceedings will accordingly best be secured by hearing the Summons partly on oral evidence with or without cross-examination of any of the deponents as the Court may direct".

[p.4]

His Lordship then ordered as follows:—

1. That the deponents to the affidavits filed in this action do attend before the Court at a date and hour to be fixed for cross-examination thereon but the parties to be at liberty to supplement their evidence by oral evidence and adduce further evidence;

2. The cost of and occasioned by this application shall be costs in the cause.

Counsel complied with His Lordships orders above and on the 9th of February 2001 judgment was entered in favour of the Plaintiff as follows:—

1. That property No.37, Malama Thomas Street, Freetown in the Western Area of the Republic of Sierra Leone be sold by Public Auction or by Private Treaty to the highest bidder at a price not below $250,000 (Two Hundred and Fifty Thousand United States Dollars) or its equivalent in Leones at the current Bank rate of exchange at the time of such sale, such price to be approved by the Court.

2. That Solicitors for both parties do have conduct of the said sale and the Plaintiff and Defendant execute the Deed of Conveyance to the purchaser and in default of either party signing the said Deed of Conveyance the Master and Registrar of the High Court do the same on behalf of the defaulting party.

3. That either party be at liberty to bid at the said sale and in the event that either party being the purchaser thereof the Deed of Conveyance be executed by the other party or in default by the Master and Registrar, High Court.

4. That an account of all rents and profits received by either party from the said property since the purchaser thereof be submitted by each party with liberty to [p.5] either party to surcharge and falsify such accounts to be sanctioned by the Court.

5. That the proceeds of the said sale be distributed as between the parties having regard to the account as sanctioned by the Court.

6. That the costs of the Action be borne by the Defendant, Aiah Momoh such costs to be taxed.

Dissatisfied with the judgment of the trial Court, the Defendant/Appellant brought an appeal before the Court of Appeal, (hereinafter referred to as the Court below).

In its judgment delivered on the 11th day of July 2006 the Court below, Coram Justice's M.E.T. Thompson, P. Macaulay, dismissed the appeal relying heavily on the provisions of Order 41 Rule 13, and Order 42 Rule 8 of the Supreme Court Rules Cap 7. There is nothing on the printed Record to show whether the third Judge on the panel, Justice G. Gelaga King concurred or dissented.

The Defendant/Appellant was dissatisfied with the judgment of the Court below. He has come before this Court on a further and final appeal.

In the Notice of appeal filed on the 25th day of July 2006, six grounds of appeal were filed on behalf of the Appellant. They are:—

1. The decision of the Court of Appeal is against the weight of the evidence.

2. There was no Originating Summons issued in these proceedings to commence the same.

3. These proceedings from their nature ought to have been commenced by the issue of a Writ of Summons since there was a dispute about the ownership of this property.

[p.6]

4. The normal method of commencing a civil action is by Writ of Summons. The procedure adopted was wrong. There were no pleadings filed, the action was never entered for trial and therefore the whole proceedings were a nullity.

5. The Court of Appeal failed to consider whether the procedure adopted ensured that there was a fair trial of the issues in dispute between the parties in dispute.

6. The Court was not properly constituted when it delivered its judgment and the judgment itself is that of only two of the Justice's of Appeal. The judgment of the third Justice is yet to be delivered.

At the hearing of the appeal on the 24th of April 2008 both Counsel relied on their argument contained in the statements. Judgment was thereafter reserved.

I have examined the six grounds of appeal and I consider grounds 3, 4 and 5 to be fundamental and crucial, in that if they succeed the entire proceedings at the trial Court would be declared a nullity and it would be an academic exercise to consider any of the other issues. Courts are to determine live issues and not waste precious judicial time engaging or indulging in academic exercise.

I shall take grounds 3 and 4 together since they are allied. The issue easily distilled from grounds 3 and 4 is:—

"Whether the trial judge was right to continue the proceedings by Originating Summons after he found that the affidavits before him revealed dispute on facts".

In his written address learned Counsel of the appellant Mr. Serry-Kamal observed that the Originating Summons procedure is limited to special cases where there is no disputed fact contending that the proper direction was for the trial judge to order that the action should commence by Writ of Summons. Finally he submitted that Order 41 Rule 13 and Order 42 Rule 8 of the 1960 High Court Rules were not applicable.

[p.7]

In reply, learned Counsel for the respondent Mr. N.D. Tejan-Cole observed that in a suit commenced by Originating Summons the affidavits are the pleadings and so the need to order for pleadings to be filed does not arise.

He submitted that since the objection was not made or taken at the trial Court it cannot constitute a ground of appeal.

Concluding his submissions he finally submitted that specific provisions of Originating Summons is permissible under Order 42 and 45 of the 1960 High Court Rules.

He urged us to dismiss the appeal with costs.

The Law/Rules applicable to an action is the Law/Rules existing when the cause of action arose. After a diligent examination of the affidavits in support of the Originating Summons, I am satisfied that the cause of action arose sometime in 1996. The Rules existing and in force at the time and so applicable to this case are the Supreme Court Rules Cap 7 of 1960. The Rules supra were applicable to trials in the High Court. The rules applicable now are the High Court Rules of 2007, the Court of Appeal Rules 1985, and the Supreme Court Rules 1982, but they are all not material to this case.

The Respondent as Plaintiff brought an action against the Defendant/Appellant on an Originating Summons seeking reliefs earlier alluded to.

The learned trial judge heard Counsel, examined the affidavits and observed that there are dispute of fact and that the best expeditions and economical disposal of the proceedings will accordingly best be secured by hearing the Summons properly on oral evidence with or without cross-examination of any of the deponents as the Court may direct. Now, can it be said that the learned trial Judge's order is correct. What are the dispute of fact in the affidavits. In the affidavits in support of the Originating Summons the Respondent/Plaintiff deposed that the House at No.37 Malama Thomas Street, Freetown in the West Area in the Republic of Sierra Leone is owned jointly by the Appellant and himself. He seeks an order by his Originating Summons for the Court to Order the partition of the property or outright sale and the proceeds therefrom to be divided by both of them.

[p.8]

In the 27 paragraph affidavit deposed to by the appellant on page 40 of the printed Record and in opposition to the affidavits in support of the Originating Summons the deponent states that he is the sole owner of the property, and there is a deposition of fraud, to the effect that fraud was perpetrated by one Fawaz Ayoub to include the Respondents named in the Conveyance. The deponent claims to be an illiterate. See paragraphs 4, 26 of the said affidavit.

A Plaintiff seeking partition of property which the adversary claims that he is the sole owner, and at the same time asserts that there was fraud in the preparation of the Conveyance, are indeed substantial dispute of fact. The main dispute of fact is who as between the Litigants is the owner of No.37 Malama Thomas Street, Freetown in the Western Area of the Republic of Sierra Leone.

On being served with these affidavits the proper thing for Counsel for the Plaintiff Mr. N.D. Tejan-cole to have done was to discontinue the suit and issue a Writ of Summons and Statement of Claim for the Court to determine who in fact is the owner of No.37 Malama Thomas Street, Freetown in the Western Area of the Republic of Sierra Leone.

The Trial Judge also fell into a grave error by ordering trial to continue on an Originating Summons, oblivious of the provisions of Order 2 Rule 1 of the Supreme Court Rules Cap 7 of 1960 which states that:

"Every action in the Supreme Court unless otherwise expressly provided for shall be commenced by a Writ of Summons which shall be indorsed with a statement of the nature of the claim made, or of the relief or remedy required in the action."

On the state of the affidavits the correct order to have been made by the learned Trial Judge was to order Counsel to file pleadings. Furthermore pleadings in this case are mandatory in that, how may I ask would the Appellant prove fraud which he deposed to in his affidavit. It is very well settled that fraud must be pleaded and particularized and where fraud is not pleaded the Court would not entertain any evidence on it (fraud). See Tamakloe v Basel Trading Co. 6.W.A.C. p231. The learned Trial Judge's order denied the Appellant of his inalienable right to prove his case.

Order 42 Rule 10 supra states that:

"(10) the determination of any question of construction arising under a Deed, Will or other written instrument and declarations of the rights of persons interested: Provided that a Judge shall not be bound to determine any such question of construction if in his opinion, it ought not to be determined on Originating Summons."

All that the above says is that questions of construction are to be determined on Originating Summons but a Judge in his wisdom may decide such an issue on any other Originating process he finds convenient. Nowhere in the 1960 Rules is there such a procedure as the Trial Judge ordered, particularly where there is a deposition on fraud. The orders/directives of the Trial Judge were wrong.

The Court of Appeal was of the view that the proceedings by Originating Summons was Correct, relying heavily on the provisions of Order 41 Rule 13 and Order 42 Rule 8 of the 1960 Rules to affirm the Judgment of the Trial Court in these words:

"It seems to me that the learned Trial Judge had these two High Court Orders in mind when he adjourned the Summons from Chambers to open Court and also when he ordered the sale of the property situate at No.37 Malama Thomas Street, Freetown in the Western Area of the Republic of Sierra Leone. Again this ground of appeal lacks merit and therefore fails ".

It is very necessary now to examine Orders 41 Rule 13 and 42 Rule 8 Supra. Order 41 is Titled Applications and proceedings at Chambers I shall set out its provisions (Rule 13) verbatim et literatem. It says:—

"In every cause or matter where any party thereto makes any application at chambers, either by way of summons or otherwise, he shall be at liberty to include in one and the same application all matters upon which he then desires the order directions of a judge and upon the hearing of such application it shall [p.10] be lawful for the Court to make any order and give any directions relative to, or consequential on the matter of such application as may be just; any such application may, if the judge thinks fit, be adjourned from Chambers into Court or from Court into Chambers".

It is a fundamental rule of interpretation of legislation that where the words of the legislation are clear and unambiguous the words should be given their simple and ordinary meaning. It is only then that the intention of the Law Maker/Legislators can be known; After all the object of all interpretations is to find out the intention of the Legislature. And in interpreting Legislation it is not the duty of the Judge to fill in the gaps as wrongly suggested by Lord Denning LJ (as he then was) in Seaford Count Estate Ltd, v Asher 1949 2 K.B. Page 498-499.

Where Judges fill in the gaps they would be delving into uncharted territory. It would amount to a naked usurpation of legislative function under the disguise of interpretation. See Mayor and ST Mellons Rural District Council v New Port Corp 1952 ACP 189, Fisher v Bell 1960 3 ALL E.R. Page 731.

Now, to the interpretation of Order 41 Rule 13 of the Supreme Court Rules 1960. Order 1 supra defines Originating Summons thus:—

"Originating Summons" means every summons other than a summons in a pending cause or matter",

With the above definition it becomes clear that "Summons" in Rule 13 of Order 41 supra is not Originating Summons. It is Summons. What then is the difference between "Originating Summons" and Summons. "Originating Summons" is one of the ways civil proceedings are commenced in Sierra Leone. The other ways are by Writ of Summons, Originating Motion and Petition. That is to say Originating Summons is one of the ways an action or proceedings is launched.

"Summons" on the other hand are for interlocutory applications. Quite a number of interlocutory applications are made by Summons e.g. Summons for directions, to renew a Writ, [p.11] to amend a Writ or Originating Summons. I shall now delve into a brief history of Originating Summons. A Judges Summons is an Originating process. Trial in a Judges Summons is conducted by affidavit evidence, i.e. you prove your case by affidavit evidence.

The main advantage of Originating Summons is simplicity resulting from the elimination of pleadings. It is applicable where there is no substantial dispute on questions of fact, and suitable for the determination of questions of construction. Where the issue between the parties is in controversy pleadings must be ordered. An Originating Summons would no longer be appropriate. A Writ of Summons and statement of claim/pleadings would best present the plaintiff case while a statement of defence (Pleadings) would be the best answer to the plaintiff's case.

"By way of summons or otherwise" means by way of Summons or any other process e.g. motion etc. best suited for interlocutory applications. The Court below fell into a serious error in interpreting "Summons" in Order 41 Rule 13 to mean Originating Summons. The Summons therein means Summons. Or otherwise means any other process for interlocutory applications and clearly not an Originating Summons which is used to commence non contentions suits to do with interpretation of Instruments etc."

Rule (8) of Order 42 reads as follows:—

"(8) applications for or relating to the sale of property by auction or private contract, and as to the manner in which the sale is to be conducted and for payment into Court and investment of the purchase money."

The above becomes relevant only after the issue of ownership is resolved. The issue of ownership of the said property has not been resolved, so the above is irrelevant for now.

It is irrelevant if the learned Justices of the Court of Appeal were of the view that the Originating process was an Originating Summons or a Summons whichever. Their Lordships [p.12] are wrong because none of these processes allow pleadings, and pleadings are mandatory on the state of the affidavits.

Affirming the Judgment of the trial Court is unsupportable in the light of what I have been saying.

This is a case where the trial judge exercised his discretion which he did not have; to give orders that were clearly wrong. Indeed this Court is always loath to interfere with the discretion of a Judge, but here we are compelled to do so. This is so because the discretion was wrongly exercised and tainted with illegality and substantial irregularity. The procedure adopted by the learned trial Judge after he found that there were disputes on facts in the affidavits departed from decided authorities and settled practice. The learned Trial Judge ought to have struck out the Originating Summons. His Lordship did not do that. Instead he exercised his discretion and gave orders unknown to contemporary practice. The exercise of discretion by the learned Trial Judge in clear breach of what the Law requires is/was perverse in the circumstances. Where a Court disregards clear provisions of its Rules after full knowledge and adopts a strange procedure to hear claims, the entire procedure amounts to a mockery in judicial administration and a clear violation of the plainest principle of reason and justice.

I now turn to the points raised in the submission of the learned Senior Counsel for the Respondent, Mr. N.D. Tejan-Cole and in the process I shall deal with Ground 5, the substance therein being whether the Appellant had a fair trial. Mr. N.D. Tejan-Cole's points are:—

1. That objection not made or taken at the trial cannot constitute a ground of appeal;

2. An Appellant could not set up in the Appeal Court (Objection) which was not put forward and was not in issue at the trial Court;

3. Once it becomes apparent that a point has not been raised in the Court below it is properly to be regarded as an abuse of the process of the Court to seek and to raise it on appeal for the first time on appeal.

The substance of all that I have been saying has to do with the correct originating process to be used where plaintiff files in Court an Originating Summons seeking in the main Partition of property and the Defendant claims ownership of the same property.

Nowhere in the 1960 Rules is there such a procedure as the Trial Judge ordered. Apparently the order was made by the learned Trial Judge in exercise of his discretion, which he did not have in this case, in the light of the clear provision of Order 2 Rule 1 of the 1960 Rules. The well settled position of the law is that Originating summons cannot be used to commence suits where there are substantial disputes of fact, as in this case.

It must be noted that Legislation on Partition, the Partition Acts 1868 and 1876 relates to situations where the ownership of the property to be partitioned is not in dispute. In this case the property to be partitioned, No.37 Malama Thomas Street, Freetown in the Western Area of the Republic of Sierra Leone is in dispute. The Appellant/Defendant claims to be the sole owner of the property. See paragraph 26 of his affidavit on pages 40-42 of the Printed Record.

Partition can never be ordered, when ownership of the property is left unresolved. The correct course would be to resolve the issue of ownership of No.37 Malama Thomas Street, Freetown in the Western Area of the Republic of Sierra Leone before Partition of the said property can be considered, and the only way to resolve ownership of property is by Writ of Summons and statement of claim/defence, i.e. pleadings. Now it is well settled that Jurisdiction of the Courts can only be ousted in the following instances:—

(a) Where the Court is not properly constituted as regards the numbers and qualifications of its members and a member is disqualified for one reason or another;

(b) Where the subject matter of the case is not within the jurisdiction of the Court;

[p.14]

(c) When the case has not come to the Court through the due process of Law and conditions precedent to the exercise of the said jurisdiction have not been fulfilled.

This case falls under (C) above. In the light of all that I have been saying it is so obvious that this case was not before the trial Court by due process.

A case comes before the Court by due process if it is properly before the Court.

The learned Trial Judge exercised his discretion on his whims and fancies instead of judicially and judiciously. A judicial and judicious exercise of discretion is exercise of discretion with sufficient, correct and convincing reason. This was lacking in this case. With the facts available due process was not followed, and such a situation where the case should be heard on Writ of Summons and pleadings but was not questions the jurisdiction of the trial Court to hear the case. Suppose for instance the rules provide that claims for Title to land, trespass shall be heard on a Writ of Summons and pleadings but Plaintiff brings such claims by Petition and the Defendant does not object, and trial proceeded to conclusion. Clearly the judgment would be a nullity. This is substantive as opposed to procedural where for instance the defendant waived a flaw, e.g. service of Originating process on him. Entered appearance filed a statement of defence. He cannot be heard to complain thereafter. The former example applies in this case. The directives of the trial judge was a fundamental error that renders the judgment a nullity, notwithstanding that the Appellant/Defendant did not object at the trial Court.

There is a distinction between a mandatory provision, Order 2 Rule 1 of the Supreme Court Rules Cap 7 of 1960 which cannot be waived and a mere procedural requirement in the course of trial which can be waived. See Smythe v Wiles 1921 2 KB p66, Papadoponlos v Papadoponlos 1929-1931 Probate Division p55, where it was held that parties cannot by consent confer jurisdiction upon a tribunal, which by law has no such jurisdiction. The Courts have complete control over how suits should commence, consequently a party in the case has nothing to waive, neither can it be said that a party acquiesced.

An Appellant could set up in the Appeal Court an objection which was not put forward and was not in issue at the trial Court if what he is setting up has to do with the jurisdiction of the Court. In this case the Trial Judge had no jurisdiction to hear by Originating Summons what should be heard by Writ of Summons and pleadings. Since this issue is substantial, very fundamental and touched on the jurisdiction of the Court it can be raised informally, although it is desirable some process is filed so that the adverse party is not taken by surprise. Afterall jurisdiction can be raised at anytime even for the first time at the Supreme Court. Finally, judicial discretion must at all times be exercised judicially and judiciously and not arbitrarily, or unrestrained or at the whim and fancies of the Judge. In this case once the Trial Judge found that there were disputes on facts in the affidavits he had no option but to order pleadings.

Furthermore not ordering pleadings denied the Appellant the opportunity to plead fraud and prove it. He was thus denied a fair hearing and once a party is denied his right to fair hearing in a proceeding such proceedings are a nullity.

This appeal is allowed. The following orders are made—

(a) The Judgment of the High Court (A.N. Stronge J.A.) given on 9th February 2001 is hereby set aside.

(b) The Judgment of the Court of Appeal delivered on 11th July 2006 is hereby set aside.

(c) All the monies held in Account No 2032189 at the Sierra Leone Commercial Bank Limited shall remain in the said Account pending the final decision of the Courts on the ownership of No. 37 Malama Thomas Street Freetown, in the Western Area of the Republic of Sierra Leone.

(d) Trial shall proceed afresh by Writ of Summons and statement of claim if the parties decide to resolve the issue of ownership of No.37 Malama Thomas Street Freetown, in the Western Area of the Republic of Sierra Leone.

(e) Each party shall bear its own costs.

SEMEGA JANNEH, J.S.C.

I have had the privilege of reading in draft the judgment of my learned brother, the Honourable Justice B. Rhodes-Vivour-J.S.C., and I agree with the central conclusion and reasoning behind it. I allow the appeal. However, had drafted this opinion as I wish to express my own perspectives of the matter.

THE FACTS

It is necessary to give the background facts for a better understanding of the issues. The premises situate at and known as number 37 Malamah Thomas Street, Freetown, in the Western Area of Sierra Leone, was purchased out of the proceeds of the sale of an alluvial diamond. The facts relating to the purchase, and also the assignment of the said premises, which is disputed, from one Alhaji Tejan Sows, exhibited as "A" to the affidavit in support of SAHR SAMUEL NYANDEMOH (Respondent herein) sworn on the 2nd June, 1998, ought to be viewed from two different perspectives, that of Mr. Nydandemoh and Aiah Momoh (the Appellant herein) respectively. According to the said affidavit of Mr. Nydandemoh, he was permitted to work by his friend, one Mr. Hassana Koroma, under his alluvial Diamond Mining License, at a part of his mining plot situate at Njorpowahun, Nimiyama Chiefdom, Kono, District, Eastern Province. He, as a Supporter, subsequently invited Mr. Momoh to join him in the business as one of his three Tributors. The Tributors, it appears, are the persons engaged in the physical work such as digging for diamonds within the allocated site. The Tributors, as custom requires, are entitled to half the value of the find (diamonds) whether retained by the Supporter or sold by him to another person. In the instant case, it was sold for Le 50,000,000.00 (Fifty Million Leones). The two Tributors were given Le5,000,000.00 (Five Million Leones) and the balance of Le 45,000,000.00 was jointly retained by Mr. Nyandemoh and Mr. Momoh. It was from this balance that 37, Malamah Thomas Street, Freetown, was purchased. According to the affidavit in opposition sworn to by Mr. Momoh on the 3rd July, 1998 he, Mr. Momoh, denies the said version of Mr. Nydandemoh and claims exclusive ownership of the diamond in issue. He expected the assignment of the said premises to be made to him solely, and protested when he learnt that it was made in the joint names of himself and Mr. Nydandemoh. The Partnership Agreement dated the 13th February, 1993; the Sharing of Rents Agreement dated the 27th June 1993; and the Lease Agreement dated the 31st March, 1999, exhibited to the said affidavit of Mr. Nyandemoh as "B" "C" and "E", respectively, are said by Mr. Momoh not to be his deeds — he being an illiterate. In short, he denies and challenges the facts and exhibits that Mr. Nyandemoh relies upon on his application contained in the originating summons.

[p.19]

THE GROUNDS OF APPEAL

1. The decision of the Court of Appeal is against the weight of the evidence.

2. There was no originating summons issued in these proceedings to commence the same.

3. These proceedings from their nature ought to have been commenced by the issue of a writ of summons since there was a dispute about the ownership of this property.

4. The normal method of commencing a civil action is by a writ of summons. The procedures adopted were wrong. There were no pleadings filed, the action was never entered for trial and therefore the whole proceedings were a nullity.

5. The Court of Appeal failed to consider whether the procedure adopted ensured that there was a fair trial of the issues in dispute between the parties in dispute.

6. The Court was not properly constituted when it delivered its judgment and the judgment and the judgment itself that of only two of the Justices of Appeal. The judgment of the justice yet to be delivered.

No argument has been proffered in respect of ground one by the Applicant. As a consequence, it is treated as abandoned and shall not be dealt with. Grounds 3, 4 and 5 have been argued together and rightly so. The three grounds relate to the same issue(s) and ought to have been crafted as one ground of appeal. I will deal with the issue(s) raised by grounds 3, 4, and 5 and then decide on grounds 2 and 6.

[p.20]

THE ISSUES

(1) Was the learned trial Judge right in law in proceeding with the hearing of the Originating Summons in the face of the facts disclosed by the affidavits filed, and his own conclusion that there was dispute as to the facts, and more specifically, the ownership of the diamond; the premises situate at 37 Ma/amah Thomas Street, Freetown; and the proceeds of sale of the said premises.

(2) If the learned trial Judge was wrong, what was the course open to him instead of proceeding with the hearing of the Originating Summons.

THE COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION

How an action is commenced in the High Court is found in Order 2 rule 1 of the Supreme (now High) Court Rules of 1960 Cap. 7 of the Laws of Sierra Leone which provides:

"1. Every action in the Supreme Court unless otherwise expressly provided for shall be commenced by writ of summons, which shall be endorsed with a statement of the nature of the claim made, or of the relief or remedy required in the action" (emphasis provided).

It is clear from the provisions of rule 1 of Order 2 of the High Court Rules of 1960 that an action must be commenced by a writ of summons unless such an action is expressed to be commenced by another method of procedure. By necessary implication, such an expression is generally found in or given by a particular statute dealing with a particular matter or matters, or, by the Rules of Court.

The other procedures within the purview of rule 1 of Order 2 of the High Court Rules 1960 include the Originating Summons. By Order 41 rule 1 every application at chambers, not made ex-parte, shall be by summons. In such instances, if the application is made within an existing action or suit, the ordinary summons is used but when the application is outside an on-going action and, by its nature, is intended to or commences an action, then the procedure to be employed is the originating summons. At this juncture, it should be noted that where the High [p.21] Court Rules or statute prescribes an originating summons as the method of procedure; the proceedings so commenced constitute an action. See Re Fawsitt, 30 Ch. D.231, and Order 71 rule 1A of the English Rules of 1960 for the definition of an originating summons. It should be borne in mind that the High Court Rules were amended by rule 3 of the Supreme (now High) Court (Amendment) Rules 1969 - Public Notice No.41 of 1969 by the deletion therefrom of the words "1st day of January, 1957" and the substitution thereto of the words "1st day of January, 1960", and also in respect of rule 3 of Order 52 which now reads:

"3. Where no other provision is made by these Rules the procedure, practice and forms in force in the High Court of Justice in England on the 1st day of January, 1960, so far as they can be conveniently applied, shall be in force In the High Court"

It should further be borne in mind that our High Court Rules of 1960 are an abridgement of the Supreme Court Rules of England.

Before closing on this issue, let me give a few examples in which another method of procedure other than the writ of summons is expressed or authorized by the following statutes: the Registration of Instrument (Amendment) Act, 1964; and the Adoption Act, 1989; and by the High Court Rules 1960: Order 45 rule 1, under the rubric — ADMINISTRATION AND TRUSTS; FORECLOSURES AND REDEMPTION; and by implication, Order41 rule 7 under the caption: APPLICATIONS AND PROCEEDINGS AT CHAMBERS; and paragraph (10) of Order 42 under the caption: BUSINESS TO BE DISPOSED OF IN CHAMBERS. Several of such rules in the English Rules of 1960 are listed in the explanatory notes at page 1397 under Order 54 rule 4B under the rubric: Form and issue of Originating Summons.

THE REASONING

Mr. Tejan-Cole, Counsel for Mr. Momoh, in his argument, recognizes that there is a dispute as to a basic fact, that is, ownership of the alluvial diamond from which its proceeds of sale, the premises, 37 Malamah Thomas Street, Freetown, was purchased and thereby transferring the dispute to the ownership of the premises. And because of Mr. Momoh's claim of inclusive [p.22] consequential orders for partition or sale in the High Court Rules of 1960, or by statute. In this regard, I have searched in the High Court Rules of 1960 for provisions expressing the use of an origination summons and found none. The same applies in respect of statutes. Mr. Tejan-Cole has not provided any rule of court or statute requiring the use of an originating summons that is on the point. It follows that the action was not commenced in accordance with the provisions of rule 1 of Order 2 of the High Court Rules, 1960, and the law; the commencement of the action therefore, was irregular.

The originating summons commencing the action sought orders for partition or sale of 37 Malamah Thomas Street, Freetown, and an account of the rents of the premises collected. It has not been shown, in my view, that the originating summons is the proper procedure for commencing action for such orders (or claims). Mr. Tejan-Cole, in the statement of case for the Nyandemoh, points out that the relevant statutes as regards partition or sate are the Partition Act, 1868, and the Partition Act, 1876, of England and made applicable in Sierra Leone by virtue of Section 74 of the Court Act, 1965, Act 31 of 1965, but fail to point out whether these statutes (or any one of them) express or require that action for order (or claims) for partition or sate should be commenced by originating summons. The rule of court that Mr. Tejan-Cole seems to be relying is Order 42 paragraphs (7), (9) and (10) under the caption: Business to be disposed of in chambers, and reproduced hereunder:

"(7) Application connected with the management of property".

"(9) Such other matters as the Judge may think fit to dispose in chambers".

"(10) The determination of any question of construction arising under a deed, will or other written instrument and declaration of the rights of the persons interested.

Provided that a Judge shall not be bound to determine any such question of construction if, in his opinion, it ought not to be determined on originating summons"

[p.23]

The order gives a list of the business or matters that may be disposed of in chambers. This can be clearly discerned in the opening paragraph of the Order which states:

"The business, to be disposed of in chambers by Judges, shall consist of the following matters, in addition to the matters which under any other rule or by statute maybe disposed of in chambers" and proceeds to list the matters numbered (1) to (10). It can be clearly seen that the Order does not indicate the procedure to be employed to bring the matter before the Judge in chambers. The corresponding Order in the English Rules of 1960 is Order 55 rule 2. In this English Order, as in the other Orders, the procedure to be applied, be it summons or originating summons or petition or etc., is specifically given. In respect of the list of matters in Order 42 of our Rules, if a procedure is not provided for bringing a matter before a judge in chambers, the procedure or practice in respect of the same may be imported from the English Rules, 1960, by virtue of Order 52 rule 3, reproduced herein, at page 5 Supra. By the generality of the English Rules, 1960, and our Rules, I surmised the procedure applicable within an ongoing action or suit would be a summons (or motion) but, where it is intended to commence an action in respect of a matter, it would be an originating summons or originating motion or a petition. The writ of summons is not intended for matters that are ordinarily heard in chambers but the judge may receive or hear certain evidence or matters in the suit commenced by writ of summons in chambers by virtue of Order 42 paragraph (9) or by his inherent jurisdiction. Obviously, paragraph (10) cannot be for the purpose of commencing an action as the judge in chambers is not a party to the action, and in the instant case, he must have been completely oblivious of the decision to file, or, of the filing of the Originating Summons. The order (or claim) for an account of rents collected by Mr. Momoh, in my view, does not come within the purview of paragraph (7) of Order 42. A quick reference to Order 55 rule 2 (13) of the English Rules, 1960, at page 1486, under the Rubric: Applications as to management of property, which is exactly of the same wording (ipsissima verba) as paragraph (7) would reveal support for the view expressed. The extend of the rule under the rubric: Scope of paragraph, is explained thus:

[p.24]

"This paragraph refers to application in proceedings when the estate is or trusts are being administered. On an application by summons for payment out of court of the proportion of the life tenant's special contribution payable under part V of the Finance Act, 1948, attributable to the income of the life tenant from an estate being administered by the court it was held that the order could properly be made on summons under this paragraph (Re Willins, (1949) W.N. 1936)"

As regards paragraph (10) of Order 42, it can be said, that by implication, it expresses that application may be made for "the determination of any question of construction arising under a deed, will or other written instrument and declarations of rights of the persons interested". The implication is embedded, and may be read from the proviso, in paragraph (10) of Order 42. In the English Rules, 1960, Order 54A rule 1, provides.

"1 In any Division of the High Court, any person claiming under a deed, will, or other written instrument, may apply by originating summons for the determination of any question of construction arising under the instrument, and for a determination of the rights of the persons interested"

In my judgment, the originating summons in question does not in any way indicate or manifest an application for the determination of any question of construction arising out of the Deed of Conveyance dated the 25th day of August, 1992. The paragraph1 of the originating summons merely rehearse the Deed of Conveyance and prays, among others; for its partition between Mr. Nyandemoh and Mr. Momoh. Therefore paragraph (10) of Order 42 is not applicable in the circumstances.

As regard regards the decision of the Court of Appeal, composed of Justice M.E. Tolla-Thompson — J.A.; Justice G. Gelaga-King (who did not indicate dissent or concurrence); and Justice P.E. Macauley, I am of the view that the Court, with all due respect to the Justices of Appeal, misapprehended the crucial point in issue, and this misapprehension appears to have [p.25] arisen from its misperception of the facts as can be discerned from the brief statement of the facts in the judgment which, for clarity, is in part reproduced hereunder:

"The Brief Facts of the case is that the plaintiff Sahr Samuel Nyandemoh and the defendant Aiah Momoh were business partners. The plaintiff and defendant jointly owned property situate at 37 Malamah Thomas Street, Freetown as evidence by elect (Sic) of conveyance dated 25th August 1992. A dispute arose as to the management of the said property."

These 'facts' represented the version of Mr. Nyandemoh as reflected in his said affidavit in support particularly in paragraphs 16-22 and 26-30. Even the affidavit alone clearly manifests a history of disagreement between Mr. Nyandmoh and Mr. Momoh as to the ownership of the alluvial diamond; the premises known as 37 Malamah Thomas Street, Freetown; and that Mr. Momoh has been asserting ownership and control over the premises. And if there is any doubt from the said affidavit of Mr. Nyandemoh, and I cannot understand any one having a doubt that there is a dispute as to ownership of the alluvial diamond and the said premises, the said affidavit in opposition sworn to by Mr. Momoh, particularly paragraphs 2-7, 13, 15 and 16; 20-23, 25 and 26, ought to dispel any doubt. The affidavit discloses denials of and challenges to material averments in the said affidavit of Mr. Nyandemoh; claims of ownership of the alluvial diamond and premises; allegation of fraud and other misdeeds by Mr. Nyandemoh and his alleged confederates. The trial Judge recognized the dispute as to ownership and the need to determine same. See page 6, supra.

The Court of Appeal's reliance on Order 41 rule 13 and Order 42 paragraph (8) of the High Court Rules, 1960, which, respectively, provides:

"13 In every cause or matter where any party thereto makes any application at chamber, either by way of summons or otherwise, he shall be at liberty to include in one and the same application all matters upon which he then desires the order or directions of a judge and upon hearing of such application it shall be lawful for the court to make any [p.26] order and give any directions relative to, or consequential on, the matter of such application as may be just, and any such application may, if the judge thinks fit, be adjourned from chambers into court or from court into chambers" (Emphasis Provided)

"(8) applications for or relating to the sale of property by auction or private contract, and as to the manner in which the sale is to be conducted, and for payment into court and investment of the purchase money".

Should be viewed within the context of this misapprehension of the issues and misperception of the facts After citing the above rule 13 and paragraph (8), the learned Justice of Appeal, (as he then was) the Hon. Mr. Justice E Tolla-Thompson, J.S.C., who delivered the judgment of the court, concluded, and I quote:

"It seems to me that the learned trial judge had these two High Court Orders in mind when he adjourned the summons from chambers to open Court and also when he ordered the sale of the property situate at 37 Malamah Thomas Street".

Rule 13 of Order 41 is cited in the Judgment of the Court of Appeal to show that the trial Judge had the jurisdiction, to transfer the hearing of the originating summons from chamber into count. I do agree with the learned Honourable Justice but hasten to add that this rule 13, in my view, has no relevance or bearing to the Amended Grounds of Appeal in the Court of Appeal which states:

"5 That the whole procedure are null and void and ought to be set aside on the grounds that there is original summons properly issued out of the Masters Office"

"6 7/76 learned Trial Judge having ruled out that there was a dispute as to the fact in the matter the proper course was to have ordered that the matter be set down for trial as a normal action commenced by writ of summons, properly set down for trial" and issues in contention. The issues were: (1) whether the originating summons properly issued from the Master's Office and (2) the originating summons was not the proper procedure given the factual dispute. I can see that Mr. Serry-Kamal, of counsel, did not help matters and invited the court's reaction when he submitted that "The 1960 High Court Rules does not allow the court to continue the originating summons in open court". The issue was and still is whether the learned trial judge was right to proceed with the hearing of the originating summons in the face of the factual dispute, and not whether the court could order or give direction, as it did, for the hearing of the originating summons to be continued in chambers or that "the matter be set down for trial as a normal action commenced by writ of summons, properly set down for trial".

This brings us to the issue of what the learned trial judge could have done in the situation that presented itself. It seems to me the learned trial judge faced with the situation, attempted to alter the nature of the hearing, or, manner of the trial, to conform to a trial by writ of summons as much as the circumstances permit by giving the said directions of the 22nd day of November 1999 at pages 130-131 of the records (see page 6 above) which is akin to continuing the proceedings as if begun by writ of summons. In my judgment, the High Court Rules, 1960, do not permit the trial Judge to give such orders or directions, or embarked on such a course. Nor can such a rule be imported from the English Rules pursuant to rule 3 of Order 52 of our High Court Rules, 1960, because there is no such or appropriate rule in the English Rules of 1960. The appropriate English rule first came into existence in the English Rules in 1964 as a result of the recommendation of the Evershed Committee (Final Report: para. 101 see page 578 of the English Rules of 1960) and is manifested in Order 28 rule 7. To illustrate the point, it is enough to reproduce sub-rule (1) of rule 7 of Order 28 which provides:

"7-(1) Where in the case or matter begun by originating summons, it appears to the court at any stage of the proceedings that the proceedings should for any reason be continued as if the cause or matter had been begun by writ, it may order the proceedings to continue as if the cause or matter had been so begun and may, in particular, order that any affidavits shall stand as pleadings, with or without liberty to any of the parties to add thereto or to apply for particulars thereof”

The only English rules that can be imported into our local Rules pursuant to Order 52 rule 3 are rules that are contained in the English Rules of 1960, and not rules made thereafter. At this juncture let me point out, for purposes of clarity, that rule 13 of Order 41 of our High Court Rules is present, in the same wording, in the English Rules in Order 54 rule 9. This rule 9 of Order 54 and rule 7 of Order 28 are both in the English Rules of 1964. This leads to the eluctable conclusion that the two rules are not meant to, and do not serve, the same purpose. After reading the two rules, I came to the same conclusion.

As regards paragraph (8) of Order 42, I am of the view that the Court of Appeal cited it in the judgment to indicate that trial, court had the jurisdiction to order sale of the premises and, therefore, the prayer for an order of sale was properly before the trial court. My reasoning in respect of rule 13 of Order 41 as regards the misapprehension as to the crucial issue and misperception of the facts applies to paragraph (8) of Order 42 of our High Court Rules, 1960.

However, let us suppose that the action was properly commenced for the purpose of obtaining the orders sought. It is clear to me that the orders sought assume or presuppose that the Deed of Conveyance is accepted by Mr. Momoh and that he is not claiming ownership of 37 Malamah Thomas Street, Freetown, which the Deed of Conveyance conveys to Mr. Nyandemoh and Mr. Momoh jointly. We know the situation to be the contrary. We also know from the said affidavits of Mr. Nyandemoh and Mr. Momoh that Mr. Momoh has been and is claiming exclusive ownership of the premises and has been and is alleging fraud and other wrongful acts, not only in respect of the Deed of Conveyance but also in respect of other material documents exhibited to the said affidavit of Mr. Nyandemoh. In pleadings, the allegation of [p.29] fraud requires particularization. It is very clear in my mind, and was obvious to the learned trial judge, that he, the trial Judge, needed to determine ownership before he could possibly deal with the orders prayed for. In the circumstances of this case, I hold that the issue of partition or sate cannot be dealt with unless and until the issue of ownership is determined; if in doing so, joint ownership is found, then and only then, can an order for partition or sale be made. The procedures that follow the filing of a writ are better suited for determining disputes that are grounded on facts and, more so, where fraud is alleged.

I am of the firm view that the learned trial judge instead of giving the following direction:—

"1. That the deponents' to the affidavits filed in this action do attend before the court at a date and time to be fixed for cross examination thereon but the parties to be at liberty to supplement their evidence by oral evidence but to adduce further evidence" ought to have struck out the action with liberty for either party to commence an action by writ of summons. See the Ghanaian Supreme Court case of POKU and Another Vs KWAO and Another [1989-90J 2 GLR, which, if not in all fours, has commonality with the instant case in respect of the issue or complaint that the action was commenced by a wrong procedure in the given facts of the respective cases.

THE CONCLUSION

In the circumstances I hold that commencement of the action by an originating summons is an irregularity which constitutes such a fundamental defect in procedure that the proceedings before the trial Judge cannot be allowed to stand. Accordingly, I hereby set aside the judgment of the trial Judge given on the 9th day of February 2001 and that of the Court of Appeal delivered on the 11th day of July 2006, without prejudice to the sale of the premises, 37 Malamah Thomas Street, Freetown, which was executed pursuant to orders of Court, with liberty to either Mr. Nyandemoh or Mr. Momoh to issue a writ. The proceeds of sale to remain in the custody of the court, and in the savings account numbered 2032189 at the Sierra Leone Commercial Bank Limited in which the proceeds of safe have been deposited pursuant to the orders of court to await further orders of the courts.

[p.30]

As can be seen by now, the issues raised by grounds 2 and 6 have become irrelevant and redundant; and it would serve no purpose, in respect of the Appeal, for this court to deal with the said grounds of appeal.

RULING

MR. JUSTICE M.E. TOLLA-THOMPSON, JSC

My Lords the applicant by motion applies for the following Orders:

1. Leave to deposit title deeds pursuant to the Orders of the Court of Appeal dated 7th March 2008 and an extension of time within which to deposit same.

2. Applicant be allowed to file certified true copies thereof and in the alternative.

3. That this court grants a stay of execution of the Court of Appeal judgment dated the 7th day of March 2008 and all subsequent proceedings thereto pending the hearing and determination of the appellant appeal to the Supreme Court.

4. Such further or other Order as the Court shall deem fit.

[p.74]

The application for the above orders is supported by the affidavit of Bassam Ibrahim Basma:— the application sworn to on the 27th October 2008 with several Exhibits annexed.

BACKGROUND

A short history of this case as far as it is relevant to this application is that on the 24th May 2007 the Court of Appeal gave judgment for the respondent and sometime thereafter the appellant moved the Court of Appeal for a stay of execution of the judgment. The stay of execution was granted in the following terms:

''The stay of execution of the judgment of the Court of Appeal dated 24th May 2007 is granted. It is further ordered that because of the special circumstances of this matter the applicant/respondent deposit the title Deeds to the properties listed in the affidavit of Ibrahim Abdul Hussein Basma sworn to on 21st June 2007 to the Registrar of the Court of Appeal until final determination of the appeal. The title deed to be deposited within 30 days of this Order"

It is the non compliance of the above order which has precipitated this application to this Court.

THE ARGUMENT

When the motion came up for hearing Mr. Williams learned counsel for the respondent raised the issue of the courts jurisdiction to entertain the Motion in view of rule 60(2) of the Supreme Court Rules. We overruled his objection and allowed learned counsel for the applicant Mr. Sesay to move his Motion. In moving the motion Mr. Sesay referred us to the affidavit in support of the motion and the various exhibits annexed thereto and submitted that he relied on the affidavits in its entirety.

[p.75]

He also referred us to rule 34 of the Supreme Court Rules and submitted that he is invoking the said rule to support his application. He urged the court to grant the application, and submitted that if the application is not granted, it will render the appeal which is now before the Supreme Court nugatory. It will be of little value. Mr. Williams in reply said that he does not wish to go into the merit of the application, but to repeat and rely on his earlier submission, that the court lacks jurisdiction to entertain the application, he said that there is no basis in law for the application. An application for stay can only be made pursuant to rule 60(2) of the Supreme Court Rules.

Continuing he submitted that it is quite clear that a stay of execution was granted by the Court of Appeal and therefore an application for a stay in the Supreme Court can only be made, after a refusal by the Court of Appeal. Therefore he argued the court is not competent to grant the application. In support of this submission, he cites the Supreme Court case Aiah Momoh v Sahr Samuel Nyandemore Civ.App.6/2006 unreported: in particular the dictum of Rhodes Vivour JSC.

Also submitted that the court is not competent to grant the 1st and 2nd Orders.

Finally he said if there is a failure to comply with the terms of the stay the applicants should apply to the Court of Appeal.

Presumably the lack of jurisdiction raised here by Mr. Williams relates to the absence, of the practice and procedure adopted by the applicant, and not one which relates to the status of the application. In order words this court has no power to grant the orders prayed for, because the applicant has not followed the practice and procedure laid down by the rules, to bring such a matter before the Supreme Court.

[p.76]

Mr. Williams refers to rule 60(2) of the Supreme Court Rules — r.60 (2) states:

subject to the provision of these Rules and to any other enactment governing the same an application for stay of execution or proceedings shall first be made to the Court of Appeal and if that court refuses to grant the application the applicant shall be entitled to renew the application to the Supreme Court for determination.

This rule is identical to rule 64 of the Court of Appeal rules which is also a procedural rule.

PROCEDURAL RULE

The Court of Appeal granted a stay of execution of the judgment on terms, which, obviously the applicant was unable to fulfill and misguidedly came to this court asking for a variation of the terms of the stay or a stay of execution of the judgment by this court; presumably with modify condition.

It is the usual practice that in seeking a variation, of any order, the application must first be made to the court which granted the original order, in this instant the Court of Appeal, if the application fails, then to a higher court — Supreme Court.

In the case of an application for a stay of execution of a judgment, in the Supreme Court, such application is made pursuant to rule 60 (2) of the Supreme Court Rules, supra. It is a procedural rule which illustrates the manner in which proceedings for a stay of execution of a judgment under the rule should be conducted. Thus the applicant must first apply to the Court of Appeal and if refused the applicant "shall be entitled to renew the application" to this court.

When I perused the application, my initial thought was that the applicant is desperate, and eager to fulfill the condition of the stay, not because he was keen to prosecute the appeal but merely to forestall the writ of fifa and prevent the sale of the applicant's property.

JURISDICTION

Mr. Williams sole ground of objection to the application is the courts lack of jurisdiction to entertain the application, and if the objection is upheld it is enough to put an end to the application.

I agree with Mr. Williams, this court cannot entertain this application as it is. However this is not always the case. There is a settled principle of law that a court ought not to decline jurisdiction if it can assume discretionary powers which will not amount to a violation or usurpation of the courts jurisdiction. Such power is usually described as an adjunct or incidental to the courts jurisdiction under which it operates. I am persuaded by the above principle, arid it is worth considering in this application.

During the argument and submission certain issues emerged which though unconnected with the application proper, are germane and incidental to it, which, in my considered opinion, this court ought to deal with under its discretionary powers.

It is a known fact that the substantive appeal is before the Supreme Court. Indeed the Supreme Court, sometime ago granted an order for substitution of the deceased appellant by the applicant herein.

Again, it is well known that there are legal moves by the respondent for the sale of the properties of the applicant to satisfy the judgment debt. It is my view-that any sale of the properties, when the Supreme Court is already seised of the appeal will destroy the substratum of the appeal and render it nugatory.

[p.78]

Therefore, in my judgment, I shall rely on the principle that "there must be an end to litigation" coupled with the axiom that "procedural rules are intended to serve as hand maiden of justice and not to defeat it," and invoke the court's discretionary power to waive the strict application of the rules, in order to ensure that the parties herein have a fair opportunity to argue their respective case in the Supreme Court.

CONCLUSION

In all the circumstances I think this is a case in which the respondent can be adequately compensated with cost, for the tardiness on the part of the applicant. Accordingly I order that the appeal in the Supreme Court be heard, within 4 weeks from today 11/12/08. In the meantime the sale of the applicant's property by both parties is put on hold, subject to further orders of the court.

I assess cost at.....to the respondent.

JUDGMENT

By way of Originating Notice of Motion brought under Section 21, 28, 122 and 124(1) (a), of the Constitution, Part XVI Rules 89-98 of the Supreme Court Rules 1982, the Plaintiff seeks from this Court the interpretation of Section 21(1) of the Constitution, and Orders of this Court granting the following reliefs:

[p.32]

(a) A Declaration that the Plaintiff is the fee simple owner free from all incumbrances of the property at Fisher Lane, Kissy, Greater Freetown in the Western Area of the Republic of Sierra Leone.

(b) That the Defendant vacates the property and deliver possession of same to the Plaintiff.

(c) Damages to be paid by the Defendants jointly and severally for contravention of the Plaintiffs fundamental rights provided by Section 21 of the Constitution as from the 14th of October 2005 until possession of the property is delivered to the Plaintiff.

(d) An injunction restraining the Defendants, and or severally, by themselves, their servants or agents or howsoever or otherwise from conveying, leasing, mortgaging, parting with possession or in any way whatsoever disposing of the property or part thereof.

(e) Any further order or relief as this Honourable Court may deem fit and just.

In support of the Originating Notice of Motion is an eight paragraph affidavit deposed to by Mr. Nabil Bahsoon, a director in the Plaintiff Company. Annexed to it are documents marked, Exhibits NB1A, NB1B, and NB2.

Berthan Macaulay (Jnr.) Esq., a legal practitioner deposed to an eight paragraph affidavit verifying statement of Plaintiff' case. Annexed to it are documents marked Exhibits BMJ1A and B respectively.

Mr. Nabil Bahsoon deposed to a further four paragraph affidavit verifying statement of Plaintiffs case.

There are series of correspondence between the parties marked as Exhibits. On being served with the Originating process in this suit O.I. Kanu Esq. State Counsel, entered conditional appearance for the Defendants and filed a three paragraph affidavit verifying statement of the 1st and 2nd Defendants case.

[p.33]

The facts in this case are simple and straightforward.

On the 15th of March 2000 the 2nd Defendant executed a Deed of Conveyance in favour of the Plaintiff. (See Exhibit NB2). By the said Deed of Conveyance the Plaintiff went into possession and remained therein i.e. on the subject matter of the case. A parcel of land situate lying and being at Fisher Lane, Kissy, Greater Freetown in the Western Area of the Republic of Sierra Leone.

On the 5th day of October 2004 the 2nd Defendant wrote to the Plaintiff informing it that the Government of Sierra Leone has instructed it to take possession of the land. Letters were exchanged by the Plaintiff and the 2nd Defendant, and on the 29th day of August 2005 the 1st Defendant gave the Plaintiff 7 days Notice to vacate the land and handover same to the 2nd Defendant. The Plaintiff complied and since 14th of October 2005 the 2nd Defendant has been in possession of the Plaintiffs land and is still in possession of the said land.

We heard learned Counsel for the Plaintiff, Mr. B. Macaulay Jnr., on 9/7/2008 and on 15/7/2008 he concluded his submissions. In his closing speech learned Counsel for the Plaintiff observed that the land was validly conveyed to the Plaintiff by the 2nd Defendant, and that it was wrong for the 2nd Defendant thereafter to compulsorily acquire the said land without complying with the provisions of Cap 116, Laws of Sierra Leone 1960. He submitted that the rights of the Plaintiff under Section 21 of the Constitution have been contravened. Relying on Rockson v Agadzi another 1979 G.L.R. P.106. State Insurance Corporation v Botchavav 1992-93 GBLR P. 168.

He urged us to grant all the reliefs sought.

After listening attentively to Mr. B. Macaulay Jnr's. Submissions, Mr. L.M. Farmer, learned counsel for the Defendants informed us that he was not contesting the case since the acquisition of the property was not properly done.

Before I go into the issues in this case I intend to comment on learned Counsel for the Plaintiffs oral application to amend one of the section under which this application was brought. As long ago as 1879 the Courts have held that a party is not bound to state under which Rule or Order he proposes to move. There is no hard and fast rule that the Order and Rule must be [p.34] stated on the Motion paper although it is desirable that they be so stated. See Hall VC in Re Barkers Estate 1879 10ChD P.165 stating the Section, Rule, Order is to be regarded as a procedure to be taken but failure to take it does not, and ought not render such non compliance fatal.

I now turn to the substantive matter. Affidavit evidence of the Plaintiff has not been controverted. The position of the Law is that where material facts in support of an application have not been controverted by the Defendant, the facts contained in the said affidavit in support of the application are to be taken by the Court as true.

It has been clearly established by the Plaintiff that he is the owner of the parcel of land at Fisher Lane, Kissy, Freetown in the Western Area of the Republic of Sierra Leone and that the 2nd Defendant acquired the said land contrary to the provisions of Section 3 of Cap 116 of the Laws of Sierra Leone 1960 and Section 21 of the Constitution. The Plaintiffs case is very clear and credible since the Defendants Counsel concedes. When the adverse party concedes as is the case here, that means that there is no defense to the Plaintiffs case, and where there is no defense to the Plaintiffs case the Court is still entitled to be satisfied that the evidence adduced is credible and sufficient to sustain the claim. In this case the Plaintiff has supported his case with documentary evidence, to wit: Exhibit NB2 to show that he is the owner of the property, and Exhibit BMJ29 the Defendants letter ordering the Plaintiff to vacate the land in clear contravention of Section 3 of Cap 116 of Sierra Leone 1960 and Section 21 of the Constitution. The well laid down position of the Law is that where documentary evidence supports oral or affidavit evidence such affidavit evidence becomes more credible. This is so because documentary evidence serves as a hanger from which to assess oral or affidavit evidence. The Exhibits supra lend more credence to to Plaintiffs case. Section 28 of the Constitution confers original jurisdiction on the Supreme Court to hear and determine matters pertaining to fundamental rights. In interpreting these fundamental rights and provisions of the Constitution the Courts use the technique of interpretation laid down by Hon. Justice Udo Udoma, Justice of the Supreme Court of Nigeria in N. Rabiu v the State 1981 2 NCLR P.93. The principles stated by Udo Udoma JSC were reaffirmed by the Privy Council Per Lord Diplock while interpreting the Constitutions of Gambia and Mauritius in AG of the Gambia v Momodu Jobe 1984 ACP. 689 at P.700. His Lordship said inter alia.

[p.35]

"……. Where the question is whether the Constitution has used an expression in the wider or in the narrower sense, in my view, this Court should whenever possible, and in the response to the demands of justice, lean to the broader interpretation, unless there is something in the text or in the rest of the Constitution to indicate that the narrower interpretation will best carry out the object and purposes of the Constitution……."

Lord Diplock said:

"That a Constitution and in particular that part of it which protects and entrenches fundamental rights and freedoms to which all persons in the State are to be entitled, is to be given a generous and purposive construction."

To my mind and taking a guide from the above, the Constitution and the fundamental rights provisions should be given liberal interpretation. By so doing the true intention of the legislature would be achieved.

Section 21(1) of the constitution states that:

"No property of any description shall be compulsorily taken possession of, and no interest in or right over property of any description shall be compulsorily acquired, except where the following conditions are satisfied, that is to say—

(a) the taking of possession or acquisition is necessary in the interest of defense, public safety, public order, public morality, public health, town and country planning, the development or utilization of any property in such manner as to promote the public benefit or the public welfare of citizens of Sierra Leone;

and

(b) the necessity therefore is such as to afford reasonable justification for the causing of any hardship that may result to any person having any interest in or right over the property; and

[p.36]

(c) provision is made by law applicable to that taking of possession or acquisition—

(i) for the prompt payment of adequate compensation;

Black's law Dictionary (5th Edition) defines "Public Interest" as follows:

"Something in which the public, the community at large has some pecuniary interest, or some interest by which their loyal rights or liability are affected."

Subsection (a) of Section 21(1) are examples of public interest others are such as for the building of schools, housing estates, making land available for agricultural purposes.

The Constitution makes it mandatory that adequate compensation must be paid to the original owners of the land and payment must be prompt. See Ereku v The Gov. of Midwestern State 1974 10 SC P.59. Consequently a revocation/acquisition of land without compensation is null and void.

The position of the law is that the Government of Sierra Leone can acquire or revoke interest in land for the overriding public interest, but Notice must be given and adequate compensation paid.

By virtue of the provisions of Part I Section 3 to 20 of Cap 116 Laws of Sierra Leone (Public Lands) the Government of the Republic of Sierra Leone has power to acquire land for public purposes, and this can only be validly done after adequate compensation has been paid for the land.

In this case none of the provisions in Cap 116 supra were followed and that is why learned Counsel for the Defendants conceded to the Plaintiffs claim. For this reasons I hold that the parcel of land situate at Kissy was lawfully conveyed to the Plaintiff.

It is now time to examine the reliefs sought by the Plaintiff and I shall examine them seriatim.

(a) Declarations are granted when the party seeking it is confronted with a looming danger. The fact that the 2nd Defendant is on the Plaintiffs land illegally and remains there with no justification whatsoever entitles the Plaintiff to a declaration as prayed.

[p.37]

(b) The Defendants being illegally on the Plaintiffs land are hereby ordered to vacate the land and deliver possession of same to the Plaintiff immediately.

(c) The Plaintiff simply claims damages without specifically stating whether it is general or special damages. It is settled principle that if damages are special in nature credible evidence will have to be called in order that the amount pleaded may be proved. Without proof special damages can not be awarded. As regards general damages it need not be proved. It is the loss which flows naturally from the Defendants act. The way in which general damages is quantified is by relying on what would be the opinion and judgment of a reasonable person. See

Incar (Nig) Ltd, v Benson Transport Ltd. 1975 3SCP.117

Jaber v Basma 14WACA P. 140

Oduro v Davis 14WACA P.46

The Plaintiff is entitled to general damages.

(d) In Marengo v Daily Sketch Ltd. 19481 ALL E.R. P.406

"The House of Lords held the view that an injunction shall not be expressed to be granted against the Defendant, his servants, and agents…… for that would suggest that a direct order had been made against such servants and agents who were not parties to the case and could not therefore be bound by an injunction."

The Supreme Court of Sierra Leone is not bound by the decision of any Court in the world. Decisions of the House of Lords are only of persuasive authority on this Court.

My Lords I am persuaded by the view of the House of Lords in Marengo v Daily Sketch Ltd. supra.

[p.38]

This application succeeds. Accordingly

1. Declaration is granted as prayed.

2. The Defendants are hereby ordered to vacate the Plaintiffs land immediately.

3. Damages awarded to the Plaintiff is assessed as Le2,000,000 (Two Million Leones)

4. An injunction is granted restraining the Defendants from further interference with the Plaintiffs land.

5. The Plaintiff shall have costs which I assess as Le15,000,000/00 (Fifteen Million Leones).

SEMEGA-JANNEH JSC.

I have had the opportunity of reading the leading judgment in draft by my learned brother, Hon. Mr. Justice B. Rhodes-Vivour and I too, give judgment to the Plaintiff.

However I wish to make a brief contribution on a point which I consider to be of significance. The leading judgment has given a brief account of the facts and therefore, I have no need to traverse same.

[p.40]

The original jurisdiction of this Court vis-à-vis the protective provisions, namely, Sections 16 to 27 (inclusive) of the Constitution 1991 is limited to the enforcement of the said sections. The relevant section of the Constitution, 1991, that pertains to the enforcement of the said sections is section 28; but for our immediate purpose Subsections (1) and (2) of Section 28 are the material provisions and they are reproduced hereunder for charity:

"(1) Subject to the provisions of subsection (4), if any person alleges that any of the provisions of sections 16 to 27 (inclusive) has been, is being or is likely to be contravened in relation to him by any person (or, in the case of a person who is detained, if any other person alleges such a contravention in relation to the detained person), then, without prejudice to any other action with respects to the same matter which is lawfully available, that person, (or that other person), may apply by motion to the Supreme Court for redress.

(2) The Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction—

(a) to hear and determine any application made by any person in pursuance of subjection (1); and

(b) to determine any question arising in the case of any person which is referred to in pursuance of subsection (3), and may make such order, issue such writs, and give such directions as it may consider appropriate for the purpose of enforcing, or securing the enforcement of any of the provisions of the said sections 16 to 27 (inclusive) to the protection of which the person concerned is entitled:

Provided that the Supreme Court shall not exercise its powers under this subsection if it is satisfied that adequate means of redress for the contravention alleged are or have been available to the person concerned under any other law.

The question that necessarily arises in what is meant by enforcement in relation to or in the context of the subject matter of the action and how is this Court to enforce compliance of subsection 21(1) of the Constitution it being the material subsection. In my view enforcement in [p.41] this context means reversing the purported acquisition and the taking possession of the property in question by the government. This Court can do so by nullifying the purported acquisition and the taking possession of the property; and by giving orders and/or directions that would give back the Plaintiff possession of the property.

In my judgment section 28 under which this action is apparently brought does' not allow for the grant or award of damages; the action is without prejudice to any other action with respect to the same matter which is lawfully available to the Plaintiff. On what would an award of damages be grounded: on breach of contract or trespass or negligence or what? Such grounding would take the action out of the ambit of section 28(1) and (2) of the constitution, 1991, and therefore outside the jurisdiction of this Court. For the same reasons above this Court has no original jurisdiction in the action to determine the title to the property.

In the premises, I make the following orders:

1. The purported acquisition and the taking possession the property situate at fisher Lane, Kissy, Freetown, Western Area by the Government of Sierra Leone is hereby declared null and void.

2. The Defendants to forthwith vacate the property and deliver possession of same to the Plaintiff.

3. An injunction against the Defendants by themselves, their servants or agents or however from any unlawful interference with the property.

4. Costs in favour of the Plaintiff in the sum of Le15,000,000/00

INTRODUCTION

In the year, 1972, the Government of Sierra Leone (the Government) was desirous of establishing a petroleum refinery for obvious reasons. The Government, in pursuit of the [p.44] realization of this objective, invited certain oil companies, namely, THE BRITISH PETROLEUM COMPANY LIMITED (hereinafter called "B.P."), SHELL PETROLEUM COMPANY LIMITED, TEXACO AFRICA LIMITED, MOBIL PETROLEUM COMPANY LIMITED AND AGIP S.P.A. (hereinafter collectively referred to as "the Oil Companies") as partners (or shareholders) in the formation of a company that would establish and operate the petroleum refinery as a profit making enterprise and, at the same time, meeting the petroleum, and associated products, requirements of Sierra Leone. THE SIERRA LEONE PETROLEUM REFINING COMPANY LIMITED (hereinafter called "the Refining Company") was duly incorporated and the Petroleum Refinery (the Petroleum Refinery) was established in Freetown.

In the same year, 1972, the Government on the one part and the Oil Companies on the second part and the Refining Company on the third part entered into an agreement to regulate and guide the business and trading relationship between the parties. This agreement was ratified and confirmed by the Parliament of Sierra Leone by the passing of THE SIERRA LEONE PETROLEUM COMPANY LIMITED AGREEMENT (1972) RATIFICATION ACT 1972 (hereinafter referred to as "the Ratification Act").

In accordance with the Ratification Act, the Refining Company operated on a purchase and sale basis, that is to say, it purchased its requirements of crude petroleum and feedstock for processing at the Petroleum Refinery and sold the products which it manufactured or blended therefrom. The Oil Companies had the right and obligation to supply the Refining Company suitable crude petroleum and feedstock and, in fact, did supply these on a commercial basis. The Oil Companies or their marketing affiliates operating in Sierra Leone (the Marketing Affiliates) were to purchase from the Refining Company all the products derived from domestic processing. Among the obligations of the Government under clause 18 of the Ratification Act are as follows:—

"(b) The Government will provide and authorize without undue delay the transfer abroad of all foreign exchange requirements of the Refining Company including in particular its requirements for the purchase of crude petroleum and feedstock from the Oil Companies for domestic processing.

[p.45]

(c) The Government will provide and authorize without undue delay the transfer abroad of the foreign exchange required by the Oil Companies for remittance, inter alia, of the Refining Company's dividends, loan interest payments, loan repayments, service fees, and capital distribution and of the proceeds of any sales of Refining Company shares, each such remittance being made in the currency in which the original investment, if any, to which it relates, was made."

The Refining Company operated the Petroleum Refinery on these bases, and in the process, owed the Oil Companies debts for crude petroleum supplied.

THE FACTS

On or about the 31st day of May, 1993, the Secretary of State, Department of Trade, Industry and State Enterprises, acting for and on behalf of the Government, a creditor, petitioned the High Court for the winding up of the Refining Company. The High Court (the Winding Up Court) on the 16th July, 1993, ordered that the Refining Company be wound up by the Court under the provisions of the Companies Act, 1938, Cap. 249, and made consequential orders, amongst which, is:

"(1) That Mr. Jonathan A. Thomas, the Official Receiver appointed for the purpose of the winding up, of the said Company, is hereby appointed Liquidator of the said Company."

The Liquidator proceeded to conduct the winding up of the Refining Company. This process was continuing when by a letter dated the 15th day of January, 2000, the Liquidator informed the Managing Director of PRECIOUS MINERALS MARKETING COMPANY (SL) LIMITED of his intention to apply for his release as Liquidator of the Refining Company. Earlier on the 20th December, 1984, B.P. had informed the Refining Company that it has transferred all its rights, title and interest in the debts for the crude petroleum supplied by it, that is to say, has assigned the debt to Precious Minerals Marketing Company (SL) Limited (hereinafter referred to as the Assignee-Creditor). By a letter dated the 13th January 2000, P.M. Carew Esq., Solicitor for the Assignee-Creditor, notified the Registrar of Companies, for and on behalf of the Assignee-[p.46]Creditor, of his objection to the application for the release of the Liquidator. By a letter dated the 17th January 2000, P.M. Carew informed the Liquidator of his instructions to serve the Assignee-Creditor's objection to his release as Liquidator on the Registrar of Companies.

By a JUDGES SUMMONS dated the 6th day of June, 2000, the Liquidator applied, among others, for an order by way of direction that he be at liberty to apply for the dissolution of the Refining Company and for his release as Liquidator. The Liquidator further prayed to the Winding Up Court to give such directions with regard to the objection taken by the Assignee-Creditor to the Notice of Intention to apply for the release of the Liquidator.

The Assignee-Creditor, who was served with the Judges Summons, filed an affidavit in opposition sworn by Mr. P.M. Carew on the 8th June, 2000 (Exh. "PL 7" (See pages 37-38 of the Record). The Winding Up Court (Judge) after considering the affidavit of Mr. P.M. Carew, in opposition, gave direction, among others, to the Liquidator based primarily on the annexed exhibits to the affidavits of the Liquidator sworn to on the 6th June, 2000, and marked: exhibits "G3" and "H" respectively, that the Liquidator "demands from the Governor of the Bank of Sierra Leone (the Bank) payment to the Liquidator of all Leone deposits, plus accrued interest, that were deposited by the Company (the Refining Company) at Barclays Bank (SL) Limited (Barclays) and Standard Chartered Bank Limited (Standard Chartered) for payment to B.P. for petroleum products that were supplied to the company, which deposits are part of the Pipeline Funds held by the Bank of Sierra Leone as stated in the Governor's letters respectively dated the 24th November 1994 to the Liquidator (See 28 of the Record) and the 1st May, 1997, to the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice." [Brackets provided] (See p.34 of the Record).

The Liquidator, in compliance with the Winding Up Court's direction, forwarded the said Judge's Order to the Bank. The Bank replied through the Deputy Governor by letter dated the 5th September, 2000, (Exh. PL 10) (at page 51 of the Record) in which the Bank denied being in possession of the said deposits. At the sitting of the 23rd October, 2000, the Liquidator, through Mr. Valesius V. Thomas, of Counsel, reported to the [p.47] Winding Up Court, the position of the Bank as expressed in the Deputy Governor's letter of the 5th September, 2000. The Winding Up Court, after hearing Counsel, Mr. Valesius V. Thomas and Mr. P.M. Carew, made the following Orders, amongst others:

(1) That the Governor of the Bank of Sierra Leone be made a party to the proceeding.

(2) That the Applicant (the Liquidator) serves the Governor, Bank of Sierra Leone, with the summons and all affidavits in this matter so far filed within days i.e. by the 30th day of October, 2000.

(3) That the Governor, the Bank of Sierra Leone, having been served with the above papers not later than the 30th October, 2000, must file and serve affidavits within one week on all interested parties i.e. latest 7th November 2000. (Exh. "PL11") (at page 52 of the Record).

The Bank was duly served, and on the 31st October, 2000, a conditional appearance was entered on the Bank's behalf, and subsequently, an affidavit was filed sworn to by Mr. Ibrahim Khalil Lamin, Acting Director, International Finance Department of the Bank, reiterated the Bank's position that the said Leone deposits were not transferred to the Bank, relying on the letter dated the 19th July 1995, ("Exh. IKLI") (at page 56 of the Record) in which Standard Chartered confirmed that they "are holding an amount of Le.8,860,208 which at the prevailing rate was the equivalent of USD6,917,696" in their Books. An affidavit was filed on behalf of the Assignee-Creditor sworn to by Mr. Ivan Cecil Adeyemi Gordon, adducing evidence by a way of letters from Standard Chartered and Rokel Commercial (Rokel) (successor to Barclays) confirming that the deposits were with the Bank (see pages 57-58 of the Record). On the basis of the said affidavit of Mr. Gordon and further confirmations from the Commercial Banks directly to the Bank, Mr. I.K. Lamin filed a further affidavit sworn on the 28th March, 2001, and (see page 68 of the Record) expressed the Bank's willingness and readiness to transfer the Leone funds deposited with the Bank back to the said Commercial Banks for "disposal according to the instructions of the Official Receiver and Liquidator of the original depositor, the Sierra Leone Petroleum Refining Company Limited". A further affidavit [p.48] sworn to by Mr. I.C.A. Gordon was filed in which he avers that the amount due was not the amount of Leones deposited but their equivalent in Dollars at the relevant time, and that payment should be made to the Liquidator and transferred to the Assignee-Creditor not for the purpose of administration.

After hearing arguments of Counsel on diverse dates, the Winding Up Court, on the 14th July, 2005, made the Orders following:

1. That the pipeline deposits of US$11,304,899.79 held by the Bank of Sierra Leone (the Bank) be paid over to the Liquidator of Sierra Leone Petroleum Refining Company Limited (in liquidation) (The Refining Company).

2. That no order as to interest is made as the amount was held by the Bank of Sierra Leone for externalization.

3. That the costs of this application be taxed and paid by the Bank of Sierra Leone as it did not make a clear breast that the amount had been deposited with it by the commercial banks for externalization.

The facts are given in detail because a clear perspective of the facts is a prerequisite to an insightful appreciation of the issues of the proceedings before the respective Courts.

THE APPEAL TO THE COURT OF APPEAL

The Assignee-Creditor being dissatisfied with the Winding Up Court's Order of the 14th July, 2005, appealed to the Court of Appeal under the provisions of Section 211 of the Companies Act, 1938, which provides:

"211 — Appeals from any order or decision made or given in the matter of the winding up of a company by the Court may be had in the same [p.49] manner and subject to the same conditions as appeals from any order or decision of the Court in cases within its ordinary jurisdiction."

The Grounds of Appeal

(1) That the Learned Judge erred in law when he made the Order on the 14th July 2005 in that he had no jurisdiction to order that the Respondent pays to the Liquidator the sum of USD$11,304,899/79 as there was no claim before him for the sum of USD$11,304,899/79 or for any amount in United States Dollars.

(2) That the Learned Judge erred in law when he made the Order of the 14th July 2005 in that he had no jurisdiction to make the Order in United States Dollars and his Order was made per incuriam in view of the decision of the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone in the matter S.C. CIV APP. NO.1/98 Between CASTROL LIMITED AND JOHN MICHAEL MOTORS LIMITED which sets out and limits the instances/occasions in which the Courts of the country have jurisdiction to make an order in foreign currency.

(3) That the Learned Judge erred in law when he made the Order of the 14th July 2005 in that he had no jurisdiction to make the said Order in view of inconsistencies therein contained vis-à-vis his previous Order made on the 19th June 2000 in which he ordered inter alia that ".... The Liquidator of Sierra Leone Petroleum Refining Company Limited (in liquidation) demands from the Governor of Bank of Sierra Leone payment to the Liquidator of all the Leone deposits, plus accrued interest that were deposited by the Company at Barclays bank (SL) Limited and Standard Chartered Bank Limited...." which is the Order that the Respondent Applicant was called upon to answer.

(4) That the Learned Judge erred in law when he in effect ordered that the Appellant pays to the Liquidator/Respondent the sum of USD$11,304,899/79 when the money was received by the Appellant in [p.50] Leones (that is the sum of Le11,304,899/79 without any evidence of the rate of exchange vis-a-vis the United States Dollars and the Leones (either at the time the Respondent received the monies from Standard Chartered bank Sierra Leone Limited and Barclays Bank Sierra Leone Limited or at the date of making the Order before the Judge.

(5) That the judgment is against the weight of the evidence.

The Grounds of Appeal are rooted in the issue of jurisdiction of the Winding Up Court to make the Order of the 14th July, 2005.

The Court of Appeal was primarily being asked to determine whether the Winding Up Court (or Judge) had the jurisdiction to make the Order of the 14th July 2005. The Court of Appeal in its judgment of the 6th December, 2007, affirmed the Order of the 14th July, 2005, to the extent it is limited by the variation made by it that the amount of US$11,304,899.79 or its equivalent in Leones be paid to the Assignee-Creditor and not to the Liquidator. The Bank (Applicant therein) being dissatisfied with the judgment of the Court of Appeal, has applied to this Court by Originating Motion dated the 21st December 2007 for reliefs under Section 125 of the Constitution, 1991.

The Reliefs Sought

(a) For an Order of Certiorari to quash the Order numbered 1 of the Certified Order of the Court of Appeal and which is "contained in its Judgment dated 6th December 2007 on the grounds that:

i. the Court of Appeal did not have jurisdiction to make neither was there any legal basis for the making of the said Order requiring the Applicant herein to pay to the Precious Minerals Marketing Company Limited herein to pay to the Precious Minerals Marketing Company Limited the sum of US$11,304,899.79 as there was no action or claim brought by the said Precious Minerals Marketing Company Limited for the sum of [p.51] US$11,304,899.79 and a fortiori there was no trial leading to the making of the said Order against the Applicant.

ii. there was no cross-appeal before the Court of Appeal by Precious Minerals Marketing Company Limited for the sum of US$11,304,899.79 against the Applicant herein.

iii. the Court of Appeal has no original jurisdiction to entertain, hear and determine any claim by Precious Minerals Marketing Company Limited against the Applicant herein that could have led to the making of the said Order for the payment to the said Precious Minerals Marketing Company Limited of the sum of US$11,304,899.79.

iv. the Court of Appeal did not have any jurisdiction to make the said final Order without first hearing in full and disposing of all the grounds of appeal in the matter pending before it.

(b) If the first Order sought herein is granted then a direction be issued to the Court of Appeal Ordering it to set aside the Order of the High Court dated the 14th July 2005.

(c) Alternatively if the first Order sought herein is granted and the second Order sought is refused then an Order of mandamus be made directed to the Court of Appeal to hear the appeal of the said matter before it in full.

(d) If the third Order sought herein is granted then a further Order be made prohibiting the Court of Appeal from hearing and determining any claims by said Precious Minerals Marketing Company limited for relief against the Applicant herein in respect of which no action has been instituted.

(e) A Stay of Execution of the Judgment of the Court of Appeal dated the 6th December 2007 pending the hearing and determination of this motion.

[p.52]

(f) Any further or other relief as to the Court may seem just.

(g) That the Costs of this application be provided for.

THE ISSUE AND ITS DETERMINATION

Whether or not the Winding Up Court of the High Court or the Court of Appeal has the Jurisdiction to order payment by the Bank of the sum of US$11,304,899.79 or its equivalent in Leones to either the Liquidator or the Assignee-Creditor

To determine the issue a Court would have to examine the purpose of a winding up of a Company and the functions of the Court and Liquidator in the context of the Companies Act, 1938, the Rules and the general law in relation to the facts.

The Purpose Of Winding Up And The Duties Of The Court And Liquidator

The purpose of winding up of a company by the Court, is for the collection of the assets of the company, and for same to be applied in the discharge of its liabilities (see Section 192 of the Companies Act, 1938). A procedure available to the Court for the discharge of the duty is delineated in Sections 203 of the Companies Act, 1938, which empowers the Court to summon persons suspected of having property or assets of the company or the matters connected therewith and section 204 which is not relevant for the purposes of the matters before the Court. See rules 76 and 77 of the Companies (Winding Up) Rules of 1929. The Court, after determining that a person has an asset belonging to or is indebted to the Company, either on the basis of the examination of the person, or even without examination of the person, on the basis of other evidences, may require the person to deliver to the Liquidator "any money, property or books and papers in his hands to which the Company is prima facie entitled" by virtue of section 193 of the Companies Act, 1938, which provides:

"193 The Court may, at any time after making a winding up order, require any contributions for the time being on the list of contributories, and any trustee, receiver, banker, agent or officer of the company to pay, deliver, [p.53] convey, surrender or transfer forthwith,, or within such time as the Court directs, to the Liquidator any money, property or books and papers in his hands to which the Company is prima facie entitled."

It must be borne in mind that if there is a dispute as to ownership, there is no power to determine the dispute under this provision. See Re Palace Restaurants, Limited, [1914] 1 CH 492 at p.500. My view is that if there is dispute as to ownership or a fundamental triable issue in dispute that is not inherent in the administration of the company or the winding up process, the aggrieved party ought to find recourse in the Courts in their ordinary jurisdiction outside the judicial winding up process. The reason being, in my view, that the duty of collecting the assets of the Company being wound up is imposed on the Winding Up Court. The Court generally carries out this duty through the Liquidator as officer of the Court and, in some instances, under the specific direction and control of the Court. See sections 192, 182, in particular sub-section (3); and 187 of the Companies Act 1938. See also Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd edition, para; 1144 at pages 583-584. Clearly the Companies Act, 1938, contemplates actions or settlement of disputes outside the winding up process under the Winding Up Court. This, in my view, is made manifest by section 182 (1) (a) of the Companies Act 1938, which provides that the Liquidator, with the sanction either of the Court or of the Committee of inspection, is empowered:

"(a) to bring or defend any action or legal proceeding in the name of and on behalf of the Company."

This provision enables the Liquidator to sue (or defend) in the name of a Company which is being wound up under the Companies Act, 1938 for assets or debts or other matters that do not come within the purview of section 193 of the companies Act, 1938. See Russian and English Bank Baring Brothers and Co, [1936] A.C.405 H.L.; [1936] 1 All E.R. 505.

[p.54]

Direction of the Court to Demand Payment of the Leone Deposits With the Bank

The Order of the Winding Up Court relevant to the proceedings is the direction given the Liquidator on the 19th June, 2000, to demand payment of the Leone deposits from the Bank; the direction was given in relation to the Liquidator's application to the Court contained in the Judge's Summons of the 6th June, 2000 made under section 183(3) of the Companies Act, 1938 which states:

"(3) The Liquidator may apply to the Court in manner prescribed for directions in relation to any particular manner arising under the winding up" and specifically to the application for the Court to give such directions with regard to the objections taken by the Assignee-Creditor to the Notice of Intention by the Liquidator to be at liberty to apply for his release as Liquidator, and for the dissolution of the Company. The objection of the Assignee-Creditor is re-iterated in the affidavit of Mr. P.M. Carew sworn on the 8th June, 2000, specifically the paragraphs reproduced hereunder:

"4. The Liquidator, being responsible for the collection and distribution of the Company's Assets under Rule 76 of the 1929 Company Winding Up Rules, failed to collect from the Bank of Sierra Leone which Bank held certain amounts paid into the Bank's accounts for externalization of such funds in favour of B.P. International Limited until the said debts were assigned to the Creditor herein.

5. That the said Liquidator had full Notice of the Oil Debts owed to the Creditor and yet failed to collect the assets held by the Bank of Sierra Leone and pay same to the Creditor (vide Ex. "G1" in the said affidavit of Valesius V. Thomas). (Note: the affidavit is that of Jonathan A. Thomas, the Liquidator, sworn on the 6th June 2000. Valesius V. Thomas is Solicitor for the Liquidator)

(Brackets provided).

6. That whatever arrangements or understanding the Liquidator had with the Bank of Sierra Leone at a meeting of Creditors for crude oil supplies at the office of the Governor on Friday the 12th September, 1994, at 2.00 p.m (vide Ex "G1" in the said affidavit of Valesius V. Thomas) does not and will not absolve the Liquidator of his responsibility under rule 76 of the 1929 Company Winding Up Rules.

7. That the Liquidator, as will be seen in the attachments to "Ex B" of Mr. Valesius V. Thomas's said affidavit the Liquidator has paid various creditors but has taken no concrete or reasonable action to secure the interest of the Creditor herein in the execution of his duties as Liquidator of the Sierra Leone Petroleum Refining Company Limited (in liquidation).

The Winding Up Court based its said direction contained in its Order of the 19th June 2000 on the evidence affidavits of Jonathan A. Thomas, the Liquidator, sworn on the 6th June, 2000, with the annexed exhibits and the affidavits of Mr. P.M. Carew sworn on the 8th June 2000 and the 12th June 2000 respectively and after considering the arguments of Counsel, Mr. Valesius V. Thomas and Mr. P.M. Carew, for the Liquidator and the Assignee-Creditor respectively (see pages 81-82 of the Record). Let it be noted that the affidavits of Mr. P.M. Carew sworn to on the 8th and 12th June 2000, respectively, are in all materials particular the same except that the affidavit of the 12th June, 2000, corrected the erroneous reference to Valesius V. Thomas for Jonathan A. Thomas, the Liquidator. Perhaps, this explains the filing of two affidavits whose material contents are exactly the same.

As at the time the Court made its Order of the 19th June, 2000, it must have been and was, abundantly clear to both counsel and the Court that:

(1) the Refining Company owed the Assignee-Creditor crude oil debts payable in US Dollars and

[p.56]

(2) that the Commercial Banks had deposited Leone sums with the Bank, equivalent to the US Dollar debts, for externalization to B.P.

In my view, it was clear that the direction of the Court was for the Liquidator to demand for payment of the "Leone deposits" made by the Commercial Banks to the Bank and not its equivalent in US Dollars as at the time the Leones were deposited. The wording of the Order cannot reasonably be given any other interpretation or meaning. In my judgment, had the Bank forwarded the Leone deposits to the Liquidator that should have legally discharged its obligations and. prevent any need for its direct participation in the winding up process. Unfortunately, the Bank, in reply to the letter of the Liquidator dated the 4th September 2000 (at page 50 of the Record — (Exh. "C1") denied the transfer of the said Leone deposits by its letter dated the 5th September 2000 (at page 50 of Record — ("Exh. C2") annexed to the affidavit of the Liquidator sworn on the 10th October 2000 (at pages 44 and 45 of the Record). The denial by the Bank may sound unreasonable but given the lack of institutional memory and the woeful state of record keeping in our institutions, including the Courts, and more telling and relevant, the letter of Standard Chartered dated the 19th July 1995 and addressed to the Director of International Finance of the Bank (at page 56 of the Record - (Exh "IKL1") which clearly states :—

"We are forwarding the attached claim from Precious Minerals Marketing Company (SL) Limited (the Assignee-Creditor) who have claimed the rights of USD6,917,696 under the Commercial Pipeline Debt Repayment Scheme. Standard Chartered Bank Sierra Leone Limited confirms that we are holding an amount of Le.8, 860,208 which at the prevailing rate was the equivalent of USD6, 917,696 in our books……."

and exhibited to the affidavit of Ibrahim Khalil Lamin Sworn on the 8th November, 2000, as Exh. "IKL 1" (at page 55 of the Record) The letter of Rokel (successor to Barclays) dated the 24th November, 2000, addressed to Mr. P.M. Carew may also be of help in the understanding of the transactions between the Commercial Banks and the Bank in its advise:

[p.57]

"that the amount of Le5,460,252.63 being the equivalent of USD4,387,203.79 is held in our pipeline suspended items at the Bank of Sierra Leone by order of Sierra Leone Petroleum Refining Company Limited for BP Oil International." (Emphasis provided)

It appears the Commercial Banks maintained individual accounts in respect of funds for externalisation and the funds were released for, or were externalized upon availability of the requisite foreign exchange and after due authorization by the competent authority, that is, by the Government directly or by the Bank. The inward flow and the outward flow of foreign exchange are ordinarily controlled under powers conferred by Statute and/or Regulations, and when there are scarcities or difficulties in the availability of foreign exchange, Government regulates the inward and outward flow of foreign exchange through the Central Bank, and prioritize the externalization of foreign exchange in manner, hopefully, consistent with Government policy and the requirements and import needs of the country. Sierra Leone, I believe, was no exception to that which some of the developing countries in the sub-region and other parts found themselves in the 80s and 90s in respect of the then prevailing scarcity of foreign exchange. However, in respect of the Leone deposits in question, what matters for the purpose of the proceedings is that they were and are with the Bank for externalization.

The Debt Buy-Back Operation Vis-A-Vis the Crude Oil Debts

There is a misperception that the Crude Oil Debts are owed by the Government to the Oil Companies. I fail to see the legal or factual basis for such a perception or conclusion. From the undisputed and accepted facts stated above, it is clear that the Government, like the Oil Companies, was and still is a shareholder in the Refining Company. The Oil Companies, apart from being shareholders, had business and commercial relationship with the Refining Company in which the Oil Companies sold and supplied, on commercial basis, crude petroleum and other feedstock. There is no evidence that Government guaranteed payments of these sales.

[p.58]

The misperception, in my view, arose out of the Debt Buy-Back Operation instituted by the Government under World Bank/DA Sponsorship aimed at reducing Government liabilities to both public and private creditors, and included buying debts owed by Government and paying Creditors a percentage of the debt due them. It seems control and direction of the Debt Buy-Back Operation was placed with the Bank. The legal obligations and liabilities remained the same; the Refining Company was and still is the debtor for the crude oil supplied. Funds were deposited in the Bank for externalization and until that was done and the funds reach the creditor, the Refining Company was and still liable for the crude oil debts; and settlement of the debts remains its sole obligation and not of the Bank as was made clear in the meeting of the Creditors of the 2nd September 1994 in which the Assignee-Creditor was represented in the opening in paragraph 4 where the Minutes state:—

4. In 1982/83 the SLPRC (the Refining Company placed funds with the Bank of Sierra Leone for externalization to the crude oil suppliers, who have still not received payment for crude supplies. However settlement of debts is not the obligation of the Central Bank (the Bank). (Brackets provided)

The Government, by the Debt Buy-Back Operation, was trying to settle the debts, including that owed by the Refining Company, through Donor funds made available to the Debt Buy-Back Operation, by reason of policy and not legal obligation. However, it is correct, and must be borne in mind, that under Clause 18, under the rubric: FOREIGN EXCHANGE, of the Ratification Act, 1972, Government might have been under an obligation to "provide and authorize without undue delay the transfer abroad" the requisite foreign funds equivalent to the Leone Deposits with the Bank by the Commercial Banks for settlement of the debts owed by the Refining Company to the Oil Companies including that owed to the Assignee-Creditor. A breach of these provisions by the Government may provide a basis for legal recourse to the Courts by the Oil Companies against the Government.

The Debt Buy-Back Operation is, and must be viewed as being, outside the winding up process. However, the recovery of the assets (or funds) of the Refining Company [p.59] remains within the mandate of the Liquidator as was pointed out in paragraph 6 of the said two affidavits of P.M. Carew, Esq. In my considered opinion, the Liquidator cannot participate and abide by the decisions or any payments under the Debt Buy-Back Operation, with or without the sanction of the Court, if such are to impact negatively on the assets (Leone deposits) of the Refining Company with the Bank, in terms of reduction of such assets or their neutralization, without the consent of the other creditors. In law the Court is obligated to collect the assets of the Company being wound up and settle its liabilities in accordance with law and prescribed rules, including rules relating to preferential payments under Section 249 and for Creditors that rank pari pasu. In short, the Assignee-Creditor is not entitled to preferential treatment in relation to payments by the Refining Company, and should not get through the back door treatment that it is not entitled through the front door.

The Orders of the Winding Court Making the Bank a Party to the Winding up Proceedings

Consequential upon the Bank's denial of being in possession of the Leone deposits made by the Commercial Banks and upon hearing the views of Counsel, Mr. Valesius V. Thomas and Mr. P.M. Carew, ordered on the 23rd October 2000 that the Bank be made a party to the winding up proceedings and be served with the summons and all the affidavits in the matter. This was duly done and conditional appearance was entered on the Bank's behalf, on the 31st October, 2000, by its Solicitors, Renner-Thomas and Co., represented by Dr. Renner-Thomas (as he then was). Dr. Renner-Thomas conceded on the strength of the letters confirming the Leone deposits from the Commercial Banks exhibited as "FMC 3" and "FMC4" to the affidavit of P.M. Carew Esq. sworn on the 4th December 2000 (at pages 58, 65 and 66 of the Record) (reflected also in the affidavit of I.K. Lamin as exhibits "IKL2" and "LKL3" — at pages 68, 70 and 71 of the Record) that at some stage after 1995, certain monies might have been transferred by Rokel and Standard Chartered in a designated account — the Pipeline Account and sought the Court's indulgence to allow time for the Bank to verify the exact amounts transferred to the Bank; and that once that has been done the Bank would comply with the Order of the Court (of the 23rd October 2000 for the payment of the Leone deposits to the Liquidator) to a limited extent in that payment could not include interest as the [p.60] account was not interest bearing; and that the Court was aware of the fact vide the affidavit of the Liquidator, Jonathan A. Thomas, sworn on the 10th October 2000 at paragraph 5 thereof (see page 44-45 of the Record). After diverse adjournments, Dr. Renner-Thomas was able to confirm the amount in the Pipeline Account at Le5460257-63 in respect of the Leone deposits by Barclays/Rokel for remittance to B.P. by order of the Refining Company (at page 98 of the Records), and stated that it was available to the Court or Barclays. In respect of the Leone amounts deposited by Standard Chartered for externalisation, Dr. Renner-Thomas invited the Winding Up Court to make an appropriate order in view of the statement by Standard Chartered that the funds are still in their books. It should have been a simple matter for the Winding Up Court to do in view of paragraph 3 and 4, in particular where Mr. Ibrahim Khalil Lamin, the Director, International Finance Department of the Bank, states that the Bank is ready, willing and able to transfer the funds referred to in Exhibits "IKL 2" and "IKL 3", and originally due for externalisation to B.P., to the respective Commercial Banks for disposal according to the instructions of the Official Receiver and Liquidator of the Refining Company. Not an unreasonable proposal; the control of the funds were said to be still vested in the Commercial Banks. The Leone amount reflected in Exhibit "IKJ 2" is Le8, 860,208. In effect, the respective Leone amounts held in the Pipeline Account are: Leones 5,460257-63 and Leones 8,860,208 from the account of Barclays/Rokel and Standard Chartered respectively, making a total sum of Leones: 14,320,465.

After the due determination of the amounts of Leone deposits by the said Commercial Banks, the duty of the Winding Up Court, in my considered view, was to direct the payment of the said sums to the Liquidator by the Bank in compliance with the Court's Order of the 19th June 2000 which the Bank said it is ready, willing and able to make available as the Court directs. To both Counsel, Mr. Valesius V. Thomas and Dr. Renner-Thomas, the course for the Winding Up Court to take was clear: since the Order of the 19th June 2000 the proceedings that followed was to identify the Leone deposits and amounts involved, and since this had been done, the Order of the 19th June 2000 ought to have been followed pursuant to Section 192(1) of the Companies Act, 1938. This position is consistent with my view. There is no basis for the assertion by Mr. P.M. Carew that what the Commercial Banks deposited with the Bank is in U.S Dollars — U.S $6,917,696 by Standard Chartered and U.S. $ 4,387,203-79 by Barclays/Rokel adding [p.61] to a total of U.S $11,304,899-79. In my view, the assertion is not grounded in the evidential facts, or, the application of the relevant law to those facts. In short, the assertion is not tenable.

Notwithstanding the arguments proffered by the Mr. Valesius V. Thomas and Dr. Renner-Thomas, the Winding Up Court, on the 14th July 2005, in a short ruling, was of the view that it was abundantly clear from Exhibits "IKL 2" and "IKL 3 and "H" that the Bank held funds in respect of the Debt Buy-Back Operation and that the sums stipulated in Exhibit "H" are U.S$ 6,917,696-00 for Standard Chartered and U.S $4387203.79 for Barclays/Rokel — making a total of U.S $11,304,899-79 and that these sums were still being held by the Bank for externalisation and form a debt by the Government to B.P.; and consequently made the following orders:

(1) The Pipeline Deposit of U.S $11,304,899-79 held by the Bank of Sierra Leone to be paid to the Liquidator.

(2) No order is made as to interest. The amount was held for externalization.

(3) Costs awarded against the Bank of Sierra Leone for not making a clean breast that the amount had been deposited with it by the Commercial Banks for externalization. Such costs to be taxed.

Again, in respect of Order (1), my considered view is that it is not grounded on the facts before the Court and cannot be justified by application of the relevant law on the facts, as have been expressed in the preceding discourse of the relevant issues or matters. In my judgment, the Winding Up Court, in respect of the Order, made the Order outside its jurisdiction. At the time the Court made its Order of the 19th June, 2000, it was seised of the facts that Leone deposits were made to the Bank for externalisation in foreign exchange; and this central fact and other supporting facts had not changed at the time the Order of the 14th July, 2005, was made. On what factual basis then was the Order of the 19th June, 2000, supplanted by the Order of the 14th July, 2005? In my judgment, there is no factual or legal basis for it; the Order of the 14th July 2005 was based on a false assumption that the Bank held foreign exchange funds under the Debt Buy-Back Operation and that those funds were for the settlement of the debts owed by [p.62] the Government to B.P. There is no evidence that the Bank held such foreign exchange funds under the Debt Buy-Back Operation and that the Government owed debts to B.P.; as indicated in the discourse above, the Debt Buy-Back Operation was outside the winding up process and not within the control of the Court or Liquidator.

It is abundantly clear on the evidence that the Government was not owing B.P. or the Refining Company any debts; and if in fact the Government owned the alleged foreign exchange funds, and intended them for settlement of the alleged debts it owed to B.P. that would have placed the funds completely outside the winding up process. The duty of the Court in the winding up process is to cause to be collected the assets of the Refining Company, and to settle its liabilities; the assets to be collected must belong to the Refining Company and no one else. See section 192(1). Ownership of the assets or funds by the Government, by necessarily implication, excludes the funds from the jurisdiction of the Winding Up Court and the winding up process.

The Considerations By And The Conclusions Of The Court Of Appeal.

The Court of Appeal, as in the case of the Winding Up Court, misperceived the essence and real nature of the Debt Buy-Back Operation in the context of the legal relationship between the parties concerned, with particular reference to the Government, the Bank, the Oil Companies and the Refining Company, vis-a-vis the Crude Oil Debts and Government policy; thus leading, in my view, to erroneous conclusions, with all due respects, by the Court of Appeal. There is no dispute that the Refining Company, as a legal person, owed the Oil Companies, including B.P., debts in U.S. Dollars. The debts owed to B.P., as in the case of the other creditors, were proved under the provisions of Section 247 of the Companies Act 1938, and is recognised by the Winding Up Court (See paragraphs 4,5,6,7 and 8 of the affidavit of Jonathan A. Thomas, the Liquidator, sworn on the 6th June 2000 — Exhibit PL 6 (and at page 3-6 of the Record) The debts owed to B.P. by the Refining Company, at all material times, stood at U.S$ 11,037,459-00. It is this debt, owed by the Refining Company that the Government was willing to pay through the Debt Buy-Back Operation, albeit at an agreed reduced amount, either as a matter of policy or for some other reason. The reasons are irrelevant, but the decision of the Government to pay the debts that it did not owe was a matter for the [p.63] Government and not the Liquidator; what matters to, and the duty of the Liquidator, is to collect the assets (funds) owned by the Refining Company. The U.S Dollar amount, erroneously referred to in the Debt Buy-Back Operation as Government debts to B.P. by both the Winding Up Court and the Court of Appeal, was infused in the relationship between the Bank, the Commercial Banks, the Refining Company and B.P., leading to the respective Orders of the 14th July 2005 and the 6th December 2007.

The Court of Appeal in its judgment of the 6th December 2007, affirmed the Ruling of the Winding Up Judge of the 14th July 2005, at least in part, on the basis of the contractual obligation of the Government under Clause 18 (b) and (c) under the rubric: FOREIGN EXCHANGE. After quoting sub-clause (b) and making reference to sub-clause (c), the Learned Justice of Appeal, Ms. S. Koroma, proceeded to state:

"There is abundant evidence to show that the Oil Company creditors supplied petroleum and other products to the company in foreign currency. Exhibits "D, "E" and "F" attachments to the affidavit of Jonathan A. Thomas referred to above buttress this point. I therefore hold that the Learned Judge was right to pronounce his Ruling dated the 14th July 2005 in foreign currency. It is obvious that the loss felt by B.P. International which was assigned to the Creditor/Respondent was in foreign currency. Appellant's Counsel submitted that even if that loss was in foreign currency, the responsibility for paying that debt was that of the company in Liquidation. I am not convinced by that argument. There is evidence that the Leone equivalent of the debt owed by the company was deposited in the Pipeline Account for externalisation in 1982/83 well before the liquidation process started".

The quotation also confirms in my mind that the Learned Justice of Appeal was of the view that the debts owed by the Refining Company were settled by the company before the liquidation process upon the Leone sum being deposited for externalisation by the Bank. Again if this were the correct legal situation, then the funds deposited belong not to the Refining Company but to B.P. and therefore outside the winding up process and the control of the Liquidator. The result would be that the Winding Up Court has no jurisdiction to deal with the deposits or direct that they be transferred to the Liquidator.

I am clear in my mind, that the view expressed explains the learned Justice of Appeal's decision to order that the sum of US$ 11,304,899-79 or its equivalent in Leones be paid to the Assignee-Creditor. I am further re-inforced in this view by the Learned Justice of Appeal (at page 16 of the judgment) by her words, and I quote:

"There is evidence that the company paid debts owed to B.P. International through the established channels. It is my view that the moment the two commercial banks deposited the, Leone equivalent into the Pipeline Account the obligation of the company was concluded. It was left to the Appellant (the Bank) to do its part and externalize the foreign exchange component to the creditor. This was a policy of Government and its implementing agent, the Appellant. I hold that the refund of monies in the custody of the Appellant should be made to the assignee (Assignee — Creditor) of B.P. International, the Creditor/Respondent" (Emphasis and brackets provided)

But does the learned Justice of Appeal's view reflect the correct legal situation? The learned Justice of Appeal's view could have been tenable if there was cogent evidence that the Bank was an agent of B.P. and' received the funds in question as such an agent. In my view, there is no such, or any, evidence to support that position. On the contrary, the facts are supportive of the view that the Bank is holding the Leone deposits for the Commercial Banks, who received the funds from the Refining Company, until such funds are externalized and reach the designated creditor, in this case, B.P. In that regard, the Leone deposits are assets (funds) of the Refining Company and, therefore, included in the winding up process and under the control of the Liquidator.

Another misperception by the learned Justice of Appeal, with all due respects to her (see page 13 of the Judgment), and others, are of the relationships between the Bank, the Government, the Commercial Banks, the Refining Company and B.P. in the context of, or in relation to, the Leone deposits for externalisation. Clearly, as regards the [p.65] Bank's role as financial adviser to Government, the Bank, under the provisions of subsection (1) of section 41 of the Bank of Sierra Leone Act, 2000, which provides:

"(1) The Bank shall act as the financial adviser to the Government" (Emphasis provided) is mandatorily/statutorily made the financial adviser of the Government. Subsections (2) and (3) set out the circumstances in which the Bank may be required to give, and its duties to give, financial advice to the Government.

As regards the Bank's role as agent of the Government, section 43 of the Act which provides:

"43 The Bank may act generally as agent for the Government

(a) Where the Bank can do so appropriately and consistently within this Act and with its duties and functions as a Central Bank; and

(b) On such terms and conditions as may be agreed between the Bank and the Government" is not categorical or mandatory. I understand from this that the Bank may serve as general agent of the Government upon agreed terms and conditions, only where it is appropriate and consistent with the duties and functions of the Bank. There is no evidence of agreed terms and conditions between the Bank and Government as regard the Leone deposits. The Bank may in fact be the general agent of the Government but was it acting as the Government's agent in the matter of the Leone deposits for externalization? I think not. The matter of the Leone deposits is quadripartite: that is, it involves the Refining Company giving the Leones to the Commercial Banks who in turn deposits the sum with the Bank for Externalization to B.P., subject to approval and the availability of the requisite foreign exchange to B.P. There is no evidence that the Bank [p.66] received the Leone deposits under the provisions of the Ratification Act or upon the instruction of the Government to receive same on its behalf.

(Emphasis provided)

In my view the Bank's acceptance of the deposits must be viewed in the context of its general powers under section 36, subsection (1) (c) in particular, of the Act, and its foreign exchange regulatory role under Part VI of the Act, and foreign exchange regulations. In my view, on the deposits being made with the Bank, either in a specific account of the depositor (the Commercial Banks in this case) or a designated Account (the Pipeline Account), such deposits, in consideration of fundamental principles of Law, are being held by the Bank as bailee of the Commercial Banks. The Bank as a central bank deals with the Commercial Banks and not their customers. The financial service provided by the individual Commercial Bank in processing the repayment in the requisite foreign exchange of the crude oil debts owed by the Refining Company to the Oil Companies, in the instant case to B.P., was a service offered and provided by the individual Commercial Bank in the ordinary course of its business as between the individual Commercial Bank and its customers for which the individual Commercial Bank normally charged a fee. The contractual relationship for the financial service is clearly between the individual Commercial Bank and its customer.

Before concluding on the matter of the US$ 11,304,899-79, let me deal with the case of Castrol Limited vs. John Michael Motors Limited S.C. Civ. App No. 1/98 (unreported) in relation to the Orders of the Courts that the Leones deposits be paid in the Dollar equivalent at the time. I largely agree with the understanding of the learned Justice of Appeal. The Castrol case merely identified and adopted the principles restated by Lord Goff in Attorney-General of the Republic of Ghana and the Ghana National Petroleum Corporation vs. Texaco Oversesas Tankship Limited (the Texaco Melbourne) (1994) Lloyds Law Report 473 which is as follows:

"First it is necessary to ascertain whether there is an intention to be drawn from the terms of the contract that damages for breach of contract should be awarded in any particular currency or currencies In the absence of such intention the damage should be calculated in the currency in which the loss was felt by the plaintiff or which truly expresses his loss"

In addition, the Castrol case decided that where the plaintiff claims damages in foreign currency but failed to prove, on the basis of the said restated principles, that he was entitled to judgment that should be pronounced in foreign currency, the Court, if the Plaintiff has proved damages, albeit in foreign currency, may convert the damages suffered into the local currency, that is, the Leones. Of course where the Plaintiff fails to prove his claims, it becomes irrelevant whether the claim is in foreign currency or Leones. The Court would simply not pronounce judgment in his favour!

In the instant case, the issue of damages, in my view, does not arise. The issue here is what the Bank is required to transfer to the Liquidator: the Leone deposits or their equivalent in US. Dollars. The learned Justice was clearly of the view that once the Leones deposits were made, they automatically transform into their Dollar equivalent at the time. Therefore if the liability were in damages the pronouncement in a foreign currency could be made on the basis of the first part of the restated principle. The error of the learned Justice of Appeal, with all due respect, was ordering the Bank to transfer to the Assignee — Creditor assets (funds) that it never held for or owed to them or to the Refining Company.

THE CONCLUSION

An argument of the Assignee-Creditor, by its counsel, which first found expression before the Winding Up Court, is that monies referred to in Exhibits. “IKL2" and "IKL3" do not and cannot form part of the assets of the Refining Company for the purposes of the winding up process. As a result, Mr. P.M. Carew urged the Court to pay same to the Assignee — Creditor but argued that if the Court was disposed to order that the said monies be paid to the Liquidator, it should be for onward transmission to the Assignee — Creditor because the said monies were already due to be paid to B.P., (see pages 105 and 106 of the record). In the Court of Appeal, the argument was expanded by counsel for the Assignee — Creditor by arguing that since the Liquidator had completed his duties, filed his returns and was seeking liberty to apply for his release, therefore, the funds in the custody of the Bank could not be the assets of the company in liquidation, that is, the Refining Company (See page 4, under the rubric — Relief (A) (iv) of the [p.68] Statement of Case of the Assignee — Creditor in the Court The argument found final crystallization as expressed in open court that the assets (the funds) in the possession of the Bank belong to the Assignee — Creditor. If this position is factually and legally tenable, clearly, it would have been improper and wrong to object to the release of the Liquidator; and since by the argument the Bank is holding on to the funds for the Assignee — Creditor, its recourse for the return of the funds should be against the Bank, and not indirectly by improper use of the winding up process. But as stated earlier the Assignee — Creditor's argument is not a correct reflection of the factual and legal situation. The Refining Company remains the owner "of the assets (the Leone deposits) in the possession of the Bank as the property never passed to B.P. (or its authorized agents). It is for this reason that B.P. proved the debts in the liquidation process; and it is for the same reason that the objection to the application of the Liquidator for liberty to apply for his release was made. To date, there is no retraction of these facts through a judicial or legal process before the Winding Up Court for it to take cognizance of any factual changes and act accordingly. Therefore, the factual situation in the context of the winding up process, taking into account the statements and acts of the Assignee — Creditor, remains the same: the Leone deposits belong to the Refining Company. The Winding Up Court's powers are limited to directing payment of these Leone deposits (and not their US Dollar equivalent at the time) to the Liquidator and, therefore, its Order of the 14th July, 2000, is not within the confines of its powers or jurisdiction.

The Court of Appeal in affirming the Winding Up Court's Order of the 14th July 2000, by the very fact itself or by necessary implication, acted outside its jurisdiction since the Winding Up Court itself has no authority under the Companies Act 1938 or the Law to vest on the Liquidator assets (funds) that are not owned (including any excess if any) by the Refining Company (in liquidation). The Court of Appeal, with all due respects, further acted outside its jurisdiction when it ordered payment of US$ 11,304,899-79 (or its equivalent in Leones at the present bank rate) to the Assignee — Creditor instead of the Liquidator. If the said Dollar sum belongs to the Refining Company, then, according to Law, it should vest onto the Liquidator. On the other hand, if the sum is not that of the Refining Company, it is outside the winding up process, and, therefore, outside the winding up jurisdiction of the Court and, it follows, that of the Court of Appeal.

In the synopsis, the Liquidator in arguing for payment of US$11,304,899-79 or its current equivalent in Leones instead of the Leone deposits altered his position from that argued before the Winging Up Court. Before this Court Mr. Valesins V. Thomas, for the Liquidator, failed to file a statement of case and synopsis of argument; and seemed to be sitting on the fence. This is objectionable as the role and functions of the Liquidator are statutory; he is obliged to vigorously pursue the collection of the assets of the company in liquidation and the interest of the creditors. In the instant matter it means, in my view, filing the requisite pleadings and arguing for the payment of the Leone deposits to be made directly to the Liquidator so that he can administer same according to Law.

Upon the application of Mr. Lambert, the Court ordered that record of the proceedings of the Court of Appeal be provided. Its apparent from his statements and submissions that the purpose of obtaining the record was to show that counsel did not complete their addresses before the Court retired and the court, at the next sitting, the notices for judgment having been sent, delivered judgment. The application is to be seen in the light of ground (1V) under relief (a) contained in the Originating Notice of Motion dated the 21st day of December 2007. The reliefs sought are premised on grounds (1) to (1V) under relief (a).

In my judgment, counsel did not need the notes (or minutes) of the Court of Appeal to support ground (1V) under relief (a); the grounds are based on Law. The complaint, in my view, is against the decision or order of the Court of Appeal that the sum in issue be paid by the Bank to the Assignee-Creditor in the absence of any legal basis or jurisdiction to do so. I am of the firm view that had the Court availed counsel, (and I am assuming that the Court of Appeal did not) the opportunity to complete their addresses, it would (and does) not alter the legal situation in respect of the said decision or order; whether counsel had completed their respective addresses or not, the question whether the Court of Appeal had the Jurisdiction to make its order of the 16th December 2007 would have remained. In any event the record of the Court of Appeal as constituted by the relevant Court documents, including the judgment, synopsis or statement of case of the respective parties and the record of the Winding Up Court, have been made [p.70] available and are before this Court. A record of a Court does not have to contain everything; what need to be included are relevant materials that the Court need for the determination of the subject-matter or issues before it. In my view all the materials needed for such determination in the instant case are before this Court.

In my judgment Part V of the Supreme Court Rules, 1992, deals with appeals and are not relevant to the matter before this Court. The rules that are relevant and applicable to the matter, in my considered view, are found in Part XVI captioned ORIGINAL JURISDICTION that is, Rules 89-98. The Applicant (Plaintiff) is seeking the reliefs pursuant to the supervisory jurisdiction of this Court under Section 125 of the Constitution, 1991. The matter is an action (original) and not an appeal.

The reliefs/remedies sought are ordinarily granted or refused on the basis of evidence adduced and the application of the relevant law. This matter (or action) having been commenced by an Originating Notice of Motion (see Form 8 set out in the First Schedule to the Supreme Court Rules, 1982) the requisite evidences are adduced by affidavits. The requisite affidavits (in support and in opposition) and the statement of case etc. were duly filed pursuant to the rules of this Court and the evidences and materials including the relevant documents such as the statement of cases and judgment in the Court of Appeal and rulings by the Winding Up Court are thereby brought before this Court. In my view this Court is seised of all the relevant materials to deal effectively with the subject-matter of this matter (or action).

Moreover, after reading paragraphs 20-26 of the affidavit in support sworn to by Patrick Lambert, of Counsel, particularly paragraph 24, J am firmly of the view that Counsel did reply and that the Court of Appeal was being asked to make a final decision/judgment; and the Court therefore proceeded to do just that in its judgment of on 6th December 2007. Furthermore, paragraph 33 of the affidavit in opposition sworn to by Amadu Koroma, of Counsel, on the 23rd January 2008 shows that written arguments were ordered by the Court of Appeal and submitted by the parties. Paragraph 33 is not controverted. The arguments (or statements of case or addresses) are before this court.

However, since it would appear the creditors of the Refining Company, other than the Assignee-Creditor, have been settled leaving only the Assignee-Creditor to be paid; and [p.71] since payment of the Leone deposits to the Liquidator would be a mere formality as same would have to be paid by the Liquidator to the Assignee-Creditor, the Court is inclined to order payment of same directly to the Assignee-Creditor to avoid further delay.

Directions/Orders

In the premises and pursuant to powers conferred by section 125 of the Constitution, 1991, I hereby do give the directions and orders following:

(1) The Winding Up Court's Order of the 14th July 2000 and the Order of the Court of Appeal of the 6th December 2007 are hereby set aside.

(2) The Bank of Sierra Leone (The Bank) is hereby ordered to transfer the Leone deposits amounting to 14,320,460-63 to Precious Minerals Marketing Company (SL) Limited (The Assignee-Creditor).

(3) The Bank of Sierra Leone to pay interest at the rate of 10% per annum on the said sum of Leone 14,320,460-63 from the 5th September 2000 to the 11th July 2008 to Precious Minerals Marketing Company Limited.

(4) In the circumstances, parties to bear their respective costs in the High Court, the Court of Appeal and this Court.
